MUSIC BUILDING SCENES

The Music Building was completed in 1936 at a total cost of $325,000, giving Texas State College for Women one of the most adequately equipped instructional units in the Southwest.

The new building has more than 50 sound-proof studios and practice rooms, three concert and recital halls, fully equipped classrooms, and a large record library.

COLLEGE SYMPHONY

LILY PONS

The College Symphony Orchestra is composed of seventy-five selected students and has complete symphonic instrumentation.

It appears in the college artists' series, in radio broadcasts, and in out-of-town concerts.

The Texas Federation of Women's Clubs has designated this group as its official orchestra.

Many world-famous artists are brought to the campus annually to enrich the cultural background of the student. Some of these include:

Horowitz

Iturbi

Lily Pons

Joos Ballet

Zimbalist

Carl Flesch

Marcel Dupre

St. Louis Symphony

John Charles Thomas

Barrere Little Symphony

STUDIO AND CLASS ROOM ACTIVITIES

Music students may select four year courses in piano, violin, voice, and organ under a large faculty of artist-teachers.

Public appearances, recitals, and broadcasts are arranged for music students.

Music courses are open to all students of the college.

Elementary and advanced classes are offered in harmony, counterpoint, music appreciation, history of music, conducting, orchestration, and practice teaching.

A comprehensive four year course is designed for thorough training of school supervisors and teachers of instrumental and vocal methods.

Radio

Special radio training is available in a fully equipped studio.

Regular weekly broadcasts are presented over WFAA, Dallas.

Special broadcasts are arranged over national networks.

Activities

The Campus Serenaders play for college dances and for out-of-town programs.

Trios, small ensembles, and soloists appear in radio broadcasts, in campus programs, and give special programs over the state.

COLLEGE CHOIR

Musical students are offered opportunities in three choirs: The Classic Choir of 45 voices, the Modern Choir of 27 voices, and the Chorus of 250 voices.

Each year the choirs sing in many of the principal cities of Texas in addition to concerts with the College Symphony.

Graduate students may acquire the master's degree in music at T. S. C. W.

The music department offers a wide variety of graduate courses and has an adequate library for advanced study.

LIBRARY

The Faculty

The increasing vitality and growth of the music department at Texas State College for Women is a result of the recognition that the expression and appreciation of the fine arts has a definite place in the educational program.

Music is taught as an element of general culture, as an individual accomplishment, and as preparation for teaching or supervising music.

The faculty is composed of a group of men and women of distinctive skill as artists and teachers, with the finest training and experience, both in America and abroad. These teachers are recognized by the leading accrediting agencies and foundations of the nation.

A placement office is maintained by the college for its students, ex-students, and graduates. This office assists in securing desirable teaching and professional positions. Students from the department of music are in demand over the entire Southwest.

Detailed description of all courses offered, data of interest such as calendar of events, information about college life, activities, and fees are included in the regular college catalogue. For further information address:
