This mode of getting rid of a difficulty, publicly advocated by His Majesty's Protestant Catholic Attorney-General, is somewhat entertaining—"of two evils," says the Proverb, "choose the lesser." And upon this principle it was hinted to SIR ABRAHAM BRADLEY KING, that he might save himself from perjury, by simply telling a lie! And MR. PLUNKETT moreover observed, that if the witness persisted in his obstinacy, they must not let him escape the extreme visitation of their power.

After an extremely merry discussion—(the subject of which was the BIBLE,) in the course of which, as MR. CANNING predicted, the Members who had badgered the witness upon a particular word, discovered by reference that the particular word did not occur in the Book of JOSHUA, in which it had been stated to be; after this discussion SIR ABRAHAM BRADLEY KING having had time, as they told him, to think over the question, and having had MR. PLUNKETT'S excellent suggestion conveyed to him, was again asked if he would answer the question—and he again replied No! and having so refused went home very quietly to bed, and slept none the worse for having acted boldly, fairly, and conscientiously.

The disappointed Whigs not satisfied with getting no answer from the worthy Baronet on Friday night, inserted in yesterday's CHRONICLE the following extremely liberal supposition:—

"The refusal of SIR A. B. KING to tell whether there was any part of the Book of JOSHUA, or any thing about the Amalekites read to Orangemen, on their first admission, gave rise to a singular discussion, on which we feel no disposition to comment. The passage, we PRESUME, is the following, JOSHUA x. 19. 'And stay you not, but pursue after your enemies, and smite the hindmost of them; suffer them not to enter into their cities, for the Lord your God hath delivered them into your hand.'"

Why the CHRONICLE should presume to suppose this to be the passage, we know not, except that SIR JOHN NEWPORT chose to repeat it—nor do we know the precise nature of the ceremonies which are performed at the admission of a novice into the Orange Lodges; but this we know, that the following is the declaration of the Orangemen, and we can trace nothing like the spirit of the quoted passage in any part of it. We never were enthusiastic about these associations, but of this we are quite sure, that the "head and front of their offending" is their staunch adherence to our glorious Constitution in Church and State.

In answer to the various insinuations and falsehoods of the Papists, Radicals, and Whigs, we beg public attention to the following document. Let the Orangemen be judged out of their own mouths:—

AN ORANGEMAN'S DECLARATION!!

"WE associate to the utmost of our power to support and "defend His Majesty KING GEORGE THE FOURTH, the "Constitution and Laws of this country, and the succession "to the throne in His Majesty's illustrious house; for the "defence of our persons and properties, and to maintain the "peace of the country; and for these purposes we will be at all "times ready to assist the civil and military powers in the just "and lawful discharge of their duty. We also associate in "honour of KING WILLIAM THE THIRD, PRINCE OF "ORANGE, whose name we bear as supporters of his glorious "memory, and the true religion by him established in this "kingdom. We further declare, that we are exclusively a "Protestant Association, yet, DETESTING ANY INTOLERANT "SPIRIT, we solemnly pledge ourselves NOT TO PERSECUTE, "INJURE, or UPBRAID any person on account of his religious "opinions; but that we will, on the contrary, aid and assist "every loyal subject, of every religious denomination, and to "the utmost of our power protect him from violence and "oppression."

Surely the most fastidious Radical can find nothing in this declaration, twist and torture it as he may, that will admit of cavil or dispute; and should he ever reform himself, and wish to become an Orangeman, let him, after a minute self-examination and strict scrutiny, see if he boasts the requisite qualifications, which can alone constitute him a worthy member of that institution; they are these:—

"An Orangeman should have a SINCERE LOVE and VENE-"RATION FOR HIS ALMIGHTY MAKER, productive of those "lively and happy fruits, righteousness, and obedience to "his commands; and a firm and stedfast faith in the SAVIOUR "of the WORLD; convinced that he is the only mediator be-"tween a sinful creature, and an offended Creator. His "disposition should be humane and compassionate; and his "behaviour courteous and affable; an enemy to savage "brutality and unchristian cruelty;—he should love "rational society, duly regard the Protestant religion, and "sincerely desire to propagate its precepts. Zealous in "promoting the honor, happiness, and prosperity of His "KING and COUNTRY; he should be heartily desirous of "victory and success in those pursuits, yet assured that God "alone can grant them, wisdom and prudence should guide "his actions, honesty and integrity direct his conduct!"

Such, reader, are the qualifications—such the honourable sentiments of the ORANGEMAN.

Now, with respect to the OATH which SIR ABRAHAM BRADLEY KING refused to violate, we KNOW—that the attacks upon it are calumnies and misrepresentations—it is not to be supposed that if we are not Orangemen we can KNOW what it is,—nor, if we are Orangemen, that we shall reveal it—no, not for the House of Commons itself!—but this much we may say, that the oath is neither more nor less than an echo of the OATH OF ALLEGIANCE, and that the additions are merely precautionary as necessary to guard against the publicity of those signs and marks revealed to every brother on his introduction, and by which alone they are known to each other—beyond this there is no secret whatever.

The Orangemen have undeniably evinced unshaken loyalty to the Sovereign—they have been firm in their attachment to the glorious Constitution—their sole desire has been to secure its prosperity and maintain its blessings—they abhor all rebellious and revolutionary principles—they venerate the Protestant religion, and they disclaim and disavow every species and degree of persecution.

These are the men who, for CONCILIATION'S sake, are to be persecuted even into perjury. We content ourselves at present by referring our readers to MR. SHIEL'S speech, as an illustration of the conciliatory system, and take leave, for the present, of the ORANGE SOCIETIES, by thanking them for their steady loyalty to the KING and CONSTITUTION; and above all, congratulating them upon the noble stand made for their character and principles by SIR ABRAHAM BRADLEY KING, at the Bar of the House of Commons.

MR. HOBHOUSE having, in the House of Commons, stated, "that he had been on board one of His Majesty's ships, "where the captain was so severe a tyrant that he was obliged "to sleep with loaded pistols, and sentries at his cabin-door, "from absolute fear of the crew rising upon himself and his "officers;" we are requested to say, that an enquiry has been instituted amongst the officers who served in the Mediterranean, (where MR. HOBHOUSE was indebted to the liberality of two captains for passages to different parts of the Archipelago) and the assertion of MR. HOBHOUSE is entirely new to those gentlemen.

The captains of the Navy are not ashamed of their punishment-lists, and wish it to be understood, that they should like very much to ascertain whether the assertion said to have been made by MR. HOBHOUSE is or is not a shameful and slanderous misrepresentation of the reporter. The matter shall not rest here.

A MEETING, miscalled the Celebration of the Triumph of Purity, was held at the Crown and Anchor on Friday.

At five o'clock upwards of 400 persons sat down to a very substantial dinner. The following gentlemen were among the company:—J. C. Hobhouse, M.P., Lord Ebrington, Lord Nugent, Josh. Hume, Esq. M.P., E. Ellice, Esq. M.P., Jones Burdett, Esq., Hare Townsend, Esq., S. C. Whitbread, M.P., M. Wood, Esq. M.P., T. Denman, M.P., H. Cooper, Esq., R. Bernal, M.P., J. Williams, Esq. M.P., Thomas Coke, Esq. M.P., D. Ricardo, Esq. M.P., J. G. Lambton, Esq. M.P., J. Pringle, Esq. of Haining, N. B., J. B. Monck, M.P., C. H. Hutchinson, M. P., J. B. Monck, Sir G. Robinson, M. P., Hon. G. Bennet, M.P., Hon. D. Kinnaird, J. Adams, J. Blackburn, Esq., Joshua Evans, Esq., Col. Torrens, D. W. Harvey, E. Baynes, of Leeds, ——Marsh, of Reading, J. Bowring, Esq. Dr. M'Clean, and a number of gentlemen from distant parts of the country.

SIR FRANCIS BURDETT, being unwell, addressed the following letter to the worshipful company—its quaintness deserves a place in a paper whose object is to raise a laugh:—

"St. James's-place, May 23.

"GENTLEMEN—'It is hard to kick against the pricks, and impossible 'against the gout.' Otherwise, notwithstanding the strong remonstrances of my excellent friend and physician, DR. PEARSON, I should have come, or rather have caused myself to have been brought amongst you, in order to partake of your just and honest triumph, and to aid in the annual celebration of your independence; nor have I ceased to cling to this hope up to this last moment. I am, however, now that it is arrived, most feelingly convinced of the impossibility of realizing it. Much as I regret this on my own and on every account, I regret it particularly on account of being deprived of the pleasure of meeting some of the most staunch friends of Reform, who, from different parts of the country, are to join us in the celebration of this anniversary. The co-operation of these friends of Reform, and the union of all friends of Reform, is upon every occasion most anxiously to be desired, as it is only by union and firm faith, and firm accord, and mutual agreement, that we can ever hope to carry into effect this great and necessary measure. At a time when so many interesting views present themselves to the notice of mankind—so many topics challenging the attention of an enlightened public—when Spain, undaunted by a foul confederacy of despots, seems nobly prepared to endure every extreme rather than yield up her independence and national rights, in upholding which she is also upholding the independence and rights of other nations, and on the successful issue of whose exertions the liberties of all other people, and especially the people of France, greatly depend—when Greece, to the wonder and admiration of the world, has burst her ignominious fetters, and achieved deeds of heroism, equalling, if not surpassing her former renown, and accomplished, as it were, impossibilities, under circumstances the most heartless and discouraging, eliciting hope from the deepest gloom of despair, and bidding fair to outrival her former glories in the same cause—when every people in Europe, panting for rational freedom, is anxiously casting about for an opportunity of shaking off the load of despotism that oppresses them—when our great and gallant countryman, your late representative (Lord Cochrane,) with little other resources than his own genius and courage can supply, having unfurled the banners of liberty in another hemisphere, is augmenting the renown of his country, and combating for the happiness of mankind—when turning our eyes homewards, we behold the march and progress of those principles of Reform, the adoption of which can alone give a fair chance of developing all the energies of England, can alone give a chance of redress to the manifold grievances of Scotland, and the still more intolerable sufferings of Ireland

—when an opportunity presents itself like the present for exhorting the people of Scotland and Ireland to lay aside all partial, unworthy pursuits of redress, and to join the honest voice of the liberty-loving people of England for that measure which will do equal justice to all—which will admit all men within the pale of the Constitution—which will exclude no man on pretence of religious opinions from the enjoyment of civil rights, but will, with an equal hand, administer to all equal justice, and thereby bind together the whole united empire in one bond, 'strong as the axle on which the heavens ride;' a bond of mutual affection and mutual interest, by means of a fair representation of the whole people in Parliament.

"Believe me, Gentlemen, at such a time, and under such circumstances, to be compelled to forego the gratification of meeting my constituents, the independent and enlightened citizens of Westminster, is as great a mortification as the power of fate could well have inflicted upon me, and that nothing short of absolute necessity could have forced me to yield to. Gentlemen, with deep regret, but with most unfeigned sincerity, I subscribe myself,—your most faithful and devoted servant,

"FRANCIS BURDETT."

It would be useless and absurd to try to follow the nonsense which was talked; but two things are, perhaps, worthy of notice.

The first is—that MR. DENMAN was called in the toast to his health as a "rare animal," thus—"THOMAS DENMAN, ESQ. the Member for Nottingham, one of the Judges of the Land (Common Serjeant)—a rare animal among real Reformers!"

The second thing worthy of remark is, that after a speech of my LORD NUGENT'S, the brother of the DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM! deprecating the tyranny of the BOURBONS—the band played "Ca Ira!"

MR. HUME gave the Liberty of the Press, and a person of the name of TORRENS, returned thanks—we suppose as representing the Press of Great Britain.

MR. MARSH, of Reading, made a speech, which he had previously delivered to his own cabbages in Hampshire. MR. COKE also entertained the company, and HUME spoke so long that most of the party were asleep before he had done. There was no collection after dinner!!

WE certainly do not affect to be prophets; but, knowing the Irish people, and above all, the Irish Papists, as we do, we have ventured to predict the results of the conciliatory system to which our upright and conscientious Ministers are so extremely partial.

"Wait awhile," as the Irish themselves say—"wait awhile, gentle reader, and you shall see." We take a few of the early blossoms of Hibernian Popish gratitude—what the fruits will be, we have no difficulty in foretelling; but as a specimen, in the outset, of the effects produced upon Ireland, by what has already been done, and what it is at present proposed to do, we lay before our readers the following extract from the speech of a MR. SHIEL, an Irish Barrister—a leader among the Papists, and celebrated for writing parts for MRS. WRIXON BECHER, when MISS O'NEIL—"ex pede Herculem;" it is a fair sample of the whole commodity; and if MR. O'SHIEL is more candid than some of his brethren, it is because he is less cautious.

The speech to which we allude, was made by MR. SHIEL, at the late aggregate meeting of Roman Catholics in Dublin. We trust our conciliating readers will pay proper attention to it.

"We all heard a vast deal about conciliation, but did not see "a single measure adopted for the purpose of producing peace. "It is very true that the statue was undressed—a grand political "achievement—the result forsooth of the most profound sagacity, "and the most enlarged and enlightened views—the expedient of "the most skilful policy, and the product of the loftiest thought "—a magnificent philosophical contrivance—a glorious effort of "benevolence—a masterpiece of legislative wisdom—a magnanimous display of generosity, and a complete and glorious "consummation. It was expected that this superb undertaking would satisfy the people of Ireland—this was the measure "which was to induce an aggrieved and discontented nation "to forget their sufferings and their wrongs, and to commit "centuries of injustice to an entire oblivion."....."They "(in the Orange mob) perceived that the system was in no "respect materially altered. They saw that the vice-regal "bounty flowed on in its ordinary current, and that not a "single sluice was cut into the golden stream, or one "drop of the patoclus carried off from its accustomed "channel. On the other hand, they found ample compensation for the temporary suspension of the malignant pleasure "of superadding insult to oppression, in the suspension "of the Habeas Corpus, in the invention of a more "coercive police, and in the perpetuation and extension of the Insurrection Act, and in the re-organization "of an Orange Yeoman force. These measures, together "with a NEW TYTHE-BILL, upon a more complicated, but not "less efficient principle, and fully as well calculated TO "GRIND DOWN THE FRUITS OF THE PEASANT'S INDUSTRY, "are the grand CONCILIATORY expedients of a cabinet, "built upon a fatal compromise, in which a mere form has "been given up upon one hand, and substantial right has "been sacrificed upon the other."

So much, gentle reader, for the gratitude of the Irish Papists to LORD WELLESLEY! So much for CONCILIATION!—for the grand political plan of preventing the dressing of the Statue of KING WILLIAM III.—and lastly, so much for the New Tythe Commutation Bill, which is to effect such wonders in tranquillizing Ireland, and putting an end to the discontent of the Roman Catholic populace. It now seems tolerably clear that even if the new Tythe Bill for Ireland were not, as it is, pregnant with the utmost danger, but if, on the contrary, it were a safe measure, yet it would be inefficient for the grand object for which we have heard that it has been introduced—namely, the promoting content and peace amongst the great body of the Irish populace.

DR. LANIGAN, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Ossory, signed the addresses by which the Veto was promised; this afterwards created great dissensions among the Roman Catholic ecclesiastics, and the greater part of them recanted; and being called upon by the favourers of that measure to defend such conduct, he wrote a letter, which contained, among other passages, the following five reasons for not keeping a promise:—

"I am convinced that a serious, sincere, and voluntary promise binds a man who makes it, under the pain of sin, to fulfil it; but I am likewise convinced that the obligation arising from a promise ceases in the following cases:—

"1st. If a man promises a thing impossible; for no one can be bound to do a thing impossible to be done.

"2d. If a man promises to do any thing sinful or unlawful; for no promise, though confirmed with an oath, can bind a man to commit sin.

"3d. When a person in whose favour a promise is made releases the promiser from the promise he has made.

"4th. When a man promises a thing pernicious or useless to the person in whose favour the promise is made.

"5th. When before the promise is fulfilled, the circumstances become so changed, that the person promising, had he foreseen these circumstances, would never have made the promise. On this case I rest my justification, for, had I foreseen or known that my signing these addresses would produce such alarm and consternation, such dislike and disapprobation, as I afterwards found they would in the minds of the great majority of the Catholic Priests and Laity of this city, I would by no means have consented to sign them.

"St. THOMAS says, that 'a man is not guilty of an untruth in such a case, because when he promised he intended to perform his promise, nor is he unfaithful to his promise because the circumstances are changed afterwards.' This is not only the opinion of ST. THOMAS, but also is the opinion of all the Theologians and Canonists I ever saw or read."

THE COURIER, which seems getting tired of its employers, or vice versa, on Wednesday ridicules an adherence to any particular party, and sneers at men whose principles are fixed. We feel the full force of the satire and the justice of the doctrines set forth by that paper; and, as we last year gave up our own opinions upon Agricultural Distress, (which by the way is all over) so this year we at length feel the necessity of recanting our avowed opposition to what we have thoughtlessly and scoffingly hitherto called CANT and HUMBUG.

The first thing which touched our feelings, and turned our hearts, was a beautiful little poem in behalf of "Negro Emancipation," in the corner of the very COURIER to which we have just alluded—the forcible appeal overcame our prejudices, and we fell to considering the dreadful state of society, the barbarities of mankind, the cruelty which everywhere shocks our eyes, the tyranny which oppresses, the profligacy which overwhelms us.

We repent now of having ridiculed the BETHEL UNION, the HUM-FUMS, and the great GAM-BOO-GEE; we grieve that we have sneered at GREY BENNET'S tears; we lament that we have passed unheeded the eloquence of MR. RICHARD MARTIN; or that we have foolishly endeavoured to deteriorate from the disinterested piety of Messrs. WILBERFORCE and ZACHARIAH MACAULAY;—our eyes are opened—the film is removed, and we cite the doctrines of the excellent and independent paper we have just named, as a saving authority for applying the full force of the influence we possess, to the advocacy of a cause which we have hitherto most unwarrantably ridiculed.

That slavery has existed from the first establishment of society to the present moment, is no reason why it should continue to exist any longer. It is notorious that we are so much better, (generally speaking) and so much wiser universally, than our forefathers, that it becomes a duty which we owe to ourselves and the dignity of human nature to destroy a system which is founded on injustice and supported by tyranny.

What are the West Indies to us?—what are the planters and merchants to us?—We are none—we have not as much sugar in the world as would sweeten a melon, nor as much rum in our store as would fill a vinegar cruet:—we do not want sugar;—we never drink rum—God forbid! We want justice—not for the merchants and planters, but for the blacks;—we plead for the race of CAIN, and reject the Cane itself for their sake.

But our feelings of philanthropy are not confined to any district—to any class of men—like all new converts we are warmed with our zeal, and loudly call upon our countrymen to listen to us.

First—for we always begin with the most exalted personages in the State—we call, in a voice like the thunder of imperial JOVE, upon the Right Worshipful the Court of Aldermen of the City of London—and with peculiar propriety do we address these Magnates of the land, at a period when those feasts are approaching which annually take place during the barbarous operation of swan-nicking, or, as it is erroneously, and with a view no doubt of concealing its cruelty, called "swan-hopping,"—to abstain from the use of turtle. Who, with the feelings of a man and an Alderman could, after this appeal, contentedly swallow a soup procured by the destruction of that amphibious animal—that fleshified fish which, to be made into this soup, has been torn from its native shores, hurried on shipboard, fattened and pampered upon chickens—murdered for its sake—brought to this land of freedom, and there decapitated, bled, cut up, grilled, hashed, stewed!—Mercy upon us! can a reflecting Christian ever taste a collop of green fat, and not think of the torture the must have endured to procure him the mellowed yet melting satisfaction.

"Turtle parted from its mate"

"The smallest beetle which we tread upon
"Feels as much, in corporeal sufferance, as when a giant dies."

So says the immortal bard of AVON, and if MR. CROCKER, the corrector of HUME, were called in by the honourable Court, to whom this part of our appeal is especially addressed, and were to make a calculation, by the rule of three, upon the comparative torture of the "smallest beetle," and the "largest turtle," we would ask these mighty dispensers of civic justice, and Mansion-house tickets, whether they could endure to be considered the primary causes of its more than gigantic agonies.

It is true, some humane persons have established a society for "bettering the condition of turtle," by killing them in the West Indies, and potting them for home consumption; but we believe the name of this benevolent society has been misunderstood in the city—the idea of an Alderman with respect to the condition of turtle, is the same as that of a jockey with respect to the condition of a horse.

But leave we these furred and robed sages; let us appeal to the softer sex—the taper-waisted beauty, who dreads the enlargement of her figure, and the imputation of an appetite, and who, with her eyes cast downward on her plate, accepts unwillingly the offer of a delicate wing of a boiled chicken, or the moiety of a spoonful of fricandeau aux points d'asperge, or the suspicion of a risolle in a green wig of fried parsley little thinks at the moment that she suffers this elegant exhibition of sustenance to pass her rosy lips, that the fowl she is eating had once a mother—a father too—a noble high-couraged cock; that in its early days the constant care of an anxious hen had been bestowed upon it; and that to secure the wing which she indifferently swallows, the neck of that innocent, unoffending chicken had been twisted.

The lovely girl presses to the same rosy lips a glass of ST. PERI—beaming through the chilled chrystal like the pale sun through the morning's mist—little does she calculate upon the toils which men have groaned under to procure that juice, and when satisfied with the refreshing draught she draws on her snowy glove, no pang strikes her, because a kid had died that she might ease her milk-white arm in its skin—a chill seizes her, her shawl formed of the murdered Cachmire's coat is absent, but the scarf of many hues woven by the wretched worm who perished in his labours, hangs over her gracefully falling shoulders—the chill increases, and the tippet, torn from the reeking body of the hunters' prey, is added to the accumulation of barbarities with which she is already overloaded; thus armed and protected, she again joins in the mirthful conversation, and conscious that the expression of her lovely countenance is still more lovely when her looks are cast upwards, throws her sparkling eyes towards the brilliant lamps which illuminate the room, without considering the fate of the mighty monarch of the sea, by whose death alone, food for its brightness was obtained.

One of her brothers returns late in the evening from angling; he has dug from his peaceful mansion in the earth, the harmless worm—he has impaled his unoffending body on the bearded hook—he has added to this positive cruelty, moral deception, and with the base feeling of a finished hypocrite, flung into the water the suffering reptile to delude the fish—the unsophisticated roach, the unsuspecting dace, the amiable carp, the inoffensive gudgeon. He has but too well succeeded—the attractive bait has been swallowed, and the hook transfixed in the lip of the sufferer is forcibly dragged from the reeking wound, and the fish discovers, too late in life, the fruits of a single error. If this were all, perhaps, the moral utility of the example to mankind might outweigh the barbarity of the act;—but no!—it does not end here, the fish is yet reserved alive, that it may die in pain to give new satisfaction to the tyrant who has enslaved it. Where then, we ask, is the man, who, with one spark of Christian feeling in his breast, can eat the unsophisticated roach—the unsuspecting dace—the amiable carp—the inoffensive gudgeon?

It is not by the worldly sophistications of lobster sauce or shrimps, that the atrocity of such acts is to be qualified—lobsters and shrimps suffer more, if possible, than those upon whom they are doomed after death to attend; and we would impress upon the minds of our gourmands, that Turbot, Salmon, John Dories, Red Mullet, and Smelts, all suffer equally with their inferior brethren.

The criminality, however, of devouring these helpless innocents is light, when compared with the vices of the oyster-eater, who deliberately commits a burglary on the dwelling of a peaceful unarmed tenant, merely to drag him from his resting-place, and swallow him alive.

The other brother of our heroine comes in equally tired with the sports of the field—his back bending with the weight of partridges and pheasants; they too have died, and the dogs who aided to find and betray them, in their turn have suffered privations and correction shocking to humanity.

But what is going on without? Carriages are at the door—yoked to them are horses—(noble animals!)—harnessed, bridled, bitted, subject to the coachman's whip! What right have we to use horses in this manner? What prerogative has man that he should rob the horse of his natural liberty? The horse is fed, groomed, and well kept, but he is subservient. In the Methodist's Magazine, about ten years since, appeared an advertisement which ran thus:—"Wanted a "coachman to look after a pair of horses of a religious "turn of mind." If these horses be still in existence what must they feel?

"Break, break their hearts, they cannot speak."

There may be equity in all this, but most assuredly no justice.

Yet if these overwhelming barbarities shock us, what must we do with respect to the other necessaries of life?

"In the morning early,
"When we are a taking our tea,"

we cannot but think of the toils and troubles which the poor, amiable, virtuous, high-minded, chaste, honest Chinese have undergone to cull it for our use.

"In the afternoon,
"When we are a taking our coffee,"

our thoughts must revert to the groaning Black, whose back has suffered from that whip which MR. BROUGHAM declares in his book to be indispensably necessary.

But whether "we are a taking our tea or our coffee," the barbarities incidental to the cultivation of sugar, must equally strike upon the heart deeply—bitterly!

What horrors must assail the snuff-taker when he recollects that every pinch from his box is purchased with the labour of the negro—who is there with feelings sufficiently callous to the calls of humanity, to eat rice-pudding without shuddering?

Who has seen a beautiful meadow—shining in all the virid splendour of the Spring! Who has seen the little innocent lamb frisking and curvetting about with its affectionate mother—sweet picture of maternal tenderness—beautiful illustration of filial duty?—Who, we ask, having seen this sight, can sit down to eat a saddle of mutton for dinner? Such an action is incompatible with the feelings of nature!

Who can get into a travelling-carriage, and roll along a road—(we put the suffering horses out of the question here)—whose surface is as level as a billiard-table—and not reflect that by the toil of human creatures the path has been thus smoothed for him—beings equal with ourselves—who have hands, heads, hearts like the best of us? It is true that men without hands, and without heads, could not be supposed capable of road-mending—but the modern philanthropist never finds himself perfectly at ease without feeling truly miserable.

But we feel, from the contracted space which we have, the necessity of shortening our observations upon the cruelty of the world, and of making a brief appeal to our readers and the public, which we trust will have its due effect.

Slavery is cruel—liberty is excellent—it matters not whether the black man and the white man understand the word FREEDOM in the same way—either we must emancipate the Blacks, dispose of the property of hundreds of amiable men, and in all probability cause their extermination, or we must not drink coffee, nor use sugar.

We must abstain from riding or driving horses—we cannot endure the cruelty of the butcher, and therefore abjure meat;—fish is also banished. We must deny ourselves coats and pantaloons, because we can have no right to rob the sheep of his fleece to clothe ourselves—game must not be seen at our tables. Tea we must not drink—we have some doubt whether we ought to keep servants—for servitude is derogatory, and a footman is as good as a Duke—why should not a Duchess make her own bed and cook her own dinner? We must give over capital punishments; for what right have we to take away life?

We must bear robbing patiently—what signifies the loss of worldly goods—better be murdered ourselves than be cruel to others. Above all, we must conciliate—reward our enemies, and oppress our friends. It is unchristian-like to persecute foes: and they must be very bad friends indeed with whom we cannot take a liberty—let nothing suffer for your enjoyment. Kind countrymen consider—and reflect, before you take what you call pleasure, or enjoy what you fancy comfort, if it causes the slightest pain or inconvenience to any animal co-existent, you sin.

If at this season of the year, you perceive snails or grubs devouring your garden-stuff, interpose not the murderous authority you possess to check the instinctive gratification of their innocent appetites. When nature made grubs and caterpillars, she provided them with cabbages, peas, and cauliflowers for food: what right then have we to pervert to our own uses, things destined for the sustenance of other creatures; besides, why should we raise up fruits—what thinking creature would eat of them when ripened into perfection?

If the clustering apples on the bough catch your longing eyes it is a duty to reject them; if the blooming peach or hanging grape solicit the gathering, you are bound to abjure them—the very bloom is animal, and to gratify a momentary appetite, myriads of living creatures perish on your lip. When you are thirsty touch not even water, for in each sip of that apparently innocent fluid you destroy hundreds and thousands of unoffending animalcula. But if you would do your duty in this world, and fit yourself for a better upon the principles of those exemplary, pious, and virtuous people, whose speeches at taverns, whose visits to prisons, whose sighs and tears, and groans, and grievings, fill the highways and byeways of our country, ye must still be more cautious yet: for as, although by applying a drop of the water, which benevolence and humanity forbid ye to taste, to a microscopic glass, its many ringed scaly inhabitants are perceptible to the human eye—the air is equally replete with other creatures which we know not of, because we cannot bring them under our examination. Therefore, in order to make society what those pious folks would have it, and to render the world what they would make it, the present race of men must CEASE TO BREATHE.

THEATRICALS.

WE have to apologize to our readers for an innocent mistake which we made last week relatively to the engagements of performers at the Haymarket. It seems that our praises of the liberality of the managers of that playhouse are at all events premature, and that of all the people we mentioned as having been retained for the public service in the summer, not more than two are actually nominated.

Amongst the seceders, we are sorry to say, are—JONES and MRS. CHATTERLEY—two towers of strength in the company; the substitutes for these departed favourites are MISS CHESTER, and a provincial gentleman from the Bath theatre, of the name of VINING. JONES is an irremediable loss to the Haymarket, and so the people belonging to it will find. LISTON, who is invincible and irresistible, will be there to be sure! but, as the exquisite morceau of "Sl. 10s. 1d. if quite convenient," last week most satisfactorily proved, he must be supported;—who could endure a solo by the finest musician in the world, which should last through three acts of a concert?

The Drury Lane Theatrical Fund Dinner took place last Saturday, and the Chair was taken and most ably filled by the MARQUIS of HERTFORD, in the unavoidable absence of his Royal Highness the DUKE of YORK, who was compelled by his medical advisers to abstain from the fulfilment of his gracious intentions towards the charity.

Eleven hundred pounds were subscribed, and the speeches and songs afforded considerable amusement to that class of ladies who feel gratified in being admitted to partake of the mirthful orgies of Bacchus, as auditors and spectators. We must confess that this attendance of females in the galleries during public dinners, however novel, and at first apparently strange, promises much for the increase of sociability between the sexes. We must, however, be permitted to observe, that under the circumstances we cannot perceive why the ladies should not mix with their husbands, brothers, and friends, at the tables, and enjoy the more substantial part of these popular festivals;—a fear that the eyes and ears of our females might be offended by what passed at tavern-dinners and after them, was all that excluded them from such meetings;—if it is to be permitted that their eyes and ears are to be left open to all they may chance to see and hear upon such occasions, it seems extremely unfair that their pretty mouths should be shut.

We know of ourselves that listening to singing after dinner (which of course can occur no where but at taverns) would be extremely dry work without the auxiliary refreshment of a periodical glass of claret; and we could not but lift up our eyes in sorrow to the gay phalanx of beauties who were ranged, faint and unfed, in the galleries, like hyacinths on stands in one's wife's boudoir, drooping for want of water.

We hate half measures in everything, as well as politics. If women are to be of the party upon these convivial occasions, let us have them among us;—women dine in Guildhall and at the Mansion House amongst a set of absolute savages, and yet we never heard of any unfortunate lady having been gored by an Alderman or bit by a Common-Councilman. We are sticklers for the dignity of the sex, and we have no notion that women should be packed up in rows to look at, and listen to men; we are all for having them amongst us, to animate us with their smiles, and enliven us with their conversation; in the galleries they are out of smiling distance—one might as well telegraph in a fog.

If the attendance of ladies on the floor of Freemasons' Hall be improper, indelicate, or inconsistent, it is equally improper, indelicate, and inconsistent that they should be in the gallery—it is thought so in the House of Commons—(in Ireland they were more gallant it is true)—but surely the part of the room in which persons are placed cannot change the nature of their visit, nor the character of that, which is doing in the apartment. We see no reason why ladies should leave us after dinner anywhere—it is only done in England; but as we are in England, and as that is an English custom, and as it is an English custom that our women should not attend tavern dinners, we think it would be more satisfactory to themselves, if they really be of that class of life to feel, upon such a point, to abstain from such visits.

We have no conception what sort of people are in the habit of frequenting these galleries, and to attempt to judge by the dress of these days, in which maids look like mistresses and mistresses like maids, would be vain—we merely throw out an observation upon the subject, for the sake of those who might be induced to follow a thoughtless example.

MISS M. TREE's benefit, on Wednesday, was what is called a "bumper." The public seem duly to appreciate the merits and accomplishments of this young lady; and although we are not in the habit of noticing benefit performances, we cannot abstain from offering our congratulations to MISS E. TREE upon her very successful first appearance—when her timidity has worn off, she will, we have little doubt, be a great acquisition to the stage. Her sister also evinced much talent.

SAM ROGERS, who was in the side boxes, observed, it must be a very promising season which brought the Trees out so early—(alluding to the younger branches of the family).—"Yes," said a wagling who sat by, "and there is not a plane Tree amongst them."—"Assuredly not," replied MR. ROGERS (with one of his winning smiles), "they are all pop'lar Trees, Sir!"

Speaking of MR. ROGERS and the stage, we cannot refrain from repeating a remarkably pleasant bon-mot which we happened to hear two days since; we had been calling upon WILKIE the painter, and strolling towards the turnpike, we perceived the wit emerging from a Hammersmith stage at the gate of Holland House—he appeared mortified and worried at being late, and said to the coachman, "Why, bless my heart, you have been more than an hour bringing me here; what do you call your coach?"

"The Regulator, Sir," said the man.

"The Regulator!—ah," replied ROGERS, "it is very properly called the Regulator—for all the other stage coaches go by it!"

WE have noticed DR. LANIGAN'S notions of promise-making and promise-breaking, according to the Popish tenets. We are requested by a correspondent to insert the following as a proof that the mildness of that religion equals its sincerity:—

THE POPE'S BULL, BELL, BOOK, AND CANDLE, ON A HERETICK OF HAMPRESTON.

"By the authority of the blessed Virgin Mary, of St. Peter and Paul, and of the Holy Saints, we excommunicate, we utterly curse, and commit and deliver to the Devil of Hell, HENRY GOLDNEY, of Hampreston, in the county of Dorset, an infamous Heretick, that hath, in spite of God and St. Peter, (whose Church this is) in spite of all Holy Saints, and in spite of our Holy Father the Pope, (God's Vicar here on earth) and of the Reverend and Worshipful the Canons, Masters, Priests, Jesuits, and Clerks of our Holy Church, committed the heinous crimes of sacrilege with the images of our Holy Saints, and forsaken our most holy religion, and continues in heresy and blasphemy, and corrupt lust: excommunicate be he, penally, and delivered over to the Devil, as a perpetual malefactor and schismatic; accursed be he, and given soul and body to the Devil, to be buffetted; cursed be he, in all cities and towns, in fields and ways, in houses and out of houses, and in all other places; standing, lying, or rising, walking, running, waking, sleeping, eating, drinking, or whatsoever he does besides. We separate him from the threshold, from all the good prayers of the Church, from the participation of Holy Mass, from all Sacraments, Chapels and Altars, from Holy Bread, and Holy Water, from all the merits of our Holy Priests and religious men, and from all their cloisters, from all their pardons, privileges, grants, and immunities, all the Holy Fathers (Popes of Rome) have granted to them, and we give him over utterly to the power of the Devil; and we pray to our Lady, and to St. Peter and Paul, and all Holy Saints, that all the senses of the body may fail him, and that he may have no feeling, except he come openly to our beloved Priest, at Stape Hill, in time of Mass, within thirty days from the third time of pronouncing hereof, by our dear Priest there, and confess his heinous, heretical, and blasphemous crimes, and by true repentance make satisfaction to our Lady, St. Peter, and the worshipful company of our Holy Church of Rome, and suffer himself to be buffetted, scourged, and spit upon, as our said dear Priest, in his goodness, holiness, and sanctity, shall direct and prescribe.

"Given under the seal of our Holy Church at Rome, the 10th day of August, in the year of our Lord Christ, 1758, and in the first year of our Pontificate, C. R.

"The 8th of October, 1758, pronounced the first time.
"The 15th ditto ditto the second time.
"The 22d ditto ditto the third time."

POSTING.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR,—Having seen in various papers an advertisement addressed to Postmasters, calling a meeting at the Bear and Castle Inn, in Oxford street, with a view to raising the price of Posting, in consequence of the very great advance (as they are pleased to term it,) in the price of horse provender, but which rise is as yet a bare remunerating one to the farmer; it is sincerely to be hoped and wished that the nobility, gentry, and the public would convene a meeting to resist so gross and shameful an imposition upon them, and not suffer any one class of men so to enrich themselves at the expense of the community at large, and more particularly so since no longer ago than in the MORNING POST of Monday, May 12, an advertisement appeared from the Roebuck Inn, Oxford, and a line from thence to Birmingham, Cheltenham, and Gloucester, offering to take the public at 1s. per mile, which must surely convince them how truly unnecessary any rise is, and that they may be induced in consequence to encourage such inns as still run at 1s. 3d. per mile, and resist the imposition of those who advance it so wantonly, and in so uncalled for a manner to 1s. 6d.—I am, Sir,

May 22, 1823. A FREQUENT TRAVELLER.

P.S. An advertisement appears in this day's MORNING POST from the Postmasters at the west end of the town, saying they have risen posting to 1s. 6d. which (better late than never,) it is to be hoped will be most strenuously opposed, as, till within the last two or three weeks, oats were to be bought by them as low as 18 or 20s. per quarter, and which advantage has been enjoyed by them for nearly two years, during which time it was not by them thought necessary to reduce it below 1s. 3d. Query, How much during that time have they enriched themselves? But that is inconvenient to them to remember.

TO JOHN BULL.

MR. BULL,—Your notice, in your last week's paper, of the intention to erect a monument to the late Bishop of Calcutta in St. Paul's Cathedral, has led me to make enquiries after the persons engaged in that patriotic design, and having been referred to the Office of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge for further information, I there learnt that that Society have undertaken it, in conjunction with the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, and restricted the subscription to their respective members, with the further limitation to each member's annual subscription, and that the sum at present contributed, collected chiefly by single guineas, did not exceed 600l.—a sum wholly inadequate to the completion of the design.

The connection of the Societies above specified with the Bishop, marks so strongly the propriety of their being the parties to come publicly forward and pay this tribute to his memory, that I feel no disposition to complain of the exclusiveness of their resolutions; but I hope they will not persevere in that exclusiveness to the defeat of their own purpose,—for he who takes a commanding station of great difficulty and danger in the Christian Church, and lays down his life in the zealous prosecution of what he has undertaken, appears to me no less, with reference to the public welfare than to his own private deserts, to have an equal claim to a national memorial with the warrior who fights our battles, and falls in our defence. And that BISHOP MIDDLETON'S valuable life has been sacrificed, and upon public principles only, there is undecisive evidence in the possession of many persons at home as there is that NELSON lost his life in maintenance of those important national interests for which he made himself responsible.—Your obedient servant, AN OLD ENGLISHMAN.

The most brilliant and extensive display of India stripes and Swiss chintzes, damasks, rabbarets, moreens, &c. at a reduction in the prices of at least one-third. MILES and EDWARDS'S system being so generally known and so much encouraged by all the principal Nobility and Gentry, they have only to repeat, that nothing shall tempt them to forfeit their great reputation by deviating from it. In fitting up drawing and dining room curtains, beds, &c. families have an opportunity of effecting a most important saving (equal, in many instances, to one half) in consequence of the extraordinary difference between the prices of this entirely new Stock, and the terms obtained by other establishments for the same articles, manufactured at a time when they must have cost double their present value. M. and E. have no connection with any other house. No. 134, Oxford-street, between Holles-street and Old Cavendish-street.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, May 21.—M. de la Duke de San Carlos, Grandee of Spain, has arrived in Paris.—The new Ministers, Calatrava and Zorraquin, have not arrived at Seville at the close of April.—It is not true, as stated to-day by the Journal du Commerce, that General Romagosa has been beaten by Mina.

The Constitutionel announces that the soldiers of the Faith dye their colours to join their comrades under Mina.

MADRID, MAY 7.—Our letters from Seville announce the continued excellent health of all the Royal Family. His Majesty has nominated Adjutant Gen. Francisco Milans Lieut.-General of the Armies—he will continue to be employed in Catalonia. The portfolio of foreign affairs is confided, ad interim, to M. Vadillo. M. de San Miguel has been empowered to repair to the army. It is said that he has set off to join that of Mina. M. Calatrava has accepted the place of Minister of the Interior. We have received intelligence from Valencia, that the city is well furnished with provisions. Troops and artillery were yesterday put in motion for reinforcing the garrison.

"GERONA, May 16.—A despatch was received at midnight from the Marshal Moncey, who had marched out to attack the enemy. He writes that Mina had just retired. His Excellency reports not to have heard a certain whizzing noise which would have invigorated his ears. Moncey has returned. Milans has evacuated the strong positions which he occupied: he is marching in the direction of Barcelona, which was the only route open."

VIENNA, MAY 3.—The Emperor, on the repeated representations of the Minister of Finance, has determined on a considerable reduction of the army, by which the hopes of peace are of course confirmed. His Majesty is said likewise to have ordered, that candidates for public offices must serve the first six years without salary, and prove that they are able to support themselves for that time.

An article from St. Petersburgh, dated the 28th ult. states, that the Court of St. Petersburgh had at first resolved to place a considerable army at the disposal of the French Government; that not only had communications been made by Count Pozzo di Borgo to the French Ministry, but orders had been sent to various corps of troops stationed in Poland; but that all this had been given up in consequence of a declaration from Sir Charles Bagot, the English Ambassador, stating, that the neutrality of Great Britain, in the war between France and Spain, was only conditional, and would continue only as long as the other powers of Europe should take no part in this war. The Court of Vienna is said to have delivered a friendly note breathing the same spirit to the Russian Government, which has little contributed to stop the measures as first resolved upon by the Ministry.

JAMAICA, MARCH 22.—A Royal Order has been issued from the Spanish Government to General Morales, directing the blockade of the coasts of Colombia to be raised. Monte Video has been officially declared in a state of blockade.

Letters from the Morea, of the 26th of April, state that the functions of the Provisional Government of Greece have ceased, and that the Congress have now taken the reins of Government.

Letters from Malta of the 29th of April, announce a sanguinary conflict near Algiers, between three Greek ships and several of the Barbarian Corsairs, in which two of the latter were sunk, and a third with a frigate, saved themselves only by taking refuge in Algiers.

MISCELLANEOUS.

On Monday the King received a visit from the Duke of Clarence.

The King is so far convalescent as to have signified his intention of being present at Ascot races. The races are this year fixed for the 10th of June.

On Thursday the Dukes of York and Clarence visited the King; and the Duke of Wellington had an audience of his Majesty.

On Tuesday, the Duke of York held a Levee in the Horse Guards, which was attended by Lord Hawke, Generals Sir B. Tarleton, Sir G. Nugent; Lieut.-Generals Cockell, Sir E. Barnes; Major-Generals Guard, Wilson, Sir C. Halket, Sir M. Power, Stewart, Sir C. Greville; Admiral Lord Torrington; Rear-Admiral Sir H. Blackwood, and about thirty others.

The Prince and Princess of Saxe Weimar arrived in London at an early hour on Thursday morning from abroad, on a visit for some time to the Duke and Duchess of Clarence.

Sir William Knighton, Bart. is appointed Receiver-General of the Duchy of Cornwall.

On Sunday last, the consecration of the Bishop of Killaloe took place in the Cathedral of Tuam. The ceremony was performed by his Grace the Archbishop of Tuam.

From a Parliamentary Return respecting Bankrupts, it appears that, on an average of the three last years, the debts of English bankrupts amounted to the amazing sum of 3,456,382l. a year. The dividends fell short of 4,500l. little more than half-a-crown in the hundred pounds. The dead loss is more than 15 per cent. upon the income from trade of every sort, which was assessed for the Property Tax.

SURREY INSTITUTION.—The Library of this Literary Establishment had been recently valued at 15001. and an offer was made for the purchase of it, for the use of the Norwich Literary Society, at 1400l.—The sale by Mr. Saunders is just concluded, under whose judicious management and exertions, it has produced upwards of 2775l. being nearly double the amount it was expected to realise.

Mr. Wynn, the English Minister in Switzerland, presented, on the 24th of April, his letters of recall to the President of the Diet. Immediately Mr. Ch. Vaughan, his successor, presented his credentials.

Sittings appointed in Middlesex and London, before the Right Hon. Sir Robert Dallas, Knt. Lord Chief Justice of His Majesty's Court of Common Pleas, at Westminster, in and after Trinity Term, 1823:—IN TERM.—Middlesex—Saturday, May 31; Wednesday, June 4; Thursday, June 12.—London—Monday, June 2; Thursday, June 5; Friday, June 13.—AFTER TERM—Thursday, June 19; Friday, June 20.

THE ARMY.—The 9th Reg. of Light Dragoons has received orders to embark at Bristol and Bideford, for Ireland, to relieve the 7th Hussars.—The 7th Light Dragoons is ordered to do duty at Brighton and Chichester.—The 14th Reg. of Light Dragoons, now stationed at Coventry and Birmingham, is ordered to replace the 9th Reg. of Lancers, at Radipole.—The 1st division of the 10th Reg. of Foot, at Sheerness, will embark on board the Cato and Zephyr transports, for Ireland, to relieve the 1st division of the 52d Light Infantry, which is ordered to Halifax.—The 2d division of the same regiment will, on being relieved by the 2d division of the 12th Foot, from Guernsey, proceed to Ireland, to replace the 2d division of the 52d Light Infantry, which is ordered to Newfoundland.—The 77th Reg. has received orders to proceed from Scotland to Ireland, by way of Portpatrick.—The 58th Reg. has replaced the 65th Foot at Weedon.—The 65th Reg. has received orders to march to Hull, to relieve the 73d Reg.—The 8th Reg. of Light Dragoons is now on its march from Cranham to Ipswich.—The 73d Reg. has received orders to march from Hull to Scotland.—The 9th Reg. of Light Dragoons will embark at Bristol and Bideford on Tuesday and Wednesday, for Ireland.

MR. MATTHEWS.—A paragraph found its way into the London papers, stating that Mr. Matthews, the comedian, had received some injury by the fall of a tree, and Mr. Price, the manager of the New York Theatre, had his leg broken. The fact is not so—the Philadelphia Gazette of the 6th of April states:—"They were in a private carriage, a short distance behind the Union coach, on which a tree fell and crushed to death a Mr. Bursleem, of the Circus, and not Mr. Tatnall, as has been stated. Mr. Matthews and Mr. Price are both now in this city perfectly well.

EAST INDIA SHIPPING.—The Hon. Company's ship, Duchess of Athol, arrived off the Isle of Wight, the 22d inst.; left China the 8th February. The Balcarras, Canning, and Sir David Scott, sailed from China on the 25th January; arrived at St. Helena the 7th April, and were to leave the island on the 13th. The Winchester, with troops from Bengal, sailed from St. Helena 10th April. The Repulse, store-ship, was to sail from St. Helena for Bencoolen the 14th April. The William Money, free trader, from Bengal, arrived at St. Helena on the 7th of April, and after landing the passengers was blown out to sea, and could not fetch into the road again. The Duchess of Athol took the passengers, and put them on board their own ship, on the morning of the 12th.

Last week a meeting of the inhabitants of Leeds was held, in the vestry of the parish church, to take into consideration the conduct of Mr. Littlewood, towards the late Maria Sleddin, and to determine on the propriety of continuing him in his office of Town's Husband, or Assistant Overseer. After a long discussion, it was resolved that the person should be continued in his office, but upon condition only, that he gave up his public house, it being the rules of the workhouse that the Town's Husband shall give up the whole of his time to the duties of his situation.

At the Second Newmarket Spring Meeting two accidents happened. The Rev. John Cox had a severe fall from his horse; Mr. Hopkinson of Trinity College, Cambridge, also a severe fall from his horse, and dislocated his shoulder. They were conveyed to the White Hart, and are doing well.

At the York Spring Meeting, on Monday, the Sweepstakes of 20 guineas, for 3-yr olds, was won by Sir W. M. Milner's bl. c. Angler; and the Sweepstakes for the same age colts was won by Lord Fitzwilliam's br. c. Bordeaux; the Produce Stakes of 50 guineas, by Mr. Watt's ch. f. by Blacklock; and the St. Leger Stakes by Mr. Watt's ch. c. Barefoot.

On Tuesday, a meeting of weavers took place in the spacious vestry room of the parish church of Spitalfields, for the purpose of opposing the bill now in progress through Parliament, for repealing the existing law relative to the wages of those engaged in the manufacture of silk.

The very pathetic account of a dreadful accident at Byrncoed Colliery, near Mold, Montgomeryshire, given in some of the papers, is all a fabrication.—Gloucester Journal.

On Thursday last Mr. Tubor, Police Magistrate, accompanied by Mr. Farrell, Chief Peace Officer, proceeded to Dunleary, to take measures for preventing a vessel called the William, of Dublin, from putting out to sea, in consequence of the want of necessary accommodation for the passengers on board during their voyage to Quebec. Her burden was but ninety-three tons, and she had on board one hundred and fifty-six passengers, being one hundred and nine persons more than her allowance per tonnage. The Magistrate and Mr. Farrell left two revenue officers on board in charge of the vessel, and returned to town. During the night the captain came on board, and actually put to sea with the officers on board. As soon as the circumstance was discovered two revenue cruisers were dispatched after him, but as yet no account has been received.—Dublin Paper.

In the Court of King's Bench, on Friday, an action was tried (Draper v. Jarratt, and another) to recover damages from the Sheriff's of London and Middlesex, for the default of their officer in taking insufficient pledges under a writ of fi. fa. The cause of action was, the defendant's taking what is called Jew bail, upon a Replevin bond, which was given to release an execution for twelve months rent, put into a house in Regent street, Poplar. The defendant accepted that of Price, an attorney, now a prisoner in the King's Bench, his (Price's) clerk not worth sending to prison, and John Weal, one of those persons as sham bail, who usually ply about the entrance of Sergeants' Inn; these sureties being every one of them in insolvent circumstances, by which William Draper, the plaintiff, lost his remedy, as obtained against the goods and chattels of the party distrained upon. These facts being proved, a verdict was taken for the plaintiff for 34l.

OLD BAILEY.

MONDAY.—T. Richardson and J. Groves, were indicted for stealing a quantity of lead, from the roof of Stanmore Church. Charles French deposed, that he saw the prisoners in Honeypot-lane, on the 9th, with a cart; they proceeded to dung-hill, and took the lead from it, and put it into the cart; witness followed them to Edgware, and took them into custody. The prisoners made no defence, nor called any witnesses to character.—Guilty.

George Davis, aged 23, was indicted for stealing a watch, chain, and seal from the person of James J. Dunch. The prosecutor stated, that he went one evening to the pit of Drury Lane Theatre, which was very much crowded. Prisoner pushed by witness with considerable difficulty, and in a few minutes returned again. Witness missed his watch; he ran out of the theatre, and witness pursued him to York-street, where he took him into custody; he had not the watch, it lay on the bar of an area, within three feet of where the prisoner was stopped. The prisoner in his defence said, that he came out of the theatre because it was so crowded; he denied having stolen the watch. The Recorder summed up the evidence, and the Jury returned a verdict of—Guilty.

TUESDAY.—These Sessions having concluded, the Recorder proceeded to pass the awful sentence of Death upon the following six unhappy convicted individuals, viz.:—John Brown, for burglary; Thomas Connor, Thomas Coolley, Kitty Shean, Thomas Fenwick, and Frederick John Wm. Norton, for stealing in dwelling houses.

Wm. Ball, to be transported for life; John Holden, for fourteen years; George Moss, George Bowring, Mary Trevine, Eliz. Benson, George Hurd, Mary Williams, Thomas Jones, Geo. Freeman, Thomas Richardson, James Grove, George Purkis, Hannah Williams, Thomas Johnson, Thomas Jackson, John Collins, and Charles Whitmarsh, for seven years. Several were ordered to be imprisoned in the House of Correction for various periods, some to be privately, and others publicly whipped. The sessions then adjourned to the 25th of June.

NO FICTION: a Narrative founded on Facts. By the Rev. ANDREW REED, seventh edition, 2 vols. crown 8vo. price 12s. boards. —Published by Francis Westley, 10, Stationers'-court, Ludgate-street. London.

"We have lately perused a Work intituled 'No Fiction,' which is a narrative of facts altogether so extraordinary and so interesting, that if the excellent Author had not pledged his word for its veracity, it might justly be supposed to belong to the region of romance rather than of history. It has indeed the brilliant conception and a proof of inventive genius; but how much is its interest and its utility increased by the assurance that all the leading events recorded in it are not the creatures of imagination, but substantial realities; that they are not conjured up for the sake of dramatic effect, but have been actually presented on the stage of life. The Narrative is clothed in language at once elegant and simple; it evinces an intimate knowledge of the human heart, and we are convinced that no person can rise from its perusal without being sensibly improved both in hear. and understanding."—Statesman.

They have also a very superior Stock of Foreign Wines, Cape Madeira, Brandy, (white and coloured) Rum, Hollands, Geneva, and Orange Shrub; and they have been enabled to make a considerable reduction in their prices generally.—22, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

ROBINSON'S PREPARED BARLEY, AND PREPARED OATS.—These Preparations are entirely from the Finest Pearl Barley and Embden Groats, from which Barley Water and Water Gruel are made in ten minutes. Their superiority and delicacy of flavour have obtained the most distinguished support from the Medical Profession of the first eminence, and the general satisfaction of all who have used them. The Inventor confidently recommends them to the Nobility and Gentry, and Merchants trading to the East and West Indies, &c. and to the Public in general. Warranted to keep in any climate.—The above articles are esteemed essentially beneficial as Food for Infants: the Barley is particularly fine for thickening Broths, and making an elegant Pudding.

Sold, wholesale and retail, by the sole Inventor, M. Robinson, No. 64, Red Lion-street, Red Lion-square (the corner of Eagle-street,) in packages of 1lb. or canisters 2lbs. each, likewise by the following appointed Agents:—Hickson and Co.'s Italian Warehouse, No. 72, Welbeck-street; Hill's Italian Warehouse, No. 62, Piccadilly; J. R. begs families, &c. to desire their servants to be particular in asking for Robinson's Prepared Barley, or Prepared Oats, and to observe that the name of Matthias Robinson, with directions for use, is printed on every package.

PYKE'S BROMA is a very nutritious and highly restorative Diet, for invalids in particular, having the sanction of many of the first eminent of the faculty, who recommend it as an auxiliary in all complaints of the stomach and bowels, whether arising from intemperance or natural debility, by which the digestive functions have been deranged. The constant use of this innocent and salutary preparation would be found of inestimable benefit even to those who are not actually suffering from ill health; one of its peculiar properties being, that it never recoils on the most delicate stomach; and, by its correcting or neutralising the acrimonious state of the humours, which are commonly by an irksome flatulence and that painful sensation called the heartburn, it will prove to be one of the most powerful preventives of disease. In all affections of the gout, and for ladies during confinement, it will be found very beneficial. As part of a Sea-stock, no refreshment can be more desirable for the prevention of sea-sickness.—For both morning and evening refreshment, the Broma is particularly recommended to public speakers of all classes, and to musicians, whether professors or amateurs, vocal or instrumental; as the effects of only a few days' uninterrupted use, of obtaining that steadiness of the nerves, or self-possession, so essential to success in the estimation of an auditory.

CAUTION.—The increasing sale of the Broma having tempted the introduction of a spurious preparation under the same name and form of packet, the proprietor wishes it to be clearly understood, that what has not the name of "W. Pyke," on the Government Stamp affixed to the packet, but is a compound of ingredients very different in their nature, and most probably injurious in their effect, Manufactured by W. Pyke, and sold, wholesale, at his offices in the Exchange, Bristol; wholesale and retail by Messrs. Hetherington and Maskews, King's Arms-yard, Coleman-street, London; and retail by the principal tea-dealers throughout the united Kingdom.

GREY HAIR changed in a few minutes to a Brown Black. In short, ABIGAIL'S GOLDEN METALLIC TINCTURE is the purest and best discovery in the Universe; as it is sure to change Red or Grey Hair on the Head, Whiskers, Eyebrows, or any other part, to a brown black. Directions are sealed up with each bottle, so that any one can dye their own hair with ease and secrecy in a few minutes, without staining the skin. What makes the Golden Tincture preferable to any other dye, it actually changes the hair to no other colour than a brown black, and never comes off. Several Gentlemen have declared, who have dyed their whiskers with it, and have half an hour after shaved and washed with soap, that none of the dye comes off.

CAUTION.—As many counterfeits are generally tried to be counterfeited, therefore Ladies and Gentlemen will be particular, and ask for Abigail's Golden Metallic Tincture, at One Pound a bottle, or six bottles for Five Pounds, which is saving, and observe, "Abigail A. P." is signed on the cover of each bottle, without it is not genuine, and cannot answer expurpose.—Sold by appointment at A. Prince's, No. 9, Poland-street, near the Pantheon, Oxford-street, London, and No. 66, London-road, Surrey; Sangar, 150, Oxford street; Prout, 229, Strand; Davison, 59, Fleet street; Rigge, 65, Cheapside; Johnson, 68, Cornhill; Tutt, Royal Exchange; and by most principal Perfumers and Medicine Venders.—Ladies and Gentlemen residing in the country, sending a remittance, it will be forwarded immediately by coach. It is so prepared as to keep in all climates: the older the better.—Merchants and Captains will receive a liberal allowance for exportation.

LATEST NEWS.

Paris papers of Friday arrive by express yesterday afternoon, they contain a telegraphic communication from Bayonne, dated the 20th Inst. which states, General Count Molitor was at Sarrisena on the 11th. The division commanded by General Pamphlile-Lacroix arrived on the 8th, at the town of Monzo, and took possession of one of the outworks of the fort. A detachment from the garrison of Lerida has been defeated by a corps sent against that place.—General Molitor is upon Segra.

The Duke of Belluno is confined to his apartment with an attack of the gout.

A letter from Vigo, dated 5th inst. says, on the 1st, inst. arrived the British packet Stanmer, bringing Sir R. Wilson, Col. Light, Captain Erskine, two French and two German officers, all for the purpose of joining the Spaniards against the French. They were received with enthusiasm, and a discharge of artillery from all the ships and batteries, the whole of the troops were ordered out for the inspection of Sir Robert. On the 4th, (Sunday) the English officers (the French and German having gone to Corunna,) were regularly admitted as Spanish soldiers, and after a speech from Sir Robert in Spanish, at the head of the troops, they fell into the rank with musket and bayonet.

An article from Seville, communicates the substance of a manifesto from Ferdinand to the Spanish nation, which was laid before the Cortes in the sitting of the 27th ult. in which he complains of the unjust conduct of France in invading the Spanish territory without a previous declaration of war.

Letters from Lisbon state that Rego has been disgraced.

The following is stated to be the disposition and amount of the Spanish army:—Morillo has near Benavente, 9,000—Empecinado, near Valladolid, 4,000—Guerillas, Bailesteros, near Sarinena, 9,000—Mina, in Catalonia, 38,000 infantry and 2,500 cavalry—Abisbal and Espluesa, near Madrid, 18,000 infantry and 3,000 cavalry. Besides those regular troops there are 12,000 militia and 8,000 volunteers.

In the Court of King's Bench, yesterday, an Indictment was tried, (the King v. Bennett and Oldfield,) for keeping a common gambling house, at No. 71, St. James's-street. The principal evidence against the defendants was a Mr. Erskine Grant, who described the game played at the house as Rouge et Noir. A servant man shuffles the cards, there are 31 pips or counters, and the nearest to 31 takes all the money upon the table, which is sure to fall to the proprietors. He has seen 1,300l. at one time on the table, forming a bank, which the proprietors kept against all players. Persons playing, staked from 10s. to 100l. When the visitor won he was paid from the bank.—They were found Guilty.

In the Insolvent Debtors' Court, yesterday, Benjamin Endersby, an Innkeeper at Petton, in Bedfordshire, was opposed by Mr. Wells, or undue preference. The insolvent stated that one Mason lent him upwards of 600l. and put in an execution upon his property last Christmas for 697l. Mason was called to contradict the statement; he admitted that he gave the instructions for the warrant, but could not tell why, for he never lent the insolvent money. The Court remanded the insolven for three years.

At Bow street, yesterday, John Gottie, the man charged with setting his house on fire in New street, Covent-garden, underwent another examination. The evidence of two persons were entered into, that of Mrs. Brooks's daughter, and a man formerly an apprentice to the prisoner, from both of which nothing material transpired; and in consequence of the absence of other witnesses, the Magistrate, regretting the delay, again remanded the prisoner till Wednesday, giving peremptory orders for their attendance.

The new edition just published of Madame Campan's very interesting Memoirs of Mary Antoinette is embellished with an additional Portrait and very striking likeness of that unfortunate Queen.

Mr. T. Roscoe has been for a considerable time engaged on an English Version of Sismondi's admirable Work on the Literature of the South of Europe, which we understand will be published in a few days.

It was announced yesterday at Lloyd's, that three Dutch merchantmen have been taken by a Spanish privateer, and carried into Algesiras.

On Friday morning the body of a female infant, apparently about two days old, was found in a basket in the canal in the Regent's Park.

The celebration of the Eton Montem has caused an extraordinary demand for the publication of the Etonian, the third edition of which has just appeared. It has been justly observed, that "so much ingenuity, good taste, good sense, and good feeling are displayed, that Eton has reason to be proud of her sons, and their labours deserve extended patronage."

The brig Robert, of Whitehaven, Nathan Portius, master, from Dublin to Liverpool, struck on the rocks near Longness point, about nine o'clock on Saturday se'nnight, when she immediately fell over into deep water, and upwards of 40 passengers perished, as also 30 horses, 40 head of cattle, 140 pigs, &c.

THE MANUSCRIPT OF 1814.—We understand that a very important work, under the above title, will appear in London in a few days. It comprises an account of the first Invasion of France by the Allies, drawn up at the command and under the immediate inspection of Napoleon, by his Secretary, Baron Fain, and illustrated with the Secret Correspondence of the various Ministers, British and Foreign.

ELEGANT GLASSES, FURNITURE, &c.—The Nobility and Gentry are invited to inspect the Ware rooms of Cooper and Son, 83, Bishopsgate Within, where is exhibited a large Assortment of new and second-hand Plate Glasses, admirably suited to every description of drawing or dining-rooms. The prices are just reduced 40 per cent. on plates measuring 100 inches by 72, and upwards; and on those of smaller dimensions the alteration will be found equally important. The extensive preference given to this Establishment is thankfully acknowledged by the Proprietors, who, in their endeavours to evince their gratitude, by manufacturing articles in a superior manner, at prices suitable to the times, hope to merit a continuance of public support. In the furniture department is comprised every new and elegant article of upholstery, cabinet, and chair work, regulated upon such a scale of economy as to demand and ensure the patronage of rank and fashion.

A candid examination of professional pretensions is only to be feared by those who are conscious of incapacity. Messrs. Goss and Co. Members of the Royal College of Surgeons, confine their studies to the treatment of such disorders as arise from nervous debility. Their works. "The Ægis of Life," and "Hygeiana," (the latter addressed to females) be had in full explanation of these maladies, may be had at No. 99, Paternoster-row, London, Porter, 73, Grafton street, Dublin, or at any Booksellers. Medicines can be forwarded to any part, however distant, on receiving a Bank note.—11, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street, London.

" FOR GOD, THE KING, AND THE PEOPLE!"

No. 129. SUNDAY, JUNE 1, 1823. Price 7d.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I Beg your acceptance of my sincere and grateful acknowledgments for the honour which you have been pleased to conferon me by electing me a Director of your Affairs. It will be my constant study, hereafter, by a faithful and zealous discharge of all the duties connected with this important and honourable station, to merit a continuance of your confidence.—I have the honour to be, very respectfully, Ladies and Gentlemen, your obliged and obedient servant, Devonshire place, May 28, 1823. J. BAILLIE.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

THE very flattering manner in which you have been pleased to receive my pretensions to the honour of a seat in the DIRECTION of your AFFAIRS, induces me most respectfully to solicit the favour of your support on the next VACANCY. Anxious, however, to avoid unnecessary trouble to my friends, I decline calling a meeting of them before a Vacancy is likely to take place, when the result of their deliberations, together with the particular grounds upon which I offer myself to your notice will be submitted to you.

Being entirely free from engagements in business, I frankly repeat, that employment is my principal object, and I naturally seek it in connection with those public interests of which, especially those embraced in your intercourse with China, I must necessarily have acquired some local information and experience, during a period of upwards of 25 years in your service.—I have the honour to be, with great respect, Ladies and Gentlemen, your very faithful and obedient Servant, C. MACKINNON.

Camden-hill, Kensington, May 28, 1823.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

IN again presenting myself to your notice as a Candidate for a Seat in the Direction of your affairs, I trust I may, without presumption, refer to the Resolutions passed at the numerous Meeting of my Friends, held this day at the City of London Tavern, as justifying to you my fixed determination to proceed to the Ballot on the next vacancy. It is my intention to avail myself of the earliest occasion of soliciting personally the Suffrages of those Proprietors to whom I have not yet had the opportunity of being personally known.—I have the honour to remain, very respectfully, Ladies and Gentlemen, your faithful and obedient Servant, JOHN MASTERMAN.

Nicholas lane, May 27, 1823.

AT a Numerous and highly Respectable MEETING of PROPRIETORS of EAST INDIA STOCK, held at the City of London Tavern, on Tuesday, the 27th of May, 1823, RICHARD CAMPBELL BAZETT, Esq. in the Chair.—The following Resolutions were passed unanimously.

1. Proposed by Edward Fletcher, Esq. and seconded by Lewis Lloyd, Esq.:—

"That it is the opinion of this Meeting that a practical Knowledge of the Commercial Interests and Usages of this Country, with which those of the East India Company are intimately connected, constitutes an important qualification in a Candidate aspiring to a Seat in the Direction of the Affairs of that Company."

2. Proposed by Stewart Majoribanks, Esq. M.P. and seconded by Robert Shedden, Esq.:—"That when with commercial experience are found united general talent, sound judgment, and active habits of business, such acquirements stamp the possessor of them with a fair and honourable claim to the favour and support of all who are interested in the welfare of the East India Company."

3. Proposed by Henry Bonham, Esq. and seconded by William Willoughby Prescott, Esq.:—"That this Meeting do unanimously concur in considering, that in the well known character of Mr. John Masterman these several qualifications are combined in an eminent degree, and that, with such pretensions, his interests are entitled to the countenance and support of the East India Proprietary."

4. Proposed by Sir James Shaw, Bart. and seconded by Joseph Butterworth, Esq. M.P.:—"That the Proprietors here assembled pledge to Mr. John Masterman their strenuous assistance to place him in the East India Direction on the first vacancy which may hereafter occur; and that they will, in the meantime, use their influence and exertions to secure his success."

R. C. BAZETT, Chairman.

Mr. Bazett having left the Chair,—It was proposed by Thomas Weeding, Esq. and seconded by Michael William Troy, Esq. and Resolved unanimously, "That the cordial thanks of this Meeting be given to R. C. Bazett, Esq. for his very able, courteous, and impartial conduct in the Chair."

Crouch, 3s.; the much admired favourite Quadrilles from La Donna del Lago, in which is introduced "Aurora ! che sorgera," composed by Rossini, 4s.; Gow's original First Set of Scotch Quadrilles, arranged as Duets for the Piano-forte, by D. Bruguier, 4s.——N.B. Piano-fortes and Harps let on hire.

L'AURORA D'ITALIA, or Select Library of Modern Italian Vocal Music. The Second Number of this work, containing the following New Compositions, engraved from the original Manuscripts, is just published by T. Boosey and Co. No. 28, Holles-street, Oxford-street, price 8s. to Subscribers, and 9s. to Non-Subscribers:—1. Dieu Buffo, by Signor Crecla, sung with unbounded applause at the concerts of the nobility and gentry by Signors De Begnis and Placci.—2. Aria, by Dorrisetti, (pupil of Mayr).—3. Quartetto Pastorale, by Rossini. The publishers trust that the above elegant collection of Modern Italian Vocal Music will, from the excellence of the compositions it will contain, the correct and tasteful style of its execution, added to its extremely moderate price, ensure the approbation of the public.

WEBER'S OPERA DER FREYSCHUTZ, with ENGLISH WORDS by T. CAMPBELL, Esq.—On the 24 June will be published an admired Cavatine and Song from the above celebrated Opera, forming the two first Numbers of a Selection of the best Songs, Duets &c. from the most esteemed German Operas, with English Words by T. Campbell, Esq. Published by T. Boosey and Co. 28, Holles-street, Oxford-street.—From the numerous enquiries made to them for the Songs from above Opera, and the disappointment experienced on finding they only existed with German Words, the Publishers feel confident that a judicious Selection from this and other admired German Operas, with English Words by Mr. Campbell, will prove an important acquisition to the admirers of vocal music.

THE EXHIBITION of the SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS will CLOSE on SATURDAY, JUNE the 14th, at their Gallery, 6, Pall-mall East, Cockspur-street.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY.

The Paisley Gas Light Bill was passed.

A Petition from the Clerk of the Crown for Limerick, against the Grand Jury Presentment Bill, was laid on the Table.

TUESDAY.

The Manchester Gas and several private Bills were read a first time. Several petitions from the Clerks of the Crown in the Counties in Ireland were presented against the Grand Juries Presentment Bill.

On the third reading of the Shadwell Church Bill, the EARL OF ROSSLYN objected to the clause appointing twenty-four new trustees, and moved that it be rejected; but the amendment was negatived, and the Bill passed.

THE MARQUIS OF LANSDOWNE presented a petition in favour of the commutation of tithes in Ireland, signed by three-fourths of the beneficed clergy and lay impropriators of the County of Kerry, and part of the County of Cork. It was laid on the table.

THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY moved the second reading of the Marriage Bill. His Grace observed, that the least objectionable course of proceeding, as it appeared to the Committee, was to re-enact the voidable clause in a mitigated state, confining its operation to parents of minors, and to those persons by whom they were represented, and limiting the time for making the application to twelve months after marriage.]

LORD ELLENBOROUGH observed, that the country was now subject to the Old Marriage Law, without any inconvenience. He (Lord E.) had wished a law on this subject to be clear and explicit without reference to Law Courts, and that facilities should be given to Dissenters, particularly Unitarians, and Roman Catholics. The latter were secured in marriages contracted in Ireland, but if they came over to England, they might avail themselves of the avoidable clause. The clause for protecting parental rights was of no use, so long as the marriages of minors by banns without consent should be valid. Such a clause would do every thing that could be done to encourage seduction under the semblance of marriage, and, instead of supposing it to have proceeded from the Right Rev. Prelate and the Noble and Learned Earl, he should rather have expected it from a set of dissolute minors, or from Don Juan himself.

THE EARL OF WESTMORELAND was of opinion the clause went to encourage profligacy and immorality, and to destroy the security of property. He should therefore oppose it.

THE BISHOP OF CHESTER considering that the divine law said, "what God hath joined let not man put asunder," and that the clause said on the contrary, let them live like man and wife together for a year, and then let them be separated if it be thought proper, should ask their Lordships whether that was a clause that could be enacted by a Christian Assembly? He should never give his vote to part those whom God had joined and declared should not be put asunder.

THE BISHOP OF DERRY was anxious that it should not go out to the world that the progeny of incestuous marriages was legitimate. Such marriages were void ab initio, and their progeny not recognized by law.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH would rather hear the law explained by the Noble and Learned Earl than by the Rev. Prelate.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR said they must have the law of Scripture and the law of the land a good deal more considered than it had been yet. The Bill was then read a second time, and Tuesday next was fixed upon for going into a Committee.—Adjourned.

WEDNESDAY.

The Irish County Treasurers, and the Irish Grand Jury presentment Bills were brought up from the Commons.

On the first reading of the latter Bill, the EARL OF DONOUGHMORE moved that the Bill be printed and lie over for a week. Ordered.

A Petition was presented from the Woolstaplers of Leicester against the duties on Foreign Wool. Adjourned till Fridry.

FRIDAY.

The Royal Assent was given by Commission to the Irish County Treasurers', the Irish Charitable Societies' Loan, the Commercial Intercourse, and several private Bills.—The Masters and Apprentices' Bill, and several private Bills, were read a first time.

THE EARL OF ROCHSAVAGE presented a Petition from the Clergy and Inhabitants of the town of Cambridge, praying for the abolition of Slavery.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR had expressed his intention last year of preparing a Bill to mend the provisions of the law respecting Bankrupts. The Bill had been prepared so as to contain matter agreeable to all that had been suggested and to reduce the whole of the Bankrupt Laws into one Act of Parliament. He had reason to believe that it would be introduced on an early day next week in the other House; if it were not so, he should present it himself to their Lordships.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY.

Petitions were presented from the Tanners of Bandon (Ireland) praying for a repeal of the Bark Duties; the Chamber of Commerce in Dublin, praying for a revision of the laws relating to principal and actors; from the Coroners of Galway, praying to be restored to their fees; from the Corporation of London, against the Southwark Small Debts' Bill: from the vicinity of Norwich, complaining of Agricultural Distress; from the Curriers of Whitby, praying for a repeal of the duty on Foreign Tanned Leather; from Kirkdale in Scotland, (by Sir R. Fergusson) praying for a repeal of the duty on Brimstone.

SIR T. LETHBRIDGE presented a petition from a Mr. W. Parker, who had gone from this country with a party of settlers to the Cape, complaining of the conduct of the Government in the colony, towards the settlers, and praying for an inquiry into the same.

MR. W. HORTON had no objection to give every information on this subject, but it would be inconvenient to furnish an elaborate answer to the charges, and without going into a statement of considerable length he could not do justice to Col. Bird, and the Government at the Cape. Government had no intention of sending out any more persons as settlers. But the rate of wages was so high in that colony, that many persons were desirous of going out. The petition was ordered to be printed.

MR. SERJEANT ONSLOW postponed the second reading of the Usury Laws Repeal Bill till Monday next.

The House went into a Committee on the enquiry in to the conduct of the Sheriff of Dublin.

Sir Arthur Bradley King was called in and examined.

By SIR J. NEWPORT—I apprehend that on the former night Witness understood that he was questioned on the subject of the Orangeman's oath, made prior to the adoption of the new system of 1820?—I was.

I wish to ask, did witness take the oath under the old system?—I did.

Will witness state whether the oath under the old system was that which I shall now read to him.

[The Right Hon. Baronet here read an oath, binding the party taking it to support his Majesty King George the Third, his heirs and successors, as long as they maintained the Protestant ascendancy, the laws, and constitution of these kingdoms; and also binding the party to honour the memory of William the Third, and never to become a Papist or an United Irishman, or to take the secret oaths of that or any other Society; and always to conceal and never to reveal what was then to be communicated to him till authorised to do so by the Orange Institution. It also bound the party not to write, indite, print, or in any other way make known such secrets, and to remain a true Orangeman without fear, bribery, or corruption. So help him God.]

Was this part of what you subscribed to as an Orangeman?—The whole of it was part of the declaration of the Orangeman.

Was this part of it?—"That we will be true to all Orangemen in all just transactions, neither wronging them, nor seeing them wronged by others?"—I state this to have been part of the published declaration of the Orangemen, such it was no doubt. But no part of it was secret, and I understood the Right Hon Baronet to ask if this did not form a part of the secret articles.

I wish to know if the witness entered into such an agreement or not?—Unquestionably.

Was this part of the Orangeman's engagement—"We will not carry away money, goods, or any thing, from any person whatever, excepting arms and ammunition, and these only from our enemies?" Did the witness subscribe to these words?—I never did, nor have I ever heard them before.

Is this a part of the declaration handed in by the witness?—It is not.

The witness answered some further questions not material—and was asked, what are the words by which a Purpleman is distinguished from an Orangeman.

SIR. SECRETARY PEEL rose to order, and the witness was ordered to withdraw. It was at all times open to the discretion of the House whether any particular question should be put to a witness or not. He did not think the tranquility of Ireland was likely to be promoted by sending this witness to Newgate, and it did not appear to him necessary to the enquiry that this question should be either answered or put. There was now a Bill upon the table, putting an end to all these secret oaths, and in a fortnight they would be illegal in Ireland, as they already were in England.

SIR J. NEWPORT contended that the question was perfectly relevant to the inquiry, and ought to be put. The object was to inquire what the obligations of an Orangeman were, when the Sheriff had knowingly appointed Orangemen upon the pannel. The question now was, whether the privileges of that House were to be set at nought by the agreements and symbols of that society. The Hon. Bart. complained of having been misrepresented in what he said of the Scripture the other day, and also of the want of candour in the Hon. Member, who went up stairs to search the Bible for the passage he had mentioned. It was true that the Amalekites were not mentioned, but it was the Amorites. He thought the Hon. Member might in candour have told this to the House. He should like to know whether this reluctance would be observed towards a United Irishman if he were to refuse an answer upon the ground of having taken a secret oath. The Right Hon. Secretary of State had informed them that a Bill was in Parliament to put an end to all these societies. He hoped it would do so; and it was not his fault that such measures had not been taken before.

MR. CALCRAFT thought the question was not pertinent to the inquiry; but if his Right Hon. Friend thought differently, he had a right to put it.

MR. GOULBURN was of opinion that this was a question which it would neither be discreet nor desirable to put in any view of the case.

MR. ABERCROMBIE said, the whole question turned upon the obligations to which Orangemen were bound.

MR. SECRETARY CANNING said, if he had any doubt of the power of the House, he should have no difficulty in consenting to the question being put. But being fully convinced of their power to rule an unruly witness, he would not press forward in a course which he deemed likely to be most disastrous in its effects upon the state of Ireland. This was the opinion he entertained the other night, and after forty-eight hours reflection, he did think it would be more discreet to abstain from putting such questions. There being a Bill before the House for putting down this Orange Society, and having evidence already of what the Society is, he did not think it worth while, for the sake of gaining further evidence upon the subject, to incur the danger of such consequences as were justly to be apprehended.

MR. BROUGHAM said, it was too late to talk of expediency, they had determined to go into an inquiry upon the conduct of the Sheriff for packing a Jury. The Sheriff had bragged of having an Orange pannel in his pocket.

COLONEL BARRY rose to order. He did not think that the Hon. and Learned Gentleman had a right to assume these charges as proved when there was already evidence against them.

MR. BROUGHAM resumed. He certainly had a right to argue upon what was before them in evidence, although he did not assume it to be proved. It was in evidence that the Sheriff had acutingly said he had a good Orange pannel in his pocket. And since he was dragged into it, he must say that he never saw such a failure as the attempt to contradict it. They took the most extraordinary means—

MR. PLUNKETT rose to order. His Hon. and Learned Friend was departing from the rule he had laid down.

MR. BROUGHAM maintained, that it was perfectly relevant to put the question. Dignity had been talked of; but the House would lose all dignity, and authority likewise, unless it went back to the very question decided almost unanimously it would have answered. But now this Deputy Grand Master of all the Orange Lodges put their dignity to flight upon his first appearance. The other night the question was put to him, which he contumaciously refused to answer. But now they were not to proceed even so far as to put any question of which he was not likely to approve. He came like another great person age who came before him—veni, vidi, vici. Their duty was to probe this inquiry to the bottom, and to deal equally with all parties. Let them not send back Sir Abraham Bradley King to the Orange Lodges with the triumph of having humbled and defeated the Parliament of England.

After some further discussion as to the power of the Right Hon. Baronet to withdraw the question, which led to no decision upon the point, he withdrew it, and the witness was recalled, and Sir J. Newport put to him the following question:

From what part of Scripture are the passages taken, which are read to Orangemen?

MR. SECRETARY PEEL moved that the witness do withdraw; and objected to the question.—The witness withdrew.

SIR J. NEWPORT repeated the question, and moved that it be put.

MR. BROUGHAM seconded the motion, and said that this question was distinct from that upon which Ministers had just given an opinion, and without any inconsistency they might agree to it.

MR. PLUNKETT thought it would be better to put the question thus: "In what part of the Old Testament are the texts read to Orangemen to be found?"

SIR J. NEWPORT moved the question accordingly.

COLONEL BARRY said it would be dealing more fairly by the witness to ask him at once "In what book, and chapter, and verse in the Old Testament are the words to be found?"

SIR J. NEWPORT said he had not the slightest objection to put the question in this form.

The Committee divided—For the Motion, 87—Against it, 117—Majority, 30.

MR. BROUGHAM contended, that no one could see the tendency of the decision which they had come to, by sanctioning unlawful oaths and assemblies. They had, from religious opinions, encouraged the cutting up of all real religion by the vote. These oaths were mockeries, and tended to destroy all justice. He feared they did not so enquire into the propriety of putting the question; but rather whether Sir A. B. King, Orangeman, and Deputy Grand Master, was willing to answer it. They had heard the Lord Chief Justice and the Attorney General of Ireland declaring the oath to be illegal, and the Committee sheltered a man who pleaded his own misdemeanour in his defence.

The witness was then called in, and examined by Sir John Newport.

Are the following words, or any of them, read to an Orangeman on his admission?—"Abstain ye not; but pursue your enemies; suffer them not to enter your city; for the Lord God hath delivered them into your hands."—Not one word of them.

Or any words to that effect?—None that I know of.

What other texts of Scripture are read?

No answer was given.

By MR. BROUGHAM.—Do the texts which are read consist of two or more words, or of entire sentences.

MR. WETHERELL (referring to the answers given by the witness on Friday night) objected to the question.

MR. BROUGHAM consented to alter the form of his question, and put it thus:—Is there any verse in the 10th chapter of Joshua, from the 1st to the 19th verse, which is read to an Orangeman on his admission.

MR. WETHERELL objected also to the question in this shape.

MR. SECRETARY PEEL supported the objection. It might happen that some innocious verse or sentence was read: such as "Abraham begot Isaac," for instance: and yet, if the witness refused to answer it might be considered by the Right Hon. Bart. that some very objectionable sentence was actually read.—[Some further conversation as to the mode in which the question should be framed, arose,]—when MR. HUTCHINSON charged his Majesty's Government with having neglected their duty, and wishing that his sentiments in that respect should be put before the world, he should move that the Chairman do leave the Chair, and ask leave to sit again that day six months.

MR. SECRETARY PEEL submitted that this was not the proper opportunity to enter into a defence of his Majesty's Government. He was sure the House must acknowledge that his Majesty's Ministers had shewn every anxiety that the inquiry should go as far as possible. The question was negatived.

Sir A. B. King was then called in. In answer to questions he said some part of what passes in the lodge may be revealed, but not all—retired from the situation of Deputy Grand Master three years since—did not believe any thing hostile to any class of His Majesty's subjects passed in the Lodges—retired in consequence of a difference of opinion with the Grand Lodge relative to the dressing of the statue of King William—was against it, not thinking it prudent. No political questions are discussed by these Lodges, except that be one. There is nothing in the Orangeman's oath to disqualify him from doing his duty on a jury. There is nothing in the conduct of an Orange Lodge that ought to give offence to any part of His Majesty's subjects. The Catholics have lately taken offence at them, but it has been without cause.

MR. HUME—I wish to know what is the purport of those passages in the Old Testament used in the making of an Orangeman?

COL. BARRY objected to this question being put.

MR. HUME contended that was a legitimate object of the examination in which they were engaged. They had a right to know the purport at least of the passages; for it might be a resolution to hang all His Majesty's Catholic subjects.—(Cries of "No.")—He considered his question as necessary to elicit truth, and he charged the Government, who opposed it, with wishing to suppress the truth. He was of opinion that the Orange party, as a body, must be exterminated before justice could be done to Ireland, and he should certainly press his question to a division.—The Committee divided—For the motion, 77—Against it, 131—Majority, 54.

The witness was again called in.

By MR. HUME—Is there any thing contained in the passages read from Scripture to an Orangeman, on his admission, or afterwards, which expressed hostility, on the part of the Israelites, towards any other nation.

The witness replied, he did not recollect that there was.

Question. Then do all these passages contain expressions of peace and good-will towards men?

MR. WETHERELL objected to this question, and the witness was ordered to withdraw.

MR. ELLICE suggested whether it would not be more laudable in the Right Honourable Gentleman to get up and move that the inquiry be postponed till this day six months.

MR. SECRETARY PEEL rose to answer the Hon. Gentleman, who, after dining in comfort at home, had come down to the House to recommend giving up the inquiry.

MR. ELLICE assured the Right Hon. Gentleman that he had been in attendance during both divisions. It appeared that every obstacle was thrown in the way of inquiry. The witness had so bearded the house—had so triumphed over the House of Commons, that further inquiry could not consistently go on.

SIR J. YORKE said, to use the diplomatic language of the Right Hon. Secretary of State—Come what may; if a witness at the bar did not state what he ought, he should go to Newgate.

MR. JONES then moved as an amendment, that the Chairman do leave the chair.

On this Amendment a division took place—Ayes 42—Noes 133.

SIR J. YORKE expressed a hope that the House would go on with the examination fairly and honourably. It was against all order for Honourable Members, when a witness mentioned a passage in Scripture, to run to the smoaking room for the Bible, and to move that the witness withdraw when any mention was made of an Amalekite, a Hittite, or a Burdettite.—The House resumed.

The second reading of the Game Bill was postponed till Monday.

TUESDAY.

Petitions were presented from certain parishes in Kent, praying for a reduction of the Coal Duties; from the Linen Manufacturers of Aberdeen and Cupar against the Linen Stamping Law; from Burslem, praying for an equalization of the Duties on Sugar; from a town in the West Riding of Yorkshire complaining of Agricultural Distress; from Dudley against the Bill for regulating disputes between master and journeyman; (MR. LITTLETON who presented it, said the Bill would be full of inconvenience to other branches of manufactures, though it might suit the weavers at Coventry. Mr. Wortley, Lord Stanhope, Mr. Huskisson, and Mr. Dugdale said the Bill required some consideration) from certain coroners in Ireland against the Bill affecting them; from the port of Clyde against Slavery.

MR. HUME asked the Hon. Secretary for the Colonies whether it was intended to continue Sir T. Maitland in the Government of the Ionian Islands.

MR. W. HORTON could assure the Hon. Member that he knew of no intention to remove Sir T. Maitland from the Government of the Ionian Islands.

MR. LENNARD obtained leave to bring in a Bill to alter and amend the laws relating to the interment of the remains of persons felo de se.

MR. HUME rose to bring forward his motion for reducing the Lord Lieutenant and Chief Secretary for Ireland; but

MR. SECRETARY PEEL observing that the Chief Secretary was not then in the House,

MR. HUME then said that he would withdraw his motion, as it would do as well in a week or a fortnight, and he for one would not impede important business. He fixed the 17th of June for bringing it on.

MR. W. HORTON obtained leave to bring in a Bill for the better Administration of Justice in New South Wales; also to bring in a Bill for the Establishment of Civil Courts in the Colony of Honduras.

MR. SECRETARY PEEL said, the objects of the Bills he was about to bring in were, to repeal certain capital punishments, and to give to the Crown the power of employing convicts in hard labour. The capital offence of destroying hop-poles he proposed should be punished by transportation. The Right Hon. Gentleman then obtained leave to bring in several Bills to amend the existing Laws on the particular subjects mentioned.

The House went into Committee on the enquiry into the conduct of the Sheriff of Dublin.

MR. PLUNKETT was examined in his place by Mr. Calcraft, and, in answer to certain questions put by the Hon. Member, said—I never heard it was the practice of the Law Officers to order how to commit. In the case of Forbes they merely delivered an opinion. The act of committal is judicial; and the magistrate must act on his own discretion and responsibility. I think a magistrate would act irregularly and indiscreetly who should commit without examining the depositions himself. I never heard that Major Sirr differed in opinion from the Law Officers. There were several examinations taken in the absence of the Magistrates. The Magistrate with whom witness had communication was Major Sirr, and he expressed his opinion, and that of the other Law Officers of the Crown, that the commitment should be capital. The examinations were taken only with a view to enable the law officers of the Crown to determine how they should prosecute. George Graham was committed by Mr. Gabbett for conspiring to kill and murder—and given an opinion he ought to be committed capitally. The opinions of the law officers were given to Major Sirr on the Saturday preceding. Some of the police officers held their offices during pleasure, and others not. Believed Mr. Gabbett was removable at the pleasure of the Crown, and Major Sirr by the City. Additional information had been given, betwixt the committal for the minor and capital offences. The accused were afterwards held to bail by order of the Court, to answer informations to be filed afterwards by witness—must decline answering whether an Attorney-General has a right to call for bail to answer an information to be filed afterwards.

MR. GRATTAN suggested the re-calling of Sir Abraham King; but, after a few words from Mr. Secretary Peel, he abandoned his intention.

MR. CALCRAFT begged to know whether the Gallant Colonel had any more witnesses to call on the part of the Sheriff.

COLONEL BARRY said, that he would act according to the pleasure of the House; but he conceived that the case of the Sheriff had been completely established; and he had no wish unnecessarily to extend an inquiry which had already taken up so much time.

MR. DENMAN wished it to be understood, that no compromise had been made. It should be fully understood, that the case had closed only because it was the wish of the parties.

The question was then carried, that the Chairman should report the evidence, which was ordered to be printed; and the Order for the further attendance of the witnesses was discharged.

On bringing up the Report of the Joint Irish Tenantry Bill,

MR. R. MARTIN opposed it, and said he should divide the House if the bill was passed, as all the Catholic Freeholders, in joint tenantry, under 20l. a year would be disfranchised. The Bill would save him much trouble in canvassing; but, at the same time, would deprive the Catholics of their just rights.

The gallery was cleared for a division, when all the Members, to the number of 54, voted for the Committee, Mr. Martin being the only one who opposed it. The Bill afterwards went through the Committee.

Mr. Dawson brought up a Bill to extend the benefit of clergy to certain Larcenies; a Bill to repeal capital punishment enacted by certain Acts of George II. and III. and providing lesser punishments; a bill to repeal the punishment of Death for sending threatening letters; and a Bill to suspend judgment of Death in certain cases; and the East India Company's Mutiny Bill, which were read a first, and ordered to be read a second time on Friday next.—Adjourned.

WEDNESDAY.

Petitions were presented from the Magistrates of the county of Monmouth, complaining that the manufacturers pay their workmen in goods; from the Brewers of Camberwell against the Beer Bill; from a parish in Cumberland against Slavery; from Milton Abbotts, (Dorset), praying for a repeal of the Coal Duties; from certain bleachers in Yorkshire in favour of the Sulphuric Acid Bill as a permanent measure.

Mr. Hume presented a petition from John Hunt of the Examiner, complaining of having been prosecuted in 1821 by the self-constituted Constitutional Association, for a libel, and that on his trial improper persons had been put on the Grand Jury; for many, although the title of Esquire was attached to their names, had no right to that title. The mode of making up the pannel amounted to little short of packing a Jury. He called on the House, if they had any regard for the Trial by Jury, to interfere, and put an end to this system. The Hon. Member contended that by the mode of striking a jury at present adopted the appointing officer might name any jury he pleased. Now he (Mr. H.) did not intend to bring any charge against the present Master of the Crown Office, but he held a Parliamentary appointment, which produced him 1500l. a year, this rendered him dependent on the Crown, which he considered he ought not to be, in the situation in which he was placed. At the law now stood, the King and Parliament together did not possess so arbitrary a power as that possessed by the individual alluded to. He moved that the petition should be brought up.

Mr. Phillips considered the speech of the Hon. Gentleman as an attack upon the Master of the Crown Office—a more honourable man than whom did not exist either in or out of the house. He was mistaken with respect to the salary, for it was only 1000l. a year. It was impossible a Jury could be packed or selected in the way the Hon. Gentleman had described.

Mr. M. A. Taylor was old enough to recollect, that 44 years ago this was a subject of complaint. Mr. Lushington was an honourable and most respectable man, and would not do a corrupt or dishonourable act; but there might be some individuals, amongst Sheriffs and Under Sheriffs, not quite so scrupulously honest as the Master of the Crown Office.

Ma. Creevy agreed in the respectability of the Master of the Crown Office, and said that was a reason in favour of the enquiry now to take place.

Mr. Henry Grey Bennett thought the present excellent Master of the Crown Office would not strike a Jury partially. The complaint was against the system, and though Mr. Lushington would not pack a Jury, yet how could they say his successor would not. The Hon. Member adverted to the proceedings in 1817, in the Common Council, in the enquiry into the mode of striking a Special Jury, and contended that, from what came out on that enquiry, it was evident the Crown had, in some cases, exerted an influence in appointing the Jury.

The Attorney-General said the Hon. Member, (Mr. Bennett) had thrown out an insinuation against the Government of interfering in the appointment of Juries; he repelled the insinuation, and defied the Hon. Member to cite a case in which interference had existed.

Mr. Bright thought the House was bound to enquire. The system of striking Special Juries called for reform—it had been complained of as long ago as 1777. Horne Tooke called the attention of the House to the evils of the system. It had not improved since, and called for amendment.

Mr. Hobhouse objected to the Master of the Crown Office holding a place at the pleasure of the Crown. The Attorney-General had denied that the Government had ever interfered in the appointment of Juries; he would put it to the Hon. Attorney-General to say on his honour, whether Sir F. Burdett had not been sent to be tried in Leicestershire, because he thought there was more chance of getting a verdict against him than there would have been in London.

Mr. J. Williams contended that the large discretion left in the hands of the Master of the Crown Office ought to be put an end to. If no other person could, he would bring in a Bill to provide, that in future the power of the Master of the Crown Office should be confined to taking a Jury by chance and not by choice.

Mr. Hume, in moving for printing the petition, referred the Hon. Attorney-General to the Court of Exchequer for cases of partiality; on enquiry he had found that there were persons who made a sort of trade of attending as jurors in the Court of Exchequer; if a man was so bold as to stand out and give a verdict against the Crown, he was sure never to be summoned again.—The petition was ordered to be printed, as was a similar petition from Joseph Wm. Trust.—The Hon. Member then gave notice that he would, early the next Session, bring forward a motion on this subject.

Lord Nugent moved for leave to bring in a Bill to regulate certain tests by which Roman Catholics may be enabled to qualify for the exercise and enjoyment of certain offices mentioned therein. The Noble Lord said his object was to place the Roman Catholics of Great Britain upon the same footing with those of Ireland, but he had brought it forward without consulting any of the English Catholics. In 1793 an act was passed in Ireland, which gave to the Catholics of Ireland a right to vote at elections. At present an English Catholic was restricted from voting at elections, or from acting in the Commission of the Peace. A naturalized foreigner could do either. He would put it to the House to say if this was not a case of hardship. If there was any anomaly in allowing a Catholic to vote for the election of a Protestant representative, it ought not to be allowed to exist in Ireland; but a wealthy Catholic could, if he pleased, purchase Old Sarum, or any other borough, and so allow him to return two Members by his own nomination, while they denied to the Catholic the right of giving his own individual vote. He wished to confine his Bill to offices, to which they were admissible in Ireland; and therefore his list of offices would be an exact transcript of the Irish Bill in 1793. It was not his wish to meddle or interfere with the Test Act, further than that the oath and declaration should not be a previous condition for taking any of the offices named in his Bill, though he wished that in this age we should have no such clogs as those contained in the Test Act.

Mr. S. Wortley seconded the motion. When they considered that some of the noblest families in England was concerned in this measure, a strong case should be made out before the House would reject the measure.

Mr. Wetherell contended, that the view of the Noble Mover, as to the enjoyment of the elective franchise by Catholics, was in direct variance with the Constitution of the country. The extension of the elective franchise in Ireland to Catholics had led to much abuse; for he would maintain, that it was an abuse to split freeholds eo animo for the purpose of multiplying votes. He should, however, reserve himself until the Bill should be printed before he gave a distinct opinion upon the subject.

Mr. W. Bankes would reserve himself for future discussion; he might consent to admit the Catholics of England to the Magistracy; but he could not agree to give them the elective franchise.

Mr. Secretary Peel did not object to the Bill being brought in, for he was willing to grant the elective franchise to the Catholics; but he was of opinion, with Mr. Burke, that granting a franchise was not conceding office to any one. He was not disqualified on account of any oath; but merely for being a Papist. At the time of the Revolution a strong distinction was made between the capacity of electing and of being elected. On this principle the capacity of electing should be granted to the English Catholics; but he should strenuously oppose any attempt to invest them with the power or the capability of being elected. With respect to the general question he should still be prepared to give a decided negative to any further concessions to the Catholics of Ireland.

Mr. H. Gurney supported the motion.

Mr. Bankes disagreed with the Noble Lord in granting the elective franchise to the English Catholics, which he thought should never have been conceded to the Catholics of Ireland. He believed that the granting the elective franchise in 1793 to the Irish Catholics was one of the great causes of the mischief and inconvenience so much felt in Ireland.

Mr. W. Smith hoped that the House would, ere long, see the necessity of admitting Catholics to seats in that House, and that all the prejudices on religious subject would be laid down and trampled in the dust.

Sir J. Macintosh believed the Bill of his Noble Friend would remove every obstacle to the admission of Catholics to the Magistracy. Leave was given to bring in the Bill.

Mr. Maberley moved for a Select Committee to enquire into the propriety of collecting the tax on Malt and Beer separately, and whether the duty might not be levied on Malt alone. The Hon. Member said that while the poor man paid a duty of 50s. the rich only paid a duty of 20s. He would ask why the duty could not be transferred from Beer to Malt, by which a saving would be effected of 280,000l. The public brewer brewed 18 millions of bushels of Malt, besides the quantity used in the distilleries to the amount of 500,000 bushels. This object was to relieve the poor from the unjust and unequal duty by imposing an additional duty of 2s. on all malt whether consumed by public or private brewer.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer said, the change proposed by the Hon. Gentleman would lead to a considerable increase of the duty on malt, from the greater temptation to evade it. In many parts of the country people in a humble sphere of life brewed their own beer; and upon them the plan of the Hon. Gentleman went to impose an additional tax. He thought the time unseasonable, as it might affect the distillers and duties, amounting in the aggregate to eight or nine millions. He must oppose the appointment of a Committee.

Sir J. Macintosh supported the motion, on the ground that it would benefit the poor.

Mr. Hume said, when the land-owner was concerned, he wished the Duty to be reduced to 1s. a bushel, and he believed there could be no diminution of the revenue.

Mr. J. Bennett said, if an additional Duty of 2s. per bushel should be laid on Malt, the private brewer would be annihilated.

Sir J. Newport stated, that the late Mr. Grattan had been of opinion, that the brewer should be relieved from the tax, which should be laid on Malt.

Col. Wood thought the Duty on Malt clearly too high, and it would be much better to lower the Duty on Beer.

Mr. Wodehouse, Mr. Western, and Mr. Byng opposed the motion.

Mr. Ricardo, Lord Althorp, Alderman Wood, Mr. Monck, and Mr. Henry Grey Bennett supported the motion. On a division, there were, for the motion, 27, against it, 119.

Mr. Fyshe Palmer moved for leave to bring in a Bill to enable brewers to sell beer in quantities of less than four gallons and a half, providing the same was not drank on the premises where it was made.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer said the Motion was unnecessary, as the object in view was already provided for by law. The Motion was then withdrawn.

Mr. R. Martin moved for leave to bring in a Bill to regulate the issuing Writs of Capias in Ireland. For the Motion, 23—Against it, 23—Majority 20.

The Masters and Apprentices Bill was passed.

Mr. C. Wynn moved a Resolution for bringing in a Bill to regulate the trade between this country and the East Indies. Leave was given to bring in a Bill.

The Poor Laws Amendment Bill was committed for Friday s'ennight. Adjourned till Friday.

FRIDAY.

The Speaker, attended by the Members, went to the other house, when the royal assent was given (for which see the Lords).

Petitions were presented from the parish of Carrington, against the Duty on Coals; from Cumberland, against Slavery; from certain individuals, praying that the Rules of the King's Bench Prison may be abolished; from the Weavers of Stockport, against the use of Machinery, and praying that Magistrates may be allowed to fix the maximum of wages; from Middlesex and Surrey, complaining of the low state of Wages.

Mr. Hume gave notice of a Motion for Tuesday next, respecting Special Jury Pannels in the Court of Exchequer.

The Report of the Lancaster County Court Bill was ordered for further consideration on Wednesday next.

Mr. Calcraft seeing no prospect of being able to make his motion for the repeal of the Leather Tax this session, he should bring it on early in the next.

Mr. Western postponed his motion on the Currency to June 11.

Mr. Abercromby gave notice that he should make his motion relative to Mr. Horthwick on the 3d of June.

Mr. Hume gave notice that, on the 19th of June, he should bring forward his motion relative to the freedom of discussion.

On the question for going into Committee on the Irish Commutation of Tithes Bill,

Sir. J. Nichol observed that the Bill did not confine itself to the Clergy, but went also to affect the tithes of the Laity, who were known to possess a great portion. A case might exist for the application of this measure to some parts of Ireland; but he protested against its extension to England. There were two points which demanded attention—the one was, that a fair and adequate compensation should be given between the parties; the next point was that attention should be had to the price of commodities and the value of money. These ought to be most carefully attended to.

In the Committee on the first clause, enabling the Lord Lieutenant to appoint Vestries, upon application, to carry the provisions of the Act into execution, being read,

Mr. Wetherell observed, that it would be a fortunate thing if Irish Vestries were found to be so full of peace and concord, on which English Vestries were so deficient.—The clause was agreed to.

On the next clause, requiring that fourteen days' notice should be given to the Incumbent of such Vestries, being read,

Colonel Barry observed, that it frequently happened that the incumbent was not resident, in which case it would be difficult to serve the notice on him personally within fourteen days.

Mr. V. Fitzgerald said, the incumbent ought to attend once a month to look after his rights.—Clause agreed to.

On the clause regulating the formation of Select Vestries to carry the provisions of the Bill into effect, a conversation of some length took place.

Mr. V. Fitzgerald was of opinion the clause before the House would not in its present form accomplish the object in view. He thought the Bill could not be worked by parochial machinery.

Mr. Secretary Peel observed, that to accomplish a measure of the present nature many difficulties must occur—where the Bill applied to a country which contained 2000 parishes, diminished indeed by the unions of several parishes to 11 or 1200 incumbencies, and in which millions of persons were paying tithes.

Mr. V. Fitzgerald contended that the particular means by which it was to be carried into effect were inapplicable to the present situation of Ireland. He admitted that the difficulties to be encountered were considerable, but was not to be precluded from suggesting any alterations that he might think necessary.

It was at length agreed to let the clause stand over.

Mr. Goulburn moved, that if it should appear to the Commissioners that the average of three years is not a fair valuation, it shall be lawful for them to raise the sum not more than one third. For the Amendment, 73—Against it, 63—Majority, 10.

Mr. M. A. Taylor said the Bill tended to increase the revenues of the Irish Clergy one third beyond what they hitherto enjoyed.

It was at length agreed to report progress, and the House adjourned till Monday.

It has been remarked as an extraordinary circumstance that the attention of the literary world has this season been almost exclusively directed to foreign works. Among the most remarkable are the Memoirs of Marie Antoinette, by Madame Campan; Napoleon's Great Historical Work; the Journal of Count Las Cases; the Memoirs of the Eccentric Count Rapp, and the Journal of the present King of France.

Monday last, being Trinity Monday, the Corporation of Trinity House held their anniversary meeting; the Earl of Liverpool was unanimously elected Master for the ensuing year.

The Sir David Scott, Canning, and the Earl of Balcarras, arrived off the Wight, on Monday. The latter left China the 27th of January, and St. Helena the 13th of April. The Repulse, outward bound, remained at St. Helena. The Cohstream was expected to leave Bengal for Madras, on her homeward voyage, about the 31st of January.

The East India Company's ship Winchelsea arrived off the Wight on Sunday. She left Bengal the 30th January, and St. Helena the 10th of April. The Thames, General Hewitt, and Marchioness of Ely were lying at the New Anchorage when the Winchelsea left Bengal.

Families who have not yet visited MILES and EDWARDS'S Chintz and Damask Furniture Warehouse, can have but little idea of the amazing reduction at which they are selling their splendid London Printed Furnitures, Damasks, Tabberetts, Moreens, &c. If the introduction of an endless variety of new masks, and elegant designs at such extraordinary low prices will ensure encouragement, the proprietors of this Establishment are determined to merit support.—No. 134, Oxford-street, between Holles-street and Old Cavendish-street.

The following high commendation has been expressed on the merits of this Poem:—"We cordially bear our testimony to its merits, to the refinements of its sentiments, the purity of its diction, the sublimity of its descriptions, and the harmony of its versification. If we have any real taste for the Pierian spring we do not hesitate to pronounce it no every day production. Mr. H. occupies no common rank among the favourites of the Muses. With the exception of a very few of the master-spirits of the age, he may compete with any in talent; and in purity, perhaps, none can claim pre-eminence."—New Even. Mag.

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP; or, the Church Member's Guide. Second edition. By the REV. JOHN ANGEL JAMES, of Birmingham. A new edition, 1 vol. 12mo, price 5s. boards.—Published by Francis Westley, 10 Stationers'-court, Ludgate-street, London.

"Mr. James maintains a most impressive style of evangelical address, blending the soundest practical admonition with a rich strain of gospel instruction. We could not, of course, but be highly gratified at finding a subject of so much importance as that of Church Fellowship, taken up by one so competent to the task, nor have our anticipations been disappointed by the perusal of the very interesting work before us. A vein of sound reasoning pervades the whole, and in general, we have had to admire the discretion with which the touches on certain points in his subject so require considerable delicacy as well as decision in their treatment."—Congregational Mag.

THE SCRIPTURE CHARACTER of GOD; or, Discourses on the Divine Attributes. By HENRY FORSTER BURDER, M.A. Author of Lectures on the Pleasures of Religion, 1 vol. 8vo. 7s. boards.—Published by Francis Westley, 10, Stationers'-court, Ludgate-street, London.

"A work of this kind was much wanted, and this important labour has been undertaken by Mr. Burder, and we have great pleasure in expressing our opinion, that he has executed, with wisdom and discretion, a task which required, for its successful completion, a small share of those favourable qualifications. In all respects he deserves high eulogy."—Congregational Mag.

"We cordially invite the attention of our brethren in the ministry to this volume, as an almost perfect model of the plan which it is advisable to pursue, when the discussion of a particular branch of theology is the object preferred; and to private Christians we with equal cordiality recommend it as well deserving their perusal, both for the general soundness and excellency of its matter, and for the simple and unostentatious eloquence of its style."—Methodist Mag. 1823.

"We congratulate the religious public on the appearance of these able discourses. We know of no book on the subject at once so short, and so well written, and we consider the author as having performed a very acceptable service to the public."—Eclectic Review, 1823.

HISTORY of the PERSECUTIONS endured by the Protestants of the South of France, and more especially of the Department of the Gard, during the years 1814, 15, 16, &c. including a Defence of their Conduct from the revolution to the present period. By the Rev. MARK WILKS, 2 vols. 8vo. price 18s. boards. Published by Francis Westley, 10, Stationers'-court, Ludgate-street, London.

"Mr. Wilks supports his arguments by plain facts, by documents which have been unquestioned, and are unquestionable; and we cannot in too strong terms recommend the volume before us."—Monthly Review.

A CHRISTIAN BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY, containing an Account of the Lives and Writings of most distinguished Christians and Theologians of all religious Denominations, and in every Nation, from the commencement of the Christian Æra to the present period. By JOHN WILKS, jun. 1 vol. 12mo. price 9s. boards. London: Published by Francis Westley, 10 Stationers'-court, Ludgate-street; and Longman and Co. Paternoster-row.

"This is a very neatly printed volume, and comprises within a small compass a considerable mass of interesting biographical information. We have no doubt that the volume will be a very acceptable present to young persons."—Eclectic Review.

MEMOIRS of the Rev. MARK WILKS, late of Norwich. By SARAH WILKS; with an Appendix, 1 vol. 12mo. price 7s. boards. Published by Francis Westley, 10, Stationers'-court, Ludgate-street, London.

THE AUTOMATICAL CAMERA OBSCURA; exhibiting Scenes from Nature illustrated with 18 neatly executed Engravings, half bound in 4 vols. price 10s. 6d. By the Rev. THOMAS TOWNE, Author of "Village in an Uproar," &c. Published by Francis Westley, 10, Stationers'-court, Ludgate-street, London.

"The object of this ingenious little work, is to convey to the juvenile mind, in the most attractive manner, some of the most striking events recorded in the sacred scriptures. The sprightliness of the dialogues, and excellent tendency of the whole, concur to render it highly interesting and well adapted to the purpose for which it is intended."

THE TEACHER'S FAREWELL; designed as a parting Gift to the elder Scholars on leaving the Sunday-school, with an engraved title for filling up. Price 2s. 6d. extra boards; common, 1s. 6d.—Published by Francis Westley, 10, Stationers'-court, Ludgate-street, London.

"It affords us great pleasure to give 'The Teacher's Farewell' our cordial approval. We think it a very excellent work for its immediate purpose, and are persuaded, that the instruction it imparts, renders it well worthy of the perusal of every young person. We have no doubt our readers will generally procure the work for their schools."—Teacher's Magazine.

NEW RUSSIA.

Just published, 8vo. illustrated with coloured plates of Costumes, &c. 10s. 6d. bds.

A JOURNEY from RIGA to the CRIMEA, by way of Kiev; with some Account of the Colonization and of the Manners and Customs of the Colonists of New Russia. To which is added, a Second Edition of Notes relating to the Crim Tartars. By MARY HOLDERNESS.—☞ The "Notes on the Crim Tartars," appended to the above work, were originally published in a very limited impression, which having been very favourably received, (see the British Critic, Literary Gazette, Monthly Magazine, New Edinburgh Review, and others), the author has been induced, from their connection with the present work, to attach thereto, rather than reprint them as a distinct volume.—London: printed for Sherwood, Jones, and Co. Paternoster row.

Just published, 3 vols. 12mo. 15s. boards, dedicated to Mrs. Hannah More.

VILLAGE CONVERSATIONS; or, the Vicar's Fire Side. By MISS RENOU. The Third Edition.

"Serene philosophy!
Without thee, what were unenlightened man?
A savage, roaming through the woods and wilds,
Through cold, devoid of every finer art
And elegance of life."

"The lady from whose pen this work proceeds, desirous of benefiting the rising generation, has endeavoured to establish sound moral principles in the mind, and to demonstrate the importance of virtuous conduct to well being. The whole is written with the best intention, and manifests a mind of no ordinary reflection."—Monthly Review.

Either volume may be had separately price 5s.—London: printed for Sherwood Jones and Co. Paternoster-row.

FRENCH IDIOMS.—Just published.

A DICTIONARY of the IDIOMS of the FRENCH and ENGLISH LANGUAGES. By W. A. SELLINGER. New Edition, in 8vo price 10s. 6d. in boards.—☞ The idiom of any language, it has been justly remarked, cannot be wholly learned by rules, since it most frequently consists of evanescent niceties, which no rules can possibly fix or bind. The present work will be found greatly to facilitate their acquisition; and it may either be considered a Dictionary, or portions of it learnt by the pupil as a task. Also by the same Author.

2. MODERN FRENCH CONVERSATION: containing Elementary Phrases and New Easy Dialogues, in French and English, upon the most familiar subjects. Eighth Edition. Price 2s. 6d. bound.—☞ This work is not only useful as an elementary book in Schools, but as a Manual for Travellers. The very flattering reception which it has met with, and the encouragement the Author has received, the concurring proofs that his views have been approved of, and that he has hit upon such dialogues as were really wanted, and generally wished for.

3. CENT FABLES CHOISIES, et imitées de la Fontaine; avec un Dictionnaire, ou tous les Mots sont expliqués grammaticalement. Intended for person about to learn the French language. Price 2s. 6d. bound.

4. THE FRENCH PRIMER; or, an Introduction to French Conversation. Price 1s. sewed.—London: Printed for Sherwood, Jones, & Co. Paternoster-row.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, JUNE 1.

IT will be seen, under our head of Foreign Intelligence, that the DUKE D'ANGOULEME entered Madrid yesterday se'nnight. ABISBAL, notwithstanding reports to the contrary, has not been arrested; it is stated that he has sent to the DUKE D'ANGOULEME, soliciting that the Duke will cause Madrid to be occupied by French troops immediately on the evacuation of that capital by the Spanish Constitutional Force, in order to avert sanguinary retaliation and re-actions. The general opinion is that an amicable arrangement will take place.

OUR readers will perceive that LORD NUGENT obtained leave to bring in his bill for placing the Roman Catholics of England upon the same footing as the Roman Catholics of Ireland—we have been told that it is the intention of Government to suffer this Bill to pass through both Houses.

This, as part of the system which we to the latest hour of our lives will steadfastly oppose, demands the particular attention of our representatives—there is a plausibility upon the face of the measure which renders it more dangerous than it otherwise would be, because it seems natural enough that the disabilities of the English Papists should not be greater than the Irish Papists; but we warn our readers not to listen to such sophistry—the fact that POPERY is frightfully encreasing in England, is that with which to meet the arguments in favour of this still conciliatory measure.—At Preston, in Lancashire, a JESUIT who settled there, and was accustomed to congregate his disciples in a room, subsequently was compelled by the success of his proselytism to build a chapel, capable of containing two thousand persons—he has subsequently to that commenced building a second chapel of larger dimensions still!

Why, why are these barefaced attempts to wheedle us out of our Constitutional Religion thus palliated, thus supported?

THE Tythe Commutation Bill was in a Committee on Friday night; and we heard, with regret, SIR JOHN NICHOL protesting against the principle of this Bill being considered as in any sense applicable to tythe property in England—no man supposes it IS applicable at the moment to tythe property in England; but we will stake our existence, if the Irish Tythe Commutation Bill passes into a law, that we name the man who will apply the principle of the Bill to English Tythe property in less than a twelvemonth.

We do not mean to say, that the provisions of the Bill in detail will or could be applied to English Tythe property, but this we say, because we know it, that the real movers of this measure merely wish the power of Parliament over Church property to be publicly recognized, and having gained that point, the downfall of the Establishment will be regularly worked at—with what success, depends upon the degree of manly firmness and constitutional decision with which the diabolical efforts are met.

It breaks the spirit—it breaks the heart of high-minded Englishmen, to hear details, and conversations, and speeches, and remarks, upon the minute points of a measure which should not be entertained—the principle of which should not be recognized. What does it signify to the Government of this country whether MR. JOSEPH HUME be angry or pleased?—It makes our blood boil, to see, upon some occasions, explanations given TO that Honourable Gentleman in the House, actually directed—addressed to HIM—as if HE were really an object of importance: are we to be frightened from our purpose by the tinkling of a brass pestle and mortar?—We say, once more, draw the line—never let the principle be recognized, that Church property is at the disposal of Parliament—for this concession is all that is wanted to begin those innovations, whose end all men CAN SEE who WILL SEE.

One pen has been employed upon this subject in a pamphlet, (we find from the newspaper that MR. PARK the barrister is the author) called, "Sketch of an Amendment to MR. GOULBURN'S Bills," but we have no inclination to consider the merit of the writer's suggestions, because we are convinced that no amendment will suffice—nothing short of positive rejection of the measure can save the Church of Ireland in the first instance—of the ulterior results of lay interference with the rights and property of the Clergy we have no doubt; we shall, therefore, only quote from MR. PARK'S pamphlet his succinct review of the objections to MR. GOULBURN'S Bills.

"The first of MR. GOULBURN'S measures brings no real benefit to any but the landlord. It foments the brawling of the turbulent, but offers to the wretched not even hope; the worst cases of distress—the miserable cottier, tenant at will—are passed by unnoticed. It multiplies upon a class of men, whom it is the interest of the state to make respectable, oaths of a most degrading nature, vexatious to the individual, and IRREVERENT TOWARDS GOD—IT REMOVES THEM FROM THE MANAGEMENT OF THEIR OWN AFFAIRS; AND, PRONOUNCING ON THEM, AS IT WERE, A VERDICT OF INSANITY, IT COMMITS THEIR PROPERTY IN TRUST, TO THEIR DEBTORS IN THE FIRST INSTANCE, AND FINALLY, TO SOME NAMELESS UNDERLING OF THE EXECUTIVE.

"The evils of the second measure are, perhaps, still more formidable. It is, in fact, no commutation or composition of tithes. IT CHANGES THE BODY TO WHICH TITHES ARE TO BE PAID—it changes the officers by whom they are to be collected; but it makes no change in the persons who are to pay, or in the mode of payment. It is said that the clergy have become odious by the exaction of tithe; will the odium be diminished, if the government be made its object, or have the Irish any noxious superfluity of loyal humours, to be carried off by the prescriptions of an Act of Parliament?

"Again, it has a DIRECT AND POWERFUL tendency to DIMINISH the NUMBER of PROTESTANTS in IRELAND. However low the claims of the clergy might be estimated, the quantity of land, to be offered to them in lieu of tithe, should be very considerable. Now, the sellers of land in Ireland are almost all Protestant; while the Roman Catholic clings to the soil with a degree of tenacity surprising to those who do not know its cause, and ALARMING TO THOSE WHO DO. The same circumstances, which in the troubled districts make the clergy anxious for commutation, make the gentry desirous to leave the country; and no gentleman will now live in the south or west of Ireland, who can afford to live elsewhere. Offer them the security of the English funds, and the quiet comfort of an English residence; and the temptation will be irresistible. This Bill, in the mean time, will not bring other residents to supply their places: the clergy can be compelled to reside at present, and if not compelled, they would fly, as others do, from the horrors of civil war."

We have a hope, however, that should this extremely dangerous Bill pass the Commons, it will meet its death-blow another place, where the church is represented, for, perhaps amongst all the charges of wealth and power brought against the Clergy of the Establishment, it has slipped the observation of their opponents that they are the only person in England who cannot be represented by any of their body in the House of Commons.

Brewers, booksellers, curriers, retired livery servants, cheesemongers, salters, army-surgeons on half-pay, hopsellers, slop-sellers, druggists, tea-men, sugar-bakers,—nay, chimney-sweepers and dust-men might each send members of their own particular profession to advocate their cause, and guard their interests in the British Senate—the CLERGY OF ENGLAND CANNOT do so.

To this cause we firmly believe is attributable the extraordinary manner in which ecclesiastical matters are conducted in the House of Commons—the interests of the Church are confided to the care of Doctors of Civil Law, who speak only upon the technical points under discussion; but whenever the subject is brought forward, as it is upon the present occasion, the RIGHTS OF THE CHURCH seem entirely to be forgotten; and in the very last sitting of the House in Committee upon this last ecclesiastical measure, SIR JOHN NICHOL contents himself by protesting against the possibility of applying the principle of that measure to the CLERGY OF ENGLAND.

The Clergy of England cannot fail to be pleased to hear that, as yet, it is not intended to take away their lawful property, and pension them out of the proceeds of it; but still conciliation is the object, we must beg to doubt whether the scrupulous distinctness with which SIR JOHN NICHOL disclaims any intention of treating the English Clergy in so ceremonious a manner, is likely to convince the Irish Clergy who are first to be submitted to the process, of the advantages likely to result to them from the measure in the present instance.

PUBLIC NUISANCES.

THE office of journalist was unknown to the institutes of ancient Europe. The Tribunes of the people among the Romans, like our own contemporaries HUNT, WILSON, and HOBHOUSE, confined themselves to the department of creating popular discontent, and when full charged—of directing it against the Senate and political Officers of the State.

Other departments of civil and municipal regulation were under fixed establishments, and among others the superintendence of the public buildings, sewers, and highways was specially in the hands of the EDILES and their subordinate officers, whose duty it was to guard the public against all sorts of nuisances and inconveniences arising out of neglect or inattention to the general accommodation.—How these persons executed their commissions may be inferred from the multitude of inferences and certain facts in the history which have reached us concerning them; but the summary mode of enforcing obedience to their injunctions under the FREEST of ANCIENT REPUBLICS would not be very palatable to the still freer notions of the moderns, who consider themselves oppressed if they have not the letter of an Act of Parliament to warrant the suppression or abatement of any the most obvious public nuisance, they may think proper to pursuit of their own proper interests, to set up.

Thus every thing with us is matter of legislation (Hear, hear, save the mark!) instead of regulation; and as it is clear that specific laws cannot be framed even by such wise men as HUME or MICHAEL ANGELO—to whose good intentions (the latter we mean) we are disposed to give full credit—so as to meet every exigency, we are perpetually subjected to inconvenience by the quirks and evasions of those who are indisposed to their duty, or have even worse motives for neglecting it.

Our political agitators, who have no object in raising a hue and cry against any one lower in rank than a Prince or a Minister, care not a straw whether half a score carriage springs are broken—or half a dozen human limbs fractured in a week, owing to the neglect of vestries or paving committees in keeping the highways in repair—They—kind, considerate souls—are above such petty details—but we—who have sincerely at heart the comfort and happiness of our countrymen, who possess everything that can contribute to secure both, have never thought it beneath us to notice those minor corruptions which, producing daily and hourly inconvenience, interfere more than people who, from local circumstances, suffer not from their immediate effects, are aware of, with the comfort and even safety of their fellow-citizens.

As a case most notoriously in point, we beg leave to direct the attention of our readers to the state of the pavement in Bond-street, and the upper portion of Piccadilly, which we have no hesitation in declaring to be, not only disgraceful to a metropolis like ours, but in the highest degree injurious and even dangerous to the persons and property of those who have to traverse it for pleasure, or for business; and when to this is added the fact that Piccadilly in particular forms one of the greatest thoroughfares as an entrance from the main Western roads, we cannot sufficiently reprobate the negligence, or what may deserve a much harsher name, on the part of those whose duty it is to guard the public against so grievous a nuisance.

Our attention has been repeatedly called to this subject—and although we had generally observed the bad state of the pavement, both in Bond-street and the western portion of Piccadilly, we could not have conceived upon anything short of actual inspection, that it was in so shameful a state as we have actually found it to be. We believe that we are guilty of no injustice in attributing this neglect in one of the most opulent and aristocratic parishes in the metropolis, to a contemptible and parsimonious desire of keeping down the rate—a desire evinced equally to the disgrace of those who are the principal agents in it—by withholding the improvement of gas-lights on one side of Piccadilly, which are so liberally dispensed by the adjoining parish of St. James's on the other.

But we learn from a correspondent, a circumstance which gives to this degrading species of economy an air of something of a still more grave delinquency—namely, that the KENSINGTON TRUST do actually pay the specific sum of 1000*l. per annum to the parish of St. George's, for the sole purpose* contributing to the expences of keeping the pavement in a perfect state of repair from Charges-street to the Turnpike!—Now we do say, without hesitation, that if this be the case—and it is an assertion easily confuted if unfounded—the parish of St. George's is guilty of a breach of trust, no less criminal than the neglect by which thousands of passengers, on horseback and in public as well as private carriages, are daily exposed to imminent hazard and danger!—for, although a thousand pounds may not be sufficient in any one year to new pave the street upon the improved principle of the neighbouring parish—the security of the bond is sufficient to warrant the necessary expenditure for such a purpose, and the decreased expense of annual hole stopping, and repairs to save actual indictment, would soon make up the difference. Besides this—the liberal grant from the road trust is not, nor ever could be intended to exonerate the parish from taking such share in the expense as may be further necessary to ensure a perfectly secure and permanently substantial avenue to so great an outlet to the metropolis.

We are furnished with many documents to substantiate the correctness of all we have urged, but we have only to read our Acts of Parliament, and to compare the nuisance in question with the spirit and tenor of them, to be assured that we are only doing an act of justice between the public and the public servants. We are not to be told that the lives and property of hundreds and thousands of persons, driving over this "bay of Biscay," are a secondary object in the economical arrangements of any parish, whose duty (by the laws of the land) it is, to keep the highways in repair—but least of all shall we admit this, when we find the vestries and public boards boasting the names of many men of rank and fortune representing the most opulent parish in the metropolis—who, if their attention be duly awakened to the subject, we do not suffer ourselves for a moment to doubt, will be excited by a higher motive than any we have thought proper to urge to set their inferior agents at work and afford the public all the advantages to which they are legitimately entitled, without waiting to be reminded of their duty by individual complaints and presentments—or by the more public process of INDICTMENT.

OUR readers will perceive that an expulsion has taken place at Oxford—three members of Christ Church have been sent from that venerable college—one the son of an English Earl, the other two Commoners.

We are not surprised at this event, however grieved we may feel for the parents of the degraded and disgraced young men. We have marked, with great concern, the increasing coarseness and grossness of conduct and conversation amongst the higher classes of this Society—a contempt of order and subordination—an avowed indifference to the pursuits which should occupy the student—and, we lament to say, an adoption of language unfitted, not only to the particular situation of young men at an University, but unfit to be repeated in the least scrupulous society.

Everybody who knows the Dean of Christ Church will feel assured that no unnecessary severity has been exercised upon this occasion, and we trust that the decided measure he has felt it his duty to take may deter those who have yet escaped a visitation so serious and important from occupations and amusements suited to pot-houses and worse places; that they will be more cautious in their associations—and, above all, that the filthy language which has been latterly the fashion, particularly at Christ Church, will be left to the chimney-sweepers and scavengers, from whose mouths it could only be expected to proceed.

Every Christ Church man will know what we mean—would we could read a similar lecture to ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE at Cambridge, and go no farther—but, alas! "it is one thing to say, and another to do."

WHAT a pretty fool Master WILSON has made of himself—first he leaves his country and his constituents to join the Spaniards—having been turned out of the army he travels with Aide-de-camp—having arrived, and been serenaded, and offered no command, he gets measured for a private soldier's uniform, upon which (as he would upon his dressing-gown, or any thing else he might happen to wear) he sticks all the Orders which he has at various times received from the continental Monarchs, the grossest abuse of whom forms the theme of his harangue in a language he does not understand ——then he handles his musquet, and falls into the ranks of the Vigo Militia!

This is extremely good fun for Tom Fool himself, but it is by no means so agreeable to the Captains and Lieutenant-Colonels upon this private Militia man's staff—drilling in sultry weather is rather a silly diversion—mark the result—The DUKE D'ANGOULEME is safe in Madrid, and, in all probability, FERDINAND with him at this very moment—the value of the fine cry of liberty which we have heard in Spa-fields, and at Cumberland-gate, and in various other places, has been duly ascertained on the continent; and there we have WILSON, our Member of Parliament, stumping along sandy roads with a heavy firelock on his shoulder, a subject not only of Spain, but of ridicule to every man in England.

When the CHRONICLE, a paper to whose braggings truth sets no limits, begins to whimper, it seems that honour and honesty are flourishing, and treason and revolution are on the decline.—For three days has that wretched Whig been wiping its eyes, and groaning, and by way of reproach it tells its readers yesterday that it is entirely the fault of the English that there is to be no murdering, no burning, no pillaging, no slaughter, no confusion in Spain.

In the Journal des Debats, is a paragraph stating that the DUKE D'ANGOULEME will treat with no General—with no body but FERDINAND the KING, at liberty. In this declaration we look in vain for that imbecility, that half-measured caution with which this French Prince has been so manfully charged by our Liberals; and when we contrast FACTS as they exist with the only Constitutional state paper which has been circulated, we mean SIR ROBERT the Militia-man's letter to his friend, MR. WOODENSPOON, of Bengal-place, Kent-road, it certainly strikes us that the zeal of the Militia-man must have got the better of his judgment.

We think, however, that the letter itself is a beautiful specimen of political literature—the "best regards to MRS. W." at the conclusion of it shews too an amiable recollection of the pleasures of Bermondsey and Tooley-street, which even the VIVAS of the Spanish mob failed to eradicate from the HERO'S mind. We trust the gallant Militia-man will write a little more.

If WILSON'S father (the English CLAUDE) were alive at this moment, and had heard that his son had been enlisting under Spanish banners, he would technically have said to him, "BOB, BOB, my boy, however much these COLOURS may suit your PALLATE, I am afraid they will woefully injure your next CANVAS!"

And so we predict they will.

WE quote the following paragraph from the TIMES of last Saturday:—

"On Monday night His Royal Highness PRINCE LEOPOLD had a large party at Marlborough House, to TEA and COFFEE."

THIS fine weather is extremely favourable to the growth of HUMBUG—a beautiful specimen was exhibited at the King's Theatre in the Haymarket on Wednesday last, when His Royal Highness the DUKE OF SUSSEX, Grand Master of Masons, Chairman of the Beef-steak Club, and, moreover, President of the Society for the Encouragement of Arts and Sciences, presented medals and premia to all the deserving and ingenious persons who, during the preceding year, had submitted their performances to the judgment of that erudite body.

MR. ARTHUR AIKIN, the secretary, opened the business of the day, by making a speech explanatory of the advantages derived to the world at large from the exertions of the Society, and dwelt with great effect upon the stimulus held out to landed proprietors to plant forest trees, and reclaim waste lands. We shall consider the general utility of the Society by and bye, but we must pause here, merely to enquire whether any man can be sufficiently charmed with a hobby, to believe that a landed proprietor is stimulated to plant five hundred acres of his own estate with forest trees by the hope of obtaining a silver medal, value four shillings and eleven-pence, from the hands of the DUKE OF SUSSEX! in the Italian Opera House, Haymarket.

COL. WILDMAN, who has got BYRON'S property, has very judiciously, and with extremely good taste, endeavoured to restore the trees with which Newstead formerly was ornamented, but which extravagance and dissipation long since consigned to the carpenter and cabinet-maker. COL. WILDMAN deserves the thanks of his children for this attention to their great grand children—but as Newstead is private property, and, we trust, will remain the property of the family in whose hands we find it for centuries to come, we are dull enough not to perceive why COL. WILDMAN deserves a "gold CERES medal"—(What CERES has to do with COL. WILDMAN'S forest trees we do not pretend to say,)—for ornamenting and improving his own estate—for nothing but the fact of his great grandson's being an equally desperate profligate with the former owner of the place can possibly bring the timber into the market for national uses—ROGERS, who is never at a loss for a joke, said it was but fair that one Wild-man should restore what another Wild-man had destroyed: this jest was received with a shout of applause by those who were standing round the wit, which the illustrious President mistook for public approbation of some liberal sentiment uttered by him, and he bowed, as the "Silly-Bee" did once upon a time at Cambridge.

"Fifty-six individuals, many of them young ladies, were honoured with rewards for their proficiency in painting, drawing, modelling, and sculpture. Amongst these candidates was MR. P. H. DESVIGNES, who received a silver pallet and the silver Iris medal. In presenting the rewards the DUKE of SUSSEX introduced the young gentleman to the company as a native of Greece. His Royal Highness felt happy that he had come to this country to improve himself in the fine arts, and to enjoy those liberal feelings which they all prized so much.—(Applause.")

His Royal Highness the DUKE OF SUSSEX thought such an opportunity as this, to express a little political feeling was not to be missed; and as far as the liberality of English sentiment goes, certainly, in his Royal Highness's company, MR. P. H. DESVIGNES might get his full quantum of it; but when his Royal Highness congratulates a GREEK upon coming to this country to IMPROVE HIMSELF IN THE FINE ARTS, we have not a word to say, we are only the more convinced of the unequalled fitness of his Royal Highness to fill the Chair at the King's Theatre in the Haymarket.

A medal had been voted to the late MR. WARREN, for a discovery touching the engraving upon steel. In consequence of the death of that able artist, this tribute of the Society was bestowed upon his surviving brother.

We are not very well informed upon the subject, but it appears to us, without meaning to detract from the merit of the late MR. WARREN, that the Society have been completely humbugged (not by MR. WARREN, but themselves) upon this discovery; for, unless we are extremely deceived, the process has been brought to perfection by Messrs. PERKINS and FAIRMAN, who have established presses and offices in Fleet-street, in partnership with CHARLES HEATH, the celebrated engraver's son, (who by the way is an excellent artist himself); and that for two or three years past innumerable specimens of the art have been circulated all over the kingdom.

We mention this, not to detract from MR. WARREN'S merits, but to shew what we consider the lamentable want of knowledge in the Society under discussion.

MR. WILLIAM COBBETT!!! of KENSINGTON! came forward to receive a large silver medal for a discovery in the art of making straw bonnets!

His Royal Highness the DUKE OF SUSSEX took the opportunity of complimenting MR. COBBETT in "good set terms," and rejoiced to find himself "the ORGAN" of the Society, (for which his Royal Highness, by the way, is eminently qualified by the number of his pipes) and bestowed the honourable distinction upon MR. COBBETT, as a reward for "improving the construction of bonnets on an enlarged principle."

If his Royal Highness merely considered the improvement or discovery (as they call every thing at this meeting) as diffused upon an enlarged principle, we have no objection to the phrase; but if MR. COBBETT'S bonnets themselves are to be upon an enlarged principle, then we, who love to see sparkling eyes and pretty faces, without peeping through an arcade of plaited straw to look for them, must beg leave to dissent altogether.

We cannot refrain from quoting the conciliatory tone of the MORNING POST when speaking of MR. COBBETT upon this occasion.

"On MR. COBBETT coming forward to receive the medal, he was much applauded; and the Royal Chairman ROSE and addressed him in terms of that respect which will never be withheld from the proper application of the talents of THIS EXTRAORDINARY MAN."

Extraordinary indeed!—that a Prince of the Blood Royal should rise at the approach of MR. COBBETT, does not surprise us; if his choler had risen too, and if he had left the playhouse immediately after, we should not have been in the smallest degree astonished; but that the MORNING POST should talk of "respect" for the "extraordinary man," would, indeed, seem strange, if we did not happen to know that even MR. COBBETT is thought worth conciliating in these days of pacification.—When the MORNING POST calls "bonnett platting" a proper application of MR. COBBETT'S talents,—we presume that excellent paper is pleased to be jocular.

But come we to the last part of this super-eminent buffoonery—read, read, pray read, what follows, gentle countrymen:—

"The business of the day having been concluded, the Duke of Sussex said, it remained for him to return the best thanks of the Society for the honour which had been done them, by so numerous an attendance of ladies and gentlemen: and he flattered himself that the different premiums presented to various individuals, this day, had afforded present satisfaction, and held out strong encouragement for future exertion. (Applause.) He believed he might take on himself to say, that a more useful society did not exist, because their premiums were not confined to any particular art or country. They received communications from all parts of the world, and they were bound to consider them, and to publish them, if they were found worthy of that distinction. (Applause.)"

That HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS the DUKE of SUSSEX gives his personal weight to the chair of innumerable public charities, (as "Tentamen" has it) who can feel but gratified—but that His Royal Highness the Prince AUGUSTUS FREDERICK of England should, upon the stage of a public playhouse, return thanks for the HONOUR DONE HIM by the attendance of "LADIES and GENTLEMEN," in the boxes, pit and gallery, does seem so very extraordinary, that we really must doubt those persons who state (seriously too) that they heard the thing done.

We know his Royal Highness is not particular in his associates—with the private pursuits of men, which do not by their evil influence affect society, we have nothing to do; but when we find the dignity of our blood royal compromised by an acknowledgment of honour done to it by the attendance of a mixed crowd in a theatre, congregated to see a puppet show, we feel as every loyal, true-hearted Englishman must feel, who is devoted to his KING and CONSTITUTION.

And now a word about this Society. With respect to the Premia and medals bestowed upon inventions and discoveries, where, we ask, are the results? As we before observed, no man who has thousands of acres of land, needs the stimulus of four shillings and elevenpence to improve those acres to the best of his ability—no man who can recover an estate from the sea will take his measures in hopes of the "Gold CERES" or the "Silver VULCAN,"—therefore it must be in the encouragement of artists and machinists that we are to find the advantages arising from the labours of the Society.

Where, we ask, are the ornaments to our National School of Painting, produced by the silver palettes and trash given to young ladies for portraits of a "Pet Lamb," view of "Papa's Cottage Orné at Peckham," or a black-lead pencil copy of one of poor BARTOLOZZI'S prints?—Amongst what class of ladies are we to look for those, who, in their early days, received these testimonies of the merits of their drawing-masters, who uniformly finish up their "little efforts" for the occasion?

Where have been the works in the mechanical world, which owe their origin to this Society? The Society, we believe, gave SIR HUMPHREY DAVY a medal for his safety-lamp; but did SIR HUMPHREY DAVY submit his safety-lamp to this "Conseil" in the first instance? Do we ever hear any more of such things as "MR. HIGGINBOTHAM'S improved mode of snuffing candles without soiling a card-table"—of MR. HALL'S discovery of a mode of "picking gooseberries without pricking one's fingers,"—or of "MR. HAYNES'S machine for cutting cucumbers upon an improved principle,"—with the merits of which the Adelphi has resounded, and for which their honorary crown pieces have been so liberally dispensed.

Now, without meaning the slightest imputation upon any of the gentlemen and ladies who received medals on Wednesday, we will venture to predict, that with the exception of MR. COBBETT, we shall never hear their names mentioned again, unless, indeed, the gentleman who received a gold medal for the invention of an apparatus for "fractures of the lower limbs," should turn his thoughts to the contrivance of another apparatus to "fracture the upper limbs;" or that the captain, who received a similar reward for "his invention of a kite," should also receive a second premium for his "discovery of a tail to it," at some future period. Anybody who will turn to the old numbers of the Gentleman's Magazine, will see more wonderful inventions and discoveries in the plates of that work than the Society for the Encouragement of Arts and Sciences dream of—not one of which is at this moment in use.

Gentlemen combining for amusement to make a collection of models, and to encourage young beginners, are extremely praiseworthy, and their pursuits in the highest degree inoffensive; but when we have our streets disturbed, our eyes insulted, and our national pride degraded, by such trumpery shew-off, shout-gaining, puppet-shew LIBERALISM as that of Wednesday, one can only grieve at the depravity of taste so glaringly evident in the principal performers, and laugh outright at the fools who gratify a dirty vanity by flocking to such an exhibition.

The Courier mentions, that during the exhibition the barometer was at 85—the Courier means thermometer of course; but when it is discovered that the Opera House not only was crammed with spectators, but lighted up at noon-day, we think moderate people will turn up their hands and eyes, and cry, "Mercy on us, and are we come to this!"

A military band attended, and played marches!!!

IN an age when Humbug is uncommonly fresh and lively, it is quite pleasant to record an event like the following, in which nothing is to be found but the most gratifying information:—

"Thursday, the 22d, was a most interesting day. An "EISTEDDVOD was held at the Freemasons' Tavern; LORD "DYNEVOR, supported by LORD KENYON and SIR WAT-"KINS WILLIAMS WYNNE, opened the business of the day "by calling on MR. PARRY to declare the objects and views "of the CYMMRODORION!!!

"PRICHARD, harper to the GWYNEDDIGIEN, played PEN "RHAW—about a dozen PENILLION singers astonished the "audience—LORD KENYON was appointed to preside at the "next EISTEDDVOD! and the Noble Chairman gave the "'GWYNNEDIGIEN' Society.

"MR. GRIFFITH JONES returned thanks in the Welch "language, and thus ended this very interesting meeting; which "reflects credit on the Royal Cambrian Institution, and the "natives of CAMBRIA in general!

"Mewn Awen wyyn lawen byw byth Y BO HI!"

We have not a word to add to the concluding three of this beautiful line, except to congratulate the British nation upon the events of the day—"Y BO HI!"

THEATRICALS.

DURING the QUEEN'S disturbance at a time when it was wholesome for the country to tickle MR. HENRY BROUGHAM rather roughly, that gentleman was in a perpetual fever, and MRS. BROUGHAM was in a state of worry from the setting of Saturday's sun till the outcoming of Sunday's BULL—at which we grieved, because we have no wish to give pain to those who act under superior influence, and because MRS. BROUGHAM was not her Majesty's Attorney-General—but mortified as we might have been, it was our duty (and we did it) to shew up her husband at all available points—now, in our theatrical criticisms, we really have no wish to wound feelings unnecessarily—nay, we go farther, we confess a partiality to Covent Garden; but it is impossible to do our duty to the public and speak in terms of even qualified censure of the abominable ribaldry with which we are persecuted in the shape of farces at this and the other great theatre.

CENT. PER CENT. a new piece, was produced on Thursday at Covent Garden—and such a piece we never saw—without the slightest pretension to novelty of incident, situation, or character, it bears the most striking resemblance to all the trash which has been let loose upon the world, from the metropolitan stages, in grossness and vulgarity. The men who write these things, and think themselves above criticism, are fools—if gentlemen were to write for the stage—if nature were to be represented as she is—if society could be depicted with all its follies and absurdities as they glare upon us, what a treat would a play be.

The abundance of ridicule which ordinary life in the higher circles affords—the trickeries and manœuvrings of fashionable leaders—the little contrivances and bits of generalship—the heartless insincerity—the frivolous anxieties—the unalterable arrangements—the strongly marked character of the knaves contrasted with the languid insipidity of the fools—the pretensions of upstart vanity—the toil of the nouveaux riches to climb into notice and popularity—the ravenous husband-hunting mother—the calculating establishment-seeking daughter—the blue ladies on one hand—the dandy lordlings on the other, with a sprinkling of the saints, the sages, and the savages of society—in the hands of a man who mingled with them, and had merely the tact of putting down what he heard, and of commenting upon what he saw, would form the materials of a rich and genuine comedy.

We do not mean that personal likenesses should be given in characters on the stage, but a general fair view of the world as it goes, by which those who live in it would be extremely amused, and those who live out of it mightily edified.

But what amusement, what edification, what rational pleasure can a man of the meanest intellect find in scenes like those of CENT PER CENT?—The conduct of the leading character is the conduct of an idiot—the affair of the elopement is not only unnatural but impossible—and while the absurdity of the story shocks the understanding, the language, in many parts, outrages decency.—We again tell the licenser of plays that he ill performs his duty when he suffers dialogues to be sent forth to the world, which could not be endured in private society—are our women to hear indelicacies in a playhouse which we would not suffer in our own dwellings? Why is it that this filthy violence is committed upon the good taste and good feeling of Society?

There does not appear to us to exist a man of more refined and polished manners than MR. CHARLES KEMBLE—he is one of those whom we should hold up to society as a perfect example of that combination of actor and gentleman which we maintain to be less rare in the present times than at any preceding period of our theatrical history.

MR. CHARLES KEMBLE is a proprietor of Covent Garden Theatre—surely to him must have been submitted the nasty farce of Thursday—did he not see the defects in an instant?—is it possible he could have read it over without discovering in it allusions, observations, inuendoes, double entendres, and positive grossnesses, which he would not have suffered MR. JONES, MR. CONNOR, or MR. FARREN to have been parties to in their private capacities in the female society of his own private life? We say it is almost impossible—and we think that the fair way of putting the subject to the conductors of our public theatres, for why should our women hear in a box at Covent Garden Playhouse that which they could not listen to in a drawing-room in Grosvenor Street?—or why should MR. JONES, and MR. FARREN, and MR. CONNOR be forced by a wretched farce-writer to talk indecencies as public performers which they would be ashamed to utter as private gentlemen.

We noticed in the BRITISH MERCURY of Wednesday se'nnight, the extraordinary humbug of MR. CALCRAFT'S speech at the Drury Lane Theatrical Fund Dinner, in which he said that, not only was MR. KEAN the principal support of Drury Lane Theatre, but the cause of its existence—we observed in that paper, that MR. KEAN played to empty benches for months together, and we now add the fact, that in order to induce any body to go to see him, the price of admission to the boxes was reduced to five shillings; that nobody went even at that reduced price, and that it was not till MR. KEAN went to AMERICA that Drury Lane began to thrive.

ELLISTON'S CORONATION first brought the thing round—his subsequent management in engaging YOUNG, LISTON, DOWTON, TERRY, STEPHENS, and BRAHAM; and, in short, all the available talent of the stage—his having converted the abominable straggling wilderness, which the place was, into the beautiful and splendid theatre which we now see it—these are the causes of the prosperity of Drury Lane, and these causes would have produced similar effects, if MR. KEAN had staid in America till the present moment.

We do not in saying this, mean to detract from MR. KEAN'S merits—we confess we never saw any merit in him—but so many excellent judges say he is a clever actor, that we conclude he is so; but we contend that in the present day no one attraction is sufficient to fill a house, much less to support a theatre; and we are the more confirmed in this opinion by the very fact we have just noticed, that, admired as MR. KEAN is by certain persons, HE totally failed to draw, as it is called, when he stood alone. The combination which ELLISTON has judiciously made, pleases all parties:—while the love-sick girl is delighted to hear YOUNG'S mellow tones vibrate through her heart, the musical enthusiast drinks with delight the honied tones of the unsophisticated STEPHENS—BRAHAM'S brilliant execution and perilous skill attracts the bolder votaries of the art—TERRY, in SIMPSON, tickles the cits—DOWTON'S rich and powerful delineations win the admirers of sterling acting—ELLISTON, when himself, still claims the approbation of those who love genuine comedy—and LISTON, like the Magic Queen in the tale, "commands all hearts"—MR. KEAN claims, we believe, a large share of popular favour, and as a component part of the general force, we have no doubt is highly serviceable; but that MR. CALCRAFT should have dealt out his commendation by wholesale, and attribute all the merit of originating and supporting Drury Lane Theatre to MR. KEAN, we much lament—for it has had the effect of making both the butterer and the butteree extremely ridiculous.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR.—I am afraid the discussions in a certain house are rather difficult to be noticed with safety, but never, I think, did I hear any speech so unworthy of the Speaker, whether considered as a man, a statesman, or a philanthropist, as that delivered by MR. BROUGHAM, the other night in the house, upon the subject of Negro Emancipation. It was nothing from beginning to end, but an inveterate philippic against the British inhabitants of the West Indies, and eulogiums upon the mild, amiable, but suffering blacks—I will not, however, take up more of your time on that point, but as you have a strong preference for facts, I will just give you one or two—In the newspapers MR. BROUGHAM is represented as having stated that MR. MACAULAY was the author of one, among the many anonymous pamphlets, which have been got up on this occasion, the title of which is "Negro Slavery, &c." and in mentioning this, is reported to have passed the following most extravagant eulogium upon the said ZACHARIAH MACAULAY. "He was told that he most not believe the statements contained in the book called 'Negro Slavery.'" This was an attack upon one of the oldest, and most valued friends he had—a man, whose conduct upon all matters and occasions had been eminently reputable: but whose exertions in West India affairs he had not words sufficiently to praise. He named MR. MACAULAY, as the individual to whom he alluded, and in uttering the name of that individual, he uttered a name respected, wherever it was known—he named MR. MACAULAY without hesitation, because he knew that he could not have published any thing to which he would be slow to affix his name. MR. MACAULAY'S means of information were as much upon the subject in question before those of men in general, as the exertions he had made to arrive at those means were praiseworthy and unprecedented. A more can did honest man than MR. MACAULAY, he (Mr. B.) had never known, and he had known him in the habits of the most intimate private friendship for more than 20 years. He was a man, cautious even to coldness; as incapable of colouring a fact or an argument when a favourite opinion was concerned, as he would be for the sake of a favourite interest; a man in short, who distrusted himself so much upon every point as to which he felt warmly, that if he ran any risk, it was the not doing justice to himself.

This has led me to turn over the leaves of this most amiable pamphlet, and one of the first instances I see of this divine spirit is contained in the following extract from page 111:—

"In May, 1801, an act was passed in Barbadoes to increase the fines on manumissions from 50*l.* to 300*l.* on each female manumitted, and to 200*l.* on each male;" and he then adds somewhat triumphantly, "Such has been the spirit of Colonial legislation even at a recent period."

Now, the author of "Negro Slavery," &c. must have known, and knowing, has wilfully omitted to state that in 1816 or 17 an act was passed in Barbadoes repealing the above-mentioned act of 1801, and reducing the deposit money upon the manumission of ANY Slave to 50*l. currency*, for which deposit the Slave so manumitted is entitled to a small annuity for life, and that the real object had in view by both this and the other act was to provide for any aged or infirm Slave whom otherwise his master might wish to get rid of.

"Such," I reply, "has always been the spirit of Colonial Legislature," and so incapable is this author of colouring a fact, where a favourite opinion or interest is concerned. If, however, the author is satisfied with pleading ignorance of this fact, with which he might so easily have made himself acquainted, he can never again be permitted to guide the popular voice on this or any other subject; he must, in short, always be distrusted upon any point on which he feels warmly, as he certainly runs the risk of not doing others justice.

I will now proceed to give you one more fact. In a note upon page 12, of another small pamphlet, published by HATCHARD, entitled, "A Review of some of the Arguments," &c. there are the following among other observations:—"Of this alleged insurrection it may be sufficient to say, that for some cause or other the whole of the circumstances attending it have been most cautiously suppressed by Government as well as by the Colonial authorities. Not a single official document has been allowed to see the light." And a few lines lower the same note says, "Had the different details on this subject been favourable to the Barbadian Colonists, or could they have exhibited clear proof of designed revolt and insurrection on the part of the Slaves, and above all, could they have connected such revolt with the discussions respecting the Registry Bill in England, the public would have been satiated with statements on the subject, nothing could have availed to suppress them. But not a syllable has been officially published, either in England or in Barbadoes, which can throw light on these dark and sanguinary occurrences—nothing to shew the guilt of the Blacks, or the laxity or forbearance of the Whites. This deep and death-like silence speaks volumes."

Now, Sir, the Report from the Committee of the House of Assembly, of which I sent you a copy some days ago, was printed and published in Barbadoes, was reprinted and republished as soon as it reached England, and is now again advertised for sale. This official document, then, HAS BEEN allowed to see the light. This, above all, does connect the revolt with the discussions respecting the Registry Bill in England. This has been officially published both in England and in Barbadoes.

I cannot dwell upon this subject—I cannot permit myself to use the only word in the English language which can truly characterise the contents of this note. Every thing that is—that could be known respecting that insurrection, is contained in that Report; and I feel that it cannot be in better hands—for the good use it may be put to, for the West Indian and for the British public—than yours. I am, Sir, yours, &c. VINDEX.

As our object in BULL is always to bring forward the merits of questions actually under public discussion, we shall not enlarge upon the topic of Negro Emancipation at the present moment. We have already published in our BRITISH MERCURY, the affidavits of two persons, who distinctly swear to the cause of the Barbadoes insurrection, as being the report that the slaves were to be emancipated by means of an old woman, for whom MR. WILBERFORCE acted in England. This fact is sworn to.

We shall not here enlarge upon the disinterested conduct of Mr. ZACHARIAH MACAULAY towards the rum-drinking portion of the Black Society in our West India Islands, nor the peculiar caution exhibited by that immaculate philanthropist in transferring his property into EAST INDIA stock, previously to stirring the question of equalization of the sugar duties—in short, we shall say nothing, except to assure our friends that we have a mass of EVIDENCE and FACTS to shew the INJUSTICE—the DANGER—the FRAUD and the FOLLY of the attempt, futile as it must be, to white-wash the Black-a-moors, and that when the time comes, and the conciliatory measures, (TRUMAN, HANBURY, BUXTON & Co.'s entire,) are again agitated and fermented, we shall not be found asleep upon our posts.

It may not be uninteresting to our readers, however, at the moment to refer to the minority upon the question for a Committee upon the equalization of East and West India Sugars. We have taken the liberty of marking those Honourable Members who happen to be Proprietors of East India Stock, not, however, meaning (with the fear of Newgate and one of MR. MANNERS SUTTON'S warrants before our eyes) to impute a motive to the conduct of any Honourable Member whatever in that Honourable House.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, MAY 28.—From the Major-General to the Minister of W. "His Royal Highness the Duke D'Angoulême entered Madrid the 24th, at nine o'clock in the morning. General Curial has occ Mataro to be occupied. General Donnadieu has occupied Cole without resistance."

Some Inspectors of the Police waited the other day on several b sellers in the Palais Royale, desiring them not to expose on their l'Abregé de l'Histoire de l'Inquisition. This little brochure has c considerable sensation in Paris.

A courier, who left Madrid on the 16th ult. and arrived in Pa Monday, brought two documents, which were circulated freely former capital. The one is a letter from Count Montijo to Abisbal, in which he calls upon the latter to step forward to sa country, which now, as in 1808, solicited all her offspring for liverer. He says, "Your Excellency knows, and has declared the sovereignty of the people being once recognized, it becom duty to obey the general will, which amounts to this, that the Co tion of 1812 ought not to be retained, because it does not guara individual safety, nor preserve the dignity of the Spanish Mona Proclaim, therefore, what all desire, and act in concert with other Generals, who entertain the same sentiments—declare yo independent until the King shall be released. Collect your forc and hasten to destroy the origin of discord, so that the Faction Royalists, and the Foreigners, being deprived of every pretext have their designs frustrated, if they wish to rob us of the glory livering the King; and their plans totally defeated, if, under pretext, they conceal some other wish." And again—"To conc the whole, I am certain that it is as impossible to establish Constitution in Spain as it is to sustain the Constitution of 1812 with this difference only, that at the expense of blood, and numerous forces, the former might be kept up for some time; but put in practice the Constitution of the year 1812 is physically morally impossible, and consequently it has failed in Spain every where else; for it is contradictory in itself, and contains principles of its own destruction; it could prevail no where, bec it is out of the power of man to create beings with qualities essen contradictory.

The answer of Count Abisbal, in reply, states, that his Chief obey the orders of the Government, at the head of which is His Ma jesty, though he is fully convinced the present Ministry is incapa of rescuing the country from the dangers to which it is reduced. H then says, "In order to restore peace and union, the best mean would be, first, to notify to the invading army that the nation, concurrence with the King, proposed to make in its present Co stitution such alterations as experience has taught it to be nece sary to unite the minds of the Spaniards and ensure their ha piness as well as the dignity of the Constitutional Throne; and th consequently it ought to retire from the Spanish territory, and de itself to amicable intervention by means of its Ambassador. Such That his Majesty and his Government should again be established Madrid, as the Capital of the Monarchy; lest it should be said that sojourns at Seville against his inclination. Thirdly, that in order to in the Constitution such reforms as are deemed requisite, a new Cor should be convened, whose deputies should present themselves wi the powers specified by the Constitution. Fourthly, That it be proposed to his Majesty, that he would be pleased to choose a Ministry which should be wedded to no party, and should deserve the confidence of all, as well as that of Foreign Powers. And, fifthly, that a general amnesty should be decreed; and that a disposition should be evinced to pay attention to, and employ, without any regard to ex opinions, all Spaniards who from their penetration, services and p triotism, should be worthy of being preferred. Such is my perso opinion, and as a Spanish citizen, who is terrified at the present situation of his country, and who, at the expense of his blood, would prevent the effusion of that of his fellow citizens, I will cheerfully renounce any representation which may bring about so sacred an object."

The Count subsequently issued the following proclamation, date Madrid, May 16:—"Inhabitants of Madrid!—If military operations and a desire not to compromise the generous inhabitants of Madrid compel me to evacuate the capital, I will not abandon it until the garrison destined to preserve public tranquillity is replaced by the enemy's force, introduced by a Convention authorised by the laws of war. If some ill-designing men flatter themselves with the hope of pillage and disorder, let them renounce their criminal projects, and be assured that exemplary chastisement will be inflicted for every movement not authorised by law. I have respected, and I do respect the opinions of all, because I am persuaded that a liberal Government ought so to act, so long as those who are not agreed as to the merits of established laws do not, nevertheless, fail in punctual obedience to them; but I will not suffer party fury to stain with blood the soil of the capital of the most enlightened nation, or the ambitious and perfidious views of a small number of individuals to compromise the tranquillity of a city distinguished for its patriotism and talents.

(Signed) The Count DE D'ABISBAL."

An article from Bayonne, dated the 22d May, says—"The King, it is said, has attempted to escape from Seville. The Archbishop of Cordova, who was the author of this project, has been arrested. The garrison of Pampeluna is reported to have made a successful sally. The corps besieging Santona have been forced to retire after sustaining considerable loss by a vigorous sally of the garrison. A dozen deserters have been brought in here. Some persons say that Abisbal has been arrested and conducted to Seville, under a strong escort, principally for a letter which he is said to have written to the King, in which he begs his Majesty to come to Madrid, to settle the affairs of the kingdom."

LISBON, May 1.—In the Sitting of the Cortes, the 16th inst. the order of the day was the project for the division of the territory, the first article of which was read, viz.—"The kingdom of Portugal and Algarve, with the islands of Madeira and Azores, shall be divided into twelve provinces, each of which shall have an Administrator-General, and other provincial authorities, to be hereafter designated." After some discussion, the article was approved, only the number of thirteen provinces was substituted for twelve.

In the Sitting of the Cortes at Seville, on the 4th inst. a decree was passed, authorising certain financial measures; an extraordinary subsidy is to be established, estimated at 200,000,000 of reals, and which is to be levied upon all persons, whether foreigners or natives, in the ratio of their wealth. The payments were to commence within eight days from the publication of the Decree, and to be completed within the months of June and July. This forced loan is to be repaid by the proceeds arising from the sale of the seventh part of church property, which the Spanish clergy are to give up to the nation, conformably to a Papal Bull.

IRELAND.

At a meeting of Irish Catholics held in Dublin on Saturday last, it was resolved that an Association should be formed to be governed by regular rules, the object of which is the attainment of what is called Catholic Emancipation.

On Saturday week, a melancholy accident happened at Ardstraw, near Donemana, to Robert, aged 21, the youngest son of Robert Baird. After spending the evening with his family retired to his bed-room, and sat down on the bed for the purpose of charging a large pistol to keep off nightly depredators; in so doing it exploded, the contents entered below his right eye, and carried away part of his skull. The sister of the deceased was so much affected that she is not expected to survive.—Some rioters on Sunday night attacked the houses of Mr. Plunkett, in Stephen's-green; of Mr. Milliken, in Grafton street, and of several other gentlemen, all in Dublin, the windows of which they demolished.

In the Court of King's Bench, on Tuesday, an indictment was tried (the King v. Smith) which charged the defendant with subornation of perjury, (in swearing that Mrs. Boyle, the wife of the present prosecutor, was his natural daughter, when, in fact, she was not his daughter) in articles of the peace exhibited at the Middlesex sessions held in July against Mr. Boyle. A great number of witnesses were called to shew that Mrs. Boyle was the daughter of a Mr. and Mrs. Hill, and had borne a child to an officer previous to her marriage with Boyle. On the part of the defendant it was stated that she really was his natural daughter, and resided with him as such from the year 1800 to 1810, and letters were put in from the prosecutor to the defendant, implying forgiveness and threatening, unless a weekly allowance was made to the prosecutor, he would charge the defendant with perjury. Upon these circumstances, the Jury pronounced the defendant Not Guilty.—[Draper v. Garratt and another.—We have received a letter from John Weal, dated from the Public Office, Queen's-square, in which he says that he "is not one of those persons who hire themselves for libels." All we can say is, that we copied the report of the trial from one of the daily papers, and there the error commenced.]

MISCELLANEOUS.

The King remains at Carlton-House, and is sufficiently improved in health to join his usual society at dinner. On Tuesday His Majesty entertained a small party at dinner, among whom were the Marquis of Westminster and Lady Elizabeth Conyngham.

On Wednesday the Duke of York visited the King; and the Earl of Liverpool and Count Munster had audiences of His Majesty.

Count Munster had an audience of his Majesty on Thursday.

On Wednesday evening despatches were received by Government, from Sir Charles Stuart, communicating the intelligence of the entry of the French advanced guard into Madrid on the 23d ult. His Royal Highness the Duke d'Angouleme entered the capital on the following day.

The Prince de Polignac had retired with his troops upon the Tagus.

On Saturday se'nnight, Sir Benjamin Bloomfield, Ambassador to the Court of Sweden, and suite, embarked on board the Seringapatam, at Leith Roads, and sailed for Stockholm. His Excellency was saluted by the guns at Leith Fort, and by the ships of war.

The Grand Canal between Portsmouth and Arundel was opened on Monday. This work is of great importance, and has been three years forming, and has cost upwards of 100,000*l.*

The Term is now commenced, in Middlesex and London before the Right Hon. Sir Charles Abbott, Knt. Lord Chief Justice of the Court of King's Bench, and after Trinity Term, 1823:—In TERM—Middlesex—Saturday, June 7; Monday, June 9; Monday, June 16.—London—Saturday, June 14; Wednesday, June 11; Tuesday, June 17.—Thursday, June 19.

Next TERM—Middlesex—Monday, June 23—London—Thursday, June 26.

On Wednesday, a Ballot was taken at the East India House for the election of a Director, in the room of Joseph Cotton, Esq. who had resigned. The Scrutineers reported the election to have fallen on Thomas Reid, Esq.

A meeting of several gentlemen (civil and military) has taken place at the Freemasons' Tavern, for the purpose of taking into consideration the most speedy mode of erecting two colossal equestrian Statues, to the west of the Equestrian Statue, in front of Buckingham-house, in honour of his present Majesty—and to the east opposite the Horse Guards, in St. James's Park, in honour of his late Royal Highness the Duke of York, as Commander-in-Chief.

A letter has been received from Sir R. Wilson by one of his constituents, in which he says: "To-morrow I enter the ranks as a private in the corps of the Vigo battalion of dispensable militia, it will be for the Government of Spain afterwards to determine my service. I and my companions insist in the first instance of conforming to the laws in the ranks. Those companions are Lieutenant-Colonel Light, late of the Spanish Staff in the Peninsula, a most distinguished officer and excellent gentleman, and a grandson of Lord Erskine's, who came out as a volunteer to share my fortunes, and who, I am certain, will do honour to his name."

Epsom Races—WEDNESDAY.—The Craven Stakes of 10gs each for horses of all ages, was won by Mr. Naylor's ch. c. Brilliant.—The Derby, of 50 sov. value 150 sov. by Subscribers of 10 sov. each, with 20 added by the Racing Fund, for 3-yr old. The winner to be sold for 250 sovs, if demanded, was won by Mr. Whiteside's ch. h. Wouverman.—The Woodcot Stakes of 30 sov. each, h. ft. for 2-yr olds, was won by Mr. Ferth's b. f. by Partisan, out of Test.

THURSDAY.—The Derby Stakes of 50gs each, h. ft. colts 8st. 7lb. and fillies 8st. 2lb. The owner of the second horse to receive 100gs out of the Stakes, was won by Mr. Udney's Emilius, by Orville, out of Emily; Mr. Leather's br. c. Tancred, brother to Pacha (second.) Two were distanced. Eleven started. Emilius, with Buckle upon him, waited for Pacha with Tancred (rode by Wheatly), and won the race by more than a full length. It was a fast run race, with as bad a field as ever started. About six in a lot came in a long way behind.—The Woodcot Stakes of 10 sov. each was won by Sprite, beating Vampire and Thomas Troil.—FRIDAY. The Duke of Grafton's br. f. Zine won the Oaks at 50 sovereigns, for 3 year old fillies. F. Buckle rode for Mr. Jones's Peter Fin won the plate of 50*l.* for all ages.

Three Members of Oxford University have been expelled from it for their outrageous conduct and breaches of the peace. One of them is the eldest son of an English Earl, the other two Gentlemen Commoners.—Their offence was disturbing the whole College, by breaking out in the night time breaking doors and lamps, and yelling in most hideously—"Fire! Fire! Murder! Murder!"

On Monday, as one of the Gravesend steam boats was coming to London the boiler burst, and the situation of the passengers became of the most alarming. The Wellington steam boat soon came up, and took the whole of the passengers on board, none of whom sustained the slightest injury.

Mr. Gee, of Lower Seymour-street, was driving his phaeton near Hampstead, the horses took fright and ran against a coach, which was upset and the passengers much bruised. Mr. Gee and his servant were thrown out, and taken up insensible. Mr. Osgood Gee was so severely injured that he expired on Thursday.

On Wednesday a tilbury, in which were a lady and gentleman, was driven on the declivity of Blackfriars-bridge; the lady was precipitated to the ground with considerable violence; her arm was broken near the arm and neck severely bruised.

On Tuesday afternoon, as Mr. Burrowes and Mr. Dockery, jun. of Merrion-square, were driving a spirited horse in a break along the Strand-road, the animal took fright, and threw both out. It then turned down a Mr. Anderson, broke his arm in two places, one of his legs and fractured his skull. He was conveyed to the London Hospital, where surgeons are entertained of his recovery.

At the Mansion House on Thursday, a baker attended with his servant to make a serious charge against a flour factor, for adulterating the flour which he sold him, by mixing with the wheat flour, barley, or some other flour, so that the bread became sour, and his customers in consequence refused to deal with him. This was a common complaint against the bakers, who were liable to a penalty of 20*l.* for selling adulterated bread. The case was ordered to stand over for a few days.

At the Mansion-house on Wednesday, John Gottie, charged with setting fire to his house in Whitecross-street in 1811, was re-examined. Mrs. Thatcher, living next door to the prisoner at the time of the fire, was present at the Eagle Fire Office when a man made a claim for the loss of goods and furniture. Witness was surprised at such a claim, as he knew he had not stock nor furniture to any thing like the amount, and told Mr. Beetham the Secretary so. The prisoner then swore to the amount of his claim, but was afterwards told, that if he made it again, he would be taken into custody. The prisoner made so reply, but went away. Two years after this, the ruins of the house was cleared away for a new house to be built; and witness examined, and found the oven quite entire; the crown of the oven was not burnt. Mrs. Stuck got some foul linen washed for the prisoner at the time, but he begged of her to tell the woman not to bring his things on the next Saturday, but to leave them at witness's house. This she refused, and after the fire, which took place on the Sunday night, a man was fetched them away. Carmichael, a baker, with whom the prisoner served as journeyman in 1812, and 1813, asked him how the fire happened, and he said that it was in consequence of the crown of the oven having fallen in, and the fire bursting forth. Mr. Bigg, a fellow-workman, stated that the prisoner came to him and said, "I have been to the office and shall soon get my money; you know I have had a great deal of goods of you, and if the Fire Office people ask you, I wish you would say that I have had 50*l.* worth." He would search his books, and whatever goods he had from him, he would report to the Fire Office, but no more. The prisoner was remanded till next Wednesday.

THE ART of EMPLOYING TIME to the greatest Advantage —The true Source of Happiness.

"Dost thou love life,—then do not squander time, for that is the stuff life is made of."—Franklin.

We have the author's authority for stating, that several persons have already practised this method of regulating the employment of time, for some years, with perseverance and success. It is particularly adapted to young people of the age of fifteen or sixteen years to twenty-five, but it is also calculated to confer advantages on persons of all ages and professions—in all classes of society, and in all circumstances of life. It tends to form the heart, the judgment, the understanding, the style, and the memory, to preserve health, to neutralize or to give a beneficial direction to the passions, in short to make man more virtuous, more enlightened, and more happy.

(6 yds being sufficient for the dress,) 2s. 6d. to 3s. 6d.; Persian silks for lining, every shade, 1s. 4d. to 1s. 6d.; 99 pieces of silk gauzes, every colour, 1s. 4d. per yard; 300 pieces of Italian nett for evening dress, 1s. 2d. per yard; and 200 of the best quality, every colour, 1s. 6d. worth 2s. 2d.; this month's remaining part of the stock of muslins belonging to H. and W., two unfortunate manufacturers in Glasgow, will be sold by Sewell and Cross, at little less than half their original cost; 900 pieces of cambric jaconets and mull muslins, ell wide, from 6d. per yard to 1s. 6d. and one the manufacturers 2s. 6d. to 3s. 6d.; 400 fine robes, a great bargain, 9s. 12s. 15s.; and 18s. 6d. the full dress robes, elegantly flounced, some with coloured flounces, 12s. and 14s. and cost the manufacturers two pounds, ladies going abroad would find these robes truly worth their attention, at Sewell and Cross, 42 Frith-street, corner of Old Compton-street, Soho Square. ☞ The trade are particularly wished to apply before ten o'clock in the morning.

CURIOUS SHAWLS at HALF PRICE.—The greatest BARGAINS in handsome and rare SHAWLS ever exhibited, are now submitted to the Nobility and Public, many of them being less than half their original price. The square shawls in India red, blue, scarlet, white, crimson, fawn, and black, which were 4 guineas, are to be sold at 42s.; the 5-guinea ditto at 50s.; the 6-guinea ditto at 60s.; long shawls in the above colours, in the same proportion, from 50s. to 11l. This immense stock of shawls was the property of a very considerable factor, who spared no expense of pattern and quality. They are consigned for sale, (for ready money only) to BROWN and Co., silk manufacturers, 15, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden. Of wholesale purchasers in any sum exceeding 40l. a banker's acceptance, at two months, will be taken.

PAYNTER and HAWKE, (late Edmund Lloyd) No. 178, Strand, respectfully acquaint the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public, that they have made several improvements in Stoves, Grates, and Kitchen Ranges, for the purpose of saving fuel, and preventing smoke, and humbly solicit an inspection at their Manufactory, No. 178, Strand, two doors west of Norfolk-street. Also with their Patent Stoves, for the cure of smoky chimneys. Every description of Warming Stoves for Halls, Stair-cases, Churches, &c. Improved Warming Air-stoves, Ironmongery, &c.; Kitchens and Houses completely fitted up: Bells and Alarums hung, in town or country, on the best principles.—Old Stoves modernized, or taken in exchange.—Dial Weighing Machines at reduced prices.

IN consequence of the great disappointment many persons have experienced from purchasing inferior TRUSSES, SALMON, ODY, and Co. most respectfully solicit the attention of Professional Gentlemen and the Public, to observe, that the true and only "PATENT SELF-ADJUSTING" has "Salmon, Ody, and Co. No. 293, Strand, London," marked upon the leather case, without which they are of the spurious kind. Salmon, Ody, and Co. the sole Inventors and Patentees, have made 50,000 of their PATENT SELF-ADJUSTING TRUSSES, and still continue to have the recommendations of all the most eminent Surgeons in Town and Country. They have also the honour to supply the Army and Navy; the Naval and Military Hospitals; the Dockyards and Ordnance; the Marine Infirmary; the Hon. East India Company; the City of London Truss Society; the Bristol, and Denbigh Infirmaries; the Windsor General Dispensary; the Middlesex and St. George's Hospitals; Parochial Establishments, &c. &c.—Sold by one or more Druggists in every principal Town in the United Kingdom.

BURGESS'S NEW SAUCE for general purposes, having given such great approbation, and the demand for it continuing to increase JOHN BURGESS and SON beg most respectfully to offer this their best acknowledgments to the Public for their liberal patronage of the same: its utility and great convenience in all climates, has recommended it to the most distinguished foreign connexions, who have all spoken highly in its recommendation.—It is prepared by them ONLY; and for preventing disappointments to families, all possible care has been resorted to, for each bottle being sealed upon the cork with their firm and address, as well as each label having their signature, without which it cannot be genuine.

JOHN BURGESS & SON'S long established and much-esteemed ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES, continues to be prepared by them after the same manner that has given the greatest satisfaction for many years.—Warehouse, 107, Strand, corner of the Savoy-steps, London.—The original Fish-Sauce Warehouse.

A. ROWLAND and SON, Sole Proprietors of the original MACASSAR OIL, respectfully inform the Nobility, Gentry, and Public at large, that they have REMOVED to No. 20, Hatton-Garden. Also, beg to CAUTION them against the influence of the universal demand for their ORIGINAL and GENUINE MACASSAR OIL, impositions have been amply bottled, and attempt to deceive the Public with spurious Macassar Oil, composed of injurious ingredients, offering it for sale at a lower price, and without the label: and others sign, "Rowlandson," imitating the signature, which renders it necessary on purchasing to ask for ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, and strictly to observe, that none are genuine without the outside label and the little book inside the wrapper; and the label is signed on the outside, in red, "A. Rowland and Son." The prices are 3s. 6d. 7s. 13s. 6d. and 21s. per bottle. All other prices are impositions. The genuine has the address on the label, No. 20, Hatton-Garden"—Also, Red Whiskers, Grey Whiskers, Eye-brows, Hair on the Head, effectually changed to Brown or Black, by the use of ROWLAND'S ESSENCE of TYRE. By merely wetting the Hair, it immediately produces a perfect change. Price 4s.; 7s. 6d. and 10s. 6d. per bottle. Sold by the sole Proprietors, A. Rowland and Son, No. 20, Hatton-garden, Holborn, London; and, by appointment, by most Perfumers and Medicine Venders.—Ask for "Rowland's Oil," or "Rowland's Tyre," and observe the signature, "A. Rowland and Son. All others are counterfeits.

LADIES and GENTLEMEN may rely on it, they will not have a hair fall off or turn grey, by now using PRINCE'S celebrated RUSSIA OIL, as it is so improved with an extra valuable ingredient, through which it has made the Russia Oil the greatest nourisher and preserver to the hair in the universe, will make it grow thick and long, and prevent its falling off or ever turning grey, and is such a nourisher to the roots of the hair, that if it even has begun to turn grey, will restore it again to its natural colour, and if used often will never turn grey again, and is a most delightful scent, from infancy to old age, and will always keep the head and hair clean and beautiful. Gentlemen who have the hair quite lost their hair, and have the least sign of roots of hair remaining, by using Prince's Oil for a few months Prince's Improved Russia Oil, with the extra valuable ingredient, will be sure to restore it and produce a fine head of hair, which hundreds have experienced. Ladies will find Prince's Russia Oil preferable to any other Oil for dressing their own, or false hair, as it gives it a natural gloss, softens, and curls it. Gentlemen, wear-out, powder ought to use it instead of pomatum; it promotes Eyebrows, Whiskers, &c. and through the extra ingredient it will now always keep pleasant in all climates.

Ask for Prince's Improved Russia Oil, and observe Prince on the wrapper and seals of each bottles without, it is not genuine, and cannot answer the purpose. The ounce bottle 3s., or a large bottle, containing five ounces, 5l., which is a saving. Sold by the sole Proprietor, A. Prince, No. 9, Poland-street, Oxford-street; one of the Patentees, London; and by most principal Perfumers and Medicine Venders. ☞ Ladies and Gentlemen will be particular, as impostors have made the covers of the counterfeit Russia Oil so much like the Genuine, therefore persons should be cautious, and have it of the Proprietor, or of a respectable Vender.

LATEST NEWS.

Paris papers down to Thursday, and German papers to the 25th ult. arrived yesterday. The Gazette de France states that the last advices from Seville mention that the King was not recovered from the gout. His Majesty had been obliged to sign a manifesto to the Spanish nation, but, says that paper, of falsehoods and sophisms. It was not true that Abisbal had been arrested by his soldiers. Intelligence had been received from Lisbon, dated the 9th, which confirms the dismissal of Rego. The Journal des Debats notices these circumstances, and referring to the rumours, that Abisbal had addressed a letter to the Duke D'Angouleme, which was unfavourably received, says "the truth is, that Prince would not treat with any General at the head of an army, but solely with King Ferdinand when at liberty, or with a Government established by the free act of that Monarch.

It is stated that the individuals who are expected to form the regency at Madrid, to govern in King Ferdinand's name, so long as his captivity may endure, are the Dukes de San Carlos, and De L'Infantado, and the Marquis de Casa Yrugo.

A letter from Madrid, dated May 22, (two days prior to the entry of the Duke d'Angouleme into Madrid,) says, "General Bessieres attempted the day before yesterday, and contrary to the orders of the Prince, to seize upon the city.—He had an action and was repulsed, leaving 60 killed and 300 prisoners."

An article from Constantinople, dated April 26, says, On the 22d of this month several discharges of artillery announced the birth of a new Imperial Prince, who has been named Abdul Medschid; since then all the mosques and minarets have been illuminated.

The Journal de Toulouse asserts "that the Grandees of Spain and the ancient Cortes assembled at Madrid, were to confer the title of Regent of the Kingdom on the Duke of Angouleme till King Ferdinand should be set at liberty."

The East India Company's ship Kellie Castle, outward-bound, was all well, in lat. 7. 36. S. long. 26. W. on the 1st of April. The Atlas, also outward-bound, was all well on the 14th April, in lat. 1. S. long. 20. 40. W.

In the Court of King's Bench yesterday, in the case of the King v. Whitehead and Brown, found guilty of defrauding Sir A. Campbell of 6000l. by representing that the Rev. William Brown, one of the defendants, was seized of certain estates in Essex, when in fact he was not in possession, the defendant Whitehead appeared to receive judgment, Brown having absconded. A great number of affidavits of the most respectable persons were put in to the character of the defendant Whitehead, and it was alleged that he had been the dupe of Brown.—The Court, under these circumstances, granted a Rule for a new trial, and the defendant was allowed to go at large upon bail.

At Guildhall yesterday, Moffatt was brought up for re-examination, charged with passing five bad sovereigns in payment for a horse, which he purchased at Smithfield from a servant whose master sent him to market to dispose of. The bargain was struck at 5l. and Moffatt paid the servant in the base coin already mentioned. In his defence the prisoner stated, that he received the five sovereigns, with two others equally bad, in payment of two horses sold by him the same day.—The prisoner was remanded.

At Worcester, yesterday, Henry Poyser and Ann Poyer, his sister-in-law, underwent another examination on various charges of horse-stealing. Mr. Jackson, of Derbyshire, proved that a black cart mare found in the possession of Daniel Poyser, at Enfield, brother to the prisoners, was his property, which had been sold to him by Thomas Poyser, now in Derby Jail. Another gentleman proved he lost an iron grey colt on the 21st of June, 1821, and found it in the possession of Thomas Poyser, at the Pied Bull stables in Islington. The Magistrate held them to bail, each in two sureties of £200, to answer any indictment that might be preferred against them at the next Stafford Assizes, in September.

Yesterday an inquest was held on Osgood Gee, Esq. killed in consequence of being thrown out of his phaeton, on Thursday last, in Pentonville. Evidence was given to prove the horses were running at a very quick pace; it was also intimated that such was occasioned by Mr. Gee losing the government of the horses, in consequence of dropping the reins, and that when he regained them the sudden check made the horses go at a much quicker pace, by which means both Mr. Gee and his servant were thrown out. Mr. Cooper, the surgeon, said, the deceased had received a fracture on the skull, which had occasioned death. Verdict—"Accidental Death."

Yesterday evening about 7 o'clock, as a poor labouring man was repairing the front of a house (Mr. Iron's), in Princes-street, Soho, the ladder broke in the middle at the second floor window; to save himself he clung to the royal arms at the first floor, which being made of cement broke down, and precipitated the unfortunate man on the pavement. He was killed.—A correspondent suggests, to avoid the many accidents which occur from this practice of cleaning windows—(he says, half a dozen within a few weeks), that for a trifling expense hinges may be had of any carpenter, which allow the sashes to be turned within the room.—He adds, "my windows have them, and thus my servants' lives are preserved."

Thomas Donaldson, William Buchanan, and William Macleod were executed a few days since at Aberdeen, for theft.

ELEGANT GLASSES, FURNITURE, &c.—The Nobility and Gentry are invited to inspect the Ware rooms of Cooper and Son, 53, Bishopsgate Within, where is exhibited a large Assortment of new and second-hand Plate Glasses, admirably suited to every situation for dining-rooms. The prices are just reduced 40 per cent. on plates measuring 100 inches by 72, and upwards; and on those of smaller dimensions the alteration will be found equally important. The extensive preference given to this Establishment is thankfully acknowledged by the Proprietors, who, in their endeavours to evince their gratitude, by manufacturing articles in a superior manner, at prices suitable to the times, hope to merit a continuance of public support. In the furniture department is comprised every new and elegant article of upholstery, cabinet, and chair work, regulated upon such a scale of economy as to demand and ensure the patronage of rank and fashion.

CIDER, PERRY, ALE, &c.—THOMAS FIELD and SON beg to acquaint their Friends and the Public, that their genuine Cider and Perry, Burton, Edinburgh, Taunton, and Weak Ales, Dorchester Beer, Brown Stout, &c. are in fine order for use. They have also a very superior Stock of Foreign Wines. Cape Madeira, Brandy, (white and coloured) Rum, Hollands, Geneva, and Orange Shrub; and they have been enabled to make a considerable reduction in their prices generally.—22, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

W. JONES, (late Walsh) CHEMIST, 100 STRAND, begs leave respectfully to inform the public, that WALSH'S ORIGINAL GINGER SEEDS and POWDER, also his other reputed Medicines, viz. the Rhubarb and Ginger Pills, Dr. Moseley's Antibilious Pills, Improved Huxham's Tincture of Peruvian Bark, Dinner Pills to create appetite, and every other medicine of character, warranted Genuine, with a full description of their several qualities, are sold as above. Spurious articles having of late been vended under the denomination of Walsh's Improved Ginger Seeds, the public are hereby cautioned that none are sent from the Original Shop except signed by W. Jones. The above Medicines are too well known to need any recommendation.

REAL INDIA MUSLINS.—A few Bales of very beautiful and curious India Muslins, with twelve chests of Nankeens, have lately been cleared from the India House by GRAHAM and NIXON. The muslins are 1s 6d., 2s, and 2s. 6d. a yard, being one third of the usual retail prices.—The Nankeens are 3s. the whole piece.—Merchants or families who have large commissions abroad may have their orders executed in a few minutes, to any extent, with almost every description of British manufactured goods, on the first wholesale terms, apply to Graham and Nixon, Wholesale Drapers, Irish Linen Factors, and Commission Agents, Furniture Printers, and Dealers in Brussels Carpeting, Nos. 293, and 294, High Holborn. ☞ P. THEATRE ROYAL DRURY LANE.

MR. KNIGHT, and MR COOPER, in announcing to the Nobility, their Friends, and the Public, that their BENEFIT is appointed for WEDNESDAY EVENING, JUNE 18th, feel the highest satisfaction in assuring their Patrons, that the principal Professors of the Establishment have shewn an unprecedented willingness to strengthen their claim to a continuation of their patronage. Great anxiety having been expressed by the public for the production of novelty, affording the united powers of Mr. Kean and Mr. Young full scope for action. The Tragedy of Adelgitha has been selected, as possessing the desired qualifications. In this highly reputed production, Mr. Kean will sustain the character of Lothair, a Norman Knight, and Mr. Young the character of Guiscard, Prince of Apulia, and as Miss Stephens, and a splendid combination of comic talent, will sing and perform in the Afterpieces; it is hoped a l that the most refined taste can desire, may be naturally anticipated.

THEATRE ROYAL COVENT GARDEN.

MR. C. TAYLOR most respectfully informs his Friends and the Public, that his BENEFIT will take place on FRIDAY, the 20th inst. when will be performed, for the last time this season, the opera of the Exile, with all its original splendour. Just published by Messrs. Treuttel and Wurtz, and Dulau and Co. Soho-square, the following Italian Works. By Mr. Petroni.

GIL BLAS di SANTILLANO, in 5 volumes, Second Edition. Dedicated to his Excellency the Chevalier De Onis, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary from his Catholic Majesty to the King of Great Britain. In the fifth volume it is proved, from incontestible evidence, that Le Sage was not the author of the celebrated Romance of Gil Blas, but a Spanish writer; and the interesting matter contained in this volume is already in the press, translated into English.

PICTURESQUE PROMENADE round DORKING, in SURREY. Second Edition, with Additions. By JOHN TIMBS.

——locos lætos, et amœna vireta
Fortunatorum nemorum, sedesque beatas.—Virgil.

Printed for the Author, and sold by Sir Richard Phillips and Co. Bridge-street; Relf, Cornhill; Neely, Change Alle; Miller, Fleet-street; Hailes, Piccadilly; Chappell, Pall Mall; Hoitts, Upper Berkeley-street; at the Library, Dorking; the Inn, at Box Hill; and by all Booksellers.

☞ A few Copies with a large Map, 10s. 6d.—Persons wishing to secure copies with the Map, are requested to be early in their applications, as very few remain.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—The rude and unskilful attempts constantly made to supply these substitutes for the masticatory organ, and the disgust which delicacy suffers from the unpleasantry attending them when permanently fixed, have deterred many from adopting the aid and comfort they are capable of affording, independent of the assistance they may contribute to digestion and consequent health. The ingenious application of mechanical science will enable us to obviate all these inconveniences, and allow the wearer at all times to keep the mouth in a state of perfect cleanliness, and to perform the functions of mastication, articulation, &c. with decided ease and comfort.—Mr. NICHOLLS begs to state, that he is in constant attendance from ten to four, and will be happy to give ocular demonstration of the comforts derived from his efforts under every circumstance of simple and complicated deficiency.—115, Fleet-st.

CHAMPAGNES.—CHARLES WRIGHT, Wine Merchant to His R. H. the Duke of Clarence, next to the King's and opposite the Haymarket Theatres, Opera Colonnade, London, is now landing CHAMPAGNES, ROUGE ET BLANC, first quality, brilliant condition, (G. Pris, Soleau Avize, covers,) 41.4s. per doz.; CLARET, ST. JULIEN ET LA ROSE, 63s.

OLD PORT, 36s.; SHERRY, superior, 36s.; and CAPE MADEIRA, 16s. per dozen. A 3-dozen hamper, containing one dozen of each of these wines, bottles, &c. for 5l. and so in proportion. MADEIRA, VIDONIA, TENERIFFE, CALCAVELLA. 40s. per dozen; OLD COGNAC BRANDY, 23s. 6d. per gallon, and fine OLD RUM 15s. 6d. Fresh empty Wine Pipes 17s. each. Postage to be paid, and no credit given.—Fine sweet Devonshire CYDER, 7s. 6d. per dozen, by 2 dozen.

W. S. SARGENSON, No. 5, Colonnade, Pall-mall, respectfully entreats the curious in rich old WINES and SPIRITS, to inspect his present STOCK, which has already met the approbation of many connoisseurs. The Selections are made from the first Vintages for the last twelve years, particularly the following:—Hermitage of St. George, reduced to 100s. per dozen; Old Port, from 40s. to 45s. ditto; Superior Crusted, 49 ditto; E. I. Madeira, 60s. ditto; W. I. Ditto, 52s. ditto: Fine Old Sherry, 40s. to 45s. ditto; Pale Ditto, very old, 48s. ditto; Cape Madeira, a fine Table Wine, 19s. to 24s; Rum, Brandy and Hollands, finest flavours, and import strength. Orders from the Country and the Trade particularly attended to. He invites a competition with any House in the Metropolis.—Champagne just imported, in the highest perfection.

CHARLES FOSTER, Wine Merchant, 128, High Holborn, (four doors from the corner of Southampton-street,) most respectfully calls the attention of the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public to his list of prices for Wines of the first Quality only, and flatters himself that a trial is only required to ensure satisfaction. Families visiting watering places will find a great saving in taking their Wines from London, as C. F. delivers orders of six dozen and upwards free of carriage to any part of England. A single bottle may be had for sample, one dozen sent within five miles of the metropolis, and if not approved of the money will be returned.—The finest Cape Madeira imported, 24s. per dozen; Ditto Red, (Burgundy flavour) 30s.; Port from Wood, (Sous Retelro,) 42s.; Ditto crusted, 48s.; Ditto, very old, (Thomson and Crofts,) 54s. to 60s.; Sherry, very fine and rich, 48s.; Ditto, old, (Sir W. D. Gordon's first marks,) 54s. to 60s.; Bucellas, 54s.; Superior Vidonia, 48s.; Teneriffe, 45s.; Direct Madeira, 48s.; Lisbon, very old and dry, 54s.; West India Madeira, 54s.; Superior East India ditto, 60s.; Claret (superior) 70s.; Ditto, very fine, 84s.—Champagne, Burgundy, and all other Wines, proportionably low prices, for ready money only.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—MR. W. BEACALL, Surgeon Dentist, 13, Newman-street, Oxford-street, having with unremitting diligence long made the science of Artificial Teeth when mechanical contrivance is requisite his peculiar study, continues to supply the loss of Teeth, with Natural or Artificial, in a superior manner, without the least pain, from a single Tooth to a complete set, at little more than one-half the usual charges. Teeth cleaned, if ever so discoloured, and rendered white and beautiful, without pain or injury to the enamel, extracting, stopping, and every operation on the Teeth and Gums. Attends at home from ten till four.

A COMPLETE SUIT OF DRAWING-ROOM FURNITURE, consisting of Silk Curtains, real Rosewood Chairs and Tables; two very superior Chandeliers, with the handsomest Pier Glass and Table in London, will be sold at half the usual price by Nias and Co. Agents, 32, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

TO THE LADIES.—PRESERVATION OF FURS.—As the season is last approaching when the above valuable articles are peculiarly liable to receive damage from moths, engendered by the warmth of the weather, and from their being too often left to the care of inexperienced persons, CHARLES WAYTE, of Regent-street, Furrier to the King, respectfully informs the Nobility and the Public generally, that he undertakes, at a moderate charge, the care of them during the summer. All Furs that have been recently worn should be cleaned without loss of time, as the cleaning and putting them in repair can be much better done during the summer months than in the inclement and more humid season.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY.

Three petitions were presented from Coroners in the county of York, against the Irish Grand Jury Presentments' Bill; from a man named Clerk, confined in the gaol for York, complaining of being kept to hard labour and confined 45 weeks because he "could not support his wife and family;" from Whitby, against Slavery.

On the moving the second reading of the Scotch Entails' Bill,

The EARL OF ABERDEEN said he intended to let the Bill stand over till next Session.—The Bill was committed for this day se'nnight.

TUESDAY.

The EARL OF LIVERPOOL (in answer to a question from Earl Grosvenor) thought it extremely proper that a Committee should be appointed to inquire into the nature of the office of Lord Justice General of Scotland, with a view to its regulation or abolition.

The EARL OF HAREWOOD presented petitions from the Cloth Manufacturers in Yorkshire, against the duty on Foreign Wool. He considered that the woollen cloth manufacturers ought not to be subjected to the duty on Foreign Wool.

The EARL OF LIVERPOOL said, this duty had increased from 250,000*l.* a year to 400,000*l.* On this account then, he thought they would pause before they meddled with so important a branch of the revenue.—The petitions were ordered to lie on the table.

On a motion for going into Committee on the Marriage Act,

The EARL OF WESTMORLAND moved, that the clause respecting nullity of marriages be omitted. He objected to this Bill on grounds, moral and religious. He considered it as dreadful to place a Clergyman in a situation that, when he gave a couple his benediction, neither he nor they, nor any Judge on the Bench, could tell whether they were to live in a holy state, or in one of civil immorality and degradation to themselves and their offspring. He objected to the Bill generally. It would be totally nugatory and ineffeacious. If an innocent and amiable girl should make a mistake of a day or two in her age, their sentence of condemnation was irrevocable. He then moved that this Bill should not now be committed.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH wished the Bill to be allowed to go into the Committee; but if it came out of it with the nullity clause, he should object to it.

The EARL of WESTMORLAND withdrew his motion.

The House then resolved itself into a Committee on the Bill.

The BISHOP OF CHESTER proposed to omit the words that marriages should not be celebrated in Chapels without consent of the Patron and Incumbent of the Parish.

The ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY objected to this as interfering with the rights of those persons.

The amendment was negatived.

On the Nullity Clause,

The ARCHBISHOP OF YORK declared that a marriage once solemnized could not be dissolved, but for adultery. In the words of our Saviour, "whom God hath joined let no man put asunder." He therefore objected to the clause dissolving the marriage of minors within the 12 months.

LORD ROSSLYN wished for time to be given to consider this clause, and therefore he moved, that the Chairman should report progress, and ask leave to sit again on Thursday.

LORD LIVERPOOL opposed the motion. The clause could be discussed on the third reading of the Bill.

The BISHOP OF CHESTER opposed the clause, because marriage was a religious contract, and therefore no human law could interfere with the law of God.

The LORD CHANCELLOR said, if the Reverend Prelate's opinion was right, all the marriages subsequent to 1756, were unlawful. Much had been said of male seducers, but they ought to look a little at the female seducers; such as the case of a woman of 32 years of age, with six or seven illegitimate children, enticing a lad of 17 into a marriage.

LORD POWERSCOURT opposed the clause.

The ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY denied that there was any thing contrary to the spirit of Christianity in this clause, which however he was not so wedded to, as to wish to maintain it against the sense of the House.

LORD REDESDALE contended that marriage was a regulation made by man, and they therefore made it as expedient as possible to their own particular state of society.

The BISHOP OF LONDON maintained that there was nothing in the clause inconsistent with the Christian religion, or morality.

LORD SIDMOUTH said, it was impious to conceive that such marriages were made by God, which were the effect of fraud, forgery, and perjury; it was only marriages contracted by these means that this clause proposed to render null.

LORD STOWELL said, by the present law a marriage was null and void, however solemnly or religiously celebrated, unless it was preceded by the legal forms of banns or licence.

The Committee divided—For the Nullity Clause, 22—Against it, 28—Majority against the Clause, 6; it is consequently thrown out of the Bill! The other Clauses were agreed to.

WEDNESDAY.

A Petition was presented from the Clerk of the Peace for Londonderry against the Grand Jury Presentment Bill.

The Turnpike Trust Bill was passed.

THURSDAY.

On the motion for receiving the Report of the Marriage Act Amendment Bill, LORD REDESDALE proposed that the notice of seven days to the Clergyman should be dated on the day on which it is delivered.—Agreed to.

LORD STOWELL proposed a Clause to allow Marriages to be celebrated in any convenient place within the parish, if the Church or Chapel be under repair.

LORD LIVERPOOL suggested the propriety of allowing the Clause to stand over for the third reading of the Bill, which was agreed to.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH proposed a new Clause. In the Committee they had rejected the Nullity Clause, and he was of opinion, that they ought, in a moral and religious point of view, to make null, ab initio, all marriages within the prohibited degrees.

LORD LIVERPOOL, prospectively?

LORD ELLENBOROUGH prospectively, certainly. He then moved that after the 1st of December next all marriages within the prohibited degrees, published in 1563, shall be null and void.—The Clause was then agreed to.

Some further amendments were proposed, but they stood over for further consideration.

The MARQUIS OF LANSDOWN said, he had a Bill to present to relieve certain sects of Dissenters from inconveniences respecting their marriages. He moved that the Bill should be read a first time, printed, and read a second time on Thursday next, when he should explain his views on this very important subject.—Agreed to.

FRIDAY.

Petitions were presented from the Manufacturers in the Staffordshire Potteries, complaining of the inconvenience in recovering small debts; from several Clerks of the Peace in Ireland against the Grand Jury Presentment Bill.—The Metropolitan Gas Light Bill was read a first time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY.

Petitions were presented from Hereford, against the Game Laws; from Shoreditch and Arundel, against Slavery; from certain Linen Merchants of London, against the Linen Regulation Bill; from a person named Bradley, complaining of the Metage of Coals (Mr. HUME said this was a subject which it behoved Parliament to take up) from Shoreditch, against the Silk Manufacturers Regulation Bill.

SIR T. LETHBRIDGE withdrew his motion for submitting to the House certain resolutions on the subject of Agricultural distress. He was induced to do this on the recommendation of several Gentlemen, whom he knew to be among the warmest friends of the Landed Interest, and who had engaged to give him their zealous support. He was happy to state, that the circumstances under which he withdrew his notice were very different from those under which it had been given, and he hoped those connected with the land were justified in looking forward to a great alleviation, if not to a total extinction of that distress, which had so long been the subject of just complaint, and of anxious alarm.

LORD FOLKSTONE was glad to hear that the situation of the landed interest was so materially improved as to induce the Hon. Bart. to withdraw the notice which he had given.

MR. CURTIES expressed his satisfaction that the motion was withdrawn, as the Hon. Bart. was convinced of the improving state of the landed interest.—The motion was withdrawn.

LORD ERSKINE presented a petition signed by 5161 persons, freeholders, leaseholders, and copyholders of the county of Devon, in favour of Parliamentary Reform; among other complaints they considered the aspect of our foreign affairs was equally grievous and alarming, for Government had become the tool of the Continental Alliance. The Noble Lord said the sheriff had declined to call the meeting, but that five magistrates sanctioned, and he (Lord E.) presided.

MR. NEWMAN described the meeting to have been in perfect good humour and order when they passed the petition.

MR. TREMAYNE said he passed through the town at the time, but he had not seen that unanimity described.—The petition was ordered to be printed.

LORD A. HAMILTON brought under the consideration of the House the state of Scotch Representation. [The noise and confusion which prevailed in the House was so great, that for some time not a word which he said could be heard.] He observed, at length, that the persons in that House seemed to think their own conversation and concerns of much more importance than those of their Constituents. With regard to the Scotch Representation, it could not be taken to represent the property, or to speak the sense of the people, either in the House or out of it. By a return laid before the House in 1820, it appeared that the whole number of voters, in all the Scotch counties, was only 2889. Now, what was the result of this system of things? About two years ago he was surprised to see an advertisement in a newspaper from an Hon. Admiral, offering himself a Member for the County of Lanark, and came forward as a Government candidate, and the contest took the shape of a Government contest. He (Lord A. H.) on one side, and Government on the other. The Noble Lord here entered into a history of the contest between himself and the Hon. Admiral. In the remedy he should propose, he would attack no existing rights, but would increase the number of votes, and connect the right of property with the privilege of voting; which was—that property to the amount of 100*l.* Scotch, or 8*l.* sterling annually, should give a right to vote. The Member for Edinburgh had 30 supporters, and above 30,000 opponents.—The Noble Lord concluded by moving certain Resolutions, embodying the statements of his speech, relative to the existing state of the Representation, and concluded with a Resolution pledging the House to take the subject into consideration early in the next Session of Parliament, with a view to increase the number of voters, and to establish a connection betwixt the right of voting and the possession of property.

MR. MAXWELL seconded the motion.

SIR GEO. CLERK declared that the present system was suitable to the habits, and agreeable to the feelings of the people of Scotland. In England, as well as in Scotland, the possession of large property, in many cases, gave no right to a vote. That was the case of copy and leasehold property; and the law on that subject was equally anomalous in the southern as in the northern part of the island. But the Noble Lord's speech was composed of the grievances which he supposed he had experienced at the Lanark election. He (Sir George Clerk) contended, that the Articles of the Union were a complete bar to the innovations of the Noble Lord. He moved the previous question on the first resolution.

MR. KENNEDY said, the evil of the present system had been, that, since the union of the kingdoms, the great majority of the Scotch Members had uniformly adhered to the Ministry of the day.

MR. H. TWISS opposed the motion on the ground that no probable good could result from adopting it.

SIR J. MACKINTOSH maintained that the Electors of Counties in England comprehended the great mass of property and population, while in Scotland the case was wholly the reverse.

LORD BINNING contended that the motion went to change the whole system of election in Scotland, which had existed for ages; and that surely could not be considered as more easy, or less dangerous, than the changing of the franchise from one Cornish borough to another. Scotland was as much represented as any other part of the nation.

MR. J. P. GRANT denied that his Hon. and Learned friend was capable of saying that this measure would have no more effect than the change of the representation of a Cornish Borough.

The LORD ADVOCATE opposed the motion. He contended that the people of Scotland did themselves require that the elective franchise should be confined to a few. Though the Noble Lord had been about this measure for three years, yet not a single petition had been sent up from Scotland in favour of it.

LORD MILTON thought the question affected the nation generally.

LORD GLENORCHY was aware, as Scotland was a component part of the Empire, it must affect them all.

LORD A. HAMILTON replied, and then the House divided. For the Motion, 117—For the previous Question, 152—Majority against the Motion, 35.

MR. J. WILLIAMS, in the absence of Sir F. Burdett, gave notice, that he would, on the 12th instant, submit a motion to the House, on the subject of the Sheriff of Dublin.

On the question for the second reading of the sale of Game Bill,

MR. H. SUMNER objected to proceeding in it at so late an hour, and moved accordingly. For the second reading, 208—Against it, 38—Majority, 170.

LORD CRANBOURNE then stated the provisions of the Bill which went to legalize the sale of Game, which now existed illegally to a very great extent, as would appear from the accounts which he had received from several poulterers in London. One poulterer sold, in one year, no less than 22,490 head of Game; another sold to one customer 224 head in one season; another sold to one customer, in one week, 111 head of Game.

SIR J. SHELLEY contended that the passing this Bill, would only have the effect of depriving gentlemen of all their game. He moved an Amendment, "that the Bill be read a second time on the 1st of September."

The Bill was opposed by Lord Deerhurst, Mr. W. Peel, Mr. Brougham, &c.

LORD CRANBOURNE replied.—The House divided—For the second reading, 82—Against it, 60.

TUESDAY.

In a Committee on the County Courts Bill, the blanks were filled up with the words, 10*l.* as limiting the jurisdiction of the Courts, instead of 15*l.* as at first proposed.

The Irish Joint Tenantry and the Shannon River Bridge Bills were passed.

SIR J. NEWPORT asked the Secretary for Ireland whether he intended to bring under consideration the question respecting the misapplication of public money by the Corporation of Dublin.

MR. GOULBURN said, the subject was about to become the object of legal enquiry and adjudication.

MR. SYKES presented a petition from certain Merchants and Ship Owners of Hull, complaining that their property had been seized and confiscated by the customs upon a plea of their ships having contraband goods on board, although they were wholly ignorant of the circumstance.

MR. HERRIES was not aware of any cases of abuse having occurred under this system. The subject should be attended to.

MR. F. BUXTON moved, that the Silk Weavers of Spitalfields should, on Monday next, be heard at the bar, by their Counsel, against the Silk Bill now before the House.—Ordered.

A petition was presented by MR. HUME from the Labourers in the Dock-yards, complaining of the low rate of wages.

SIR B. MARTIN said, the petition should be attended to.

MR. HUME (on the suggestion of several Members) consented to withdraw his motion respecting the laws affecting artizans leaving the Kingdom till next Session.

MR. ABERCROMBIE brought under the consideration of the House the case of William Murray Borthwick, in order to allow the Lord Advocate to defend himself. Borthwick and a person named Alexander had been partners in a Newspaper, in Glasgow, called The Glasgow Sentinel. Alexander entered into an engagement to purchase Borthwick's share of the property, which he was to pay for by instalments, and if such Bills were not paid on arriving at maturity, then Borthwick was to have possession of his property again. Alexander failed to keep his engagements, and Borthwick, the Magistrates of Glasgow having decided in his favour, again took possession of his property. The Hon. Member then stated the various altercations and proceedings which ensued consequent on this step of Borthwick's; the part he, said, were laid before Mr. Hope, and all the proceedings of Mr. Hope had been approved by the Lord Advocate, and against which had shaped his motion. The fact was, that Borthwick had remained in prison from the 4th of May till the 4th of June, and had been confined an entire month after the prosecution had been abandoned, viz. the 25th of May, Borthwick had been served with notice of trial at the instance of Alexander, on the same day notice of trial had been served on Mr. Stuart. On the 10th of June Mr. Stuart had been acquitted, and 48 hours after Borthwick was discharged. Thus, after a charge of felony had for months been suspended over the head of a man, he had been discharged without trial and without examination. The Hon. Gentleman concluded by moving a Resolution, that the conduct of the Lord Advocate, in the case of W. M. Borthwick, had been unjust and oppressive.

The LORD ADVOCATE replied to the charge made against him in professional capacity. The Learned Lord entered into a statement of the duties of the Advocate Deputes; with the conduct of Alexander he had nothing to do. The case had come before Mr. Hope in the course of his official duty. The magistrates had ordered the papers to be produced. The Learned Lord then went on to shew, that Borthwick had broken open the desks in the office without any authority, and had delivered the papers to Mr. Stewart. A considerable time before the duel, Mr. Stewart with Sir Alexander Boswell, Mr. Hope had given a distinct opinion that the conduct of Borthwick called for the animadversion of the public prosecutor. He (the Lord Advocate) contended that Mr. Alexander was the sole owner of the property, consequently, the abstraction of the papers constituted the crime of theft. It had been by his own express desire that Borthwick had been taken to Edinburgh; and the moment he left the carriage, the handcuffs had been taken off. He was confident that the House would agree that Mr. Hope had acted from a proper motive; and, as himself he had only to state that he had disapproved of the prosecution.

Mr. J. P. Grant and Mr. Kennedy supported the motion.

Mr. Home Drummond and Lord Binning defended the Lord Advocate.—The House divided. For the motion, 96—Against it, 161—Majority against the motion, 65. Adjourned.

WEDNESDAY.

Petitions were presented from New Malton, Cumberland, against Slavery; from the Western Isles of Scotland against the duty on Barilla; from the Linen Manufacturers of Arbreath against the Linen Regulation Bill; from certain Silk Weavers against the Spitalfields Act; from the County of Surrey complaining of the Poor Laws.

LORD MILTON presented a Petition from the Manufacturers of Leeds praying for the repeal of the duty on Wool as a means of increasing Foreign Commerce, the duty he was convinced did not tend to increase the price of English Wool.

MR. T. WILSON agreed that the duty had not the effect anticipated.

MR. CURWEN thought a strong case should be made out before the duty was repealed.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER observed that the tax was one of revenue, and was not intended to benefit the Agricultural interest. It produced 400,000*l.* last year, and was increasing in amount; but he should not oppose the repeal provided the prohibition or exports were to be taken off.

MR. DICKENSON supported the Petition.

Sir C. BURRELL hoped that in disposing of this question the interests of the Agriculturalists would not be forgotten.

MR. PHILLIPS was convinced the duty had affected our manufacturers. He denied that its continuance benefitted the Agricultural class.

Sir M. W. RIDLEY regretted to find an opinion still existing that taxes should be laid on the agriculturists to relieve the manufacturer or on the manufacturer to relieve the agriculturist. He hoped a subject of this Petition would receive further consideration: he regretted desirous of calling the attention of the House to the mischief done to our wool growers by the practice of importing woollen rags.

MR. HENRY GREY BENNET was authorized to advocate the repeal of this tax—the agriculturists were too ready to benefit themselves at the expense of others. By preventing the ingress of foreign wool they injured the manufacturers of coarse wool, who in consequence could not work it up with the fine foreign.

MR. WODEHOUSE observed, that the Noble Lord who presented the petition was the first to propose the duty.

MR. S. WORTLEY said, if he supported the petition it was not in consequence of any change of opinion as to the expediency of permitting wool to be exported, for he thought it would be most imprudent to export our raw material, the coarse wool, which was, in fact, the staple of the country.—The petition was laid on the table.

LORD MILTON presented a similar petition from Huddersfield. With respect to this tax, he believed it had been imposed with a view to two objects—a revenue, and as a measure to quiet the country gentlemen. Now, as regarded the latter point, it was evident they did not stand in need of protection, for the Hon. Member for Somersetshire by withdrawing his resolutions respecting agricultural distress, had shewn that the pressure in that quarter was not so great as it had been.

MR. HUSKISSON said, that the Laws prohibiting the exportation of Wool were a disgrace to the Statute Book, as in some cases it was made felony to send out a single fleece. They must be repealed.

MR. DICKENSON presented a similar petition from the Woollen Manufacturers of Scotland. These petitions were laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

MR. JONES complained of a paragraph in the Morning Chronicle referring to the Debate of the preceding evening, which he conceived was a breach of the privileges of the House. The paragraph was thus:—"The small majority of six last night in a House of 18 perfectly decisive of the sentiments of Members with respect to the abominable proceedings in the case of Borthwick. An analysis of that majority will be a curious exhibition. We should like to see the names; they must be most valuable partisans; they are, evidently not men to stick at a little." The Hon. Member wished to exculpate himself from being a partisan.

MR. SECRETARY CANNING observed that nothing could be more irregular than for any Honourable Member to defend his vote when making a complaint of a breach of privilege; but he would suggest to the Hon. Member not to press his motion. No doubt gross reflections were made in the newspapers on individual members—but the paragraph in question was one of a general nature, and it would be highly inconvenient to re-debate the question on which the House Member voted.

MR. JONES withdrew his motion.

COL. WOOD moved several resolutions regarding the Settlement of the Poor, in substance, stating, they had given rise to great and expensive litigations. The Hon. Member said the evil of the present system was great. On looking to the statute of Elizabeth, the origin our Poor Laws, he saw much to admire; but he saw not a word as to the Settlement of the Poor. The evil was requiring a man to have holding or a tenantcy of ten pounds a year to gain him a Settlement. If this law were retained, the poor tenants ought to be exempted from the rate. The expense of litigation on this subject was 300,000*l.* a year; and the number of appeals was 4700. He should propose resolutions, stating that the present law, in this respect, was highly oppressive in its effects upon the poor. This was the system he wished gradually to ameliorate. He wished to do so by making residence the only test of parochial relief. The Hon. Gentleman then detailed instances of hardship arising out of removals of paupers. He then proposed, as one step of amendment, that 15 years residence should form a bar to removal. The Honourable Gentleman then cited the opinions of Mr. Pitt, who had stated in 1798 the necessity of amending the Poor Laws, observing that as these laws had departed from the original spirit of the institution in the time of Elizabeth, their utility had become impaired, and their benevolent purpose frustrated. When he found such opinions as those coinciding with his own, he trusted the House would lend a favourable ear to his Resolutions.

LORD ALTHORP thought that the measure of his Hon. Friend would tend to increase the expence of litigation.

MR. SCARLETT was friendly to the proposed measure. By the present law a man might be removed after a residence of thirty years, and the expence of litigation was increased by the length of residence. The act of the 13th and 14th of Charles II. was the great source of misery of the poor. If the laws of removal were abolished, poor man would have no claim for relief except in the case of sickness or age, as 15 years must elapse before the measure could take effect.

Mr. Lockhart was decidedly of opinion that the alarming state of the poor laws called loudly for some remedy; but he had doubts whether the plan of the Hon. Gent. would not increase the expence of litigation from the glorious uncertainty both of the law and of the fact.

Mr. Secretary Peel suggested to the Hon. Member to withdraw his motion for the present to give time for discussion, and then move for leave to bring in a Bill. He should certainly give his support to such a course, for there was so much of admitted evil in the system of Poor Laws, that any plan which could call the serious consideration of Parliament to the subject must be advantageous. The motion was then withdrawn.

Mr. S. Rice moved, that the House should resolve itself into a Committee on the 9th of June, to take into consideration the Report of the Commissioners of Inquiry into the Courts of Justice in Ireland; and into the conduct of the Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland. Agreed to.

Mr. J. Williams moved for a Committee to enquire into the arrears of business in the Court of Chancery, and the appellant jurisdiction in the House of Lords, and the causes thereof. The Hon. Member observed that ten years ago it had been stated that the delay amounted to a denial of justice, and that remark now applied with double force. The Hon. Member then enumerated a variety of cases in which delays had occurred, and complained of the great expenses incurred by suitors, in attendances upon the Court, waiting for the opinions of the Lord Chancellor. He allowed the distinguished person at the head of the Court to possess great learning and ability, and he never failed of delivering a right opinion at first; but the lamentable case to the suitors was, that he never decided upon that first opinion. One great cause of complaint was, that cases, from this cause, were set down for "exceptions and further directions," "pleas and demurrers," "rehearings and appeals," which, since the passing of the Act appointing a Vice Chancellor, had, in most of these instances, nearly doubled. Much of that abuse had arisen from the appointment of the new branch of the Court. In 1813, the number of causes undecided had been 141; in 1822, 161; at present the rehearings and appeals amounted to 135, being within six of the whole number at the appointment of the Vice-Chancellor in 1813. The suitor was now driven by compulsion to an inferior Judge, and the whole of what were named "term causes" were heard before the Vice-Chancellor. That was also the case with "exceptions." For the last five years, the Lord Chancellor had only decided at the rate of five causes a year.—For the eight years preceding 1822, the Vice-Chancellor had heard 14,560 motions, while in the same space of time the Lord Chancellor had heard 5155, little more than one-third. All his statements were authenticated by vouchers that he held in his hand. On this subject Solicitors were afraid to give information; and no wonder, as it was probable, that even what he said in that House might not be forgotten. The facts which he had stated he would prove at the Bar of the House by Barristers and others; and after a patient and impartial investigation, then was the time to legislate. This applied as well to Scotch Appeals as to Causes in England. All these things required inquiry, in order to ascertain whether the fault lay at Head-quarters, or in some recent Law Appointments. The next cause was, that of the Vice Chancellor's Court, the institution of which the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs opposed with all his wit and argument; and even the present Vice Chancellor opposed it, saying, with prophetic wisdom, that it would occasion every suit in Chancery to be heard twice over; namely, once before the Vice Chancellor and next before the Lord Chancellor. From the illness of the Judges in the Court of Exchequer, that had been able to give no assistance to the Court of Chancery; and as to the handmaid of the Court of Chancery, that of the Rolls, there was not now one-fifth of the business actually done as when that great Magistrate, Sir W. Grant, presided in that Court. He concluded with enforcing the necessity of enquiring into all these allegations of grievances.

The Attorney-General said, the Hon. and Learned Gent. had greatly mistaken the value of the Vice Chancellor's Court, which had proved of great advantage to the Public. He suspected that his information was derived from an office which he knew; and that he was not in possession of it when he gave notice of this motion. It would have been undoubtedly fairer if the Noble and Learned Person, who had been attacked, had been informed of the cases that were to be brought against him. The Hon. and Learned Gentleman had not mentioned the many Lunatic Petitions which the Lord Chancellor had heard. In 10 years Lord Hardwicke heard 400 Lunatic Petitions, while the present Chancellor, in the same time, had heard 2404; nor had he mentioned the Bankrupt Petitions heard in Chancery and Vice Chancery, which, since 1820, amounted to 5813. Since the establishment of the Vice Chancellor's Court there had been 2838 causes heard before him. Did his Honourable and Learned Friend mean to say that all these were re-heard before the Lord Chancellor? Whatever objections there might be against this Court, no man could say that it had not greatly assisted the Public, in getting rid of business in Chancery. The number of Bills in Chancery were very nearly doubled since the institution of the Vice Chancellor's Court. It was no imputation on the Court of Exchequer that two of its Judges were absent from illness, which was unavoidable, at one time. As to the case of the Master of the Rolls, it was true the Master of the Rolls had been unfortunately ill, but no delay had taken place in the business of that Court; and therefore the complaint was unfounded. With respect to the motion generally, he should oppose it, as the Hon. Gent. had not made out any case.

Mr. M. A. Taylor considered the subject an important one. In 1811 he moved for a Committee on the same subject, against the inclination of Mr. Perceval, and obtained it; and that Committee were told how they must vote, and cautioned on that head, for they were told, if they voted so and so, the Lord Chancellor would resign the Seals, and they voted accordingly.—The next year he found the majority against him. On expressing his surprise to a friend on the other side on this subject, he was told, "Oh, do not be surprised, your motion is opposed by the Chancellor, and if it was carried, he would resign; and you know he holds the Administration together." The House would therefore see in what a situation they stood when they came forward to attack this great Colossus who bestrided the Government thus. At present the suitor was robbed; he cared not whether by the system, or by the indecision of the Chancellor—still it was a subject requiring inquiry.

Mr. Denman said, there were many individuals who still wished to express their opinion on this important subject, and he would, therefore, move that this debate be adjourned.

There were two or three divisions on the question for adjourning the debate until Friday, or for six months; but at length the original question for adjourning till to-morrow was carried by a majority of 61.

THURSDAY.

The Bill to regulate the Gas Light Companies was read a first time.

Petitions were presented from the Nobility of Clare County in Ireland, praying for a sum of money to be advanced to the Linen Board of Ireland, on account of the depressed state of trade; from Lewes complaining of taxation.

Colonel Wood obtained leave to bring in a Bill to regulate the settlement of the Poor.

In a Committee on the London Bridge Bill, Mr. Alderman Wood moved a Resolution for granting a sum of money from the Consolidated Fund for defraying the expence of rebuilding London Bridge; which, after a few observations, was agreed to.—Report to-morrow.

The Sale of Game Bill was ordered to be reported on Monday.

The House resolved itself into a Committee on the Irish Court of Chancery Act; when Mr. Goulburn moved Resolutions for regulating the salaries and giving compensation to officers whose salaries were taken away or reduced by the Acts recently passed.

Mr. Abercrombie presented a petition from Inverness, praying that the House would pass the Bill for regulating the Trial by Jury in Scotland.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Goulburn, in reply to a question from Mr. Bernal, said it was his intention to bring forward the remaining Irish Estimates on Monday.

Mr. Denman presented a Petition from the Proprietors of Mail and Stage Coaches, complaining of certain provisions in the Sale of Game Bill, which were calculated to entail on them, though innocent of any intent to act contrary to law, heavy penalties. The Hon. Member declared himself favourable to the principle of the Bill, but must protest against many of the details, and to declare that he could not agree to this Bill.

Mr. Bernal and Mr. Henry Grey Bennet agreed in the sentiments uttered by the last speaker.

Mr. S. Wortley observed, that coachmen and guards of mail-coaches were the greatest encouragers of poachers in the kingdom.

The Petition was ordered to be printed.

Mr. Denison presented a petition from certain Merchants of London, Importers of Barilla, praying for time to dispose of their present contracts, it being understood that Government intended to raise the duty from 5l. 5s. to 11l.

The petition was supported by Lord G. Somerset, Mr. Bernal, Mr. Ricardo, &c. and the petition was ordered to be printed.

The House resumed the debate respecting the business in the Court of Chancery.

Mr. Denman supported the motion for appointing a Committee. The Hon. Member denied that any charge was intended against the Noble Lord at the head of the Chancery Court—it was the system that was objected to, the evils of which were extensive. The property in the hands of the Court amounted nearly to twenty-three millions! Mr. D. stated several cases of hardship arising from delay—in one a suitor had died of a broken heart—in another no judgment had been given, although the case had been before the Court thirty-one years. He did not believe the Lord Chancellor was so much given to doubting as some thought. On the question of expunging the name of the late Queen from the Liturgy, the Noble Lord had no doubts. On other questions connected with the trial of the Queen, though many doubts had been started by the Counsel, the Learned Lord had no doubts whatever. A case had been made out which it was impossible for the House to resist. Had the Vice-Chancellor been gifted with the same faculty of doubting, the arrears of business must have been tremendous, and the expense unequalled.

Mr. Courtenay observed, the attack by the last Speaker had not been made on the delays of the Lord Chancellor, but on the whole of his judicial character. The Hon. Member contended that the increase of business in the Courts was the cause of the delay in giving judgments. At present there were 360 causes for hearing before the Chancellor and the Vice-Chancellor. From January 1822, down to the present month of June, the number of bills filed had been 3527. From 1817, the number of causes disposed of before the Master of the Rolls had been 1179, and the arrear was only 61. When his Learned Friends complained of the delay of the Learned Judge, they ought to recollect, that part of that delay was to be imputed to themselves, from the time they occupied in their speeches. From the charge of deliberation in his decrees, the Chancellor, he believed, would not wish to retreat.

Mr. Abercrombie believed it would be generally admitted, that there was a certain infirmity in Lord Eldon's intellectual character, that intercepted the effect of those great talents that all allowed him to possess. He was ready to admit that there were some lunatic petitions which occupied much time and attention in their consideration; but by far the greater number scarcely took up any time at all.

Mr. Wetherell was not disposed to go into a Committee until they had some plan or data to go upon. He contended, that the ratio of appeals from Sir J. Leach to the Lord Chancellor was not greater than those from the Rolls, when the judges Lords Alvanley, Kenyon, &c. were Masters of the Rolls, and generally, that the whole business in Chancery had greatly increased within these few years. He could mention a singular fact; and that was, that there never had been but one of his decrees in Chancery reversed by appeal to the House of Lords.

Mr. Scarlett had thought that the Court of Chancery, from its very nature, was one of delay, and of complete repose, and therefore it was that his Hon. and Learned Friend opposite loved it. He must remind the House that this was not an attack upon the Lord Chancellor, but on the Court of Chancery. Upon this account he should vote for enquiry.

Mr. Brougham had the highest respect for Lord Eldon; in all his intercourse with that Noble Lord he had always experienced the greatest courtesy. In saying this, he spoke of Lord Eldon as a lawyer and as taking especial care to draw a line between Lord Eldon as a man and as a politician. The Hon. Gent. then took a review of the facts which had come out in the course of the debate, and contended, that a case had been made out, by which it appeared that a system of mal-administration existed in that Court, which operated as an evil upon the people of England. He then adverted to the retirement of Sir W. Grant, and to the conduct of his successor, of whom he spoke in terms of the highest respect, who was an honourable and excellent man, but it some how or other happened that he made but an indifferent Judge, and the consequence was, that all the business of the Rolls fell off. From the Returns laid before the House, it appeared that in 10 years there had been 100 Irish appeals, in 50 of which the Lord Chancellor of England, aided by Lord Redesdale and the other Lords, reversed the sentences of his brother Chancellor in Ireland.

The Solicitor-General defended the Master of the Rolls, who had, up to the period of his severe illness, discharged the duties of his office with attention. The attack of the Hon. Member on the Lord Chancellor of Ireland was equally unfair. Indeed, though some of the Hon. Members disclaimed personality, still their speeches were made up of it. He opposed the motion.

Mr. Secretary Canning observed, that he believed himself and the Speaker had been the only persons who had heard the debate from the commencement to its close. If the Vice Chancellor's Court was an evil, it did not follow necessarily that the cure of the evil would be the demolition of the Court; as, to borrow an illustration of a late Right Hon. Friend of his, if a man broke his leg by falling out of the window, the cure would not be effected by throwing him in at the window again.

Sir F. Blake was in favour of the motion.

Mr. Williams replied.

The House divided—For the motion 89—Against it 174—Adjourned at 3 o'clock.

FRIDAY.

Petitions were presented from Cumberland, complaining of agricultural distress; from the publicans of Manchester against the Sale of Beer Bill; from Cardiff against the Coal Duties.

On bringing up the Report of the Committee for advancing monies to the City of London for rebuilding London Bridge, it was stated, in answer to Mr. Hume, that 150,000l. was to be advanced in aid of the work; 10,000l. the first year, and 20,000l. every succeeding year for seven years.

Mr. Hume thought favours of this kind ought to be extended to all other parts of the kingdom.

In a Committee on the reciprocity of Duties Bill, Mr. Huskisson moved a resolution for effecting the objects of the Bill, as between this country and other commercial states. The resolution was opposed by Mr. Robertson. It was supported by Mr. Ellice, Sir J. Coffin, Mr. Ricardo, Mr. T. Wilson, Mr. C. Grant, &c. and agreed to.

Lord Milton gave notice that he would, next Session, move to repeal the Sale of Game Bill.

The English Catholics Bill was ordered to be read a second time on Tuesday, and the Sale of Beer Bill on Monday.

On the question for going into a Committee on the Tithe Composition Bill, Mr. Dominick Browne objected to the appointment of arbitrators and assessors, and the power given to the former of increasing the value of the livings one-third.

Mr. Dennis Browne censured the policy adopted towards Ireland, particularly the tithe of agistment, and agreed with the last speaker in objecting to the power given to the arbitrators.

Mr. Abercrombie, Sir J. Newport, and Mr. Wetherell entertained similar sentiments. The latter Hon. Member said, it would furnish a plausible ground for a similar Bill in the case of Church property in England. He opposed going into the Committee.

Mr. Secretary Canning thought the Bill would be a great boon to Ireland, as at all events the cure for the evils which the Hon. Members complained of might be found in the Committee.

Colonel Barry said the compulsory clause would spread dissatisfaction in Ireland.

The House went into Committee. The clause for regulating the awards by the commissioners was amended by giving the right of appeal (from those who paid 5l. a year in tithes) to the Lord Lieutenant in Council.

Colonel Barry objected to the clause enabling the Lord Lieut. to appoint an umpire in the event of the parties disagreeing.

The clause was opposed by Mr. S. Rice, Mr. Banks, Mr. V. Fitzgerald, (who moved to omit it) Mr. Wetherell, Mr. Grant, Sir N. Colthurst, &c. &c. at length the Committee divided.—For the Amendment, 39.—For the Clause, 84—Majority 45. The Clause was agreed to.

The Chairman reported progress, and leave was given to sit again on Tuesday.—Adjourned till Monday.

The most brilliant and extensive display of India stripes and Swiss chintzes, damasks, tabbaret-, moreens, &c. at a reduction in the prices of at least one-third. MILES and EDWARDS'S system being so generally known and so much encouraged by all the principal Nobility and Gentry, they have only to repeat, that nothing shall tempt them to forfeit their great reputation by deviating from it. In fitting up drawing and dining room curtains, beds, &c. families have an opportunity of effecting a most important saving (equal, in many instances, to one half) in consequence of the extraordinary difference between the prices of this entirely new stock, and the terms obtained by other establishments for the same articles, manufactured at a time when they must have cost double their present value. LETTERS on ENGLAND. By the COUNT DE SOLIGNY. "The Count de Soligny is, we conjecture, cousin-german to Don Manuel Espriella; and indeed he has taken so little pains to disguise himself, that we imagine we run no risk of offending the author by the peep behind the curtain which discovers him in the character of an intelligent Englishman, who gives us, under the name of Victoire Count de Soligny, as much agreeable information and acute criticism as Mr. Southey conveyed to his countrymen in the guise of the Spaniard."—Museum.

CARWIN and other AMERICAN TALES. By C. B. BROWN, Author of Wieland, Ormond, Arthur Mervyn, &c.—Also new editions of

2. ORMOND, an American Tale, 3 vols. 18s.

3. WIELAND, an American Tale, 3 vols. 18s.

"The work before us possesses striking and powerful claims to attention. The events which it relates are of a kind wholly removed from the ordinary train of novels; and the writer seizes, with a sort of magic grasp, the feelings which he is desirous to call forth or to control. The terrific sway of superstition over a vigorous but perverted mind, is most ably and forcibly depicted in the character of Wieland. Upon the whole, we have perused this novel with great interest, and recommend it very strongly to those who are in the habit of reading works of this description, or who love to have their nerves agitated by the terrors of romance."—Critical Review.

ANNALS OF PHILOSOPHY.—Edited by Mr. Phillips.

THE ANNALS of PHILOSOPHY for JUNE, contains, among other articles, the following:—Mr. James Crichton on the Maximum Density of Water; Dr. Forchhammer on a Salt composed of Sulphuric Acid, Peroxide of Iron, and Ammonia; Sir W. Congreve on Gas Light Establishments, and on the comparative explosive force of Carburetted Hydrogen Gas and Gunpowder; Professor Cumming on the Developement of Electromagnetism by Heat; Dr. Williams on the Practicability of an Operation for Phthisis Pulmonalis; Professor Oersted on Schweigger's Electromagnetic Multiplier; Mr. Phillips' Analysis of the Native Sulphate of Iron and Alumina; Mr. Brooke on the Crystalline Form of Artificial Salts; Analytical Account of Professor Barlow's Essay on Magnetic Attractions; Proceedings of the Royal Institution and Geological Societies; Various Scientific Notices, &c. &c.—London: printed for Baldwin, Cradock, and Joy.

☞ Notwithstanding the great number of Competitors which the success and high reputation of the Annals of Philosophy have induced, it continues to be pre-eminent for the value and numbers of its original articles; while the frequency of its publication renders it the most desirable work in Britain for the immediate communication of the discoveries made by her distinguished philosophers.

HEBREW GRAMMAR, WITH POINTS.

☞ An attempt is now made to remedy a deficiency which has long existed in works of this description, the almost utter omission of Syntax; while in no language, perhaps, is this department of Grammar of such paramount importance.

POULTRY, PIGS, MILCH COWS, AND BEES.

Just published, price 6s. 6d. in boards, with a coloured frontispiece,

A PRACTICAL TREATISE on Breeding, Rearing, and Fattening all Kinds of Domestic Poultry, Pheasants, Pigeons, and Rabbits; including also an interesting Account of the Egyptian Method of hatching Eggs by artificial Heat, with some modern Experiments thereon: from Memoranda, made during Forty Years' Practice.—By BONINGTON MOUBRAY, Esq. Fourth Edition with Additions on Dressing, Feeding, and Managing Swine.—Milch Cows for the Family Dairy,—and Bees.

"Mr. Moubray's little Book on the Breeding, Rearing, and Fattening, all Kinds of Domestic Poultry and Pigs, is unquestionably the most practical work on the subject in our language. The Author's aim seems to have been to avoid scientific detail, and to convey his information in plain and intelligible terms. The conveniency of a small poultry yard,—for two pigs, with a breeding sow,—and a cow for cream, milk, butter, and cheese,—in an English country house, appears indispensable; and to point out how these may be obtained at a reasonable expence, seems to have been Mr. Moubray's object. By adopting the plan of his Work, any family may furnish their table with these luxuries at one-third of the price they are obliged to pay at the markets; and the Farmer and Breeder may render it the source of considerable profit."—Farmer's Journal.

CAREY AND LEA'S GEOGRAPHY OF THE WESTERN HEMISPHERE.

Just published in One Vol. 8vo. illustrated with several coloured Maps, Charts, and Views, price 18s. in boards,

THE GEOGRAPHY, HISTORY, and STATISTICS of AMERICA and the WEST INDIES; exhibiting a correct Account of the Discovery, Settlement and Progress of the various Kingdoms States, and Provinces of the Western Hemisphere, to the year 1822. By C. CAREY and I. LEA, of Philadelphia. London: Reprinted with considerable Additions relative to the New States of South America, &c. &c. for Sherwood, Jones, and Co. Paternoster Row.

"The Publication before us contains by far the most valuable condensation of American geography, history, and statistics, which has issued from the Press. It is constructed on a comprehensive and excellent plan; the maps, charts, and plates are numerous and well executed; and when all the modern information required by the changes and revolutions on the New Continent are taken into the account, we are free to say that this volume is a very complete illustration of the important matters which it embraces. Either for instruction or reference it is calculated to be a standard work."—Literary Gazette, March 29.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

The very sensible letter of B. has been received, and will receive every consideration.

A correspondent states, that the pavement of the Poultry has been under repair for a protracted period, and considers the delay in its completion to arise from negligence somewhere, and begs us thus publicly to notice the fact.

We have received several complaints from the neighbourhood of Tavistock-square, against a person connected with the erection of the new Pancras Church, stating, that at a party given by that person's lady, the cushions, chairs, and even lamps, were borrowed from the Church, to ornament and enlighten her dwelling.—We forbear to mention names, but as we consider the charge one of extremely serious importance, we think THIS will be sufficient to induce an explanation of the case by the parties themselves, to whom every justice shall be done by us, if they are able to exculpate themselves satisfactorily.

X.B.'s suggestion of a Dress Ball, upon a similar scale of magnificence to that given for the distressed Irish last season, is very good, as far as improving the briskness of trade—but we are not prepared to say how the funds arising from admission money could be justly and usefully distributed.

Various letters on the subject of the wine trade have been received, and are under consideration—we shall notice them in our next.

G.G. tells us that the DUKE OF SUSSEX did not rise when he presented CORBETT with his silver medal. We agree with him—he fell considerably.

We could not help smiling ourselves at the paragraph which stated that the Dean and Chapter of Westminster had kindly permitted a tablet to be set up in the Cloisters to the memory of poor BARTLEMAN, upon receiving a fine of twenty guineas. We appreciated the consideration, but for the soul of us we could not discover the kindness.

Our acknowledgements are due to our loyal friends at Kidderminster.

Our friend in the TEMPLE will see that we have taken up the subject to which he alludes.—A SPORTSMAN also will find that we have not been idle.

The West Indian Proprietor must stand over.

We must decline any correspondence on the subject of the long letter from Cambridge.

We are sorry not to have room this week for the letter of our friend L.S. from BIRMINGHAM.

We have the highest respect, the warmest affection for Christ Church, and when we alluded to the coarseness of the language used by a certain set of young men at present and of late belonging to it, we alluded to that which is too glaring and evident to be qualified by the letters which we have received on the subject—it is from a sincere regard for the high character of that College, and from a conviction of its superiority, that our solicitude for the maintenance of that character and superiority arises.

We will not fail to attend to the subject of FRED. FAIRPLAY'S letter.

A.X.—the letter from Oxford—MR. GREEN'S statement—the history of the Will—MISS MACAULEY'S histrionic work—KITTY CLOVEN'S verses—Lines to MISS T.—DELIA—OLD STUMP—WILKES'S Ghost—and the Ode to the Chairman of the Doncaster Quarter Sessions, must stand over; and we must request our remaining correspondents to accept our thank thus—want of room precluding the possibility of replying separately to every one.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, JUNE 8.

THE KING left his palace in Pall Mall yesterday evening, at twenty minutes before six, for his cottage at Windsor, and we rejoice to state HIS MAJESTY appeared in excellent health and spirits.

HUMBUG has been in high force during the last week in all parts of the metropolis, and the places thereunto adjacent; our attention has been, however, directed to graver subjects, and as we cannot make our paper larger than it is, we must content ourselves with recapitulating the things which strike us as uncommonly amusing.

First of all, a Meeting for the relief of the Spaniards was holden at a tavern, of which the chair was taken by MR. HENRY HUNT. Several resolutions were moved by a MR. BEASTLY, and the President commenced the collection of funds to ensure the triumph of liberty,—thus taking the financial concerns of the Spaniards into his own hands, leaving the military affairs of that high-minded nation to the charge of the renowned WILSON.

We are happy to state, that the Chairman himself went the full length of contributing one pound one shilling—a servant maid, at Newington, subscribed two shillings and eightpence halfpenny, and a respectable old clothesman, near Whitechapel, offered two musquets and a toasting-fork to the fund.

If any thing, however, were wanting at once to mark the ardour of English enthusiasm upon the great occasion, and the high estimation in which WILSON is held in his own country, it might be found in the fact, that upwards of six pounds three shillings and ninepence halfpenny was actually subscribed to buy that hero a sword; the contributors believing that when a man is turned out of the English army his weapon is absolutely taken away from him.

Then there was a Meeting holden of the "FRIENDS of a Monument," at which more nonsense was talked than ever before was uttered in a like period. And—our readers will hardly believe it—one of the horses intended to draw the triumphal car of his late Majesty in the trophy, was actually brought in a waggon and stuck in a parlour at the tavern for the subscribers to look at, in order that they might see if they liked it, and to enable them to judge of the general effect of the monument by casting their eyes upon a detached bit of it.

Then MR. PARKINS and MR. COBBETT have quarrelled about BYRNE, the hackney coachman, whom, in addition to various other improprieties and misdeeds, PARKINS charges with being a Papist:—the correspondence, or at least PARKINS'S letter, is quite of a piece with the ordinary literary effusions of the Whig-Radicals of the present day.

The Irish Tythe Commutation Bill was again before the House on Friday—LORD NUGENT'S Bill will, we suppose, glide onward with equal facility—a Parliamentary investigation into the conduct of the Court of Chancery was sought to be instituted, but the motion was negatived by a great majority—the DUKE OF GLOUCESTER attended a meeting of the Society for the improvement of Prison Discipline, and was at MRS. W. CAMAC'S in the evening—several duels have been fought, and one or two prevented, during the week. The Lord Mayor has given two dinners since last Sunday—ALMACK'S was extremely full on Wednesday—and there was a raffish masquerade at the Argyll Rooms on Thursday; on Friday, we believe, the Horticultural Society dined together, a report of which we expected to have received for to-day—and the Opera last night was just as crowded, just as hot, and just as delightful as it was the Saturday before.

We find, also, that PRINCE LEOPOLD has had another party at Marlborough-House; that LORD COWPER rode over to call on LORD and LADY GOWER, at Richmond, yesterday forenoon; that MRS. MITCHELL'S dinner went off extremely well, and that LADY CHARLOTTE DUNCOMBE'S fête was PERFECT.

WHIG stupidity and Whig scurrility never were more beautifully exemplified than during the past week, in the remarks made by the CHRONICLE and TIMES upon the motion of MR. ABERCROMBIE, with respect to BORTHWICK, and by the TIMES on another subject.

That MR. ABERCROMBIE, after the Ferrybridge campaign of last year, should have renewed the discussion, seems strange; that he was "backed" by all the "pack" is not in the smallest degree surprising; the able speech of the LORD ADVOCATE, however, settled the business; and in spite of the learned opinions of the Honourable Chairman of the Doncaster Quarter Sessions, the question was disposed of as most Whig questions are.

Out of the debate, however, has grown the brilliant specimen of pure Whiggery, to which we now call public attention.

The CHRONICLE on Wednesday made the following observation upon the division:—

"The small majority of six last night in a House of 198 is perfectly decisive of the sentiments of Members with respect to the abominable proceedings in the case of BORTHWICK. An analysis of that majority will be a curious exhibition. We should like to see the names; they must be most valuable partisans; they are, evidently, not men to stick at a little."

This remark MR. JONES, a Member of Parliament, on Wednesday night noticed, and after some little discussion, pronounced the Editor of the CHRONICLE to be a mighty respectable gentleman!!! and there the matter dropped; upon which, the CHRONICLE, knowing that the Session draws to a close, and quite aware of the power of conciliation, gets extremely impudent, and flies into gross abuse of the Honourable Members who even hinted at punishing his impertinence of the preceding day. But how does the CHRONICLE preface these remarks?—read, gentle countrymen—

"It is by no means uncommon to find persons who have shrunk from the vindication of their honour on proper occasions, laying anxious hold of the slightest pretexts for quarrel afterwards, in order to retrieve the character they have lost! Calculation, too, sometimes leads to a display of spirit; for, the person who has peaceably allowed himself to be kicked several times, is naturally led to suspect that the display of a little heroism would not be attended with more unpleasant results. Thus it often happens that poltroonery and foolhardiness follow each other in the same individuals: and that distempered activity takes the place of an almost lethargic passiveness."

Considering all the circumstances of BORTHWICK'S affair, in remarks on the discussion of which the CHRONICLE had used the offensive language, and gotten into a scrape, we cannot imagine any thing more purely stupid than these opening observations. Whatever the Whig party in London may think of their beauty and soundness, the Whigs of Edinburgh will, we should think, hardly relish them. We, who know the inveterate dullness of the present CHRONICLE, cannot help thinking that the people who do it have been hoaxed again, and that some Tory wagling has favoured them with the article in order to get them into a scrape with my LORD ROSSLYN, the Radical sinecurist, and the rest of that portion of Scots Whigs, who are more than the οἱ πολλοι, interested in the subject.

Stupidity, however, is to be overlooked in a Whig, else how would Whigs live; but wanton, gratuitous, unprovoked scurrility, attacks upon private character, unnecessarily and basely made, must not be suffered to pass unnoticed, even in the degraded columns of QUEEN CAROLINE'S hireling, the TIMES.

What we allude to is, a gross and calumnious assault upon SIR WALTER SCOTT, couched in terms which shew at once the vulgarity and ignorance of the writer.

It seems that at the celebration of the Dinner on the Anniversary of MR. PITT'S birth-day, SIR WALTER SCOTT, in the course of the evening, gave, as a toast, "the Memory of SIR ALEXANDER BOSWELL;" and one would have thought, considering the terms of intimacy upon which that lamented gentleman lived with the whole party, the admirable qualities which he possessed, the talents and accomplishments with which he adorned and delighted society, that so to have done was not to do any great crime:—the toast was given simply as we have stated it, without any allusion to the manner of his death, and without any such prefatory words as the CHRONICLE has used in the passage we have quoted above. SIR ALEXANDER BOSWELL was an honourable gentleman, and an esteemed friend of the assembled company, and SIR WALTER SCOTT gave his memory as a toast. Now, hear the TIMES:—it is impossible, without quoting the grossness of the cockney, to imagine how far radical inveteracy will carry men who have such a paper as the TIMES in their pay:—

"It has generally been only with banter and jest that we have hitherto spoken of the PITT-dinners. Such celebrations have been ridiculous, and the public has smiled at them; the actors, no doubt, have chiefly had their own interests in view; and a little expression of contempt may, therefore, have mingled itself with the smile. But a PITT-dinner has taken place at Edinburgh, which one individual has thought proper to mark with a peculiar CIRCUMSTANCE OF ATROCITY! The principles upon which THE BEACON newspaper was conducted are well understood—principles of private slander rather than public discussion. It is also well known that one unhappy gentleman fell on account of the indiscreet exercise of his talents in that publication, in the way most conformable to its spirit and genius. Will it be believed, that the memory of that individual was proposed by SIR WALTER SCOTT, the poet, to the meeting, and drunk by him and them, as a public toast? What could have been the meaning of reviving the recollection of so afflicting an occurrence, amidst the hilarity of a convivial assembly and the excitement of wine? Surely, even SIR WALTER SCOTT'S friends must blame him for touching such a chord on such an occasion. Surely the Chairman must have started when he heard the toast proposed. We, who have no peculiar respect for the public virtue of SIR WALTER, and who think his talents, considerable as they are, prodigiously over-rated, may speak with more severity of his conduct. It is impossible to deny him the merit of supplying, by his verses and novels, the idle of his day with topics of conversation, if not with lessons of improvement. But does this knack, or talent, or whatever it may be, entitle him to violate the rules prescribed by Christian society for the oblivion of irremediable evils to revive subsiding grief, and to re-kindle expiring antipathies in real life? We cannot help addressing him in the words which Junius used to probably as long-lived a genius as this poetic Baronet: 'Vagabond! keep to your pantomimes; meddle no more, thou busy incendiary.'"

To generalize for a moment—can anything be more contemptibly ridiculous than the principle which the Cockney attempts to establish?—The drinking of "memories" may or may not be an absurd custom, but does it originate with SIR WALTER SCOTT?—Is not the memory of MR. FOX drunk at every Whig Radical dinner?—Are not the memories of all eminent persons allied to the assembled party drunk in a similar manner?—Did anybody ever consider the Whigs as committing a "peculiar act of atrocity" in drinking such memories?—Assuredly not; and upon the broad question of memory-drinking, certainly an honourable gentleman, who neither gambled, nor cheated, nor lived in open adultery, nor swindled his creditors, nor betrayed his party, must be considered quite as much entitled to such a mark of respect as the Right Hon. CHARLES JAMES FOX.——But we sneer at the hypocrisy of the TIMES, which asks the meaning of "reviving the recollection of so afflicting an occurrence, amidst the hilarity of a convivial assembly, and the excitement of wine."

To an editor who knows nothing of society this may appear somewhat strange and barbarous, but as healths and memories are generally drunk in "convivial assemblies," and moreover in wine, (except indeed in Printing-house-square, where the journeymen politicians regale themselves upon Whitbread's Entire, or Fowell Buxton's XX), and as under no other circumstances such an event could have occurred, we are not prepared to admit the ATROCITY of SIR WALTER SCOTT'S conduct on this particular occasion. But putting aside this part of the question for the moment, let us refer to SIR WALTER SCOTT'S virtue and talents, at which this creature presumes to cavil.

To the extraordinary dissemination of learning, through philanthropic institutions, charity schools, hospitals, and other receptacles for the lower classes, is owing, the power exercised by the TIMES, to deteriorate from the literary merits of SIR WALTER SCOTT, and to land to the skies the beastly trash of BILLY HAZLITT—to which, by the way, our attention has been drawn by a puff from the fellow himself, in the Cockney journal, and of which we shall give a full, true, and particular account, in our next number—and the moment SIR WALTER SCOTT puts a work before the public, he becomes subject to public criticism. All this is quite right—it is one of the few advantages of the boasted liberty of the press; and when the Cocknies can write down SIR WALTER SCOTT, or write up BILLY HAZLITT, we will admit the Cockney lecturer, who is not able to write English, to be a greater man than him, to whom only SHAKSPEARE himself is, of British geniuses superior.

But when SIR WALTER SCOTT'S conduct is seriously called atrocious, we must pause a moment—when he is charged with violating rules prescribed by CHRISTIAN society, in a paper which advocates HONE—praises MOORE—flatters the Atheist SHELLEY, and puffs the LIBERAL—we must inquire how SIR WALTER has thus offended—we must ask how SIR WALTER "re-kindled expiring antipathies in private life"—by drinking the memory of SIR ALEXANDER BOSWELL?—the antipathies which every honest heart feels for the Scotch Whigs need no re-kindling—they ARE NOT EXPIRING—for, so long as virtue and honour despise and abhor meanness, perfidy, baseness, hypocrisy, evil speaking, slandering, fawning, crouching, and lying—so long will the real and affectionate adherents to the KING and CONSTITUTION, the CHURCH and STATE, abhor, despise, and abominate modern Whigs and Radicals of all sorts and conditions; but above all, the modern Whigs of Scotland, who have every vice of the vile school to which they belong, without one solitary redeeming virtue.

The TIMES newspaper, however, has no "peculiar respect for the public virtue of SIR WALTER,"—really—that must be extremely disagreeable to poor SIR WALTER—we should be vastly surprised if it had, and still more surprised if it had the smallest notion what public virtue meant—a hireling which has been by turns the creature of LORD WELLESLEY—of the STOCK EXCHANGE—of the BOURBONS and of—oh dear, oh dear—ALDERMAN WOOD and his partner—the principles of which are such, that at a meeting of its proprietors, to consider which side it should take, upon that great Lady's affair, it was carried, by a majority of one, that it was a better speculation to write her up than to write her down—that such a paper should have no peculiar respect for the public virtue of any man, is no more wonderful than that its Editor should not admire Champagne—it has no notion of the flavour; but when the animal addresses the words of JUNIUS (who, upon the occasion alluded to, must have been a SPY as well as a LIBELLER) to SIR WALTER SCOTT, the creature forgets himself.

What does he mean by vagabond?—to GARRICK the application was ludicrously absurd, for to call every actor a vagabond is almost as ridiculous as to style every attorney a gentleman—does the wretched garretteer know to whom he addresses himself when he calls SIR WALTER SCOTT vagabond? No—he is as ignorant upon this as upon all other subjects; but SIR WALTER SCOTT stands guilty of offences which must be visited with what these oafs call severity.

First, then, SIR WALTER SCOTT is a GENTLEMAN—secondly, SIR WALTER SCOTT is a TORY—thirdly, SIR WALTER SCOTT is a Christian, a man of honour, and of principle—exemplary in all the relations of life, a kind husband, a fond father, an affectionate friend—but beyond all these, his talents, his all-powerful genius have raised up myriads of envying reptiles, who hum their little hour away around him, and then perish unnoticed upon the mud and carrion which first engendered them.

To SIR WALTER SCOTT we need only say, that in the same article wherein he is called vagabond—incendiary—atrocious and unchristian—PITT—WILLIAM PITT is designated as "MR. PITT, the author of the Cock-boats,"—with all his splendid talents, with all his integral respectability, with all his private virtue, SIR WALTER SCOTT cannot feel offended by being vilified in such company.

AT the time when "Agricultural Distress" was in every mouth, and execrations loud and deep were heaped upon MR. PEEL for his "cash payments" bill, we ventured to depict the state of national distress in a couple of papers which were denounced by the starched and rigid portion of the public as wanton and unfeeling.

About that period, SIR THOMAS LETHBRIDGE, amongst others whose immediate interests were temporarily hurt by the circumstances of the times, fell into despair and predicted utter ruin to the country, starvation to the people, and general confusion, consequent upon the plenty with which we were blessed, and the universal comfort which diffused itself in every direction—still we could not choose but smile, perfectly certain that time only was wanting to bring all things to their level. If we were asked what length of time, we should candidly confess that we did not anticipate the pleasure of reading such a paragraph in the newspaper, as that, which follows, in so short a period as twelve months—it is worthy of being quoted, as the best answer to the grumblers and growlers, in which this blessed and happy country is so extremely fertile.

"AGRICULTURAL DISTRESS.

"SIR T. LETHBRIDGE took this opportunity of formally withdrawing the notice which he had given, and which stood for Thursday next for submitting to the House certain Resolutions on the subject of Agricultural Distress. He begged to state that he was induced to a tax on the recommendation of several Gentlemen, whom he knew to be among the warmest friends of the Landed Interest, and who, when he first announced it to be his intention to bring forward such a motion, had engaged to give him their zealous support. HE WAS HAPPY TO STATE, THAT THE CIRCUMSTANCES UNDER WHICH HE WITHDREW HIS NOTICE WERE VERY DIFFERENT FROM THOSE UNDER WHICH IT HAD BEEN GIVEN, and he hoped those connected with the land were justified in looking forward to a great alleviation, if not to a TOTAL EXTINCTION OF THAT DISTRESS, which had so long been the subject of just complaint, and of anxious alarm."

Report of Parliamentary Debates, June 2, 1823.

We congratulate the country upon this favourable exposé; but we still must do our duty and check the full torrent of happiness which thus flows from the lips of SIR THOMAS LETHERIDGE into the ears of the nation. Agricultural Distress has by no means subsided—it has indeed changed its character, but that is all; on our table here at this moment we have letters from the very persons who were last year ruined by the low prices, complaining in equally strong terms of the rapidly increasing value of corn, and expressing the most serious apprehensions lest it should shortly arrive at the price fixed as a standard for the importation of foreign grain; they really seem to be more alarmed at the present prospect than they were at that of last year, when if men had listened seriously to their moanings and groanings they would have expected to find by this time London and the Watering-places empty, and the county gaols all over the kingdom filled with farmers and their families—a supposition as completely the reverse of the existing truth as may be.

WHATEVER respect we may feel for the motives of those who, tenderly alive to the ferocity of English law, seek to lessen the frequency of crime by softening the severity of punishment, we cannot but regard with jealousy those gradual innovations of established rights—that insidious removal of the barriers which divide the aristocracy from the lower classes of the country, and that universal desire of positive change and probable improvement, which most strikingly pervades a certain class of our legislators in the present age of philosophy and enlightenment.

No measure, perhaps, ever was brought into Parliament possessing a greater share of superficial plausibility, than that now pending with respect to the Game Laws; but we cannot forbear from looking deeper than the surface; we would call the attention of those to whom our interests are confided in the House of Commons, to its real effect —the positive consequences resulting from it, and the probable advantages which it will confer upon the people, for we will act with even-handed justice in considering the question, and we have no hesitation in declaring that IF we believed the bill likely to answer any of its proposed purposes, we would give it all the approbation its lenient tendency deserves, and advocate with all our power any measure likely to render less frequent the murderous rencontres of poachers and keepers, or the weighty imprisonments with which game-stealing is at present visited.

We are, however, prepared to shew that the effect of this bill will be to increase the crime of poaching, and therefore, upon a principle of humanity, ought to be opposed, while its innovating character renders it extremely dangerous and inexpedient in a political point of view.

Nobody can presume to say that the Game Laws, as they exist at the moment, do not require alteration and modification, and we are quite ready to allow LORD CRANBORNE every just praise for the worthy feelings by which he was actuated when he moved for a committee to enquire into the subject—he doubtless had marked with an eye of commiseration their potent effect, and read their condemnation in the crowded jail and teeming work-house—hardly, indeed, could he have looked upon the scenes which every county exhibits, and not feel how ill-proportioned to the nature of the offence was the measure of the punishment.

We give LORD CRANBORNE full credit then, for the measure as far as humanity goes—upon such grounds it is quite worthy the consideration of the British Parliament, but it is equally a duty of Parliament to examine and see whether it will effect its object, or whether it will not, and then having ascertained how far the desired end is attainable, to weigh that proportion of success against the dishonour—mischief and innovation, of which its warmest advocate, cannot deny this measure to be full.

First, then, how far will it effect its benevolent object? Let us turn to the Report of the Committee—what do we find there—so far from any strengthened hopes, any indulged prospect of success—we find that "the Committee does not hold out that poaching can be entirely put an end to by this or any other measure;" and, in order, completely, as we feel it, to annihilate every expectation of amelioration to the present subjects of solicitude, the Committee recommend "a more summary remedy against the depredations of persons who are in the habit of trespassing upon the lands of others in pursuit of game."

Is it not clear that, by legalizing the sale of game, we increase the temptation to procure it? Assuredly—and having so increased the temptation and multiplied the purchasers, in order to meet the natural consequences we render the preservative law more summary, and upon this position we are called upon to support a Bill, upon the ground that a decrease of crime and a diminution of punishment are deducible from it.

This, nobody, we should suppose, could seriously be brought to do who had common intellects or common independence, because, if the supporters of the Bill declare that it will not decrease the number of poachers—as they must declare—where is the humanity of the measure—what are its merits?

Why is a new law thought necessary?—Because the old Game Laws lead to unwarrantable consequences;—but then say we, since all the severe enactments are modern why not repeal them? The repeal of the severe enactments, say the supporters of the Bill, would leave us defenceless. We have another way of meeting the question—we have ascertained that "the laws which prohibit the sale of game are, in point "of fact, systematically evaded at present, and that the "poachers have nearly an exclusive trade!"—The murder is out!

The poachers can and do sell game, and gentlemen cannot, and do not sell game. This, it seems, is considered wrong, and therefore the Bill proposes to give to the gentlemen a monopoly of the sale of wild animals and birds, so as to enable them openly to come to competition in the market, and undersell the poachers. From this rivalry will result the profusion of game in the markets, and partridges will become as common and as cheap as chickens, and thus, in a civil manner, the gentry of England will drive the thieves from the poulterers' shops.

By this enactment, the landlord and the sportsmen will bring themselves down to the level of the poacher—huckster is to be stamped on their brows, and venality to be grafted on their hearts—and all because, do what we will, the poacher will still have his share. Poaching and punishment must exist so long as a hare runs in the island, or a law remains to protect it; and it seems rather too much even for modern humanity, to destroy every wild animal in England to prevent a few of them coming to market through the hands of the poacher—it is as if an act of Parliament were to pass to prevent MR. HOPKINS, of Islington, from wearing a gold watch lest he should thereby tempt MR. BILL SOAMES to pick his pocket.

With respect to the nature of the support the Bill has received, let us see what it is—one Honourable Member observed, that "any change must be for the better," and gave his vote in favour of the measure—another Honourable Member supported it as a first step towards amendment—the Noble Mover of the measure drew his justification from the report of the Committee—whilst a fourth gentleman declared the present game laws so bad that to permit them to continue another year would be to sanction a system of crime and bloodshed, and therefore he supported the new bill.

Allowing then, these arguments and motives their full weight—what do they establish?—Not that the proposed measure is expedient or good, but that some alteration in the law is required. This we admit—and therefore, so far we agree with the Honourable Gentlemen who supported the Bill, but when we find the inefficacy of the Bill as a positive good distinctly admitted, we cannot but recur to the positive evils of innovation and national injury with which it teems.

It has been stated to the House, that, by the law of nature, and the Common Law, wild animals are the property of him who is able to kill them; and throughout the whole matter they are spoken of as merely so far beneficial, as they contribute to the food of the people. It is not so—by the law of nature they would belong to the land that nurtured them; by the Common Law, they are comprehended under the general right of the Sovereign to all beasts and fowls of the forests, and other animals feræ naturæ. He from time to time vested this right in his subjects, by the grant of free warren; and by such means the Barons of ancient time often possessed a right of game over extensive territories. At the conquest these rights were vested in the followers of WILLIAM, by the grant of manors. The beneficial enjoyment, however, (save in these privileged places) soon became the privilege of him who owned the land.

And so we find it, when game first became an object of Parliamentary protection, in the reign of RICHARD II. This primitive Act states that, inasmuch as certain idle and disorderly persons "went a hunting game on Sundays, when good "folks were at church," it was found necessary to make the killing of hares and "other GENTLEMEN'S game" punishable by one year's imprisonment. Thus, by its language, confirming, while it gave the sanction of law, to that exclusive right, which, by the law of nature, every owner of land enjoys over the wild animals upon it.

In HENRY the VII.'s time this restraint was somewhat relaxed—and the consent of the owner rendered sufficient authority to kill game. But we find it made penal in the reign of ELIZABETH to kill in the night time—and a general prohibition in the 1st of KING JAMES to kill or sell game, under fine and imprisonment—excepting (as to the right of killing only) certain qualified persons. In the VIIth of the same reign, killing at unlawful times, incurs a heavier penalty—and persons qualified by property "are permitted to kill between Michaelmas and Christmas." Next afterwards came the Act of 22 and 23 CHARLES II., empowering Lords of Manors and certain others to appoint keepers, and specifying the qualifications to kill game now in force.

The Acts afterwards enacted are somewhat tyrannical—4 and 5 WILLIAM and MARY, giving an authority to game-keepers to search—and to resist in the night time—and prohibiting the burning of heath and other covers for game—and followed by 5 ANNE, prohibiting the carriage and sale of game, and keeping of guns, dogs, &c.; also empowering Lords of Manors or keepers to seize game on the persons of unqualified trespassers.

Thus progressively were the bands of protection drawn tighter and tighter—till they became what they now are—or rather till the 57th of the late King, when the system was completed with a fatal act, empowering the seizure of armed persons by night, and extending the punishments to transportation.

From this glance at the nature and history of the Game Laws, it is evident, that the right to kill game is an original privilege of property—the sole object of protection in the laws that were passed—and remaining in its primitive purity to this very day. That the power to sell game, forms no part of such right, was never known in England—and that every tendency towards it has been instantly checked by statutes. And that a power to sell, cannot now be interwoven with the right to kill, without uncalled-for innovation, and essential injstice.

In this realm every class has its peculiar privileges;—they sweeten the toils of our existence, and endear to us the institutions that protect them. The rights in question we have shewn to have been interwoven, from the earliest ages, with the noblest privileges of property. An attachment to manly diversions is inherited with the lands, and infuses into their possessors a spirit of freedom and independence; not only are landlords led to reside oftener and longer together on their manors and estates, and the country benefited in this way, but the very feelings that endear the manly diversions whence they spring incline to that spirit of patriotism on which the national character so greatly depends.

At this moment too, when the influence of landed property lies at a low ebb, and the public taste is inclined to luxurious and artificial life, rather than to the manliness and simplicity of country recreations;—it were doubly injudicious, doubly dangerous, surely, to diminish that influence and precipitate that taste.

It appears to us that as a temporary measure of alleviation, the repeal of 57 George III. might advantageously be resorted to—a delay in the present bill will give time for deliberation, and for the construction of a bill which may be actively beneficial in its effects, and purely constitutional in its principles, and most of all will it allow our representatives to pause before they sanction a measure which reduces the sports of the field to a profitable trade, and degardes the country gentlemen to the station and calling of hucksters.

POPERY.

The outcry which has been raised against Orange Lodges, and Orange Committees, may be founded in justice—we hope it is; for we have seen men, for whom we have always entertained the highest respect, and whose characters, for honour and integrity, have hitherto been of the first class, disowning and disavowing them, with expressions, if not of harshness and dislike, at least of such finely qualified approbation as to "damn with faint praise," and with conduct so marked by hostility, as to leave no doubt of the powerful change which has taken place in their avowed opinions upon the subject.

The system of damping the ardour of loyalty, does not appear to us either profitable or generous; but, as we know, and as MR. CANNING has said, that the object of this conciliating tone is to prevent the triumph of any party, we hoped and trusted that the Orangemen would bear the cold and repulsive return which has been made to their exertions in the cause of the KING and CONSTITUTION, with a feeling of the justice of that principle which sought to soothe all animosities, and heal all differences; but when we find, that the threatened and approaching extermination of Orange Lodges and Committees, is only the signal for the constitution of POPISH LODGES and COMMITTEES in England, we are awakened from our fond dreams, and see nothing but the very converse of MR. CANNING'S expressed wish—nothing but a triumph for one party, which triumph, it is not only our constitutional duty to prevent, but which the common duty of self-preservation calls upon every Protestant Englishman to oppose with all his heart and soul.

From the morning papers of Tuesday, we quote the following account of a Meeting of Papists—for what purpose, the paragraph itself will explain:—

"Yesterday a numerous Meeting of the English Catholics took place at the Freemasons' Tavern, FOR THE PURPOSE OF FORMING AN ASSOCIATION to forward the views of the body for the attainment of CIVIL and RELIGIOUS LIBERTY, the DUKE OF NORFOLK in the Chair. Amongst those present were, the EARL of SHREWSBURY, the Honourable —— PETRE, SIR GEORGE JERNINGHAM, MR. BUTLER, and several of the most respectable of the Catholic Clergy.

"MR. PETRE, after some observations upon the claims of the Catholics, and the privations, which, notwithstanding the progress of civilization, they still endured, moved, that AN ASSOCIATION BE FORMED for the FUTURE REGULATION and MANAGEMENT of THE AFFAIRS of THE BODY, with the view to attain the above mentioned object.

"MR. LOUGHNAN seconded the motion, which, after some conversation, was carried unanimously. By this resolution, those Lay Catholics who subscribe a guinea annually became members of the Association, and the Catholic clergy become members without subscription.

"A COMMITTEE of FIFTY was appointed for the purpose of communicating with the friends to the cause, and suggesting WHATEVER MIGHT TEND TO ADVANCE it with the legislative body.

"MR. BLOUNT (the Secretary) took occasion to draw the attention of the meeting to the great efforts made by the Catholics, when the liberties of England were in danger from foreign invasion. It was, he observed, a proof of the goodness of the cause, that those who were most interested, courted, nay challenged discussion. He instanced the conduct of the Catholics in Canada, who stuck to the English Crown in the American war, and were the only distant subjects of the King who were favourable to that cause, which, no doubt, they seconded from mere loyalty. He called upon the English Catholics TO SUBMIT TO NO COMPROMISE, and congratulated them upon the gradual disappearance of that bigotry, which looked upon the sin of thinking for themselves as a sin never to be forgiven.

"MR. KELLY moved, that the Committee should not mix up any political subject with the great question affecting their rights.

"This motion was opposed by MR. MAHON, and REJECTED BY A LARGE MAJORITY.

"After the appointment of the Committee, and a vote of thanks to the DUKE OF NORFOLK, the meeting separated."

What, we ask, does such a meeting, at the moment when MR. PEEL has told us Orange Associations are forthwith to be abolished, mean?

We call upon MR. PEEL—for that he has left us we will not even yet believe—we call upon him, upon whom the hopes of the Protestants were fixed, to think—to consider of the conduct to be pursued at this moment. If conciliation be the order of the day, so long as the present Administration exists, conciliate we must; but for GOD'S sake—for the sake of the country, and its most venerated institutions, do not let us conciliate our enemies by oppressing our friends. Let any man read the extract we have made, and compare the loyal, moderate, and Constitutional conduct of Orangeism—of subjects true and faithful to their King, and professing the religion of their country, with the open, daring, and insolent avowal of these Papists, who not only declare a determination NOT TO COMPROMISE, but who resolve, by a large majority, TO MIX UP POLITICS with the question of their CLAIMS. What is this? We ask again—what does it mean?—The blindest, the most bigotted, cannot fail to interpret the language thus held. And will the country patiently endure that such "associations," such leagues, such lodges, (if ye will) as this, shall be founded and formed by the Papists in England, at the very moment when associations of Protestants, for the protection of their Constitutional rights in Ireland, are denounced and to be exterminated as illegal?—NEVER.

It would hardly be believed by those, who, in the strength of their political faith, have fallen into the conciliatory system, that the conduct now observed towards the Irish Papists is the same which was proposed to be acted upon by MR. FOX in the year 1806.—In a letter to RYAN!!! dated Feb. 18, of that year, that great Statesman advises him to postpone the Catholic petition till the following Session, and adds—

"Measures are actually taking by the removal of LORD REDESDALE, MR. FOSTER and others, to shew the good intentions of the ministry towards your body. Steps STILL MORE IMPORTANT will be taken to manifest our disposition, by DOING FOR THE CATHOLICS ALL that is consistent with existing bad laws, by giving them in substance what they have now only in words, a right to be in the army, to become corporators, &c.; BY A CHANGE OF JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, whose conduct has been notoriously oppressive. I HOPE TOO by some ARRANGEMENT ABOUT THE TITHES, and, in fine, by giving all the share in the government of your country that we can give."

It will be observed that the justices of the peace have been recently changed, and that the arrangement of tithes is making at the present moment.—See next what MR. FOX proposed to effect by such measures:—

"The effect of these measures will be partly to make the Catholics of the lower order more satisfied, partly to enable them to come with additional weight and strength when they AGAIN assert their claims."

These were the objects MR. FOX had in view, by changing the Justices of the Peace, and by making an arrangement about tithes. What does MR. FOX say in continuation? Why so fearful even was this WHIG Minister—this avowed friend of the Papists, of the consequences of publicly pressing these points by petition, that he concludes his letter in these words:—

"If we are beat, which we certainly shall be, and if the fall of the Ministry should follow, which may be the case, you run the risk of a Ministry being formed on the avowed principle of defeating your claims, and thus you would put all hope further off than ever."

This WHIG Ministry did attempt to carry its points—the nation was roused—the Ministry DID FALL—and a Ministry WAS FORMED on the AVOWED PRINCIPLE of defeating—not the claims, but—the baneful innovations of popery. Where are we NOW? or are there persons to be found who will consent to adopt, as a mode of preserving the tranquillity of Ireland and maintaining the Constitution of the empire pure and inviolate, the rejected measures of "All the Talents," which drove the Whigs eternally (as we once thought) from the administration of affairs in England.

We repeat emphatically the last words of the Whig Minister's letter, and leave them for the serious consideration of those who may feel themselves most affected by them.

THEATRICALS.

In the absence of novelties on the stages of our playhouses, we think a "peep behind the curtain" may be somewhat amusing; and although we hold that public journalists have no right to meddle with the private conduct of actors and actresses, (however satisfactory the evidence of their personal respectability may be) yet, when private subjects are intimately connected with public amusements, we feel justified in letting our readers into the secrets of the Thespian Cabinet.

MRS. CHATTERLEY, an actress of great merit, advertised her benefit, as appointed, or fixed, or whatever the new-fangled term is, for Thursday, or Wednesday, or some day in the last week (which, is quite indifferent to the main point) and announced LISTON as one of her performers upon the occasion.

It must be understood that the fact, that LISTON was worldly-minded enough to go and take fifty pounds per week at Drury Lane, when Covent Garden offered him twenty-four, has given so much umbrage to the Committee at the latter theatre, that it was thought necessary to ascertain whether the said LISTON had entered into a new engagement with ELLISTON for the next season, before permission would be given for him to appear for MRS. CHATTERLEY'S benefit on Thursday, or whenever it might happen to be. Upon LISTON'S confession that he had renewed his engagement at Drury Lane, not on the same terms but with a still higher salary, the Covent Garden council prohibited his performance in their house.

We have heard certainly that the mode of LISTON'S retreat from his old ground, was the part of the affair most irksome to those with whom he had always lived upon terms of the closest intimacy; that he did not give those friends the refusal of himself—that they would have been ready to come to his price if he had waited a little, and so on; but those who have heard of dogs and shadows—two stools—and a variety of other distracting proverbs, will perhaps think LISTON quite justified in having secured the bird at Drury-lane, instead of beating about the bush at Covent-garden. Be this as it may, the matter of offence was certainly one of private life, and ought not to have interfered with public service.

How would the world go on if this were the case in general society?—Did not we while waiting with the JERSEYS and BROUGHAM at Montem, see MR. CANNING walk in, and shake hands with that Honourable and Learned Gentleman, to whom he had given the lie in the most unceremonious manner a few evenings before?—Have not we seen here, within a little week, the "great Duke" in company, rallying a great Radical upon his nervousness in attacking him in the House of Lords?—It is part of the great scheme of society—why we ourselves, provided HENRY GREY BENNETT has good Champagne and St. Peri, and has them well iced, should not make the least scruple in running down to WALTON and taking our outlet with him any day he chose to fix, if he would promise to have a pleasant friend or two to meet us, and not talk politics.—LISTON'S affront—if affront it has been—was an affront to a private acquaintance. Surely that private feeling should not have excluded LISTON from fulfilling a public duty, for which he was to have been paid.

As a matter of worldly conduct, the thing was childish, and petulant, and spiteful, and little, and not what we should have expected from persons of whom we think highly.

As a matter of good government in the theatre, it certainly shows very little discrimination, because as MRS. CHATTERLEY, who never has done any thing that we have heard of to irritate the Magnates of the playhouse, is the real sufferer, the punishment falls in the wrong place.

As a matter of right, we maintain that the prohibition is illegal, inasmuch as when MRS. CHATTERLEY hires the theatre in Covent Garden at a rent, we believe, of upwards of two hundred guineas for a particular night, she has clearly a right to produce whatever performer or entertainment she may think fit, provided it should not be (as who could suspect that it would) contra bonos mores, or likely to endanger the safety of the house, or the patent, or excite the anger of the licenser of "Cent. per Cent." and "Giovanni in London," and we are quite certain the house being virtually hers, that she might have brought forward ROMEO COATES, COLONEL BERKELEY, the WAPETI, PETER MOORE, MR. HAYNES, in his pea-green coat, or any other interesting rarity of the day, and that no human being could have legally interfered to prevent it.

We are sorry the thing has happened—sorry for the lady who loses her benefit; sorry for a committee which loses its temper; sorry for LISTON who loses his fee; and sorry for the public who lose an opportunity of seeing him act once more in the season than they otherwise could.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR—I am induced to trouble you with a few observations on a notice I have lately received, dated "New River Office, 1st of March, 1823." It commences in the following terms, viz.:—

"The New River Company have hitherto abstained from raising their rates, from the ruinous depression to which they had been forced to submit during the late contest in those districts where it chiefly prevailed. They have done so, in order to give full time for settling the question between the public and the other Water Companies, upon the rise of rates by those Companies, amounting to about 25 per cent. beyond the rates of 1810."—The notice then goes on to state, that the question was examined and reported upon by a Committee of the House of Commons; that the "evidence and Report are before the public, and that no further interference of Parliament has taken place."

Now, Sir, if this is not a direct insult upon the public, and upon common sense, I know not the meaning of words. They have waited until the question was settled between the public and the other Water Companies, have they?—Truly, I always thought, until now, that the question was settled between themselves and the other Companies—they having bargained with the other Companies to withdraw altogether from certain extensive districts, leaving the public and them to settle the question (to use their own words) as they best could: and certainly there is a very short way of doing it, nothing more than to submit to whatever rate this conscientious Company may choose to extort, or cut off your pipes, and go without water, or fetch it from the nearest pump you can find. They care nothing about a few hundred customers, more or less, now; they have bought out the London Bridge Water Company, and of course have undertaken to supply all their customers, who will, no doubt, soon feel the benefit of the change.

I lived myself near twenty years in one house, and that a large one, in the City, and paid to the London Bridge Water Works 11. 16s. per annum, for which I had a very ample supply of water laid on in several places, with much civility, and ready attention to all reasonable complaints. About nine years ago I removed into a moderate sized house (two rooms on a floor) in the Parish of St. George's, Bloomsbury, where I found I had to pay 4l. 4s. per annum to the New River Company, for a less supply of water, which I certainly thought a very high rate, you may judge then how great my surprise was on receiving the notice before-mentioned, which concludes thus:—

"The charge on your premises will be as under from Midsummer next.

"Charge of 1810 (of which I never heard before) - - -	£5 5 0
"Addition - - - - - - - - - - - - -	1 1 0
"Charge from Midsummer, 1823" - - -	£6 6 0

I am also informed by the same document, that "for high service" (high enough indeed!) "an additional charge of one-half is made," and "for service on the main a double charge." But I admit there is this great consolation added—that "it is optional with the parties to discontinue these services," and thereby put an end to such charge;" so that, as I before hinted, the public have this great advantage in their favour, that if they can do without water, the New River Company are so very considerate that they make no charge for it!—They seem to claim great merit for having waited patiently and quietly until the question was settled with the other Water Companies, and until they thought there was no danger of any troublesome interference by Parliament, before they began to give any hints of a trifling advance of 50 or 100 per cent. in their rates. They now think all is safe and snug—but they may yet be mistaken. A New Water Company may spring up when they least expect it, which would certainly meet with ample support and encouragement—in the mean time I deem it incumbent upon Parliament to call upon the Governor (or whoever is the proper officer) of the New River Company to lay before it a return of the amount proposed to be levied on the public by these additional rates; and, I trust, before many days pass over, some one of our worthy representatives in the lower House will move to that effect. TO JOHN BULL.

SIR,—The rapid march of our absurd policy in what is ridiculously called the abolition of the Slave Trade, seems in so fair a train of adding another wrinkle to our former gullibility, that I am induced to quote a passage from MAJOR DALE'S Essay on the History of England.

"In the peace between Spain and Great Britain (1713,) Spain "granted to us the benefit of the assiento: that term means that Great "Britain should supply the Spaniards with Negroes for a certain num"ber of years. Nineteen people out of twenty, I believe, think the "Slave Trade is abolished; but they are quite mistaken. The case "stands thus—We have passed an act which has in a manner shut the "door of Africa against ourselves in this article, therefore our Slave "Trade is lost, but the Slave Trade is not, because other Powers have "not done so. It it be true that the West India Islands cannot be "worked by Whites, and the Blacks that remained at the passing of "the act, it is in the line of possibility that foreign Powers may not "only pocket our cash, but laugh at us into the bargain."—P. 196, Edition 1809.

Now, Sir, permit me to ask you, has not this come to pass—have not the Spaniards and Portuguese gulled us out of near a million of money within these two or three years?—and have not these nations laughed at our stupid credulity? Certainly they have: yet still we are childishly expending our thousands and tens of thousands a year: to do what, Sir? To wash the Blackamoor white;—monstrous absurdity!

The Sierra Leone farcical humbug has passed over this country like a blight, and in its transit burst like a fire balloon;—no mortal has gained by the explosion, save a few discreet and oily Saints of the Tabernacle. Take an honest man's word for it, Sir, slavery has existed from the very beginning of the chapter—slavery will never be abolished by an Act of Parliament, because no Act of Parliament can effect an impossibility; a man might as well attempt to knock down Stone Henge with DR. EADY'S pills.

Allow me to remark, that exclusive of this drivelling hocus pocus, the vain attempt of this country to cram down the throats of other kingdoms her Methodistical nostrums is most impudent—most intolerably presumptuous. Our worthy ancestors, Sir, those wise and virtuous statesmen of the last century, would have cordially agreed with me in opinion; and whilst I have so much worth and wisdom on my side, I care nothing for being called a Cannibal or Raw Head and Bloody Bones by those of my countrymen whose minds have been gradually poisoned by repeated doses of quack medicines, insidiously administered by Methodists and Quakers. The disciples of FOX are well furnished with impudence, and very indifferently provided with talents or abilities, except the talent of being conspicuously ridiculous in their dress and manners, and disobeying the rules and Christian-like regulations of the State. There are no animals, Sir, which humbug the public more than Quakers and Cock Robins;—a Robin, instead of being a sweet dear little meek creature, is, for his size, the boldest and most savage bird that flies; a Quaker, under the mask of meekness, is the most impudent of the human species.

Enough has already been done to cause us to be laughed at for our folly. I trust more will not be done to rob the West India Planter of his property. Yours, SENEGAL.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR,—Having seen in your paper of the 26th of May last an advertisement headed "Posting," and addressed to JOHN BULL, I take the liberty of directing one of my circular letters to you; it may be of some utility to the public, as well as myself, to know it is my intention to continue the reduced price of Posting on this road, which is at 1s. per mile. I am sorry we cannot continue it all the way to London from Cheltenham, we feel a great loss in the absence of Mr. SCOONS, late of the Rose and Crown, Hounslow. It is very evident there now exists a combination to keep the price up at that place: many attempts have been made on this road to rise it, but I have opposed it, you find 10d. is charged on almost every other road but this near my residence; what, might be asked, is the reason? the answer is, it is too obvious to doubt, to oppose me and my business; only I have taken the liberty to state the particular facts, that you may, through the medium of your very liberal paper, make what use of it you in your wisdom may think proper.—With the greatest respect I remain your obedient and very humble Servant, WM. PAYN.

Sherborne Arms, Northleach.

P.S. We profess to run at 1s. per mile from the Roebuck and Mitre Inns, Oxford; the White Hart, Witney, and the Sherborne Arms, Northleach.

"POSTING AT 1s. PER MILE, BY WILLIAM PAYN, SHERBORNE ARMS, NORTHLEACH.

"W. PAYN respectfully begs to return his most grateful acknowledgments to his Friends and the Public in general, for the favours conferred on him since his entrance on the above Inn, and trusts, by unremitting attention, to be honoured with a continuance of their patronage and support, and in returning his best thanks, hopes that no stratagem resorted to by drivers or others not favourable to the reduced line of Posting, may be the cause of their being driven by his House.

"☞ The Sherborne Arms is the second Inn on the left from Cheltenham.

"W. PAYN was the first to reduce the Posting. In 1818 he reduced it from 1s. 6d. to 1s. 4d. in 1819 to 1s. 3d. in 1821 to 1s. 2d. and in 1822 to the present price, 1s. The Public will readily see the utility his spirited conduct has been to this road, and therefore feels himself conscious from the liberality he has hitherto experienced, they will not leave it unrewarded.—Cards of the line to be had at the Sherborne Arms."

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR—I am fully sensible that your efforts have long been fearlessly exerted in defence of the happy Constitution of this realm, and that your zealous endeavours have contributed not a little to promote the true interests of your country, as well as to shield deserving men from the unprovoked attacks of malicious calumny. It must surely have arisen from a press of interesting matter on your excellent publication, that a book on the affairs of Ireland, recently published by a Mr. Reid, surgeon in the service, has escaped your notice.

Even in animadversion, a critic ought to observe decorous expression; but, with regard to this mischievous and lying volume, it is not easy to keep to such a rule. Three-fourths of all the evils complained of in Ireland are produced by inflammatory representations—of the peasantry being plundered—reviled—every way abused, &c. when, in point of fact, their misery is produced by barbarous ignorance, superstition, iniquitous priestcraft, and the irreligious anathemas thundered against those thirsty souls that would look for water at the fountain of life—those misguided victims who would fain peruse the sacred Scriptures. Besides, the population of Ireland is overgrown, (from causes deeper than I shall for the present expose), and the wiser portion, the Protestants of Ulster, migrate in vast numbers every year, to avoid the pressure of their half-savage countrymen. With this important truth staring him in the face, this writer ventures to assert that a population so overwhelming is to be regarded as a blessing!

The author of "Travels in Ireland, in 1822," though an officer in his Majesty's service, and receiving his Majesty's pay, appears to have enlisted into a jesuitical faction, whose aim is to destroy the Protestant religion, and to establish in its stead the dark dominion of popery. His attempts, shame to say, have been aided by those versatile journals, the TIMES and MORNING CHRONICLE: such commentators are indeed worthy of such an author. This specious, jacobinical surgeon is not content with telling us, with egotistical calsomeness, how early he used to rise of a morning to pursue his monotonous journey, but he has thought fit to give free vent to his poisonous sentiments, and to drag into his common-place narrative a large share of vulgar personality.

The editor of the LITERARY GAZETTE, in his notice of this truly disloyal publication, has given the author a gentle castigation. It was left for a more noble hand to complete the punishment: and it is gratifying to observe that LORD ROSSMORE has condescended to take up the lash. His Lordship had been grossly misrepresented by MR. REID, in a case too with which his Lordship had no concern, that of a man of the name of Anderson, a vagabond "who had travelled through a great part of America in quest of a spot to settle on with his family," and by whose plausible story, as would appear, his Lordship's character was to be blackened in the foulest manner. His Lordship has very spiritedly come forward and repelled the calumny. Having contradicted MR. REID in the most direct manner,* and declaring his statement "an infamous falsehood" his Lordship, very properly, leaves him and his slanderous informer "each to his conscience."

It is such men as MR. REID, who, under the insidious mask of patriotism, increase the flame which they profess to extinguish. I shall not trespass on your valuable time with further comment on the motives by which this writer has been evidently actuated. It is lamentable to observe that he has profited so little by the religious principles in which he professes to have been educated.

From letters, which he publishes in every paper that will receive his trash, it seems that interrogation is his favourite mode of arguing; I will therefore take him on his own ground, and put a few queries, to which, if he have any value for his character, he will endeavour to reply promptly, though, "perhaps," it may cost him some trouble to find true answers, such as will satisfy the public.

At page 300, MR. REID says, "I had the honour of meeting the Bishop, DR. ELRINGTON, who manifested a desire to promote the object of my enquiries, for which I feel sincerely obliged," &c. Now, this was on the 10th of Sept. and MR. REID wishes his readers to believe that he was in the city of Limerick in company with the most respectable and venerable Bishop on that day. It is no very pleasant task to take occasion to doubt the veracity of a man whose education and rank ought to designate him a gentleman; but circumstances have lately come to my knowledge which a sense of justice renders it imperative to make known, in order to disabuse the public mind. I would, therefore, ask MR. REID solemnly—Whether he did not spend the whole of Tuesday the 10th of September, 1822, in the city of Dublin?—His memory will perhaps be assisted by asking further—Did he not that day take breakfast with MR. MILLIKIN, the bookseller?—Did he not, the same day, dine with the late DR. TROY, the PAPIST BISHOP?—And did he not, the night of that same day, perambulate the streets of Dublin with the redoubtable MR. O'CONNELL, the POPISH CHAMPION?

If an author can deliberately depart from truth in one case, the adage, "ex uno disce" applies: are the public not bound to doubt the assertions in every other? Has not MR. REID, by his evident apostacy and shameless writings, so disgusted his family that, on a visit subsequent to his "travels," not one of his friends in the north of Ireland would speak to him—not one would acknowledge him as a relation!

These queries might be greatly extended, but, I dare say, this worthy author has quite enough for the present: one remark only shall be added, that is—a more injudicious and ill-advised production has not, for a century at least, issued from the press.—I am, Sir, with great respect, your obedient servant, J. BLACKMORE.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR,—The public, I am sure, are much pleased with the notice you have taken, in your paper of last Sunday, of the very defective and dangerous state of the pavement of the carriage-way in Piccadilly, and I hope your observations will have the desired effect of attracting the attention of those Gentlemen of the Trust who have the direction of such pavement; but I believe it is not generally known that the public have power, under the statute 57 Geo. III. cap. xxix, commonly called the New Street Act, of enforcing these repairs; for, by sect. 6. it is enacted,

"That, if any person, being an occupier of an inhabited dwelling-house, situate in any parish in the metropolis, and rated to the poor at the sum of 50l., or two inhabitants rated at 25l. each, shall think any pavement in any street is in a dangerous state for passengers and carriages, it shall be lawful for such person, or two such persons, to prepare a notice, signed, and the place of abode, and describing the part of the pavements of any street which he or they may consider dangerous or defective for carriages, and requiring reparation, and to address such notice to the Surveyor of Pavements of the District."

By Sect. 7. "Every person being a Surveyor, to whom a notice is left of the dangerous and defective state of the pavement, shall forthwith inspect the pavement described in the notice, and if it really shall be in a dangerous state, or so very defective as to occasion serious inconvenience to passengers and carriages, and if the costs of repairing such defective pavement will not exceed two pounds, he shall cause such pavement to be repaired in three days after notice; and if it exceeds two pounds and under ten, then to be repaired in seven days; and in either of such cases the Surveyor may cause such pavements to be repaired by his own authority, and such pavement shall be paid by the trustees. But if it shall appear to the surveyor that the pavement described in the notice is really in a dangerous state, and that the costs of effectual reparation will exceed ten pounds, then the surveyor is to give notice to the Clerk of the Commissioners of Pavements within three days after such notice, who is to call a General Meeting of Commissioners, who are to consider such notice, and give direction for the effectual reparation within twenty-eight days, if the charge will not exceed 50l., and within six weeks if it exceeds 50l."

Sect. 8. "On neglect, a Justice may summon Surveyors, and order repair."

Sect. 9. "Surveyors neglecting to attend a Justice, or disobeying their orders, shall be fined, and shall be disqualified on a third offence."

I am, Sir, yours, &c. VIATOR.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH.

FRIDAY.—Thurlow v. Thurlow.—This was a plea of replication, to an action brought by the trustees of Maria Thurlow, under a deed of Covenant. Mr. Thurlow was to allow a maintenance to his wife; the husband's plea of replication was, that having separated from his said wife, she (Maria Thurlow) instituted a suit in the Consistory Court against her said husband for conjugal rights, and which was met by plea in bar, on the part of her husband, charging certain acts of adultery to have been committed by the said Maria Thurlow; and the sentence of the Consistory Court was, that the parties should be divorced a mensa et thoro.—The Lord Chief Justice observed, this was a question of too much importance for the Court to decide hastily, and directed it to be restored to the Special paper, in order to its being solemnly argued for the opinion of the Court.

CONSISTORY COURT.

FRIDAY.—The churchwardens of the parish of St. Mathew, Bethnal Green, were admonished to appear. In this parish great dissentions had arisen. A meeting was held at the customary time for the election of churchwardens, at which the rector was at the head of one party consisting of one hundred persons; but another party contested their right. The parties appeared last court day, one party having been proposed by the old churchwardens, and the other by the rector, who is represented to have presided at the last vestry; the question was, how the Court should act in this conflicting business. The following gentlemen were then called: Mr. William Henry Lenam and Mr. John Watson, presented by the old churchwardens; Mr. John King, and Mr. James Pasmmell, presented by the Rev. John King, the rector. Sir Christopher Robinson then informed them they were presented as churchwardens, and administered the usual oaths. They were told they must ultimately go to the Court of King's Bench.

On Wednesday a Court of Directors was held at the East India House, when John Baillie, Esq. took his seat as a Director, in the room of Joseph Cotton, Esq. who had disqualified. The following Commanders took leave of the Court previous to departing for their respective destinations, viz. Capt. William Manning, of the Thomas Grenville, and George Probyn, of the Minerva, for Bengal direct.

It is currently reported, that the long pending negociation between the British and the Austrian Governments on the subject of the debt of 18,000,000l. interest due to this country, is nearly brought to a conclusion.

Ascot races commence on Tuesday next, and continue the three following days. There are ten horses entered to run for the Oatlands.

At Bow-street, on Wednesday, Gotte, charged with setting fire to his house in Whitecross-street, in 1811, was fully committed for trial.—A very infirm old woman, who stated herself to be turned of fourscore, was charged with attempting to elucidate the events of futurity, or, in other language, with telling fortunes, contrary to Act of Parliament. She was committed to the House of Correction for a month.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, JUNE 3.—Telegraphic Dispatch.—" On the 30th May, which was St. Ferdinand's Day, his Royal Highness made a review of the troops, which produced a great sensation in the inhabitants of Madrid. The Grandees of Spain presented to his Royal Highness an Address of Adherence and Felicitation."—The non-official part of the Monitear announces that the Regency has appointed a Ministry, and that the army of Mina is pursued without intermission, and is dispersing (se debande) every day.—Marshal Davoust, Prince of Eckmuhl, died yesterday at four o'clock in the afternoon, after a long and painful pulmonary consumption.—If we may believe reports, says the Quotidienne, various changes are likely to take place in our Foreign legations.

The Monitenr contains the following communication from Madrid, dated the 30th ult.:—"The Regency has been installed. It has commenced its operations by the nomination of the Ministry—M. Vergas Laguna, formerly Ambassador at Rome, has the Department of Foreign Affairs; M. Garcia de la Torre, of Grace and Justice; M. Salazar, of the Marine; M. Erro, of Finance; Marshal San Frian, of War; M. Arnares, of the Interior. The Regency has named Lieut.-General Equia, Capt.-General of the Army; and M. de Camposacrado, Capt.-General of Castille."

Letters from Madrid of the 22d state, that three or four hundred Monks had succeeded in inflaming the multitude against the Constitutionalists, so that the pillage of the city would have been the consequence if the militia had not immediately taken up arms and attacked the rabble, of whom 500 were killed and as many taken prisoners.

MARSEILLES, May 15.—We have received news here, that the negociations between Persia and the Porte are broken off, because the latter absolutely refuses to cede the districts formerly belonging to Persia, and which it seized upon during the internal troubles in that kingdom.

MISCELLANEOUS.

On Tuesday the Duke of York visited the King. His Royal Highness also held a levee at the Horse Guards, which was attended by Lieut.-Gen. Hunter, Major-Generals Sir H. Douglas, St. George, Sir T. Dyer, Boswell, T. Brenen, Lord Blayney, and several other officers.

On Friday the King held a Court at his Palace in Pall-mall, which was attended by most of the Cabinet Ministers. The Bishop of Calcutta kissed hands on his appointment. His Majesty afterwards held a Privy Council, at which a new order was issued, prohibiting British subjects from entering into Foreign service.

Wednesday evening the Lord Steward, with the Marchioness, and Lady Elizabeth Conyngham, and a select party had the honour of dining with his Majesty.

A number of gentlemen dined at the London Tavern on Tuesday, who are subscribers and friends to the Monument intended to be erected in memory of our late excellent King George the Third. Sir John English Dolben, Bart. addressed the company in praise of the virtues of our late revered Monarch.

The Lords of the Treasury have consented to the further postponement of the payment of the Hop Duty till April, 1824.

The Cash Payment Bill came into operation in Ireland on Monday last. A large quantity of gold had been previously received in Dublin from London, to enable the Bank of Ireland to meet the demand, and pay its notes in gold.

It is understood that the revenue, in every department, will prove to have been more productive during the current quarter than at any antecedent period.

THE ARMY.—The 65th Reg. which was replaced at Weedon by the 58th Reg. has arrived at Hull; the 73rd Reg. is on its march to Scotland from Hull; the 77th Reg. which has been ordered from Scotland to Ireland, has embarked for its destination; the 7th Reg. of Dragoon Guards, which has also been ordered from Scotland to Ireland, has sailed for Ireland; the 6th Dragoons will, on the arrival of the 7th Dragoon Guards in Ireland, embark for Scotland; one troop of the 9th Reg. of Lancers will embark on Wednesday next for Ireland; the 2d division of the 10th Reg. has been ordered to embark at Sheerness for Ireland.—The depot of the Hussars, consisting of an officer and 57 rank and file, has marched from Maidstone for Ipswich; the depot of this regiment has been stationed there ever since the erection of the cavalry barracks, a period of upwards of twenty years.

We have no hesitation in saying, the most amusing volumes we have recently read are "Wine and Walnuts;" they are full of anecdote and humour, and make us as familiarly acquainted with the wits of the last century, and their usual places of resort, as though they were every day before our eyes; and to those who have a relish for native humour these volumes cannot fail of being highly acceptable.

LONDON, MAY 23, 1823.—The Members of the South Pitt Club, held their Anniversary Meeting at the Fleece Inn this day, to commemorate the birth of that illustrious Statesman. Col. Elmhirst took the Chair, and the company sat down to an excellent dinner, and the afternoon and evening were spent in the utmost harmony and conviviality. Several new Members were elected; and in the course of the evening the following loyal and constitutional toasts, among many others, were given:—The King, tour times four—The Duke of York and the Army, three times three—The Duke of Clarence and the Navy, three times three—The House of Brunswick—The Memory of the Right Hon. Wm. Pitt; may his principles always animate the Councils of Great Britain; in respectful silence—The two Houses of Parliament—The Ministers of State; may they, by a steady perseverance in those principles which have obtained for them the confidence and support of the friends of the Constitution, continue to confound the designs of the factious and disaffected—The Protestant Ascendancy—The Lord Chancellor, the Lion of England, three times three—The Right Hon. Robert Peel, the manly, candid, and intrepid defender and supporter of the Protestant Establishment, three times three—The Duke of Wellington, the hero of Europe, ditto—The Lord Lieutenant of the County, ditto—The Members for the County, ditto—Sir Edw. Brombead, and thanks to him for the spirited and admirable declaration of his sentiments at the late Lincoln Meeting—The Lord Bishop of the Diocese—The Bishop of Winchester—The Duke of Richmond, and the Pitt Clubs of England—Mr. Stuart Wortley, three times three —The absent Members of this Club—The newly elected Members of this Club—The Chancellor of the Exchequer—A radical reform of all Radical Reformers—May the British Government, in its present form, and the world fall together, three times three—The Rose, Shamrock, and Thistle, three times three—The Warden and Corporation, and prosperity to the Town of Louth—The Constitutional Association. —The Rev. R. Milne (one of the newly elected Members,) on retiring expressed the pleasure which he had experienced in associating himself with those who had met together to commemorate the birth of a statesman who was the brightest ornament of the age in which he lived, and whose memory would ever be held in the highest estimation by posterity—to whose counsels, under the direction of Divine Providence, England is eminently indebted for the enviable rank she holds, and which she will ever be proud to maintain. After shewing that the line of policy pursued by Mr. Pitt had been equally the means of disappointing the hopes of the factious at home, and of defeating the projects of our enemies abroad, he briefly adverted to those scenes of affliction and distress which the late ruler of France had been the means of producing throughout the world, until the storms of the north blasted all his designs, and Europe saw his boasted eagles fall never to rise again. The Rev. Gent. concluded by observing, that from what he had witnessed in other parts of the kingdom, he considered the principles which they were met to advocate as necessary to the preservation of our Constitution and our liberties.

On Tuesday last an affair of honour took place on Hounslow Heath between Captain D—— and Captain S——, both of the Infantry, and veterans who distinguished themselves under his Grace the Duke of Wellington in the Peninsular. On the first fire Capt. S.'s ball hit his antagonist upon the upper part of his hat, but did him no injury. The seconds endeavored in vain to bring about a reconciliation, but the parties would not consent, and Captain S—— received the ball of his antagonist in the fleshy part of his thigh, on the second fire. The seconds now positively refused to remain any longer, and they all left the ground without coming to an amicable adjustment.

On Wednesday morning another duel took place in a field leading from Smallberry-green to Heston, between G. M. K., Esq. and Captain A—r—t. The quarrel originated over a disputed bet on Epsom races, and blows had been before exchanged. Captain A. was badly wounded in the shoulder.

Capt. Hagar, of the Royal Navy, and Capt. Kelly, of the 5th Reg. of Foot, have been held to bail to keep the peace, it being supposed they intended to fight a duel.

Mr. Taylor, coal merchant, at Mitcham, was fined 20l. and costs for selling two sacks, one a peck and the other half a bushel deficient, and refusing to re-measure the other sacks which remained in the waggon.

"The publication before us, of which the First Number has just appeared, is certainly not inferior to any of those Monthly Miscellanies to which some of the best writers of the day are now contributors. In some respects we think it superior to them. Upon the whole it bears the evidence of a greater variety of talent than its cotemporaries; and it has nothing of that sickly egotism which is the characteristic of one school, nor of that mere essay-writing which is the besetting sin of another. Its Poetry too, with a few exceptions, is of the first order."—Courier. June 2.

TABLET to the MEMORY of the late JAMES HARTLEMAN, Esq. formerly a Chorister and Boy Clerk of the Collegiate Abbey, and Gentleman of her Majesty's Chapels Royal.—A few friends and admirers of the late James Hartleman, anxious to perpetuate the remembrance of his professional talent and private worth, have resolved on erecting a TABLET to his MEMORY. A Subscription (not exceeding One Guinea each,) has been opened, and application made to the Deanand Chapter of Westminster for permission to place it in the Cloisters, near the spot of his interment—who have most kindly consented, on the payment of a fine of TWENTY GUINEAS. The Tablet is to have been completed by Mr. Gaffre Coade, with a suitable Inscription from the pen of the Very Reverend the Dean of Westminster. The Subscription, through private channels (though not sufficient to defray all expenses) will in a few days enable the Secretary to discharge the fine, when the Tablet will be immediately erected.—Subscriptions will be received till the 1st of July next, at the Royal Harmonic Institution, Regent-street; Messrs. Birchall and Co. New Bond street; Messrs. Clementi and Co. Cheapside; and by the Secretary, Mr. Chalner, 7, Adelphi terrace, to whom communications may be addressed. Should there be any surplus it will be applied in aid of the Fund for the Three Sisters of the late James Bartleman, Esq.

IN SIX EASY LESSONS OF ONE HOUR EACH.—MR. BRADBURY, Private Tutor at Westminster School, solicits the attention of Ladies and Gentlemen to his universalled and infallible system of beautiful PENMANSHIP, whereby he pledges himself to teach persons of all ages to write with ease, elegance, and expedition, (whatever may be the deformity of their present writing) in six; or seven Lessons. This system, as it equally promotes the attainment of a bold and unpervious hand calculated for business, and of delicate and graceful manuscript adapted to Ladies; also secures to the Pupil the certainty of writing straight, without lines, with wonderful dispatch and accuracy, and, moreover, will steady the hand of the most tremulous writer. Upwards of 2000 specimens, and numerous recommendatory letters may be seen, and references given to persons of the first distinction, some of whom are upwards of 50 years of age. Private tuition at home. Ladies and Gentlemen attended at their own residences. A new and practical system of Short Hand, taught in a few lessons, so as to enable the writer to decipher what he has written with unconscionable ease.—Apply, (or direct, post paid) at the Academy, 464, Strand, near Charing Cross.

GREAT BARGAINS, SELLING OFF TWENTY-FIVE PER CENT under the usual Ready Money Prices.—About 500 Elegant Gauze Dresses, 10s. 6d. to 20s., sold last year for 2 and 3 guineas; 300 rich Tulle robes, at little more than half price; good morning gowns, 3s. 6d. each; rich brocaded tabinets, 3s. 9d. per yard; beautiful white satins, 3s.; Norwich crapes, and French crapes, 1s. 3d., 2s. 4d. and 2s. per yard; a variety of rich silk scarfs, 10s. 6d.; 800 beautiful cachemere shawls and scarfs, made from the wool of the Thibet goat, from 1 to 5 guineas, regular prices last autumn from 2 to 10 guineas; rich duchapes for elegant pelisses, French width, 6s. 6d., usual price 9s. 6d.; lace veils, scarfs, dresses, &c. &c., at SHEARS'S, Bedford House, Henrietta-street, Covent garden, where ladies may view one of the largest, and decidedly the most elegant assortment of fashionable silks in England, which must imperatively be sold off at an immense reduction.

SHAWLS and SCARFS—Nearly Ten Thousand Pounds worth, bought under peculiar circumstances, being the whole stock of a manufacturer; and as ROBSON has for years devoted his attention to that particular branch of trade, he may say, without arrogance, he has now the first collection in the Metropolis, and being determined to increase his extensive trade in that line, he now offers them to purchasers at little more than half what they have been in the habit of paying. The square shawls, both plain and figured, are in all the prevailing colours, viz. crimson, scarlet, white, green, blue, fawn, drab, orange, grey, black, and other grounds, from 10s. to 5l.; at 30s. they are elegant, and 50s. very superb, such as are generally sold at from 4l. to 5l.; the scarfs are equally splendid, and in the same variety of colours, from 10s. to 6l.; those at 30s. are large enough to form an elegant square, and are very handsome, and at 50s. most beautiful, well worth 4l. with an immensity of others, the most costly and magnificent, ready to be met with, equally cheap. His stock of shawls, handkerchiefs, in the same extensive way, in all colours, from 18d. to 21s.; real China and Cyprus crape shawls and scarfs, French net, tissue and damask ditto, in all colours, from 10s. to 4l.; seal, wool, ermineita, and cloth shawls, from 8s. to 30s.; Braganza, Zamora, and Angola shawls, from 9s. to 50s.; with an immense variety of Angola and French Cachmere, Norwich worsted, &c. from 5s. to 30s.—To be had at ROBSON'S, 64, Oxford-street, corner of Wells-street.

STOCK of HABERDASHERY, &c. &c. No. 52, Fleet Street.—W. NEVILLE, surviving Partner of the firm of Neville and Neville retiring from business, begs leave to inform his Friends and the Public in general, the whole of his extensive Stock, consisting of 6-eighths and 4-fourths Irish and Table Linens, Sheetings, Silks, Laces, Silk and Cotton Hose, and a general assortment of Haberdashery, is selling off at very reduced prices for Ready Money.

CURIOUS SHAWLS at HALF PRICE.—The greatest BARGAINS in handsome and rare SHAWLS ever exhibited, are now submitted to the Nobility and Public, many of them being less than half their original price.—The square shawls in India red, blue, scarlet, white, crimson, fawn, and black, which were four guineas, are to be sold at 41s.; Cachmere ditto, at six guineas, for 70s.; long shawls in the above colours, in the same proportion, from 50s. to 11l. This immense stock of shawls was the property of a very considerable factor, who spared no expense of pattern and quality. They are consigned for sale (for ready money only) to BROWN and Co. silk manufacturers, 15, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden. Of wholesale purchasers in any sum exceeding 40l. a banker's acceptance, at two months, will be taken.

FURNITURE for Inspection, and on Sale. MILLS, 77, High-street, Marylebone, having just completed a select order in Cabinet Articles for dining and drawing rooms, which he obtained by the moderate scale of his prices, solicits the inspection of the public, and which he has no hesitation in saying will be found the well worthy attention. On Sale, 5 sets of patent dining tables, on four legs each, superseding the usual plan of one set of circles and wings. Thirteen dozen dining and drawing room chairs, winged and plain wardrobes, drawing room tables in sets, at the lowest possible manufacturing terms for ready money, bed room chairs at 4s. 6d. per chair. ☞ It is necessary to be particular on both Name and Number.

CHEAP and FASHIONABLE CABINET, CHAIR, COUCH, and SOFA MANUFACTORY.—Fifty different Patterns, and from twenty to thirty dozen of well-seasoned mahogany, real rosewood, stained rosewood, cottage, and bed-room chairs, of all colours, ready for inspection. Real rosewood chairs nearly as cheap as stained, cane seats, and loo tables, and cabinets to match. A large assortment of mahogany patent dining tables of all sizes; sideboards, wardrobes, drawers, and all other articles of furniture, too numerous to mention. All manufactured on the premises, and warranted of the best quality, at ROBERT WALKINGTON'S, 214, High Holborn, opposite Southampton-street, Bloomsbury-square. All Goods sent free of expence within twelve miles of London.

EASE and COMFORT in SHAVING.—To those Gentlemen who experience inconvenience in Shaving from a tender face or strong beard, J. T. RIGGE most particularly recommends his celebrated MAGNETIC RAZOR TABLET, which, with its late improvement, he engages will produce as keen an edge as to supersede all grinding, honing, &c. and render the operation of shaving as easy and agreeable as it was before unpleasant and painful. Its use is simple, its effect certain; price 7s. 6d. J. T. Rigge's Aromatic Shaving Soap will also be found an invaluable addition. Manufactory, 65 Chepside and 52, Park-street, Grosvenor-square.

TO THE FASHIONABLE WORLD.—J. ATKINSON, Perfumer, 44, Gerrard-street, Soho-square, respectfully informs the Fashionable World, that he continues to sell, wholesale and retail, the following articles, they are also to be procured at most Perfumers and Hair Dressers in town and country; but as they have been very generally counterfeited, the genuine has his signature and address on the wrapper. ATKINSON'S HIGHER REFINED JOHNSON SOAP, divested of all caustic properties, is peculiarly calculated to Ladies or Gentlemen whose skin is tender, and to the nursery. It is kept till very old, and consequently economical in use; it is very highly perfumed, and where the skin has got hard, rough, or uneven, it gradually corrects such imperfections, and makes it soft, white, and even; price, half pounds, 1s. 2d.; pounds, 2s.; by taking a dozen pounds, 1s. 9d.; also, the old Brown Windsor soap, possessing the same properties, but of a higher refined quality, price 2s. 3d. a pound.—ATKINSON'S CURLING FLUID, or VEGETATIVE HAIR OIL, is allowed the most elegant article ever invented for giving the hair a beautiful gloss in dressing, and for keeping it in curl, in exercise, or in damp weather, and for regenerating the growth where it has fallen off, from illness, perspiration, change of climate, or any cause occasioning premature decay, price 3s. 6d.—ATKINSON'S VEGETABLE DYE, the only dye ever used when the head or whiskers is a permanent brown or black, price 5s.—Agent for HUDSON'S BOTANIC TOOTH POWDER, and Tincture, which have been so generally adopted; they not merely cleanse and beautify the teeth, but preserve them from decay to the latest period of life, they eradicate the scurvy and tartar from the gums, fasten such teeth as are loose, and sweeten the breath, and so undeviating are they in their effects, that there never was an instance of any one who regularly used them ever having the tooth ache or a tooth decay. or. 2s. 9d. each.

LADIES and GENTLEMEN may rely on it they will not have a hair fall off or turn grey, by now using PRINCE'S celebrated RUSSIA OIL, as it is so improved with an extra valuable ingredient, through which it has made the Russia Oil the greatest nourisher and preserver to the hair in the universe, it will make it grow thick and long, and prevent its falling off or ever turning grey, and is such a nourisher to the roots of the hair, that if it even has begun to turn grey, will restore it again to its natural colour, and if used often will never turn grey again, is sure to clear the scurf from infancy to old age, and will keep it so, the head and hair clean and beautiful. Gentlemen who have lost their hair, will have the least sign of roots of hair remaining, by using regularly for a few months Prince's Improved Russia Oil, with the extra valuable ingredient, will be sure to restore it and produce a fine head of hair, which hundreds have experienced. Ladies will find Prince's Russia Oil preferable to any other Oil for dressing their own, or false hair, as it gives it a natural gloss, softens and curls it. Gentlemen, without powder ought to use it instead of pomatum; it produces brows, Whiskers, &c. and through the extra ingredient it will now always keep pleasant in all climates.

Ask for Prince's Improved Russia Oil, and observe Prince on the wrapper and seals of each bottle: without, it is not genuine, and cannot answer the purpose. The ounce bottle 5s., or a large bottle, containing five ounces, 1l., which is a saving. Sold by the sole Proprietor, A. Prince, No. 9 Poland-street, Oxford-street, near the Pantheon, London; and by most principal Perfumers and Medicine Venders. ☞ Ladies and Gentlemen will be particular, as impostors have made the covers of the counterfeit Russia Oil so much like the Genuine, therefore persons should be cautious, and have it of the Proprietor, or of a respectable Vender.

LATEST NEWS.

Paris papers have arrived by express down to Friday. They contain several reports from Madrid, (which, however, want confirmation) and these state that Abisbal has been proclaimed a traitor by the Cortes, and that the King was to be immediately removed from Seville to Cadiz. The Moniteur of Wednesday contains two despatches from Guilleminot, dated Madrid, the 25th ult.; they take a retrospective review of the progress of the army from the opening of the campaign to its arrival in Madrid, during the whole of which time he says the troops have observed the strictest discipline, and manifested their sincere devotion. A more detailed report of the affair at General Valin, is given in these papers, in which it is admitted that the Spaniards made some skilful movements, by which they gained a wood, and prevented the French cavalry from reaching them. A communication has been established between General Donnadieu and a division of Molitor's army, at Balaguer. The victory of Mina over Donnadieu, at Vich, on the 19th ult. is confirmed.

A new loan is about to be negociated at Paris, to the amount of 23 millions of francs rentes—equivalent to about 17 millions Sterling.

Frankfort papers have also arrived to the 31st ult. They state that at Constantinople the utmost tranquillity was enjoyed. The fortresses of Pavas, Corinth, and Lepanto were still in the possession of the Turks. Balma papers to the 12th of April have also arrived.

Yesterday morning the Bishop of Exeter consecrated the new burial ground in the Horseferry-road, Westminster.

A Court Martial has been held on a seaman of His Majesty's ship Gannett, at Plymouth, for attempting to stab his captain with a bayonet; he was found guilty and sentenced to be hung.

A dreadful crime has been perpetrated in the neighbourhood of Bath, at Weston, two miles from that city, in the family of Mr. Middleton. During the absence of Mr. Middleton and his wife, a fellow named Wheeler, in the employ as a gardener, forcibly carried off Miss Mary Middleton, aged 14, and assaulted her in the grossest manner in the coach-house. He has been committed.

In the Court of Chancery, yesterday, in the matter of the Duchess of Norfolk, Mr. Sugden moved for an order to direct the master, to whom the matter stood referred, to produce certain deeds before the Court of Common Pleas. His Lordship granted the motion, on condition that Mr. Sugden's client undertook to bring the deed back again.

In the High Court of Justiciary Edinburgh, Thomas Stevenson, alias Thomas Lodge, was found Guilty of robbing the Church-yard of Larbert, in Stirlingshire, of three dead bodies, which he concealed in a dunghill on the farm of Mr. Scott, four miles from Falkirk, and afterwards carried off in a gig. He had previously been convicted of a similar offence, and the Court now transported him for seven years.

In the Court of King's Bench, yesterday, in the case of Carey v. Marshal, an action on a policy of insurance, in which a rule for a new trial had been moved for, the Court discharged the rule, being of opinion that the written order to effect an Insurance on the Hound instead of the Fortitude had arisen from mistake.

In the Court of Common Pleas, yesterday, Mr. Sergeant Pell moved that the rule against the Clerk of the Warrants of the Common Pleas Court should be made absolute. The officer in question had refused to pass a fine for an attorney, on the ground that the said attorney had not paid his "arrearages" of eight-pence a Term, for 25 years, such fee being legal. The Court thought there was no culpable negligence on the part of the officer, and therefore discharged the rule.

MEMOIRS OF WM. HAYLEY, ESQ. the Friend and Biographer of Cowper. Written by himself.—From this work, which is just published, and which will, no doubt, excite considerable attention, we extract the following passage as a fair specimen of the author's own idea of his production:—"The life of a sequestered student, fond of books and privacy in all the periods of his existence, seems, at first, to offer materials for nothing more than a short and simple history; but incidents, very singular in themselves, and productive of consequences no less extraordinary, befell the subject of these memoirs; and though ever devoted to retirement himself, he had so much intercourse with many of the most memorable characters of his time, that a fair and full account of him must inevitably be a work of considerable extent and diversity." And such, indeed, it appears to be.—Born of an ancient and opulent family, the author possessed the means of cultivating a taste for literature, without having been at the same time compelled to stoop to the drudgery of an inferior occupation for support; whilst, with an urbanity highly creditable to himself, he never failed to foster and encourage the efforts of those who were placed in circumstances of a less auspicious kind. From the station which he enjoyed in society, Hayley often found himself in the possession of influence, which it was one of his highest gratifications to employ on the behalf of others; and the reader of this work can scarcely fail of being struck with this, as the most prominent trait in his amiable character—a constant tendency to acts of the most disinterested friendship. Hence his continual solicitude for the welfare and success of his youthful associates; his almost romantic efforts to raise from obscurity an estimable youth, who had entered his service in a menial capacity, but who, by his zeal, attention, and assiduity, station in the service of his country; and among many minor kindnesses, which it would be difficult to enumerate, that pension, which, but that his sun had set, would doubtless have proved a most important solace to the declining years of his beloved Cowper. With qualities such as these, so calculated to improve and to embellish life, it appears to be matter of regret that Hayley should have been as he truly states, so rootedly attached to "privacy in all the periods of his existence." But such appears to have been the case, and to such an extent did he carry his passion, that he was for many years accustomed to denominate himself "the Hermit:" though not certainly such an one as is generally understood by that term; if to such a man the term could be allowed, it must have been on the ground of seclusion only, for from his paternal estate at Eartham surrounded by the writings of the learned of every age, in his own extensive library, he continually contemplated the busy world, and sometimes felt a pleasure in mixing in it, though but at short and distant intervals; whilst to his friends, among whom were many of the brightest ornaments of his day, not even excepting royalty, he appears to have been always accessible, though to them only; a head on which some amusing anecdotes are related of him. In these Memoirs the author has given us an account of the progress of his studies and of his compositions, with extracts from his diary, his Correspondence, and his unpublished Poetry. The editor has also introduced some interesting letters respecting the justly admired Cowper. Our limits forbid us the pleasure of extracting, but, in a work so multifarious and diversified, this could avail but little. We must, therefore, content ourselves with recommending it to the perusal of our readers.

LADIES' LEGHORN HATS.—This excellent manufacture is confined to the village on the river D'Arno, in Tuscany, the Venice hats excepted, and are known by a pale colour and smooth face that is given by hot-pressing, to render them saleable. Hats undressed, of the true fabric, and retailed, in a variety of new and distinguished patterns, with foreign flowers, &c. by the merchants, Askew and Normanville, 85, Oxford-street.

ELEGANT GLASSES, FURNITURE, &c.—The Nobility and Gentry are invited to inspect the Ware rooms of Cooper and Son, 83, Bishopsgate Within, where is exhibited a large assortment of new and second-hand Plate Glasses, admirably suited to every description of drawing or dining-rooms. The prices are just reduced 40 per cent. on plates measuring 100 inches by 72, and upwards; and on those of smaller dimensions the alteration will be found equally important. The extensive preference given to this establishment is thankfully acknowledged by the Proprietors, who, in their endeavours to evince their gratitude, by manufacturing articles in a superior manner, at prices suitable to the times, hope to merit a continuance of public support. In the furniture department is comprised every new and elegant article of upholstery, cabinet, and chair work, regulated upon such a scale of economy as to demand and ensure the patronage of rank and fashion.

EAST INDIA CURRY POWDER, and INGREDIENTS for MULGATAWNEY SOUP, to be had of the highest flavour and very superior quality, at BELL and CRAGG'S, Oilman, 161, Bishopsgate-street Without, with printed directions for preparing the same, and best method of boiling rice.

ADVANTAGES EXCLUSIVELY BELONGING TO THIS INSTITUTION.

A TEMPORARY PRECAUTIONARY CAPITAL of 200,000l. which will be paid off as soon as an adequate surplus capital shall have been accumulated from the premiums; it being a distinguishing feature of this Association, that the shareholders are not permitted to remain a permanent charge on the Society.

A present, three-fourths of the savings and profits, divided among the insurers, for the whole period of life, by additions to their policies, and interests on such additions deducted from their premiums.

A PERMANENT SURPLUS CAPITAL of 200,000l. for the security of the insured, accumulated from the profits on policies for limited terms.

The subscribed precautionary capital, the permanent surplus capital, and all premiums and property, invested in the names of the trustees, who sign every policy, in order to give the insured AN IMMEDIATE REMEDY AGAINST THE FUND ITSELF.

When the permanent capital shall be increased to 200,000l. and the shareholders are paid off, the ENTIRE PROFITS DIVIDED AMONGST THE INSURED.

To prevent loss to the insured from inability to continue the payment of their premiums, the Society CONTRACT to purchase policies at their true value, the scale of which will be indorsed on every policy at the time it is granted; and the Society ENGAGE to advance money on the security of the policy to the extent of two-thirds of its value, to enable the insured to continue their premiums without inconvenience.

In cases of bankruptcy, the Society are not bound to purchase the policy, but in the event of its being given up to the bankrupt by the assignees, the Directors have power to apply in reduction of future premiums the accumulations of saving and profits which would otherwise be payable in addition to the sum insured.

Directors not at liberty to litigate or dispute any claim, but all differences submitted to general meetings of the insured.

In addition to the foregoing advantages, which distinguish this Institution from all others, the insured may, by one payment, or by continuing premiums for a limited term only, secure a sum to be paid at his death; and thus a man, who cannot afford to maintain a family in a few years, may by contributions during that period, prevent the necessity of future payments, and make the prosperity of the day available for providing against the reverses of the morrow.

An entirely new table of premiums has been calculated expressly for the use of this Institution, in which the rates of insurance for young and middle-aged lives will be found to be considerably lower than in any office in England, the Society being established on such principles as to present the most economical mode of assurance to the public, combined with perfect safety. A few instances of the annual premiums required to insure £100 will suffice to shew the truth of this assertion.

Persons wishing to effect Insurances may transmit their proposals and references, by letter, to the Resident Director, who will afford all proper information, and take measures to prevent the necessity of personal attendance before the Board in cases in which the references shall be satisfactorily answered.

MORE PRIZES THAN BLANKS!—The Tickets of the present Lottery having been purchased of Government by a subscription among the gentlemen of the Stock Exchange, are all on sale in the open Market, therefore the price is liable to fluctuation from day to day. From the popularity of the Scheme advances of prices already take place, and another rise is daily expected; therefore the public are respectfully advised to avail themselves of the present low prices, viz.:—This day, June 6, Ticket, £15 15s.; Half £8 4s.; Quarter, £4 2s. 6d.; Eighth, £2 1s. 6d.; Sixteenth, 11.1s.—Schemes at large may, as usual, be received at the old and fortunate offices of Swift and Co. No. 11, Poultry; 12, Charing Cross; and 31, Aldgate High-street. The Drawing begins 25th September.

JAMAICA.—For PUBLIC SALE, under an Order of the High Court of Chancery, in the cause "Thomson v. Grant and others," on a day hereafter to be fixed, before Wm. Alexander, Esq. one of the Masters of the said Court, at the Sale Room, in Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, unless previously disposed of by private contract, together, or in lots, as may be agreed on, the following SUGAR ESTATES, SLAVES, and other PROPERTIES, all situated in the Island of Jamaica, and belonging to the Estate of Alexander Donaldson, Esq. deceased—that is to say:—

BRYAN CASTLE SUGAR ESTATE, situated near Rio Bueno, in the parish of Trelawney, containing 1,400 Acres of Land, or thereabouts; about 166 prime Negroes, and 224 Head of Stock; with a Mansion House thereon, adapted for the residence of a Proprietor.

TRAMPING BRYAN SUGAR ESTATE, adjoining Bryan Castle, containing about 1,332 Acres of Land; 267 Negroes, and 230 Head of Stock. This Estate and Bryan Castle, are situated only about three miles and a half from Rio Bueno; the works and buildings on each are complete, in substantial and good repair, and well furnished with utensils of every description; and there has been for some time a regular annual increase of the Negroes.

LOW LAYTON SUGAR ESTATE, situated in the parish of St. George, containing 2,262 Acres of Land, or thereabouts; about 348 Negroes, and 195 Head of Stock. Low Layton is bounded on the North by the sea, and ships its produce from its own wharf at Orange Bay; there is a complete set of works, with a water-mill, and plenty of water all the year round. This property is well supplied with working utensils of every description, and has abundance of fine provision grounds, pastures, &c.

LONG ACRE SUGAR ESTATE, situated in the parish of St. Thomas, in the East, about three miles from Port Morant, and the same distance from Rocky Point, containing 1,400 Acres of Land, or thereabouts (including Hampton Court Penn, adjoining thereto,) and has belonging to it about 208 Negroes, and 258 Head of Stock, with a water-mill, and complete set of works, in good repair, and furnished with utensils of every description.

ORANGE VALE PLANTATION, situated in the Parish of St. George's, near Buff Bay, to which there is a carriage road from the Estate, which contains 1,217 Acres of Land, or thereabouts; about 254 Negroes, and 75 Head of Breeding and other Stock. The soil of Orange Vale is well adapted for the culture of Coffee; and there is a set of Works capable of taking off a large crop, with plenty of Provision Grounds: there is also a good dwelling House thereon.

FAIRFIELD PLANTATION, likewise situated on Buff Bay River, in the Parish of St. George's, about six or seven miles from Buff Bay Wharf, containing 950 Acres, or thereabouts, of Coffee, Provision, and Wood Lands. This Plantation was formerly cultivated in Coffee; but the Negroes having been removed to Low Layton Estate, the Land is now let, and partly continued in Coffee by the Tenant. There are tolerable good Works and some other Buildings on the Estate; and a fine Road from them to Buff Bay.

A WHARF and STORES, situated in the Parish of Port Royal, near the King's Dock-yard, now occupied as store houses for Provisions for victualling the King's ships, with about 34 Acres of Land, on the Palisadoes, and 16 Negro Labourers attached thereto.

A DWELLING HOUSE, in the CITY of KINGSTON, situated in North and Eight streets, formerly the residence of the late Mr. Donaldson, and now Rented on a Repairing Lease, at 150l. currency, per Annum.

Alexander Grant, Esq. No. 6, Billiter-square, London, is authorised by the said Court of Chancery to receive Proposals, and treat with such person or persons as may be desirous of purchasing the whole, or any part of the said Estates and Premises, by Private Contract, and will afford every information respecting them.

The Estates may be viewed; and information had, also, on application to the Managers, in Jamaica; and of Messrs. Stevenson and Whitehorne, solicitors, in Kingston.

Printed Particulars and Conditions of Sale, will shortly be ready for delivery, gratis, at the said Master's Chambers, Southampton Buildings, aforesaid; and of the said Alexander Grant; of Mr. John Hopton Forbes, Ely-place, Holborn; Messrs. Graham, Kinderley, and Donville, Lincoln's Inn; Messrs. Hilliard and Hastings, Gray's Inn; and of Messrs. Hall and Brownly, Boswell-court, Fleet-street, London.

London, May, 1823.

DUBLIN and BRISTOL.—The St. Patrick Steam Packet Company beg leave to inform the Public, that the HIBERNIA and ST. PATRICK will SAIL between DUBLIN and BRISTOL every Tuesday and Friday throughout the season. The following being the hours of departure for the month of June:—

From Bristol.		From Dublin.
June 3, at 1 o'clock afternoon.		June 3
6,	—	6
10, 3	morning	10
13, 10	—	13	at 9 o'clock in
17, 2	afternoon	17	the morning.
20, 5	—	20
27, 9	—	27

The Hibernia is a superb new packet, of 364 tons burden, with engines of 140 horse power, a consort worthy the St. Patrick. The size of these packets and the immense power of their engines, being double that of the other packets on the station, render the passage across the Channel safe, quick, and comfortable, and as they are not subject to the inconvenience of carrying troops for the War Office, the proprietors rely with confidence upon the patronage of the public, particularly as they were the first to open what has proved to be the most expeditious and delightful way of travelling between London and Dublin, the route through Bristol. Further information given on application, post paid, to Thos. S. Protherce, Cumberland-basin, Bristol; George E. Davies, Great Brunswick-street, Dublin; or J. Lancaster, 12, Regent-street, Pall-mall, London.

CALAIS STEAM PACKETS.—The Proprietors of the LORD MELVILLE and the EARL OF LIVERPOOL STEAM PACKETS beg to inform the Public, that the latter vessel is now running from London to Calais every Sunday and Thursday, returning every Tuesday and Friday. The proprietors are happy to have it in their power to state, that the rate of going of this vessel exceeds their most sanguine expectations, and they flatter themselves she is equally every respect to any steam vessel yet launched. She is fitted up with 40 beds, and has every convenience necessary for the comfort of the voyage. The Lord Melville continues, as usual, to leave London for Calais on Wednesdays and Saturdays, returning to London on Monday and Thursday. For the these vessels apply at the other particulars may be had by applying at the agent's, Mr. John Norman's, 1, Water-lane, Tower-street; or at Mr. Middleton's, 359, Exeter Change; Mr. Lancaster's, 12, Regent-street; Mr. Nock's, Regent-circus; Mr. C. Brown's, Park-street, Oxford street; Mr. Meyer's, St. Peter's-alley, Cornhill; and at Messrs. J. and J. Elvey's, 30, Castle-street, Holborn.

CHARLES FOSTER, Wine Merchant, 128, High Holborn, (four doors from the corner of Southampton-street,) most respectfully calls the attention of the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public, to his list of prices for Wines of the first quality only, and flatters himself that a trial is only required to ensure satisfaction. Families visiting watering places will find a great saving in taking their Wines from London; as C. F. delivers orders of six dozen and upwards free of carriage to any part of England. A single bottle may be had for sample, one dozen sent within five miles of the metropolis, and if not approved of, the money will be returned.—The finest Cape Madeira imported, 24s. per dozen; Ditto Red, (Burgundy flavour) 30s: Port from Wood, (Bom Retiro,) 42s.; Ditto crusted, 48s.; Ditto, very old, (Thomson and Cronks,) 54s. to 60s.; Sherry, very fine and rich, 48s.; Ditto, old, (Sir W. D. Gordon's first marks.) 54s. to 60s.; Bucellas, 54s.; Superior Vidonia, 48s.; Teneriffe, 48s.; Direct Madeira, 48s.; Lisbon, very old and dry, 54s.; West India Madeira, 54s.; Superior East India ditto, 60s; Claret (superior) 70s; Ditto, very fine, 54s.—Champagne, Burgundy, and all other Wines, proportionably low prices, for ready money only.

CRAVEN COTTAGE, FULHAM.—This beautiful residence, upon the banks of the Thames, ready furnished (formerly belonging to Mr. Walsh Porter, and now to Mr. Richard Wilson) will shortly be SOLD by AUCTION, by MR. RODINS, of Regent-street, unless previously disposed of by Private Contract.—For particulars, and tickets to view, apply to Messrs. Wilson and Holroyd, 47, Lincoln's Inn-fields, or Mr. Robins, of Regent-street.

THE COSMORAMA is RE-OPENED at No. 209, Regent-street, (5 doors north of Conduit-street) where galleries have been constructed so as to admit day-light, which considerably improves the illusion, and mitigates the heat and obscurity produced by artificial light. 14 Views are exhibited between two galleries; one appropriated to those of Europe and Asia, amongst which are Mont Blanc, the Palace and Gardens of Versailles, and Moorish Mosque at Cordova; the other to Views in Asia and Africa, amongst which are the magnificent Ruins of Palmyra, (or Tadmor in the Desert) one of the Forest of Lebanon.—Open from ten till dusk.—Admittance each Gallery, one shilling.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—The rude and unskilful attempts constantly made to supply these substitutes for the masticatory organ, and the disgust which delicacy suffers from the unpleasantry attending them when permanently fixed, have deterred many from adopting the aid and comfort they are capable of affording, independent of the assistance they may contribute to digestion and consequent health. The ingenious application of mechanical science will enables us to obviate all these inconveniences, and allow the wearer at all times to keep the mouth in a state of perfect cleanliness, and to perform the functions of mastication, articulation, &c. with decided ease and comfort.—Mr. NICHOLLS begs to state, that he is in constant attendance from ten to four, and will be happy to give ocular demonstration of the comforts derived from his efforts under every circumstance of simple and complicated deficiency.—115, Fleet-st.

CHAMPAGNES.—CHARLES WRIGHT, Wine Merchant to His R. H. the Duke of Clarence, next to the King's and opposite the Haymarket Theatres, Opera Colonnade, London, is now landing CHAMPAGNES, ROUGE ET BLANC, first quality, brilliant condition, (G. IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY.

The Liverpool Church Bill was passed.

A Petition was presented from Knaresborough against Slavery.

On the second reading of the Irish Joint Tenantry Bill, the Marquis of Lansdowne said that the Bill provided that in future no leases should be granted under £20 a-year.

TUESDAY.

The Scotch Linen Manufacturers and the Parish Law Consolidation Bills were referred to Select Committees.

In answer to a question from the MARQUIS OF LANSDOWNE, relative to the Insurrection Act,

The EARL OF LIVERPOOL stated, that it was the intention of Government to give all the information in their power on the subject of the state of Ireland. He was not just then prepared to produce the information, but probably should in a few days.

The MARQUIS OF LANSDOWNE then gave notice, on the part of the Duke of Devonshire, of a motion for Thursday se'nnight, relative to the state of Ireland.—For which day the Lords were ordered to be summoned.

The House resumed the consideration of the Report on the Marriage Act Amendment Bill.

The LORD CHANCELLOR observed, that in consequence of his other avocations, he had not had leisure to give his attention to that clause of the Bill that went to extend the penalty of forfeiture of property to marriages of minors, by banns as well as by licence. He, therefore, wished the clause to stand over for the present, and be amended on the third reading. The Noble Lord adverted to a case that was then before him in another place, in which a female, who at 10 o'clock had attained the age of 17, and had a settlement made upon her, was described in the licence which had been obtained at 11, to be 21 years of age, and as such had been married at 12.

After some desultory conversation, the further consideration of the Report was, on the motion of the Lord Chancellor, postponed to Thursday.—Adjourned.

WEDNESDAY.

Two petitions were presented from Ireland against the Grand Jury Presentment Bill.

The Imperial Gas Light Company's Bill was passed.

THURSDAY.

The Report from the Select Committee on the Bill respecting Weights and Measures was ordered to be printed.

LORD DACRE presented a Petition from the Churchwardens, Overseers, and Guardians of the Poor of the Parish of St. Luke, praying that Roman Catholics may be allowed to celebrate marriages as prescribed by the Romish church, such marriages to be thenceforth held to be valid in law.—The Petition was laid on the Table.

The MARQUIS OF LANSDOWNE moved their Lordships to go into Committee on the Grand Jury of Ireland Presentment Bill. The Noble Lord stated that the salaries in the present Bill had been settled at a meeting of most of the Members from Ireland. Out of 40 Clerks of the Peace, only 10 objected to the provisions of the present Bill. He believed that in general the Clerks of the Peace would be better remunerated under the present Bill, than they had been before.

The EARL OF DONOUGHMORE objected to the Bill, and said, the Clerks of the Peace had vested rights in the offices they held. All he wanted was justice to a numerous class of individuals, against whom the present Bill would operate as a Bill of Pains and Penalties. It ought also to be recollected, that the execution of the provisions of the Insurrection Act mainly devolved upon the Clerks of the Peace. He moved that the House should resolve itself into a Committee on Monday, which (after some observations from the Earl of Limerick, Lord Lorton, the Earl of Gosford, the Lord Chancellor, and Lord Redesdale) was agreed to.

The MARQUIS OF LANSDOWNE moved the second reading of the Bill for regulating marriages between Dissenters and Catholics. To extend to Catholics and Dissenters the same privileges conferred on Jews and Quakers by Lord Hardwick's Act. No advantage could accrue either to Church or State from an occasional conformity at the time of marriage, which was exacted at no other time.

The LORD CHANCELLOR opposed the Bill, which opened the door to persons of all descriptions, even those who disbelieved wholly the truths of Christianity. The Bill would introduce among us the followers of Joanna Southcote, the Ranters and Jumpers, and enthusiasts of all kinds. He could not consent that Ministers of the Church of England should lend themselves to the purposes of this Bill.

The EARL OF LIVERPOOL had no objection to send the Bill to a Committee—the principle had been recognised in the concessions made to Jews and Quakers, and he thought some relief should certainly be afforded, and there could be no objection in the case of Catholics; but if the Church saw no objection, the Dissenters might have a form of their own, the only parties whose consciences would not be consulted were members of the Church of England.

The ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY looked at the Bill with great alarm. The present was the first proposition in that House to change the liturgy of the Established Church. He was a friend to toleration, which he considered as the necessary result of human fallibility.

The BISHOP of WORCESTER thought that some relief should be given. The Bill was imperfect, but might be improved in a Committee.

LORD REDESDALE opposed the Bill; which would convert every place into a Gretna Green.

The EARL of HARROWBY, much as he desired to give relief to Dissenters, could not go to the extent of the present Bill. He would not object to the Committee.

The BISHOP of CHESTER said, that the Bill would materially affect the scruples and feelings of the Clergy. He wished the Bill to be postponed till the next Session.

The LORD CHANCELLOR wished to confine the effect of the Bill to one class of Dissenters, the Unitarians.

The BISHOP of LLANDAFF was of opinion the Legislature should be well satisfied as to the persons by whom the Marriages were to be celebrated. The moral and religious interests of the community would not be safe if any great latitude was allowed.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH said, that the sole object of the Bill was to relieve the scruples of Dissenters. He could not conceive how any one could wish that such occasional conformity should be enforced. He hoped the Bill would be allowed to go to a Committee.

The EARL OF CARNARVON hoped their Lordships would not be deterred from going as far as they could.

The House divided on the second reading—Contents 15, Proxies 6—Non Contents 15, Proxies 12—Majority against the Bill 6.

FRIDAY.

The Silk Manufacturers' Regulation and the Irish Compensation Offices Bills were read a first time.

The LORD CHANCELLOR presented an amended clause relative to the forfeiture of property in the Marriage Bill, which was ordered for consideration on Monday.

In a Committee on the Prison Laws Consolidation Bill,

LORD SIDMOUTH moved an amendment in the clause fixing personal correction, that it be limited to felons, or persons sentenced to hard labour.

The amendment was agreed to. The Bill was ordered to be reported on Tuesday.

The MARQUIS OF LANSDOWNE gave notice that early next Session he should revive the Bill (thrown out a few evenings since) relative to the Marriages of Dissenters.

The Irish Joint Tenantry Bill was passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY.

The Scotch and English Distillery Acts went through a Committee, in which certain resolutions were agreed to, the objects of which the Chancellor of the Exchequer said he would detail in another stage.

Petitions were presented from Montrose praying for a repeal of the Beer Duties; from the Journeymen Silk Weavers of London against the Bill for altering the Spitalfields' Act; from the Candle-makers of Glasgow praying for the repeal of the Candle Duties.

The Recognizance Bill was passed.

On receiving the report of the Silk Weavers' Bill, Mr. Adam and Mr. Wilde were heard at the Bar as Counsel for the Weavers against the Bill. They were heard at some length, and having withdrawn,

Mr. F. BUXTON, in support of the petitioners, said they could not understand the argument upon which the Bill was founded, viz. its political economy. In Coventry the Poor Rates were 19s. in the pound —in Spitalfields they were 6s. in the pound; in Coventry a man earned 9s. or 10s. a week—in Spitalfields they earned 16s. a week. The Hon. Member drew a comparison between the Weavers of Spitalfields and those of Coventry, and contended that the advantages were in favour of the Spitalfields manufacturer. He contended that the Spitalfields Weavers had never been heard, and, therefore, he would move that the Bill and Petitions be referred to a Committe above stairs.

Mr. HUSKISSON contended that the Bill was necessary to preserve the trade of Spitalfields, Counsel had only gone the length of contending that the law ought to be extended to all the other manufactures, and made the general law of the land; if this was done, he was persuaded they would adopt a measure which would go to create a body of pauperism which no system of Poor Laws could meet. He opposed the Amendment.

Mr. ELLICE supported the Amendment, he thought before they proceeded to repeal this particular Act, they ought to come to a determination whether they could not repeal all the Acts which gave Magistrates a power of interfering with the wages of workmen.

Colonel WOOD said the distress in Spitalfields was not amongst the silk manufacturers, but was occasioned by its being the resort of unemployed labourers from all parts of London.

Mr. PETER MOORE wished the whole of the restrictive and competition laws were repealed. He was authorized to say, that for the last twenty years the silk weavers had not (except from family afflictions) had any occasion to apply to the Poor's Rates.

Mr. T. WILSON thought it might be advisable for the Right Hon. Gentleman to allow a Committee. He was of opinion that the best way was to leave every branch of trade and manufacture as free as possible.

Mr. HUME was satisfied the Bill would be useful and advantageous to the very men who now petitioned against it.

Mr. BRIGHT supported enquiry.

Mr. MANSFIELD was in favour of enquiry.

Mr. RICARDO observed that the present question was one merely of labour. He thought the price of it ought not to be fixed by Magistrates. The right way would be to allow labour to take its course, and if there was not work in one place the workmen would find it in another.

Mr. G. PHILLIPS thought the present a good opportunity to repeal the Acts.

Mr. BROUGHAM was of opinion to repeal the Acts would benefit all parties. He supported enquiry, because to refuse it would be to turn the petitioners from their Bar discontented with them and the measure which was to be forced upon them.

Mr. W. SMITH voted for enquiry.

Mr. ALD. BRIDGES hoped the Bill would be passed this Session.

Mr. MONCK was averse to hasty proceedings, and was friendly to the principle of the Bill on general grounds.

Mr. BYNG regretted that the Act had been passed; but as it was, it had produced much tranquillity among the labouring classes in the parishes of Spitalfields, Hethnal Green, and Mile-end New-town.

Mr. C. GRANT objected to the Committee; he could not see how they could, in the present advanced state of the Session, embrace the whole range of this enquiry.

Sir J. MACKINTOSH would vote for Inquiry, not that he wished for more information, but to allay irritation, dispel errors and prejudices, but by no means to risk the passing over the Bill to another Session.

The House divided—For the motion, 68—Against it, 60—Majority 8.

On the motion for going into a Committee of Supply,

Mr. CREEVEY complained that the Planters of the Leeward Islands, among many other grievances, had to pay a tribute of 4½ hogsheads of sugar out of every 100. This put them on a very unequal footing with the newly acquired colonies. He understood that large pensions from that Fund had been given freely to the Duchess of Gloucester and the Princess of Hesse Homburg. Five pensions of 500l. each had also been granted to the Misses Fitzclarence. The Right Hon. Gent. (Mr. Canning) had also received for his two sisters a pension since 1799 from the same Fund. Another Right Hon. Gent. too (Mr. Huskisson) had a pension from the same quarter. Ministers were willing enough to relieve these islands, by an exclusive monopoly, but never thought of giving up their pensions. The Hon. Member moved a Resolution, embodying the topics of his speech, and praying for relief to the West India Islands from the burdens under which they at present laboured.

Mr. SECRETARY CANNING said, that the speech of the Hon. Member embraced two subjects, the one the right of the Crown to the Duties, and the other to the mode of their application. It should be recollected that the fund in question had been exempted from the controul of Parliament. It was true, that he had chosen to commute a pension of 1000l. a year, to which he was entitled as under Secretary of State, for half the sum, in favour of two near relations. If he chose to speak tauntingly or invidiously, he could also cite names that the Hon. Member himself would honour.

Mr. HUME contended that this practice was an innovation, and thought the motion extremely proper.

Mr. BROUGHAM stated, that he himself had formerly brought the subject before the House. It was the painful duty of his Hon. Friend to name individuals, but he had not done so invidiously. In the present state of the West India Islands, distressed as they were, the motion was highly proper.

The House divided. For the original motion, 103—for the resolution, 57.

Mr. HUME then called the attention of the House to the Coronation, which the Chancellor of the Exchequer had stated at 100,000l. The real expence had been 238,000l. If estimates were to be given in this manner, all estimates would become ridiculous. The Right Hon. Gent. had stated that the indemnity from France would be applied to the Ways and Means of the year, while a considerable sum had been applied to the expences of the Coronation, without the authority of Parliament. There was an item of 111,000l. for the decorations of Westminster Hall. There was an item of 24,000l. for His Majesty's robes—a sum too much had the King wholly been clothed in gold. The King, indeed, had a diamond crown, and that bauble might be included in the expence. There was also a charge of 50,000l. for the furniture of Westminster Abbey. There was 3000l. to Sir George Nayler for an account of the ceremony. He would ask the House, granted? There was a charge of 8200l. for snuff-boxes to Foreign Ministers. He accused the late Chancellor of the Exchequer of a breach of faith with the House and the Public. The Hon. Member moved for a Select Committee to enquire into the expenses of the Coronation, having so greatly exceeded the original statement, and by what authority the sum of 138,000l. had been applied to that ceremony without the consent of Parliament.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER complained that previous notice had not been given of the Resolution. He had himself heard nothing of it till he came down to the House. Part of the increase of the expences had arisen from the delay that had taken place from 1820 to 1821. His Right Hon. Friend had not the means of being more accurate, as there had been no similar case for 60 years. In point of fact, the sum of half a million paid by France had never been reprinted by any vote of Parliament. A considerable part of this had, by the sole act of the Crown, been applied to the Government of the Netherlands. It was, therefore, competent for the Crown to apply the money to the expences of the Coronation. He must oppose the motion.

Colonel DAVIES said it was impossible to justify so lavish an expenditure which was in the teeth of the Appropriation Act.

Mr. HENRY GREY BENNET blamed the expenditure at this time of the nation, which he should always call a wicked expenditure.

Mr. CURWEN thought the House should have a fuller account of this expenditure; but he hoped the Hon. Gentleman would withdraw his motion to a division.

Mr. BROUGHAM hoped the Hon. Gentleman would take the sense of the House on the motion; and if he did so, he would certainly vote for it. He considered the expenditure of 24,000l. for robes quite shocking. He knew some Gentlemen would consider this an indelicate topic to be touched upon, but he was not to be scared by their cheers, and he would do his duty by the side of his Hon. Friend the Member for Aberdeen, and contend that the country ought not to be insulted by such an expenditure.

Mr. BRIGHT must protest against the doctrine of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, that the Crown had a power of appropriating money without the sanction of parliament.

Sir P. BLAKE said, as it now appeared, we stood in a pretty position; for France had paid more than one half of the expence of His Majesty's Coronation. This was not as it should be, or as it formerly.

Mr. HOBHOUSE hoped that some Gentleman would propose to renew Mr. Ponsonby's Bill, for preventing the necessity of the Board of Commissions, in case of the demise of the Crown, as by the renewal, 70,000l. would be put into the pocket of the Chancellor the time being.

The House divided—For going into a Committee, 110—Against it, 39.

In the Committee, a sum of 100,000l. was voted for Civil Contingencies.

Mr. HUME objected to the item for the Royal Yachts; he was aware that His Majesty's establishment should be on a plan of magnificence suiting his station; but a charge for keeping up nine Yachts was beyond what His Majesty could require, who only went to the Continent.

Mr. J. MARTIN objected to an item of 248l. charged for the expence of bringing his Royal Highness the Duke of Clarence and his family from Ostend to Dover in one of the Royal Yachts.

Mr. HUME also objected to a charge of 1329l. for standard-bearers of three regiments of Foot Guards. There was also a charge of 200l. for the Earl of Malmesbury, as Governor of the Isle of Wight. He wished to know what either of these votes had to do with Civil Contingencies.

Mr. BENNET said, there was a charge of 3800 and odd pounds for Thomas Henry Flaskett, Esq. as Superintendant of Aliens. Now he had already been 5000l. granted in the Miscellaneous Estimates. He could not understand, therefore, how it was that the sum of 3800 was now proposed in the vote of Civil Contingencies.

Mr. ARBUTHNOT said, the sum of 5000l. in the Miscellaneous Estimates, though it was voted, was not appropriated, and therefore was necessary to take 3800l. now.

Mr. HUME adverted to an item of 1500l. for an outfit to Mr. Wynn, Minister to Switzerland; and 2000l. to Sir Wm. A'Court. Now, the 270,000l. regular charge on the Civil List for Ambassadors, &c. was a sum of upwards of 61,000l. charged in the Civil Contingencies, and he should propose to reduce the Vote to 52,799l.

Mr. SECRETARY CANNING defended the grant. He could assure the Hon. Gent. that since 1816 no plate had been given to the Ambassadors—all had been given to the Embassy, and belonged to the Crown.

Mr. LENNARD complained that this item of expenditure was extravagant, and he should not consider he had done his duty until he again brought this subject before the House.

The Committee divided, for the Item, 70—For Mr. Hume's Amendment, 16—Majority, 54. The Committee afterwards divided on the question for reporting progress. Ayes 35—Noes, 73—Majority 5. The Committee was then adjourned till Wednesday.

TUESDAY.

At four o'clock the Speaker took the Chair, and proceeded to call the House, when there not being 40 Members present, an adjournment took place till this day.

WEDNESDAY.

Mr. C. CALVERT said he had been voted out of the chair of the Committee on the Southwark Court of Requests Bill above stairs. He was resident, and unless the House would agree to revive the committee the Bill must be lost for the present Session. He moved accordingly. On the House divided, Ayes 35, Noes 19. Leave was given for the Committee to make their report on or before Friday se'nnight.

Mr. C. CALVERT presented a petition from the owners of Wharfs on the Thames, against the erection of a new London Bridge.

Mr. ALDERMAN WOOD said, supposing the worst, the injury would be sustained by any of the Wharfs between Teddington and London Bridge, could not exceed 10,000l.—The petition was ordered to be printed.

Petitions were presented from certain West India proprietors against the Bill for consolidating the Slave Trade Laws.—From the stocking knitters of Leicester, in favour of the Bill for repealing the laws respecting combinations among journeymen.—From the cotton and woolcombers of the same town to the same effect.—From the agriculturists of Warwick praying for additional protecting duties on foreign imported.

Mr. LENNARD postponed his motion on the subject of the Middlesex County Court to the 19th instant.

Mr. MARRYAT presented a Petition from the Planters of Trinidad, praying for the Extension of British Law to that colony. The Petitioning Member urged the necessity of complying with the prayer of the Petition.

Mr. WILMOT HORTON said, there was an inquiry now going on upon this subject. If the Hon. Member who now accused the Government of procrastination, would bring forward a motion on the subject he would be prepared to answer him.

Mr. HUME censured the Colonial Department for unnecessary delay upon this subject. As soon as Trinidad became annexed to Great Britain she ought to have had the benefits of British Law extended to her.—The Petition was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILLIAMS said his Hon. Friend's, the Member for Worcester, present state of health was such as to render it impossible for him to attend in his place to-morrow, to bring on his motion on the state of the Irish enquiry; and indeed such was the state of his health he could not name any other day; he must therefore withdraw his notice for the present Session.

Mr. HOBHOUSE said, for the reasons already stated he would withdraw the necessity of withdrawing a notice of his Hon. Colleague's on the subject of military flogging.

Mr. BROUGHAM also withdrew his motion as to the state of Ireland, which was in some measure connected with the motion of his Hon. Friend, the Member for Westminster.

On the question for reading the Silk Manufacturers Bill a third time, the LORD MAYOR was of opinion, the parties interested had been fully heard, and therefore moved that it be read this day six months.

The amendment was supported by Mr. W. Smith, Mr. Rumbold, Mr. Henry Grey Bennet, Mr. P. Moore, Mr. Bright, &c.

On a division. For the third reading, 53—For the amendment, 50—Majority, 13.—The Bill was passed.

Mr. WESTERN moved for a Committee to take into consideration different changes in the currency, from 1703 to the present time, the consequences resulting from their changes to the nation at large, and to consider their effects on the money contracts between individuals. The Hon. Member said, he had made two unsuccessful attempts on this subject before, and therefore he might be thought presumptuous in bringing this matter on, but Mr. Peel's Bill having accomplished such a confiscation, and spoliation of property, that he could not resist bringing the subject before the House. He did not mean to say this question was an agricultural one, though he admitted that the heaviest burden had fallen on agriculture and the other productive classes. It had impoverished the Aristocracy and the Commercial gentlemen, that they were degraded by coal all former examples. The reduction of the income derivable from land could not be placed at more than 30 per cent. which was an amount of 60 millions on the whole exceeds of the land, and, consequently, from the means of paying taxes.

The Hon. Member contended that the effect of paper-currency was to diminish the effect of gold in the purchase of corn and other necessaries of life. Exactly in proportion to the diminution of the value of the currency was the effect upon the public debt. Now, the effect of the currency had obliged the landlord to abrogate every contract with his tenants. Happy was the landlord who had not been

...ncrease his rental 30 per cent. Instead of an opulent tenantry to ...ve no productive agricultural farms, they would have a smock-...ssed peasantry, and a potatoe-fed population; which would im-...verish the land from necessity. If this country were involved in ...ar, it would be impossible to meet the increase of bur-...ens maintained it would be impossible to meet the increase of bur-...ens in the present currency. The very first shot that would be fired ...ross the sea would keep up an ex-...change with the currency as it now was we could keep up an ex-...change as 70 or 84 millions of money. The effect of the former cur-...rency was to increase the pay of the army, the navy, and every one of ...the establishments. It was, therefore, he continued, a moral injustice ...to the people not to reduce these, as well as the Civil List, when they ...received a higher measure of value.

Mr. Ricardo had always admitted that the power given to the ...Bank to issue paper currency had increased the price of commodi-...ties to some paper currency had increased the price of commodi-...ties; but the difference between him and the Hon. Member was, as ...he stated, on account of the variation in our currency. Mr. Peel's Bill did not ...give the Bank to use one ounce of gold more than before; but, in-...stead of paying in ingots, as they were authorized to do, the Bank ...had got into a way of paying in guineas. It was an unnecessary quantity of gold, which altered the price of ...gold in a way which he was not warranted in contemplating. The low ...price of corn was, in a great degree, attributable to a re-action, arising ...from the capital of the country being sunk mainly in agriculture. ...Because of the fall of the value of corn was the increased quantity. ...Because of the fall in the value of money been 30 per cent., it must ...make a difference in the price of all commodities, as well as of corn. But ...it had not been the case, as appeared from the Probate and Legacy ...duties, and the ad valorem duty on stamps. He maintained that the ...Chancellor received no more than what he was entitled to. The ...Chancellor was not at all affected by the alteration of the Currency, as ...his emolument depended on the demand for his labour.—Nothing ...could be more absurd than to recommend a depreciation of the Cur-...rency with a view of rewarding the labourer. The difficulty of the ...case was now got over, and the people were reconciled to Mr. ...Peel's Bill. All that was wanted was a proper system of Corn Laws.

The Marquis of Tichfield said, that the House had to decide by ...a vote of that night, whether the landed proprietors were to re-...main on their estates, or to remove to foreign lands, and give place to a ...new set of proprietors. He thought a prima facie case for inquiry ...had been made out. The Noble Lord denied the assertion that prices ...had risen more in peace than in war; the contrary, in fact, was the case. ...He stated the average peace and war price in every different period of ...war and peace between 1688 and 1789, and contended that, from this ...statement, peace prices during that period were invariably five per ...cent. above those existing during a period of war.

Mr. Baring could not now consent to the appointment of a Com-...mittee to carry on the enquiry recommended, as such enquiry could ...only go to unsettle the currency and do mischief in the country. The ...mischief which had already arisen to individuals from this tampering ...with the currency were incalculable. That there had been a deprecia-...tion, no man could doubt who had a guinea to spend; no housekeeper ...who went to market, but could tell that 1l. went much further now ...than it did formerly. He should oppose the appointment of the Com-...mittee, because it would have no good effect.

Some conversation took place between Lord Folkestone, Mr. Can-...ning, Mr. Peel, and Mr. Brougham, respecting the day to which the ...House should be adjourned. It was adjourned to Thursday.

Mr. Hume postponed his motion respecting the Lord Lieutenant of ...Ireland to the 19th inst.

The Elections in Ireland Bill was passed.

THURSDAY.

The Scotch Transfer of Securities Bill was passed.

Petitions were presented from Carmarthen, against Slavery; from ...Liverpool, complaining of the mode of Striking Special Juries; from ...the Freemasons of Ireland, praying to be exempted from the operation ...of the Bill respecting Secret Oaths; from Dr. Collings, a Clergyman, ...praying for an amendment of the Law, which, as it at present stands, ...renders marriages of Catholics by the rights of their own Church not ...binding in this country. Lord Nugent said, a provision on this sub-...ject should be introduced into his Catholic Bill, now pending, as re-...corded England; from the Parish Officers of St. Luke's, complaining ...of the charges brought on the parish by the marriages of individuals ...of the Catholic Priests, such marriages not being legal; from the Flax ...dressers of the town of Knaresborough, praying that no alteration ...might take place in the laws relating to Flax; from a Ship Owner ...named Thomas Hodson, of the Port of London, against the alteration ...of the Hemp Duty; from the Brewers of Dublin, Cork, and Water-...ford, complaining of the present state of the duties on the Distilleries ...of Ireland. The Petitioners earnestly prayed the House not to sanc-...tion the measure now before the House for a reduction of the Duties ...on Spirits in Ireland, which is to take place in October next; from ...Belfast, complaining of the high price of coals.

Sir Gerard Noel moved that a petition presented from the person ...calling herself Princess of Cumberland, on the 3d of March last, should ...be printed. He refrained from moving that this Petition should be ...printed at the time he presented it, wishing to allow time to His Ma-...jesty's Government to consider the claims of this individual. No-...thing, however, had yet been done by them. If the claims of this wo-...man were just, they ought now to be settled; if she was an impostor, ...as she had been suffered to impose on the public too long.—The ...motion was agreed to.

On the motion of Mr. F. Buxton, there were ordered to be laid be-...fore the House accounts relative to the sums recovered from France; ...and he gave notice, that on the 24th he should move to refer the papers ...to a Committee.

Mr. Brougham said, that complaints had been made of the a buse ...existing in the Isle of Man: now he wished to know if any inquiry ...had been made into the truth of that allegation.

Mr. Secretary Peel said, he had not found that the amount of the ...abuses would warrant the expense of sending out a Commissioner; ...he had caused inquiry to be made.

In resuming the debate on Mr. Western's Motion, for a Committee ...on the state of the Currency,

Mr. Wodehouse contended, that neither the Right Hon. Gentle-...man (Mr. Peel) nor any of his colleagues, nor of those who systemati-...cally oppose them, had any clear insight into the matter, when they ...readily gave way to the system proposed by the Member for Ports-...mouth, which had occasioned such incalculable mischief to the ...country; it was their duty to find means, some how or other, to ...cure it.

Mr. Jones blamed the Government for making frequent changes ...in the value of the currency. They inundated the country with paper ...money, and then the withdrawing it in various proportions, had at ...certain times materially affected property. The Legislature were ...bound to apply a remedy to it.

Mr. Folkestone said, notwithstanding the predictions of the ...honourable Member for Portarlington, that they had nothing to dread ...from a return to cash payments; yet every day and hour since that ...day had the difficulties and misfortunes of the country been in-...creasing. It would be a very long time before the farmer could pro-...duce the supply of his produce to the demand for it; and so obtain ...a remunerating price. It was their duty, if this state of things ...existed, to look for the best and most speedy remedy for these evils. ...He maintained that this proposition of his was a very simple one, and ...the only one which could preserve the country in security and tran-...quillity; and moved as an amendment, that the Committee should ...take into consideration the means of providing an equitable adjust-...ment accordingly.

Sir Geo. Peel observed that the question was, did the general inter-...est of the country require a revision of the currency? Was there any ...ground for the manufacturing interests of the country that demanded such ...a change? In fact in the commercial and manufacturing interests there ...was every appearance of reviving prosperity. The Right Hon. Gen-...tleman took a review of the state of the manufacturing districts, ...and since the resumption of Cash Payments. In Huddersfield, ...since the resumption of Cash Payments, was diminished, as well as ...rented. In 1820, the Poor Rate in Sheffield was 10s. 9d. in the pound; ...it was only 5s. 6d. and the estimate for the present year, was ...6s. 6d. Previous to 1820, the number of empty houses was 1620 ...at present they were scarcely 100. In Birmingham, the Poor Rates ...were reduced more than one half since 1820. In 1822, the Poor ...rate was 18,000.—the estimate for the present year, was 25,000. ...In Manchester, the cotton trade was in a most flourishing state; in 1818 ...wages were 6s. 3d. now they were 30s. a-week. The Poor Rate, in ...1818, was 27,000.; in 1821, it was 23,000.; in 1822, it was 16,000. ...The Right Hon. Gent. asked if he had not stated sufficient to shew ...as regarded the manufacturing districts, no Committee of En-...quiry was necessary. He admitted that agriculture was labouring un-...der great depression, but he denied that the measure of 1819 had ...contributed, in any great degree, to that depression. In 1816 agricul-...ture was much more depressed; for the Hon. Member for Essex, in ...a speech made in that year, said, "the land at present pays no rent ...Now could the state of agriculture be lower than that thus described by the Hon. Member; and could there be a stronger proof of the benefits which had resulted from the adoption of the measure of 1819? One cause of depression was that upwards of 2,000,000 acres of poor land had, during the war, been forced into cultivation, and, on the return of peace, when 50 million of public expenditure was with-drawn, all that land, poor and unproductive as it was, naturally fell a heavy burthen on the more productive soil, and added to the de-pression of agriculture. In January 1813, Wheat was 120s. in Novem-ber and other stations, fell between January and November of that year from 124s. to 64s. This was of itself sufficient without any change in the currency to depress agriculture, and thus, as the Honourable Gentleman opposite said, agriculture had been depressed fifty per cent. Now, allowing all possible effect to the change in the cur-rency, the extreme change on the standard price of gold was from 3l. 17s. to 4l. 1s. about 4 per cent., and how could this cause a de-pression of 50 per cent. The only point remaining was that of equit-able adjustment, and the Noble Lord said, Why do you refuse an equitable adjustment?—Why he objected, because it was absolutely impossible that it could be carried into effect. One great and insur-mountable obstacle was the various changes property had undergone.

Mr. Henry Grey Bennet said, when he recollected in what kind of business the House had sat through a whole summer, viz. to en-courage perjury, to oppress the weak, and to convict the innocent, he could not believe that Parliament would now refuse to sit a little time, or even through the year, to do an act of justice to thousands, who had been ruined, and reduced to a state of beggary, want, and famine, by this measure. The Hon. Gentleman then proceeded to compare the prices of various articles in the years 1795 and 1818, it was no extra-ordinary calculation to say that three millions of our present currency would buy as much of those articles required for the support of the Poor, as six million of the paper currency of 1812 would have bought. Distress, he contended, had increased, as was obvious, from the state of the Poor Rate. In 1812, the Poor Rate was 6,500,0001. in the last year it was 6,300,0001. It was unnatural that a people should starve in the midst of plenty, yet such was the case in Ireland. Such had been the state of plunder and distress, such the driving for rent, that a cow was sold for 3s. 6d. a sheep for 1s. and a bushel of corn for 1s. whilst the people around were starving.

Mr. Huskisson said, the Hon. Member for Shrewsbury had ad-verted to the Poor-rates, and said three millions now was equal to six millions in 1813. If this was so, it was consoling to the landlord; if he got one-half of the rent he agreed for in 1813, he was paid a full equitable rent, and he could not, in common justice, even if he could get it, enforce the same rent which he had agreed for in a depreciated currency. As to the equitable adjustment mentioned by the Noble Lord, how long would it take a Committee to examine and arrange all the commercial transactions of the last 20 years. He maintained the im-possibility of coming to any thing like what was called an equitable ad-justment; and upon that subject the minds of the country were made up.—He would warn them against tampering again with the currency under any circumstances.

Mr. Monck supported the motion.

Mr. Attwood contended, at considerable length, that the increase in the value of money had covered the whole country with the victims of their mis-legislation, in a way that had never before been endured by a peaceable and confiding people.

The House then divided—For the motion, 27—Against it 96—Majo-rity, 69.

FRIDAY.

The Committee on the Poor Laws amended Bill was fixed for Friday next.

The Bill to enable the King to enclose a part of Kew Green, was read a first time.

Petitions were presented from Donegal, against the importation of Barilla.

The London Dock Company's Bill was read a first time.

In a Committee on the Barilla Act,

The Chancellor of the Exchequer moved a resolution, increasing the duty from five guineas to eight guineas, from the fifth of January next, to continue for five years. The Right Hon. Gent's object in so doing was in consequence of the reduction having been injurious to the kelp growers.

Mr. Denison, Mr. T. Wilson, Mr. Marryatt, Mr. Hume, &c. con-tended that the Barilla Merchants required consideration as well as the kelp growers.

Mr. Campbell, Mr. Calcraft, Mr. K. Douglas, Lord A. Hamilton, Lord Binning, Lord F. Gower, Mr. Macdonald, &c. supported the resolution. The Committee divided—For the motion, 100—Against it, 20—Majority, 80. Report on Monday.

Mr. Denman gave notice that he would on Tuesday present a peti-tion from the Hon. Basil Cochrane, complaining of the conduct of the Victualling Board.

On bringing up the Report of the Beer Bill,

Mr. Denison objected to the clause which prevented brewers from brewing beer of a middling sort on the same premises with the other beers. He moved "that the report be received this day six months."

Mr. Maberley and Mr. Monck wished the Bill to be postponed till next Session. The latter Hon. Member wished the Right Hon. Gent. would limit the number of barrels to four instead of five.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer said, if the brewing was con-fined to four barrels, the porter brewers would be ruined, because they would have to pay the 10s. duty, while 5s. only would be paid for beer of an inferior strength.

The House divided. For the clause, 32—Against it, 26—Majority, 6.

The Marquis of Tichfield moved that the Report be recommit-ted. Ayes, 26—Noes, 36. The Report was agreed to.

A long conversation arose relative to Mr. S. Rice postponing his mo-tion respecting the conduct of the Chief Baron of Ireland—in the course of which Mr. Secretary Canning said, he was ready to go on with the case, but he could not connect himself with the management of it.

Mr. Denman contended it was the duty of Ministers to take the case up, notwithstanding the Act of Parliament which forbad them.—Declining to enter upon it, they in effect said, Members connected with them, could not give an honest vote on the subject.

Mr. Secretary Canning denied that he had ever said the situation of Minister influenced votes in that House, and a Minister was the most unfit person for conducting such an inquiry. A Minister could neither fail nor succeed in such a prosecution without giving his oppo-nents an advantage, which he could not say they anticipated, but which they could not fail to use. He would not fall into such a trap. In the cases of Lord Melville and Mr. Hastings, Ministers had taken no part. Had he (Mr. Canning) come forward to prosecute a Judge not connected with the Government in politics, would it not have been said, that Ministers were determined to drive from the Bench all who did not approve of their measures, in order to make room for others more subservient? He would attend in his place during the investiga-tion and give an honest opinion, but would do no more.

Mr. Henry Grey Bennet was not surprised at the conduct of Mi-nisters, it was part of the system of connivance and compromise which held them together.

Mr. Secretary Peel begged to ask the Hon. Member (Mr. Henry Grey Bennet) on what ground he had ventured to accuse the Govern-ment, in the terms which he had, when he had not heard the dis-cussion which had taken place in the course of the evening? The dis-cussion commenced at six o'clock, and from that time almost until the present moment the Hon. Gent. had been absent. The fact was, that Ministers were perfectly ready to meet the question; they had thrown no obstacle in the way of the Inquiry. The Hon. Gent had thrown no obstacle in the way of the Inquiry. The Hon. Gent had abridged his own duty, and then brought unfounded charges against Ministers.—(Cheers.)

Mr. Brougham said he was one of those who, like his friend the Member for Shrewsbury, had been three or four hours absent, being engaged in other concerns, and, as the Right Hon. Gentleman had said, guilty of a gross dereliction of his duty. He was glad to hear that in future no man was to speak or to vote upon any question who had not heard the whole of the debate.

Mr. Secretary Peel had merely said that the Hon. Gentleman was not warranted in making unfounded accusations against his Majesty's Ministers.

Mr. Henry Grey Bennett contended, that from all he knew of the conduct of his Majesty's Ministers, he was justified in taking that view of the question which he had done. He still thought there was a connivance and a compromise between the Members of the Govern-ment.—(Hear, hear, from the Ministerial Benches.)

At length the debate on the question of the Lord Chief Baron was fixed for Tuesday.

A CRITICAL DISSERTATION on the NATURE and PRINCI-PLES of TASTE. By M. M'DERMOT, Author of a Letter to the Rev. W. L. Bowles, &c.—Of—In this volume the various theories adopted by former writers on Taste are particularly examined. The whole is a philo—phical investigation of all the important questions connected, not only with taste it-self, but with its proper objects; and seeks to unfold its nature, and the process by which it is improved and perfected. The work will be found to contain, in all respects, an original view of the subject, both in design and execution, under the following heads:—1. On the Nature of Taste, and wherein it differs from Sensa-bility, or the emotion that follows the perception of Beauty.—2. On Beauty as-tractedly considered as an Object of Taste.—3. On the Standard of Taste.—4. On the Taste of particular Ages and Nations; and the necessity of studying the an-cient Models—5. On the influence of Habit in Matters of Taste.—6. On the Al-liance of Taste and Criticism.—7. On the proper Objects of Taste.—London: printed for Sherwood, Jones and Co. Paternoster-row.

COOKE'S TOPOGRAPHY.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

A Master of Arts, of Oxford, wishes to know where MR. HEBER was, that he did not speak upon the Irish Tithe Bill and the English Catholics Bill. It is expected, when men of talent are elected for the Universities, that they should exert themselves in defence of the national religion and the rights of the Church, when any measures likely to affect them are agitated in Parliament.

Enough has been done at Oxford to satisfy an OLD ENGLISHMAN. We hope the fruits will be beneficial.

If we could have prevented the demolition of Wanstead we would have taken up the subject; as it is, we can only thank our CONSTANT READER.

J. F. C. is quite right about the dead horses, but we see no remedy, for horses will die, and when they do they cannot carry themselves to be cut up.

Our observations on the Wine Trade are unavoidably delayed.

J. C. will find a letter at the place he mentions on Wednesday next.

Our Correspondent on the Malt Duty is under consideration.

The various pamphlets forwarded to us will be noticed as early as possible. We have been extremely pleased with the work called "Highways and Byeways," particularly with one story, the "Exile of the Landes."

The various letters from Bristol will be answered in due time.

The account of MR. KEAN'S Regatta is inadmissible; we never interfere with such affairs.

Our friend need not have "put in a good word" for his friend—we are always just.

In consequence of the paragraph which appeared in BULL last week, an inquiry has been instituted by the Vicar and Churchwardens of St. Pancras, into the matter complained of, as stated to have come from the neighbourhood of Tavistock-square, and we are informed that our Correspondent has been mis-led. The chairs referred to were nothing more than the common cane-bottom forms, which were hired of the upholsterer, to whom they belonged, who had supplied them on the occasion of the consecration, but omitted to take them away. The lamps complained of were nothing more than a branch for two candles; and the cushions, too, which belonged to private individuals, and one to the person alluded to, which a younger son of his had indiscreetly used quite unknown to his father.

A MONDAY'S EDITION, containing the LATEST NEWS, the STOCK LIST, the LONDON MARKETS, and the STATE OF THE COUNTRY MARKETS by that Morning's Post, is published at Three o'Clock.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, JUNE 15.

WE will venture to say, that the people have seldom been more delighted than at the appearance of His MAJESTY at Ascot, in a state of health so greatly and rapidly improved since his departure from London.

Gratified as the nation must be at the convalescence of the KING, they must be still more gratified in perceiving the falsehood and malice of those grovelling journals, which, during His MAJESTY'S tiresome attacks of gout, perpetually represented His MAJESTY as seriously ill. We have always cautioned the public against believing one syllable which emanates from the Whig Radical press—ignorance of every thing in decent society precludes the possibility of their knowing the truth; and impudence and baseness mixed, induces them to fabricate falsehoods in order to cover their want of knowledge. Let it never be forgotten that the TIMES published a letter, dated Paris, which was written in Leicester-square; and that the CHRONICLE stated, and re-stated, that the KING sat at the Levee, when standing the whole day brought on his last gout. These facts should be imprinted on the minds of those who feel inclined to put faith in the honesty of the one paper, or the authenticity of the other.

WE congratulate our readers upon the rejection of the Dissenters' Marriage Act in the House of Lords—to no place, to no particular class of persons, are confined the attacks, open and covert, upon the established religion of the country, and we feel grateful, as the nation at large must feel, to his GRACE the ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY, for the powerful, manly, and energetic speech, in which he vindicated the rights of the Protestant church, as by law established.

In these times we require men who have firmness to use the advantages which rank and talent give them over their fellow-creatures—it is absurd tamely to stand by and see one by one our national rights and privileges wheedled away from us, either by way of temporizing or conciliating with our bitterest foes.

We have expressed our opinion pretty strongly upon the subject of the Irish Tithe Commutation Bill, and we will not relax in our opposition to that useless and dangerous measure, until we have roused the friends of the Constitution to a perfect sense of its mischievous principle, and to a conviction of their duty, as far as regards it.

Let the Irish Tythe Commutation Bill be called by what name it may, its spirit is the plunder, its effect will be the degradation of the Protestant Clergy—we mean its earliest effect—what its ulterior effect will be we will not trust ourselves to suggest.

We believe it is the fashion with the liberal opponents of the Catholic Claims, as they are mis-called, to put out of discussion—why we know not—the terms and conditions of the Coronation Oath—it may be extremely fair and candid to the Papists to do this, but we would be glad to know what are the use and meaning of the solemn obligation entered into by our Protestant Monarch at his inauguration if it is to be considered as a dead letter, and not referrable to, in the way of defence against encroachments—at all events, however, if any understanding exist upon the Catholic Question, not to allude to the Coronation Oath, we presume that we may venture to observe when the PROTESTANT Church is threatened, that the enactments of the Irish Tythe Commutation Bill never can receive the royal assent.

If we remember rightly, the KING, in his Coronation Oath, SWEARS to preserve inviolate all the rights, properties, and privileges of the United Church of his two kingdoms—we apologize to the friends of the Tythe Commutation Bill for being so vulgar and old fashioned as to look to an oath as anything, in these days of unbounded indulgence and liberality; but when we perceive, that instead of having their rights, privileges, and properties preserved inviolate, it is proposed to make the clergy dependent upon the landholder, and, finally, the stipendiaries of the government, we think it quite time to cry aloud in a warning voice which shall reach to the HIGHEST POINT OF THE EMPIRE.

A MEETING was held on Friday for the purpose of making speeches in favour of the Spaniards, at which were present all the Whigs of eminence, LORD ERSKINE, MR. HUNT, of Middleton Cottage, SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH, MR. BOWRING, MR. HOBHOUSE, and, of course, MR. HUME.

LORD WM. BENTINCK was to have taken the Chair at 12 o'clock, but not arriving till long after that hour, LORD ERSKINE and MR. HUNT undertook to amuse the company by making speeches—the latter gentleman was threatened by MR. ROWCROFT with being thrown out of the window, to which he replied by making, what if he had been an Irishman would have been a bull, "I tell you what, MR. ROWCROFT," said the patriotic Whig, "if you throw me out of the window you shall go first."

The editor of the SUN newspaper informed the audience that somebody had offered him a sum of money to buy snuff if he would write up the Bourbons, and, indignant at the imputation which the offer appeared to cast upon his respectable print, he surrendered the communication to public view.

A letter was also read from a gentleman of the name of VEAL, a true patriot, and one of a "band" of journeymen shoemakers, who are pleased to discover that the cause of Spain "against the Bourbon aggression, is the cause of rational "freedom against the most oppressive league of despotism "the world ever heard," &c. &c.

These gentlemen have nobly offered to subscribe sixpence per week each, to rescue a proud nation from evils which it has neither power nor inclination to oppose, and which, so far from being considered evils, are by themselves—who, one would think, might know as much about it as their Spanish leather friends in Leicester Fields—hailed as blessings and deliverances from the tyranny of Patriotism:—(the letter of the exemplary cobblers was headed by this motto:—

"An active dwarf is better than a sleeping giant."

We should propose for their next effusion, by way of amendment, the well-known adage—

"Ne sutor," &c. &c.

The only very absurd thing done, however, in the course of the day, was done by the Yellow Dandy—LAMBTON, who subscribed—at least put his name down for a thousand pounds—but, we are happy to assure our readers, from very good authority, that no advance will be made upon coals in consequence of this unlooked for, ostentatious, stupid, and useless piece of Humbug.

HUMBUG EXTRAORDINARY.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN SCHOOL SOCIETY.

"On Monday last a most numerous meeting of this Society was held at the Freemasons' Tavern; the DUKE OF SUSSEX was in the Chair, the Persian Ambassador sat on the left of his Royal Highness, and LADY DARNLEY on his right. Several boys from the Greek Islands and from Madagascar, who had been educated under the auspices of the Society, were also present."—Vide Newspapers, May 13, 1823.

This sounds mighty fine, and is extremely flattering to the DUKE OF SUSSEX—to be supported by LADY DARNLEY and the PERSIAN AMBASSADOR is something; but how very silly the audience of the performance will feel when they are told that the person passed off upon them as the Persian Ambassador was no Ambassador at all.

The person who acted the part of the great plenipotentiary upon this imposing occasion is called SAITH SATOOR, and is not only not a Persian Minister, but not a Persian—he is an Armenian, who came to this country in the suite of the Persian Ambassador, but with whom (why, we do not choose to mention) he has at present no communication.

When we add that this Persian Ambassador of the tavern—this Persian Ambassador to the DUKE OF SUSSEX, was fourteen years servant to DOCTOR CAMPBELL, the REV. MR. CANNING (cousin of the Right Hon. Secretary of State), to COL. D'ARCY, and to several other gentlemen, we think persons who subscribe to Charities under exalted patronage, will be inclined to make inquiries before they suffer themselves to be cheated by appearances and humbugged by impostors.

EXTRACT FROM THE JAMAICA ALMANACKS.
FOR THE YEAR 1817 a 1820.

"1815. June. An attempt was made to legislate for the internal concerns of the West Indies, by the introduction into the House of Commons of a Bill for the Registration of Slaves, by a party of fanatical bigots in Great Britain, the leaders of which were WILLIAM WILBERFORCE, representative in Parliament for the county of York, but now for the borough of Bramber, in Sussex; JAMES STEPHEN, formerly a barrister in one of the windward islands, but who has now secured to himself the lucrative office of a Master in Chancery in England: and ZACHARY MACAULAY, formerly an overseer in this island, remarkable for his cruelty and severity to the slaves who were unfortunately placed under his powe r, afterwards Governor of Sierra Leone, (the hobby-horse of the African Institution) and now a rich African merchant in London. Fortunately, it failed, (not however without being the means of an insurrection among the slaves in Barbadoes, which broke out on the 14th of April, 1816, and in consequence of which a great number of these poor wretches lost their lives,) and the plans of these enemies of the Church and State have been for the present frustrated."

QUERIES.—Is this MR. MACAULAY, the person of that name who acknowledged himself, through MR. BROUGHAM, to be the author of the pamplet intituled "Negro Slavery?" If so—it would appear, no one, from experience, could be better qualified to write on the subject of cruelties exercised in his time?—Quorum pars magna fuit. If this is the same person, was he not dismissed by his master (now alive) as overseer, in consequence of the slaves under his care dying in numbers beyond the mortality on other estates, and from mismanagement of his master's affairs?

Is he the person of that name who was dismissed from a Club of Managers and Overseers in consequence of his general conduct and character as a harsh and cruel Manager? It cannot be!!! that such a man should have been so preferred and so promoted. If so, let the Saints remember an old and homely adage, that those who have glass heads should not throw stones.

Of MR. WILBERFORCE, it appears only necessary to say, that his piety now forms a good antithesis to his vocal habits of early days, when Psalm tunes were not suited to the society he kept.

As to Master Stephen—he has forgotten that for the private fortune he possesses, he is indebted to the very Planters whose fortunes he would now ruin, and whom he vilifics—that as a barrister in St. Christopher's he obtained all he has of private wealth,—that in consideration of devoting his talents and industry to the support of the measures of Government in Parliament, he was made a Master in Chancery, he then withdrew that support, and retired from Parliament, where alone his talents could avail. Gratitude does not appear to be his forte, it may be his foible, and one in which it should seem he does not indulge.

ALDERMAN WOOD.

WE feel it our duty to publish the following statement from the daily papers—our motives are really those of disinterested good will towards the once celebrated person whose name graces the head of this article:—

"CONVICTION OF A BREWER'S DOCTOR.

"LEW BENKIN was charged that he, being a dealer or other person than a chemist and druggist, did, on the 5th of February last, sell to CHARLES TAYLOR, knowing him to be a common brewer, one hundred pounds of molasses, whereby he (LEW BENKIN) had incurred a penalty of five hundred pounds. The Court animadverted upon the offence of which the defendant had been guilty, and convicted him in the penalty of Two Hundred Pounds."

OUR notice, as we last week observed, was some ten or twelve days since attracted by a puff in the TIMES newspaper to a nasty book called "LIBER AMORIS, or the NEW PYGMALION," published by MR. JOHN HUNT, and written by MR. WM. HAZLITT.

The dirty abominations of the raffs of literature are far below notice, but when to innate stupidity, grossness, vulgarity, and impudence are added the most degraded practical sensuality, the most inveterate ignorance, and the most depraved principle, it becomes necessary to take a double view of their abominable struggles against taste, decency, and morality.

The story of the "LIBER AMORIS" is simply this: MR. HAZLITT, at that time a middle aged married man, took lodgings at the house of a tailor—a very respectable man, who has "seen better days," who had two daughters; the sphere of life in which these persons move, render any account of them as useless as it would be uninteresting to the public, save that it may be necessary to say that one is very respectably married, and the other, the heroine of the LIBER AMORIS, is, from all the reports we are able to collect, "a very pretty innocent girl, of 17 or 18 years of age"—this latter was appointed to wait upon MR. HAZLITT, her father's lodger—what followed the book written by this very HAZLITT himself shews in part, but WE will shew entirely; because we look at the publication, as we said before, in a double view, and after we have satisfied our readers with laughing at this cockney's stupidity and folly, we will teach them to shrink with disgust from his subsequent conduct in endeavouring to injure and ruin the character of a modest, virtuous girl by his calumny and spite when he could not effect either, by his personal assiduities or his mental captivation.

The TIMES speaks of this book in a strain which a cockney thinks likely to make it sell—it calls it a "curiosity in literature"—but when it talks of the "degrading infatuation," the "drivelling imbecility," the "impotent dotage," the "disgusting frailties" of the hero—and when we know and will prove that the hero and the author are one and the same person, we should think the gratitude of the author for the praise of his book may be pretty much qualified by the abhorrence and detestation which he excites even in a cockney's breast in the supposed imaginary character of the hero, which is his own.

In the first place, for folly and idiotism, we will quote the following passage:—

SCENE—The Tailor's Lodging House.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

MR. BILLY HAZLITT ! SALLY—(the Landlord's daughter)

SCENE 1.—(p. 9.)——[Enter Sally.]

"S. Mrs. E—— has called for the book, Sir.

"H. Oh; it is there. Let her wait a minute or two. I see this is a busy day with you. How beautiful your arms look in those short sleeves!!!

"S. I do not like to wear them.

"H. Then that is because you are merciful, and would spare frail mortals who might die with gazing.

"S. I have no power to kill.

"You have, you have—Your charms are irresistible as your will is inexorable. I wish I could see you always thus. But I would have no one else see you so. I am jealous of all eyes but my own. I should almost like you to wear a veil, and to be muffled up from head to foot."

SCENE 2.—Lodging as before.—Characters the same.—(p. 14.)

"H. Will you go and leave me so?

"S. It is late, and my father will be getting impatient at my stopping so long.

"H. You know he has nothing to fear for you—it is poor I that am alone in danger. But I wanted to ask about buying you a flageolet. Could I see that which you have? If it is a pretty one, it would hardly be worth while; but if it isn't, I thought of bespeaking an ivory one for you. Can't you bring up your own to shew me?

"S. Not to-night, Sir.

"H. I wish you could.

"S. I cannot—but I will in the morning.

"H. Whatever you determine, I must submit to. Good night, and bless thee!

"[The next morning S. brought up the tea-kettle as usual; and looking towards the tea-tray, she said, "Oh! I see my sister has rongor THE TEA-POT." It was not there sure enough: and tripping down stairs, she came up in a minute, with the tea-pot in one hand, and the flageolet in the other, balanced so sweetly and gracefully. It would have been awkward to have brought up the flageolet in the tea-tray, and she could not well have gone down again on purpose to fetch it. Something therefore was to be omitted as an excuse. Exquisite witch! But do I love her the less dearly for it? I cannot"]

We are almost tempted to terminate our quotations upon the score of Tom-foolery at this point—poor SALLY bringing up the tea-tray—her sister "has forgot" the tea-pot sure enough. Little more can be wanting to display this lecturer upon SHAKSPEARE in his proper colours. But let us wait awhile, and see—perhaps one or two more specimens may not be unamusing.

If we were anxious here to display the baseness of the writer, we should cite a dialogue at page 20—but it is as indecent in its language as it is false in the facts it alludes to; and as we are only upon the foolish part of the subject at present, we will omit any notice of it here.

The dialogue which begins at p. 31, is very much of the same complexion; but SALLY in that, distinctly tells HAZLITT of another attachment—we beg our readers to mark this—and, after offering to marry her, when he gets his WIFE DIVORCED, which, as our readers shall see, he actually goes to Scotland to get done; and, after calling SALLY a "sublime little creature," she happens to mention, that the object of her affections is like BUONAPARTE—Hear the rest of this ye British public, who listen to MR. HAZLITT'S Lectures, and who read his TABLE TALK—it any such there be.

"H. If you talk about that, you'll unman me. But tell me my love,—I have thought of it as something that might account for some circumstances; that is, as a mere possibility. But tell me, there was not a likeness between me and your old lover that struck you at first sight? Was there?

"S. No, Sir, none!!!

"H. Well, I didn't think it likely there should!!!

"S. But there was a likeness.

"H. To whom?

"S. To that little IMAGE! (looking intently on a small bronze figure of Buonaparte on the mantle-piece.)

"H. What, do you mean to Buonaparte?

"S. Yes, all but the nose was just like!!!

"H. And was his figure the same?

"S. He was taller!

"[I got up and gave her THE IMAGE, and told her it was her's by every right that was sacred. She refused at first to take so valuable a curiosity, and said she would keep it for me. But I pressed it eagerly, and she took it. She immediately came and sat down, and put her arm round my neck, and kissed me, and I said, 'Is it not plain we are the best friends in the world, since we are always so glad to make it up?' And then I added 'How odd it was that the GOD OF MY IDOLATRY should turn out to be like her idol, and said it was no wonder that the same face which awed the world should conquer the sweetest creature in it!' How I loved her at that moment! Is it possible that the wretch who writes this could ever have been so blest! Heavenly delicious creature! Can I live without her?—Oh! no—never—never.

"'What is this world? What asken men to have,
Now with his love, now in the cold grave,
Alone withouten any compagnie!'"

Let me but see her again! She cannot hate the man who loves her as I do.]"

The fool, when he wrote this trash, was fifty years old and upwards, and at least a twelvemonth older when he published it.

Here we really have done with the folly of the affair—it is too sickening to proceed with—we will therefore come to that part, which, while it is equally contemptible, is more reprehensible, inasmuch, as no man can help being a fool, but any man may avoid being that, which is a great deal worse.

It will appear that this HAZLITT took these lodgings at one hundred guineas per annum; whether he paid for them in money, or only by giving a bill, which was dishonoured, we do not pretend to say; but this we know, that after having made every effort which a very ill-looking middle-aged man could make to undermine the principles of SALLY, he took to the resolution of publishing a book about her.

We honestly confess, that if MR. HAZLITT'S proceedings had ended wi h his acquaintance with little SALLY we should never have disturbed him in his exalted pursuit, but have considered the young lady as one of the pleasantest little Sallies we had ever fallen in with when thinking about him; but the fellow brags—writes to MR. PATMORE, a pawnbroker's son, who, alas! was second to the MR. SCOTT, who was shot in a duel, and brags of his intimacy, &c. with this unoffending girl. We say, why should this young woman be calumniated?—why should the disappointed dotard—the impotent sensualist—gratify the only passion he has it in his power to enjoy, SPITE, at the expense of this young woman—the cockneys are mighty particular about scandalizing ladies, we change places with the cockneys, and feel the spirit of democracy strong upon us—why are we to be so mightily squeamish about Lady this thing, or Lady 'nother thing, and give up to perdition a poor plebeian girl, who is just as well known, and just as much looked at, in the lower classes in which she and her gloating enemy move, without vindicating her character.

MR. HUNT.

MR. HUNT, the popular Whig, said he would subscribe one hundred guineas to the Greeks;—when he was asked for it he said it must be some other MR. HUNT who had said so: and he assured the asker, that he was very happy to hear that any man of the name of HUNT had so much money to give away!

A short pamphlet, called "Brief Remarks on Scriptural Notices, respecting Bondmen," has been handed to us, in which the cry of the unlawfulness of Slavery is ably combatted—we would recommend a perusal of this little publication; perhaps an extract may induce our readers to go through with it:—

"Slavery, in the mysterious dispensations of Providence is a lot authorized by the Supreme law-giver, the great architect of the Universe. 'Both thy bond men and bond maids, which thou shalt have, shall be of the heathen that are round about you; of them shall ye buy bond men and bond maids. Moreover, of the Children of the Strangers that do sojourn among you; of them shall ye buy; and of their families that are with you, which they begat in your land: and they shall be your possession. And ye shall take them as an inheritance for your children after you to inherit them for a possession; they shall be your bond men for ever.' Leviticus, c. 25.

"A great distinction appears to be made in the case of an Israelite, should he become a Slave, and the manner in which he might regain his freedom, is thus pointed out by the same Divine authority,—ver. 48. 'After that he is sold he may be redeemed again; one of his brethren may redeem him; either his uncle or his uncle's son may redeem him, or any that is nigh of kin unto him of his family may redeem him; or if he be able he may redeem himself. And he shall reckon with him that bought him from the year that he was sold to him until the year of jubilee; and the price of his sale shall be according unto the number of years, according to the time of an hired servant shall it be with him.'

"In the chapter following the ten commandments, it is written. 'If thou buy an Hebrew servant, six years he shall serve; and in the seventh he shall go out free for nothing. If he came in by himself, he shall go out by himself: if he were married, then his wife shall go out with him. If his master have given him a wife, and she have borne him sons or daughters; the wife and her children shall be her masters, and he shall go out by himself. Exodus chap. 21.'

"The Jews are now scattered over the face of the earth; and we know it is in fulfilment of a prophecy denounced against them. So in Genesis, chap. 9, we find that on account of the offence committed by HAM against his father, his posterity to his fourth son CANAAN are doomed to be the slaves of his brethren. The words of the text are "Cursed be CANAAN, a servant of servants shall he be unto his brethren." Now, CUSH was the eldest son of HAM, and in the Hebrew language Cush means black. The Ethiopians were called Cushim, "children of CUSH," and learned mythologists believe the Negroes to be of that descent.

"The Bishop of Llandaff, who wrote in defence of the Bible, said 'There is one short argument, if there were no other, which proves that slavery is not, as such, opposite to justice. God cannot authorise injustice; but he did authorise slavery among the Jews: therefore slavery is not opposite to justice. Nor am I certain that slavery is any where expressly forbidden by the letter of the New Testament. Man stealing is indeed expressly forbidden to Christians, as it was, under the penalty of death, forbidden to the Jews; but the Greek word rendered men stealers, in the new Testament, does not probably mean the same as men buyers, nor can we from thence infer, that a traffic in slaves is tetidem verbis, prohibited to Christians.'

"Thus in the case of Onesimus the slave, who ran away from his master Philemon, a primitive and exemplary christian, St. Paul after converting him, did not declare him free, but sent him back again to Philemon."

These and other authorities are appositely quoted, and must, we should hope, afford some consolation to the weepers and wailers of modern philosophy.

CLARE, THE NORTHAMPTONSHIRE PEASANT.

Our attention has been drawn to the Poems of this very extraordinary person, whose talents are indeed of a superior order.—We lament that we are unable to give any lengthened extracts from his publication, but we do him only justice in bringing his name before the public.

This humble but talented individual has been patronized and brought forward by that exemplary nobleman LORD RADSTOCK; and we hope we shall not offend the correspondent who favoured us with a copy of the following lines by CLARE, addressed to his Lordship, in giving them to our readers, as a tribute to the talents of the Poet and the fostering liberality of his patron:—

EFFUSION.

TO THE RIGHT HON. ADMIRAL LORD RADSTOCK.

'Tis sweet to recollect life's past controuls,
And turn to days of sorrow, when they're by,
And think of gentle friends and feeling souls,
That offered shelter when the storm was high—
It thrills my heart! as mariners have turned,
When 'scap'd from shipwreck, 'mid the billows' roar,
To look on fragments, that the tempest spurned,
On which they clung, and struggled to the shore;—
As sweet it is to turn—and hour by hour,
Reflection muses on the good and great,
That lent a portion of their wealthy power,
And saved a wormling from destruction's fate!
Oft to the patron of her first essays,
The rural muse—oh, RADSTOCK! turns her eye,
Not with the fulsome whine of fawning praise,
But soul's deep gushings—in a silent sigh!
As the pale blossom, dwindling deep in shade,
Should e'er a sun-beam to its lot be given,
Perks up, in hopeful bloom, its feeble head,
And seemly offers silent thanks to heaven!

THE following hand-bill was printed at Dublin, with the Printer's name and residence, and we are credibly informed has been most widely and actively circulated among the most populous towns and cities in Ireland. It hardly needs any comment; but surely either we are to infer that the genius and temper of Roman Catholic Religion is different in Ireland from what it is in England, or we cannot but think, from this and various other symptoms which everywhere present themselves to us, that the extension of various civil powers to the Roman Catholics, particularly that most commanding one the elective franchise, is formidably dangerous and ill timed in the extreme.

That the genius and temper of the Roman Catholic Religion is one and the same in all places, is one of the first articles of their own creed, and therefore we are not at liberty to take any difference into our consideration, particularly as far as their priesthood is concerned. The pretext of placing the English Roman Catholics upon the same footing with the Irish appears, as we have before said, somewhat plausible to superficial observers. But the reason alledged for conceding the elective franchise to English Catholics, because it has been conceded to the Irish, is the strongest ground for withholding it. In Ireland the experiment HAS TOTALLY FAILED; and instead of conciliation, tranquillity, or goodwill, it has been the occasion of CONTINUED MASSACRES, CONFLAGRATION, AND ATROCITIES, which have appalled and agonized that country. Nay, even the tide of Protestant benevolence, which so liberally flowed in upon the Irish population beyond example of former times and occasions, does not appear to have in the smallest degree softened their antipathy to that benevolent religion which forgot all and administered to their wants.

Is there then the smallest ground to suppose that the Roman Catholic religion in England, or its priesthood, will by this concession be softened towards Protestantism? which concession will be ascribed by them, not to the generosity, but to the infatuated blindness of those who granted it. Instead of conveying satisfaction and content, it will produce, as every concession has hitherto done, irritated claims for further powers, which claims will never cease till the surrender of the Protestant succession is effected. The English constitution will become an anomaly by the discordancy of Roman Catholic electors and Protestant members, which, the moment it is granted, will be urged as a ground of their admission into Parliament. How far the tempers, which appear in the conduct and writings of those under whose absolute guidance the Roman Catholics act, will render this desirable, (for the following is not an isolated document) we may be able shortly to convince our readers. At present we repeat our warning to the country—let our representatives pause ere they vote, and remember that in granting the elective franchise to Papists in this country, they receive the Trojan horse within their walls, and supply the means of levelling the whole of the constitution, civil and ecclesiastical.—We now beg attention to the following hand-bill:—

"'The gift of prophecy, like that of miracles, has not entirely ceased in the Church.' Right Rev. Dr. Doyle's Address.

"SIGNIOR PASTORINI'S PROPHECY,

"FROM THE APOCALYPSE OF ST. JOHN.

"(Extracted from the 'General History of the Christian Church.')

"'Blessed is he that readeth and heareth the words of this prophecy, and keepeth those which are written in it, for the time is at hand.'—Apoc. ch. 1. ver. xiii.

"THE OPENING OF THE FIFTH SEAL—Apoc. chap. 6. ver. ix.—'And when he (the Lamb) had opened the fifth seal, I saw,' says St. John, 'under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held.'

"Ver. x. 'And they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, Lord holy and true, dost thou not judge and revenge our blood on them that dwell on earth.'

"In allusion to this (says SIGNIOR PASTORINI) the souls, or precious spiritual remains of those whose bodies had been slain, and sacrificed in the fire of persecution, are here seen under the altar. England shewed itself very forward in persecuting those who were attached to the ancient faith. Henry the Eighth put to death thirteen abbots and priors, about seventy-seven monks and religious persons, and many of the laity: violent also was the persecution in QUEEN ELIZABETH'S reign.

"We have now seen who they are that have been slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held. These martyrs are the objects represented under the fifth seal, as those who suffered by the hands of the Protestants. We may fix the fifth epoch, or commencement of the fifth age of the Church, at the year 1525.

"THE SOUNDING OF THE FIFTH TRUMPET.—Apoc. chap. ix. v. 1. 'There was given to him the key of the bottomless pit.' To St. Peter was given the keys of heaven, but to Luther is given the key of the bottomless pit, or hell. Alas! What a woeful difference, and what disparity is here indicated in the character and functions of the Apostle, and the Reformer.

"Ver. ii. 'And he opened the bottomless pit, and the smoke of the pit arose as the smoke of a great furnace.' What can this smoke be, but a strong spirit of Seduction, which had been hatched in Hell, or had the Devil for its parent, and which at Luther's opening Hell's door, immediately burst out, impregnated with this spirit of seduction. He brought forth a doctrine big with delusion and error.'

"Ver. 3. 'From the smoke of the pit there came out locusts upon the earth.' The meaning of which is, that the spirit of seduction, denoted by the smoke of the abyss, raised up a number of Reformers.

"Ver. 5. 'And it was given unto them (the locusts) that they should not kill them, but that they should torment them 5 months.' They are not permitted to kill, that is, utterly to destroy and exterminate the Catholics. Experience shews that notwithstanding the Protestant Princes have taken much pains to extirpate the Catholic religion they have not been able to compass it. The Catholics have been grievously oppressed, and many even put to death; nevertheless, by divine protection, they still exist. It is said this torture was to last five months. Here the Almighty prescribes a term to that great severity the Protestants were permitted to exercise against the true servants of God. The term is five months, or 150 days, giving thirty days to each month, (days in the prophetic style are sometimes used for years.) If then the 150 years be counted from the year 1525, about which time these violences began to take place, they will bring us to the year 1675.

"V. x. 'And they (the locusts) had tails like to scorpions, and there were stings in their tails, and their power was to hurt men for five months.' That here began a new period of five months, or 150 years, different from that mentioned in the fifth verse, is not a groundless supposition, for whoever studies the Apocalypse will find in it such extreme precaution, that the same thing is never repeated in the same circumstances. The distinction of two periods, each one hundred and fifty years, being thus stated, as the first began with the Reformation, about the year 1525, and expired in 1675, the second will reach to 1825. The description is full and circumstantial, and takes in the period of 300 years, allowed to the reign of the locusts, of which term there remains now but one; one cannot but wish with an earnest heart, that the people represented by these insects would enter into a serious consideration of that circumstance. What a happiness if, during this short remaining interval, some part of them would submit to see their errors, and the great mischief that has been done to the church by their revolt against it. It is full time to lay down all animosity against their ancient mother, think of a reconciliation, and ask to be received again into her bosom.]

"THE POURING OUT OF THE FIFTH VIAL.—Apoc. chap. 16, ver. x. 'And the fifth angel,' says St. John, 'poured out his vial upon the seat of the beast: and his kingdom became dark, and they gnawed their tongues for pain.'

"Ver. xi. 'And they blasphemed the God of heaven because of their pains and wounds, and did not penance for their works.'

"The vial being poured on the throne of the beast, it flows down from thence over his whole kingdom, the realm of the reformation; for his kingdom became dark, and they gnawed their tongues for pain; but with respect to the nature of this punishment we shall be entirely silent, and leave it to be disclosed by the event; we shall only remark that to judge from the expression of the text, the scourge seems to be severe, and we are extremely sorry it will be so ill received.

"And they blasphemed the God of heaven, because of their pains and wounds, (or sores) and did not penance for their works.

"Indeed the time is now come when the Protestants, if they wish to preserve to themselves and their children, even a relic of Christianity, must unite with the great, the only organized body of Christians, the catholic church. If they do not, the two demons of infidelity and fanaticism, which are tearing Protestantism into a hundred pieces, will inevitably swallow it up altogether."—Rev. R. Hayes's Preface to Gallityen.

TO JOHN BULL.

Edinburgh, 7th June, 1823.

MY DEAR JOHN—Those rogues the reporters, as you call them, really ought to be punished. You cannot be aware of the abominable lies and absurdities which they have put into the mouth of that sapient and veracious nobleman, LORD ARCHIBALD HAMILTON, in reporting his speech on the motion about Scots County Reform. But don't be alarmed; I am not going to trouble you with that subject, which is beyond my sphere; I am a humble limb of the law, and mean to confine myself to the calumnies he is reported (falsely, no doubt,) to have uttered against the Court of Session. In the report given in the Courier, he is made to say, in relation to the law-suits in which he had been engaged in consequence of his contest with Sir Alexander Cochrane—

"These law-suits, in matters connected with an election, had given rise to all sorts of speculations, whether the President of this or that Court was more or less inclined against him, and he would say, that down to a recent period, there was great foundation for such speculations, and that under what was called the Old Fifteen, the decision of each Judge on a political question could be foretold with almost as much certainty as a vote in the House of Commons."

Now, my dear John, under the Old Fifteen, as he elegantly calls the Judges, that is when the whole fifteen Judges sat in and formed one Court, there was, and could be, only one President, and of course there could not, by possibility, be any speculation as to how the President of this or that Court might be inclined towards him or any other person.

Next he says, that at that time the vote of each Judge (mark the word each) could be foretold, on political questions, almost as well as a vote in the House of Commons. Now, among the Old Fifteen, down to the last moment in which they all sat together, there were three Judges decided friends of Lord Archibald Hamilton and of the Opposition. I mean Lords Cullen, Bannatyne, and Annadale, though the last, I believe, has not been very steady in his principles, but at that time he was decidedly in Opposition. Therefore, if the votes of each Judge, in political questions, could be foreseen, it follows that these eminent Whig Judges, friends of the Noble Lord, were as much swayed by political bias as the rest of their brethren. How the learned Whigs of Edinburgh will relish this attack on their friends on the Bench, I leave them to say. I shall only say, that the whole of this charge, thus put into the mouth of Lord Archibald, is an infamous falsehood. No man but himself ever impeached the integrity of the Old Fifteen in election questions; on the contrary, it has ever been acknowledged, that if there is any one department in the administration of justice, of which the Old Fifteen had more reason to be proud than another, it is that of Election Law. I appeal to Mr. Wight's Treatise on that subject: Mr. Wight was a staunch Whig, and what may perhaps surprise Lord Archibald, he was an honest man; and his work exhibits a series of more uniformly consistent decisions on Election Law than, perhaps, is to be found in the decisions of the Court of Session on any other subject.

Since Mr. Wight's time, there has been some vacillancy, no doubt, but not in the Court of Session. Lord Thurlow, in the House of Lords, ordered those questions to be put to voters, on which Lord Archibald is so facetious, in order to discover whether their claims were nominal and fictitious, or not. The Court of Session was obliged to comply, contrary to the practice of above fifty years. Lord Eldon has since seen cause to doubt of the soundness of Lord Thurlow's views, and has reversed some decisions of the Court of Session, given in obedience to the judgments of the latter. This has occasioned some inconsistency in the latter decisions; but the fault, if it be one, lies not with the Court of Session, but with the House of Lords. And I again repeat, that a more consistent Body of Law is no where to be found than in the decisions of the Court of Session on election cases.

Now this could not have happened, if their votes had been governed by their political predilections; because the same uniform judgment would not have suited their friends in different counties and burghs—what they found to be a good or bad vote in one county or burgh, the interest of a friend would have often required them to find exactly the reverse in another place. But no such inconsistencies are to be found—and the whole of this charge, as put into the mouth of Lord Archibald, is a most infamous falsehood, equally injurious to his friends and his opponents, and most mischievously calculated to render the administration of justice suspected by the people.

In truth, Sir, as far as county votes are concerned, it was hardly possible for the Court of Session to be partial, even if they had been profligate enough to wish it—for the validity of a vote in a Scots county must depend on the very same forms and principles of conveyancing on which the whole land rights of Scotland turn—and the very same decisions which they gave on the most insignificant vote, they must have applied, and always have applied, to the determination of every feudal question.

The reporters then go on to make Lord Archibald utter this monstrous mixture of falsehood and absurdity.

"He knew that the state of things was now materially altered, but still the political bias of the Courts of Scotland was such, that no man of common sense, who could avoid it, would venture within their walls on a political question."

Now, Sir, here is first a falsehood, that things are now materially altered in the Court of Session. The Constitution of the Court, no doubt, is materially altered, for it is now divided into two Courts of five Judges each. But its political integrity, or as Lord Archibald is made to call it, its political bias is not materially altered. It is exactly the same, as under the Old Fifteen—that is:—Its integrity is unquestionable, and its bias exists not but in the foul mouth of this rogue of a reporter. In short, this is a silly unmeaning compliment to the present Judges (many of whom, by the bye, composed part of the Old Fifteen) at the expence of the former, which, as they do not deserve, I am persuaded they will reject with contempt. I have called it an unmeaning compliment, for, after all, Sir, (and here comes the absurdity following the lie) how are things materially changed, if the Court be still so notoriously partial on political questions, that no man of common sense will venture within its walls, if he can possibly avoid it? How will Lord Archibald explain this nonsense which his reporter has put into his mouth? And can the opinions of his friends Lords Bannatyne, Gillies, and Alloway, be as certainly foretold as those of his former friends of the fifteen, Lords Cullen, Bannatyne, and Annadale?

But, I repeat again, that it is all "false as hell," both in regard to his friends and his foes. And if it were possible to suppose that Lord Archibald ever uttered so foul a calumny, it could only have arisen from a perfect knowledge of his own character, suggesting the suspicion of such conduct in others—all of them gentlemen by birth and education, and some of them of families, as noble and ancient as his own.

But, Sir, the reporters have not done with Lord Archibald, nor have I done with the reporters. They go on to make him say,—

"He would stake his credit to prove this bias in the case where he was pursuer against the Beacon Newspaper."

The mustard may be nought, and yet the noble Lord not forsworn. His credit!—Let us see what is due to it, if these rogues the reporters are correct—Now mark, John, and call on thy readers to mark! Lord Archibald's action against the Beacon, was not tried before the Court of Session at all. The summons was called in the Court of Session, but by the Jury Act, every action of damages must be instantly and peremptorily remitted to the Jury Court. Accordingly, Lord Pitmilly, the ordinary before whom it came, after hearing what was the nature of the action, did, as he was bound to do, remit it to the Jury Court, although the counsel for the Beacon urged strenuously that there were several points of law which ought to be previously determined.

The Beacon petitioned the second division of the Court against Lord Pitmilly's judgment, which petition was unanimously refused. This is what Lord Archibald stakes his credit to be political bias, and that too against him. "Call you this backing your friends, Hal—a plague of such backing, say I."

Now, what followed—The cause went to the Jury Court, and the cause was tried before a Jury under the direction of Lord Archibald's friend, the Lord Chief Commissioner Adam, who charged in his favour, and under a summons, concluding for 5000l. of damages, the Jury gave—one shilling.

Now, Sir, does the reporter mean that the bias here was in the Judge or in the Jury. Let the reporter, or Lord Archibald, if he chooses, make his choice. If he says it was in the judge, then, at least we shall have an admission that a Whig judge can have a political bias as well as a Tory one. If he says the bias was in the jury, though chosen by ballot, and purified by challenges, then I ask, how Lord Archibald is made to libel this institution, which is the perpetual theme of Whig admiration, and the motto on the Ex-Chancellor Erskine's broom carts? And how he came to vote for introducing into Scotland a mode of trial for which the political depravity of the people so little fits them, that an impartial jury cannot be had to try a case in which public men are concerned, and political opinions are involved.

And so, Sir, I leave Lord Archibald, or rather his reporter, to redeem his credit, which he is said to have staked on proving a political bias against him in the Court of Session, in his question with the Beacon, which that Court did not try, and showed no desire, and made no attempt to try.

But the fact is, Sir, that these rogues, the reporters, not Lord Archibald of course, are plainly accomplices in the great conspiracy existing, to render the existing Establishments of the Church and the Law odious to the people, as the most certain and effectual means to prepare their minds for that Revolution to which the Radical Whigs are so palpably endeavouring to urge them, and against which infamous attempts it is your chief aim to guard your countrymen. I am, Sir, yours,

QUINDECEMOIR.

TO JOHN BULL.

Black Rock, June 6, 1823.

Sir—The deep sense entertained of the unparalleled services your admirable journal has rendered to the vital interests of the British empire, has been too frequently acknowledged by every man attached to his King and Government (and by none more frequently than by myself) to require repetition at present.

You view that hereditary facetious philosopher's (Lord Nugent) intended Bill with the eye of a Statesman prospectively. This miserable and short-sighted Legislator is as little aware of the evils which he is forcing upon his country—by an extension of the elective franchise—as he appeared to be of the state of Ireland, when he presumed to turn into ridicule that part of my petition to the House of Commons descriptive of the true character of the Popish conspiracy, now ready to explode over the entire of this devoted country. As to the legislative merriment of this dignified Whig jester, it gives me less concern than the Amalekites has occasioned to that loyal and temperate advocate Henry Brougham. But as I am deeply interested in the peace and glory of England, I shall be much obliged by your extracting from my petition, the passage which I have marked, it being corroborative of your just observations in the last Bull, respecting the enormous growth of Popery since the establishment of the secret society of Jesuits in England.—I have the honour to be, Sir, very faithfully, yours,

HARCOURT LEES.

"That the Petitioner, now in the awful presence of his God, most solemnly implores the House, whose dignity and character are dearer to him than his blood, to reflect upon the following important fact before it may be too late for remedy or revision: that the present Pope of Rome issued a Bull, dated so late as August, 1814, addressed to the Titular Prelates in Ireland, as well as in all the ecclesiastical states, for the restoration of the dangerous and secret order of Jesuits; that intriguing society having purchased an estate in the county of Kildare, and an extensive mansion in the spring of the same year, the property of the late Wogan Browne, Esq. and having actually paid down 16,000l. for the estate on which they have founded a college with several Jesuit Professors, the establishment lately containing nearly four hundred graduates; that the same order has within the last seven years founded another establishment at Clondalkin, within four miles of the city of Dublin, where they educate their active travelling emissaries in all kinds of handicraft trades, whom, when properly instructed, they send out through the empire, under the pretence of looking for field-work, or employment at their respective trades, but in reality for the purpose of corrupting the minds, and organizing into a treasonable association, the entire body of the lower order of Panists in that country, as well as in England, in which revolutionary object they are most powerfully assisted by the insidious and unremitting efforts of that numerous society of Jesuits, established since the early part of the present century, at Stonyhurst, in Lancashire; the framers and fomentors of all those insurrectionary unions which have endangered the tranquillity of the Northern Counties in England, and the great manufacturing towns of Scotland in which popery prevails for several years past; that at the accession of our late pious, afflicted, and ever to be lamented Protestant Monarch George III. the father of his faithful subjects, the venerated protector of the Church of England, as by law established, the total number of Papists in Great Britain did not amount to thirty thousand; that at the termination of the last century their numbers had increased to 69,376, i.e. had rather more than doubled in thirty-five years, but the Petitioner has no hesitation in assuring the House, that since the establishment of the Jesuits, and their various and dispersed agents, the total number of Papists throughout Great Britain alone falls little short, if it does not exceed six hundred thousand at the present hour; whilst their colleges, schools, and junior seminaries, have multiplied from three to sixty-two, and their chapels, convents, and nunneries, from scarcely twenty to upwards of eight hundred, as will be ascertained, if an enumeration shall be ordered, which the Petitioner hopes may be this Parliament."

Mr. Middleton, Officer of Excise, stationed at Maguire's-bridge, having received information of several distilleries in a mountain district near Tempo, went out in that direction on Friday, 23d ult. accompanied by the informer, and a party of the 66th Regiment. In the lands of Tonyglaskin they found a quantity of potale in the house of a man named Hunter, and in another house they also found a quantity, all of which they destroyed, making a prisoner in each of the houses. While Mr. Middleton was securing the prisoners, the informer, with a part of the soldiers, proceeded to another distillery, expecting Mr. Middleton to follow them immediately. Daylight now approaching, a dense fog arose and obscured Mr. Middleton's view of his guide, and neither party was able to find the other, or to make out the place they were in quest of. The alarm having gone abroad through the country, a large party assembled, amounting to about two hundred persons, armed with guns, bayonets, and other weapons, and coming up with the informer and the soldiers, some seized the latter, while others abused the informer in a most barbarous manner, threatening instant death to the soldiers in case they attempted resistance. The poor wretch who was the object of their vengeance had his head dreadfully cut and battered, and received several bayonet wounds in his body, on which the stock of a musket was broken. Having satisfied their brutality the fellows dispersed.—Enniskillen Paper.

Very extensive seizures have been recently made among the French milliners at the west end of the town.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

June 12.—The King of Spain was still at Seville on the 2d June, and the greatest agitation prevailed in that City. Milans and Llobera, desperate from the deplorable situation in which they find themselves at Barcelona, where famine threatens to provoke an insurrection, have attempted a new attack against our troops. At Granolles, after a tolerably smart action, General Curial completely defeated the Constitutionalists. The General afterwards advanced beyond Granolles, and our troops are in sight of Barcelona. It is said that the head-quarters of Marshal Moncey will be transferred to Granolles.

The Moniteur of Monday contains four despatches from Spain, besides the notification of a fifth, which has not yet been published. The two first are from Guilleminot, Chief of the Staff to the Duke of Angouleme, and are dated Madrid the 1st and 2d instant; the third is from Marshal Moncey, dated Vich, the 30th ult., and the suppressed despatch, which is dated likewise Vich, the 2d, is also from Moncey, to which is annexed a report from General Donnadieu, dated Solzona, the 1st instant. The despatches from General Guilleminot announce the march of two columns, one of 7000 men, under Count Bordesoult, by the route of Aranjuez, La Mancha, and Cordova, for Seville; the other of 8000 men, comprehending General Vallin's division. This column is placed under the orders of Lieutenant General Bourmont, and is to proceed by Truxillo to Estremadura, where it is to act according to circumstances, and either march on Badajos, or join the first column at Seville. There will only remain in Madrid 5000 men, compcsed of three battalions and a regiment of cavalry of the guard, and a part of the division of Autichamp of the 1st corps; and the remainder of the troops will be encamped in the environs. Count Molitor arrived at Caspe on the 29th, whence he would proceed on the following day to Alcaniz, to encountera Constitutional corps, which he was informed had pursued 1500 Royalists in that direction. Count Molitor has left troops at Saragossa, the castle of which is in a state of defence. This city will form the basis of his line of operations. Viscount Donnadieu's despatch states that Mina pursued night and day, sword in hand, effected his escape, particularly at Baja, only by miracle. He threw himself into a frightful precipice, the access to which was impassible. Soon after, without giving his soldiers a single moment of rest, he marched them across the highest mountains, towards the Seo d'Urgel, which he entered. He experienced much desertion on the way. According to all the reports which have reached me, the army of Mina is diminished and completely demoralized.

Army of the Pyrenees.—"Report of M. the Major-General to his Excellency the Minister Secretary of State for the War Department:—The division Bourck continued its movement upon Leon. The advance guard of this division, commanded by M. the Major-General Count de la Roche Jacquelin, occupied that town on the 31st May. On the 1st of June, a reconnoitring detachment of 100 cavalry, supported by 200 infantry, marched upon Astorga. On the 2d, at day-break, this detachment fell in with the enemy's rear-guard, about a league distant from, and on this side of, Astorga, composed of 1000 men, of whom 300 were cavalry, who prepared to retire. Our chasseurs and hussars instantly charged the enemy, threw their ranks into disorder, and pursued them a league and half beyond Astorga; twelve or fifteen men killed, a greater number wounded, 150 prisoners, (amongst whom are Major-General Santiago-Wall, and the Chief d'Escadron Manuel-Maiie Romero) are the result of this brilliant affair of the advanced guard." [The Report concludes with naming certain officers, who merited thanks.]

"Head-quarters at Madrid, June 6, 1823.—By order of his Royal Highness the Major-General.

The Journal of Toulouse says, that the train of artillery destined for the army, composed of about 400 waggons, is to set out in a few days for Bayonne, and that 2000 horses are daily expected, for the purpose of transporting them. The army of reserve, to be commanded by Marshal Lauriston, will consist of 12,0000 men. The Journal des Debats has published the following proclamation of Abisbal, explanatory of his letter to Montijo, in which he endeavours to discriminate between his duty as a General, and his sentiments as a private citizen.

"Don Henriquez O'Donell, Knight of the Grand Cross of the National and Military Order of San Fernando, &c. General in Chief of the Third Corps of the Army of Operations, &c.

"Having learned that some evil-disposed persons, confounding my private opinion with the sacred laws which my oaths and my duty impose upon me, have endeavoured to make it appear that I was not disposed to maintain the Constitution of 1812 to the last extremity, and before the Act of the National Representatives, legitimately constituted, should have made certain changes therein.

"I declare that I am determined to defend it, such as I have sworn it, until it becomes changed by the modes prescribed by itself, and that I consider as traitors to their country all Spaniards who, departing from the course traced out by the law, shall cease to obey its dictates.

"Such were my sentiments, when, in reply to a communication from M. de Montijo, I wrote a letter, which I am informed has been made public; and such will ever be my sentiments, because my opinion as an individual will never interfere with the rigid performance of my duty as a General and a Spanish citizen.

(Signed) "Count DE L'ABISBAL.

"Madrid, May 17, 1823."

Madrid, June 6.—(From the Journal des Debats of yesterday.—"A person, in whom full confidence may be placed, left Seville on the 2d of June, and arrived last night at Madrid. He states that Seville was in the greatest ferment; and that the battalion of Marines had evinced a determination not to let the King be removed. The Regency are organizing the Spanish Royal Guard. Before long the 6000 men who formed this faithful troop on the 7th July will be re-assembled. A Spanish Royalist corps of 3000 men precedes the French column which is advancing from Madrid upon Seville by Cordova. The few troops belonging to the Cortes under Colonel Abad, surnamed Chiteco, dispersed in various directions before arriving at the Sierre Morena. Another Spanish corps of three or four thousand men marches with General Bourmont, and is traversing Estremadura, to reach Seville also, by the way of Truxillo and Merida. If necessary, it can operate upon Badajoz, should the Cortes wish to go there, which is not probable. The Marquis de Talaru set off on Tuesday morning at eleven o'clock with some of his Secretaries. The Marquis is nominated Ambassador of France to King Ferdinand, and accredited as such to the Regency during the captivity of the King. It is affirmed that the diplomatic agents of Russia and Austria will set off at the end of the week for the same destination. The arrival, in Paris, of the Charge d'Affaires of Prussia for Spain is every moment expected.

Accounts from Seville say, that the head-quarters of the 10th district were transferred, on the 17th, to Carmona. Count D'Amarante is at Zamora, without any kind of functions or troops. It is affirmed that there has been a movement in favour of the Royalists at Aranjuez.

Letters from Corunna of the 26th confirm the reports respecting the sailing of several privateers, which immediately stood out to sea; the French cruizers do not go from the coast of Gallicia and the Asturias, into which provinces the French troops have not yet penetrated.—The legion of Sir R. Wilson is organizing with rapidity, and is expected to be a very fine corps.—The good intentions of Portugal with regard to Spain remain unaltered; an army of 60,000 men is to be assembled on the frontiers.—The Duke of San Carlos, who passed through here five days ago on his way to Madrid, has returned. Some say that he is offended at not being a member of the Regency; others, that he is charged with an important mission.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A squadron of ships is preparing for attendance upon his Majesty, to rendezvous at Spithead on the 24th inst. They will consist of the Royal George yacht, the Hon. T. B. Capel—the Royal Sovereign yacht, Capt. Charles Adam—and the Prince Regent yacht, Capt. Sir Michael Seymour, together with some sloops and smaller vessels now at Chatham and Portsmouth.

A letter from Cowes says, His Majesty's visit to the Isle of Wight this season is no longer doubtful. The Dock-yard boy, from Portsmouth, is just arrived with the yachts' moorings, and the people on board are observed busily employed in placing them in their old position. The Royal George yacht, bearing Admiral Sir Charles Paget's flag, is ordered to Spithead on Saturday next.

On Tuesday the General Committee of the National Society for the Education of the Poor in the principles of the Established Church, held their Meeting at St. Martin's vestry room. Present—Archbishop of Canterbury, Archbishop of York, Bishop of London, Bishop of St. Asaph, Bishop of Exeter, Lord Kenyon, Archdeacon Pratt, Archdeacon Watson, and other Members of the Committee.

Hayley's Memoirs.—The publication of this work, for which, with another of his productions, the Author received upwards of five thousand pounds; has already created a considerable sensation, his enemies seizing the opportunity have not failed to calumniate whilst his friends have been equally ready to defend him. Meanwhile the demand for the work increases, as it becomes known that it contains the intimacies of a long life, passed amidst connexions of the very first order; among the distinguished names mentioned are those of Gibbon, Dr. Beattie, the Earl of Charlemont, Lord Chatham, the poet Cowper, Captain Cook, the Earl of Egremont, the Duchess of Devonshire, Mad. de Genlis, Jonas Hanway, the philanthropist Howard, Sir R. Hotham, Lord Hardwick, Lady Hesketh, Lord Holland, Bishop Lowth, Lady Lucan, the Bishop of Llandaff, Sir Simon Le Blanc, Sir J. Malcolm, the poet Mason, Marmontel, Lady Melville, Sir John Miller, Mr. Pitt, Lord Lansdowne, Lord Powlett, the Duke of Richmond, Lord Sheffield, Lord Spencer, Mrs. Siddons, Miss Seward, Lord Thurlow, Dr. Warton, Mr. Wilberforce, with many others of his more private friends, whom it would be impossible to particularize.

A Special Meeting of the Common Council was held on Friday to receive the report of the Committee for General Purposes, on the Petition of the Greek Committee for aid in behalf of the Greek Cause, and also for the disposal of public business. The report of the Committee recommended that 500l. be granted in aid of the Greeks. Mr. James proposed to grant 1000l.; the amendment was carried, there being not more than seven or eight dissentients.

The Oxford Commemoration Festival took place on Tuesday. The city was never, perhaps, on such an occasion, so thin of distinguished company. The Concert took place at four o'clock, in the Sheldonian Theatre, which was completely filled; upwards of 3000 persons were present.

C. Taylor provides a great treat for his friends as well as the juvenile branches, on Friday, the 20th. The Exile with all its original splendour, aided by the horses, will be the first performance. After a Concert, in which that delightful little warbler, Master Smith (nephew to Miss Stephens) is to sing two popular ballads. To conclude with the grand spectacle of Blue Beard.

The Directors of the Bank of England, with the view of extending the employment of their capital, have adopted the resolution of making advances of money on the security of Bank stock, at the rate of four per cent. interest.

On Sunday morning, shortly after the Swift steam packet had entered Hotspur harbour, from Brighton, her boiler, containing, it is said, about eight tons of boiling water, burst, with a dreadful explosion, and blew up a considerable part of her upper deck to a great height. Mr. Griffith, the agent, and one of the crew, were severely scalded.

(Circular) Horse Guards, 7th June, 1823.

Sir—I am directed by the Commander-in-Chief to desire, that in future all Proposals for Exchanges between Officers of the Regiment under your command, and those of any other corps, may be accompanied by a declaration signed by the individuals, and certified by yourself, that they have no ulterior object. That they do not intend to sell out or retire on half-pay after effecting such exchange, but that it is their bona fide intention to join and do duty with the corps to which they exchange, and that they are prepared to join, not at the expiration of any term for which they may themselves have obtained leave, but at the expiration of the leave of absence which may have been granted to the Officer with whom they exchange. His Royal Highness further desires that it may be understood by the individuals, that any infraction or attempted evasion of this rule, and any application for extension of leave, will cancel the exchange.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient humble servant,

(Signed) H. TAYLOR.

Officer commanding the —— regiment of Cavalry or Infantry.

On Wednesday, the 2d regiment of Life Guards had a grand field day at Wormwood Scrubs. The ground, containing several acres, has been cleared of all its brushwood, and rendered a delightful plain. Their Commander, the Earl of Cathcart, attended in person, and gave the command, and put the regiment through many evolutions, which they performed in a most military and masterly style.

In allusion to the recent General Order of the Artillery, relating to the disposal of Commissions in that regiment, we are informed the required number—viz. six Field Officers and eleven Captains, have already submitted their names for the approval of the Master-General.

On Tuesday last (being the concluding day of permanent duty) the 2d Regiment of Bucks Yeomanry, was reviewed by the Duke of Buckingham, in Stowe Park. After the review, a massive piece of plate, value between 200l. and 300l. was presented to the Duke, in the name of the corps, by Colonel Pigot.

ASCOT HEATH RACES.—On Tuesday these Races commenced, and the fineness of the morning attracted an assemblage of brilliancy and fashion. The arrival of the King, at a quarter past one o'clock, gave fresh eclat to the scene. His Majesty looked remarkably well, and was dressed in light trowsers, and a plain blue coat. There were three carriages. In the suite were—Lord Graves, Marquis of Conyngham, Lord Herbert, Duke of Wellington, and Lord Frances Conyngham. His Majesty on descending from the carriage, ascended the steps with much firmness.

The King's Plate of 100 gs. for all ages.—Four yrs old, 9 st.; Five, 10st. was won by Mr. Wyndham's Centaur, 5 yrs old.

The Oatlands Stakes of 30 guineas each, 20 ft. Two miles and a half.

Ten Subscribers, 4 pd.

Mr. Ramsbottom's Bay Burton, 4 yrs old, 8st. 2lb.	.	.	1
Mr. West's Angelica, 4 yrs old, 7st. 8lb.	.	.	2

Buckle rode.

A beautiful race, and won by a neck. Two only were placed, and nine started.

Sweepstakes of 10 guineas, for all ages, was won by Mr. Udney's Mirandola.

Mr. Wyndham's Spermaceti won the Sweepstakes 100 sovereigns each, for fillies 8st. 4lb.

The Sweepstakes 200 guineas each, h. f. 8st. 7lb. new mile, was won by Mr. Udney's Emilius (winner of the Derby).

SECOND DAY.—At one o'clock the King's equipage appeared on the ground. His Majesty was dressed as before, in a blue frock and white trowsers, and looked tolerably well, considering his recent indisposition, but not better than on Tuesday. The Royal Party comprised the Duke of Dorset, Lord Prudhoe, Lord Scarborough, Lord Graves, (as Lord in Waiting), the Marchioness of Conyngham, Lord Gwydir, and several of the Foreign Ministers. The first race was for the Duke of York's plate of 50l. for all ages with proportionate weights; the winner to be sold for 350 guineas, if demanded. Six horses started, it was won by Mr. Whitesides's Wouvermans, aged.

This was followed by the race for the Winkfield Stakes of 50gs. each, half forfeit, 3 yrs old. It was better contested than the last; it was won by nearly a length by Mr. Bigg's Bertram. The third was for the Swinley Stakes of 25gs. each, for 3 yrs old, 7st. 4lb.; and four, 8st. 10lb. The Duke of York's Aaron was entered, but did not run. Only two horses started.—Lord Darlington's Marcellus, 4 yrs old, won the race. Lord Jersey's c. by Comus walked over the course for the Ascot Stakes of 50 guineas each. His Majesty and suite set out for the Royal Lodge immediately after the last race.

THIRD DAY.—The King again honoured the Course with his presence, and left after the race for the Cup. His Majesty was as usual most cordially cheered. Mr. C. Day's Helenus won the sweepstakes of 30 guineas, for 2 year old colts, and Mr. Wyndham's Alfred won the Windsor Forest Stakes of 50 gs. for fillies 3 years old. The Gold Cup, value 100 guineas.—4 years old, 8st. 2lb. The owner of the second horse to receive back his stake, was won by Lord Darlington's Marcellus. Lord Cavendish's Bertram won the sweepstakes of 10 guineas, 3 year olds, 8st. 7lb. Ascot Cup of 200 sovereigns, about a mile and a half, won by Mr. Heathcote's brother to Antelope.

FRIDAY.—The Wokingham Stakes, for 3 years old, and upwards, was won by Mr. Northey's Sprite, 4 years old. Mr. Arnold's Bachanal won a plate of 50l. for all ages.

In the Court of King's Bench, Friday, in the case of Brookes, Clarke, and Isaacson. Mr. Adolphus prayed the judgment of the Court on the above defendants, whose names have been so often before the public. The Lord Chief Justice pronounced that Brookes should repay to one of the parties the sum of 23l. 16s. obtained by him as costs; that the rule for setting aside the proceedings in one of the cases should be discharged; that Clarke and Isaacson should both be struck off the roll of attorneys; and that Brookes should be committed to the custody of the Marshal for three months.

The venerable Judge Fletcher died at his house in Merrion-square, at six o'clock yesterday morning (Friday, 6th inst.) It is thought Serjeant Torrens will be his successor. Serjeant Lloyd is also spoken of. Judge Fletcher was elevated to the Bench in the year 1805, by the Duke of Bedford, who was then Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.—Dublin Freeman's Journal.

It appears, by the report of the Coroner for the Manchester district that during the past three months, five men and four women have lost their lives through drunkenness.

There are in Rome, 19 Cardinals, 27 Bishops, 1450 priests, 1,532 monks, 1,464 friars, and 232 seminarists. The population of Rome in 1821, without reckoning the Jews, amounted to 146,00 souls.

SUMMER SILKS, the new and Fashionable Coloured Silks being now completed for the season, by SEWELL & CROSS, Sikmen, &c.; they beg to solicit the inspection of families who may be now about purchasing their summer dresses, and more particularly to their rich drapes silks, an article for which their house has been long patronized, and confined exclusively to their own manufactory in any pleasing shade of colour, from the most quiet drab, to the flaming red and amber; stout plain and white sarsenets 2s. to 2s. 4d. per yard; rich single Gros de Naples 2s. 7d. to 2s. 10d.; double ditto in beautiful colours 3s. 6d. to 4s. 6d.; rich levantine silks 3 quarters wide 3s. 6d. to 4s. 6d.; rich duchapes silks, an article for which their house has been long famed, in exquisite splendour of beautiful colours, from 4s. 9d. to 5s. 6d. per yard; these silks being made entirely of Piedmont silk, under their own immediate inspection, they are particularly recommended to families as not being at all liable to crease: and endless variety of new patterns in stripe silks for ladies morning dress, at 2s. per yard, 2s. 2d. to 2s. 6d. per yard; and 300 pieces of all wide do. SHAWLS and SCARFS—Nearly Ten Thousand Pounds worth, bought under peculiar circumstances, being the whole stock of a manufacturer; and as ROBSON has for years devoted his attention to that particular branch of trade, he may say, without arrogance, he has now the first collection in the Metropolis, and being determined to increase his already extensive line, he now offers them to purchasers at little more than half what they have been in the habit of paying. The square shawls, both plain and figured, are in all the prevailing colours, viz. crimson, scarlet, white, green, blue, fawn drab, orange, grey, black, and other grounds, from 10s. to 5l.; at 30s. they are elegant. and 50s. very superb, such as are generally sold at from 4l. to 5l.; the scarfs are equally splendid and in the same variety of colours from 9s. to 6l.; those at 30s. are large enough to form an elegant square, and are very handsome; some at 5l. are beautiful, well worth 4l. with an immensity of others, the most costly and magnificent, rarely to be met with, equally cheap. His stock of shawls, handkerchiefs, in the same extensive way, in all colours, from 18d. to 21s.; real China and Cyprus crape shawls and scarfs, French net, tissue and damask ditto, in all colours from 10s. to 4l.; scal, wool, erminette, and cloth shawls, from 8s. to 30s.; Braganza, Zamora, and Angola shawls, from 8s. to 50s., with an immense variety of Angola and Cashmere, Norwich crape from 5s. to 30s.—To be had at ROBSON'S, 64, Oxford-street, corner of Wells-street.

KENSINGTON LACES are the most beautiful, wash the best, and are cheapest in the kingdom, fe figured, colonnade, and plain, bordered, and flounced dress, scarfs, pelerins, palatins, shawls, veils, trimming and flouncing laces, edgings, handkerchiefs, collars, tippets, sleeves, cars, habit shirts, nets, quillings, and every novel and fashionable article. Being the only real manufacturers, to prevent the impositions attempted by endeavours to substitute the common starched productions for the genuine Kensington Lace, every article has a ticket with the name of their Royal Highnesses the Duchess of Gloucester, Duchess of Kent, and Duchess of Kent's name on it, which is genuine, and it can only be had retail as well as wholesale, as the Manufactory, 14, Kensington-square, Kensington, and at the Manufacturers' warehouse, 30, Southampton-street, Covent-garden. Hours to view the machinery, process of manufacture, and lace works by young females, at Kensington, from 10 to 1, and from 2 till 5. Orders made to match any kind of lace, white or black.

IMPROVED PORTABLE BATHS.—PAYNTER and HAWKE, (late Edmund Lloyd,) No. 179, Strand, respectfully beg leave to acquaint the Nobility and Gentry, that they have made several improvements in their Shower, Vapour, and Warm Baths. Vapour Baths, which may be used in any bed or dressing-room, with the ordinary fire, and so portable that they may be conveyed from one place to another in a carriage or chaise. Warm Baths, on an entire new self acting principle, may be prepared, ready for use, in the short space of 30 minutes, or used as cold pleasure baths. Likewise, their newly invented shower-baths, being more complete and portable than any ever yet submitted.—☞ P. and H. having an extensive variety of Baths on the most approved principle, humbly solicit an inspection at their Manufactory, No. 179, Strand, two doors from Norfolk-street.—N. B. Baths let by the week or month.

IN consequence of the great disappointment many persons have experienced from purchasing inferior TRUSSES, SALMON'ODY, and Co. most respectfully solicit the attention of Professional Gentlemen and the Public, to observe, that their PATENT SELF-ADJUSTING TRUSSES, Salmon, and Co. No. 232, Strand, London, is marked upon the leather case, without which they are of the spurious kind. Salmon, Ody, and Co. the sole Inventors and Patentees, have made 50,000 of their PATENT SELF-ADJUSTING TRUSSES, and still continue to have the recommendations of all the most eminent Surgeons in Town and Country. They have also the honour to supply the Army and Navy; the Naval and Military Hospitals; the Dockyards and Ordnance; the Marine Infirmary; the Hon. East India Company; the City of London Truss Society; the Mary-le-bone, Wycombe, Bristol, and Denbigh Infirmaries; the Windsor General Dispensary; the Middlesex and St. George's Hospitals; Parochial Establishments, &c. &c.—Sold by one or more Druggists in every principal Town in the United Kingdom.

BURGESS'S NEW SAUCE for general purposes, having given such great approbation, and the demand for it continuing to increase JOHN BURGESS and SON beg most respectfully to offer this their best acknowledgments to the Public for their liberal patronage of the same; its utility and great convenience in all climates, has recommended it to the most distinguished foreign connoisseurs, who have all spoken of it in its recommendation.—It is prepared by them ONLY, and for preventing imposition and frauds, all possible care has been resorted to, by each bottle being sealed upon the cork with their firm and address, as well as each label having their signature, without which it cannot be genuine.

JOHN BURGESS & SON'S long established and much-esteemed ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES, continues to be prepared by them after the same manner that has given the greatest satisfaction for many years.—Warehouse, 107, Strand, corner of the Savoy-steps, London.—The original Fish-Sauce Warehouse.

It has such a strong affinity for grease, that it will take it out of a coat collar or cuffs. It leaves, when done, no white mark, or the least appearance where the effect was, nor does it injure texture or colour—sold by Mr. Machin, Surgeon's Instrument Maker, 194, Strand; Mr. Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Mr. Nix, and Mr. Stradling, Royal Exchange: price 1s. 6d. per box, with plain directions.

UNDER the August Patronage of the Royal Family. ARNOLD'S IMPERIAL CREAM, the only article prepared and vended by a hairdresser. Arnold, perfumer, &c. to their Royal Highnesses the Princess Sophia and Duchess of Kent, after a practice of twenty years as Ladies' Hair Dresser, and making the growth of hair his greatest study, offers to the Nobility and public his Imperial Cream, infallible preventive against the hair falling off or changing colour, except with age, and will positively promote the growth if a single root remains: it affords to the hair so great a nourishment, as to prevent the pustules splitting, its peculiar property eradicates the perrigo or scurf, and gives the tresses a beautiful appearance. Arnold is so confident of its infallibility, that ladies and gentlemen making trial of a single pot, and finding no benefit, the money shall be returned. The Imperial Cream is sold by the inventor, Thomas Arnold, 220, High-street, Kensington, wholesale and retail, in pots, price 3s. 6d. each, with a Practical Treatise on the Hair, giving a full description of the invaluable virtue of the Cream; and by appointment, by Grange, 126 Oxford-street; Gattie and Pierce, and Thevanet, New Bond-street: Bury and Co. Greek-street, Soho; Marsh, Leeds: and most perfumers and hair-dressers. ☞ T. Arnold begs leave to offer to the nobility and public his Hair Brushes, which he has manufactured upon an improved principle, and adapted to the various textures of the hair, and will be found much more superior to any Brushes yet invented. To be had only at 20, High-street, Kensington.

EASE and COMFORT in SHAVING.—To those Gentlemen who experience inconvenience in Shaving from a tender face or strong beard, J. T. RIGGE most particularly recommends his celebrated MAGNETIC RAZOR TABLET, which, with its late improvement, he engages will produce so keen an edge as to supersede all grinding, honing, &c. and render the operation of shaving as easy and agreeable as it was before unpleasant and painful. Its use is simple, its effect certain; price 7s. 6d. J. T. Rigge's Aromatic Shaving Soap will also be found an invaluable addition. Manufactory, 65 Cheapside and 52, Park-street, Grosvenor-square.

A. ROWLAND and SON, Sole Proprietors of the original MACASSAR OIL, respectfully inform the Nobility, Gentry, and Public at large, that they have REMOVED to No. 20, Hatton-Garden. Also beg to CAUTION, that in consequence of the universal demand for their ORIGINAL and GENUINE MACASSAR OIL, Impostors purchase the empty bottles, and attempt to deceive the Public with spurious Macassar Oil, composed of injurious ingredients, offering it for sale at a lower price, and without the label: and others sign, "Rowlandson," imitating the signature, which renders it necessary on purchasing to ask for ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL, and strictly to observe that the one genuine without the red, 20, Hatton-Garden, and the signature of "A. Rowland and Son," on the wrapper; and the label is signed on the outside, in red, "A Rowland and Son." The prices are 3s. 6d.; 7s.; 10s. 6d. and 21s. per bottle. All other prices are impositions. The genuine has the address on the label, "No. 20, Hatton-Garden"—Also, Red Whiskers, Grey Whiskers, Eye-brows, Hair on the Head, effectually changed to Brown or Black, by the use of ROWLAND'S ESSENCE of SYRIE. This merely wetting the Hair immediately produces a perfect change. Price 4s. 7s. 6d. and 10s. 6d. per bottle. Sold by the sole Proprietors, A. Rowland and Son, No. 20, Hatton-garden, Holborn, London; and, by appointment, by most Perfumers and Medicine Venders.—Ask for "Rowland's Oil," or "Rowland's Eye," and observe the signature, "A. Rowland and Son." All others are counterfeits.

FOR WORMS, FITS, PAINS in the STOMACH, &c.—Worms are the cause of many internal afflictions, which vary so much in their effects, that they may be mistaken by the most eminent physician, and prove equally fatal to the constitutions of adults and children; though the latter more frequently suffer from their destructive ravages. The most usual symptoms are Fits, Pains in the Stomach, Side, and Head, Loss of Appetite, and Pale, Languid, and Emaciated appearance in the patient. The extraordinary efficacy of CHING'S PATENT WORM LOZENGES in all such complaints, as well as obstructions in the bowels, and every disorder where opening or cleansing physic is required, is so universally known, and has been publicly acknowledged by so many persons of distinction and rank in society, that it is unnecessary here to enlarge on their peculiar virtues.—Sold in London, at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. by Butlers, Chemists, 4, Cheapside, St. Paul's, 220, Regent-street, (near the Argyll Rooms,) London; Waterloo-place, Edinburgh; Sackville street, Dublin; and by the principal medicine venders throughout the United Kingdom.

HORSE, DOG, and CATTLE MEDICINES, prepared by T. Watson, Druggist, Cambridge.—These Medicines have been for many years in the highest repute, and are sanctioned by many of the first Sporting Characters and Agriculturists in the kingdom, who have given the proprietor their testimony in writing; and to whom the most satisfactory reference can be given. Sold in Packets, as follows: Purging Balls (4 doz.) 6s.; Cordial ditto (4 doz.) 3s.; Diuretic ditto (4 doz.) 3s.; Alterative ditto (4 doz.) 3s. 6d.; Mercurial ditto (each) 2s.; Blistering Ointment (pot) 1s.; Distemper Balls (box) 1s. 6d.; Mange Ointment (box) 1s. 6d.——The LIQUID BLISTER.—This is an admirable preparation; it answers as a safe and effectual blister, at the same time it does not blemish or injure the parts, nor will the horse rub or bite where it may have been applied; it is likewise useful in sprains, spavins, inflammation of the throat, &c. In bottles, at 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d. and 9s.

THE CAMPHIRESIUM, GOLDEN DROP, an excellent Medicine for the Staggers, Gripes, Scouring, &c. of Horses, Cows, Oxen, Calves, Sheep, &c. and is likewise a restorative cordial for Horses after racing, hunting, &c.—In bottles, at 3s. and 15s. the large containing six of the small.—Sold by Messrs. Butlers, Chemists, No. 4, Cheapside, and 220, Regent-street, London; Waterloo-place, Edinburgh; and Sackville-street, Dublin; and by the principal Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom.——Purchasers are requested to ask for "Watson's Horse, Dog, and Cattle Medicines," and to observe his name and address on the directions and labels, to prevent Impositions.

LATEST NEWS.

An express arrived from Paris yesterday, bringing the following telegraphic despatch respecting a counter-revolution in Portugal, which was received in Paris on Thursday:—

The Major-General to his Excellency the Minister of War.—"The 29th May, the Portuguese troops declared against the Constitution. The Infant Don Michael is at the head of this movement, which was followed by the whole garrison of Lisbon, with the exception of one regiment. The King has declared his attachment to the Constitution. The Cortes have declared themselves permanent. The sitting of the 30th May was very stormy. The King has chosen a new Ministry from among the Cortes. The bad weather which interrupted the communication, prevented its being known whether the despatch was finished."

Frankfort papers to the 7th inst. and Seville journals to the 12th inst. also arrived, the latter states, that "every man of whatever political sentiments, even though Serviles, express their indignation against the iniquity of France, and call loudly for war."

His Majesty did not attend Ascot Races on Friday; but we are happy to say that his absence did not arise from indisposition. His Majesty was in good spirits throughout the day, and had a select party to dinner.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Cumberland landed at Dover on Friday afternoon, accompanied by Prince William, son of the Duchess. His Royal Highness was enthusiastically cheered on landing, and on his departure for town, where he arrived in the course of the night.

The Marquis of Salisbury died on Friday night, at six o'clock, at his seat, Theobalds, Hatfield, Herts.

LAUGHABLE MISTAKE.—On Thursday evening, about ten o'clock, two men were observed walking along Pall Mall, with something in the shape of a human being, wrapped up in a piece of green baize; the watchmen supposing them to be resurrection men, by one of the arms protruding through the cloth, took them into custody, and conveyed them to St. James's watch-house; on opening the shroud it was found to contain a lay figure used by artists, which the proprietor of the Peristrephic Panorama, at Spring Gardens, had lent to a friend. The men were discharged and the figure restored to the owner the following morning.

In the Court of King's Bench, yesterday, Mr. Adolphus was heard against the application for a new trial in the case of M'Pherson v. Lowie, in which a verdict had been taken for 500l. for a breach of promise of marriage. The defendant had paid 150l. into Court, which it was submitted was sufficient to cover all the damages Mrs. M'Pherson had sustained; but Mr. Adolphus refused to accept that sum, and the Court, after hearing the arguments on both sides, directed the rule for a new trial to be made absolute.

In the Insolvent Debtors' Court, yesterday, a rule had been obtained calling on Mr. Edmd. Cole, an attorney of the Court, to pay over to the receiver a sum of 6l. 6s. and a further sum of 2l. 12s. which he overcharged to an insolvent named M'Kenzie. The Court made the rule absolute with costs.

At Bow-street, yesterday, a man of respectable appearance, named Blues, was charged with robbing his lodgings, where he slept on Monday and Tuesday.—In his defence, the prisoner's landlord, a tradesman, of Queen-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields, swore that Blues slept in his house on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings last, and that he was at home each night by half-past ten o'clock; but he said that the prisoner had a brother so remarkably like him, that when they both lodged with him some years ago, it was impossible to distinguish between them when apart, and that he and his wife frequently addressed one of them instead of the other. Three other witnesses swore to the same effect.—The Magistrate said he must remand the prisoner; but Blues' landlord and another offered bail, which was accepted; and the prisoner was discharged.

PRICE OF STOCKS AT THE CLOSE, SATURDAY.

There has been but little to notice in the Money Market this week, the business done during that period having been very limited. On Friday the Funds rather improved, and Consols for Account opened to-day at 81¼, and closed at 81⅛. In the Foreign Market, Columbian have declined and Chilian Bonds have looked heavy. In Spanish Bonds nothing material has transpired, but they have been heavy.

LADIES LEGHORN HATS.—This excellent manufacture is confined to the Villages on the River D'Arno in Tuscany, the Venice Hats excepted, and are known by the pale colour and smooth face that is given by hot-press to render them durable. Undressed Hats of the true fabric, and retailed in a variety of new and distinguished patterns, with White Chip Hats and Foreign Flowers, by the merchants, Askew and Normanville, 85, Oxford-street.

ELEGANT GLASSES, FURNITURE, &c.—The Nobility and Gentry are invited to inspect the Ware rooms of Cooper and Son, 93, Bishopsgate Within, where is exhibited a large Assortment of new and second-hand Plate Glasses, admirably suited to every description of drawing or dining-rooms. The prices are just reduced 25 per cent. on plates measuring 100 inches by 72, and upwards; and on those of smaller dimensions the alteration will be found equally important. The extensive preference given to this Establishment is thankfully acknowledged by the Proprietors, who, in their endeavours to evince their gratitude, by manufacturing articles in a superior manner, at prices suitable to the times, hope to merit a continuance of public support. In the furniture department is comprised every new and elegant article of upholstery, cabinet, and chair work, regulated upon such a scale of economy as to demand and ensure the patronage of rank and fashion.

A candid examination of professional pretensions is only to be feared by those who are conscious of incapacity. Messrs. Goss and Co. Members of the Royal College of Surgeons, confine their studies to the treatment of such disorders as arise from nervous debility. Their works, "The Egis of Life," and "Hygeiana," (the latter addressed to females) in full explanation of these subjects, may be had at No. 20, Paternoster-row, London, Porter, 72, Grafton-street, Dublin, or at any Booksellers. Medicin e can be forwarded to any part, however distant, on receiving a Bank note.—11, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street, London.

CUSTOM HOUSE, LONDON. To Clerks of Corn Markets and Others. Agents are wanted in the several Markets of England and Wales to manage the business of a Weekly Official Account of Irish and Foreign Corn, Seeds, &c. Imported and Exported, and of the Stock of the same remaining Warehoused under the locks of the Crown in each Port, and other information connected therewith. Persons offering themselves are desired to forward their address to C. Ogilvy, Esq. Custom House, London, when a Prospectus developing the plan will be transmitted for their further examination, and subsequently the person who may appear most eligible in each Market Town will be appointed. Letters must be post paid.

CIDER, PERRY, ALE, &c.—THOMAS FIELD and SON beg to acquaint their Friends and the Public, that their genuine Cider and Perry, Burton, Edinburgh, Taunton, and Welsh Ales, Dorchester Beer, Brown Stout &c. are in fine order for use. They have also a very superior Stock of Foreign Wines, Cape Madeira, Brandy, (white and coloured) Rum, Hollands, Geneva, and Orange Shrub; and they have been enabled to make a considerable reduction in their prices generally.—22, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

SUPERFINE BEAVER HATS.—RICHARD HITCHIN has manufactured a very superior Article of GENTLEMEN'S SUPERFINE BEAVER HATS, of the best possible manufacture, and which he feels confident will give satisfaction to the wearer, and is now selling them on the most reasonable terms. Also an elegant Assortment of Ladies' Leghorn, Straw, Chip, Fancy, and Beaver BONNETS, trimmed in the most fashionable style.—23, King-street, Covent-garden, corner of New street.

PATRONISED by the ROYAL FAMILY, their Imperial Majesties the Emperor and Empress of Russia, his Imperial Majesty the Emperor of China, by their especial authority, and most of the Nobility throughout Europe, ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, (the original and genuine) which for many years has been universally admired, and is the best and cheapest article for nourishing the hair, preventing its falling off, or turning grey; preserves it to the latest period of life; promotes a luxuriant growth on the baldest places, whiskers, eye-brows, &c.—Curle Hair—It produces and makes the curl firm during exercise, or in damp weather; renders hair that is harsh and dry as soft as silk, glossy, elegant, and beautiful.—Indispositon, Accouchement, &c. during which this Oil should be regularly applied, as it prevents the hair being injured.—Children's Hair—A due attention to Children's Hair is of the greatest importance. This Oil is invaluable; it eradicates the scurf easy and pleasant, and is superior to combs, soaps, &c.; makes the hair firm in its roots, and lays a foundation for a fine growth.—Price 3s. 6d. 7s. 10s. 6d. and 1l. 1s. per bottle.—Red Whiskers, Grey Whiskers, Eye brows, Hair on the Head, effectually changed to Brown or Black, by the use of ROWLAND'S ESSENCE of TYRE. A GENTLEMAN'S HAT.—WM. PRITCHARD respectfully informs the Public that he has succeeded in manufacturing a gentleman's economical SUBSTITUTE for the SILK HAT, so decidedly regardless of appearance, and so injurious to the health by reason of the perfect resistance it opposes to the escape of the perspiration, thereby very probably laying a foundation for serious injury to the health. Wm. Pritchard presumes that the family experience as manufacturers for more than half a century will preclude the necessity of any assertion to his friends, while it may guarantee his pledge to the public that his articles shall be substantially good, possessing a genteelness and closeness of nap, &c. and at the very moderate price of twenty shillings. 239, Regent-street, corner of Princes-street, Hanover square.

JAMAICA.—For PUBLIC SALE, under an Order of the High Court of Chancery, in the cause "Thomson v. Grant and others," on a day hereafter to be fixed, before Wm. Alexander, Esq. one of the Masters of the said Court, at the Sale Room, in Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, unless previously disposed of by private contract, together, or in lots, as may be agreed on, the following SUGAR ESTATES, SLAVES, and other PROPERTIES, situated in the Island of Jamaica, and belonging to the Estate of Alexander Donaldson, Esq. deceased—that is to say:—

BRYAN CASTLE SUGAR ESTATE, situated near Rio Bueno, in the parish of Trelawney, containing 1,400 Acres of Land, or thereabouts; about 160 prime Negroes, and 224 Head of Stock; with a Mansion House thereon, adapted for the residence of the Proprietor.

BRAMPTON BRYAN SUGAR ESTATE, adjoining Bryan Castle, containing about 1,322 Acres of Land; 267 Negroes, and 230 Head of Stock. This Estate and Bryan Castle, are situated only about three miles and a half from Rio Bueno; the works and buildings on each are complete, in substantial and good repair, and well furnished with utensils of every description; and there has been for some time a regular annual increase of the Negroes.

LOW LAYTON SUGAR ESTATE, situated in the parish of St. George, containing 2,362 Acres of Land, or thereabouts; about 300 Negroes, and 180 Head of Stock; with a Dwelling House thereon, and a Wharf on the sea, and ships to produce from its own wharf at Orange Bay; there is a complete set of works, with a water-mill, and plenty of water all the year round. This property is well supplied with working utensils of every description, and has abundance of fine previsions grounds, pastures, &c.

STOAKES HALL SUGAR ESTATE, situated in the parish of St. Thomas, in the East, about three miles from Port Morant, and at a small distance from Stoakes Harbour, containing 1,000 Acres of Land, or thereabouts (including Hampden Court Penn, adjoining thereto,) and has belonging to it about 208 Negroes, and 256 Head of Stock, with a water-mill, and complete set of works, in good repair, and furnished with utensils of every description.

ORANGE VALE COFFEE PLANTATION, situated in the Parish of St. George's, near Buff Bay, to which there is a carriage road from the Estate, which contains 1,000 Acres of Land, or thereabouts; about 264 Negroes, and 75 Head of Breeding and other Stock. The soil of Orange Vale is well adapted for the culture of Coffee; and there is a set of Works capable of taking off a large crop, with plenty of Provision Grounds: there is also a good dwelling House thereon.

FAIRFIELD PLANTATION, likewise situated on Buff Bay River, in the Parish of St. George's, about six or seven miles from Buff Bay Wharf, containing 600 Acres, or thereabouts, of Coffee, Provision, and Wood Lands. This Plantation was formerly cultivated in Coffee; but the Negroes having been removed to Low Layton Estate, the Land is now let, and partly continued in Coffee by the Tenant. There are tolerable good Works and some other Buildings on the Estate; and a fine Road from them to Buff Bay.

A WHARF and STORES, situated in the Parish of Port Royal, near the King's Dock-yard, now occupied as store houses for Provisions for victualling the King's navy, with about 34 Acres of Land, on the Palisadoes, and 16 Negro Labourers attached thereto.

A DWELLING HOUSE, in the CITY of KINGSTON, situated in North and Knight-streets, formerly the residence of the late Mr. Donaldson, and now Rented on a Repairing Lease, at 150l. currency, per Annum.

Alexander Grant, Esq. No. 6, Billiter-square, London, is authorised by the said Court of Chancery to receive Proposals, and treat with such person or persons as may be desirous of purchasing the Whole, or any part of the said Estates and Premises, by Private Contract, and will afford every information respecting them.

The Estates may be viewed; and information had, also, on application to the Managers, in Jamaica; and of Messrs. Stevenson and Whiteborne, solicitors in Kingston.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY.

The St. Andrew's, Holborn, the Tithe Abolition, the Limerick Police-Regulation, and several private Bills, were read a first time.

The LORD CHANCELLOR presented a Petition from the Journeymen Silk Weavers of Spitalfields against the Silk Manufacturers' Bill.

The EARL of LIVERPOOL admitted, that though the Bill was intended to benefit the Journeymen Silk Weavers, these men were entitled to every consideration on account of their quiet and peaceable conduct at all times, and especially at periods of difficulty and privation. The Noble Lord, however, thought, as many of his Majesty's subjects conceived it was injurious to them, the House should hear all their complaints in a Committee.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH said he had a Petition to present, signed by 179 Master Manufacturers in Spitalfields, and another signed by 10,500 inhabitants of Bethnal-green against the Bill. The Bill, he observed, was brought in to please the political economists. The Petitions were then read and referred to the Committee in the Bill.

The EARL of DARNLEY presented a Petition from the Parish of St. Anne, Soho, in the county of Middlesex, recommending the introduction of Poor Laws in Ireland, and the finding of employment for the lower orders of that country.

The EARL of LIMERICK would not waste the time of the House in discussing the absurdity of this Petition, which was laid on the table.

The Scotch Entail Bill was postponed till Friday.

On receiving the report of the Marriage Act Amendment Bill,

The EARL of WESTMORLAND objected to the extent to which the clause for protecting the property of minors went, and which would subject persons to punishment by the Court of Chancery whether they married minors or not, provided the marriages were not solemnized according to the provisions of this Bill.

The LORD CHANCELLOR said, it only subjected those who had sworn falsely to the punishments for perjury. He intended to propose that the period for prosecuting by the Attorney General should be limited to less than three years; and that no prosecution should take place after the parties had been married above a year. Complaint to be made to the Attorney-General within three months after such false marriages.

After some further conversation, the clause was postponed till to-morrow.

TUESDAY.

The Royal assent was given by commission to the Masters and Servants Bill, and to 29 private Bills. Among the private Bills were the Bermondsey Improvement and the Mersey Canal Bills.

The Prison Laws Consolidation Bill was ordered to be read a third time to-morrow.

About 100 witnesses were sworn to give evidence before the Committee on the Spitalfields Act Repeal Bill.

In a Committee on the Irish Grand Jury Presentment Bill Counsel was heard on behalf of the Clerks of the Peace of a number of Counties in Ireland, against that part of the Bill which affects the Clerks of the Peace.

The motion for hearing witnesses was negatived without a division; and the Bill went through the Committee.

WEDNESDAY.

The Vessels Registry, the London Sewers, and several private Bills were brought up from the Commons.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH presented the Report of the Committee to whom the petitions of the Silk Weavers had been referred, recommending, according to the wish of the petitioners, that evidence be heard at the Bar. The second reading of the Bill was fixed for Friday.

THURSDAY.

The Scotch Confirmation, the Beer Duties, and two other Bills were brought up from the Commons and read a first time.

The DUKE of LEINSTER presented a Petition from the Hibernian Philanthropic Society of Dublin, praying, that their Lordships would take the State of Ireland into consideration. The Noble Duke said, that on some future day he should call the attention of the House to the subject.

The EARL of CLARE expressed his satisfaction at the intimation of the Noble Duke.

The MARQUIS of LANSDOWN presented a petition from the Linen Trade of London against the Linen Duties Bill.

The EARL of LIVERPOOL said the Bill would take off all the restrictions on the Linen Trade.—Petition ordered to lie on the table.

The DUKE of DEVONSHIRE called the attention of the House to the evils of Ireland, which had been so long as to prove that something was essentially to blame in the Government of that Country. The Noble Duke admitted, that to remedy the evils was very difficult, much of these evils arose from difference of religion: and though this was not the time to enter into the Catholic Question, yet he might say, that a system of exclusion must promote those evils—conciliation must go a great way to tranquillize the public mind of that country. The truth was, the Government was entirely in the hands of the small minority called the Orangemen. The Tythe System was most grievous in its operation, and that was a proof of the necessity of immediate inquiry. He recommended the concession of the Catholic Question, the Commutation of Tythes, and impartial distribution of justice. The Noble Duke concluded by moving several Resolutions, declaring the existence of a spirit of violence in Ireland, and the disposition of the House to concur with His Majesty's Ministers in the measures necessary to repress it; but stating that experience had proved those measures to be inefficient as a cure, and that it was the duty of the House to apply itself without further delay to examine the state of that country with a view to provide a remedy.

EARL BATHURST could not concede the point, that the government of Ireland had been of a violent character, or that undue acts of coercion had been exercised by Parliament towards Ireland. To prove this he appealed to the Acts of the Statute-book for the relief of Ireland. The Noble Earl contended that much had been done to relieve Ireland. In 1806, Parliament had given Irish corn an exclusive privilege of importation to this country, when foreign and our own colonial grain were prohibited—had passed laws for assimilating the administration of justice to this country—for regulating Grand Jury proceedings and presentments, and the Police. Another great improvement was the encouragement given to the fisheries of Ireland; and if they succeeded he hoped they would be inclined to go further with that improvement. For the education in Ireland 20,000l. had been this year granted; while the parliament of Ireland voted 380l. a year for it. He next adverted to the consolidation of the Treasuries of the two countries, by which this country took upon itself the whole of the debt contracted by Ireland. By this measure Parliament had been able to repeal the window-tax, which lay particularly heavy on Ireland. This year they had relieved her from all assessed taxes. Was it fair then to say that Parliament and the Government had given nothing to Ireland? With respect to the motion, it did not differ materially from the motion of a Noble Marquis in the last Session, since which the assessed taxes of Ireland had been repealed. As he conceived some sort of enquiry was necessary into the state of Ireland, he was unwilling to give the motion a direct negative, and he should therefore move the previous question.

The EARL of CLARE said, the lower orders in Ireland were in a wretched situation, and that nothing adequate had been done to give them education or relief.

LORD CLIFDEN admitted that Ireland had not paid her share of the revenue, but from the nature of the misgovernment exercised towards her she was incapable. The evils of Ireland were as numerous as the stars of heaven, but the Tythe System was the star of the greatest magnitude. He enumerated the evils of the Tythe System in Ireland, from Proctors, Tythe Collectors, Ecclesiastical Courts, &c. &c. Most of their Lordships were totally ignorant of the state of Ireland: and the more the pity. It would make the dumb to speak to relate the miseries of that unhappy people who were dragged into the Bishop's Court, where the Vicar General, who was mostly a Clergyman, was Judge and Jury himself. It was a strange thing to have a Church without a flock. If they would have a Clergy and 22 Bishops, pay them in some other way; but in Ireland, to think of their being paid by tythes was totally out of the question.

THE EARL of DARNLEY was of opinion, the state of Ireland ought to be enquired into. He contended that the conduct of the other House of Parliament had been to send back in triumph the head of the Orange party in Ireland, an Alderman of Dublin and a vender of very bad stationary at a monstrous price to the Public. Was that conciliation? He despaired of any thing effectual being done for the relief of that country. The principle on which she had been hitherto governed, had been a principle and a system of disunion. Let not Parliament be too sure that, under the circumstances of Europe, it was sound policy to deny the boon of emancipation to six millions of Catholics. He trusted that their Lordships would agree to the motion of his Noble Friend, and would take an early opportunity next Session of sifting all the evils of Ireland to the bottom, and reverse the whole system under which she had been governed.

LORD GOSFORD said, the present disastrous state of Ireland was owing to a long-continued system of mis-government, which it behoved that House to do its utmost to put an end to.

LORD CALEDON supported the motion.

LORD MARYBOROUGH contended that much had been done for Ireland. No less than 614,000l. had been granted since the Union to the Board of First Fruits. Besides which, let them look at the large sums granted for public works, for loans to distressed banks, &c. within the last few years. To agree to the Noble Duke's Resolution would be to cast an unfair and unjust colour of censure on the conduct of Parliament. The Noble Duke could state nothing against the British Government and Parliament but the refusal of Catholic Emancipation; but much as he wished to see that measure passed, he must say, and the Noble Lords opposite knew that it was impossible to do so at present. The Noble Marquis at the head of the Irish Government, most curiously and fortunately possessed the confidence of the Noble Lords opposite, and yet they could not agree in commendation of any one act of his government.

LORD HOLLAND supported the motion, and said that it behoved the House to look at the state of affairs in Spain; for if Spain, Portugal, and France were united under a Bourbon Government, ruling by favour of Divine Right, resting on the Catholic Religion and the Holy Alliance, and supported by the Army of the Faith, and bands of missionaries and Jesuits, the misgoverned Catholics of Ireland would become objects of great commiseration and jealousy to those united powers. If they could not govern Ireland well, he hoped they would not govern her long.

The EARL of LIMERICK said, the disturbances were confined to the lower orders of the people; the better class of the Catholics, and the priesthood, tried in vain to deter them. He had met many Captain Rocks, and some of them had told him that their object was to drive away the heretics. But Catholics of property, as well as Protestants, were attacked, their property burnt, or otherwise destroyed, and themselves murdered indiscriminately by these miscreants. The chief remedy, in his opinion, was to devise some mode of employment for the poor, and the establishment of a woollen manufactory; these would do more than building bridges or making roads.

LORD KING hoped that those who voted against a motion for inquiry would read the Insurrection Act, which he believed was the only efficient Act this Session, and one certainly more fitted for a slave island than a free country. That country was exactly in the same state it had been in for the last twenty-three years.

The DUKE of LEINSTER, in adverting to the Institution for the promotion of Education in Ireland, said, that he had left it two years ago on account of its conduct, and if some reformation were not made it could not stand.

The MARQUIS of LANSDOWN said, Ireland had never been in a worse situation than it was at present since the year 1798, and yet they saw nothing effectual done for her tranquillity. What would the measures pointed out, viz. Grand Jury Presentments Bill, Courts of Justice and Education Institutions, do for the benefit of Ireland. They were told that the grants for education had been distributed impartially, without reference to religious distinctions; but he denied that any sums had been given to Catholic schools under the direction of Catholics. Ireland was unfortunately distinguished from every other civilized country; she had a Church which had no hold upon the people; the administration of the law was not reverenced, in consequence of a deep-seated feeling that it was administered in exclusion to the mass of the people. He particularly alluded to the unnecessary exclusion of the Catholics from offices they were permitted to enjoy—out of 2540 offices which Catholics were competent to fill, only 108 were occupied by them.

The EARL of LIVERPOOL regretted the calamities; and admitted the expediency of taking measures to remove them. But the motion went far beyond this; for it went to throw the whole weight of those calamities upon his Majesty's Government. He rested his defence on a series of acts done by Government and the Legislature for the benefit of Ireland. Then, with respect to the Government of the Noble Lord, at present Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, he was willing that it should be tried by the purpose which had been held out to be the object of his policy. At the same time no one could say that Ireland was to be cured by a piece of magic, and that by a stroke of a wand disturbance was to be for ever banished. It must be years before the fruits of Marquis Wellesley's improved administration could be seen. He enumerated four great measures which the present Government had originated for the advantage of Ireland; namely, the Tythe Commutation, the Police Regulation, the Reform of the Magistracy, and the new System of Distillery Laws. With respect to tythes, he desired to know whether a voluntary or compulsory commutation was desired. He wished for the former, but considered that every principle of justice would be violated by the latter. He was persuaded and satisfied that the thing might be fairly and amicably arranged, for he was sure the clergy of Ireland were willing fairly to meet the tythe payers on this question. He wished it to be remembered that every man who purchased an estate in Ireland, purchased but 9-10ths of that estate, and the remaining 10th did not belong to him. He eulogized the moderation of the Irish Clergy, who were the most lenient exactors of rent. All he had to plead was that the pledge of the Government was redeemed by the introduction of these important measures. It had been stated that out of 2,540 offices, which Catholics were eligible by law to hold, but 108 were actually held by Roman Catholics. The disparity was certainly great; but then those who talked of the Catholics of Ireland amounting to 6,000,000 out of a population of 7,500,000 ought to bear in mind, that if this calculation were correct, forty-nine 8-fifteenths of the property of Ireland was in the hands of the Protestants. As to the charge that the law was not equally administered he denied the charge, and maintained that as far as education and other circumstances would permit, no difference was made between Catholics and Protestants. He denied that the disturbances which last year and this had existed in Ireland, were directed against the Government or the Institutions of the country. It was a combination against property, whether in the hands of Catholics or Protestants. He could not avoid ascribing much of the evils of Ireland to absenteeism. If any one grievance had been stated that could have been remedied, he would have agreed to the motion; but it was entirely general, and gave a most incorrect and erroneous view of the state of Ireland; and therefore he should oppose the motion.

The BISHOP of KILDARE defended the Parochial Clergy of Ireland from the aspersions that, he said, had been cast upon them.

The EARL of CARNARVON supported the motion.

The House divided—For the motion, Contents 43—Proxies 55—98 Non-Contents 66—Proxies 105—171—Majority 73.

FRIDAY.

The LORD CHANCELLOR gave judgment in the appeal against the second action, instituted by Mr. Gibson against Sir W. Rae, &c. for a libel in the Bacon newspaper. His Lordship held, that the appeal did not set forth that the second action was brought for the same publication of the same libel—it might be for a different publication of the libel; and, secondly, that the appeal interfered with the progress of the case to a Jury, on the direction of the Judges that the issue should be prepared, whereas the Acts (55 and 59 Geo. III.) only contemplated an appeal against the result of going to the Jury.—Appeal dismissed.

Petitions were presented from certain Silk Weavers in Essex against the Silk Manufacturers Bill; from Forfar against the Linen Stamping Bill.

The Scotch Linen Bill was postponed till Monday.

LORD STOWELL brought in a Bill to render valid Marriages contracted Abroad, which was read a first time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY.

The Bill for extinguishing tithes and payments in the parish of St. Andrew's, Holborn, and making compensation in lieu thereof, was passed; as was also the Limerick Local Taxation Bill.

The House went into Committee on the London Bridge Bill.

MR. ALD. WOOD moved to leave out in the clause relative to the plan the word "specification."—For the Amendment, 4—For the original Clause, 80—Majority, 76.

On the Clause for advancing 150,000l. from the Consolidated Fund,

MR. HUME expressed his surprise that no mode was suggested in the Clause for the repayment of this sum. He thought the City ought not to be put to unnecessary expence, nor the public be burthened with a tax of 150,000l. to build a new bridge—the whole was a job.

The LORD MAYOR considered a new bridge as unnecessary, and therefore he would move, as an amendment, "that the Chairman do report progress."

Sir G. Cockburn, Mr. H. Sumner, and Alderman Wood, opposed the amendment.

The Gallery was then cleared for a division. For Reporting Progress, 12—Against it, 81—Majority for the Clause, 69. The House then resumed, and the Report was ordered to be received to-morrow.

On the order for going into Committee on the Irish Tithe Composition Bill,

MR. A. ELLIS objected to the Bill on account of the House having rejected the Compulsory Clause. He moved that the further consideration be adjourned till this day six months.

The House divided—For the original motion, 51—For the amendment, 36. The House then went into the Committee.—Several verbal amendments were made in the Bill, and the House resumed.

TUESDAY.

The SPEAKER attended in the House of Lords to hear the Royal Assent.

Sir H. PARNELL postponed his notice relative to the appointment of a Secret Committee to enquire into the disturbances in Ireland to this day week, and MR. BROUGHAM his Motion relative to the Administration of Justice in Ireland till to-morrow week.

COL. WOOD brought in a Bill to amend the Laws relative to the Settlement of the Poor.—Ordered to be read a second time to-morrow.

The Report of the Sale of Game Bill was postponed to June 30.

The Sale of Beer Bill was read a third time. On the question that the bill do pass, Mr. Maberly repeated his former objections to the Bill, and declared he would take the sense of the House upon it.

The House then divided:—For the Bill 64—Against it 26—Majority for the Bill 38.—The Bill was then passed.

The Prize Money Distribution Bill went through a Committee.

MR. HUME called the attention of the House to the great delay which took place in the Distribution of Prize Money.

The CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER was convinced any individual in the Army having Prize Money due to him would receive every information by referring to the Paymaster of the Forces; or in the Navy to the Paymaster of the Navy.

MR. SECRETARY CANNING wished it to be known to the Public, that they had at all times better go to the fountain head than trust to subordinate agents, whose interest it was, perhaps, to deceive them.

Sir I. COFFIN and MR. W. WILLIAMS bore testimony to the ready attention of the Paymasters to any complaints made to them.

The Bill was then committed.—Report to-morrow.

MR. S. RICE moved the House to go into Committee to enquire into the conduct of the Chief Baron of the Exchequer in Ireland. In the Committee the Honourable Member stated, that there were four charges in which the Chief Baron was implicated—the first charge was in the case of a decree; now, the fee on decree was not due till the decree was signed, but the Chief Baron directed that it should be taken when the cause was set down for hearing; and thus the fee of decree was frequently taken in cases which were settled before they came to a decree. But this was not all, for when the case did come to a decree, the fee was taken a second time. The next charge which he had, was the taking a fee for the signing of writs, which was a new fee instituted by the present Chief Baron. The next head related to the taxation of bills of costs on the law side of the Court of Exchequer. The next head of charge related to the currency. The Court of Exchequer is divided into three parts, the law side, the revenue side, and the equity side; and here, as a mode of profit contrary to former practice, he invariably directed all fees to be paid in English currency; thus establishing another and a new source of profit to himself. This was the case he had to charge against the Lord Chief Baron, as it appeared upon the Reports of the Commissioners.

Capt. O'GRADY defended the conduct of the Chief Baron, but without impugning the conduct of the Hon. Member who made the charges, he must observe that the Chief Baron had not the means of examining or cross examining a single witness, yet with such imperfect means of defence he had rebutted more than half the charges. The Hon. Gent. then stated that when the present Chief Baron was raised to the Bench, the greatest confusion prevailed on the subject of the fees of the Court. On the first charge of the increased amount of bills of costs, the whole had proceeded from an inferior Officer, and was unknown to the Chief Baron till the appearance of the Report.—As to the mode of paying the fees, be it right or wrong, the Chief Baron received them in the same way as all other Judges. The Chief Baron had claimed other fees on the ground of usage, and, if wrong, had at least advanced a probable ground for his mode of proceeding. The question was then put upon the three first Resolutions, and they were carried in the affirmative.

The SOLICITOR-GENERAL would submit to the Hon. Member (Rice) the unfairness of his mode of proceeding. That course would be to condemn the Chief Baron unheard. The Hon. and Learned Gent. moved that the Chairman leave the Chair.

MR. TIERNEY asked, why had not the Hon. Gentleman previously suggested that the Chief Baron should be heard.

MR. SECRETARY CANNING said, if he were forced to come to a vote, he was prepared to say, that the Resolution was affirmed in the Report; but if called on to state that the Resolution had been proved to his satisfaction, in that view of the question he must hesitate.

The Chairman obtained leave to report progress, and asked leave to sit again on Thursday, which was granted.

On the question for going into Committee on the Usury Laws Repeal Bill,

MR. DAVENPORT proposed that the Bill be committed this day six months.—On this a division took place.—For going into the Committee, 38—For the amendment, 15—Majority, 23. The Bill went into the Committee, the blanks were filled up with the 1st January, 1824, and the Report was ordered to be to-morrow.

The SOLICITOR-GENERAL brought in a Bill to amend the Limerick Peltonry Act; read a first, and ordered to be read a second time on Thursday.

WEDNESDAY.

Petitions were presented from the ship-owners of Whitehaven, praying that a clause may be introduced in the Bill for Consolidating the Custom Laws, for the more effectually punishing seamen bringing articles on board not mentioned in the manifest, (the Chancellor of the Exchequer said he would give the suggestion his best consideration); and from Bradford, and other places in Yorkshire, against the proposition for a free exportation of British wool.

LORD BINNING, alluding to a charge made by Lord A. Hamilton against the Sheriff of Lanark for improper conduct at the election, by fixing too early a day for the convenience of Lord A. Hamilton, and in consequence of which he scarcely left time for the Noble Lord to make a similar number of voters with his antagonist, begged, on the part of Mr. Hamilton, the Sheriff, to say, that no partial motives had guided his conduct.

LORD A. HAMILTON must say, that so far from being ready to retract what he had said of Mr. Hamilton, as Sheriff Depute of the County of Lanark, he was ready to repeat the charges which he had formerly brought against him. The Noble Lord then repeated the charges which he had brought against Mr. Hamilton on a former day.

Mr. PYM presented a petition from the County of Bedford, praying that the House would interfere to put an end to the burning of Hindoo women.

MR. F. BUXTON said, it was estimated that 800 women immolated themselves annually. In many cases the victims were so poor as not to be able to purchase the fuel for their own destruction; in one instance a girl 14 years old escaped from the pile thrice, and at last her tresses were cut by the bye-standers; these atrocious cases were sources of intimate delight to the spectators.

Mr. Wynn agreed that the recital was most appalling, but the remedy for the evil must be left to the discretion of the local government.

In answer to a question from Mr. S. Rice relative to the Irish Poor,

Mr. Goulburn said, he had no objection to support a motion for a Committee to enquire into the best means of employing the Poor.—A Petition was then presented from the Hibernian Society, praying for the assistance of the House to carry into effect Mr. Owen's Plan.—The Petition was laid on the table.

Sir Gerard Noel moved for a Select Committee to enquire into the claims of Mrs. Serres, from whom he presented a petition a few days since. It was well known that this lady had made several applications to Government for money, supported upon well grounded claims as the only legitimate representative of the late Duke of Cumberland. Now the pure English of it was, she wanted this money to pay her debts. If she really was one of the Blood Royal, why had she not a pension on the Civil List? He doubted whether it was in the power of the King or his Ministers to tell one of the royal family, "you shall not have twopence." The first question was—Is this woman an impostor, or is she one of the Royal Family? If an impostor, he called upon His Majesty's Government to protect the Royal Family against her; if not, he called on them to do their duty by her as such. He (Sir Gerard Noel) had it in command from Her Royal Highness to make no exposure unpleasant to any of the other branches of the Royal Family. But he had it in command from himself to spare no person from exposure it justice were refused. It it were, he should say something strong both to the Ministers and the country. He had been there through the whole of Pitt's administration—when he was returned he wore in his cocktade the motto of "Pitt and the Constitution." That would be his watchword to death. He begged to have the Petition read. [The Clerk then read the Petition, stating, that the Petitioner was incarcerated in the Rules of the King's Bench Prison, and praying for relief.] Sir Gerard Noel in continuation, said, he was most anxious to avoid giving offence to the Royal Family, to whom no man was more attached than he was. He had wore the Prince's button for 30 years, and had been very intimate with the King, and he was sure His Majesty never saw any testimony more loyal than his we.e.

Mr. Hume seconded the motion, and observed, that from consideration to the Royal Family, if she were an impostor, they ought to take some steps. But his principal ground was in consideration of the creditors, who were entitled to this money if due.

Mr. Secretary Peel said, that the Hon. Baronet had imposed a difficult task upon him, for the whole affair was so ridiculous that he hardly knew how to treat it in that House. It was a romantic story, and the House must expect to find many parts of it in the highest degree ludicrous. There were two brothers of the name of Wilmot, of one of whom, Robert, this Lady was the daughter; and of her baptism they had proof. In 1817, she first became discontented with her humble birth, and professed herself to be the illegitimate daughter of the Duke of Cumberland. At that time she caused a petition to be presented to the King in her behalf. She professed to be the daughter of the Duke of Cumberland by a Mrs. Payne, the wife of a Captain Payne, who died abroad. In 1819 she came forward as the legitimate daughter of the Duke by a daughter of Dr. Wilmot. A private marriage was alleged to have taken place between these parties in 1769. Now it was known that the Duke of Cumberland was married in 1767, not to Miss Wilmot, but to Mrs. Horton. The documents, therefore, which were now brought forward went to prove the crime of bigamy against the Duke of Cumberland. It certainly did appear that there were papers bearing the names of Lord Chatham and Mr. Dunning, relating to the alleged private marriage in 1769, and to the birth of a child in 1772. It was stated in one of them that another lady had a still-born child, and that Lord Chatham and Mr. Dunning consented to substitute Olive in its place. The Right Hon. Gent. then read one of the documents relating to the birth of the supposed Princess, signed "J. Dunning," "Chatham," "Warwick," and dated June 2d, 1774. Now it happened that Lord Chatham resigned the seals in 1768; and upon June 17, 1774, he moved an Address to the King to remove all the troops from Boston. With the known feelings of the King upon the American War, and with the strong opposition made to the Ministers by Lord Chatham upon that question, it was impossible that he should have been selected by His Majesty for an affair of so delicate a nature.—Another of the documents stated that the Princess was to be known by a large, brown, liver-coloured spot on her right rib.—Signed, "Chatham." He would now examine the principal documents, and the first was the marriage certificate. It stated that the marriage was solemnized by banns, and the ceremony performed by J. Wilmot, and witnessed by Lord Warwick and Mr. Adder, who subscribed their names as present, "Broke," "J. Adder." Signed "G. Rex."—As the certificate stated the marriage to have been solemnized by banns, the first question asked was, where were the banns published? It was curious to see how impositions of this nature were detected, and how strangely the truth would sometimes appear. It happened that Dr. J. Wilmot, who was said to have performed the ceremony, was a Fellow of Trinity College, and it appeared from the books that he was resident at Cambridge on the very day, and that he left it on the following day: so that it was impossible for him to have been in London at that time. It was fact, that the present Earl of Warwick, before he came to the title, always signed "Broke," as this certificate was signed. But previous to the time of the present Earl, the second title was Greville. And it appeared from the testimony of Lord Warwick, and of the servants of the late Earl, that he never signed any thing but "Greville" before coming to the title. Still the signature of Mr. Adder remained, and he had to inform the House that inquiry had been made at Warwick, where it was found that the people remembered Dr. Adder perfectly well. But it had been found that this gentleman was from Saint Andrew's, and that the good people of Warwick had taken the first letter of his name away, and quite changed its last syllable. His real name was Hadow, which had been converted into Adder, and the corruption was adopted in the signature to the marriage certificate. He trusted this would be enough to satisfy the House.—(Cheers.)—There was another claim in which the Hon. Bart might support this lady if he chose, and one which he certainly should not be inclined to oppose. It was her claim to the Principalities and Ecclesiastical Sovereignty of the Kingdom of Poland. This claim she founded upon her mother's father, Dr. Wilmot, having married the daughter of Augustus Stanislaus. The Right Hon. Gent. concluded by reading a passage from the Address of the Princess of Poland, in which she stated, that she only lived in the hope of seeing her faithful Poles emancipated from foreign thraldom.

Sir G. Noel replied, and said he confessed that the question of banns struck most in his stomach, but that he did not consider it to have defeated his statement—The motion was negatived without a division.

On the second reading of the English Catholics' Bill, Sir G. Hill objected to the principle of the Bill; much mischief had occurred since the Elective Franchise had been conceded to the Irish Roman Catholic, and he warned the House against passing this Bill.

Mr. W. Banks opposed the Bill. He had no objection to admitting the Catholics of England into the Magistracy, but he opposed granting them the Elective Franchise.

The Attorney-General said the Bill went to relieve every person from taking the oath of supremacy. It did not change the concession to Catholics. On this ground he should oppose the Bill.

Mr. Secretary Peel could not consent to abolish the Oath of Supremacy. The exceptions were very unsatisfactory.

Mr. Banks did not understand the Bill as it was now framed. It stated the word "franchise," which was a word of large import, and should be properly defined; as it now stood, it might extend to the corporate as well as the elective franchise.

Mr. Wetherell would oppose the Bill as it was now framed. It was then read a second time.

Lord Nugent, in reply to the observations of the Hon. Member (Mr. Banks) asked, if the Hon. Member should ever think of selling the Borough of Corfe-Castle, would he put the Oath of Supremacy to the intended purchaser?

Mr. Banks said, if he were ever inclined to part with property supposed to convey political power, he should think he deserted his duty if he sold it to persons who he thought would abuse it. (Cheers.)

Lord Nugent feared he had, indeed, put the question too abruptly; and he must admit that the answer showed the Hon. Member to be consistent in his opinions.

The Bill was then ordered to be committed on Monday.

On the third reading of the Scotch Commissaries Bill, a divison took place. Ayes 56—Noes 21—Majority 35.

Mr. Kennedy then moved that it be read that day six months.

Mr. Grant moved that the House do adjourn. The House divided. Ayes 9—Noes 44—Majority 35.

Mr. Hume objected to proceeding on the Bill that night, and moved to adjourn. The Lord Advocate then withdrew the third reading till to-morrow.

THURSDAY.

Petitions were presented from Nottingham against the Combination shire against the Poor Laws Bill; from the Owners and Occupiers of Wiltland in the County of Northumberland, praying the House to remove linest quality; from 3,107 inhabitants of Newcastle-upon-Tyne against Slavery; from 9525 inhabitants of Middlesex, praying that the Jurisdiction of the County Court may be extended to debts above 10*l.*; from Mr. J. G. Butt, complaining of the hardships which he had sustained in consequence of the proceedings instituted against him in the Common Pleas, at the instance of Sir N. Conant.—(The Solicitor-General thought, when this case was investigated, it would be found that the Treasury had acted with the greatest propriety and liberality towards Mr. Butt; and that the Treasury did not defend Sir N. Conant, but that Sir N. Conant was defended by his own Counsel and Solicitors.)

Mr. Wilmot Horton, in answer to a question from Mr. Marryat, said, there was at present a Commission of Inquiry in the West Indies, who were to proceed to Trinidad, and inquire how far the provisions of British law could be extended to that Settlement.

On the third reading of the Assessed Taxes Bill, Mr. Herries (in answer to a question from Mr. Hobhouse), thought, in all probability, the windows of Parts, to which the Hon. Member alluded, were not really shop windows, and if that was the case, it was not intended they should be exempted.—The Bill was passed.

The settlement of the Poor Bill was committed for Monday.

Mr. Lennard moved the appointment of a Select Committee, to take into consideration the Returns made to the House, relative to the County Court of the County of Middlesex, on the 24th of January, 1821.—For the Committee 18—Against it 44.

Mr. Hume moved several resolutions, on which he meant to ground "an humble Address to be presented to his Majesty, praying that he will be pleased to direct an enquiry to be made into the manner in which the Right Hon. the Lords of the Admiralty have exercised their power, both as regards placing Officers upon full pay, and the promotion of other Officers to a higher rank since the peace." The Hon. Member prefaced his motion by complaining of the conduct of the Admiralty, which had given much dissatisfaction, from the circumstance of juniors having been put over the heads of elder Officers. Young men of no experience had been employed, on account of family connections, while older and meritorious Officers had been neglected. In 1793, the number of Officers, from Admirals to Lieutenants, was 2062. In 1816, the total number was 5568. The Finance Committee had looked forward to a reduction by which, in seven years, a reduction of one-third would have been effected. But that expectation had been far from realised, as 965 promotions had taken place. In the space of seven years 513 persons had been appointed Midshipmen; 222 Lieutenants had been appointed Commanders, and 125 Commanders Post Captains. In the year 1816, the expence of the Navy was 1,137,000*l.* and in 1823 that sum had only been reduced to 1,079,000*l.* The annual expence caused by the new promotions was 77,272*l.* The Hon. Member then stated, that the Hon. Capt. Gambier had been put over the head of 3000 Lieutenants, and then promoted over 745 Commanders. Lord F. Wynne, and the two Lieutenants of the Hon. Capt. Spencer, held the rank when he was a boy. He enumerated a variety of other promotions which he contended were against the rule of seniority.

Sir George Cockburn described the rule adopted by the Admiralty Board in respect of promotions. Every one who entered that service, were he the King's son, must serve as a Midshipman for 6 years; and he contended that it was most desirable for the good of the service to have the sons of noblemen and distinguished individuals in the navy; they gave it respectability, represented it in that House, and added to its character in society; and it was not to be expected that they should undergo all the hardships of inferior service, which was endured by those who served in the profession for their bread. With respect to Lord F. Thynne, the name of that officer stood at the bottom of a list of seven, who were promoted upon a particular occasion, as being the seven oldest commanders upon the different stations. This officer had also served in the Mediterranean, and afterwards in the Active with much credit to himself, that Lord Wm. Gordon came to the Admiralty and reported to him the meritorious conduct of this young officer as being entitled to reward; and he was proud to say that he had it. Now, upon looking at the list of the seven Commanders who were promoted, it would be seen that the next immediately above Lord F. Thynne, was the Hon. F. Spencer, who belonged to an Opposition family. With regard to junior officers passing over the heads of their seniors, it so happened that his junior lieutenant had been placed over the head of this young nobleman, who served under him without a word. At the Coronation, all midshipmen who had served since 1813 had been promoted; and the oldest commanders on the respective stations, without regard to any other consideration, had received promotion. At the Jubilee, the principle of seniority had been made the rule of promotion; the consequence of which had been, that several long dead had been promoted, and a worthy Major (Cartwright) had received the rank of commander.

Mr. Henry Grey Bennet thought that length of service should be the principal circumstance to regulate the promotions. He did not think that birth should enter into the question. There could be no doubt that many would be found to bear testimony to the excellence of the present system at the expence of the past. He did not say, however, that the Admiralty had not succeeded in making out any case; but he repeated his disapprobation of the system of allowing birth to interfere with the question of promotion.

Mr. Secretary Canning thought that a most satisfactory answer had been given to the accusation. The question resolved itself into this, whether promotion should depend on merit or on seniority. He thought the Hon. Gent. had failed to make out his case, and that the Navy now stood in the situation best fitted to support its energies in war, its respectability in peace, and that rank which it ought to support in comparison with the other branches of the public service. The Hon. Member had forgotten the battle of Algiers, which had given so many fair claims to promotion. Wherever British Officers were employed there were always strong claims. In the Preventive Service, against the Pirates in the Red Sea, and in putting down the Slave Trade, on the coast of Africa, our officers had displayed the greatest courage and good conduct, and established claims from which it was impossible to escape. Captain Gambier was the only Post Captain in the East Indies at the death of the officer whom he succeeded, and by the rule of the service was entitled to succeed to the vacancy. The far greater part of the promotions was from service alone, but few from interest.

Admiral Sir John Beresford said, it was within his own knowledge that many promotions had taken place in favour of those who were opposed to Ministers.

Admiral Coffin said, that so far from the promotions being too quick, he had known midshipmen who had served 18 years without being promoted. If men were kept unpromoted until they had arrived at his time of life, they would be good for nothing. He himself, if he were now sent to sea, should fall about like an old three-legged stool.—Admiral F. Pakenham spoke in favour of the motion.

Captain Gordon said, that many Midshipmen had served double the time prescribed by the rules of the service without being promoted, and were not allowed half-pay. He thought this deserved the consideration of the House.

Sir F. Ommanney moved an amendment to the effect that seniority should obtain a promotion in the service. No Member seconded Sir Francis, and of course his amendment fell to the ground.

The two first Resolutions were negatived by the previous question being put and carried. For the third Resolution, 52—Against it, 153—Majority, 121. The other Resolutions were negatived without any division.

Mr. Western brought forward his motion relative to the alteration in the qualifications of Jurors serving at assizes. The Hon. Gent. concluded a few preliminary observations, by moving for leave to bring in a Bill for that purpose.—Leave given.

Mr. Hume said, he had now to bring before the House a subject of very great importance, he meant the subject of the money expended at the Coronation, especially as regarded the money taken from the sum paid by France as compensation money, and appropriated to the discharge of the Coronation debts. The Chancellor of the Exchequer had stated that the sum of 500,000*l.* of this money was to be applied to the service of the public; with respect to what appeared that of this sum 138,000*l.* had been applied to the expences of the Coronation. This he considered as a breach of confidence on the part of the Government, and an illegal act. The Hon. Member proceeded to comment on the expence of several parts of the ceremony; he especially condemned the keeping a diamond bauble (the Crown) year after year, at a great expence, though no longer useful. He thought a select Committee ought to be appointed to enquire into the causes of the excess of 138,000*l.* and he moved accordingly.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer opposed the enquiry because it was unnecessary. The fact was, that the 100,000*l.* was taken on guess, the expences of the Coronation 60 years ago being no guide in the present day. As to the Crown, that was hired. The estimated value was 63,000*l.* and the hire was 10 per cent. on the value. In addition to this was the coverlet, value about 15,000*l.* more. But what was this compared to the Jewels hired at the Coronation of George III.? The value of the Jewels then hired was 200,000*l.* and the expence of hiring was about 15,000*l.* As to the robes, which formed a second object of charge, only the usual robes had been used, and included in the item of 24,000*l.* were a set of Parliamentary robes, in which His Majesty went to open or close the Session. These were not had before they were wanted, as his late Majesty had no new robes. Those which his present Majesty wore previous to his Coronation had been in the Royal Family for upwards of a century, and when hung on His Majesty, it was with difficulty they were prevented falling in ruins from the Royal shoulders. Next, as to the French money: this was public money, to be appropriated to public services; and being so, then Ministers had not offended in the appropriation, although it must be an excessive expenditure. He would meet the motion by a direct negative.

The House divided—For the motion, 77—Against it, 127—Majority against the motion, 50.—The third reading of the Scotch Commissaries' Bill was fixed for Tuesday.

FRIDAY.

Petitions were presented from certain Architects against Mr. Rennie's plan for Building London Bridge, and from Bridgenorth against Slavery.

On the third reading of the London Bridge Bill,

The Lord Mayor moved that it be read this day six months. The House divided. For the Amendment 4—For the Bill 71.—Majority 67.

Mr. H. Sumner proposed a Clause providing that the City of London should not appoint an Engineer without the sanction of the Lords of the Treasury.

The Lord Mayor opposed the Clause as being an improper interference in the management of the City Funds. The House divided. For the Clause 78—Against it 16. The Bill was passed.

On presenting a Petition from Sutter in Ashfield, against the Combination Acts Repeal Bill,

Mr. Denman said, so far from the operative workmen in these districts being disaffected, the workmen of Nottingham had offered to raise a Corps to keep down the disaffected farmers.

Mr. Brougham asked whether Ministers had received any information confirmatory of the report that the Allied Sovereigns had withdrawn their Ambassadors from the Court of Wirtemburg, in consequence of the Government of Wirtemburg having refused to suppress certain Newspapers and political Publications; or, whether it was in consequence of the King of Wirtemburg having protested against the invasion of Spain by France.

Mr. Secretary Canning said, that Government had no direct official communication on this subject, though intelligence had been received, agreeing in some particulars with that of the Hon. Gentleman, but totally dissimilar in others.

The House divided on the second reading of the Scotch Jury Court Amendment Bill. Ayes, 47—Noes, 42—Majority 5. The Bill was committed for Monday.

In a Committee of Supply,

The Chancellor of the Exchequer moved the grant of 40,000*l.* to defray the expence of a new building to contain the Royal Library.

Mr. Hobhouse said, the Report of the Committee was infinitely beneath the worth of this noble collection, in which was to be found every thing that could enrich the mind of the scholar and the statesman. His late Majesty devoted 2000*l.* a-year for fifty years to this collection; but he believed 200,000*l.* would not purchase it now. He objected to removing the library to the British Museum. He had cast his eye to the banqueting-house at Whitehall as a proper receptacle for these books, which he understood could be fitted up for them at an expense of 5,000*l.*, but if it cost 50 or 100,000*l.* they ought to place this library, if not in one royal palace at least in another. He then moved that no grant should be made for this purpose until it could be seen whether the royal library could not be placed in some one of the royal palaces, or near them, and the two Houses of Parliament.

Sir C. Long objected to Whitehall becoming a receptacle for the Royal Library, because, being so public a place, he feared it would become a place for lounging in. Besides, if Whitehall should become a Library, it would be absolutely necessary to build a chapel for the Guards.

Sir J. Macintosh said His Majesty had acted nobly by his people, in removing this library from a Palace, where pomp and ceremony might rather deter than invite the retired and laborious student. He could not help saying that, in his opinion, Parliament had stinted and starved the British Museum; for, during the last five years, only 300*l.* had been allowed for printed books, and 50*l.* for manuscripts. He must support the resolution, although he must regret that any part of the money was to be laid out on the scite of the present British Museum.

Mr. Croker could not agree to commencing this new building on that disgraceful spot, disgraceful to the arts and character of the country, commonly called the British Museum. The Museum, in which all our literary treasures were deposited, with the exception of an old house near the corner of Chancery-lane, in which old Isaac Walton, the fisherman, lived, was the most combustible building in London; so much so, that no Insurance Office in London would insure it at any premium. When Lord Nelson, during his attack on Copenhagen, landed to negociate a peace, he ascended the stair leading to the Palace, and observed they were wood, and turning to Sir Edward Berry, he said,—"Berry, these will burn;" so any one going up to the British Museum might exclaim, "This will burn;" but the Trustees of the Museum had built one incombustible wing to Montague-house, and what did Gentlemen suppose they had placed in it? The valuable books and manuscripts?—oh, no! no such thing; they had placed the marbles there, so that although the books might be burnt, the public might be certain the marbles would not—though the manuscripts of Elizabeth, of Bacon, and of Clarendon might be destroyed, the Townly Venus would be safe.

"So some great City-house, the power still lacks
"To rival Boodles' dancing, and Almack's;
"Three lacs of mutton roasted lies—
"Three roasted geese—three buttered apple-pies."

The British Museum had no other receptacle for the most precious vestiges of antiquity than three closets. Those buildings were erected with mathematical nicety; one was a square, the second a parallelogram, the third a double cube. The Trustees having acquired wisdom from the Egyptians, procured the head of Memnon; it was a longer head than any among the Trustees, and they were obliged to raise the roof of the closet to hold it. The Committee, in fact, had made the place like a pill-box. After such specimens of taste, it would be advisable to leave the money in the hands of the Crown, and trust to the King's responsible Advisers for the erection of a proper building.

Mr. Banks complained that the Hon. Member had made a personal attack on the trustees.

Mr. Croker declared he said nothing personal.

After some conversation the Committee divided. For the Grant 54.—For the Amendment 30.—Majority 24.

Two thousand pounds were then voted as a remuneration for Capt. Manby's services; but Mr. Hume stated it to be his intention to oppose the Vote on the bringing up the Report.

The House then resumed.

At Mary-le-bone-Office on Thursday, Mr. Joseph Wilfred Parkins was brought up under a warrant for neglecting to pay the sum of 11*l.* 4*s.* being so much arrears due for the support of an illegitimate child, sworn to him by Hannah White some months since. Mr. P. exercised all his skill in denying the fact before the Magistrate, but without effect, and was equally unsuccessful in his appeal to the Sessions, when the Magistrates decided that he should pay the sum of 4*s.* per week, which was confirmed. Mr. P. however, having failed to comply with this, the Parish took out a warrant, and gave it to Read, who was desired to give the Ex-Sheriff notice thereof. This he did, when Mr. P. promised to attend the Magistrate at three o'clock; but did not. He was then brought a prisoner; when the Magistrate, after a few preliminary questions, asked Mr. Thorp, a Parish Officer, if any money had been paid in consequence of the order of affiliation; to which he replied, not a farthing. The Magistrate then asked the Ex-Sheriff if he could shew any cause for his neglect. Mr. P. asked, in reply, if he could not be allowed to compromise with the Parish. The Magistrate said, that might be done privately, but he could not interfere in it; and that nothing that he (Parkins) could do would abrogate the order of affiliation. Parkins replied, that was more than he (the Magistrate) could tell; Parliament, perhaps, might take up the business. The Magistrate observed, that was possible, though not probable. Parkins, "Well, what's to pay, Thorp?" Being told 11*l.* 4*s.* he put down 12 sovereigns, telling Mr. Thorp he might keep the difference himself, and then stalked out of the Office, followed by his Clerk, bearing a tremendous blue bag.

PRICE OF STOCKS AT THE CLOSE, SATURDAY.

The British Securities, during the whole week, have fluctuated very little, but have generally been inclined to look up. Consols for the Account opened to-day at 81¾, and closed at 81¾. In the Foreign Market great confusion has reigned, and Spanish Securities in particular have been much agitated; the Bonds were done as low as 26¾ in the middle of the day; since that time they have been doing from 4 to 7 per cent. higher than on Thursday. Columbian Bonds have fluctuated also, having been done at 53, from thence to 55.

OSMOND, a Tale.—By the Author of "The Favourite of Nature."—Printed for G. and W. B. Whittaker, Ave-Maria-lane.

"The characters are drawn with natural ease and correctness; the incidents are probable, and often striking; the language is chaste and nervous, and the interest of the Tale well sustained from the beginning to the denouement. With such claims there can be no doubt of 'Osmond' becoming a great favourite with that large portion of society—the novel-reading public."—Literary Chronicle, Oct. 26, 1822.

"Caroline's death is truly affecting; and of the after-meeting between Osmond and his angelic wife, and their parting interview, we cannot speak in terms of too great praise. We yield the amiable author our unqualified eulogy for the religious tendency of the book. And, as a parting word, we consider 'Osmond' one of the most successful novels of that class which undertake to wean us from strong passions, and teach us the philosophy of virtue."—Literary Register, Nov. 1822.—Also, lately published,

VALPERGA; or, The Life and Adventures of Castruccio, Prince of Lucca. By the Author of FRANKENSTEIN. In 3 vols. 12mo.—Printed for G. and W. B. Whittaker, Ave-Maria-lane.

"We shall leave the wide stream of the Author's Narrative pure and untouched, for the refreshment of those whose thirst it ought to be our business to excite, not to assuage. By far the finest part of the book is that in which the loves of Castruccio and Euthanasia are broken and disturbed by those of Castruccio and a certain Beatrice of Ferrara. The soul of this heaven-devoted maiden is bathed in the flood of a new and over-mastering passion, and boldly indeed are her feelings and actions described. The chapter in particular, entitled, "Beatrice, her creed, and her love," it is impossible to read without admiration of the eloquence with which it is written."—Blackwood's Magazine, April, 1823.

ANECDOTES of the SPANISH and PORTUGUESE REVOLUTIONS. By COUNT PECCHIO, an Italian Exile. With an Introduction and Notes, by EDWARD BLAQUIERE, Esq. Author of "Letters from the Mediterranean," an "Historical Review of the Spanish Revolution," &c.—Printed for G. and W. B. Whittaker, Ave Maria lane.

☞ Proof impressions of the Portrait may be had separate, price 2s. 6d.

"This work appears to be the offspring of an elegant, ardent, and sprightly mind; they are indeed distinguished by prettiness of remark, or bon mot, rather than by depth of view or seriousness of reflection. The well wishers to the cause of Constitutional Spain will be glad to find Count Pecchio as authority for very considerable resources against foreign interference, contained in the national character of that country."—Literary Register, March 15, 1823.

"While Spain continues to attract so great a portion of our attention, every kind of information claims some degree of regard; and that which is furnished by Count Pecchio is interesting, from the light that it throws on the personal character of many distinguished actors in the Spanish Revolution, as well as from the ardent spirit in which it is written."—Monthly Review, May, 1823.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, JUNE 22.

HIS MAJESTY remains at the cottage in Windsor Park, or, as it is now called, the "Lodge," enjoying, we rejoice to find, renovated health—the air and exercise which the KING is there able to take, have contributed in a most gratifying degree to his MAJESTY's restoration—we still entertain a hope, although we have too much personal regard and affection for his MAJESTY to suffer ourselves to hope for anything which might injure or inconvenience his MAJESTY, that the people may yet see him in public before the close of the season, and have an opportunity of testifying again and again their devoted loyalty and ardent affection to his Crown and person.

WE really believe that the Irish Tythe Commutation Bill will not struggle its way through the Commons, and we therefore delay publishing an additional mass of facts and arguments against the measure, and which, should it fail this Session, we shall keep in store ready for use whenever it shall again raise it head.

The accounts from Ireland are gloomy beyond measure; a sanguinary affair took place at MAGHERA, which originated with the Papists. We refer our readers to the next page for an account of another Popish association meeting, and we do once more call upon those who ought to listen, to act boldly and decidedly, unawed by the clamour of liberalism, to reject half measures, and save IRELAND, while it is yet to be saved, from POPERY and REVOLUTION.

The DUKE of DEVONSHIRE brought forward a motion in the House of Lords on Thursday, touching the state of Ireland, in which he took the very opposite extreme of objection to the measures of Government to that which we are quite sure should be made to their conduct—his Grace spoke of continued severity towards the Irish, and would not admit that any favour had been shewn them. LORD BATHURST replied ably to his Grace, and the EARL of LIVERPOOL attracted so much attention by his most excellent speech towards the conclusion of the debate, that a vast number of Members of the House of Commons were shut out from the division upon MR. HUME's motion for an enquiry into the number of button-holes made in his Majesty's waistcoat on the day of the Coronation.

THE MORNING CHRONICLE of yesterday has the following advertisement or paragraph, which ever it may be called:—

"We understand that SIR F. BURDETT, Bart. HON. H. G. BENNET, HON. C. H. HUTCHINSON, SIR RONALD FERGUSSON, JOSEPH HUME, Esq. J. C. HOBHOUSE, Esq. THOMAS DENMAN, Esq. EDWARD ELLICE, Esq. with several other Members of the House of Commons, intend honouring the Electors of Southwark with their presence at their Anniversary Dinner on Thursday next."

We can only observe, that if, after relinquishing his duties in the House of Commons, abandoning the affair of the Irish Sheriff, military flogging, and many other patriotic subjects which he himself brought forward, on the score of indisposition, SIR FRANCIS BURDETT is caught tom-fooling at a Tavern Dinner in high health and spirits during the sitting of Parliament, we think he will stand as favourably with his constituents in Westminster as Corporal WILSON does with those whom he has turned over to MARSHAL SACKS—for to the young coal-merchant to whom they have been transferred by the Corporal is called in all decent societies.

A SYSTEM of attack has been commenced by the Radical Whig press upon the conduct of the Master of the Crown Office, MR. LUSHINGTON, who is also Chairman of the Colonial Audit Board. In the CHRONICLE we perceive quotations from other writers, alleging most extraordinary misdoings against that gentleman in the administration of the duties of his office. They even find the motives by which he has been actuated—or at least may have been actuated—in his averred misconduct; appearances, they say, are against him, and upon the ground that he might be corrupted, they argue that he must necessarily be corrupt. MR. HUNT has gone so far as to charge MR. LUSHINGTON, in open Court, with extortion; and, in some of their observations, the papers to which we have alluded appear very well inclined to make similar allegations.

We feel, and feel deeply too, for MR. LUSHINGTON—nothing can be more unjust than first to assume the existence of an illicit temptation, and then find reasons for a man's conduct under it; nothing can be more unfair than to establish a belief in one's own mind that some improper influence exists somewhere, and then to twist and torture words and facts for the purpose of strengthening the ungenerous prejudice we ourselves have generated; nothing can be more unworthy than for such a purpose to connect circumstances which have no connexion, and make insinuations which have no foundation, to give a colouring of impropriety to official transactions which they do not themselves bear, and which if suffered to come before the public without any insidious remark, would in truth appear neither dishonourable nor disgraceful—nothing can be meaner than this Whig mode of finding motives and inferring delinquency without one shadow of proof except that, which perhaps is conjured up by the consciousness of these censors, how themselves would act, if entrusted with any office of importance—but when all this parade of extraordinary delicacy, and splendid high-mindedness, and virtuous purity, emanates, as it does in this instance, from a very questionable source, the baseness of the conduct to which we have alluded, and at which every honourable mind revolts, becomes as ridiculous as it is shameful.

That MR. LUSHINGTON will repel all the charges made against him we have no doubt—we have sufficient faith, and sufficient charity—bad as the world is—to judge better of our fellow creatures than some of our contemporaries, and at all events we are bound not to be led by the allegations of MR. LUSHINGTON'S enemies ranged in battle array against him, we are not to be swayed by the insinuations of those, who may make a profit of his defeat, and above all, we are not to allow MR. LUSHINGTON to be injured by any observations or expressions of his own, literary or verbal, which he may have incautiously used, or which may have been disingenuously extorted from him, for the express purpose of criminating himself.

We believe MR. LUSHINGTON clear and innocent of all that is laid to his charge—nay, we are bound to believe it,—but we again repeat that we feel deeply for that gentleman—holding, as he does, the important posts of Master of the Crown Office, and Chairman of the Colonial Audit Board, and knowing his own motives to have been ever for the good of the service in which he is employed, having in his heart every feeling of high and honourable principle, and being esteemed by a numerous circle of fond and affectionate friends, it must indeed be painfully galling to his sensibility to find his actions misrepresented, his conduct impeached, and his character insinuated away by men who are safe as to their personal responsibility, and whose object in thus calumniating and vilifying him, is neither more nor less than an endeavour to prove to those by whom they are fed and supported, that they are highly useful and conscientious gentlemen themselves, and feelingly alive to the public welfare.

OUR readers will find that HUMBUG sooner or later meets its just reward—if they turn to the report of a trial (Shaw versus Williams) in yesterday's TIMES, they will perceive, not only that that empty dunce, MR. CHARLES PHILLIPS, encountered the severe and just ridicule of BROUGHAM, for the crazy "blarney" with which he insults the ears and understandings of English Judges and Juries, but that the TIMES newspaper itself is compelled to abandon him and his unintelligible stuff to the fate which they merit. The TIMES has the following observation upon the Learned GENTLEMAN'S speech in question:—

"We really must apologize for dedicating so much space to such tawdry stuff as the preceding speech; but it was necessary to give it at length, in order to make MR. BROUGHAM'S masterly exposure of it intelligible."

Poor Paddy!

THE efficacy of well-applied ridicule we think it is not necessary for us to discuss, but advantageous as it generally is whose sued medicinally, there are some cases where its assistance is not required—we mean in those cases where the serious HUMBUG is so exquisitely ludicrous as to need no "aid of foreign ornament."

One of these cases is that of the Spanish subscription of arms and accoutrements, which really is so truly ridiculous in itself, that unless we knew the character of the people who are at work upon the affair, we should be inclined to think the Committee were laughing at the British public; but, alas! the patriots have not intellect sufficient to detect their own absurdity.

In our announcement of the "Ladies' Fancy" for next Friday, in another part of this paper, we have remarked upon the ludicrous effect of giving a dance to save a nation, let us only therefore, before we quote, without an observation, some of the names and contributions to the cause of Spain, observe, that the population of that kingdom is somewhere about eleven millions, and that it contains about one hundred and fifty thousand square miles of territory, then let us turn to the list of contributions—we find that

W. G. THOMPSON, Esq. gives one musket and a bayonet!!!
SIR WILLIAM OWEN!!! one musket and ditto!!!
J. WORSLEY, Esq.!!—a sword.
MR. RICHARD KENNEDY—two pistols!
MR. MELLERSH (Temple)—a musket.
W. HOLMES, Esq.—a PAIR OF SHOES!!!

Now, is not this humbug too contemptible to be tolerated? but as if the absurdity never could be carried to a sufficiently great extent, some blockheaded fellow of the name of WILLETT, in Holborn, gives 25,000 musket—flints, and 25,000 pistol flints. Was there ever such abominable stuff as this? The Spaniards want no flints—if muskets grew as plentifully in Spain as flints, the donations of old fowling-pieces and blunderbusses would not be so thankfully received; and if MR. WILLETT had considered for a moment he would have known that sending flints without muskets to rebels in arms, is like sending a gross of roasting-spits to beggars who have no meat. In short, so contemptible is the whole affair, that whether in money, or contribution of weapons, it is clear the least givers are the wisest and the wittiest people, and by the same rule, the greater the gift the greater the blockhead.

To recur to the conduct of the Whigs when BUONAPARTE invaded Spain would be to try back, over beaten ground, but when we are enquiring we may perhaps just say a word or two to MR. BOWRING. Gentlemen who were MR. BOWRING'S creditors before he suddenly left off trade, would have a better opinion of him if he were not quite so frisky in the cause of liberty, and we would venture just to ask that person, whether the zeal and activity manifested in collecting a subscription for the Spaniards NOW, does not arise from an anxiety to pay for arms, stores, and ammunition sent off to Spain in the cause, some time since, but which have UNLUCKILY fallen into the hands of the Royalists, but which, nevertheless, must be paid for, and for which MR. BOWRING (with others) is answerable?

If it were worth while, we would proceed, and rip up this HUMBUG, and lay the whole thing bare to the bone. What will the public say, when they are told that the very person from the Sun newspaper, who made a speech at the tavern meeting, full of indignation at the offer of money to buy snuff, from some friend of France, if he would write up the BOURBONS—what will they think, we ask, of public patriotism, when we tell them that this very person received the pay of another paper for cutting himself up, and turning the whole business of the day into ridicule?

What will the public say of the intimate knowledge of Spain evinced and boasted of by my LORD WILLIAM BENTINCK upon this occasion, when they are told that he does not know the distance from VILLA FRANCA to ORDAL—or if he does know it now—that he has paid dearly and deeply in a precious coin for the information. What will they say of public benevolence, when they are told that the grand-children of one Noble Lord, who figured away in speeches and subscriptions, are left to be subsisted like paupers—and what will they say, when they find the same men who contributed their ten and twenty guineas each to the Spanish subscription, hurrying from the tavern to the Stock Exchange to put their names down as subscribers to the French loan?

GOOD GOD! is there no sense left amongst us?' are we stocks and stones to be dictated to, by a Council composed of BOWRINGS, LAMBTONS, and WEATHERSTONES? Are there people in this country so besotted, so gulled, so stupid, as to be made to believe that a Fundango Dance in King-street will alter the fate of a great nation?—that eleven muskets will arm two or three hundred thousand men, or that MR. WILLIAM HOLMES'S pair of shoes will enable columns of thousands to march against an invading foe?—It is really sickening.

OUR attention has been called to a vessel which, for some considerable length of time, has been building on the Surrey side of Westminster Bridge—she is adapted for the operation of steam, with engines we believe of fifty horse power. One great peculiarity about her is, the absence of frame work in her construction. Instead of being built upon any received principle, she has seven or eight linings, (we forget which) between each of which the external water may be admitted at pleasure, for the purpose of bringing her down to the surface of the sea, while at the same moment her masts (for she may be rigged either as a lugger or a schooner) may be lowered after the manner of the barges on the London River, so that to a cruizer, or a signal station on shore, she will become almost imperceptible in the day, and wholly invisible in the evening or night.

Naturally curious to know for what purpose such a vessel could be building, we made certain enquiries, and were informed that LORD COCHRANE was the patron of the undertaking; and moreover that she was to be navigated under water altogether. Neither of these stories, from what we had previously been told, satisfied us, and we continued our enquiries, even at the enclosed house, under which she is building—all efforts at admission were vain, unless we left our card and called the next day, when, after a due investigation by some secret committee, if we were not disapproved of we might perhaps be allowed to look at the boat:—we knew we had no chance of being let in if any HUMBUG really existed, as we shrewdly began to suspect there did, and therefore we declined the liberal offer of the very civil person who shewed us the outside of the shed.

We were not to be baffled here, and therefore we set to work to discover something more of this mysterious steamer, and accordingly we discovered that she was projected by MR. JOHNSON, formerly known as a smuggler, and now, we believe, an employé of the Government in the Revenue department, who upon the principle laid down in an old proverb, which we certainly shall not venture to repeat, seem to consider it good policy to "set a smuggler to catch a smuggler."

This appeared natural enough—that MR. JOHNSON before he had retired from business should have endeavoured to bring his craft to perfection did not seem particularly strange, and the whole arrangement of bringing her down to the water—of being able by three or four strokes of the engine to relieve her of all the water she had admitted, and to bring her up again—the shifting masts—the commodious stowage, all bespoke a very natural and expected shrewdness and mastery of his art, but when we found that although MR. JOHNSON has relinquished his calling, that he has abandoned the boat, which was built under his surveillance, and that nevertheless the builders have no idea of applying to MR. JOHNSTON, but to OTHER PERSONS for payment, we began to suspect something more than met the ear.

We conclude the Government are in possession of the curious facts we are about to disclose: if they are not we beg pardon for anticipating them, although we are free to confess, it is not the first time we have done so. But having found that, this boat was hurried on until THE DAY SUCCEEDING THAT IN WHICH the news of BUONAPARTE'S death arrived in England, we began to suspect that all these accommodations, these stratagems borrowed from the smuggler's dictionary, might have been intended for the purpose of bringing away that Hero from ST. HELENA—when we found that on the day after the arrival of the news of his demise all the hands were knocked off, as the phrase goes, we thought it quite necessary to push the investigation a little further; and having found out JOHNSON himself on the coast, we wheedled him into a conversation, which he abruptly broke off by saying—"Don't – talk about ST. HELENA—if every body knew as much as I – do about that"——and there ended the colloquy; but it was enough to make us more eager for the point.

And now the point is, that the people by whom this boat has been actually built, refuse to pay for her according to their bargain. When it shall be found that some of the men, who now are devoted to the cause of the Spaniards, are the same who caused this boat to be built to turn BUONAPARTE loose upon the Continent, we think we shall be able to prove to the fools who believe in the good intentions of the patriots, that the principle is universal by which they are governed, and that neither honour nor honesty, decency nor consistency, can regulate the disordered ravings of Whig radicalism.

NEWS has arrived in town, that private ROBERT WILSON, of the VIGO MILITIA, is promoted to the rank of CORPORAL —this is stated as no joke.

WOMEN of English habits and delicate feelings will doubtlessly be surprised, if not mortified, by the appearance in all the newspapers of a list of ladies as patronesses of a political ball in aid of the Spanish nation! to be given on Friday next at Willis's Rooms. The character of a female politician ill becomes the chaste and honourable dames of Britain; and we lament that the influence of their husbands should have been exerted to drag them before the public, merely to give a sort of eclat to Whig manœuvrings.

In the first place, as far as relates to our own society, it is the commencement of a system never to be sufficiently deprecated—we mean that of bringing political opinions into private circles. Look at the catalogue of Lords and Ladies which heads the advertisement for this Fancy Dress Ball—how closely in many parts it resembles the list of Brandenburgh visitors—the QUEEN was then the rallying point for the disjointed party—MRS. OLIVE PRINCESS SERRES of CUMBERLAND WILMOT was in actual preparation as another, if we ourselves had not upset the humbug—and now the Spanish Fancy Ball is got up, to shew the country how uncommonly patriotic Whig Ladies are, and how uncommonly respectable a Whig Ball may be made. But these Whig Ladies should feel, that the placard which announces it, is the signal for war, for domestic dissention, and the introduction into private society of all the bickerings and animosities of public political life.

In the second place, the contemptible absurdity of the thing requires to be looked at; and we put it fairly and quietly to the managers, whether they do not lay themselves, as well as their female connexions, open to the sneers of all the rational people in England and Spain by such romantic conduct as that, which they have chosen to adopt.

We will admit, for argument's sake, the Spaniards to be objects of our attention and affection, and (differing as we do entirely upon the point) concede that it is wise, right, and proper to assist that high and proud and honourable people by every means in our power, without unnecessarily involving the country in a war—what then?—what is the Fancy Dress Ball at Willis's as relates to this great cause?—HUMBUG!

We will suppose the Whigs to have been in office some fifteen or eighteen months, and that the country had consequently been reduced to the greatest distress, foreign and domestic; that LORD DARNLEY had been first Lord of the Admiralty, with CREEVEY for his Secretary, and that our fleets had been defeated even in the channel; that the DUKE OF GLOUCESTER had been Commander-in-Chief for half a year, and that our army had been routed in a six months campaign; in short, that France had taken advantage of a change of administration to invade ENGLAND, and that the DUKE D'ANGOULEME, or any other French General, had landed one hundred and fifty thousand men, and was in actual possession of the metropolis. Suppose all this, and suppose we were to hear, in the midst of such proceedings, that half a score Spanish grandees and their ladies had nobly and patriotically given a dance in Madrid, for the purpose of averting all our impending misfortunes—what should we say? Why, we should laugh immoderately, in spite of all our heavy inflictions.

"Ah! but" cries an Englishman, "that can never be—WE never should need such aid—we would not let the French come to London even if the DUKE OF GLOUCESTER did command the army—we have English blood in our veins, and we would fight for our country, inch by inch, from Dover to Deptford." Softly then—is not Spain as dear to the Spaniards as England is to the English?—have these devoted patriots opposed the DUKE D'ANGOULEME, or shewn a disposition to resist his advances?—Not they; they have received the French with shouts and vivas—built arches for them to pass under, and opened their gates to admit them into the capital. Surely then the Spaniards are even less deserving of a benefit dance than we should be in a similar case.

In the third place, however, upon the score of obligation to us for such exertions, let us see what we are doing. Should not we spare with contempt a charitable donation bestowed upon us to enable us to maintain our place among the nations of Europe? Why should the Spaniards be less proud—less independent than ourselves? It is not by the begging trash which one hears after tavern dinners, from exiled vagabonds, that we are to estimate a national feeling. WILSON, a man dismissed from the army of England, goes over to Spain and enlists in a foreign militia, in the teeth of an Act of Parliament, and tells the Spanish soldiers that the people of England are all on their side. We know the people of England are not all on their side—and if WILSON can say that which he knows not to be the fact, to the Spaniards, there is no reason why Spanish charlatans in this country may not equally misrepresent the wants and wishes of their countrymen to the English. This we know, that when a subscription was set on foot here for the Russians, after the burning of Moscow, it was considered so gross an insult by the Russian nobility, that great doubts were entertained as to its application in that country. Nay, we are not quite certain whether it ever was applied as the subscribers here intended it to be.

But in the next place, granting every virtuous, honourable, liberal and generous feeling to the Whigs upon this occasion, let us look for one moment at the REAL UTILITY of the subscription—LAMBTON has put down a thousand pounds—he will find very few people such fools as to follow his ostentatious example—but supposing fifty thousand pounds to be raised in the course of three months for the Spaniards—cui bono?—In the expenses of a great nation fifty thousand pounds will go no very great way—the military disbursements of Spain for six and thirty hours might, perhaps, be met, with such a sum if economically managed—certainly not more—in short, the whole affair is too ridiculous to be thought of, or treated seriously.

One thing we know, which is, that a fancy ball is a very good thing for trade, and we are right glad that there are to be fancy balls, because we trust the Tory ladies will give another soon, in order to shew the Whigs "the difference;" WE ourselves suggested a fancy ball only a fortnight since, in order to give a fillip to trade, and we really think too well of our countrymen to believe that they care one straw about anything beyond an extra night at ALMACK'S.

We shall wait the event, and we have no doubt of being able next Sunday to give our readers a full, true, and particular account of all the high and thorough-bred Whigs, male and female, who may be present; and, in the mean time, content ourselves with adding a poetical invitation, which the wife of our fishmonger has received from one of the Lady Patronesses. If all the temptations held out in the "bidding" be realized, it will indeed be a treat.

THE INVITATION.

FROM ONE OF THE PATRONESSES OF THE Ladies' fancy BALL.

TUNE—"Run, Neighbours, Run," &c.

Come, Ladies, come, 'tis now the time for capering,
Freedom's flag, at WILLIS'S, is just unfurl'd;
We, with French dances, will overcome French vapouring,
And with ice and Roman punch amaze the world:
There's I myself, and LADY L. you'll seldom meet a rummer set,
With LADY GROSV'NOR, LADY FOLEY, and her GRACE of SOMERSET,
While LADY JERSEY flags herself, regardless of the bustle, Ma'am,
With LADY COWPER, LADY ANNE, and LADY WILLIAM RUSSEL, Ma'am.
Come, Ladies, come, 'tis now the time for capering,
Freedom's flag, at WILLIS'S, is just unfurl'd.

Oh, such a treat—'twill be pleasant, past conception, Ma'am,
Such a crowd of patriot dames, were never never seen;
Most of them, at BRANDENBURGH, have met a warm reception, Ma'am,
And were boon companions of our gracious QUEEN!
In smiles arrayed, my LADY GREY, with such a noble work elate,
The Lemonade, and water-ice, will undertake to circulate,
With meat in slices, laid on bread, about the rooms to hand which, is Of course the task of LADY S. the head of all the Sandwiches.
Come, Ladies, come, 'tis now the time for capering,
Freedom's flag, at WILLIS'S, is just unfurl'd.

Then, Ma'am, for company!—there ne'er has been a rush in town
Half so great as there will be to this Whig thing:
MRS. BROUGHAM and MRS. WILDE, the DOCTOR, MRS. LUSHINGTON,
MRS. ELLIS, MRS. BARING, LORD and LADY KING;
The DUKE OF GLOUCESTER, MR. FORSTER, little COLONEL HIGGINS, Ma'am;
MRS. BARBER BEAUMONT, MRS. BYNG, and MRS. FIGGINS, Ma'am;
LADY MORGAN, LADY STANHOPE, old SIR ROBERT BAKER, Ma'am,
And MRS. SMITH, and MRS. FRITH, and LORD and LADY DACRE, Ma'am.
Come, Ladies, come, 'tis now the time for capering,
Freedom's flag at WILLIS'S is just unfurl'd.

Then for amusement, so charmingly diversified;
Poets, painters, patriots, peers, will all be there.
WILSON'S wise letter, by TOMMY CAMPBELL versified,
CAMMY HOB will give us to an old Greek air;
LORD NUGENT, in silk pantaloons, will dance a grand bolero,
And little MOORE, to patriot words, will sing us Lil'bulero,
And DOCTOR HUME, his spirits raised by half a pint of Farintosh,
Will stump a Highland pas de deux with GERALD'S JEMMY MACINTOSH.
Come, Ladies, come, 'tis now the time for capering,
Freedom's flag at WILLIS'S is just unfurled.

The supper will be PIC-NIC—I'm sure I scarce can pen it, Ma'am,
But calf's-head soup I know is sent by DOCTOR HUME;
Syllabubs and trifles from MR. HENRY BENNET, Ma'am;
And Lamb in various shapes and ways by MR. BROUGHAM.
The MASERLYS' send mushrooms and saddles two of mutton, Ma'am;
A cod's-head and shoulders SEFTON volunteers to put on, Ma'am;
Chicken-pies from TAYLOR come, and lobsters from SIR RONALD, Ma'am,
And gooseb'ry fool in Scottish pints from MR. JAMES MACDONALD, Ma'am.
Come, Ladies, come, 'tis now the time for capering
Freedom's flag at WILLIS'S is just unfurled.

SILLY BILLY volunteered to get a royal stag shot,
To treat the Whigs with ven'son, but it would not do;
His Highness was unlucky—so he sent a goose from Bagshot,
While little RICE has furnished us with Irish stew;
LORD NUGENT sends a round of beef with cucumber and mustard, Ma'am,
And LADY ANNE from Holkham sends us up a fine old bustard, Ma'am,
PETER MOORE finds pipes and punch, while LAMBTON makes the gravies, Ma'am,
And many little nameless items come from COLONEL DAVIES, Ma'am.
Run, Ladies run, 'tis now the time for capering,
Freedom's flag at WILLIS'S is just unfurled.

As for the Spaniards, the Cortes, or KING FERDINAND,
I hope dear Ma'am, you'll not suppose I care one pin,
A motley ball at ALMACK'S is considered quite "a bird in hand"
By those, who on the decent nights can not get in!
Then come yourself, I hope you will, and bring your eldest daughter, Ma'am,
And SUSAN SMITH, who ran away, if MR. SMITH has caught her, Ma'am;
Our husbands wish it, and they pay for ev'ry thing to cram us with,
The principle's the same as that which took us all to Hammersmith.
Come, Madam, come, 'tis now the time for capering,
Pleasure's flag at WILLIS'S is just unfurled.

WHEN we sometime since gave clear proof that MRS. SERRES was a Humbug, and her claim an imposition, we were assailed on every side, we were called illiberal, cruel, and heaven knows what besides.

MR. PEEL on Wednesday night, however, decided the affair, and shewed that MRS. SERRES, like the MORNING CHRONICLE, in the midst of her knavery is as great a fool into the bargain as may be imagined—but, alas! the disclosure was not confined to MRS. SERRES—poor SIR GERARD NOEL is made by the reporters to look more ridiculous than any bridegroom of his age ever looked before.

The stuff they make him talk—mercy on us—it is really too bad—and the complete overthrow of the mission he had undertaken from her Highness, and the duty "which he had it in command" to undertake. The fact is, if MRS. SERRES had wanted to make a sensation, she should have got hold of some of the Whig lawyers, those, perhaps, who were employed by her late MAJESTY, and have let them into the secret—in that way she might have made a stand, because men who had the effrontery to maintain the innocence and virtue of QUEEN CAROLINE, would have found no difficulty in vindicating the authenticity and royalty of MRS. OLIVIA SERRES.

There never was such a botch in a great attempt—and the detection arose chiefly from an inattention to orthography, so evident in her literary productions—the vulgarity of mistaking HADDOW for ADDER, as a proper name—the ignorance of the fact that the late LORD WARWICK never signed himself or was called "BROKE," are quite extraordinary, and add in a striking manner to the numerous incidents which have occurred in the conduct of former impostures, tending to their discomfiture.

The House literally rang with laughter during MR. PEEL'S exposition of the cheat. But the most satisfactory event of the evening to us, was, that in order to secure a favourable hearing for his Royal Mistress—SIR GERARD NOEL avowed himself a staunch PITTITE—and a personal friend of his present MAJESTY.

This, we add, was satisfactory, because it shews, either that SIR GERARD is ashamed of the foolish part he played at BRANDENBURGH, where he certainly did not appear as either—or that, it is necessary for a man to wipe off the stain of such connexions before he can get a patient hearing in decent society.

WHAT is it that makes the "leading Journal" so acharné against MR. JOHN HOPE?—Not so much his very proper efforts to punish the unjustifiable manner in which SIR A. BOSWELL'S letter was got possession of, as the fact, which every one acquainted with the Edinburgh Whigs is well aware of, that the efforts of JOHN CLERK, FRANCIS JEFFREY, and JOHN MURRAY, were unavailing to make a Whig of him, and turn his talents to the account of that party, which, wherever it sees a young man of rising ability, labours like the Jesuits to convert him to the advancement of their own order. JOHN HOPE'S example has been followed by the whole of the most promising of the young Advocates of his standing, and the poor Whigs of Edinburgh are quite aware that their standard is deserted by the rising generation. Hence the humeur du diable on the part of the TIMES and CHRONICLE touching MR. JOHN HOPE.

WE are extremely happy to announce to our readers, through the kindness of the MORNING POST, that an arrangement has been made at Marlborough-House, by which the cloaks of ladies coming there to drink tea are hung up in the hall on pegs alphabetically, so that there is now less chance of their being lost or damaged. His Royal Highness PRINCE LEOPOLD is very particular that nothing should be spoiled—but we are authorized to say, that the scarlet cloth which is laid over the hall and stairs, is not intended to preserve the carpets, but to give an air of splendour to the mansion.

LIBER AMORIS.

IN resuming our remarks upon this nasty little book, we shall direct public attention to the baseness and wickedness of the publication, having disposed of its foolery in our last, and in doing so, we will set MR. HAZLITT down in a manner the ass little expects—we will quote from his book (p. 42,) what he calls a letter to Sarah—but which is only an extract; and when we lay before our readers the whole of his letter of that date to the girl—(Dunbar, March 9, 1822)—our readers will perceive the strain in which HE REALLY ADDRESSED her—they will perceive that he writes bad English in every line—they will perceive that he keeps copies of the trash he writes—they will observe that he is in Scotland at the time to divorce his wife, that he may marry this very girl—they will perceive the beautiful effusion at the end of the extract—and they will also perceive the exquisite postscript at the end of the letter.

"MARCH, 1822.—You will be glad to learn that I have done my work—a volume in less than a month. This is one reason why I am better than when I came, and another is, I have had two letters from SARAH. I am pleased I have got through this job, as I was afraid I might lose reputation by it (which I can little afford to lose)—and besides, I am more anxious to do well now, as I wish you to hear me well spoken of. I walk out of an afternoon, and hear the birds sing as I told you, and think, if I had you hanging on my arm, and that for life, how happy should I be—happier than I ever hoped to be, or had any conception of till I knew you. 'But that can never be'—I hear you answer in a soft, low murmur. Well, let me dream of it sometimes—I am not happy too often, except when that favourite note, the harbinger of spring, recalling the hopes of my youth, whispers thy name and peace together in my ear. I was reading something about Mr. Macready to-day, and this put me in mind of that delicious night, when I went with your mother and you to see Romeo and Juliet. Can I forget it for a moment—your sweet modest looks, your infinite propriety of behaviour, all your sweet winning ways—your hesitating about taking my arm as we came out till your mother did—your laughing about nearly losing your cloak—your stepping into the coach without my being able to make the slightest discovery—and oh! my sitting down beside you there, you whom I have loved so long, so well, and your assuring me I had not lessened your pleasure at the play by being with you, and giving me your dear hand to press in mine! I thought I was in heaven—that slender exquisitely turned form contained my all of heaven upon earth; and as I folded you—yes, you, my own best Sarah, to my bosom, there was, as you say, a tie between us—you did seem to me, for those few short moments, to be mine in all truth, and honour and sacredness—Oh! that we could be always so—Do not mock me, for I am a very child in love. I ought to beg pardon for behaving so ill afterwards, but I hope the little image made it up between us, &c.

"[To this letter I have received no answer, not a line. The rolling years of eternity will never fill up that blank. Where shall I be? What am I? Or where have I been?"]

It is here that we feel called upon to supply the blank—not that which HAZLITT laments, but that which we feel in justice to MISS SALLY ought to be filled up, and therefore, as we before promised, we give our readers his whole letter to the young lady of that date—the sentiments, if such they may be called, contained in it are of a different nature from those which the man subsequently has publicly expressed for the girl, to whom it is assuredly a duty to print the document ungarbled.

"My DEAR SARAH—I have got an evening to spare, and shall employ it in writing to you, the only pleasure I have here, except receiving your answers, and seeing your hand-writing, for it is little more, they are so short: and then scarce one kind word in them, in the way of friendship. You are such a girl for business. Shall I scold thee, my love—my beautiful, my own, my only love?" Not for the world would I send thee an unkind word so far away. I may be rash and hasty when I am with thee, but deliberately can I never say or do aught to cast the slightest blame upon thee. You are my little idol—the dear image in my heart, as "that little image" on the mantlepiece (or somebody like it) is in thine. Little did I think, thou glorious lovely girl, when I once gave it thee to kiss, what I was doing. Keep it, cherish it in thy breast, as I would cherish thee for ever, and bless thee with my latest breath. It is for your steadfast attachment there that I esteem you; you ought to shew some regard to me for his sake? Yet it is not what you think of me—it is what you think and feel towards another—it is your own little heart, that seat and throne of fond affection, to which mine is wedded. Do I offend thee, my dear, by talking so? I hope not; I do not mean it; but you know how I love THEE, and I try to express it as well as I can. If my letters pain THEE tell me so, and I will write differently, as long as you will give me leave.

"The house-maid, in the absence of the waiter, (you can't think what an ugly fellow the waiter is) has been up to know what I will have for supper, for the cook wishes to get her things done out of the way. 'Why, what's the matter?' 'Oh! nothing, only its our cook's court-night.' 'Court-night! what's that?' 'Why, her sweetheart's coming to see her.' 'And is not he come yet then?' 'No; nor won't go away till morning light.' 'And when are they to be married?' 'Oh, as soon as they can get money to buy some bedding.' And away she goes laughing ready to split her sides, that I should not know what court-night means in Scotch. The wind raves like ten demons at the window, has broke a pane in one of them, blown out the candles, and I think will blow the cook's lover away if he does not make haste. I am better in my health than I was. I have lived regular, and have had two letters from SARAH. Do you know I have done my work, or shall by Saturday? It will take another month to finish, but all the labour and anxiety is over. I am glad I have got through it so well, for I was afraid I should lose reputation by it, (which I can little afford to lose) and besides, my dear, I now have another motive, I like thee to hear me spoken well of, if at all. I walk out between dinner and tea alone the valley that winds before the house, and hear the birds sing as I told thee; and think, if I had thee hanging on my arm, and for life, how happy I should be—happier than I ever hoped to be, or had even a conception of till I knew THEE. 'But that can never be'—I hear you answer in a soft, low murmur. Well, let me dream of it sometimes, I am not blest too often, except when that favourite note, the harbinger of spring, recalling the hopes of my youth, whispers thy name and peace together in my ear. I was writing something to-day about MR. MACREADY, and that put me in mind of that delicious night I saw Romeo and Juliet with you and your mother. Can I ever forget it for a moment—your sweet modest looks, your infinite propriety of behaviour, all your sweet ways—your hesitating about taking my arm as we came out till your mother did—your laughing about losing your cloak—your stepping into the coach without my being able to make an inch of discovery—and oh! my sitting down beside you, you whom I loved so well, so long, and your assuring me I had not lessened your pleasure at the play by being with you, and giving me that dear hand to press in mine—I seemed to be in Heaven—that slight, exquisitely turned form contained my all of heaven upon earth—I sat beside the adorable creature by her own permission—and as I followed you, yes, you, my best SARAH, to my heart, there was, as you say, 'a tie between us,' you did seem to be mine for a few short moments, in all truth and honour and sacredness! Oh! could we but be always so—do not mock me, for I am indeed a very child in love. I ought to beg your pardon for my behaviour afterwards, but I hope the late images made up between us. Kiss it for its own sake first, and then for mine if you can in earnest.—I shall leave this next Sunday or Monday for Edinburgh. I shall then have been in Scotland five weeks, and expect to be joined there soon. I had a letter from my little boy the other day, and I have been writing him a long essay in my book on his conduct in life, shewing him how to avoid his father's errors, and particularly pointing out to him the dangers of love, you may well laugh at this. I will take care, however, he does not get a stoop in the shoulders by poring over his books or muddle his brain with the contents. There is a picture of me when a little boy which my brother who painted it is to let me have. Should I—might I desire it to be left with you to keep for me, or forward it to me? You would hardly believe it was once like me. It was, however; nay more, you could make it like me again, even now. My face, I fear, belies my heart; or expresses the bad passions more strongly than my good feelings. Does not this shew that the bad ones preponderate? I ask you, because I think you will not judge me harshly. Tell me what you think, and whether you have been able to get to the end of this scrawl.

"Is the lodgings let to any one I know? I love you and die for you.

"Please to direct to me, Mr. Hazlitt, Post-Office, Edinburgh. You did not answer a good many things in my last. Never do, if I ask impertinent questions.

"P. S. I desired Mr. P. to call and request you not to give my address, as I expected a dunning letter; but it does not signify now. He says he saw you, and that you looked charmingly, but that your mother was unwell. I hope she is better. Give my remembrances to all at home, and to your aunt. I was mopish when I wrote to P. and he says he was going to tell you I was in a dying way, but didn't."

We have now quite done with MR. HAZLITT, and if he feel offended or sore that his private letters are thus made public, he must reconcile himself by recollecting that it is he himself who has given publicity to the affair altogether—that he has published so much of his private letters as HE thought would answer his purpose, and that WE have only published as much as we thought would answer the ends of justice, moral and literary.

Perhaps, never before, did a man who could write—not good English, but any sort of English, publish such a thing—as the Liber Amoris—and never, perhaps, was a poor, honest, sublime little girl in SALLY'S station made the subject of a seven shilling and sixpenny book—as it is, we have done our duty—rank to us signifies nothing, and we will not submit to have beastliness and folly stuffed down the public throat, or a virtuous female calumniated groundlessly, though her libeller be a cockney lecturer on Shakespeare, and she no better than "a tradesman's daughter."

SAMS, the bookseller in St. James's-street, has just published a portrait of the KING, by MR. WIVELL; it bears a very strong resemblance to HIS MAJESTY, and if it fail at all it is in conveying that dignified, gracious, and winning expression of countenance which, we believe, it is almost impossible to transfer to paper. It is certainly the best likeness which has been engraved of HIS MAJESTY for a long time, and we have no doubt will meet with very general approbation and patronage.

THEATRICALS.

THE Haymarket opened for the season on Monday, with an old three act Comedy of DIBDIN'S cut down into a new prelude. We do not quarrel with this, but with the absurdity of a prelude at all; no other theatre bores the town with introductory pieces; to be sure the Haymarket is an exception to general rules, and a general receptacle for anomalies; for, in the course of the summer, when it is deemed necessary to play half a dozen pieces to secure an audience, we have an interlude played before the afterpiece, which is played previous to the comedy, and the entertainments are wound up with the "popular prelude,"—this is as it should be—it is a laughing place, and the more laughing the better.

LISTON and TERRY have met with their usual reception. In no London Theatre have the merits of these excellent actors so good an opportunity for developement as in the Haymarket; its contracted space is suited to the rich and varying expression of countenance, and those finer touches of art which are lost in the larger playhouses.

In a second novelly—in six days—called MRS. SMITH, there is a tolerably good equivoque; but we should be glad to find the Haymarket management procuring original writers; find the Haymarket management procuring original writers; it is really a sad slur upon our national genius, to find all our farces little better than translations from the French.

The theatre has been touched up, but we grieve to find that the heavy balcony-like iron gilt railings round the boxes, still remain; what effect would be produced by removing them, one may easily judge, by observing the coolness and lightness of the front of the gallery, which is divested of this decussated and reticulated ornament, with interstices between the intersections.

We seldom notice impertinent letters; but having traced the hand-writing of one which we have received respecting LISTON'S salary at Drury Lane, we can easily find a motive for the anger expressed at what we said upon the subject. What we did say, however, as to the terms of his engagement, we repeat, and we refer the writer of the letter to MR. LISTON, or MR. ELLISTON, for a corroboration of our statement.

POPERY.

WE lose no time in laying the following account of another POPISH MEETING before our readers; they will observe the tone assumed by the speakers, and the general character of the observations made, and the reflections cast upon the Government—to these gentlemen the elective franchise has been extended—a circumstance worthy the attention of those who may have felt any disposition to support LORD NUGENT'S motion for admitting the English Papists to similar advantages;—

CATHOLIC ASSOCIATION.

On Saturday an adjourned Meeting of the Association was held at No. 4, Capel-street, COUNSELLOR KAVANAGH in the Chair.

MR. O'GORMAN addressed the Meeting, for the purpose of exonerating himself from any blame for the inconvenience that several country members felt in not having sufficient notice of joining the deputation in London. He had been out of town at the time when the Resolutions respecting the presentation of the Address had been passed.

MR. KAVANAGH having expressed a wish to vacate the Chair, MR. DILLON was called thereto.

The Secretary then read the orders of the day, namely, the notices of motions given by MR. O'CONNELL at a former meeting, Saturday, the 24th ult.

MR. O'CONNELL—The notices just read are mine; but previous to any discussion upon them, I cannot avoid noticing an event that has lately taken place very beneficial to the Catholic cause, namely, the English Association. I am glad to see that they have rejected that absurd motion of not mixing with the Catholic Question other matters. So far they have imitated us and I hope we will imitate them in admitting our clergy as free members. The motion before us is respecting the administration of justice in this country, and it is a subject of vital importance. The Association have one of three courses to take; the first is the confining themselves to the task of annually petitioning Parliament, and the taking of such steps as may be most conducive to the attainment of emancipation; the second would be, to enter into a detail of our grievances, and lay them regularly before Parliament, and particularly those that we labour under from the partial administration of justice—the third course would be to bring us to act in concert with the English Reformers. The Orange party is triumphing over us—our wives and daughters cannot go to the theatre without being grossly insulted, and what was formerly a scene of gentlemanly entertainment and classical instruction, has now become a ferocious bear garden. The Government protection is unequivocal. In the late proceedings the party has had a triumph, not over us but over the Lord Lieutenant. Their Grand Master would not disclose the symbol by which they are known to each other—Why? Because it was one of extermination to the Catholics—It must have been something dreadful when the House allowed SIR A. B KING to put them at defiance. The last Orange riot a few nights since proves the fact, that the meaning attached to the Amalekites then was most unequivocal: they talk of their 20,000 Orangemen, what are they to a CAPTAIN ROCK of but one county? MR. DAWSON, one of the Ministry, publicly approved of them. After this, what have we, as Catholics left? Why, to publicly combine and invite to our ranks all Protestants who are not Orangemen; it is folly to imagine to stand neutral; we must unite, for the country will be freed of Orangemen, and of a Ministry who never forget their individual interests, however they may neglect ours. The first course is objectionable, being neither more nor less than what SIR F. BURDETT terms it, an annual farce.—The second course I have mentioned may have objections raised against it, even by well meaning Catholics; still I think it is the best course for us to pursue, as, by bringing before Parliament every particular grievance, we enlist among us those who suffer in common with us from those grievances; for instance, the Church rates, where money is levied to build Churches where none is wanting, and to repair those that have never been built; about those places jobbers are to be found, and even Catholics become seeming Protestants for the sake of the job; I can assert as a fact, that a man who was clerk to five parishes, for many years, when on his death bed, sent for the priest, and died in the faith he, no doubt, originally professed. What can be more beautiful than a pure administration of the laws of the land? but we have it not; therefore let a petition be ready for MR. BROUGHAM'S motion of the 18th, and let it be framed upon the Address which admirably details our grievances. Three or four Catholics were shot by the Orangemen in a village in the north of Ireland, under the DUKE OF RICHMOND'S administration. Where was the day of justice for them? and at present, is there a question of property in which a Catholic feels secure in going to law in any county where his opponent is a Protestant? I never knew one.

If either of the two courses I have alluded to be not pursued, nothing remains but to join the Reformers in England; I would wish it, and I think eventually it must come to pass; however I have for the present chosen the least objectionable course, that is, the second I have mentioned; but a reform in the Representation must take place. Who has sent us this LORD MANNERS, this Lord Chancellor that we have got, whose principal gratification is the applause he receives from an eating and drinking club—a club whose great object is their marked hostility to our body, and yet the Chancellor condescends to become the object of their idolatry? Who has sent him here?—Why the boroughmongering family of the MANNERS; they sent, by their influence, a puny Baron to be the first judicial character in Ireland. Still I am bound to say we have Judges who are fit to hold a seat on any Bench in any country. I never expected to see a Court of King's Bench constituted as the present one is; the Judges of that Court deserve the applause they receive, in the gratitude of those who transact business in their Court. We have also other Judges equally good; but I am sorry to say they are not all so. It is useless to take notice of those who hold inferior situations. Suffice it to say, we have Orange Sheriffs. It is useless for us to trifle, we are paying for protection which we do not receive. The Orangemen are triumphant, Parliament has screened them, and the Government countenances them.—MR. O'CONNELL concluded by moving a Committee of 11 to prepare a Petition to Parliament upon the administration of justice in this country.

MR. O'GORMAN, in seconding it, said, the question had come to this, shall we look for emancipation, or rather shall we endeavour to retain what we have enjoyed for 30 years. Orange audacity was going so far, that they expected to get the Popery Laws re-enacted, in the hope of possessing themselves of the property that Catholics had been gathering; they say that there are 300,000 Orangemen well armed and ready to come forward at a moment's notice and punish rebellion, rights—it actually goes to the preservation of our lives, and I think that every Catholic authorized to hold arms ought to do so, and stand to them. If these men are joined by Parliament (for they are more than screened), we ought to try physical force in preserving ourselves; they have been joined by Parliament—screened they have been long since. Was SIR F. BURDETT allowed to treat the House [illegible] as SIR A. B. KING has done? The struggle has been between Orangemen and the Irish Executive Government, the result is known. It is useless to think of petitioning Parliament for [illegible] pation; we now want our lives to be preserved. Our petition may pass the Commons, but its fate is certain in the Lords; and as to the King, I fear he is in a state which all truly loyal men must deplore. Violence ought to be met with re-action.

MR. O'CONNELL moved that the petition be entrusted to BROUGHAM for the House of Commons, and to LORD DONOUGHMORE for the Lords.

The first part of the motion passed; but several Gentlemen [illegible] to think that the petition to the Lords ought to be entrusted to LORD GREY, as that to the Commons was to be sent to MR. BROUGHAM; in that case MR. PLUNKETT might feel offended if LORD DONOUGHMORE was selected, and he left out.

MR. O'CONNELL contended that LORD DONOUGHMORE ought to the petition for the Lords. His father was the first to [illegible] and advocate our claims, and his brother is still our friend; [illegible] reason he did not name MR. PLUNKETT was, because of his [illegible] situation, for if he were to take our petition on this subject, [illegible] give up his situation, and that was more than we had a right to [illegible]

MR. SHEIL enforced the propriety of committing the petition to EARL GREY. He deprecated the course of argument pursued in [illegible] O'CONNELL. All allusion to topics which had created so much [illegible] sion, should be avoided. Had MR. O'CONNELL moved any [illegible] tice relative to Church Rates and to Tithes, he should certainly [illegible] desire that the Petition upon that subject should be confided to [illegible] DONOUGHMORE, as his Lordship had ample opportunities of [illegible] ating the evils of those exactions; but he could not help thinking [illegible] LORD GREY would more efficiently represent the public feeling [illegible] any other Nobleman in the Upper House.

SIR THOMAS ESMONDE concurred with MR. SHEIL, and opposed [illegible] O'CONNELL'S motion that LORD DONOUGHMORE should present the petition to the House of Lords, upon the administration of justice in Ireland.

MR. COSTELLO said, that however, as a Roman Catholic he might be [illegible] lost in MR. O'CONNELL'S admiration of LORD DONOUGHMORE, [illegible] upon a question connected with the purity of justice, he could not [illegible] giving a preference to LORD GREY.

MR. O'GORMAN stated, that although he at first agreed with MR. O'CONNELL, yet the reasons which had been urged by MR. SHEIL and the other gentlemen who supported him, had convinced him that the petition should be presented by LORD GREY.

The question was then put, and the amendment that LORD GREY should be requested to present the petition in the House of Lords, carried by a large majority.

A Committee was then appointed to prepare a petition.

POSTING AT ONE SHILLING PER MILE.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR—Observing your laudable encouragement to those post-masters posting at 1s. per mile, I beg to apprize you of a worthy coadjutor in the spirited MR. PAYN of Northleach, namely, "EDWARD PAYN, Greyhound Livery Stables, High Holborn," who has strong claims on public support, having to my knowledge, with "good cattle and neat chaises," posted at 1s. per mile upwards of two years. Thus it appears MR. BULL, the public can now travel at the reduced and equitable rate of 1s. per mile from London to Northleach, with the exception of Hounslow. It is to be hoped this knot in the line will soon be removed, otherwise I would recommend the above-named individuals to provide relays at Hounslow—surely there cannot be a doubt of the success.

AN ENEMY TO EXTORTION.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, JUNE 16.—The Editors and Proprietors of the Courier Français, and the Pilote, were called upon yesterday to carry into execution from that day, the judgment of the Court Royale, which pronounced the sentence of suspension against those journals for fifteen days.

A French regiment, which proceeded with all possible promptitude from Villa Real to Bergera, arrived in time to deliver Abadie from the hands of the Alcade, who after having arrested him in the [illegible] mail-coach, was on the point of having him shot. Abadie has entered France.

MADRID EXTRAORDINARY GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, JUNE 10.—Official Article.—Don Antonio Maria Segovia, Royal Commissioner for the four kingdoms of Andalusia, [illegible] cated to his Excellency the Secretary of State for the Administration of Justice the following facts, dated the 9th instant:—"Most favourable Sir—At nine o'clock on the night of the 7th, General [illegible] de Dino, sallied out with the division under his command from [illegible] place, and succeeded in surprising in Santa Cruz de Mudela, [illegible] Viso, all the forces which occupied the heights, capturing three [illegible] two pieces, (the only ones they possessed,) without the slightest [illegible] on his part. He brought the prisoners, amounting to 700 men, to [illegible] Carolina, where he entered yesterday, the 8th. The General [illegible] has passed, with the rest of his division, and will be in Carolina [illegible] day. The Brigadier-General Plasencia, who with a column of [illegible] cavalry and 100 infantry had marched on Almagro, with the [illegible] of attacking the Royalist Commander, El Locho, as soon as he knew that the other part of his forces had been made prisoners as before named places, directed his march across the mountains to the [illegible] La Plata. This glorious action, which will accelerate the [illegible] our King from his captivity, has filled the inhabitants of the [illegible] with the greatest joy.—May God preserve your Excellency.

BAYONNE, JUNE 13.—Notwithstanding all the rumours current of the Constitutionalists, their cause is for ever lost in Spain. By news from Seville, dated the 8th; the King was still there, and [illegible] indicated that he would be transferred either to Cadiz or [illegible] Mere common sense convinces us that they will not consent to [illegible] the latter place, since, seeing that Portugal has returned to more [illegible] ideas, King Ferdinand would be delivered by his neighbours. [illegible] learn from Seville, that the last Sitting of the Cortes offered a most [illegible] eminently tragical.—M. Cargua-Arguelles, one of the Members of the respectable Chamber, dared to apply the name of traitor to [illegible] lengue, M. Alava; but the latter did not take the thing in good [illegible] mour, and he immediately proved this to the Hon. M. Arguelles, [illegible] giving him a blow which knocked out two of his teeth. It is [illegible] that this affair led to any other consequences.—A decree of [illegible] gency grants amnesty to the Constitutional soldiers who will [illegible] their allegiance, and present themselves to make submission to [illegible] King.—(Quotidienne.)

HEAD-QUARTERS, MADRID, JUNE 13.—The Major-General [illegible] Minister of War.—"The advanced guard of General Bourdesoulle [illegible] the 8th inst. came up with a divison of the enemy, 1800 strong, [illegible] Santa Cruz, which he destroyed or dispersed, taking one [illegible] eight-pounders, and making six hundred prisoners; we have not [illegible] a man. After a slight engagement, the bridge of Arzobispo, [illegible] by 400 men of the Regiment of Infantry of Guadalajara, and [illegible] Dragoons, was carried on the 6th, at eight o'clock in the evening, [illegible] the 9th Light Infantry, who, on the 9th inst. attacked the head of [illegible] the column of Plasencia at Vitchea. The enemy, consisting of [illegible] horse and 300 foot, has been completely destroyed. We have made [illegible] 260 prisoners, among whom are eleven officers. On the 8th our [illegible] advanced guard was at Baylen."

JUNE 14.—General Bourmont has entered Truxillo, and was [illegible] on the 13th at Lerida. Brigadier-General Merino attacked [illegible] 10th, the Empecinado, who had 600 men, completely defeated [illegible] killed 100 of his men. (Signed) [illegible]

Ballesteros is at Teruel, and from thence he is going to Aragon; [illegible] some it is stated he has from 6 to 7000 men, and according to [illegible] counts 9000. A French division of 12,000 men is advancing [illegible] him. We enjoy here the greatest tranquillity. We hear from [illegible] that the Constitutionalists have decreed the suppression of the [illegible] The Archbishop of Lugo, surrounded by Quiroga and Valdomo, [illegible] Monillo has arrived at Lugo.

LISBON, MAY 31.—The Diario has published successively the [illegible] speeches of several Deputies in the Sitting of the 27th of May, [illegible] terminated by a declaration of the Cortes—"That the Ministers [illegible] fout the confidence of the nation." The following are the new [illegible] the Ministers appointed on the 29th; of the interior, D. Thomas [illegible] Calvallo; of Justice, Antonio Guerriero; of War, Neven Costa; of the [illegible] Navy, Manuel Jean Lorio: Foreign Affairs, Joseph Brandao [illegible] Sobral.

CONSTANTINOPLE, MAY 13.—It is reported here that some misfortune has befallen the Algerine squadron, and that this is the reason of the premature departure of the Captain Pacha. It is even alleged in accounts from the Dardanelles, that he has put back on account of the total defeat of that squadron.—Augsburg Gazette.—[Other accounts state, that the Greeks have taken 11 vessels belonging to this squadron.]

COURT OF KING'S BENCH.

WEDNESDAY.—The King v. Dolby.—In this case the Court discharged the rule for a new trial, as obtained by the defendant, on the ground that the Jury had not been fairly chosen. The defendant was consequently fined, in publishing a work called, "The Political Dictionary," which will be brought up to receive judgment.

On Friday, an action was brought by the father of a young woman against a person named Williams, to recover a compensation for the loss of his daughter's services. The damages were laid at 100*l*. It was proved by the evidence of the young woman that she was pregnant by the defendant, and was brought to bed on the 5th of November, 1820.—The Jury found a verdict for the plaintiff—damages, 40*s*.

MISCELLANEOUS.

On Wednesday evening a Spanish Cabinet Messenger arrived in London.

He was dispatched by the Regency at Madrid. It is said that the letters which he brings for the British Government, dated the 8th of June, are for the purpose of requesting that England will acknowledge the Regency, according to the example given by the Courts of Austria, Prussia, Russia, Naples and Sardinia.

The Marquis of Londonderry is returned from Vienna, last from Paris. During his Lordship's short residence at the latter place he was made a Knight Star of the Order of the Bath, and all the exertions of the police could make any discovery respecting it have hitherto proved in vain.

A Circular was on Tuesday issued from the Secretary of State's Office to the different police offices, ordering the officers to search all suspicious places in their several districts to apprehend, if possible, the several persons, suspected to have been concerned in the murder of Mr. Isaac Pritchard, of Clapham.

Mrs. Richards, of Clapham.

THE BATTLE OF WATERLOO.—Wednesday being the anniversary of the Battle of Waterloo, the 3d regiment of Guards mounted guard on the Parade in St. James's Park. The men who shared in that glorious and ever memorable victory wore their medals. The colours were decorated with laurel, and the Band played several pieces of select music. A troop of the 1st regiment of Horse Guards had also their colours decorated with laurel, as were the fronts of the horses' bridles, as well as the helmets of the men who participated in the splendid scene. The 1st Regiment of Life Guards, which marched from their barracks, have gone into quarters in the neighbourhood of Sloane-street, Brompton, Kensington, Hammersmith, and Chiswick, till the Barracks in the Park are painted and repaired.

On Wednesday being the anniversary of the battle of Waterloo, the Duke of Wellington gave his annual grand dinner at his house in Piccadilly to the General Officers engaged with his Grace in that victory. Different services of plate and china, presented to the Noble Duke on the occasion, were used.

On Tuesday the Royal Literary Society held its first general meeting, which was numerously attended. An eloquent paper was read, which gave a general view of the objects of the Society, and a council and officers were appointed for the ensuing year. The Bishop of St. David's is President.

The Duke of Athol, on behalf of himself and the Lord Bishop and Clergy of the Isle of Man, has offered to commute the entire tythes of the Island for 6,000*l.* annually.

On Wednesday, a Quarterly General Court of Proprietors of East India Stock was held at the Company's House in Leadenhall-street, which was made special, for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the East India Trade Bill. On the motion of the Chairman, the Court consented to a dividend of 5½ per cent. on the Company's Stock for the half year commencing on the 5th of January last, and ending on the 5th of July next. After some debate the Court approved of the same.

At Goldford races, on Wednesday, the King's plate of 100 guineas, four years old, was won by Mr. Whiteside's ch. h. Wouvermans. Two years old, c. Comus, won the Maiden plate. On Thursday Mr. Horlock's b. Barchanal, won the Members plate.

The Barkworth, Captain Green, has arrived off Plymouth, from Jamaica; she left there on the 12th January; Tellicherry, the 20th January; the Cape, the 4th April, and St. Helena, the 17th April.

The Sessions of the Peace for the county of Middlesex will begin at the Sessions House on Clerkenwell-green, on Monday next, the 23d inst. The ensuing Sessions at Justice Hall, in the Old Bailey, to commence on Wednesday next, the 25th instant.

On Thursday se'nnight, Mr. T. Hamilton, Admiralty Midshipman in the Great Blockade Service, discovered several persons behind the wainscoting at the house of Mr. Dray, at Dymchurch. Mr. H. taking a constable from the hands of his orderly-man, jumped over the paling and pursued the party about half a mile.—J. Cunley, a journeyman shoemaker, in the act of running away was shot. An inquest was held at the Ship Inn, Dymchurch. The evidence on the part of the Coast Blockade men, the party were 40 or 50, and armed; that they were provoked; that in the pursuit Mr. Hamilton fell down, and his pistol went off by accident at the moment Cunley dropped; and as the wound might have been inflicted by one of the deceased's own party. The evidence on the contrary side, tended to prove, that the party did not consist of more than 16, and that not one of them was armed. They returned a verdict of "Wilful Murder against some person or persons unknown."

Mr. Webb, the eccentric philanthropist, who has unhappily attained much notoriety at Brighton, was on Saturday last, in pursuance of a Commission of Lunacy issued by the Lord Chancellor, examined before an inquisition at Blackheath; when the Jury decided that Mr. Webb was lunatic.

On Thursday evening the 12th instant, 23 fat sheep belonging to Mr. Robinson, butcher, of Ipswich, were worried to death by a dog, in a field near Spikehall.—So great was the terror excited throughout the whole flock by this nocturnal depredator, that some of the sheep took to the water, and crossed the river near Stoke Bridge.

THE NAPOLEON MANUSCRIPTS.—The Second Livraison of this publication, which is to appear to-morrow, will contain, we understand, many other subjects, the account of the Expedition to Egypt, the policy of the French with respect to that country—the Battle of Aboukir—Napoleon's Remarks on Maritime War, and on the Navies of France and England—Narrative of the March of the French Army to Cairo—the Battle of the Pyramids—the taking of Cairo—the Expedition of the French into Syria—the Sieges of Jaffa and St. Jean d'Acre —the Defeat of Mustapha Pacha, at Aboukir, &c. interspersed with a variety of curious observations on the religion, laws, and manners of the Arabs, Egyptians, Turks, Syrians, &c. The miscellaneous part contains Remarks on the Campaigns of Alexander, Hannibal, Cæsar, Gustavus Adolphus, Turenne, Prince Eugene, Frederick the Great, Charles XII. and Napoleon; with a comparison between the passage of the Alps by the latter, in 1800, and that of Hannibal; particulars of the Wars of Spain and Russia. The history and examination of the Peace claims on England, and the opposition made to them at different periods by France, the United States, the Northern Powers, the neutrality of the Northern States—the Battle of Copenhagen—the Assassination of the Emperor Paul of Russia, &c. Forty-four pages on the work entitled Manuscript from St. Helena, and that of Henry de Chaboulon, &c. &c.

The Bristol News Letter gives the following account of a desperate affray at Maghera, on the 12th inst.;—A vast multitude of Ribandmen assembled at the fair of Maghera, and about eight o'clock in the evening some of them attacked the house of a Protestant, in which an Orange lodge had been accustomed to meet. The Rev. John Coleman, Chaplain of the parish, called upon Ensign James Elliott, of the 12th, who promptly proceeded at the head of his detachment, (12 men) to the scene of disturbance. The commander was knocked down by a Ribandmen, received a severe contusion with a stone above one of his eyes, and lay for some time insensible on the ground. Mr. Coleman was also struck in the face with a stone and considerably bruised. Three or four shots were fired by the soldiers to intimidate the assailants, but without effect. On Mr. E.'s recovery, finding the affray was of a serious nature, he returned with his men to the barracks. Some time after this the Orange men, joined by a party which came in from Tubbermore, made head against the Ribbonmen, and finally drove them out of Maghera. The conflict, we did not wholly cease till two o'clock in the morning of the following day. It is said that nine of the Ribbonmen and one Orangeman were killed. Others affirm that but three of the Ribbonmen were slain, and that a fourth is dangerously, perhaps mortally wounded.—A strong reinforcement of the 77th Foot, left Belfast on Thursday last, for Maghera, in consequence of the disturbances there.

☞ Country Shopkeepers will find dealing with the above House much to their advantage, as small parcels of goods are forwarded at exactly the same price as if a round or box was ordered.—For Ready Money only.

EDMONDSON, RODHAM, and STONE, 12, New Bond-street, respectfully announce to the Nobility, Gentry, and Public in general, that they have recently opened their eligible Premises with a new and fashionable assortment of Silk Mercery, which for richness, variety of colours, designs and execution cannot be surpassed by any thing hitherto in English fancy, can produce. They further beg to direct an attention to their stock of Gloves, hosiery, gloves, lace, shawls, scarfs, handkerchiefs, and every description of haberdashery, all selected with the utmost care, and which they flatter themselves cannot fail of convincing those who may obligingly honour them with a call, that they possess the superior advantages of choice, elegance, and economy.

EFFLORESCENT OIL IMPROVED EPSOM SALTS.

THE Medicinal qualities of which are precisely the same as the Epsom Salts in crystals, but in this preparation (which is in the form of Powder) the disagreeable flavour is greatly obviated, besides which only half the quantity is required for the dose. In ounce papers 3*d.*, in 8*s* bottles at 1*s.* 6*d.*, and 2*s.* 6*d.* each, prepared and sold by Butler, Chemist and Druggist, No. 220, Regent-street, (near the Argyll Rooms), London; Wrterton place, Edinburgh; Sackville-street, Dublin; and sold by the principal Druggists in the Kingdom.—This preparation, if brought into general use, will prevent the possibility of accidents by Oxalic Acid, which have been so frequent and fatal.

☞ Be careful to ask for "Butlers' Efflorescent or Improved Epsom Salts."

ROBINSON'S PREPARED BARLEY, and PREPARED GROATS, for making superior Barley Water or Gruel, in Ten Minutes.—Matthias Robinson, inventor of the above highly esteemed articles, respectfully cautions the public against certain spurious imitations; and to which the readers have invariably stated to be Robinson's Preparation, or the same as Robinson's. The Prepared Barley, and Prepared Groats, are patronised by the first Medical Practitioners in the Metropolis, and in every part of the Kingdom where they have been introduced, and as they are generally used in cases of illness, or as a peculiar fine Food for Infants too much care cannot be taken to prevent an improper compound being substituted. He begs to state, the Preparations are made from the finest Pearl Barley and best Embden Groats, under his own immediate inspection, and will keep in any climate.—Sold wholesale and retail, by Matthias Robinson, 64, Red Lion-street, Holborn; Messrs. Bulleys, Cheapside, 4, Cheapside, St. Paul's, 220, Regent-street; London; Waterloo-place, Edinburgh; Sackville-street, Dublin, sole Agents for the country; and retail by the principal Druggists in the Kingdom, in 1*l*b. Packets at 8*d.* and Tin Canisters of 3*l*bs. each at 2*s.*

☞ Be careful to ask for Robinson's Prepared Barley and Prepared Groats, and to observe none is Genuine which has not his Name and Address printed on each Packet.

PATRONISED by the ROYAL FAMILY, their Imperial Majesties the Emperor and Empress of Russia, his Imperial Majesty the Emperor of China, by their especial authority, and most of the Nobility throughout Europe, ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, (the original and genuine) which for many years has been universally admired, and is the best and cheapest article for nourishing the Hair, preserving it from falling off, or changing grey; preserves it to the latest period of life; promotes a luxuriant growth on the baldest places, whiskers, eye-brows, &c.—Curly Hair—It produces and makes the curliest curl during exercise, or in damp weather; renders hair that is harsh and dry as soft as silk, glossy, elegant, and beautiful.—Indispensable Accompaniment, &c. during which this Oil should be regularly applied, as it prevents the hair being injured.—Bald or Thin Hair—A due attention to Children's Hair, is of the greatest importance. This Oil is invaluable; it eradicates the scurf easily and pleasantly, and is superior to combs, soaps, &c.; makes the hair firm in its roots, and gives a stamina for a beautiful Head of Hair. Price 3*s.* 6*d.* 7*s.* 10*s.* 6*d.* and 14*s.* per bottle.—Red Whiskers, Grey Whiskers, Eye brows, Hair on the Head, effectually changed to Brown or Black, by the use of ROWLAND'S ESSENCE of TYRE. Price 4*s.* 7*s.* 6*d.* and 10*s.* 6*d.* per bottle.—Sold by the sole Proprietors, A. Rowland and Son, No. 20, Hatton-Garden, Holborn, London; and by appointment, by all Perfumers and Medicine Venders.

☞ Ask for Rowland's Oil, or Rowland's Dye, and particularly observe the signature on the label to each bottle, as impostors steal their trade A. Rowland, the genuine is signed "A. Rowland and Son," with the address, No. 20, Hatton-garden.

LATEST NEWS.

We received last night by express the Paris papers of Friday. The Journal des Debats announces the important fact of the removal of the King of Spain to Cadiz, on the 12th instant. It also mentions that on the 15th inst. Mina sustained a severe defeat, and lost 600 prisoners. They also contain intelligence from Lisbon of the 3d inst. Every thing was over in that city. The King has been restored to all his rights and privileges. A new Ministry is appointed, composed, among others, of the Counts Palmella, Dos Arcos, and Pampelona.—It is stated, that St. Sebastian and Santona are reduced to the greatest difficulties, the men having only six ounces of bread per diem; they must soon surrender.—It is also denied in these journals that the Spanish Regency has declared itself and void the loans contracted by the Cortes.—Madrid on the 13th inst. continued to enjoy perfect tranquility. The Marquess de Talaru, Ambassador from France to Spain, arrived on the 16th inst. at Tours on his way to Madrid. His Excellency continued his journey, after having stopped a short time at the Prefecture.

The Moniteur says, whilst Gen. Bordesoult was ranging unobstructed the defiles of the Sierra-Morena, the Militia of Madrid and Seville committed the grossest disorders in the latter city. They pillaged the houses of several Ecclesiastics, and were for hanging the Ministers and Councillors of State.

A Cabinet Council was held on Friday at the Foreign Office, which was attended by the Earls of Liverpool, Harrowby, and Westmoreland, Mr. Secretaries Canning and Peel, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Duke of Wellington, Viscounts Sidmouth and Melville, Lord Maryborough, &c. In the evening, Latchford, the Messenger, left town for Ireland with despatches.

In the Court of King's Bench yesterday an action was brought (Williams v. Burdekgh) by the Chairman of the Hope Insurance Company, against the defendant for a security of 12,000*l.* (viz. the title deeds of an estate on a mortgage) which he engaged to deliver. There being no defence, a verdict was taken for the plaintiff.

In the Court of Common Pleas an action was yesterday tried, Glover v. Williams. Mr. Serjeant Pell said it was one intended to set his client's character right in the world, and claiming heavy damages for the false and abominable charge which had been dismissed by the Magistrates at Bow-street, as without sufficient foundation. The parties had met at a club of humble tradesmen, &c. in February, 1821, at the Ship public house, in Hammersmith, and there, when advanced in liquor and mirth, the attempt had been alledged to have been made, the parties being previously strangers. Mr. Serjeant Vaughan made a powerful address to the Jury, who found a verdict for the plaintiff, 100*l.* damages.

In the Arches Court, yesterday, in a suit, Best v. Best, the Judge, Sir John Nicholl, observed, that the suit was originally commenced by the wife, in which she charged her husband with excessive cruelties; but the Judge of the Consistorial Court dismissed that suit, and the husband then prayed for a divorce, charging adultery against the wife. This female, continued the learned Judge, was the daughter of a tradesman named Ballowby, she lived at Canterbury, next door to a common brothel, and occasionally visited there. Mr. Best was aware of this. Previous to the marriage she was in prison, from whence she was released by Mr. B., that the marriage might take place. He then commented on the evidence, and said the proof of adultery was by no means free from doubt; and, therefore, upon considering all the circumstances, he was of opinion the Judge of the Consistorial Court at Rochester had done perfectly right in dismissing both parties, and he now affirmed that sentence.

At Union Hall yesterday, W. H. Gardner, of Chester-street, Kennington, was committed to Brixton for one month, for deserting and neglecting his five children.

Mr. Phillips has just published a third edition of his very useful book the Panarium Britannicum of History of Fruits known in Great Britain. This new edition is enlarged with much additional information, as well as historical, etymological, and botanical anecdote; to which are added, the most approved methods of retarding the ripening of fruits, so as to insure, in all seasons, the enjoyment of those vegetable delicacies: curious particulars of the Pine apple, &c.

The most brilliant and extensive display of foreign stripes and Swiss chintzes damasks, fabianets, moreens, &c. at a reduction in the prices of at least one-third. MILES and EDWARDS'S system being so generally known and so much encouraged by all the principal Nobility and Gentry, they have only to repeat, that nothing shall tempt them to forfeit their great reputation by delaying from it. In fitting up drawing and dining room curtains, beds, &c. families have an opportunity of effecting a most important saving (equal, in many instances, to one half) in consequence of the extraordinary difference between the prices of this entirely new stock, and the terms obtained by other establishments for the same articles, manufactured at a time when they must have cost double their present value. Miles and Edwards have no connexion with any other house. No. 134, Oxford-street, between Holles-street and Old Cavendish-street.

ELEGANT GLASSES, FURNITURE, &c.—The Nobility and Gentry are invited to inspect the Ware rooms of Cooper and Son, 23, Bishopsgate Within, where is exhibited a large Assortment of new and second-hand Plate Glasses, admirably suited to every description of drawing or dining-rooms. The prices are just reduced 40 per cent. on plates measuring 180 inches by 72, and upwards; and on those of smaller dimensions the alteration will be found equally important. The extensive preference given to this Establishment is thankfully acknowledged by the Proprietors, who, in their endeavours to evince their gratitude, by manufacturing articles in a superior manner, at prices suitable to the times, hope to merit a continuance of public support. The upholstery department has comprised every new and elegant article of upholstery, cabinet, and couch work, regulated upon such a scale of economy as to demand and ensure the patronage of rank and fashion.

Persons whose Insurance Payments fall due at Midsummer next are requested to take notice, that printed Receipts are now ready at the Offices in Lombard street and Charing-cross, where attendance is daily given from 9 till 4 o'clock.—The Rates and Conditions of the Phœnix Company are the most moderate description, and the adjustment of Losses has been uniformly attended to with the utmost promptitude and liberality.—For the protection of the valuable property in the North West part of the Town, the Company have established an Engine Station in George-yard, Crown-street, Soho, where attendance is given day and night, as well as at each of the Company's other Engine Stations.

BURGESS'S ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES.—Warehouse, 170, Strand, corner of the Savoy-steps, London.—John Burgess and Son, being apprized of the numerous endeavours made by many persons to impose a spurious article for their make, feel it incumbent upon them to request the attention of the Purchasing Public to that genuine article, called Original, to observe the Name and Address corresponds with the above: the general appearance of the spurious descriptions will deceive the unguarded, and for their detection, J. B. and Son submit the following cautions.—some are in appearance at first sight, "The Genuine," but without any name or address:—some "Burgess's Essence of Anchovies;"—others—"Burgess's,"—and many more without Address.

John Burgess and Son having been many years honoured with such distinguished approbation, feel every sentiment of respect towards the Public, and earnestly solicit them to inspect the Labels previous to their purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments.

BURGESS'S NEW SAUCE for general purposes, having given such great satisfaction, continues to be prepared by them, and is recommended as a most useful and correct Sauce: will keep good for many years in any climate.

Warehouse, 167, Strand, corner of the Savoy-steps, London.—(The original Fish-sauce Warehouse.)

ROWLAND and SON, Sole Proprietors of the original MACASSAR OIL, respectfully inform the Nobility, Gentry and Public at large, that they have REMOVED to No. 20, Hatton Garden. Also beg to CAUTION, that in consequence of the universal demand for their ORIGINAL and GENUINE MACASSAR OIL, impostors purchase the empty bottles, and attempt to deceive the Public with spurious Macassar Oil, composed of injurious ingredients. Such, if for sale at a lower price, and without the label and places sign, "Rowland," Imitative the signature, which renders it necessary on purchasing to ask for ROWLANDS'S MACASSAR OIL and strictly to observe, that none are genuine without the outside label and the little book inside the wrapper; and that label is signed on the outside, in red, "A Rowland and Son." The price are 3s. 6d.; 7s; 10s. 6d. and 21s. per bottle. All other prices are impositions. The genuine has the address on the label, "No. 20, Hatton Garden."—Also, Red Whiskers, Grey Whiskers, Eye brows, Hair on the Head, effectually changed to Brown or Black, by the use of ROWLANDS'S ESSENCE of STYLE. By merely wetting the Hair, it immediately produces a perfect change. Price 6s.; 7s. 6d. and 10s. 6d. per bottle. Sold by the sole Proprietors, A. Rowland and Son, No. 20, Hatton-garden, Holborn, London; and, by appointment, by most Perfumers and Medicine Venders.—Ask for "Rowland's Oil," or "Rowland's Odo," and observe the signature, "A. JAMAICA.—For PUBLIC SALE, under an Order of the High Court of Chancery, in the cause "Tidmarsh v. Grant and others," on a day hereafter to be fixed, before Wm. Alexander, Esq. one of the Masters of the said Court, at the Sale Room, in Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, unless previously disposed of by private contract, together, or in lots, as may be agreed on, the following SUGAR ESTATES, SLAVES, and other PROPERTIES situated in the Island of Jamaica, and belonging to the Estate of Alexander Valdano, Esq. deceased—that is to say:—

BRYAN CASTLE ESTATE, situated near Rio Bueno, in the parish of Trelawney, containing 1,440 Acres of Land, or thereabouts; about 300 prime Negroes, and 224 Head of Stock; with a Mansion House thereon, adapted for the residence of the Proprietor.

BRAMPTON BRYAN SUGAR ESTATE, adjoining Bryan Castle, containing about 1,332 Acres of Land; 267 Negroes, and 230 Head of Stock. This Estate and Bryan Castle, are situated only about three miles and a half from Rio Bueno; the works and buildings are complete, in substantial and good repair, and well furnished with utensils of every description; and there have been for some time a regular annual increase of the Negroes.

LOW LAYTON SUGAR ESTATE, situated in the parish of St. George, containing 2,262 Acres of Land, or thereabouts; about 348 Negroes, and Head of Stock. Low Layton is bounded on the North by the sea, and ships produce from its own wharf at Orange Bay; there is a complete set of works with a water-mill, and plenty of water all the year round. This property is well supplied with utensils of every description, and has abundance of fine provision grounds, pastures, &c.

STOAKES HALL SUGAR ESTATE, situated in the parish of St. Thomas in the East, about three miles from Port Morant, and the same distance from Rocky Point containing 1,400 Acres of Land, or thereabouts (including Hampden Court Penn, adjoining thereto,) and has belonging to it about 209 Negroes, 256 Head of Stock, with a water-mill, and complete set of works, in good repair and furnished with utensils of every description.

ORANGE VALE COFFEE PLANTATION, situated in the Parish of St. George's, near Buff Bay, to which there is a carriage road from the Estate which contains 1,217 Acres of Land, or thereabouts; about 254 Negroes, and Head of Breeding and other Stock. The soil of Orange Vale is well adapted for the culture of Coffee; and there is a set of Works capable of taking off a large crop, with plenty of Provision Grounds; there is also a good dwelling House thereon.

FAIRFIELD PLANTATION, likewise situated on Buff Bay River, in the Parish of St. George's, about six or seven miles from Buff Bay Wharf, containing 950 Acres, or thereabouts, of Coffee, Provision, and Wood Lands. This Plantation was formerly cultivated in Coffee; but the Negroes having been removed to Low Layton Estate, the Land is now let, and partly continued in Coffee by the Tenant. There are Workable good Works and some other Buildings on the Estate; and a fine Road from them to Buff Bay.

A WHARF and STORES, situated in the Parish of Port Royal, near the King's Dock-yard, now occupied as store houses for Provisions for victualling the King's ships, with about 34 Acres of Land, on the Palisadoes, and 16 Negro Labourers attached thereto.

A DWELLING HOUSE, in the CITY of KINGSTON, situated in Second and Church streets, formerly the residence of the late Mr. Donaldson, and Rented on a Repairing Lease, at 150*l.* currency, per Annum.

Alexander Grant, Esq. No. 6, Billiter-square, London, is authorised by the said Court of Chancery to receive Proposals, and treat with such persons as may be desirous of purchasing the whole, or any part of the said Estates and Premises, by Private Contract, and will afford every information respecting them.

The Estates may be viewed; and information had, also, on application to the Managers, in Jamaica; and of Messrs. Stevenson and Whitehorne, Solicitors in Kingston.

Printed Particulars and Conditions of Sale, will shortly be ready for delivery gratis, at the said Master's Chambers, Southampton Buildings, aforesaid; of the said Alexander Grant; of Mr. John Hopton Forbes, Ely-place, Holborn; Messrs. Christian, Kinderley, and Domville Lincoln's Inn; Messrs. Hillier and Hastings, Great Inn; and of Messrs. Hall and Twomly, Bassett-court, Finch-street, London.

PRIVATE PUPIL. A Married Gentleman, of the Established Church, resident a convenient distance from London, and receiving a few Pupils into his House, has now a VACANCY, the most satisfactory references can be given to Noblemen and Gentlemen whose sons have been under his care. Letters to be addressed to the Rev. E. S. I., Mr. Egerton's, Bookseller, Whitehall, London.

THE Rev. T. SMITH, of St. John's College, Cambridge, Master of GORDON HOUSE ACADEMY, Kentish Town, and Editor of the accented edition of the Eton Latin Grammar, and of the Eton Exemplis Minora, &c. informs Parents and Guardians, that he qualifies Young Gentlemen for Mercantile Pursuits and the Learned Professions, including the French Language, with every necessary accomplishment, for 40 guineas per annum, without Vacations, and without any extra charge whatever. There are resident under Masters of eminence in every department of the School, and the attention paid to the health, personal comfort, morals, and improvement of the pupils is unremitting. A well conducted youth, destined for the Scholastic Profession, would be received into the family, and would enjoy advantages very rarely to be met with. Cards at Ogle and Duncan's, Paternoster-row, 223, High Holborn, and 17, Oxford-street.

SIGNOR LUIGI CARRARA, native of Florence, begs leave to inform the Public that he teaches ITALIAN on moderate terms. His Pupils have the choice of learning it through the medium of the English, French, or German Languages.—Address (post paid) to A.B. No. 106, St. Martin's-lane, Charing-cross.

EDUCATION.—FINISHING ESTABLISHMENT, in the delightful and healthy situation of Euston-square, New-road, London, No. 71.—Mrs. LUDDINGTON begs to inform her friends, that in consequence of elder pupils having finished their education, she shall, at the Christmas recess, have two Vacancies in her Establishment, where she receives a select and limited number of Young Ladies to educate with her own daughters. Terms for Board, including English Grammar and History, Forty Guineas per annum: no entrance. The plan of instruction combines every thing essential to the attainment of a solid, useful, and polite education, and Masters, well known in the fashionable world to be of the first eminence in their profession, attend for Music, Singing, Drawing, Dancing, Italian, the Harp, &c. &c. The French Language, which is always spoken, is taught by a Parisian Lady, residing in the house, with whom the pupils are in the constant habit of conversing, which gives them such purity of accent, and fluency of expression, as entirely to supersede the necessity of going to France for that purpose. Music and Singing are also accomplishments in which the young ladies greatly excel, and in the study of which they have very superior advantages, as Mrs. L. has for some time adopted Mr. Logier's system, which is so justly esteemed, and so admirably calculated to facilitate the acquirement of that favourite accomplishment. Finishing Lessons are likewise given by one of the first Masters, and in order still further to promote their improvement, each young lady is allowed to practice two hours every day. A Lady is likewise appointed at the piano forte, to superintend those pupils who require it in the absence of a master. Dancing is also made an object of attention, and is taught by an artist of celebrity, a Member of the Royal Academy. Mrs. Luddington likewise begs leave to state that she attends the established Church with her pupils, and that their health, temper, and morals, are watched with the solicitude of a parent: indeed, her great object is, to form the minds and dispositions of the young Ladies entrusted to her care, on virtuous and religious principles, as the only sure basis of permanent happiness, and make them useful and amiable, as well as accomplished members of society, the object of attention, and is taught by an artist of celebrity, a Member of the mother are blended with the duties of the preceptress. As the Miss Luddingtons pursue their studies during the vacations, any young ladies wishing to do the same may be accommodated. Mrs. Luddington likewise begs leave to add, that her pupils have the advantage of an extensive garden, in which two hours are devoted to exercise every day, and that she generally spends the summer season at the sea side, with those young ladies who remain during that period.—References are made by Mrs. Luddington to her brother, the Rev. John Evans, LL. D. Islington; to Dr. Jones, Russell-square; to Edward Bootle Wilbraham, Esq. M P. Portland-place; to Michael La Beaume, Esq. F.L.S. &c. &c. Southampton row, Russell-square; to Sir Astley Cooper, Bart. Spring-gardens; to John Millington, Esq. Professor of Natural Philosophy, in the Royal Institution of Great Britain; to Dr. Johnson, Berners-street; to Messrs. Hart, Shaw, Barber, and Co. Bankers, Cornhill; to Southwood Smith, M.D. Trinity square, Tower; to her brother, the Rev. Caleb Evans, of Baliol College, Oxford; and to Professor Leslie, F.R.S.E. of the University of Edinburgh; also to the Parents of those young Ladies who have finished their education with her.—Prospectuses with the names of the masters, &c. &c. may be obtained at the Establishment.

NEAR HAMPTON COURT, RICHMOND HILL, and on the nearest Road to WINDSOR, &c. &c.—TO LET, new and completely Furnished, in one of the most healthy situations in England, a complete FAMILY HOUSE, but not too large, with Garden, Coach-house, and Stabling for four horses, not more than 10 miles from London.—Cards to be had only at Nias and Co. Agents, 32, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

DR. MERRIMAN, Physician Accoucheur to the Middlesex Hospital; and Dr. LEY, Physician Accoucheur to the Westminster Lying-in Hospital, will commence a COURSE of LECTURES on the Theory and Practice of Midwifery, and the Diseases of Women and Children, on MONDAY, the 7th of JULY, at half past 10 o'clock.—Particulars may be learned at Dr. Merriman's, No. 34, Lower Brook-street, Grosvenor-square; at Dr. Ley's, 24, Mount-street, Berkeley-square; and at the Middlesex Hospital, where the Lectures will be given.

FOR CALCUTTA direct, to sail the 10th July next, the teak Ship BENGAL MERCHANT, Burthen 500 tons, ALEXANDER BROWN, Commander, lying in the City Canal. Has superior accommodations for Passengers, and carries a Surgeon.—For freight or passage apply to the Commander at Messrs. Inglis, Forbes and Co. Mansion-House-place, to Wm. Abercrombie, 4, Birchin-lane, or J. S. Brinley, 14, Birchin-lane.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—The rude and unskilful attempts constantly made to supply these substitutes for the masticatory organ, and the disgust which delicacy suffers from the unpleasantry attending them when permanently fixed, have deterred many from adopting the aid and comfort they are capable of affording, independent of the assistance they may contribute to digestion and consequent health. The ingenious application of mechanical science will be found to obviate all these inconveniences, and allow the wearer at all times to resume the mouth in a state of perfect cleanliness, and to perform the functions of mastication, articulation, &c. with decided ease and comfort.—Mr. NICHOLLS begs to state, that he is in constant attendance from ten to four, and will be happy to give ocular demonstration of the comforts derived from his efforts under every circumstance of simple and complicated deficiency.—115, Fleet-str.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY.

Petitions were presented from the Linen Merchants of London, and from Fifeshire, in favour of the Scotch Linen Bill; and from the Ale and Table Beer Brewers against the clause in the Beer Bill, which compels them to erect separate premises.

On the Marriage Amendment Bill being taken into consideration,

The EARL OF WESTMORLAND objected to the clause respecting the orfeiture of property, in the case of fraudulent marriages, which he thought would throw difficulties in the way of persons who wished to contract legal and proper marriages.

The EARL OF LIVERPOOL observed, that the clause affected only marriages by minors, over which the Canon Law already held control, and his opinion was, that when a party contracting marriage took a false oath, it was but just that he should have no control over the property thus fraudulently acquired.

The Bill was ordered to be engrossed.

The Irish Grand Jury Presentment Bill was passed.

In a Committee on the Scotch Linen Bill,

The DUKE OF ATHOL moved that the clause repealing the stamping of Scotch Linens be left out of the Bill, but it was negatived, and the Bill was reported.

TUESDAY.

The London Bridge Bill was brought up from the Commons, and read a first time, as were the Assessed Taxes Composition, the Prize Distribution, the Southwark Small Debts, & the Bankers' Duties Bills.

The Manchester Water Works, the Southwark Bridge Amendment, and the Marriage Bills were passed.

WEDNESDAY.

The Irish Court of Chancery Bill was read a first time.

THURSDAY.

The Convicts' Labour, the Felonies Repeal, the Sentence of Death, and the Larcenies Bill were brought up from the Commons and read a first time.

Petitions were presented from Officers in the Court of Chancery in Ireland, against the Irish Chancery Bill; from the Corporation of London, and from St. Magnus, London Bridge, against the London Bridge Bill.

The Second reading of the Marriages Abroad Bill was postponed till Monday.

The EARL of LIVERPOOL presented a Bill for appointing a Commission of Enquiry. The Noble Earl stated at some length the necessity of a measure of this description, in order to ascertain the best mode for expediting Appeals, which were much in arrear since 1813, though the House had then come to the resolution of sitting three days in the week. From that period up to the present time there had been 426 Appeals from Scotland, 56 from England, and 84 from Ireland; the actual number now before the House amounted to 151 from Scotland, 27 from England, 44 from Ireland, and 3 from Wales, total 225. The great difficulty arose from Scotch Appeals, the complexity of the law was such. The Committee had seen no other means of getting rid of the difficulty than that of encreasing the number of days for sitting on Appeals from three to five a week. Next came the consideration of who should sit in that House and discharge the important duties which the Lord Chancellor did as Speaker?—In case of the illness of that Learned Person it was usual for His Majesty to appoint by commission one or more individuals to fill the duties of Deputy Speaker. Their Lordships must know that the Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer stood first, and the Chief Justice of the King's Bench next, at this present moment, in the Commission for Deputy Speaker to that House. It was therefore not necessary that the Deputy Speaker should be a Peer, and it would remain for the House, if it thought proper, not to allow him to vote, but to require his opinion on any subject. By adopting that plan there would be no difficulty in carrying on the Appellants Jurisdiction for Scotland; as it might go on for five days a week under the Chancellor or any other individual.

The EARL of CARNARVON objected to the regulation for appointing a Deputy Speaker as not likely to be advantageous.

The EARL OF ROSSLYN defended the report, and maintained that it was perfectly consistent to appoint a Speaker, not a Member.

The Bill was read a first time, and ordered for a second reading on Monday.

EARL GROSVENOR moved for returns of all offices performed by deputies, where salaries were paid; for offices paid in fees; and offices where salaries were paid, without duties, being performed.

The EARL of LIVERPOOL said, I really don't know of the existence of such offices as are described in the Noble Earl's last item of returns—offices where salaries are received, yet where no duties are performed. If, however, the Noble Earl possesses due information to the contrary, I certainly shall be most willing to profit by it.—The two first motions were agreed to, but the latter was withdrawn.

FRIDAY.

The Royal assent was given by Commission to the Barilla Duties, Registry of Vessels, Brimstone Duties, Estreated Recognizances, Scotch Linen Manufacture, Irish Commercial Credit, Law Officers Compensation, Irish Grand Jury Presentment, and Irish Joint Tenantcy Bills,

LORD DACRE presented a Petition from certain inhabitants of Middlesex and Surrey, praying for the appointment of a Committee to enquire into the best Means of giving Employment to Agricultural Labourers, by assigning them small portions of Land for cultivation.—It was laid on the Table.

The EARL of LIVERPOOL brought down a message from the King, recommending the extension of the Pension of the late Earl of St. Vincent, to his nephew the present Earl.

The second reading of the Beer Bill was postponed to Tuesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY.

Petitions were presented from Cumberland against slavery; from Bungay, against the coal duties; from Yorkshire, against any alteration in the existing laws on wool.

The Barilla Duties & the Prize Money Distribution Bills were passed.

SIR JOHN NEWPORT asked whether Government had received any official information respecting the Maghera riot.

Mr. SECRETARY PEEL replied, that the magistrates were investigating the affair, and therefore at present he would abstain from making any public statement on the subject; but he must inform the House that the number killed did not exceed four; several had been wounded, but some of them were convalescent.

On bringing up the Report of the East India Postage Bill,

Mr. HUME wished to know why the soldier and sailor should pay 3d. for their letters, when they paid only a penny in other parts of the world. He moved to substitute a penny instead of 3d.

Mr. HERRIES wished the Hon. Member to postpone his amendment till a future day. The clause was postponed.

The Hides and Skins Bill was ordered to be read a third time that day three months.

LORD A. HAMILTON wished to know if the duty on stone and slate, carried coastwise, was to be repealed.

The CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER said, there was a clause in the Customs Act repealing the duty on stone, but not on slate.

In a Committe of Supply the following sums were voted on the motion of Mr. Lushington:—15,000l. was granted for Donaghadee harbour; 29,000l. for the Holyhead road; 45,000l. for Kingston, Dunleary, harbour.—Mr. Hume wished to know if this was the whole sum required.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer said, this was a small part of the sum, which the Commissioners had declared would be wanted.

Mr. LUSHINGTON then moved 20,000l. for Holyhead Harbour. In answer to a question from Mr. Henry Grey Bennett, the Hon. Gent. said, he believed it would be the last vote for that particular service; agreed to. The Hon. Gent then moved a grant of 2000l. for printing the journals.

Mr. HUME observed that the stationery office had been very little improved. He was astonished that Mr. Parsons had been continued in that department after the Committee had reported that many of the abuses originated with him. He contended that the treatment which Mr. C. Jennings had received from the Treasury was gross, unjust, and disgraceful; for while he only wanted to unmask corruption, they abused and vilified him.

LORD PALMERSTON denied that Mr. Jennings had been treated unfairly by the committee, his own opinion of that person was directly the reverse of the high panegyric bestowed on him by the Hon. Member. With respect to Mr. Parsons nothing had come out in the Committee to warrant the Treasury in dismissing him.

Mr. T. COURTENAY said, that Mr. Jennings had brought forward a charge against him of an offence against honour and againt morality. This was proved to be false. The Hon. Gentleman should therefore be more careful in eulogising his friend. This charge, it was found upon investigation, the Hon. Member's friend, Mr. Jennings, had picked up in an alehouse, or some place of that sort.

The vote was agreed to.

The following sums were then voted:—29,760l. for the Stationery Office; 1,500l. for Printing the Journals; 7,000l. for the deficiency in printing Acts of Parliament; 189,000l. for Disembodied Militia; 99,284l. for ditto of Ireland; 5,000l. for the Society for propagating the Scriptures in North America, (Mr. Hume objected to this vote, as the House had already given this Society 10,000l. Mr. Wilmot defended the grant on the ground that the Society had been of infinite use in our North American Colonies, but had failed in its means of continuing their exertions from their private resources. The Committee divided. For the grant, 49—Against it, 21—Majority, 28.) 15,000l for facilitating emigration from the South of Ireland to Canada.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE denied that this would remedy the evils of Ireland. They might as well destroy a few rabbits in a warren as apply such a sum for the purpose of easing the people of Ireland.

SIR J. NEWPORT thought no good could result from this grant, unless it was used with the utmost care.

Mr. WILMOT said, a gentleman of experience had been appointed to conduct this emigration. A calculation had been made for a man of 35l. to carry him out and settle him, so that he could support himself; for a woman it was 25l. and for a child 14l.—The grant was agreed to.

904l. to Mr. Archer, retired allowance as Inspector-General of Prisons in Ireland; 700l. in aid of the Irish Schools.

The Chairman then reported progress.

In a Committee of Ways and Means, the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER moved the annual vote for a Lottery, consisting of 60,000 tickets, and a sum of 14,700,000l. for Exchequer Bills for the present year, which were agreed to.

LORD NUGENT moved the Order of the Day for the Committee on the Test Regulation Bill. The Noble Lord stated, that he wished to unite the Roman Catholics with the great body of the people. One object of the Bill was to procure the elective franchise for the Catholics, and the other, to render them eligible to the Magistracy. In the Committee he should propose a new clause, to repeal in part the 7th and 8th of King William. His object in this Bill was to put the Catholics on the same footing as the Protestant Dissenters in this country.

Mr. SECRETARY PEEL objected to the way in which the Noble Lord proposed to carry his Bill into effect. He despaired of amending the Bill in a Committee, and therefore he would oppose it on the third reading altogether.

Mr. W. BANKES opposed the Bill, because it was, as the Noble Lord stated it, a great step towards full Catholic emancipation.

Mr. BROUGHAM had hoped that the measure might have been made practicable, and amended in the Committee.

to suppose that the Catholics of England should be without privileges, which the people of Ireland, who were Catholics, enjoyed.

Mr. BANKES, sen. objected to the principle of the Bill.

Mr. SECRETARY CANNING had understood that the Noble Lord would divide his Bill; and he hoped he would confine his measure respecting the eligibility to corporation offices to the same cases in which the Irish Catholic was admitted to such privileges.

Mr. WETHERELL opposed the Bill, as being a perfect budget of ways and means to bring about the perfect measure of Catholic Emancipation.

The House then went into a Committee, in which the Bill was divided into two Bills.

TUESDAY.

The House went into a Committee on Cunliffe's Divorce Bill. Counsel was heard in behalf of Mr. Cunliffe. The Bill went through a Committee, was reported, and ordered to be read a third time.

The Southwark Court of Requests' Bill was passed.—Petitions were presented from Cambro Lethan, in Scotland, against Slavery; from a person named Driver, complaining of the Excise Laws; from Mr. Basil Cochrane, complaining of the delay, loss, and vexation to which he had been subjected by the conduct of the Victualling Board. In 1794 he claimed of the Board 9000l. and sent 49 packets and 824 letters, but could get no answers—at length, in 1805 they acknowledged 700l. was due to him, but to this date he had not received any monies. Mr. Croker said, Mr. Cochrane had not been able to furnish satisfactory documents, and some gentlemen might think that the Victualling Board had done too much for this gentleman already.—(The Petition was then ordered to be printed); from Halifax, against any alteration in the Wool Laws; from Banff, praying for a Bill to allow the free importation of Oak Barrell Staves; from Ann Walmsley, of Preston, complaining of injuries inflicted upon her in the gaol of that town, while confined for debt.

Mr. GOULBURN moved the 2d reading of the Irish Insurrection Act.

SIR H. PARNELL was ready to admit that Lord Wellesley had done much for Ireland: the Police Act was a very useful one, and that on the subject of Tythes now pending was also one which he thought would be productive of great good to Ireland. The Hon. Bart. then contended, that Ireland had been in a disturbed state since 1792. The number of absentee landlords might have some effect on the state of Ireland, but not much as was generally apprehended. During almost the whole of the 18th century that country had been the scene of warfare and of devastation. This arose from the Popery Laws, the destruction or deprivation of rights, and the impossibility of acquiring property. Having dilated upon these alleged causes of grievances, he concluded with moving for a Committee of 21 Members to enquire into the extent of the disturbances that exist in Ireland.

Mr. GRATTAN seconded the motion; but he hoped the Hon Gentleman would pursue his enquiry into the causes as well as the extent of these disturbances.

Mr. GOULBURN said no man could doubt that there was sufficient of danger and difficulty in Ireland to require the immediate application of the measure now before the House to that country. He must, therefore, persevere in moving the second reading of the Bill. The Hon. Bart. had fallen into a popular error by attributing the whole difficulties and evils of Ireland to the conduct of the Government. In his opinion, the greatest part of them was to be attributed to the enormous increase of population in Ireland. The first remedy would be by slow and gentle operation of education, acting upon the manners and habits of the people. He denied that the Treaty of Limerick being broken, and the penal laws established, were the two great causes of the evils of Ireland. Those penal laws had been long since repealed, and the people restored to the state in which they were left by the Treaty of Limerick.

Col. DAVIES thought the present was a question interesting to the whole empire, with respect to the promises of the Right Hon. Gent. Such promises had always been made by Government, when they wished to carry such measures, and then when they had got armed with the sword, upon the sword alone they would depend, untaught by the past and regardless of the future.

Mr. J. SMITH supported the motion.

land continued, as she had been for years, the theatre of discord and dissention.

Mr. ROBERTSON would endeavour to gain the Catholic Clergy by giving them stipends from the State, and a portion of the Tithes might be applied in that way.

Mr. C. HUTCHINSON supported the motion.

Mr. BANKES thought in the present circumstances of Ireland the was a necessity for the renewal of the Insurrection Acts.

Mr. L. MARTIN supported the the motion, but said, much as he was friend to Catholic Emancipation, he did not believe that the conc sion of that measure would have the smallest effect in putting do the disturbances.

Mr. S. RICE regretted that his Right Hon. Friend had introdu the Insurrection Act in its present shape. It was not from Insurr tion Acts that Ireland would find relief. Nothing could quiet Irel but an equal administration of the laws to all.

Mr. D. BROWNE was in favour of re-enacting the Insurrection A

SIR J. NEWPORT strongly censured the system adopted towards people of Ireland.

Mr. SECRETARY PEEL gave his decided negative to the motion appointing a Committee. The real question before the House w not whether they should have enquiry or no enquiry, but whe they should take it now, at this period of the Session, or delay it the next Session, should it then be considered necessary.

On a division—For the Second Reading 88—For the Committee Majority 49. The Bill was read a second time.

The third reading of the Scotch Commissaries Bill was fixed Monday.

WEDNESDAY.

Dr. PHILLIMORE gave notice that he would, on Tuesday, move Bill to alter and amend the Law relative to Catholic Marriages.

Petitions were presented—from upwards of 2000 Irish Catholic jects, complaining of the unequal administration of the Laws of Ireland—from Edward Dowling, of Drogheda, complaining of the Laws—from John Pritchard, of Westminster, praying for a repeal the Combination Laws—from Benjamin Haydon, the painter, (no in the King's Bench Prison) complaining of being in distressed ci cumstances. Mr. BROUGHAM, who presented this Petition, said, he could not but consider it as a subject of considerable regret, that sic a collection as Mr. Haydon's should be lost to the public.

SIR C. LONG paid a tribute to the collection of the petitioner, a said, if any plan for his relief could be devised, it should have his support.

Mr. CROKER also wished to reward merit, but he could not consider that the style of painting to which Mr. Haydon had devoted his ge tion was that which the public would be found most anxious to preser The portraits of the great and eminent men of every age were thos which, if we were obliged to make a selection of one description painting, and sacrifice every other, were those, he was confiden every one would be anxious to preserve.

Mr. HUME moved an Address to the King for a Commission to quire whether the office of Lord Lieutenant, and other offices co nected with the Government of Ireland, could not be abolished. T being merely a motion for enquiry, it could not, as he conceived, me with any opposition from the House. The Hon. Member disclaim having the most distant intention of any thing personal towards L Wellesley or the present Government. He then stated, that sin passing the Act of 1793, for removing the disabilities of the Catholi it was expected that public offices would in future be bestowed alik on Catholics and Protestants; but it was not so. Lord Wellesley h ded endeavoured to alter the system, but could not. Now in the Pos Office at present, out of 426 persons employed only 36 were Catholic in the Port of Dublin, of 35 Officers not one was a Catholic; of th Commissioners of Wide Streets, 26 in number, not one was a Catholic of the Linen Board, out of 74 persons, one only was a Catholic. T Hon. Member went through the several public offices, and the resu was, that of 2450 public officers in Dublin, 106 only were Catholic He contended against the policy of favouring Protestants to t exclusion of Roman Catholics, in respect to holding office. The machinery of the Irish Government, as at present formed, was injurious to Ireland, and expensive to the nation at large. The office Lord Lieutenant was, by the regulations which had taken place, b come unnecessary. If all this was done away, and Ireland, instead a Colonial Government, was made an integral part of the empir much advantage would arise from the adoption of such a step. T public business should be placed under the Ministers of the Crow here, and Ireland should no longer be treated as a Colony. The Lo Lieutenant, who, as he contended, was useless, would save fro 100,000l. to 130,000l. a year, the Lord Lieutenant having 30,00 of that sum; this sum it was desirable to save if possible, when w considered how large a sum Ireland cost us—a sum not less th 3,000,000l. annually. What were the duties of the Lord Lieutenan? Why, he could do nothing without the Privy Council; and therefore, all that was done by the Lord Lieutenant, could be bette done in London by the Secretary of State for the Home Departme He then took a review of the duties of the Chief Secretary, all o which, he contended, might be performed equally well, if not better, in London. If this system were put down, Dublin might suffer co siderably: but the population had increased from 180,000 to 200,00 and upwards. The number of inhabited houses had increased from 16,000 to 21,000, though some Hon. Members had spoken of it as a city in the streets of which the grass grew up; yet this increase in the population of Dublin had occurred since 1798. In his opinion, there should be an efficient Lord Lieutenant for every county, as in Scotland. There was no difference between Ireland and Scotland, except in the disturbances in the former country. The Hon. Gent. concluded with strongly urging the necessity for a commission being appointed.

Mr. GOULBURN differed with the Hon. Gent. on the ground, that his motion was derogatory to the honour of Great Britain, and the best interests of Ireland. It went to give Ireland a King of her own, and permanently separate her from this country, because she might entail an expence upon us of millions annually upon this country. No one acquainted with Ireland was ignorant of the fact, that a certain species of qualified obedience to the royal authority was to be found in the people of Ireland; and if the duties of the Lord Lieutenant were transferred to London, there would be an end to that respect for the royal authority which was now to be found in Ireland. If he understood the Hon. Gentleman rightly, he meant to place the Government of Ireland and all its duties in the hands of the Secretary of State for the Home Department of England. The Hon. Gentleman had no objection to abolishing the one Lord Lieutenant, but he would give Ireland 32 Lord Lieutenants with the same powers as the former, even to the controul of the troops in their different districts. Under such a system how was the Hon. Gentleman's object of economy to be effected? The Hon. Gentleman had instanced the case of Scotland, had said that as there was no Lord Lieutenant in Scotland, there should be none in Ireland. His former argument answered that, for a semblance of the kingly power was necessary in Ireland. He did not mean to say that the majority of Ireland was not occupied by the Protestants, but not in the same proportion as stated by the Hon. Gent.

SIR H. PARNELL supported the motion, and said, that instead of the office of the Lord Lieutenant giving effect to the Royal authority in Ireland, he conceived that it decreased it, and that it would have a much greater effect if it came at once from the King.

Mr. DENNIS BROWNE said, that the effects of the Union had been to take away from Dublin her great sources of advantage; and the taking away the 100,000l., which the Lord Lieutenant receives, would be no saving, but greatly detrimental to the dignity of Ireland, and the interests of Dublin.

Mr. SECRETARY PEEL observed that the question was not one of expence, but whether that expence was conducive or not to the advantage of Ireland. It was in vain to say that there could be such an effective check upon the local authorities in Ireland, without a resident Lord Lieutenant, especially as Ireland had lost her independent and separate legislation. Besides, was it not known that the Secretary of State for England had enough to do; and that his attention would be the least directed to the concerns and interests of the most distant country. The present surely was not the proper time to weaken the authority of the local Government, which must be the necessary consequence of the Commission proposed by the Hon. Gent.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE supported the motion because it contained nothing invidious respecting the Lord Lieutenant, and only shewed a wish for information, and he believed that ere long such a measure would be adopted.

SIR J. NEWPORT gave his most decided negative to the motion. He was of opinion that no measure could be more prejudicial to Ireland than the one proposed. Were he the Lord Lieutenant, and such a Commission to be instituted, he would not hold the office for a day. This measure would add to the strength of the factious. The evil did not arise from the residence of a Lord Lieutenant, but from the cabinet being divided. The people of Ireland would think the removal of the Lord Lieutenant the last step of their degradation. Many of the Nobility, who now resided in the country, would leave it, if the Lord Lieutenant was removed.

Mr. SECRETARY CANNING said, his opinion had been much fortified by that of the Right Hon. Bart. who had just addressed the House. The measure proposed would in the course of a few days make it impossible to have any person in that House acquainted with Irish affairs. Whenever any difficulty occurred in Ireland, it would be ne cessary to send over to that country to procure local information. By the proposed measure the Government of Ireland would be thrown into the power of the heads of parties. Should the Lord Lieutenant be removed, in the course of a few years he had no doubt the table would be covered with petitions complaining of the mode in which the Government was administered. The proposed enquiry would be, of all measures the most mischievous.

Mr. Dawson opposed the motion.

Mr. R. Martin stated that at the time of the union it was clearly understood there was always to be a local Government in Ireland. He looked on the motion of the Hon. Gent. as somewhat revolutionary, and should vote against it.

Mr. Hutchinson should vote against the motion, as it might have the appearance of throwing a slur on the Government of Lord Wellesley, which would be of infinite mischief in the present state of Ireland.

Sir G. Hill opposed the motion on the ground that the duties of the Lord Lieutenant could not be performed in London.—The motion was then negatived.

Sir J. Newport called the attention of the House to the state of national education in Ireland, and proposed resolutions—that Parliament would, at the commencement of the next Session, enter into a full and accurate enquiry into the state of Education in Ireland, and render the funds available destined for that purpose, without any other limitation, except the will of the donor.

Mr. Goulburn thought it inexpedient, at the close of one Session of a Parliament, to enter into any pledge as to its conduct in the next; though he was quite willing, in the next Session, to go into a Committee on the subject.—The motion was withdrawn.

The Convicts' Labour Bill was passed.

On the third reading of the Larcenies Benefit of Clergy Bill,

Sir J. Mackintosh proposed an amendment, as the Bill at present stood, the preamble declared that capital punishment should cease in all cases of shop-lifting; whilst, in fact, the clauses, as they now stood, left the capital punishment in all cases where the shop was attached to a dwelling-house. This was, in fact, a delusion on the public, which ought not to exist; and he should now propose an amendment, extending the repeal to all cases of shop-lifting, whether the shop was detached from or adjoining to the dwelling house. He concluded by moving an amendment to that effect.

The Solicitor-General opposed it. In the shop attached to a dwelling house property was more exposed to menial servants, and therefore as the temptation was greater, and the property more exposed, it was necessary to give it stronger protection.

The House divided—For the Amendment, 19—Against it, 35. The Bill was then passed, as was the Felonies Clergy Bill.

THURSDAY.

Petitions were presented from Sussex complaining of Agricultural Distress; from Llangollen against Slavery; from St. Pancras against the Gas Light Bill; from St. Albans against the Leghorn Straw Duty; from George Rowell complaining of being dismissed from the Excise, and charging one or two Members of the House with corrupt practices, but on the latter account it was withdrawn.

Sir J. Mackintosh gave notice of a motion for Thursday next respecting the Instructions given to Sir W. A'Court, for the guidance of his conduct under any changes the Cortes of Spain might make in the internal Administration of the Government of that country.

The Poor Settlement Bill was committed for this day three months.

Mr. Brougham moved that the Roman Catholic Petition complaining of the Administration of Justice in Ireland be referred to the Committee of Enquiry into the Courts of Justice. The object of their Petition was to shew that the Catholic Question, as it was called, did not exclusively affect the higher classes of Catholics, but that the practical effect of it was to interfere with the equal administration of justice. This they might have shewn by those details which they could best furnish. They had sent him bricfless into Court, without the very materials with which he was to work. But as far as he was able he was bound to supply the deficiency. The fact was, they assumed them to know what they did not know. The petitioners confined themselves to the complaint that the laws were in themselves unequal, but greatly aggravated by the incidental circumstances of a still more grossly partial administration. This compaint in itself was a prima facie case. But in the absence of all statement, it was enough that the law in that country separated the King's subjects into two sects, whilst the law of England professed to consider every man as the brother of every other, and the King as the father of all. In Ireland it was not so; in that country brother was set against brother; and that worst of all animosities, religious differences and distinctions the most mischievous prevailed. This formed a sore which had been kept rankling in the minds of the Irish. The Honourable Gentleman commented upon the mode pursued by the local Magistrates in Ireland; and observed there was nothing like it to be seen in England. He then proceed to cite several instances of mal-administration on the part of the Magistrates, and the opinions of the Irish judges on the subject, especially that of the Learned Judge Fletcher; who, in one of his charges, says—"It is sufficient for a witness to shew his colours to decide whether his testimony should be credited or not; or for a murderer to shew his badge to obtain for himself a verdict of manslaughter. That Learned Judge also, in another of his charges, warmly recommended that Orange Societies should be suppressed, and declared, that till this was done there would be no peace in Ireland. Such was Judge Fletcher's opinion, and it ought to be acted upon. He also contended that the Magistracy should be purified; but how was it that such men as Sir Harcourt Lees and Major Sarr were still retained in the Commission? Major Surr, who by a verdict of a Jury had been found guilty of gross tyranny and oppression, still he was continued a Magistrate of Police in Dublin. The Hon. Gent. then detailed evidence to shew that bribes had been offered to a Sub-Sheriff to pack a Jury—of an attorney, examined before a Committee of the House, who stated, that debts were more easily recoverable from the poor than the rich in Ireland, as the former could not pay the Sheriff for his forbearance in the issuing of writs. He availed himself of the privilege of Parliament in noticing the conduct of a Judge, Lord Norbury, and he spoke of him with the same freedom as of an attorney or Sub-Sheriff. A proposal had been made to that Judge from Mr. Saurin, that the Judge should job upon the circuit, he being desired to talk in private with the country gentlemen in the course of the circuit, and to hold out to them that in the event of the Catholic question being carried, all the Irish Members would be Catholics, and the Judges and the Sheriffs would be chosen from the Catholics, and the Protestants would be thrust into the back ground. That was the conduct recommended to the Chief Justice by the Attorney-General. He (Mr. B.) respected the Bench only while it respected itself, and when he saw ribaldry and politics on the Bench, not only was his reverence gone, but his patience was quite exhausted. The Hon. Gent. then proceeded to animadvert on the Civil Bill System, and the Revenue Board, which called loudly for reformation. The day of reckoning would come. He would recommend for once to prefer the hearts of Ireland to the applause of the Orange Lodges. Should the House turn a deaf ear to the prayer of the petition, he firmly believed there would neither be peace for Ireland nor safety for England.

Mr. Goulburn said, the petition did not speak either the opinion of the people of Ireland, or of the majority of the Catholics themselves. What would the Hon. Gent. have said, had a similar charge been brought against the Catholics of Ireland? Would not the Hon. Member have expressed the most marked reprobation of such a proceeding? The petition dealt in mere generalities, without any specification of facts. Upon such statements no public institution, no private character, could be safe. He fully admitted the importance, that justice should be purely administered; but it was of equal importance that the Courts of Justice should not be made the subject of obloquy. He admitted that examples could be found of Magistrates being either supine or over-zealous in the discharge of their duty, but the present was not the time for bringing forward such a charge, when a partial reformation had been already made, and was in progress towards completion. If had been made a charge against the Government of Ireland, that Sir H. Lees had not been struck out of the list of Justices. What would the House think of the accuracy of the Hon. Gentleman's information, when they were informed that Sir H. Lees was not in the Commission of the Peace in any county of Ireland. He had for the first time heard that night, that the Sheriff of Dublin received money for not summoning wealthy individuals on Juries. All he could say on the sudden was, that from the papers on the table it appeared that the most respectable and wealthy inhabitants in Dublin had been summoned on Grand Juries. On the subject of the Bench, he could only say, that, with the exception of the single Judge whom the Hon. Gentleman named, the other 11 were, in his (Mr. B.'s) opinion, wholly free from blame. With respect to the charge of the Judge (Fletcher) in 1814, he had it from the best authority, that the Learned Judge had stated the report of that speech to be both inaccurate and erroneous. The Hon. Gentleman had stated the corruption to extend to civil as well as criminal cases; but Mr. O'Connel, whose name was appended to the Petition, had publicly stated, that the whole of the Court of King's Bench was composed of upright and enlightened Judges. He must oppose the motion, as, if granted, it would tend to vilify whatever was venerable in the land.

Sir H. Parnell maintained that Judge Fletcher's charge was published and edited by himself in 1814. He believed that a great deal of abuse prevailed among the inferior Law Officers in Ireland. He had known a practice among the sub-sheriffs to put a man's name on the list of Jurymen it he did not pay him 5s. This was not a general and random charge made by the Catholics against the institutions of Ireland.

Colonel Barry said, if Government allowed a Parliament of Catholics to assemble in the vicinity of the Castle of Dublin, they would deserve the reprobation of every honest man in the country. While such language was held forth, that 20,000 Orangemen continued to massacre the Catholics of Ireland, Government would be insane to allow such an assembly. He quoted the Petition, where it stated that the Bible was put forward, as recommending indiscriminate massacre of the Catholics by the Protestants. He maintained, that there never was a more infamous falsehood put forth, except in "The Orange System unmasked," by Mr. Millikin, of Dublin. Judge Fletcher had admitted to him (Colonel B.) that his opinion was altered since he made his charge in 1814.

Mr. C. Hutchinson would tell his Right Hon. Friend, that the assembling of the Catholic Committee had been occasioned by the rebellious opposition to the King's letter of conciliation and his Government in the person of Lord Wellesley, by that faction which insolently called itself the only loyal subjects in Ireland. He intreated Hon. Gentlemen opposite, to consider what good they would do by receiving the petition, and referring it for inquiry to the Committee.

Mr. Daly denied that the Catholics of rank, wealth, and respectability in Ireland, had put their names to this Petition. There was not one word of truth in this Petition from beginning to end.

Mr. V. Fitzgerald opposed the motion. Though he had been bred in feelings favourable to the Catholic Claims, yet he would not lend himself to such misrepresentation of the state of his country as this Petition contained, and the Speech of the Hon. Gentleman (Mr. Hutchinson) had held forth.

Mr. Abercrombie thought though no specific facts were stated in the Petition, still a general case was made out, which called for consideration, and therefore he should support the motion.

Mr. R. Martin denied the statements made by the Member for Winchelsea. He was ready to assert that justice was fairly and impartially administered in Ireland; and he did not believe the magistracy could be better than it was at present. For the reasons he had stated he must oppose the motion.

Mr. Secretary Peel observed, that as to facts, there were none in this Petition; and as to the general charge, it was denied by every gentleman who had spoken. The Member for Cork had, with his usual manliness, denied that there was the slightest ground for saying the Judges were corrupt; that the Petty and Grand Juries did not do their duty; or, that justice was denied to the Catholics. Other Honourable Members had declared the same thing. The Right Honourable Gentleman then proceeded to defend the measures of the Magistrates of Dublin, and especially of Major Sarr, a less assuming man than whom he had never known, and whose bravery and exertions, at a time when such were especially necessary, entitled him to the consideration of the public. The Right Hon. Gent. adverted to Mr. Saurin's Letter, which was a private one, written 12 years since, and never was intended for publication, and sorry he was to find that the Hon. Gent.'s better feelings had not surmounted his political warmth, and prevented his renewing the subject. With respect to Lord Norbury, it was hard to bring a charge against that Learned Judge, merely because he had displayed a brilliant wit, and for innocent jingoten the solemnity of the Bench.

Mr. Brougham replied, and the House divided—For the motion, 59—Against it, 139—Majority against the motion, 80.

FRIDAY.

The Speaker went to the House of Peers to hear the Royal Assent.

Petitions were presented (by Mr. Wilberforce) from several religious associations against Slavery.

Sir I. Coffin said, a strange delusion seemed to prevail with respect to the Black population of the Colonies. He had resided for several years amongst them, and he could assure the House, that the Negroes were happy and comfortable. If they were emancipated, the first thing they would do would be to cut their masters' throats.

Petitions were also presented—from one Jones, convicted of a libel, complaining of the mode of striking Special Juries—from Reading, in favour of a free trade in Beer—from Woolwich, praying for the repeal of the Coal Duties—from the Ship-owners of Yarmouth against the reciprocity of Duties Bill.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer presented a similar petition to the one in the Lords, respecting continuing the pension to Lord Viscount St. Vincent.

The House divided on the question, whether it should go into Committee on the East India Half-pay Bill, or the Poor Laws Amendment Bill. For the latter Committee—Ayes. 50—Noes, 32—Majority, 18.—The Bill then went through a Committee, and the Report was ordered to be considered this day three months, and the Bill to be printed.

In a Committee on the Tithe Composition Bill, Mr. Goulburn proposed that in the formation of the Vestry, the Freeholders of 20l. a year, whether agistment land or not, should have a vote, that there should be a power of appeal; and next, that the assessment of lands should be regulated by the parishes being divided into districts; each district to be valued according to the quality of the land. As to the right to levy for Tithe, he would give the Clergyman a preference over the landholder.

Mr. Cadogan moved that the Commissioners should only be allowed to award one-fifth, instead of one-third, as proposed by the Bill.

Mr. Goulburn said, this was in some degree provided for, by an appeal to the Lord Lieutenant in Council; but he was not so wedded to the present form of the clause as to wish to retain it.—The amendment was agreed to, as were other clauses, and the Report was ordered for Tuesday.

Thursday was fixed for further discussing the motion of Mr. Spring Rice, containing charges against Chief Baron O'Grady.

The East India Pay Bill was ordered to be reported on Monday.

On bringing up the Report of the Usury Laws Repeal Bill, Mr. Birch moved an Amendment to bring it up this day six months.—On a division, Ayes 25—Noes, 21—Majority against the Bill, 5.

NEW WORKS, published on the 1st of May, by Francis Westley, 10, Stationers' court, Ludgate-street, London; and may be had of all Booksellers.

MARTHA: a Memorial of an only and beloved Sister. By the Rev. ANDREW REED, Author of "No Fiction," a Narrative founded on Facts. 2 vols, crown 8vo. price 12s. boards.—London: Published by Francis Westley, 10, Stationers'-court, Ludgate-street: and Longman and Co. Paternoster row.

NEW EDITION OF "NO FICTION."

NO FICTION: a Narrative founded on Facts. By the Rev. ANDREW REED, seventh edition, 2 vols, crown 8vo. price 12s. boards.—Published by Francis Westley, 10, Stationers'-court, Ludgate-street. London.

"We have lately perused a Work intituled 'No Fiction,' which is a narrative of facts altogether so extraordinary and so interesting, that if the excellent Author had not pledged his word for its veracity, it might justly be supposed to belong to the region of Romance and Fancy; it would then indeed be a brilliant conception and a proof of inventive genius; but how much is its interest and its utility increased by the assurance that all the leading events recorded in it are not the creatures of imagination, but substantial realities; that they are not conjured up for the sake of dramatic effect, but have been actually presented on the stage of life. The Narrative is clothed in language at once elegant and simple; it evinces an intimate knowledge of the human heart, and we are convinced that no person can rise from its perusal without being sensibly improved both in heart and understanding."—Statesman.

AN ELEGY on the late HENRY MARTYN; and other Poems. By John Lawson, Missionary at Calcutta, author of "Woman in India," "Orient Harping," &c. &c. with a beautiful Portrait, engraved by Fry; and an elegant Vignette, from Corbould's design, the subject of which is "Not lone, though in a wilderness,

For waiting angels watch."

Foolscap 8vo. price 2s.—Published by Francis Westley, 10, Stationers'-court, Ludgate-street, London.

HAPPINESS: a Tale for the Grave and the Gay. Fourth Edition, 2 vols. price 12s. boards.—Published by Francis Westley, 10, Stationers'-court, Ludgate street London.

"This work contains many beautiful, some most touching, and several splendid passages. Its satire is cutting, and its aim is uniformly to do good."—Investigator, 1823.

"To blend instruction with amusement, to convey the most impressive lessons in the most attractive manner, has ever been considered as the highest effort of letters, and the most beneficial end of morality. The author of 'Happiness,' then, in accomplishing this, may be regarded as having attained the noblest purpose of a writer, and, at the same time, of having fulfilled the best intentions of an enlightened and benevolent mind."—Brighton Chronicle.

THE HOPES of MATRIMONY; a Poem. By JOHN HOLMAND. 1 vol. crown 8vo. embellished with a finely executed engraving from Corbould's design, price 3s. 6d. boards.

Published by F. Westley, 10, Stationers'-court, Ludgate-street, London.

The following high commendation has been expressed on the merits of this Poem:—"We cordially bear our testimony to its merits, to the refinements of its sentiments, the purity of its diction, the sublimity of its descriptions, and the harmony of its versification. In the hour of reverential taste for the Divine inspiring, we do not hesitate to pronounce it no every day production. Mr. H. occupies no common rank among the favourites of the Muses. With the exception of a very few of the master-spirits of the age, he may compete with any in talent; and in purity, perhaps, none can claim pre-eminence."—New Evan. Mag.

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP; or, the Church Member's Guide. Second edition. By the REV. JOHN ANGEL JAMES, of Birmingham. A new edition, 1 vol. 12mo, price 5s. boards.—Published by Francis Westley, 10, Stationers'-court, Ludgate-street, London.

"Mr. James maintains in most impressive style of evangelical adress, blending the sentiment and animation of declamation with a rich strain of gospel instruction. We could not, of course, but be highly gratified at finding a subject of so much importance as that of Church Fellowship, taken up by one so competent to the task, nor have our anticipations been disappointed by the perusal of the very interesting work before us. A vein of sound reasoning pervades the whole, and, in general, we have had to admire the discretion with which he touches on certain points in his subject that require considerable delicacy as well as decision in their treatment."—Congregational Mag.

THE SCRIPTURE CHARACTER of GOD; or, Discourses on the Divine Attributes. By HENRY FORSTER BURDER, M.A. Author of Lectures on the Pleasures of Religion. 1 vol. 8vo. 7s. boards.—Published by Francis Westley, 10, Stationers'-court, Ludgate-street, London.

"A work of this kind was much wanted, and this important labour has been undertaken by Mr. Burder, and we have great pleasure in expressing our opinion, that he has executed, with wisdom and discretion, a task which required, for its successful completion, no small share of those invaluable qualifications. In all respects he deserves high eulogy."—Congregational Mag.

"We cordially invite the attention of our brethren in the ministry to this volume, as an almost perfect model of the plan which it is advisable to pursue, when the discussion of a particular branch of theology is the object preferred: and to private Christians we wish equal cordiality to recommend it as well deserving their perusal, both for the general soundness and excellence of its matter, and for the simple and unostentatious elegance of its style."—Methodist Mag. 1823.

"We congratulate the religious public on the appearance of these able discourses. We know of no book on the subject at once so short, and so well written, and we consider the author as having performed a very acceptable service to the public."—Eclectic Review, 1823.

"It affords us great pleasure to give 'The Teacher's Farewell' our cordial approval. We think it a very excellent work for its immediate purpose, and are persuaded, that the instruction it imparts, renders it well worthy of the perusal of every young person. We have no doubt our readers will generally procure the work for their schools."—Teacher's Magazine.

PRICE OF STOCKS AT THE CLOSE, SATURDAY.

The British Securities, this week, have been advancing, and opened this morning at 82¼ and at one o'clock were doing at 82⅜; at the close were 82⅜ ¼. In the Foreign Market there has been a great deal doing, and one of the most infamous frauds relative to the Columbian Loan has been practised that was ever known, in pretended papers from Jamaica, which appeared in a morning journal, stating that the Loan had been rejected by the Congress. This report caused a most astonishing fluctuation, and Columbian Stock fell from 58 to 40; the subsequent discovery of the fabrication, and the receipt of advices from Bogota, have caused the Bonds again to go up, and they have been doing at 60 in the course of the day.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We have received a Letter, and two extremely long Petitions from MR. GOURLAY, who requests us to apply to Government for some additional document which he wishes us to publish. We have no connexion, no communication with any Government Office, nor have we room for any thing so very diffuse as this gentleman's details of grievances.

A long Letter from a MR. NIBLOCK has been sent to us, after having been refused admittance into the TIMES, for which paper a note from the author expresses a strong partiality—if it is not sent or, we shall make a beautiful fire of it on Tuesday.

MR. BOWRING has called upon us to say he feels himself aggrieved in his mercantile character by some allusions in our last paper—we certainly called him frisky in the cause of liberty—and so he is—and so he wishes to be thought; but whatever imputation his activity may cast upon his good sense and political character—the fact, that he is anxious to have the stores paid for, for which he has made himself liable, seems in no way discreditable, and no other blame than that which attaches to an excess of zeal in no cause at all is attributable to him for having involved himself, if he have so done, in any responsibility upon such an occasion—we could not certainly intend to hurt MR. BOWRING'S mercantile character, because we had not the remotest idea that he was again in business. We believe his first expedition to Spain was upon an allowance of 10*l. per week from his trustees for the purpose of collecting his debts, which allowance was made to him because he exhibited to his creditors,* upon paper, a surplus beyond their claims of about 10,000*l. We conclude that* MR. BOWRING has now paid them twenty shillings in the pound, and with this surplus recommenced trade—but we beg to assure him we did not know of the fact, and we sincerely thought, that if, as many men of equal ability with MR. BOWRING have done, he had paid only five or six shillings in the pound to his creditors, he had better turn his wits to the liquidation of his own debts, than to the emancipation of the Spanish people.

INQUISITOR is quite right—the EARL OF TANKERVILLE'S brother-in-law is Aid-du-Camp to the DUKE D'ANGOULEME. This may seem odd—but when it is recollected that the family of his beautiful Countess have been restored to their rank, titles, and estates by the BOURBONS, seeing his Lordship's name as a patron of the Fancy Ball is strikingly strange —his Lordship goes as Ariel.

A person sends us a specimen of his talents, and begs to know what remuneration we should be inclined to give for his assistance?—If he were to pay us a guinea per line for inserting his communications, we should politely, but decidedly decline the connection.

Our thanks are due to Lord ——— for the books; we shall not lose sight of the object of his Lordship's benevolence.

The Gentleman calling himself COLONEL BERKELY acts to-morrow night at Richmond; the audience are admitted by vouchers, countersigned upon the same principle as the Spanish Fancy Ball. We shall be there, and will give an account of proceedings in our next.

Our correspondent on the subject of the steam vessel, to which we alluded in our last, is a cunning dog; he supposes we are going to answer his question; we will tell him, however, that we happen to know that CAPT. JOHNSON has been sent for to the Admiralty about it, and that the public may expect to hear more of it shortly.

We are requested to observe, that a remark in MR. O'MEARA'S book on St. Helena, relative to an accident which happened near that island to the DUKE OF WELLINGTON, then SIR ARTHUR WELLESLEY, as he was returning to England with SIR GEORGE BERESFORD, *is erroneous—*SIR ARTHUR returned with ADMIRAL RAINIER, in the Trident, in the year 1805. We are also requested to observe, that the same Gentleman gives an account of an interview between SIR HUDSON LOWE and SIR PULTENEY MALCOLM, which he details minutely; and much later in the book, and in the journal of occurrences, no sees the first arrival of that Officer at St. Helena.

The new farce of CENT PER CENT.; or the MASQUERADE, performing with rapturous applause at Covent Garden, is from the pen of LORD GLENGALL, one of the patrons of the Covent Garden Masquerade for the Spaniards.

ROSA *writes to ask us a question about a Lord whose title she has forgotten, who is one of the patrons of the Spanish Masquerade, but she tells us he is tall and thin, very fond of hearing himself speak in the House of Lords, addicted to cantering along the streets on horseback, and very vain of his hair—*ROSA must mean LORD ELLENBOROUGH.

The DUKE OF GRAFTON and LORD ROSSLYN are two of the greatest sinecurists in England; it is said that they will resign their enormous emoluments previous to the Liberal Masquerade next Friday. By the way, why does not that nice Whig in the hat, my LORD ARCHIBALD, make some enquiries into the conduct of LORD ROSSLYN'S office—it might be very amusing.

If our Correspondent M. W. will be on Waterloo Bridge on Monday next, at one o'clock, we will meet her—we are very anxious for an interview.

We beg to acknowledge the vote of thanks which we have received.

Our advertising friends are cautioned against a person who is in the habit of soliciting advertisements for this paper—we do not employ any person for such a purpose.

An allusion is made to MR. DENMAN in an article upon the removal of the Courts of Lancashire to another part of this paper, MR. PHILLIPS is the person whose name should stand in the paragraph instead of MR. DENMAN'S.

We have to apologize for the omission of Detector's Letter and enclosure, which arises entirely from a mistake—next Sunday they shall have a place.

All our other friends must stand over.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, JUNE 29.

HIS MAJESTY, we are happy to say, continues in the enjoyment of re-invigorated health, and has two or three times honoured the town of Windsor with visits. We need not renew our expressions of heartfelt satisfaction at the rapid and gratifying recovery of our beloved MONARCH.

ON Thursday night MR. BROUGHAM presented to the House of Commons a petition touching the administration of justice in Ireland, and in so doing took the opportunity of making a speech, in which he betrayed less temperance and more ignorance than are usually exhibited in the place where he delivered himself. We will take the trouble to look at his arguments and assertions, and by contradicting all the latter, invalidate, we flatter ourselves, most of the former.

In the first place, he foamed and raved about his petition, which, he said, spoke the general sentiments of the Irish people, whereas it was neither more nor less than a vulgar, loose, common-place attack upon the Government and the Courts of Law, unsupported by facts, and signed by a few Papists collected together in an association.

One of the complaints which it appeared to make is levelled at the mode of "packing Juries," which the petitioners alledge is done regularly, much to their prejudice—MR. BROUGHAM inveighed against this averred misconduct with proper warmth, and contrasted most eloquently the conduct of Irish sub-sheriffs and Irish attornies in the conduct of Jury-striking with that of similar officers in England, by whom he was convinced the bare suggestion at connivance in a system so vile, so unjust, and injurious would be repelled with honest warmth and honourable indignation. Now, as far as the fact goes, it is known that the only influence visible over Juries in Ireland, is evident in those parts of the country where the Papists influence the verdicts given upon trials by the system of terror in which they revel, and by the more insidious and more dangerous power of their Priesthood. MR. BROUGHAM'S testimony to English purity in this respect is, however, highly satisfactory—for, in the first place, it refutes from the best authority the gross and infamous calumnies cast by HENRY HUNT, JOHN HUNT, LEIGH HUNT, WATSON, BURDETT, CARLILE, CORBETT, and others, upon Juries by whom they have at different times been tried and convicted—and, in the second place, it is particularly satisfactory, because it establishes the real merits of MR. BROUGHAM'S party, inasmuch, as we believe, his political partisans have never once escaped from a Jury of their countrymen with impunity.

But when MR. BROUGHAM groans and cries out about the oppressions and degradations of the Irish Papists, he betrays a somewhat excessive zeal, because if the Papists in Ireland consider themselves at this moment oppressed and tyrannized over, what object can that plump and ruddy conciliator my LORD NUGENT have, in introducing Bills into Parliament, to give the English Papists similar advantages to those which are actually ENJOYED by the Irish Papists at this time—it is a zeal too, which betrays more of the real secret of the affair than the complainants we should think would wish to have so prematurely developed.

MR. BROUGHAM, in support of his views of the grievances under which the Irish labour, quoted MR. GRATTAN, to whom he paid the same common-place cut-and-dry compliments, which would apply with equal force and justice to MR. SHERIDAN, or MR. PONSONBY, or MR. CURRAN, or to the honourable and learned speaker himself, when the present age shall have passed away, and future BROUGHAMS be called to the Bar, and put into Parliament for rotten boroughs; but never did MR. BROUGHAM make a greater blunder than in quoting the late MR. GRATTAN upon the particular subject of Irish grievances, because it is notorious, that so long ago as the year 1782 MR. GRATTAN publicly declared, in the most positive terms, "that all the grievances which IRELAND labored under were then redressed, and that GRATITUDE, "SATISFACTION, and CONTENT OUGHT TO PERVADE THE "ISLAND!!!"

These were MR. GRATTAN'S words in 1782—to be sure it was before that honourable, candid, mild, and moderate gentleman distinguished himself in the politics of the Irish Rebellion, and more than fifteen years previous to the publication of his candid "Address to his fellow-citizens of Dublin"—a publication which will live in the minds of those, who remember the said Irish Rebellion, full as long as MR. BROUGHAM'S praises of its veracious and moderate author.

MR. BROUGHAM was extremely violent in his observations upon the Orange Lodges. As we have often said, we are no great admirers of such exclusive institutions, but we do not think that MR. BROUGHAM took the most favourable opportunity of launching out in invective against such combinations, whilst advocating a Petition coming from a ROMAN CATHOLIC ASSOCIATION!! of precisely a similar nature, but consisting as it should seem, judging by the signatures, the wording, and hand-writing of their document, of the lowest orders of society. It is however too much to hope for consistency in advocates, who while they complain of the influence of priests' art—(that is the cant)—in the State, eulogise to the very echo, a religion, the nature and principles of which put the laity into the hands and power of their priests altogether.

In the fashionable spirit of liberality MR. BROUGHAM made a vehement attack upon SIR HARCOURT LEES—a baronet and moreover a clergyman, and twitched his nose about as the devil is said to twitch his tail, with extacy, at finding that Ministers, those corrupt, abominable Protestants, in their alterations of the Irish Magistracy, had left this zealous advocate of our established religion in the commission of the peace—and he sneered and taunted, and worked the point as he does when he thinks (to use the language of my LORD SEFTON) he has "established a raw"—but what will be thought of the correctness of information, and the authenticity of intelligence of the Honourable Member for WINCHELSEA, when it is found that SIR HARCOURT LEES IS NOT A MAGISTRATE AT ALL?

But, then, retorts MR. BROUGHAM, MAJOR SIRR is a Magistrate—that MAJOR SIRR, to whose vigilance and activity, in the worst of times, every well-wisher of Ireland was deeply indebted—MR. BROUGHAM proceeds to stigmatize this gentleman in terms, quite Parliamentary no doubt, and load him with epithets which might be considered unsafe anywhere save where they were used—but MR. BROUGHAM forgot in the ardour of his attack upon Tories and Protestants, that his personal and political friend, the illustrious PRINCE, JOHN, DUKE of BEDFORD, when HE was Lord Lieutenant of Ireland—(good gracious!)—continued MAJOR SIRR in his Magisterial capacity, and availed himself of his services.—Nobody, to be sure, fancies that the illustrious JOHN, DUKE of BEDFORD ever did anything of himself, and therefore, poor, dear little man, he might get out of the scrape easily enough, but MR. PONSONBY, who really had some sense and understanding, and was, moreover, CHANCELLOR. he, even he, did not exert any power to remove MAJOR SIRR from his situation—a proof that instead of the tyrannical, horrible person MR. BROUGHAM represents the MAJOR must be, as MR. PEEL indeed says he is, a most excellent, exemplary officer, and a remarkably mild and courteous gentleman.

But MR. BROUGHAM, like his profession (in England) being no "respecter of persons," flies from MAJOR SIRR and the Police to my LORD MANNERS, of whose legal abilities he —that is Lawyer BROUGHAM of the Bird's Nest—has no very great respect; we have no doubt but that MR. BROUGHAM thinks he should make a much better Chancellor himself, and we are somewhat surprized when he offered to relinquish QUEEN CAROLINE and her cause for a consideration, that he had not asked for the Irish Seals instead of a silk gown and consequent precedence—it would have looked more respectable as far as his own pretensions are concerned, and he would have been just as likely to get the one as the other.

But, as if throughout the evening MR. BROUGHAM was doomed to the prevalent punishment of making blunders while speaking of Ireland, he made a most violent (perhaps Parliamentarily justifiable) attack upon the venerable LORD NORBURY—merely because his Lordship loves a joke—this, BROUGHAM, in his bitter dry dulness, considers an unpardonable crime, and talks of ribaldry and indecency as applicable to the Noble Lord's conduct in his Court. Will it be believed that, in half an hour afterwards, this very MR. BROUGHAM endeavoured to cover his own mistakes and stigmatise the Lord Chancellor of Ireland at the same time, by a JOKE and a QUIBBLE?

MR. BROUGHAM had, on a former evening, stated off hand, that the Irish LORD CHANCELLOR'S decrees were frequently appealed from, and that of an hundred so appealed from, fifty were reversed—thus proving his Lordship, as indeed he said, to have been right once in two decisions.

On Thursday MR. PEEL noticed this observation, and stated, that of TWO THOUSAND SEVEN HUNDRED decrees of my LORD MANNERS, ONLY ELEVEN HAD BEEN REVERSED.

Now mark MR. BROUGHAM—

"How many decrees have been reversed?"

MR. PEEL—"Eleven!"

MR. BROUGHAM—"How many appealed?"

MR. PEEL—"TWENTY-TWO!!"

MR. BROUGHAM—"Well then, that is in the same proportion as fifty to an hundred!!!"—(Great laughter followed.)

Now, in spite of the laughter which followed this JOKE we beg to state, that the proportion of ELEVEN reversed decrees to TWO THOUSAND SIX HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-NINE not reversed, is such as entirely to destroy the charge or imputation which the wag of Winchelsea, who cannot endure a jest from a judge deciding a case of twenty-shilling importance in a court below, has pleased to allege against the PROFESSIONAL REPUTATION of a Nobleman, whose faults, in MR BROUGHAM'S eyes, are the nobility of his blood and the eminence of his station.

There is, MR. BROUGHAM says, another reason for his dislike of that Nobleman, which partakes in a great measure of the unlucky character which we have attributed to all MR. BROUGHAM'S reasonings and facts of Thursday. MR. BROUGHAM says on the trial of the QUEEN—of that QUEEN whom he offered to abandon for a silk gown—LORD MANNERS applied to her MAJESTY the terms "THAT WOMAN," and these, uttered in a particular tone, had disgusted MR. BROUGHAM with his Lordship irremediably.

We agree with MR. BROUGHAM on the impropriety of his Lordship's conduct—calling QUEEN CAROLINE a "woman" was a libel upon her sex—and we think we shall be able to prove MR. BROUGHAM must have thought so too, when we recall to his recollection what HE CALLED HER HIMSELF in a note to his then bosom friend—we think the words "we must not let that DEVIL come over" were those, used upon the occasion to which we refer: and as MR. BROUGHAM said on Thursday that "NO ANIMAL above a fiend" could tolerate the oppression of QUEEN CAROLINE, the style of figure seems rather popular with him. As a matter of natural history it may be amusing, and somewhat surprising however to our readers, to be told by MR. BROUGHAM in Parliament, that the sun never shone during the QUEEN'S trial, which statement—as we happen to know that the sun did shine as regularly as if no trial had been going on—we can only class with the other very unfortunate observations made by the Honourable and Learned Gentleman upon the same occasion.

Upon another point the Hon. and Learned Gentleman was equally unlucky—we mean his reference to the letter, said to have been written by MR. SAURIN to LORD NORBURY, which was said by a Popish Priest to have been picked up by him in the Circular Road TWELVE YEARS after it was written—which private letter was published by the Popish Committee—it was silly to mention this circumstance while advocating the honour and respectability of the Roman Catholics; or, while talking of unfair modes of obtaining information—we could serve MR. BROUGHAM a very unpleasant trick with regard to some private letters of his to my LORD THANET—but we despise such conduct, and leave it to the ill used, oppressed Catholics of IRELAND to take advantage of an obsolete document—which if not fabricated by himself, the finder was bound to restore to its right owner after having ascertained who he was.

Of one thing we most earnestly entreat our readers to take notice—that the present state of IRELAND and Catholic Emancipation, in spite of what MR. BROUGHAM may say, have no connexion one with the other—let it be remembered that ARTHUR O'CONNOR the confessed IRISH REBEL —to the honour and respectability, excellence and LOYALTY, of whose character, private and political—Messrs. FOX and ERSKINE, the present DUKE OF BEDFORD, MR. WHITBREAD, MR. MICHAEL ANGELO TAYLOR, MR. SHERIDAN, and MR. BROUGHAM'S patron, the EARL OF THANET, all vouched from their OWN INTIMATE PERSONAL KNOWLEDGE of him, UPON OATH!—Let it be remembered that this Friend of the Whigs—this associate—this crony of the party —when in a short time after this display of their affection for him—he CONFESSED himself an United Irishman—a Rebel —plotting to deliver his country into the hands of the enemy —the companion of the DUKE OF LEINSTER'S uncle, (a rebel also), in an expedition to Switzerland, to negociate with HOCHE—let it be remembered, we beg, that this man who must have known the subject pretty well, declared that Catholic Emancipation had nothing to do with Irish disturbances, and that, if every thing which the Catholics asked was granted in that hour, it would make no change for the better in the state of the country.

The strongest possible reason for granting nothing more to the Papists is the fact, that those Papists to whom the greatest concessions have been made are the worst conducted—it is, however, satisfactory to see that they entrust the advocacy of their demands to Messrs. HUME and BROUGHAM—the bareness and weakness of their arguments, and the real objects of their solicitude become in the hands of these gentlemen too evident to deceive a child; and we trust that experience, while it will prevent any further concessions to the Papists of Ireland, will also induce the House of Commons to reject the Bills now in progress, having for their object the ameliuration (as it is called) of the condition of the Papists and Jesuits in England.

The Spanish patriots—their cause and their subscription—their valour—their love of freedom—and their Fancy Masquerade at Covent Garden, appear to us to be altogether such decided HUMBUGS that we cannot help thinking ourselves, by some means or other, kept in the dark as to the real merits of the case.

What we are unable to discover is—

First of all, what the Spanish cause IS.

Secondly, how, when, and where the brave Spaniards have in the smallest degree attempted to resist the progress of the French army.

Thirdly, why, if the march of the French army is so extremely disgreeable and oppressive to the whole Spanish nation, or even to the majority of it, the French army are everywhere received with acclamations of welcome shouts and congratulations.

And lastly, to whom the subscriptions raised in this country are forwarded, in whose name receipts are given, and to what portion of the Constitutionalists, who never have fought a battle, the funds arising from the Covent Garden Tom-foolery of next Friday are to be appropriated, the receipts of that exquisite absurdity being avowedly applicable to the sick and wounded.

If any of the ladies' waiting maids, who are so actively employed in the servants' halls at the west end of the town, circulating invitations or vouchers for the fête, happen to be able to give us an answer to any of these questions we shall be happy.

THERE is something irresistibly ludicrous in the airs of grandeur and dignity which a mortified cockney occasion-

assumes—we never laughed more heartily than we did at the following bit of Printing House-square duncishness, which appeared in the dear old TIMES last Monday:—

"A certain writer in a weekly production is still observed to indicate his propensities, by his abuse of ladies of distinguished rank and character. We are sadly afraid we shall be obliged to speak of him more particularly. We had much rather be excused: but he must desist from vilifying the female sex. We will suffer him to calumniate respectable men."

"A writer in a weekly production"—"his propensities"—"calumniating ladies"—and "we will let him calumniate respectable men," &c.

As to the cockney's being "sadly afraid" we are quite ready to admit the truth of what he says upon that point, but with respect to anything he may have to say about any person who really writes in our "weekly production" we beg he will not be alarmed upon our account.

As to calumniating ladies, the truth is that the Spanish cause—for the TIMES is not now in the pay of the BOURBONS—is of so ticklish a nature that it will not stand the test of ridicule, and therefore a list only of the expected company at the Fandango Ball put into verse is called calumniating ladies; if they are calumniated it is by themselves, for we merely quoted their names from an advertisement which they have published, announcing themselves as Patronesses of a Political Entertainment; if we had attributed any misconduct to the honourable personages mentioned in our Song, we might have been called calumniators, but except the dispensation of lemonade by my LADY GREY, and the superintendance of refreshments by my LADY SANDWICH, we are not aware of having appropriated any particular duties to any of the fair conductresses of the campaign.

The only person upon whom the slightest reflection is cast is Miss SUSAN SMITH—a lady not generally known, and for whose name that of HUNT, or BARNES, or any other vulgar appellation may be substituted at pleasure.

The TIMES, with a liberality equal to its tenderness, permits us to calumniate honourable men—this is extremely remiss in a vigilant and correct paper—we never let him do so with impunity; but whether his affection and patronage be extended towards honourable men or virtuous ladies, we think it quite right to shew, that upon Spanish affairs he ought to allow us to do just as we please. Our reason for thinking why the less the TIMES says upon that subject the better is, that, on the 9th of this present month, June, that extremely delicate paper, tremblingly alive to a touch of satire itself, inserted the following Catalogue Raisonée of the Spanish NOBLEMEN and their LADIES, who signed an address to the DUKE D'ANGOULEME, in which our readers will perceive the mild, gentlemanly mode adopted by the LIBERALS when analyzing characters, and that that which is calumny in a TORY is glorious justice and fair discussion in a WHIG. The production shall speak for itself:—

"THE GRANDEES WHO SIGNED THE ADDRESS TO THE DUKE OF ANGOULEME.

"LE COMTE Villariezo—He is only a grandee by his wife, and quite void of talents as well as consideration.

"LE COMTE Puebla del Maestre—An old imbecile man.

"LE COMTE Punonrostro—An American, overloaded with debts, without talents or reputation.

"Conde de Miranda—An old lunatic!

"LE DUC Castroterreno—An old parasite of the Prince of Peace, and under trial for the conspiracy of the 7th of July; evaded from a prison.

"LE MARQUIS San Martin—An old courtesan and bigot, entirely deprived of opinion in Spain; he is scarcely known, having generally resided in Italy. He was made a Grandee four years ago.

"LE MARQUIS Albaida—A man of absolute nullity, and reckoned a poltroon. Never had any public charge.

"LE COMTE de Carbellon—Ditto, ditto, ditto.

"MARQUIS Villapanes, not Villafranca—He is only an honorary Grandee, an old lunatic, ex-secretary to the Inquisition.

"COMTE Montijo—A triple Girouette; Jacobin under the despotic system, and Ultra under the liberal; never happy unless he has some intrigue at hand.

"DUKE of LIRIA and Berwick—It is very doubtful whether this nobleman has really signed the address, as a few days before he was enthusiastically serving in the national militia.

"MARQUIS Fuenticisa—Unknown.

"COUNT de Gand—A son of a French emigrant.

"MARQUIS Hariza—A Grandee by his wife: he was a subaltern officer in the army, and is not known at all.

"DUKE of Sedavi—A boy.

"DUKE of Villahermosa—Vide Berwick.

"MARQUIS Cerralba—Being a Councillor of State, and residing at Seville, he could not sign the address.

"DUKE of San Fernando—A weak though a good man, entirely influenced by his wife.

"DUKE de Medinaceli—Vide Berwick and Villahermosa.

"MARQUIS Mondejar—An old imbecile man.

"MARQUESS Miraflores—Master of Ceremonies of King Joseph.

"COMTESSE Mora—An old woman, exasperated against the Constitution, on account of her sons having married, one of them an actress, and the other an inferior woman.

"COMTESSE Cifuentes—A lunatic old woman, always confined on that account.

"The DUCHESS of Benavente—A lady 72 years old; an intriguante by irresistible inclination and inveterate habit.

"The DUCHESS of Montelano—Duke of Fernan-Nunez's widow.

"COMTESSE de Alcudia—A decrepit old woman, brought up in the Palace.

"Alos—A child.

"The COUNT de Colomera—A child.

"The DUC de Tamames—A man ruined in his character, a professed gamester, overloaded with debts, and exclusively mixing with THE LOWEST RABBLE: he served King Joseph.

"The MARQUIS of Valparaiso—A boy."

Without stopping to observe that most of the noblemen are declared to be mad—that they are called Parasites and poltroons—that one of them is said to be "evaded from a prison," and that a venerable MARQUESS is called a "COURTESAN!" (the cockney translation of courtisan,) we shall only remark, that the Countesses and Duchesses contained in the list are belaboured with epithets and characteristics such as we should be ill inclined to apply to the female adherents of Spanish Rebels in our own country. We would ask the Whigs how they would like such an analysis, if we chose to take example by the TIMES and make one? And we would ask the TIMES Editor how he can admit such libellous invective against women of whom he can know nothing, and whose only fault is that of having mixed in politics and taken a decided line in Spanish affairs, and then talk of our calumniating ladies by stringing their names in verse nearly in the same order as they have themselves published them in prose.

A joke is a joke as far as a thing goes, but when the old TIMES comes to talk about sparing us, we cannot choose but sneer—we know that his paymasters are sorely and sensibly alive to our ridicule—that the Whigs wince under our lash like monkies. This Spanish affair is the great hobby of the faction, and they wish to be allowed to ride it quietly, but they shall not, and so we tell the Editor of the TIMES in spite of all his ridiculous vapouring.

IT will be perceived that the Spanish Fancy Ball is postponed, and the scene of action changed. We confess, that for an entertainment to which persons are to go, in assumed characters—in short, a public masquerade—the size and intricacies of a playhouse are much better suited than the plain honest saloon at WILLIS'S, where neither Whig politics nor vulgar vice have hitherto been suffered to predominate.

The extraordinary exertions making to fight up against the general feeling of decent society upon this gratuitous display of political intrigue are most ludicrous, but we are persuaded that the good sense of our countrywomen will spare us the necessity of enlarging next Sunday upon this second attempt to contaminate our private circles with revolutionary doctrines. "The principle's the same as that which took us all to Hammersmith" says the Invitation in our last Number, and so it is—it certainly has one advantage over the first effort which we so successfully combatted, there is no moral vice in the object publicly assigned to the entertainment, but we are quite sure that ladies of character and respectability will consult their own comfort and the best interests of their children by pausing before they commit themselves to a public declaration of political interference, and thus put themselves upon a level with those of our countrywomen whose names stand recorded as visitors at BRANDENBURGH HOUSE.

While upon this subject we shall take leave to observe that the COURIER newspaper stole our song of last week—which has set the Whiglings raving—mutilated it, to suit its limited and controuled principles—and put it into its columns without the smallest observation as to whence it was derived.

We wish these Government writers would do something original of themselves; or, if they must pilfer from a paper which their masters so sensitively disown, that they would have the GRACE to own their obligation.

A MOST splendid and gratifying meeting was held on Thursday, to celebrate the triumph of Purity and the "Victories of Independence:"—it is by such celebrations that we are enabled to form a just estimate of the virtues and merits of the "Opposition" of England—it is by such celebrations that the stimulus to honourable exertions in the cause of liberty is kept alive—it is by such celebrations that we are taught to discriminate between the pampered tools of corruption and the free born sons of Britain, who live but for their country, and who would for that country die!

The dinner—for such it was—to which we at present allude, was given to commemorate the return of SIR ROBERT WILSON to Parliament, as member for that particularly pure and virtuous borough, SOUTHWARK, and professed to be an assemblage of Independent Electors of that place:—we were surprised, but greatly pleased, to find that no vulgar prejudices about the truth upon this particular point interfered with the invitations to this magnificent banquet; we saw LORD ERSKINE enter the room, who, unless a first floor in Arabella-row, Pimlico, gives a special vote for Southwark, or the Constitution touching the peerage is greatly changed during the last week, cannot be an elector to the Commons House of Parliament. MR. HOBHOUSE was also present, and MR. HUME; neither of which gentlemen are electors of Southwark, we presume. Whether MR. ALDERMAN WOOD, and MR. WILLIAMS are, we cannot take upon ourselves to say, nor does it much signify; they were invited evidently to amuse and delight the company, and their qualifications to be entertaining were the only ones sought or required by the enlightened and enthusiastic party assembled.

MR. LAMBTON was to have taken the chair, but a slight cold in the head, caught from a draft in the Spanish Committee Room, has laid up that exemplary patriot, and accordingly, we lament to say, he could not attend; but he wrote a letter, breathing in the most beautiful language the ardent sentiments of pure liberty—there never perhaps was a production of the same length so admirable, so complete in all its parts, and we only lament our inability to do justice to so splendid an effort of human intellect by quoting it entire.

ALDERMAN WOOD took the chair—his hair was beautifully powdered, and the expression of his fine and intelligent countenance perfectly charmed the delighted company. He was received with shouts of rapturous applause, truly merited by a man at once so exemplary and so talented.

When the health of that god-like creature SIR ROBERT WILSON, who has just left us, was drank, the band, somewhat inappropriately we must confess, played—"See the Conquering Hero comes!"—Everybody is ready to admit that SIR ROBERT WILSON is indeed a hero; and as everybody has heard of his conquests, it would be useless to swell this article by a list of the actions in which he has fought, the great results achieved by his military superiority, or the numberless wounds he has received in his country's service; but to say he was coming—at a moment when it was known he was far away—was for an instant to kindle a ray of hope in the breasts of his electors but to make the darkness occasioned by his absence more "visible!"

That venerable, virtuous, wise and good Nobleman, LORD ERSKINE, then addressed the company, and mentioned the success of his efforts in the rescue of HORNE TOOKE, THELWALL, and the rest of those deserving patriots who were shamefully tried at the Old Bailey, but gloriously acquitted by his exertions—his Lordship feelingly stated how very much obliged he was for the invitation to dinner—he praised himself very ingenuously—and he praised his country—he praised SIR ROBERT WILSON, and he praised the company, and sat down amidst those cheers which never fail to crown the efforts of genuine patriotism and public spirit when united to moral excellence and private virtue.

SIR FRANCIS BURDETT did not attend, but he sent a letter also, which was very much cheered—MR. LAMBTON'S health was drank, which was also very much cheered—and MR. CAM HOBHOUSE, his health having also been drank, rose to address the company.

Words would be inadequate to describe the richness of imagery—the power of argument—the beauty of illustration—the force of language, which were combined by this extraordinary gentleman in his harangue. MR. HUME, who followed, was beyond measure successful in his display of eloquence; the classicality of his allusions—the depth of research, so evident and so well suited to the occasion—the modesty—the diffidence—the suavity—and, above all, the correct clearness of his statements, were indeed truly gratifying. MR. WHITBREAD, if not so successful, was equally effective. But what shall we say of MR. J. WILLIAMS?—Nothing; because anything we might attempt to say in his praise would fall short of the truth—we have heard MR. PITT—we have heard MR. CANNING—we have heard MR. PEEL—but we have no hesitation in saying, that if comparisons are at all times odious, in this case they would be grossly invidious. Perhaps never was made a more magnificent display of wit, wisdom, patriotism, and feeling, than the one we now allude to; indeed, so stupendous appeared the effort, that we quitted the room when the very learned and honourable Gentleman sat down, convinced that we had arrived at the ne plus ultra of the exhibition.

What a truly gratifying sight it was—in the large room at the HORNS at Kennington, to see congregated so much worth, so much wisdom, so much wealth—the banquet was exactly suited to the glorious occasion, the mutton was excellent—very fine meat, and extremely well done, not burnt up or cold, but hot, and with all the gravy in it—the mackarel, although out of season elsewhere, were very large and fresh with beautiful soft roes, and fennell in abundance, some beef-steak pies were very much noticed, and the boiled tripe with onions was so far beyond the warmest expectations of the company, that we feel we should do the dish an injustice in attempting to describe it.

There were two or three dishes of new potatoes, and peas at discretion. The beer, BOXTON'S XX, and WHITBREAD'S Stout, was equal in excellence to the viands. The gin and water, "hot with," was perfectly nectareous, and we have no doubt the tobacco was of the first quality; we are unable to speak to this last fact from personal knowledge, for when the President called for pipes, we retired.

LORD ERSKINE and the other London performers got their victuals and drink gratis.

The company staid as long as they decently could, enjoying the glorious scene, and then adjourned to their homes, except the professional patriots, who went from the tavern to the House of Commons to protect our interests and maintain our rights.

MERCANTILE ANOMALIES.

AN extremely clever book, called HERALDIC ANOMALIES, by MR. NARES, has made its appearance, of which we certainly must take some further notice; but while considering its title this morning, an account of the prices of various articles in different markets, was laid before us, and we could not avoid remarking the apparently anomalous character of the matter-of-fact document which contained the information; we will quote it as odd enough to deserve a place here:—

"The Rum market is by no means lively.—Brandies are flat, and there is very little doing in Geneva.

Several parcels of LISBON have arrived in the river; but MOUNTAINS are generally low.

There have been considerable arrivals in oil—OLIVE is considerably fallen since last week.

There has been also a great fall upon Irish Linens since yesterday: Hemp continues slack.

In sugars there have been some pretty fair specimens of brown crush—Low lumps are much higher than Monday—there is no quotation in Malt—Hops are in demand.

Quicksilver remains steady and Feathers are extremely heavy. There are no sales made of canvas; but Ticking is in request. Tar may be quoted as per last; but Virginia may be had for seventeen shillings and threepence.

Pitch hangs on hand:—in Deals, French Shorts are generally called for.—Red Pine is a shade better than last week; Horse hair in tails is looked after.

Dates cannot be quoted. Isinglass is reviving.—Deer skins are much cheaper than they have been; and Paving Stones begin to look up."

To any body unacquainted with mercantile cant, all this would sound mighty strange—as it is, the coincidences are odd, and there's an end on't.

IT was currently reported last night amongst CORPORAL WILSON'S friends, that he had been arrested at OPORTO. We doubt this at present; it seems like a trick to stimulate subscribers, not but that he deserves it richly.

ADMIRABLE FOOLERY.

THE MORNING POST, the CHRONICLE, and that class of papers which advocate the cause of the Spaniards (which they do not advocate themselves) inform their readers of meetings convened at this place and the other place in furtherance of the design of raising subscriptions for CORPORAL WILSON, and Co. and amongst other towns they notice CHATHAM as very forward upon the occasion. We have been favoured with the three following hand-bills from that place, which, we think, read consecutively are perfectly delightful—any thing more entirely calculated to display the character of the persons employed in such a cause cannot be adduced:—

"THE CAUSE OF SPAIN.

"TO THE HIGH CONSTABLE OF CHATHAM.

"SIR—We, the undersigned, inhabitants of the Town of Chatham and its vicinity, viewing with the strongest indignation the atrocious and unprincipled invasion of Spain by a French force, for the avowed purpose of imposing upon them a Constitution repugnant to the feelings and good sense of the Spanish people, do request you will convene an early Meeting, to enable all those who value their own freedom, as well as the rights of independent nations, to express their abhorrence of the tyrannical conduct of the French Government, as well as to aid, by their prompt subscriptions, the unoffending, brave, and suffering people of Spain."—[Here follow the names of the requisitionists.]

"In compliance with the above Requisition, I hereby convene a meeting of the parishioners and inhabitants of Chatham, to be holden at the Assembly Room, Sun Tavern, on Friday, the 27th inst. at six o'clock in the evening. W. H. TOWNSON, High Constable.

"Chatham, June 20, 1823."

Immediately subsequent to this, our readers are referred to the following:—

"CRICKET.

"On Friday, June 27, 1823, and following day, a Grand Match of Cricket will be played in the Black Lion Field, on Chatham Lines, between the Gillingham and Leigh Clubs, for 50*l*."—[Here follow the names of the players.]—"The wickets to be pitched at 10 o'clock.—N.B. A good Ordinary at the Black Lion at 2 o'clock."

As a concluding morceau the next is submitted:—

"SUBSCRIPTION FOR THE SPANIARDS.

"There being very great reason to fear that the Grand Cricket Match, on Chatham Lines on Friday next, will materially injure the Cause of the Spaniards, which is announced for consideration on that day, it is submitted to those under whose responsibility the Meeting is held, to postpone it, as THE CRICKET MATCH CANNOT POSSIBLY BE PUT OFF!!!—June 25, 1823."

What will the Ladies of the Fancy say to this?

WE love to track the windings and turnings of the Radicals, who are at all times, and upon all occasions, watching opportunities to give the word, and, either by open declarations or secret manœuverings, assist in promoting any measure that will tend to pull down a corner-stone of ancient establishments and customs, in the hope if one stone only can be got out, they may worm their way until they produce the fall of the whole structure.

The radical party in Lancashire have been reduced to a very low ebb; but still there are some who keep fanning over the dying embers, in full expectation that time and perseverance may once more burst out the flame. The great landed and commercial interests have been united in their endeavours to suppress and root out the radical system in all its bearings, and the only ray of hope left for that party was, to divide and to create disunion between the landed and the commercial interests of this great county.

This they have secretly been endeavouring to accomplish, and the apple of discord is thrown down under the pretext of the necessity of a removal or an adjournment of the Assizes from Lancaster to Manchester, or to Liverpool, or to both places, that "justice may be administered at every man's door." This is the cant phrase to stir up popular feeling. Let us enquire whether rogues have not justice administered at their own doors four times a year at the Quarter Sessions as it is?—Upwards of 1500 criminals were committed in the whole county in the year 1822, of which number about 100, or one-fifteenth part only, were committed to the Castle of Lancaster, the very scum of the rogues; the rest were tried at the different Quarter Sessions, or, if the party will have it so, "at their own doors."

To accomplish the adjournment of the Assizes, public meetings were called at Manchester and at Liverpool, and we well know how soon public meetings may be collected, and by whom they are most numerously attended. At Manchester the trick nearly failed; the subject was brought forward at a Vestry Meeting, at which about 20 persons were present—it was asked whether such a meeting was competent to decide upon a question of so much importance?—however, the vantage was taken, and the application for an adjournment of the Assizes was carried.

"——— some two or three

At Liverpool the meeting was more numerous (the Editor of the Mercury and his assistants in due attendance)—many respectable commercial gentlemen were drawn in to an approval of the measure, from the idea of the dense population of the Hundreds of Salford and West Derby, and the quantity of crime and litigation arising in those two Hundreds being equal to all the rest of the county. At this meeting a little of the under-plot was let out. The Grand Juries (who for time immemorial had been selected from the ancient families and great land-owners of the county) were designated hereditary Juries! and why were not Grand Juries to be composed of commercial gentlemen?—Thus the first seeds of dissension were sown. Memorials to the proper quarters were prepared, and deputations appointed from Manchester, from Liverpool, and from Warrington, to wait upon the High Authorities and urge the measure.

These deputations, it is said, arranged and agreed amongst themselves, nay some will have it they proposed to the Minister, "that the place of adjournment should be Warrington, and that the two Hundreds of Salford and West Derby should, at their own cost, erect all the Courts and buildings requisite for so important a change." Upon this point we would ask, what proportion of the great land-owners in these two Hundreds composed these deputations?—Had the deputations any authority, or did they even deign to think it necessary to call a meeting of the land-owners, to give them authority to make such a proposition?

When commercial pursuits are prosperous, thousands roll into the pockets of the adventurers, and the expenditure of money becomes no object to them. Not so with the land-owner—he has no means of increasing the annual income which his land produces—and every body knows that kind of income has been greatly abridged of late years—yet here is a set of commercial men say to the land-owners (for upon the land must the expence fall) it is our wish that the Assizes should be adjourned from Lancaster to Warrington, and you must pay for the very expensive buildings which will become necessary! The land-owner very naturally replies we can do no such thing without being materially injured, and you have no right to make such a demand.

Now, with respect to Warrington being fixed upon as the most proper place for holding an assize in the county of Lancaster, there is this remarkable facility for travelling attending the choice of Warrington, that except through Manchester and Liverpool no direct communication exists with that town from any part of the county, and the cross roads in the Hundreds of Salford and West Derby are amongst the worst in the kingdom. Another very prominent feature in the choice is, the town being situated at the very verge of the county—a stout athletic Lancashire youth, eluding the gripe of a constable, may, with a hop, skip, and a jump, throw himself into Cheshire.

Well, all these minor matters being arranged to the satisfaction of the prime movers, they now venture forth, and we see MR. DENMAN employed to present a petition to Parliament, complaining of the mode of appointing the Grand Juries for Lancashire, and praying redress of the grievance. This is quite in character—and instead of an adjournment of the assizes, we should not be surprized to hear that it was in some one's contemplation to move that there should not be any assizes at all!—this, we really believe, would meet the wishes and obtain the sanction of a popular meeting called for the purpose; at all events we may fairly presume the party are pretty confident the adjournment of the assizes to Warrington will take place, and they are flattering themselves with the hope that by a little management they can obtain the appointment of the Grand and Petit Juries from the manufacturing population in the two Hundreds, and in such way as will best suit their cause. All the old order of things must give way—the forms and establishments which have existed, and existed with honour and advantage to the county for nearly five hundred years, must be changed—the officers and the records of the court—the sheriff, with his javelin-men and attendants—the judges, with their retinue—all, all must travel from one end of the county to the other—and for what? "That every man may have justice administered at his own door!" The great landed interest of the county is to be driven from the Grand Juries—merchants and manufacturers substituted!—and the honest, independent yeomanry of the north of Lancashire, with heads as clear as their mountain breeze, and minds as firm as their rocks, are to resign the Common Juryship to the weavers and cotton-spinners of the south, collected from the dense population and dense atmosphere of the manufacturing towns!—Out upon such innovation!—if old ENGLAND is to be kept steady these things MUST NOT BE!!

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR—Observing of late, that there have been several advertisements in the papers for the sale of West India Estates—and taking it for granted that the cry which has been raised for emancipation of the blacks, by the Saints and Philanthropists, must have considerably lessened the value of such property, I beg to suggest to such holy persons, that a favourable opportunity is now afforded to them, of evincing to the world the sincerity of their professions in desiring to give freedom to the slaves, by becoming themselves the purchasers of such property: and thus, being the first to make a sacrifice of property at the shrine of liberty, they would set forth a noble example of disinterestedness.—I remain, Sir, your obliged obedient servant.

A FRIEND TO OUR WOODEN WALLS.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, JUNE 22.—The following Telegraphic despatch has been received: "The Major-General of the Army in Spain to the Minister of War—The 2d corps, after having forced Ballesteros to raise the siege of Saguntum, entered Valencia on the 13th. The Royalist Chief Don Ramonchambo took the Castle of Tortosa on the 12th, and expects to be soon master of the rest of the place."

The Journal des Débats and the Moniteur of Monday contain an account of the sitting of the Cortes at Seville on the 11th. They also state that the appointed Regency consisted of three members, Valdes president, Ciscer, and Vigo.

BAYONNE, JUNE 17.—At length there is an end to all the tales that have been told of Abisbal for some days past, he arrived here on the 15th, in the evening; but though travelling incognito, he has however been visited by most of the officers of the garrison, and had been present at a grand dinner, given doubtless in his honour, by the General who commands the department.

A despatch from Gen. Guilleminot, dated Madrid, June 18, gives the details of the retreat of Ballesteros, after he had been compelled to raise the siege of Saguntum by Gen. Molitor. It is said Ballesteros lost above 1000 men before he began his retreat towards Valencia, and in doing which he was forced to abandon his ammunition and artillery. After the entry of Gen. Molitor's corps into Valencia, Gen. Bonnetmain was sent in pursuit of the enemy. The retreat of Ballesteros was so precipitate, that he could not call in the 1500 or 2000 men he had detached towards Alcora. This column, thus cut off, was to be pursued till it was destroyed or taken.

A despatch from Baron de Rottenbourg, dated Perpignan, June 19, represents Mina's situation as quite desperate. It is now said, that he has entered the Seo D'Urgel, with not more than 900 men at the utmost, and that his successive losses have not only given a mortal blow to the Constitutional party, but that his own influence is nearly destroyed. According to one account he was without a convoy, while another, which is dated Ax, June 17, says, "The division of Mina has been pursued, mutilated, and scattered to Llosa. Its remains wander about in companies of 15, 20, and 50 men, in a most miserable state. Mina himself is said to have shed tears on finding himself deserted and abandoned by all his guards."

STOCKHOLM, June 10.—The English Ambassador, Sir B. Bloomfield, had to-day his first audience of his Majesty, after which he presented Capt. Warren, of the Seringapatam, and the gentlemen belonging to his Embassy. His Excellency had afterwards audiences of the Crown Prince and of the Princess Sophia Albertina.

LISBON, MAY 31.—On the 27th, the Infant Don Miguel retired from Lisbon, an event, to which succeeded the defection of the 23d regiment. On the 30th, a Royal Proclamation appeared, in which the King renounces, as a father, his son Don Miguel. A new Ministry was now announced—and another deputation waited on his Majesty, in consequence of the desertion of Sepulveda with 2,760 of the troops. The King declared his profound affliction at this event and gave fresh protestations of fidelity to the Constitution.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE KING.—WINDSOR, JUNE 26.—In the course of his drive yesterday His Majesty again visited Windsor. He drove up to the Castle in his pony chaise, and alighting at the entrance to the private apartments, walked through the rooms that have been prepared for His Majesty's residence. His Majesty then called at Frogmore, and returned to his Lodge in the Great Park, by way of Old Windsor and Egham. His Majesty's frequent visits to Windsor have excited an unusual degree of life and bustle in the town, and there seems no doubt of His Majesty's intention to make the Castle his principal future place of residence. The Lord Steward, and another gentleman, have been inspecting the domestic part of the Castle this morning.

The King it is now reported will wait the breaking up of Parliament before taking his aquatic excursion. Although his Majesty's health appears to be so perfectly re-established, the weakness in his knees and ancles still continues so great, as to prevent his Majesty standing for more than a few minutes.

Mr. Ward, a gentleman attached to the British mission at Seville, arrived Wednesday noon in Downing-street, with despatches from Sir William A'Court. He left Seville on the 15th instant. The refusal of the King to proceed to Cadiz was very decisive, as it was considered the royal person might be endangered by the yellow fever, which is very prevalent during the summer in that city. The subject was discussed in the Cortes, who, on the motion of M. Galiano, seconded by M. Arguelles, passed a resolution, declaring the King morally incapable of reigning, and forthwith appointed a Regency, according to the forms of the Constitution established for the case of the moral or physical incapacity of the King. Destitute of support in the Cortes, and insulted on all hands, the King and Royal Family set out for Cadiz, not by water, as has been stated, but by land, on the 12th instant. The Regency went by the steam-boat, accompanied by such of the Ministers as had not resigned, and such of the officers of the Government and Members of the Cortes as proposed to follow them.

The Court of Aldermen has directed that a reward of 100l. should be offered for the apprehension of Hussey.

At the Common Hall held on Tuesday, at Guildhall, for the election of Sheriffs for the year ensuing, the show of hands having been decidedly in favour of G. B. Whittaker, Esq. Citizen and Stationer, and Peter Laurie, Esq. Citizen and Saddler, those gentlemen were declared duly elected.

Mr. Whittaker stepped forward, and begged leave to return his best thanks to the Livery for the distinguished honour they had that day conferred on him. It was his intention to serve, and in so doing he would strenuously exert himself to discharge, to the utmost of his ability, the important duties of the high and honourable office to which they had elected him. Nothing should on his part be wanting which zeal and industry could supply, in the efforts which he might be called on to make for the preservation of the rights, liberties, and privileges of their city, which might justly be considered as the metropolis of the world. And if at the expiration of his term of office, it should be found that his services were less valuable than those of more able men who had preceded him, he trusted that his zeal, and sincerity, and good intentions, would enable him at the end of the year to meet his fellow-citizens without fear or reproach—(applause.)

Mr. Lawrie also returned thanks.

Richard Clark, Esq. was re-elected Chamberlain; and Messrs. Gabain and Lewis were re-elected Bridge Masters.

THE ARMY.—The 17th Reg. of Light Dragoons has received orders to march from Chatham to Romford.—The 3d Reg. of Light Dragoons has marched to Hampton Court.—The 1st Reg. of Dragoons will, it is understood, march in a few days from Canterbury to Manchester.—A grand review of cavalry is expected to take place at Wimbledon about the middle of next month. The 15th Reg. of Light Dragoons will, after the review, march from Hounslow to Canterbury.—The 4th Reg. of Dragoon Guards has been ordered to march from Dundalk to Dublin.—The 5th Reg. of Dragoon Guards has marched from Newbridge to Balinrobe.—The 6th Reg. of Dragoon Guards has been ordered to march from Cork to Dublin.—The 7th Reg. of Dragoon Guards, lately arrived in Ireland, has been ordered to Dundalk.—The 9th Reg. of Light Dragoons, lately arrived in Ireland, has been ordered to march to Cahir.—The 12th (or the Prince of Wales' Royal Lancers) has marched from Balinrobe to Cork.—The 77th Reg. of Infantry has been ordered to march to Belfast.—The 25th (or the King's Own Borderers) has received orders to march to Ennis.

By a general order from the Horse Guards, a very material alteration is to be made in the dress of the infantry soldier; blue grey cloth trowsers and half boots are hereafter to supersede breeches, leggings, and shoes.

The first stone of the new church of St. John the Evangelist, in the Waterloo-road, Lambeth, will be laid at one o'clock to-morrow, by the Archbishop of Canterbury. The Members of the county, Magistracy, and Clergy, intend joining in the procession.

We have been much gratified with a view of Marshall's Grand Panoramas of the Coronation, and the Bankes of the Clyde for one hundred miles. They are really interesting, and will, no doubt, continue to be during the holidays, not only the resort of the senior, but also of the junior fashionables.

WOOLWICH GARRISON RACES.—THURSDAY.—Handicap Sweepstakes of four sovereigns each, with 25 added from the Fund, for beaten horses in the first day's Plate, was won by Mr. Coleman's br. h. Tom Tough, 6 yrs old, 9st. 7lb. beating Mr. Bowles's Malmsey, 3 yrs old, 6st. 8lb. and Col. Parker's Miss Tiney, 6 yrs old, 8st. 5lb.—Handicap Sweepstakes of three sovereigns each, with 25 added. Gentlemen riders, was won by Capt. Wilde's Quentin Durward, beating Lieut. Trevylyan's ch. m. Columbine, and Col. Pym's Achilles, was drawn on the second heat. —For 50 guineas each. Ponies. Capt. Price's Waxy beat Mr. Heysham's c. ——; Lieut. Otway's Klepper beat Lieut. Wynne's Dandy.

Mr. Matthews, the comedian, we understand, arrived at Liverpool, by the Meteor, from America, two days ago, where Mrs. Mathews and their son were waiting to receive him.

DREADFUL PARRICIDE AND SUICIDE.—On Monday an inquest was held at the Green Dragon, Maddox street, Hanover-square, on the bodies of T. H. Griffith, Esq. aged 60, and A. Griffith, his son, aged 22.—Mr. Nicholson, surgeon, deposed, that he was sent for. In the drawing room, on the first floor, he found the two bodies, the father was dead, and the son died in five minutes after his arrival. On examining the head of the elder, he found a wound from a pistol-ball which no doubt caused his death. The body of Mr. Griffith, jun. was near the fire-place. He found a wound on the right temple, as if a pistol-ball had entered the brain, which was scattered about the room. There were two small pistols; one on the table, and the other on the floor. There was a discolouration in the fore-finger of the right hand of Mr. Griffith, jun. which caused witness to believe he fired off the pistols. The hands of the elder deceased were perfectly clean. He had his gloves on, and his umbrella and hat lay close by him, as if he was on the point of leaving the room when shot.—Mr. J. Hearle corroborated this testimony.—W. Wade, a man of colour, deposed that he was servant to Mr. G. sen. who was a Barbadoes planter, and whose family resides at Southampton, but he lodged, while in town, at No. 4, Maddox-street. His son, who was studying the law, lived in Temple-lane, and frequently called at his father's, but on the last few visits he did not see him, but saw him on the third. The father had told him to deny him when his son called. The last time he called was Sunday noon; he had his arms folded, and appeared dejected. He said he wanted to see his father, and asked if he was at home, and if he might go up stairs. Witness said "No;" he would go; and informed the father, who consented to see him. Witness conducted him into the drawing room, on which he bowed to his father, who returned it. They remained in the room about twenty minutes. Witness heard the father say to his son, "I know very well what will be the end of it if you will not feel satisfied until a gaol has picked you up." He also said, "I allow you a certain sum of money, and that would have kept you very well. You ought to have staid where you was." He did not hear the specified sum which he allowed him, nor did he know where his father wished him to have remained. He also said, "I must go out." His master appeared vexed with his son while in the room. The had not been there long when witness heard the report of a pistol, and shortly after a second report, and on opening the door they saw the old gentleman lying on the floor bleeding very much. Do you think your master was shot by his son, the deceased?—I suspect so.—Mary Knight and Sarah Gould corroborated that part allusive to the deceased's lowness of spirits. The Coroner, in order to give time for the production of further evidence, adjourned the Inquest.—The inquest was resumed on Tuesday.—Mr. George Pinhorn, a medical man, deposed that the younger deceased had been labouring under complication of diseases, and had been under the hands of several medical gentlemen, had taken an immensity of mercurial medicine he could not speak on any subject without betraying considerable mental aberration and nervous debility; he complained of his head saying that he felt as if a great weight pressed upon his brain, and was suffering very acute pain. Witness pressing the main artery which was pulsating very heavily, the eyes appeared suffused with blood, and the eyebrow seemed to have lost its power of contracting; these appearances were calculated to produce nervous irritation. Witness applied some leeches, and during the application of more remedies by the witness, the deceased displayed very great irritation, particularly on speaking of his complaints. Mr. Stewart, Mr. C. Kelson, Mr. S. Woodford, and Mr. C. Woodward, surgeons, deposed as to the nervous irritability of the younger deceased.—Captain Andrew Vincent, R.N. had known the deceased, Mr. Abel Griffith, for six months, had met him several times at parties, where he often sprung up from the dining-table during dinner, and placing his hands to his head, complained of the pain, and seemed in extreme agony—his eyes were completely bloodshot from pain. On Saturday last witness met the deceased in Holborn, and walked with him, the pain then seized him, and he became exceedingly irritable and cried, and upon witness questioning him, he said it is here, as usual, (putting his hand to his forehead.) The deceased often, in the course of conversation, recited things foreign to the subject. Witness told him at one time, that he was afraid he, the deceased, was mad, and that his mind seemed going from him, and was fearful that he should be placed under restraint. The deceased never said anything to witness of his affairs, but on one occasion he said that his mother and brother were at Southampton. Once he remarked, as they were coming over Blackfriars-bridge, that his complaint would do for him at last. The deceased was a most gentlemanly man in his manners, and seemed to possess an extreme degree of sensibility, indeed too much for a person labouring under such an irritable temper. The Coroner here observed that the evidence of all the witnesses to-day seems to have led to one result—namely, that the younger deceased was a very elegant and honourable young man, subject to very violent attacks of dreadful complaint of mental aberration of mind, which, at times, caused him totally to forget himself, and it was for the Jury to suppose whether in one of those attacks he committed the dreadful act.—Several other witnesses were called, who confirmed the grievous testimony as to the state of the younger deceased's mind. The Jury now proposed that they should be left alone, and all strangers were ordered out. They continued for the space of nearly one hour and a half shut up in the Jury room. About half past ten o'clock, the Jury having inquired if there was any other evidence, and being answered in the negative, the Foreman gave the following verdict—"Wilful Murder of Thomas Howard Griffith, by Abel Griffith, his son, who afterwards killed himself being then in a sound state of mind." This verdict, when given, excited considerable surprise and seeming dissatisfaction.

FIRES.—On Sunday evening, about 9 o'clock, a fire broke out at Mr. Croker's, Borough, occasioned by the bursting of the oven, owing to the difficulty of getting water, the fire was not got under until the premises were entirely destroyed. The two adjoining houses were considerably injured.—About 10 o'clock on Friday night a fire broke out at No. 8, Tower-Royal, Watling-street, and notwithstanding an early and numerous muster of engines, such was the scanty supply of water, that the house was entirely consumed, and the adjoining one, No. 7, materially injured.

At the Commission for the County of Dublin, opened on Monday, James Kilbride, William Kilbride, Andrew Kilbride, and Patrick Kealy, indicted for the horrible outrages committed on M'Keon, and his wife, on the 25th of May last, were acquitted, on an alibi, very strongly sworn to.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH.

FRIDAY.—Egg v. Lord Coleraine.—This was an action for goods sold and delivered, to which the defendant pleades the statute of limitations. The defendant, better known by the name of the celebrated George Hanger, was somewhat of an eccentric character. The plaintiff, a gun-maker, had supplied him with duelling pistols and double-barrelled guns so long ago as the year 1778, when this account, amounting to 119l. 2s. commenced, terminating in 1789, on conditions of credit; being that the defendant should not be called on to pay until he should succeed to the title to which he had of late years succeeded, namely, that of Lord Coleraine, by the death of his brother, the late Lord. The plaintiff's foreman called on the defendant in 1817 and 1819, at his lodgings, in the Regent's-Park, with the produced account. The defendant was not known there as Lord Coleraine, but only as George Hanger. He laid before him the produced account—he said he was willing to pay for the articles, but would not pay interest. Witness received from him two several payments in the above years, which reduced the balance, as stated, to 13l. 14s.—Mr. Puller, for the defendant, observed, that it was among the extraordinary circumstances in the life of Lord Coleraine, that an action should be brought in 1823 upon an account beginning in 1778, and ending in 1789.—The Lord Chief Justice said he thought nothing extraordinary in the time that had elapsed without payment, where eminent tradesmen like the plaintiff would trust a noble defendant like this, not able (as was stated, to pay at the time) knowing that the payment was ultimately safe. Verdict for the plaintiff, without interest.—Damages 13l. 14s.

Reay v. Jones.—This was an action against the Marshal of the King's Bench Prison, for suffering a prisoner named Young to escape from the Rules. Young was seen in Arundel-street, Strand, and other places. Verdict for the plaintiff. Damages—4191.

OLD BAILEY.

FRIDAY.—Mary Davage (married woman, aged 40) was indicted for the wilful murder of Mary Davage, the younger (her daughter.) The Grand Jury had thrown out the bill, charging the prisoner with the crime of murder: it was the opinion of the Learned Judge (Holroyd) that there was no necessity to proceed to trial, because it would be impossible to sustain a conviction. The prisoner was then removed from the bar.

John Macintosh, a watchman, was found guilty of robbing a Miss Collins of a watch. The prisoner, at two o'clock in the morning, took her to a house in the Almonry, under pretence of getting her a lodging for the night, and, while she was asleep, stole the watch.

"We'll set to like French falconers, fly at anything we see."—Shakespeare.

Printed for G. and W. B. Whittaker, Ave-Maria-lane.

"The rest papers in the volume are unquestionably those of a general character. The Essays on Modern Extravagance and Charity are evidently the work of a man who has read life with an eye of wisdom. The observations are faithful to fact, and the remarks either ingenious or sound."—Lit. Gaz. March 22, 1823.

"The Author's remarks exhibit the frankness, acuteness, ease, and good feeling, which we are proud to think, and pleased to say, so often belong to the character of the experienced British Officer; while they are so well conveyed, and in fact with such particular correctness, that not only few military men have the opportunity of forming and maturing so good a style, but many of our practised writers must fall into the rear in competition with Major Ravelin, who may stand master with Geoffrey Crayon."—Monthly Review, May, 1823.

at 9 o'clock in the morning.

The Hibernia is a superb new packet, of 364 tons burden, with engines of 140 horse power, a consort worthy the St. Patrick. The size of these packets and the immense power of their engines, being double that of the other packets on the station, render the passage across the Channel safe, quick, and comfortable, and as they are not subject to the inconvenience of carrying troops for the War Office, the proprietors rely with confidence upon the patronage of the public, particularly as they were the first to open what has proved to be the most expeditious and delightful way of travelling between London and Dublin, the route through Bristol. Further information given on application, post paid, to Thos. S. Prothero, Cumberland-basin, Bristol; George E. Davies, Great Brunswick-street, Dublin; or J. Lancaster, 12, Regent-street, Pall-mall, London.

CHELSEA.—TO LET on LEASE, a convenient moderate sized HOUSE, containing two rooms and dressing closets on the principal floors, No. 6, Paradise-row, overlooking the Hospital grounds, latterly the residence of the late Dr. Moseley.—For further particulars (if letter post paid) apply to J. Robson, No. 2, Great Marlborough-street, St. James's.

NOTICE to the PUBLIC.—J. JAY having made extensive purchases for Cash, respectfully solicits attention to the following prices, as a convincing proof that nothing of the kind has ever been offered within fifty per cent. Ladies' morning dresses, 2s. each; tucked ditto, 4s. 10d.; rich chintz Japan ditto, 7s.; flounced lace ditto, 7s. 6d., regular price 16s.; beautiful India stripe book, 7s. 6d. worth 16s.; elegant colonade do. 21s. never before offered under 30s.; a superior novelty from the last Paris fair (by designs, which are peculiar to his house, with an elegant assortment of gauze, Gros de Naples, and Levantine made dresses, at unheard of prices. Just imported 500 dozen of French cambrick handkerchiefs, from 10 to 12 shillings per dozen lower than any house in London. Irish linens, sheeting, &c. equally cheap.—N.B. Having bought the remaining part of a bankrupt's stock of shaws and scarfs, J. J. particularly solicits an early inspection, being convinced that no house in the Metropolis can offer them within 50 per cent. of the price he is now selling them at his family linen, muslin, silk mercery, and shawl warehouse, 259, Regent-street, two doors from the Circus, Oxford street. Ladies are requested to bring this advertisement with them, and they will find no deception in the price or article.

FASHIONABLE ECONOMY.—RICHARDSON and Co. 111. Oxford-street, again beg leave respectfully to call the attention of the Nobility and Ladies in general (particularly those visiting the metropolis,) to the immense Stock of Mercery now selling at their warehouse, which for richness, variety of colour, many exclusively their own, and cheapness, they flatter themselves can be equalled by few, and surpassed by no house in town; 500 all-checked and striped sarsnet dresses, from 21s. to 42s. the full dress; rich Gros de Naples, from 4s. 6d.; levantines, French width, at 5s.; yard-wide sarsnets, for morning dresses, 2s. 3d. per yard. Their present stock of silk, open, and carriage cloaks, so much approved of for elegance and comfort, in every colour, from 55s. to 70s. To particularize the unbounded display of every article of modern silks would be impossible. R. and Co. therefore rely on that liberality to the public whose patronage it has been their constant anxiety to merit.—☞ The assortment of shawls and scarfs of every known fabric is allowed to be the best selected in London.

SILKS, LACE, MUSLINS, and SHAWLS, SELLING OFF.—The whole of the Fashionable STOCK of HUBBARD and CO. is now SELLING OFF at an immense sacrifice, in consequence of the expiration of their Lease. Morning dresses, 3s. each; handsome gauze dresses, 10s. and 15s.; French width levantines, 4s. 6d. instead of 6s. 6s.; bombazeens, 1s.; wide Norwich crapes, 18d.; white satins, 3s.; pink satins, 2s. 6d.; lace veils, 12s.; Moravian flowered robes, 16s. and 21.; silk shawls, 5s. 6d. to 10s. Every description of Bargains, new and very rich silks, much in demand amongst the Nobility for Spring dresses and pelisses. Velon de Paris, ducapes, Gros de Naples, figured silks, striped silks, Taffeties, sarsnets, velvets, poplins, rich white satins for dresses, and every other silk now in fashion. Beautiful French flowers, tulle dresses, superb lace veils, dresses, and scarfs. A splendid assortment of Shawls, many of them under third their original price.—Spitalfields House, 13, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

RUSSIA SHEETING at HALF PRICE.—Owing to the Bankruptcy of James, Manufacturer of Sheeting, at Barnsley, the whole of his stock is ordered by the assignees to be sold off without reserve, at MALLCOTT and JAMES'S Linen Warehouse, 78, Oxford-street, exactly opposite the Pantheon. The prices have been fixed so that no abatement can be made, and ladies sending the width and quality, by sample, may be as well served as though they came themselves. The goods are warranted, or the money returned. An estimate may be formed of the price by the following:—Yard wide sheeting, Russia, 6d. a yd.; yd and quarter, 1s.; yd and half, 1s. 6d. to 2s. (worth 2s. 9d. and 3s. 6d.); 2 yds and half wide, without a seam, from 2s. 3d to 3s. 6d.; and an assortment of huckabacks, towelling, &c. &c.—Ladies furnishing may benefit the family of the bankrupt, and at the same time save very materially themselves. Mallcott and James have also on their own account an extensive assortment of table linen, and their stock of Irish linens is also below. Every article of the best description to those ladies who have not as yet favoured them with their commands. Counterpanes, quilts, &c. of this year's bleach, and particularly good and cheap.—MALLCOTT and JAMES, the Pantheon Linen Warehouse, 79, Oxford-street, the corner of Winsley-street, and exactly opposite the Pantheon.

SIX HUNDRED and EIGHTY POUNDS WORTH of DAMASK TABLE LINEN at Half Price—French cambric handkerchiefs, 19s. 6d. the doz.; 950 damask table cloths from yard and quarter 10 yds. long; 170 doz. damask napkins; 500 pieces Russia, Scotch, and Irish sheeting; 270 Marseilles quilts and counterpanes; 450 pieces huckaback towellings; 700 pieces Russia towellings, 6d. a yd.; 7-8ths and 4-4ths Irish linens; several boxes French cambrics; 950 pieces ell-wide long cloths; 600 pieces chintz furnitures, 12d. a yd. worth 2s.; 800 pieces jaconet cambric, mull, and book muslins; 1000 yds. rich, plain, and figured gros de Naples; 730 shawls and scarfs; 300 pieces best moreens, 18d. a yd.; 95 pairs blankets; 3 bales flannels. Every description of goods for charitable purposes.—All the above lots are selling at Craig and D'Oyly's Family Linen Warehouse, 77, Oxford-street, at one-half their real value.

CHEAP and FASHIONABLE CABINET, CHAIR, COUCH, and SOFA MANUFACTORY.—Fifty different Patterns, and from twenty to thirty dozen of well-seasoned mahogany, rosewood, stained rosewood, cottage, and bed-room chairs, of all colours, ready for inspection. Real rosewood chairs nearly as cheap as stained; sofas, loo tables, and cabinets to match. A large assortment of mahogany patent dining tables of all sizes; sideboards, wardrobes, drawers, and all other articles of furniture, too numerous to mention. All manufactured on the premises, and warranted of the best quality, at ROBERT WALKINGTON'S, 214, High Holborn, opposite Southampton-street, Bloomsbury-square. All Goods sent free of expence within twelve miles of London.

A GENTLEMAN'S HAT.—WM. PRITCHARD respectfully informs the Public that he has succeeded in manufacturing a genteel and economical SUBSTITUTE for the SILK HAT, sufficient to gentlemanly appearance, and so injurious to the health by reason of the perfect resistance it opposes to the escape of the perspiration, thereby very probably laying a foundation for serious injury to the health. Wm. Pritchard presumes that the family experience as manufacturers for more than half a century will preclude the necessity of any assertion to his friends, while it may guarantee his pledge to the public that his articles shall be substantially good, possessing a genteel shortness and closeness of nap, &c. and at the very moderate price of twenty shillings. 239, Regent-street, corner of Princes-street, Hanover square.

EASE and COMFORT in SHAVING.—To those Gentlemen who experience inconvenience in Shaving from a tender face or strong beard, JT. RIGGE most particularly recommends his celebrated MAGNETIC RAZOR TABLET, which, with its late improvement, he engages will produce so keen an edge as to supersede all grinding, honing, &c. and render the operation of shaving as easy and agreeable as it was before unpleasant and painful. Its use is simple, its effect certain; price 7s. 6d. J. T. Rigge's Aromatic Shaving Soap will also be found an invaluable addition. Manufactory, 63 Cheapside and 52, Park-street, Grosvenor-square.

IN SIX EASY LESSONS OF ONE HOUR EACH.—MR. BRADBURY, Private Tutor at Westminster School, solicits the attention of Ladies and Gentlemen to his unrivalled and infallible system of beautiful PENMANSHIP, whereby he pledges himself to teach persons of all ages to write with ease, elegance, and expedition, (whatever may be the deformity of their present writing) in six progressive Lessons. This system, as it equally promotes the attainments of a bold and masculine hand calculated for business, and of a light, graceful manuscript adapted to Ladies; also secures to the Pupil the certainty of writing straight, without lines, with wonderful dispatch and accuracy, and moreover, will steady the hand of the most tremulous writer. Upwards of 2000 specimens, and numerous recommendatory letters may be seen, and reference given to persons of the first distinction, some of whom are upwards of 50 years of age, Private tuition at home. Ladies and Gentlemen attended at their own residences. A new and practical system of Short Hand, taught in a few lessons, so as to enable the writer to decipher what he has written with inconceivable ease.—Apply, (or direct, post paid) at the Academy, 464, Strand, near Charing Cross.

CONSOLATION to the TREMULOUS WRITER.—The Public may look to this most singular and unique Invention with confidence as an inestimable source of comfort to those who experience any difficulties in the command of the pen, occasioned by tremour in nervous affection, heat of climate, agitation of spirits, excess or over-exertion, weakness from age or otherwise, injury of the thumb or fingers by sprain or otherwise, even to the loss of part. This happy relief exists in a little INSTRUMENT the appearance of which, seen in use, escapes observation, is capable of giving firmness, confidence, and freedom, and cannot fail to assist the declining penman, and to materially improve the performance of a bad one. It is honoured by the patronage and recommendation of Sir Astley Cooper, and other highly respectable professional Gentlemen. A few minutes practice will prove its efficacy, and it has this advantage over all medicine, its power increases by use, and one prescription will last for life. Made in elastic gold, price 25s. each.—Sold for the Patentee, by T. Pearce and Co. No. 269, facing the front of St. Clement's church, Strand. Letters from any part of the country, post paid, will be promptly attended to.

WATCHES.—J. ACKLAM respectfully solicits the inspection of those persons in want of a good Watch at a moderate price, to his extensive Stock, now on sale, of new and second-hand Watches of every description, many of them made by the best makers in London. The particular attention he exerts in the selection of the best workmanship enables him to offer the peculiar advantage of 12 months' trial, with the liberty to exchange in that time if not approved of. A large variety of Ladies' Watches, Chains, Seals, en suite, very cheap. Old Watches, Plate, Jewellery, &c. taken in exchange.—223, Strand, corner of Bedford-street.

Merchants, Captains, and the Town and Country Trade supplied in any quantities, on the most liberal terms.

FEETHAM'S SHOWER BATH, by the KING'S PATENT, for adjusting the force or quantity of water as agreeable, and the shower increased or diminished at pleasure by persons using the Bath, rendering it suitable to persons of delicate habits or constitutions, either as a medicinal or pleasure Bath; it is made very portable, or fitted up as an article of furniture in apartments. To be had at W. and M. Feetham's Stove and Bath Manufactory, 9, Long-acre, and 236, Oxford-street. A large assortment of Baths ready for inspection. Warm and Vapour Baths fitted up on a new and improved principle of economy and convenience.

BURGESS'S NEW SAUCE for general purposes, having given such great approbation, and the demand for it continuing to increase JOHN BURGESS and SON beg most respectfully to offer this their best acknowledgments to the Public for their liberal patronage of the same: its utility and great convenience in all climates, has recommended it to the most distinguished foreign connexions, who have applied to this manufactory in consequence. It is presumed them ONLY are for preventing disappointments to families, all possible care has been resorted to, by each bottle being sealed upon the cork with their firm and address, as well as each label having their signature, without which it cannot be genuine.

JOHN BURGESS & SON'S long established and much-esteemed ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES, continues to be prepared by them after the same manner that has given the greatest satisfaction for many years.—No. 107, Strand, corner of the Savoy-steps, London.—The original Fish-Sauce Warehouse.

IN consequence of the great disappointment many persons have experienced from purchasing inferior TRUSSES, SALMON, ODY, and Co. most respectfully solicit the attention of Professional Gentlemen and the Public, to observe, that the true PATENT SELF-ADJUSTING TRUSS has "Salmon, Ody, and Co. No. 222, Strand, London," marked upon the leather case, without which they are of the spurious kind. Salmon, Ody, and Co. the sole Inventors and Patentees, have made 50,000 of their PATENT SELF-ADJUSTING TRUSSES, and still continue to have the recommendation of the Most Eminent Surgeons in Town and Country. They have also the honour to supply the Army and Navy; the Naval and Military Hospitals; the Dockyards and Ordnance; the Marine Infirmary; the Hon. East India Company; the City of London Truss Society; the Mary-le-bone, Wycelisconbe, Bristol, and Denbigh Infirmaries; the Windsor General Dispensary; the Middlesex and St. George's Hospitals; Parochial Establishments, &c. &c.—Sold by one or more Druggists in every principal Market Town in the United Kingdom.

PATRONISED by the ROYAL FAMILY, their Imperial Majesties the Emperor and Empress of Russia, his Imperial Majesty the Emperor of China, by their especial authority, and most of the Nobility throughout Europe, ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, (the original and genuine) which for many years has been universally admired, and is the best and cheapest article for nourishing the hair, preventing its falling off, or turning grey; preserves it to the latest period of life; promotes a luxuriant growth on the baldest places, whiskers, eye-brows, &c.—Rowland's Kalydor, a preparation of matchless firm during exercise, or in damp weather; renders hair that is harsh and dry as soft as silk, glossy, elegant, and beautiful.—Indispositon, Accouchement, &c. during which this Oil should be regularly applied, as it prevents the hair being injured.—Children's Hair.—A due attention to Children's Hair is of the greatest importance. This Oil is invaluable; it eradicates the scurf easy and pleasant, and is superior to all washes for it, in cases of scald head, sores, &c. and it imparts the strongest stamina for a beautiful Head of Hair. Price 3s. 6d. 7s. 10s. 6d. and 11. 1s. per bottle.—Red Whiskers, Grey Whiskers, Eye brows, Hair on the Head, effectually changed to Brown or Black, by the use of ROWLAND'S ESSENCE of TYRE. Price 4s. 7s. 6d. and 10s. 6d. per bottle.—Sold by the sole Proprietors, A. Rowland and Son, No. 20, Hatton-Garden, Holborn, London; and, by appointment, by all Perfumers and Medicine Venders.

☞ Ask for Rowland's Oil, or Rowland's Dye, and particularly observe the signature in the label to each bottle, as impostors sign their trash A. Rowland and son; the genuine is signed "A. Rowland and Son," with the address, No. 20, Hatton-garden.

THE GRAVEL AND STONE, LUMBAGO, &c.

HICKMAN'S PILLS are allowed to be the most successful Preparation for effectually removing and preventing the future recurrence of those Disorders which arise from an imperfect action of the Urinary Organs, as Gravel and Stone, Lumbago, Pain in the Back, Heat and Irritation of the Urine, &c. &c. Composed of the most innocent ingredients, this truly valuable Medicine relieves the suffering patient from the excruciating tortures of those diseases without any violence or injury to the constitution, and requires no confinement or restraint of diet during its use. It is one of the oldest public medicines extant; and its peculiar virtues and efficacy have uniformly maintained the highest reputation.—Sold in boxes, at 2s. 9d.; 4s. 6d.; 11s. by Butters, Chemist, 4, Cheapside, St. Paul's; 220, Regent-street, (near the Argyle Rooms) London; 4, Prince's-place, Edinburgh; Sackville-street, Dublin; and by the principal Medicine Venders throughout the United Kingdom.

FLUID EXTRACT OF SARSAPARILLA.

IN this Preparation are concentrated all the Medicinal Properties of the Sarsaparilla Root, even to a perfect saturation of the Menstruum with which it is prepared. To such persons, therefore, who, from various causes, would experience great inconvenience, or with whom it would be utterly impossible to prepare the Decoction, the Fluid Extract will possess the advantages of portability and keeping for any climate, will be found a most desirable mode of employing this much esteemed Medicine. The Diseases in which it has proved most beneficial are those of the Skin, such as Scorbutic Affections, Eruptive Diseases, Secondary Symptoms, &c. arising from a diseased state of the System at large. It is taken in water, rendering it of the same strength as the Decoction.—Prepared and sold by Butlers', Chemists, No. 4, Cheapside, St. Paul's; 220, Regent-street, (near the Argyll Rooms) London; Waterloo-place, Edinburgh; Sackville-street, Dublin; and by the principal Druggists and Medicine Venders throughout the United Kingdom, in bottles at 4s. 6d. and 7s. 6d.—Ask for "Butlers' Fluid Extract of Sarsaparilla."

BALDNESS or GREY HAIR will now sure not be seen. In short, PRINCE'S celebrated RUSSIA OIL is so improved with an extra valuable ingredient, through which it has made the Russia Oil the greatest nourisher and preserver to the hair in the universe, will make it grow thick and long, and prevent its falling off or ever turning grey, and is such a nourisher to the roots of the hair, that if it even has begun to turn grey, will restore it to its natural colour, and if used often will never turn grey again, is sure to clear the scurf, from infancy to old age, and will always keep the head and hair clean and beautiful. Even Medical Gentlemen have published in the Gazette of Health, that Prince's Russia Oil is superior to any Oil for the Hair, and will do in cases of baldness and weak hair, what can possibly be done in the thickening, strengthening the hair, and curling it, if there is the least vigor of roots. Ladies and Gentlemen will be particular, as imposters have made the covers of the counterfeit Russia Oil like the Genuine, therefore persons should be cautious, and have it of the Proprietor, or of respectable Venders.—Ask for Prince's Improved Russia Oil, with the extra ingredient, and observe his address, "A. Prince, 9, Poland street, Oxford-street, London," is on the cover of each bottle; without it is not genuine, and cannot answer the purpose. The former bottle 5s., or a large bottle, containing five ounces, 11., which is a saving. Sold by the sole Proprietor, A. Prince, No. 9, Poland Oxford street, near the Pantheon, London; and by most principal Perfumers and Medicine Venders.

LATEST NEWS.

Paris papers down to Thursday, and German papers to the 21st inst. arrived yesterday.

The Journal de Paris says, that an attempt was made, on the road from Seville to Cadiz, to carry off the King, but that it did not succeed. The official part of the Moniteur contains a telegraphic despatch, dated Madrid, June 20, from Gen. Guilleminot, which states, that "the vanguard of the 2d corps, after having overthrown the rear-guard of Balesteros, on the 14th, at Algarrest, carried the same day the tete de pont of Alcira, on the Jucar. The enemy lost his artillery and some hundred men; he had several killed and many wounded."—A despatch from Marshal Moncey, dated Gerona, June 19, communicates some further details of the operations against Mina, by Baron d'Eroles and Viscount St. Priest. Mina had taken refuge in the Seo de Urgel, of which place Moncey had ordered the Baron d'Eroles to form an immediate blockade.

The Moniteur contains two Ordinances, the 1st ordering the organization of baggage mules, for the service of the army. The 2d is relative to the suspension of proceedings against Members belonging to what are called the Councils of Administration of the Corps of the Old Army, which suspension was provisionally ordered by a decision of the Minister of War of Oct. 1, 1821.

The Augsburg Gazette, under date Marseilles, May 29, says—"Nothing new transpires relative to the Diplomatic Negociations with Russia. Lord Strangford has disagreed with the Reis Effendi on account of the refusal he has met with to his applications respecting the navigation of the Black Sea, and has broken off all communication with him. The Austrian Internuncio was still in expectation of the answer of the Court of Russia to the letter of the Reis Effendi."

A Dinner, on the establishment of the Metropolitan Literary Institution, took place at the London Coffee-house, Ludgate-hill, on Thursday last, which was attended by many most respectable individuals. We were glad to observe among the company, the Sheriff elect, G. B. WHITAKER, Esq. lending his best efforts in furtherance of the objects of the Institution, and congratulate the citizens of London on his election to the important office of Sheriff, and are satisfied the zeal and ability evinced by that gentleman on this and other subjects that have fallen under his notice, will do credit to their choice. We feel pleasure in calling public attention to the Institution itself, and are satisfied great benefit will result to the London literati through its means.

The Marquis of Bath, we understand, is to have the Blue Ribbon, vacant by the death of the Marquis of Salisbury.

A Telegraphic Despatch has been received from Paris, announcing the safe arrival, at Bordeaux, of the Penelope, French East Indiaman, from Bengal. This ship was reported as captured, and insurances have been effected at Lloyd's coffee-house, amounting to 120,000l.

As Messrs. Tritton's men were lowering some beer into the cellar of the Star and Garter at Putney bridge yesterday, two fine horses, which were fastened to the railing, took fright, broke the traces, ran into the river, and were both drowned.

In the Court of King's Bench, yesterday, a person named Byrne brought an action against Watson, the landlord of a coffee-house in St. James's, to recover 20l. being the amount of a deposit on a wager of 105l. made between Byrne and a person named Freshfield, that the latter would produce a man within a given time who should beat either Spring or Neate in less than half an hour. The wager was not completed, and they agreed to draw the deposit; the defendant was not inclined to give up the case, and the present action was brought to force him to refund. The Chief Justice observed, that he was aware there were authorities for trying such cases as this, and, perhaps, if he proceeded, the law might ultimately be with the plaintiff; but, in his opinion, he ought not to hear such a case. If he had known this was a wager respecting a boxing match, he would have struck it out of the paper. And now, though he ought not to hear such a case, he would discharge the Jury from trying it, and leave the plaintiff to get his money as he could.

At the Old Bailey, yesterday, John Gottie, aged 39, was indicted for setting fire to his house, in Whitecross-street, on the 27th Sept. 1811. The principal evidence was Anne Gibbs, who lodged in the house at the time. She stated that when she went to lodge there he had no furniture, except an old deal table, two chairs, and some fire-irons, that on the day of the fire she returned unexpectedly, and went into the parlour; she found the hearth-stone removed from its place—a sack of shavings were by the side of it—the prisoner was on his knees at work on the floor, a tin can stood by him—it had the appearance of an oil can, there was a candle alight on the hob—he had a whisp, which he was thrusting between the rafters where the hearth-stone had been—witness went into the bake-house on the Monday morning, but saw nothing like flour—saw a great quantity of shavings and wood—witness told him he was made up with lies, as he had said he had a large stock of flour that night—witness had company to supper, when she lighted them out, she observed his trunk on the counter, opened, and containing some copper coin. Witness then retired to rest with her husband, but was shortly awoke by the dog. Mr. G. opened the door when the flames rushed in, and he exclaimed, "We are lost." The window was secured by three bars, one of which he broke, and put her out, and she was assisted in getting out at the back of the building; early next night, she never saw him for 6 or 7 years, when she met him by accident, at the end of Drury-lane, when she accused him with setting the house on fire, which he resented with coarse language, elbowed her and made off. After this she never saw him again till the 14th of May last, near the house burnt the day before in New-street, Coventgarden. Witness accosted the prisoner, and said, "What, burnt out again." He made no reply, but with great agitation asked the landlady of the public-house for his box. He afterwards turned round and said, "I know you. I have lost every thing now." Witness collared him and said, "You wretch, you escaped me once, but you shall not now." Prisoner said, "You b—h, what do you hold me for." Davis, an officer, came in at length, and witness gave him in charge. Evidence was produced to prove that the prisoner insured with the Eagle Fire Office for 700l.—Other evidence was called confirmatory of the preceding; and at 7 o'clock the prisoner entered on his defence: he denied the charge—said he had applied to two attornies, but they would not interfere without being paid, in recovering the insurance, and he relied on his name being over the door in New-street.—Witnesses were called to his character, and some of them swore they would not believe Mrs. Gibbs on her oath. The Judge summed up; and the Jury returned a verdict of Not Guilty. at twenty minutes before eleven o'clock.

The New Monthly Magazine for July contains Sketches of the Irish Bar, No. 6, Mr. O'Connel—Remarks on Quentin Durward, and on the composition of the other works of the same author—British Galleries of Art, No. 6—Select Society, with observations on the modern art of match-making—The Parisian Carnival—Beggars Extraordinary—Prospectus of a new Work in a letter to the Editor; and about twenty other original articles, besides the usual varieties in Art, Science, Criticism, Politics, and Commerce.—Printed for Henry Colburn and Co. Conduit street.

SURREY.—CHARLWOOD PARK ESTATE, with the Manor, Heriots, Quit Rents, &c. to be SOLD by PRIVATE CONTRACT, consisting of an Elegant Sporting Residence, with Manor nearly 50 miles in circumference, well stocked with Game, and 474 Acres of Freehold Land, and a Right of Pasture over 930 Acres of Uninclosed Land; with suitable Farm Houses, &c. lying along the Turnpike Road, midway between London and Brighton, and only six miles from Reigate. The Villa is placed on an elevated situation, surrounded by Shrubberies, and Plantations, in a Park of 100 acres, commanding extensive Views, diversified with all the beauties of nature and art. There is a good kitchen garden, farm house, stables, coach-house, and kennel proper for a pack of hounds, at a convenient distance from the residence, all of which except the farm-house have been built within twenty years. Poor rates under 2s. 6d. in the pound, all other rates low. The neighbourhood being noted in the Sporting World renders the situation peculiarly suited to the lovers of field sports.—To be viewed by cards only, which, with descriptive particulars, may be had on the first of July of Mr. Vaux, Land Agent and Surveyor, 58 Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, who is authorized to treat for the same: a plan of the estate may be seen at his office. Particulars may also be had at the Libraries Brighton, Plough, Cheltenham, White Hart, Bath, and Mitre, Oxford. Letters to be post paid.

JENNINGS'S FAMILY CYCLOPÆDIA.

Now publishing in Monthly Parts, price 2s. 6d. each, (to be completed in 13 Parts, forming two large Volumes in 8vo.) an original and interesting Work, entitled

THE FAMILY CYCLOPÆDIA; being a Manual of useful and necessary Knowledge in Domestic Economy, Agriculture, Chemistry, and the Arts; including the most approved Modes of Treatment of Diseases, Accidents, and Casualties. By JAMES JENNINGS, M.D. This original and valuable Work is printed in double columns, on good paper, and contains upwards of Fifteen Hundred Pages of Information, immediately connected with the pursuits of Domestic Life. By means of close printing and a large page, it comprehends as much matter as is usually found in six volumes of an ordinary size; and cannot, it is presumed, fail of being considered a most valuable addition to the FAMILY LIBRARY.

The Family Cyclopædia, contains a large mass of Information, on subjects connected with the Domestic Economy of Life. In matters of Science and the Arts, the Author has made his selections from sources of the best authority. The original materials supplied by himself are creditable to his observation, good sense, and benevolence. Almost every topic of general interest will be found in this comprehensive and judicious Compilation, treated in a clear and familiar manner. As a book of daily reference in the common concerns of Life, it will be found to afford important assistance, and its great practical utility will, no doubt, ensure it a ready introduction, and a favourable reception, in every intelligent family. In addition to the great heads of Domestic Economy, Agriculture, and Chemistry, this Work points out the best Modes of curing Diseases, and obviating the effects of sudden Accidents; it presents also an outline of the Mind and Passions, with a view to the Improvement of Morals and Education."—Monthly Magazine.

PHYSICIAN—John Mason Good, M.D. F.R.S. Guildford street.
SURGEON—Benjamin Travers, Esq. F.R.S. No. 3, New Broad street.

ADVANTAGES EXCLUSIVELY BELONGING TO THIS INSTITUTION.

A TEMPORARY PRECAUTIONARY CAPITAL of 200,000l. which is to be paid off as soon as an adequate surplus capital shall have been accumulated from the premiums; it being a distinguishing feature of this Association, that the shareholders are not permitted to remain a permanent charge on the Society.

A present, three-fourths of the savings and profits, divided among the insured for the entire period of life, by additions to their policies, and interests on the additions deducted from their premiums.

A PERMANENT SURPLUS CAPITAL of 200,000l. for the security of the insured, accumulated from the profits on policies for limited terms.

The subscribed precautionary capital, the permanent surplus capital, and the premiums and property, invested in the names of the trustees, who sign every policy, in order to give the insured AN IMMEDIATE REMEDY AGAINST THE FUND ITSELF.

When the permanent capital shall be increased to 200,000l. and the shareholders are paid off, the ENTIRE PROFITS DIVIDED AMONGST THE INSURED.

To prevent loss to the insured from inability to continue the payment of the premiums, the Society CONTRACT to purchase policies at their true value, a scale of which will be indorsed on every policy at the time it is granted; and the Society also ENGAGE to advance money on the security of the policy to the extent of two-thirds of its value, to enable the insured to continue their premiums without inconvenience.

In cases of bankruptcy, the Society are not bound to purchase the policy. In the event of its being given up to the bankrupt by the assignees, the Directors have power to apply in favour of future premiums the accumulations of fines and profits which would otherwise be payable in addition to the sum insured.

Directors not at liberty to litigate or dispute any claim, but all differences submitted to general meetings of the Insured.

In addition to the foregoing advantages, which distinguish this Institution from all others, the insured may, by one payment, or by continuing annual sums for a limited term only, secure a sum to be paid at his death; and thus a man who calculates on an certain income for a few years may, by contributions during that period, prevent the necessity of future payments, and make the prospects of the day available for providing against the reverses of the morrow.

An entirely new table of premiums has been calculated expressly for the use of this Institution, in which the rates of insurance for young and middle-aged lives will be found to be considerably lower than in any office in England. The Society being established on such principles as to present the most economical mode of assurance to the public, combined with perfect safety.

Persons wishing to effect Insurances may transmit their proposals and references, by letter, to the Resident Director, who will afford all proper information, and take measures to prevent the necessity of personal attendance before the Board in cases in which the references shall be satisfactorily answered.

Pinnock, 267, Strand; Simpkin and Marshall, Stationers'-court; Blackwood, Edinburgh; Milliken, Dublin; and sold by all Book and Music Sellers.

PRIVATE PUPIL. A Married Gentleman, of the Established Church, resident a convenient distance from London, and receiving a few Pupils into his House, has now a VACANCY, the most satisfactory references can be given to Noblemen and Gentlemen, whose sons have been under his care. Letters to be addressed to the Rev. E. S. I., Mr. Egerton's, Bookseller, Whitehall, London.

PRIVATE TUITION.—A Married and Beneficed CLERGYMAN, taking Eight or Ten Pupils, who are treated in every respect as the family, and prepared either for the Public Schools or the Universities, has TWO or THREE VACANCIES. The situation is generally admired, being in a most delightful and healthy part of Kent, five miles from Maidstone and 31 from London, with which places there is a daily communication by coaches. Terms, 60 guineas per annum.—Applications, post paid, and addressed to the Rev. R. Earles, Wateringbury Tonbridge, Kent, will be duly attended to. References may be made to the Rev. Dr. Foster Pigott, Merewoith; the Rev. Dr. Willis, Wateringbury; the Hon. C. Murray, Steeplelon, near Bedford, Dorset; Mr. Hudson, 192, Oxford-street; and to G. E. Graham, Esq. 6, Berners street, Oxford-street.

A LADY, who, with the assistance of an accomplished resident Governess, is EDUCATING the Daughter of a Gentleman with her own, wishes to receive a few more PUPILS. Terms moderate. Parents, which the advertiser flatters herself will satisfy the most scrupulous inquirer, may be obtained by applying (if by letter post paid) to the Rev. John Greenwood, Christ's Hospital.

TUTOR.—A GRADUATE, who has obtained the highest honours at Cambridge, and has had experience as a Tutor, has leisure for the Instruction of One or Two PUPILS in Town. The most satisfactory references will be given.—Address L.M.N. care of Mr. J. Mawman, 39, Ludgate street.

EDUCATION.—A YOUNG GENTLEMAN, of a Foreign Family and respectable connexions, is desirous of obtaining a Situation in a respectable School as ASSISTANT, pending leisure of perfecting his knowledge of the English Language. He is qualified to teach German, the rudiments of French, Writing, Arithmetic, &c. &c.—For references apply to Messrs. Rivington, booksellers, 3, Waterloo-place, Pall-Mall; or to Messrs Wessel and Stodart, Importers of Foreign Music, No. 1, Soho-square, near the Bazaar.

EDUCATION.—All the Books adapted to the practice of the Interrogative System of Education, and their various auxiliaries for reading, and for Elementary instruction, may be had with the fullest allowance on numbers, of every bookseller in Town and Country, by whom catalogues and most of the books are kept for inspection and examination. This series of books which has been twenty-five years in progress, is now completed, by its satisfactory extension to every branch of liberal and desirable education.
Bridge-street, July 4.

EDUCATION.—Gentlemen are respectfully informed, that the Advertiser, who is a Member of the University of Cambridge, and has long been engaged in Educating a select number of Young Gentlemen, for every respectable Department of Society, has VACANCIES for Three Pupils. The advertiser feels satisfied that no pupils of ordinary talents and moral principles will fill these vacancies but with comfort to themselves and great satisfaction to their friends. This establishment, is, throughout, conducted on principles generally allowed to be far superior to others for improvement in every branch of education, and to be excelled by none except the Universities. Particulars to be known, only, by addressing D. D. post paid, at Andrews's Library, 167, New Bond-street.

CHAMPAGNES.—CHARLES WRIGHT, Wine Merchant to His R. H. the Duke of Clarence, next to the King's and opposite the Haymarket Theatre, Opera Colonnade, London, is now landing CHAMPAGNES ROUGE ET BLANC, of the quality, brilliant condition, (G. Pris Soleau Avize, growers.) 41.4s. per doz.; CLARET, ST. JULIEN ET LA ROSE 63s.
OLD PORT, 36s.; SHERRY, superior, 36s.; and CAPE MADEIRA, 16s. per dozen. A 3-dozen hamper, containing one dozen of each of these wines, bottles, &c. for 5l. and so in proportion. MADEIRA, VIDONIA, TENERIFFE, CALCAVELLA, 40s. per dozen; OLD COGNAC BRANDY, 23s. 6d. per gallon, and fine OLD RUM 16s. 6d. CORONATION.—HENRY ASTON BARKER'S PANORAMA, Leicester-square.—Now Open, a Grand Representation of the CORONATION PROCESSION, with Portraits of His MAJESTY, GEORGE the FOURTH, the ROYAL DUKES, and several others; particularly of the late Marquis of LONDONDERRY, in the full Habit of the Order of the Garter. The Panorama exhibits at least Thirty Thousand Figures!!!—A VIEW of LAUSANNE, with the LAKE of GENEVA, is also open.—Admittance to each Painting, 1s.

MISS LINWOOD'S GALLERIES of PICTURES, in Leicester-square, are now OPEN, and will continue open every day, (Sundays excepted) from nine in the morning until dusk. Admittance, 2s. Children, 1s.

THE COSMORAMA is RE-OPENED at No. 209, REGENT-STREET (3 doors north of Conduit-street), where the heat and obscurity complained of at St. James's-street, are obviated by the admission of day-light, which considerably improves the illusion, and renders the Galleries pleasantly cool and lightsome. A change having taken place in the Gallery of Europe and America, it now contains Views of the Mer de Glace, and five others. The Gallery of Asia and Africa remains unchanged, on account of the very great interest which the Views in it excite, particularly those of the magnificent Ruins of Palmyra (Tadmor in the Desert) and the Forest of Lebanon.—Admittance to each Gallery, 1s.

CHAPEAU DE PAILLE.—Just published, by Hurst, Robinson and Co. Printsellers to his Majesty, 90, Cheapside, and S. Pall Mall, a finely executed engraving by Mr. R. Cooper, of the celebrated Antwerp Beauty, from Sir P. P. Rubens. Prints 10s. 6d. each, proofs 21s.

THE SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS have RE-OPENED their Gallery, 6, Pall-Mall East, with an Exhibition of Paintings in Water Colours of the BRITISH SCHOOL. The Drawings are principally selected from the collections of distinguished Patrons of Art, whose liberality has enabled the Society to place this Exhibition before the Public.
Admittance, 1s. Catalogue 6d. COPLEY FIELDING, SEC.

BOARD and LODGING.—A single gentleman wishes to be with a genteel private family, where there are no children in the neighbourhood of Queen-square. The most respectable references will be required, and applications from common boarding houses will not be attended to.—Particulars and terms to be sent, post paid, to A. B. to the care of Mr. Simmons, 31, Gloucester-street, Queen square.

A GENTLEMAN wishes to borrow, on his own personal security only, from Three to Seven Hundred Pounds, either for a short time certain, or by way of annuity. Any person having money to Lend, is requested to direct, post paid, to J. Y. P. Two-penny Post Office, Maddox-street, Bond street.

ROYAL KENTISH HOTEL, TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—JANE STRANGE respectfully returns thanks to the Nobility and Gentry, visitants of Tunbridge Wells, and to her friends in general, for the distinguished favours conferred upon her late husband; and begs to state that she continues the business of the Hotel, Posting, &c. as heretofore, trusting that by attention and good management she shall be found deserving of their support and patronage.

TO be LET or SOLD, together or separate, the LEASE of TWO HOUSES, eligibly situated on the south side of the Strand, and well calculated for a Printing Office or Booksellers Shops. The premises may be viewed and particulars had of Mr. Edge, solicitor, 34, Essex street.

NEAR HAMPTON COURT, RICHMOND HILL, and on the nearest Road to WINDSOR, &c. &c.—To LET new and completely Furnished, one of the most healthy situations in England, a complete FAMILY HOUSE, but not too large, with Garden, Coach-house and Stabling for four horses, not more than 10 miles from London.—Cards to be had only at Nias and Co. Agents, 32, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

OXFORDSHIRE—PUDLICOTE-HOUSE—To LET, completely Furnished, in a fine sporting part of the County, situated five miles from Chipping Norton, seven from Burford, and contiguous to Whichwood Forest; consisting of a newly erected stone Mansion, with Offices of every description; Lawn, Shrubbery, and walled Kitchen Garden, and with or without Land. The right of sporting over the Manors.—Particulars may be seen at Mr. Moore's Library, Store-street.

UPPER GOWER-STREET.—To be SOLD, the LEASE of an elegant moderate sized RESIDENCE, recently completed in unusually good taste, and adapted in every respect to the convenient occupation of a Dachelor or Small Family. The Furniture is exceedingly appropriate, having been fitted up by Graham, of Waterloo-place, in his accustomed style. May be viewed only with Cards, to be had of Messrs. Robins, Covent-garden.

MARDEN PARK HOUSE, Surrey, with the Grass Park, and small adjoining Farm, containing altogether 259 Acres, situate about seventeen miles from Westminster Bridge, near the old road from London to Brighton, to be LET from Midsummer next, for a TERM of SEVEN YEARS. The house is furnished, and fit for the reception of any Nobleman's or Gentleman's establishment.—Inquire of Mr. Johnston, upholsterer, New Bond-street.

CHARLES FOSTER, Wine Merchant, 12s, High Holborn, (4 doors from the corner of Southampton-street) most respectfully solicits the attention of the Nobility, Gentry, and Public in general to his genuine Wines, and flatters himself that a trial is only required to ensure satisfaction. Families visiting watering places will find a great saving in taking their wine from London, as C. F. delivers orders of six dozen and upwards free of carriage to any part of England. A single bottle may be had as sample, one dozen sent free of expense within five miles of the metropolis, and if not approved the money returned. Letters addressed as above punctually attended to.

MONEY on EQUITABLE TERMS.—The Advertiser advances Money to any extent, at moderate interest, whether on Freehold, Copyhold, Leasehold, Landed, Funded, Church Living, or other ample Security; and assures those who may honour him with their confidence, that they will experience treatment the most candid, liberal, and explicit, though similar business is sometimes viewed with mistrust, from the mal-practices of disreputable people.—Letters, post-paid, to A. Z. care of Mr. Williams, glover, Inner Temple-lane, Fleet-street, will receive immediate attention; where also a card of address may be had.—Reversions are purchased.

CIDER, PERRY, ALE, &c.—THOMAS FIELD and SON beg to acquaint their Friends and the Public, that their genuine Cider and Perry, Burton, Edinburgh, Taunton, and Welsh Ales, Dorchester Beer, Brown Stout, &c. are in fine order for use. They have also a very superior Stock of Foreign Wines, Cape Madeira, Brandy, (white and coloured) Rum, Hollands, Geneva, and Orange Shrub; and they have been enabled to make a considerable reduction in their prices generally.—22, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—MR. W. BEACALL, SURGEON-DENTIST, 13, Newman street, Oxford-street, having with unremitting diligence, long made the Science of artificial Teeth, where mechanical contrivance is requisite, his peculiar study, continues to supply the Loss of Teeth, with Natural or Artificial, in a superior manner, without the least pain, from a single Tooth to a complete Set, at little more than one-half the usual charges. Teeth cleaned if ever so discoloured, and rendered white and beautiful, without pain or injury to the enamel. Extracting, Stopping, and every Operation on the Teeth and Gums.—Attends at home from 10 till 4.

HAVRE STEAM PACKET.—The large and commodious Steam-Packet TRITON leaves Southampton for Havre every Thursday, receiving Passengers as she passes Portsmouth; and leaves Havre for Southampton every Monday, landing passengers also at Portsmouth. The TRITON is elegantly fitted up, and has spacious Cabins and Sitting-rooms, provided with Beds, and every accommodation for Ladies, Families, or private parties. Passage 2 guineas: Deck-Passengers, 1 guinea: 4 wheel carriages, 4 guineas: 2 ditto, 2 guineas.

GLOUCESTER HOUSE, 65, Oxford-street.—The Public are respectfully informed that the valuable STOCK of LINEN DRAPERY, at the above warehouse, is now SELLING OFF, considerably under prime cost. As it frequently occurs, that Sales advertised "under prime cost" are merely nominal, the Public might be inclined to consider this of the same description; but a cursory inspection will convince them that they have an opportunity of purchasing goods much lower than at any other house.—N. B. The Lease to be Sold.—For particulars enquire on the Premises.

AN ITINERARY of PROVENCE and the RHONE, made during the Year 1819. By JOHN HUGHES, A.M. of Oriel College, Oxford.
"——I informed my friend that I had just received from England a Journal of a tour made in the south of France by a young Oxonian friend of mine, a pupe, a draughtsman, and a scholar, in which he gives such an animated and interesting description of the Chateau Gregnan, the dwelling of Madame de Sevigné's beloved daughter, and frequently the place of her own residence, that no one who ever read the book would be within forty miles of the same without going a pilgrimage to the spot. The Marquis smiled, seemed very much pleased, and asked the title at length of the work in question, and writing down to my dictation an itinerary of Provence and the Rhone, by John Hughes," &c. &c.—Quentin Durward.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY.

The Earl of Shaftesbury presented a Petition from the Parish of St. Olave, Southwark, against the Bill for re-building London Bridge. Referred to the Committee on the Bill.

A Message from the House of Commons brought up the Fiats de se, the Assessed Taxes Composition, the Southwark Court of Requests, and several private Bills, which were read a first time.

The House went into a Committee on the Marriage Abroad Bill.

Lord Holland could have wished that there had been a general Bill introduced to legalize all the marriages solemnized in our ambassadors' chapels abroad.

The Marquis of Lansdowne expressed a wish to have a declaratory law passed with the Bill, enumerating all the British marriages abroad.

Lord Colchester was anxious that all these marriages should be legally set at rest.

The Earl of Liverpool had no doubt but that English marriages according to the usage of the country in which the parties resided were valid.—The Bill went through the Committee, and was reported.

The Earl of Liverpool moved the consideration of the King's Message respecting Lord St. Vincent. It was not, he said, intended to extend the pension grant of 1806, which gave to the collateral branches of Earl St. Vincent the 2000l. a year granted to him by the Parliament of England; and of 1000l. which was granted to him by the Parliament of Ireland.—It was then agreed to.

The Earl of Liverpool moved the second reading of the Appellant Jurisdiction Bill, which was agreed to. He then moved the resolutions, that the House should sit five days in every week, to hear appeals.

Earl Grosvenor thought the compulsory mode of procuring the attendance of Peers was a harsh and severe measure, unless some paramount necessity existed, they ought to inquire whether some other method of getting rid of the arrears of appeals, might not be found of a less objectionable nature than the present.

Earl Manvers thought the compulsory resolution extremely harsh.

Lord Erskine praised the conduct of Noble Lords who attended the administration of justice in that house—than which there was not a purer in the country. For himself he was above 70 years old, and he would leave them to manage this matter themselves.

The Lord Chancellor hoped the Noble Lord, though above 70, would give them his attendance on appeals; and he hoped when another Chancellor was made, the Minister would make it a condition of his pension that he should on his retirement attend to appeals in the House. As to the necessity for this Bill, the Noble and Learned Lord said, if the Chancellor should remain but three days in the week in the Court of Chancery, it was impossible for the business of it to be done; so that the remedy was intended for the relief of the business both in that House and in the Court of Chancery. He was fully convinced also this was necessary, or no future Chancellor would be able to get through the business of both.

The Earl of Aberdeen said, the law of Scotland was not the ignorant law of a rude and barbarous people. It was the law of the most civilized nation of antiquity, and the foundation of the law of all modern civilized States. He therefore protested against any great change in the practice of the law in Scotland.

Lord Melville held it to be the right of the people of Scotland, according to the articles of Union, to come to that Bar in appeal from the Courts below.

Lord Holland opposed the proposition, as another branch of the measure against which he would feel it his duty directly and firmly to protest, for it went to impugn the conduct of Peers, which he knew they did not deserve. He denied that there had been any refusal of justice in that House to the people of Scotland; but it was not right to deal to them a less quantity of justice.

The Earl of Liverpool said, that as there were several Noble Lords who wished to deliver their sentiments on the measure, he should propose that as the debate could not be concluded that night, they should adjourn it till to-morrow.—Agreed to nem. dis.

TUESDAY.

Petitions were presented from various Brewers against the New Beer Bill, which prohibits the present brewers of table beer and ale from brewing the new beer, unless they shall erect or engage separate premises for that purpose, or else forego their established trades.

Lord Holland was not unwilling to agree to the Noble Earl's proposal in such a case, but it would be only in the fair understanding that if himself or his Noble Friends were unable to attend in their places on Friday next, then no discussion should take place till another stage of the Bill.

Lord Viscount Melville moved the House to go into Committee on the Scottish Judicial Commission Bill. The Noble Lord denied that the experiment of the Trial by Jury in Scotland had proved a complete failure; for, on the contrary, when it was considered the shortness of time yet allowed for that experiment to be made, it was wonderful that so much had been done.

The Earl of Lauderdale agreed in the opinion of the Noble Viscount.—The Bill went through the Committee.

The debate on the resolutions which had been proposed by the Lords' Select Committees in furtherance of the Standing Orders of the House, as connected with the hearing of Appeals, Writs of Error, &c. &c. was resumed.

Lord Colchester, in reference to the question of hearing appeals, suggested to their Lordships the possibility of the Lord Chancellor's calling in assistance to himself in his Court, rather than in the higher Court of Parliament; as, for example, the Master of the Rolls, or some one among the Learned Judges; or, at all events, there might be a Standing Commission for two Masters in Chancery. If some such course were proposed, and he had taken this opportunity to suggest it, the Noble and Learned Lord on the Woolsack would be enabled to attend on appeals for another day during the week.

Lord Redesdale said, with respect to the proposition of his Noble Friend, (Lord Colchester) that the Chancellor should sit five days in that House, it was utterly impracticable.

The Lord Chancellor said that as to sitting five days to hear appeals, he never knew the man who would attempt such a task. Their peals, he never knew the man who would attempt such a task. Their Lordships were not aware of the greatness of the labour.

Lord Ellenborough opposed the measure.

The Earl of Liverpool said, the course that remained was to appoint a Deputy Speaker. This was quite consistent with the Constitution. It mattered not whether he was a Peer or a Commoner. The Lord Chief Baron and the Chief Justice of the King's Bench were Deputy Speakers of that House. The present Chief Justice presided some years back in that capacity, when most important causes were tried.

The first Resolution, altered according to the suggestion of Lord Liverpool, was then agreed to, as was also the second.

Their Lordships then divided on the third Resolution. Contents, 27—Non-contents, 11—Majority, 16.

WEDNESDAY.

The London Dock Company Bill was read a first time.

The Scotch Turnpike Road, the Convicts Labour, and the Capital Punishments Repeal Bills were passed.

The Bill for rebuilding London Bridge was passed, after a clause had been inserted, giving the Corporation of the City of London a power to approve, along with the Lords of the Treasury, of any alteration of the plan of the new Bridge.

On receiving the Report of the Scotch Commissioners of Inquiry into the Courts of Law Bill,

Earl Grosvenor proposed a clause for enquiring into the duties of the office of Lord Justice General of Scotland, with a view to the regulation or abolition of the office, but it was negatived.

THURSDAY.

The Lottery, the Passage Vessels, and the Irish Unlawful Oaths Bills were passed.

The Earl of Shaftesbury presented a petition from the East India Company praying that the Duties on East and West India sugars may be equalized.

The Earl of Liverpool moved the remaining Resolutions on the subject of the Appellate Jurisdiction of the House. To these he had some amendments to propose to the Resolutions on Monday.

Lord Darlington thought that four Peers, instead of three, would be requisite to attend, though it would interfere with his habits.

Lord Liverpool said, that had been suggested; but it had also been hinted, that if there were one supernumerary, each Peer would think himself that one, and there would consequently be no attendance at all.

After some further conversation the farther discussion of the resolutions was postponed till Monday.—Adjourned.

FRIDAY.

The Royal Assent was given by Commission to the Capital Punishments Repeal, the Convicts Labour, the Assessed Taxes Composition, the General Turnpike, the London Bridge, the Sentence of Death, and the Southwark Court of Requests Bills.

The Scotch Roads, and the Marriages Abroad Bills were passed.

On reading the latter bill,

The Duke of Wellington wished to legalize the Marriages of Officers and Soldiers, solemnized by the Regimental Chaplain, or one acting for him, by the authority of the Commanding Officers.

The Earl of Lauderdale said, Marriages contracted within the lines of the British army were always held to be valid, as were those contracted in foreign countries, agreeably to the lex loci.

The Irish Tithe Composition, and the Roman Catholic Elective Franchise, the Barilla Duty, the Land Tax Commissioners Names, and several private Bills, were read a first time.

Petitions were presented from the Wool Growers in Northumberland against the duties on Foreign Wool. (The Earl of Liverpool said, our woollen manufactures had increased in the export, as had the importation of raw wool. This duty produced now 400,000l. a year, instead of 200,000l. as formerly. But if the growers and manufacturers could agree on the subject, he would be willing to give up the duty altogether). From a number of Protestant Dissenting Ministers against prosecutions for religious opinions.

On the third reading of the Beer Bill,

Lord Ellenborough objected to the clause which prevented ale and table-beer brewers from brewing this new beer on the premises used by them for their other business, and moved to omit it altogether.

Lord Bexley said this Bill had been brought in to give the public a more palatable and wholesome beverage than table beer, which it would a little exceed in strength as well as quality. It was, besides, a branch of experiments about to be tried by the Treasury, to have beer of various strengths and qualities brewed, by having the duty proportioned to the strength and quality of the beer.

Lord Dacre said, a brewer, as the law now stood, might brew beer of different strength on the same premises, and he thought it hard to deprive them of this privilege under this Bill. The brewers were willing to expose themselves to any punishment by the Revenue Laws if this privilege were given to them.

The Earl of Liverpool said, the argument was, that without separate premises the public would never have an article made better than at present. This was, in fact, a question between the great brewing capitalists and the public. If the experiment were fairly tried, they would have persons start in the new brewing who would try the experiment fairly, and let the public have a good article.—The amendment was negatived, and the Bill was passed.

The Marquis of Lansdowne said, he should move the second reading of the English Catholic Bill on Wednesday next.

The Lord Chancellor said, that he should object to this Bill, as at this period of the Session it was impossible to discuss it properly.

The Earl of Liverpool said, he should move the second reading of the Irish Tythe Composition Bill on Tuesday.—Adj. till Monday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY.

Petitions were presented from St. Pancras, complaining of White Slavery, under the present Borough system, and praying for a Radical Reform; from the inhabitants of Hemel Hempstead, against the importation of foreign plaiting for straw hats; from the Ship Owners of Scarborough, against the Reciprocity of Duties Bill; from the Bleachers of Barnsley, in Yorkshire, against the imposition of any additional Duty on Foreign Yarn; from a plasterer named Baker, complaining that the Ordnance would not employ him; from a person named Townsend, complaining of the Bankrupt Laws; from a person named Mitford, complaining of Private Madhouses; from St. Ann's, Westminster, praying for a Repeal of the Assessed Taxes; from 1200 Weavers of Norfolk, in favour of the Combination Act; from the Ribbon Weavers of Coventry.

Mr. Curteis gave notice that he should, next Session, move to repeal the Bill for imposing marks on bags of hops of a certain growth.

Mr. S. Wortley proposed the Order of the day for the second reading of the Sale of Game Bill. It had been his intention of pressing this Bill to a Committee, but found there would not be time during the present Session.

Mr. Tennison and Col. Davies opposed the principle of the Bill.

Lord Deerhurst and Sir J. Shelley also opposed the Bill, which was then ordered to be read a second time this day three months.—

On presenting the Petition respecting Private Mad-houses,

Mr. Hobhouse suggested the propriety of putting an end at once to these receptacles. He (Mr. H.) had seen several individuals who had been in those receptacles, and they had stated to him various acts of cruelty and oppression to which they had been subjected.

Mr. Secretary Peel was convinced these reported abuses were gross exaggerations, and that to do away private mad-houses would be to open a door to abuses. Many statements had been sent to him, containing complaints of the manner in which people were treated in private madhouses. He had, in consequence, thought it his duty to make inquiries into this subject; and the result of that inquiry had satisfied him that those complaints were in general without foundation.

Mr. Henry Grey Bennet confirmed the statement of the Right Hon. Secretary. He had himself often had erroneous statements forwarded to him on the subject.

Mr. Wynn was convinced that there were greater abuses in hospitals than in these madhouses; and that to do them away would be a public disadvantage.

Mr. Kennedy moved the Order of the Day for the third reading of the Scotch Jury Bill.

Lord Binning opposed the Bill, and defended the present mode of choosing Juries in Scotland.—Mr. Abercrombie defended the Bill.

Mr. Secretary Peel thought it was not a wise measure; that more consideration was necessary, and therefore he would suggest to the Hon. Gent. the propriety of postponing the further proceedings on this Bill till next Session.

The House divided. For the third reading, 60—Against it, 56. Majority 4. The Bill was then passed.

The Lord Advocate addressed the House upon the Scotch Commissaries Bill. The Learned Lord stated that those Courts to be 23, and entered into some details relative alterations recommended by the Commissioners of Inquiry question that the Bill be read a third time.

Lord A. Hamilton argued at some length against the the Bill, and stated, that 550l. had been given for the Office curator Fiscal, in one of these Courts, though the Office questioned its utility, and had objected strongly to the grant ing offices belonging to the Courts of Justice. The vote give would be, that the Bill be not read a third time, as a proper Bill to pass.

Mr. K. Douglas stated, that the revenue was defrauded extent from the inefficiency and extent of the Commissaries.

Mr. Kennedy objected to several clauses of the Bill, clauses transferred the duties of the Commissaries to the who were enabled to depute their power to their substitutes were to do the duty, and without granting them any addition neration, and he could not allow this opportunity to pass serving that these Gentlemen, meaning the Sheriffs Scotland, were a very respectable and useful body of men paid, and he hoped that independent of any additional situation would soon be considered in the proper quarter provision would be made for them, which should be more their station, and the various and important duties they

The Lord Advocate concurred in what had been said Member (Mr. Kennedy) with respect to the respectable Sheriffs' substitutes, and the important duties which they charge, and was as anxious as the Hon. and Learned Gentle be that a suitable addition should be made to their income. Hon. and Learned Gentleman must be aware that it rested Treasury to give that compensation he was so anxious to

The Sheriffs Courts Bill, after a few words from the L and Lord A. Hamilton, was ordered to be read a third three months.—The Distilleries Bill was re-committed

Mr. Wallace said, all the clauses, except that respec were drawn up with the consent of the Distillers.

Mr. Hume said, that as the Bill now stood, Scotch spirits smuggled into England. All the spirits he received were smuggled. He smuggled all his silk handkerchiefs one,) a man that made up his mind to smuggling w mind by degrees to do any thing—A general laugh.—Ay did not apply to him.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer was sorry for the p in which the Hon. Member stood. Having announced a smuggler. In exhibiting his handkerchief as he had p liable to have it seized by any Hon. Member near him, a With respect to the clause proposed, he thought it neces in the present stage to touch the matter partially. After conversation, the clauses were agreed to.

The Elective Franchise Bill was recommitted.

Mr. Bankes objected to giving any more political power professing the Catholic religion. He contended, that where of this act they could not avoid giving the Catholics seat ment, as well as to open all offices to them. He gave the decided negative.

Mr. H. Gurney had no apprehension of any additional this Bill would throw into the hands of the Catholics. some Catholic Peers who already possessed influence enough turn Members, without the aid of Catholic voters.

Mr. Yates Peel supported this Bill, but declared he one step further.

Mr. John Smith also supported the Bill. A more respect than the English Catholics never existed.

Mr. Secretary Peel thought the concession now asked for lish Catholics might safely be admitted. The present question itself into two parts. The first, whether the concession could with safety to the religion by law established; and next, w could be given with safety to the State.

Gen. Gascoyne was sorry to find the anti-Catholic cause so able an advocate; for no one could fail to see, that by the Right Hon. Gent. was now adopting, he was pledging future and much larger concessions.

Dr. Lushington supported the Bill. He considered all on the ground of religious opinions as unjust and impolitic, calculated to increase the number of sectaries, rather than strengthen the established religion.

Lord Binning said, if the Catholics of Scotland had been incl it would have been fatal to the Bill.

Mr. Gooch considered restrictions on the Catholics necessary.

Mr. Bankes, of Cambridge, opposed the Bill. The conces now proposed to be made must lead to others.

Mr. W. Smith supported the Bill.

Mr. Wetherell objected to this Bill, as going to affect the fundamental article of the Union between this country and Scotland; if adopted, must lead to further concessions.

Mr. Butterworth also opposed the Bill; if the elective was granted to the Catholics of England, it would, as to the case Irish Catholics, be made a ground for asking for further conces The same intolerant spirit prevailed among that sect. Colonel Trench defended the Bill.

Mr. Denman said, that the Bill had been only opposed chief, and had increased the evils it was professed to remedy.

The Bill was then passed.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer moved that the 1000l. granted to the late Earl of St. Vincent by the Irish Parl should be continued to the present Viscount, and the succes to the title. The Resolution was agreed to.

TUESDAY.

Petitions were presented from South Shields against the Repeal of Duties Bill; from the Magistrates of Middlesex, praying alteration in the Ale-house Licensing Bill; and from the Inhabi of Middlesex, praying for Reform in Parliament.

The Highland Churches Bill was passed.

On bringing up the Report of the Committee of Supply—After words from Mr. Lushington, the following vote was proposed 40,000l. for buildings for the Royal Library at the British Museum

Mr. Bankes moved that that sum be paid over without fu duction.

Mr. Hobhouse objected to the King's Library being transferred the British Museum, but he thought the library of the late Parliament might with great public advantage be transferred to Westminster.

Mr Croker proposed an amendment. He thought the Library the Museum ought to be removed to Somerset House, and accordingly.—The motion of Mr. Bankes was carried.

On the amendment of Mr. Croker being put,

Sir C. Long opposed the amendment. As to the idea of a gallery in Somerset House, did his Hon. Friend recollect, before a foundation could be laid for a building to receive the Statue, a building must, in fact, be erected beneath the surface of ground.

Sir J. Yorke considered that Somerset-house, as it was in its unfinished state, was a disgrace to the public taste, and he

...ght be better appropriated than in the manner now suggested by ...Hon. Friend, and therefore he would support the Amendment.
...The Chancellor of the Exchequer said, with respect to what had ...n said of selecting Somerset-house, or Whitehall, he equally dis...roved of both.
...Mr. Martin expressed his regret that Somerset House was not ...ated.—The House divided. For the Amendment, 80—Against it, ...Majority, 26.
...The Resolution for granting a sum of 9930l. for building churches ...Catholic houses in Ireland was the next objected to.
...Mr. Hume declared his decided opposition to this grant; there was ...ady a fund of upwards of 150,000l. applicable to the building of ...urches in Ireland.
...The House divided. For the Resolution, 65—Against it, 35—...Majority for the Resolution, 20.
...Mr. Brougham presented a petition from a person containing ...charges against a Member of the House, Col. Crosbie, but Mr. Wynn ...ged against what course the House could take, as it was impossible for ...the House to enter into the enquiry.
...On the motion that the Petition lie on the table, the House divided. ...For the Resolution, 26—Against it, 51.
...Mr. Hume had a petition to present signed by 2000 persons, among ...whom were 96 Ministers. In a speech he made last night nothing was ...clearer from his intention than to condemn Dissenters generally from ...the Church of England. The petition stated, that the subscribers ...were sincere believers in the Gospel, and saw with much regret the ...persecutions instituted against men for their religious opinions. Such ...persecutions the petitioners thought unfavourable to Christianity. ...The motion was negatived.
...Mr. Grattan moved that an humble Address should be presented ...to His Majesty, praying that he would be graciously pleased to direct ...that his proceedings should be instituted against the Corporation of ...Dublin, requiring them to account for monies received by them under ...the head of pipe-water money.—The motion was negatived.
...The English Catholics Elective Franchise Bill was passed.

WEDNESDAY.

Petitions were presented from Perthshire and Fifeshire against ...slavery—from the Masters, Mates, and Merchant Seamen of the Port ...of London, and the Ship-owners of the same Port, against the Reci...procity of Duties Bill—from the Merchants of London against the ...Customs Consolidation Bill.
...Sir J. Macintosh presented a Petition from a merchant of the name ...of Kean, complaining of the provisions of the New South Wales Bill, ...as tending to interfere with the rights of British subjects in respect of ...trial by Jury, and favouring the introduction of oppression into the ...Colony. He objected to the appointment of Courts Martial composed ...of military officers of the army and navy, and, above all, of investing the ...Governor with power to transport suspected persons from the Colony; ...he hoped the House would grant the prayer of the petitioner, and al...low him to be heard by himself or his counsel, against the Bill, at the ...Bar of the House.
...Mr. Wilmot Horton said, the petitioner was not the Agent of the ...Colonists of New South Wales, but had been sent over to this country ...to procure certain objects of this Bill, and Government having granted ...all he desired, he now shewed his gratitude by stigmatizing Govern...ment. There was a clause in the Bill which enabled his Majesty, by ...an Order in Council, to extend the trial by Jury to the Colony, when...ever it should appear expedient. There was no occasion for the House ...hearing Counsel at the Bar.
...Mr. Bright contended that the Colonists had a right to have their ...petitions heard and attended to. He strongly urged the necessity ...there was to extend the blessing of Trial by Jury to this Colony.
...Mr. Marryatt supported the petition, although he approved the ...Bill, which he considered as calculated to do much good to the Colony.
...Mr. Forbes was hostile to the Bill; he certainly would discuss the ...objectionable clauses in the Committee. He knew this Bill was ...founded on the report of Mr. Commissioner Bigg. Any one who ...would take the trouble to read that Report would be satisfied of the ...incompetency of Mr. Bigg for the office which had been assigned to him.
...Mr. R. Colquhoun defended Mr. Bigg; a kinder, a more amiable, ...or a more honourable man never existed. Mr. Bigg might, perhaps, ...have said things in his Report which were painful to individuals, but ...Mr. Bigg was sent out to report upon existing evils, and not to pay ...compliments.—The petition was then read.
...Sir J. Macintosh then moved, that the petitioner should be heard ...by his Counsel at the Bar on Friday.
...Mr. Wilmot Horton could not see the necessity of hearing the pe...titioner by Counsel when he had declared his intention to alter the ...objectionable clauses in the Committee.
...Mr. Hume complained that the Bill went to increase punishment.
The House divided. For the motion, 47—Against it, 60—Majority, 13.
...Mr. F. Buxton moved, that the papers relative to the capture of ...the ship Requin, by Mr. Ogilvie, be referred to a Select Committee. ...The Hon. Member detailed the circumstances of the capture at Bour...deaux, at the close of the last war. On that occasion he was ordered ...by the British Generals to take possession of the vessels under the ...batteries in their hands. In execution of this order he hired a boat ...with ten French Royalists, and with these and his clerk accomplished ...the seizure of the vessels. The Hon. Member then moved that the ...Papers laid on the table on the 19th June last, relative to the capture ...of the Requin American privateer, be referred to a Select Committee.
...Colonel King seconded the motion. He had been acquainted with ...Mr. Ogilvie for twenty-five years, and knew that he enjoyed the ...highest consideration from all his professional companions for his dis...tinguished conduct throughout the whole of the Peninsula war.
...The Chancellor of the Exchequer had no doubt of the merits of ...Mr. Ogilvie; but these general merits had nothing to do with the ...question. The Right Hon. Gent. read a letter from the Duke of ...Wellington to Mr. Ogilvie, in which he stated that he could not sup...port the claim, as the vessel could not have been captured had not the ...town been in possession of a British force. The Duke also stated, ...that all the captures by individuals were thrown into a common mass ...and divided among the army generally.
...For the motion, 19—Against it, 40—Majority against the motion, 21.
...The Chancellor of the Exchequer brought under the considera...tion of the House the Budget. The Right Hon. Gent. observed, that ...at the early part of the Session, he had explained fully his views, and ...he had since been enabled to carry them into execution. He had then ...stated the sum required to be 16 million; but that sum had been ex...ceed by 2 or 300,000l. chiefly in the Miscellaneous Department, occa...sioned by various items which certainly had not been in his contem...plation when he formerly addressed the House, but which had become ...necessary from circumstances that had subsequently arisen. One ...particular item gave a charge of nearly 60,000l. for stationery in the ...police offices. It was expected there would be in future a great dimi...nution in the article of Stationery, though that would not take place ...in the present year. The late King's Library, and 15,000l. for Emi...grants in Canada, had added to the Expenditure. It would, however, ...be satisfactory for the House to know that there was a more than cor...responding excess in the Ways and Means. The total amount of Sup...plies for Army, Navy, Ordnance and Miscellaneous services, was ...28,976,743l. These were to be met by the following items:—The an...nual duties—malt they were called in the paper, but that was a mis...print—they were the annual duties upon sugar, &c. and they were ...taken at 3,000,000l.; the Lottery at 200,000l. There was then a sum of ...1,336,778l. repaid by the Exchequer Bill Loan Commissioners, in con...formity with the Act of Parliament under which the same had been ...issued, to be included in the Ways and Means of this year. There ...was also 4,800,000l. for Naval and Military Pensions, and 90,000l. from ...the East India Company for half-pay allowances. The next item was ...489,6l7. being the surplus of Ways and Means, granted in former ...years, which from various causes had not been called for, and on which ...there was no claim. There was next, a surplus of 8,700,000l. on the ...Consolidated Fund. In March the estimated income of the Consoli...dated Fund was 46,750,000l. The charge upon it, 38,050,000l. leaving ...a surplus of 8,700,000l. The way in which the charge was created he ...stated to be as follows:—For the expence of the Funded Debt ...30,000,000l.; for other charges thrown on the Consolidated Fund on ...account of the Civil List, and Pensions which were not annually voted ...1,800,000l.; Half-Pay Annuities 2,800,000l.; Sinking Fund 5,200,000l.; ...total 39,050,000l. which being deducted from the sum he had stated ...as the income of the Fund, namely, 46,750,000l. left the surplus of ...8,700,000l. The estimate was upon the probable receipts, after de...ducting the amount of taxes repealed. The result of all was, that the ...total amount of Ways and Means for this year was 17,385,920l.; De...ducting the Supplies 16,976,743l.; a surplus remained of 409,177l. Of ...this 384,150l. was to be applied to the reduction of unfunded debt, but ...the total surplus of the Ways and Means was, as he had just stated ...409,177l. He thought this was a very satisfactory circumstance as ...every body must be gratified to find that they had something in hand. ...The Right Hon. Gentleman then noticed the state of the Revenue at ...the present moment. The Customs up to the 28th of June, had pro...duced 4,026,861l.; to this was to be added for bills and cash in hand 79,191l.; supposing the receipts from the 28th June to the 4th July not to fall under the general average, they would give 80,000l.; mak...ing the total produce of the half year 4,185,852l. The total produce 4,045,987l. It would, therefore, be seen, that on this calculation the present half year. With respect to the Excise, he was happy to say, that appearances were not less satisfactory, the receipts exceeded the Excise from the 5th of January to the 5th of July, 1822, amount to 12,125,136l.; the Receipts for the present year, up to the 1st of July, were 10,571,031l.; the estimated Payments to be received between the 1st and 5th July, he would take at 628,000l.; making a total of 11,229,031l.; leaving a deficiency of 896,05.l. But the House would recollect that, since January last, a considerable reduction of taxation had taken place which more than accounted for the falling off. The actual loss sustained in the last half year was as follows:—On Hides, 135,688l.; Malt (including 270,000l. repay...ment for stock in hand,) 450,637; Salt, 465,550l.; Total, 1,051,875l.— Thus it would be seen the total reduction of taxation on articles of ex...cise amounted to 1,051,875l. Yet there was but a deficiency of revenue on the whole to the amount of 894,05.l. shewing an actual increase upon the other items of 155,820l. In the Stamp Duties he anticipated no deficiency. In the Post Office there might be a slight falling off, but nothing of consequence. In the Assessed Taxes, there was the pros...pect of a satisfactory result at the end of the year.—Ministers were en...abled, by the habits they had adopted, to realize a clear surplus Re...venue over expenditure. The Revenue was improving, notwithstand...ing so large a reduction of taxation had taken place; and at the same time they were effecting a gradual and progressive reduction of the debt, which had been reduced within the last 6 months to 794,130,812l. from 796,530,141l. which was its amount in January last. With respect to the unfunded debt on the 5th of January 1823, it amounted to 26,281,150l.; On the 30th June to 25,498,450l. giving a decrease of 782,7.0l. Adding this to the sum reduced on the Funded Debt, it would be seen that there was a clear diminution of debt effected in the last half year, amounting to no less than 3,000,000l. The Right Hon. Gentleman then stated the amount of taxes taken off as follows:—Husbandry Horses, 480,000l.; Malt, 1,400,000l.; Salt, 1,255,000l.; Hides, 300,000l.; Assessed Taxes, 2,300,000l.; Ditto Ire...land, about 100,000l.; Tonnage Duty, 160,000l.; Windows—Ireland, 150,000l.; Spirits—Ireland, 380,000l.; Ditto—Scotland, 340,000l.— giving a total of 6,935,000l.—The several items to which he had re...ferred, being added together, it would seem that the country had been virtually relieved from taxation in the last two years, to the amount of seven millions and a half. He then alluded to the state of Ireland, which no man could look at without feeling great affliction at those causes which operated to produce her misfortunes. As far as was practicable, it must be admitted that both Government and that House, at least in a fiscal sense, had been anxious to afford relief. In respect of the general state of the Revenue, he should not feel himself justified in stating what might be expected in future years, but our resources were in a flourishing condition, and no man could doubt their being in a state of progressive improvement and strength. He thought the Government might continue that remission of taxation which they had sanctioned, and perhaps extend additional relief. With respect to those taxes which still remained, he knew Hon. Gentlemen wished many of them to be removed. Many of them pressed severely on the consumers, and the repeal of some was thought highly desir...able, as connected with the necessity of preventing smuggling. But he should content himself with what he had already stated; and while he felt grateful for the liberal support which he had received from that House, he could not but flatter himself with the belief that they did not see reason to think that their confidence had been mis...placed. From all he had heard of the feelings of the people, he had every reason to believe that the country was completely satisfied with what had been done, and while that was the case he himself should remain satisfied that he had done his duty.
...Mr. Maberly congratulated the House on the clear and luminous statement they had heard. He thought the Right Hon. Gentleman had rather understated than exaggerated the resources of the country. He trusted the Right Hon. Gentleman would turn his attention seri...ously to the subject (between this and the next session,) of the reduc...tion of the 4 per cents. to the 3 per cents. a very considerable saving could be made. He had heard that Austria was about to pay from two to three millions towards her debt to this country; and, if that fair and liberal part were taken by the Austrian Government, the Chan...cellor of the Exchequer might apply it to the reduction of taxation.
...The Chancellor of the Exchequer could say nothing as to the liquidation of the Austrian Loan, since it was a matter still under negociation.
...Mr. Hume had heard the statements of the Right Hon. Gent. with great satisfaction, though it did not come up entirely to what he wished. He was glad to find that the Right Hon. Gent. admitted the principle, that taking off a million of taxes was not losing a million of revenue. He hoped the Right Hon. Gent. would go on in the course he had begun, and would take off three or four millions more next year. He condemned the abominable and profligate expenditure of the Army and Navy Pensions Loan, by which the public lost 6l. out of every 100l. of the four millions borrowed.
...Alderman Thompson hoped that not only his present financial, but his foreign policy would be pursued by the Right Hon. Gentleman and his Colleagues in Office.
...The Bill then went through the Committee, and was ordered to be reported to-morrow.
...Some conversation arose on the question for going into Committee on the charges against Chief Baron O'Grady. The House divided—Ayes 60—Noes 89—Majority 31.
...The House then went into Committee.
...Mr. S. Rice proposed a resolution, declaratory of the Lord Chief Baron having taken illegal fees on bills of costs, which bills of costs never had been made out.
...The Resolution was opposed by the Attorney and Solicitor-General, Mr. Wetherell, and Mr. O'Grady, on the ground that it was not a statement containing matters of justification to be found in 11th report.
...Mr. S. Rice said, he was ready to make any alteration in his Reso...lution the House might wish to adopt.
...The Solicitor-General proposed as an amendment to insert in the Resolution words of qualification found in the 11th Report.
...Mr. S. Rice proposed to add to the amendment the opinion of the House, that the charges were not answered.
...The Solicitor-General opposed the additional words.
...Mr. Secretary Canning also opposed the expression of opinion. He was not disposed to take the opinion of a Committee up stairs.
...The first Resolution so amended was also agreed to.
...Mr. S. Rice then moved another Resolution, stating that fees had been improperly taken by the Lord Chief Baron under his signature.
...The Resolution was carried.
...On the Fourth Resolution being proposed, and some difference of opinion expressed; at length the Chairman reported progress.

THURSDAY.

...Mr. Bankes moved for the appointment of a Select Committee, to enquire into the progress which had been made in forming a General Index to the Journals of the House.—The motion was agreed to.
...Mr. Macqueen presented a Petition from the Minister and Inhabi...tants of Dunstable, against the Importation of Straw Platt.—The Pe...tition was received.
...The consideration of the Bossiney Petition was postponed to the 2d of September.
...Mr. Courtney said, having no hopes of being able to pass the Bankrupt Laws Amendment Bill during the present Session, he would now withdraw it, and bring it forward in the next Session.
...Mr. Hume moved for a return of the persons forming the Preven...tive Service and Coast Blockade, and for an account of the value of all Seizures made in the year 1822.—Ordered.—The Hon. Gentleman then moved for a copy of the last contract made for the supply of Slops then moved for a copy of the last contract made for the supply of Slops to the Navy, and also for an account of Slops furnished to the Navy during the last five years; and the prices charged, in each year, both at home and abroad. The returns were ordered.
...Mr. Goulburn said, he had now to move to bring in a Bill to re...gulate certain law proceedings in the county of Cork. This Bill was truly Irish—the object of it was to establish five Quarter Sessions in the year.—Leave was given.
...Mr. Brougham moved for leave to bring in a Bill to repeal the Act of the 21st of Geo. II. which provided that none but resident Protes...tants should be capital Burgesses of the Irish Corporations. That law was passed when the individuals qualified to be capital Burgesses re...sident in the different towns were few, and persons were selected who were not resident. The evil was done away.
...Dr. Phillimore moved for leave to bring in a Bill to permit Roman Catholics to marry, after the forms and ceremonies of their own reli...gion. The object of his Bill would be, to allow Roman Catholics to marry in their own chapels, and, on a certificate from the Catholic Priest, the Protestant Clergyman was to be authorised to register the marriage in the parish books, and to direct that Protestant Clergymen should register the births of Catholic children.—Leave was given to bring in the Bill.
...Sir H. Parnell moved for leave to bring in a Bill to amend the law relative to the endowment of Roman Catholic Schools and other cha...rities in Ireland, and to enable Roman Catholics in Ireland to make bequests for charitable purposes.
...Mr. Goulburn would not oppose its being brought in, but he begged to guard himself against being understood as giving a sanction to the Bill.—Leave was given to bring in the Bill.
...The House, on the motion of Mr. S. Rice, went into Committee, to consider the Resolutions relative to the case of Chief Baron O'Grady.
...Mr. S. Rice moved a resolution, stating, that it appeared from the Ninth Report of the Commissioners, that certain fees which were paid formerly in Irish currency, had been received by the present Lord Chief Baron in English currency. This Resolution was agreed to without discussion. The Hon. Gent. then moved the sixth Resolution, which stated an additional fact regarding other fees, formerly taken in English currency, but paid over to the Chief Baron in Irish currency, the difference being retained by the Officer of the Court.
...A conversation followed as to the wording of the Resolution between Mr. Canning, Mr. Rice, Mr. R. Smith, Mr. Goulburn, Mr. Wynn, and the Solicitor-General, and the Resolution was withdrawn.
...On the subject of the Fees on Decrees, the two Resolutions were united, at the suggestion of the Solicitor-General, and confined to a statement of facts. The two Resolutions relative to the Imposition and augmentation of Fees, by the authority of the Chief Baron, were withdrawn by Mr. Rice.
...Mr. Hume was satisfied that the practice of raising their fees on the part of Judges was highly reprehensible; but it was well known not to be confined to the Chief Baron alone. This being the case, he thought it was only incumbent upon them to prevent the commission of this offence henceforward. But, as far as regarded the punishment of the Chief Baron, they were bound to take into consideration the defence of that individual, who declared, and truly, that he thought himself entitled to raise the fees of his own Court, and that he had the example of all his predecessors on the bench for a hundred years be...fore in doing so. If it should meet the approbation of the House, he should propose, as a resolution, that further proceedings were unne...cessary in the case of the Chief Baron of Ireland.
...Mr. S. Rice had declined agitating the question of guilt or inno...cence, in deference to the wish of the House.
...Mr. Hutchinson thought the House would act with great injustice to the Chief Baron, should the resolutions be put upon the journals.
...Mr. Wetherell was prepared to adopt the general tenor of the resolution of the Member for Aberdeen, (Mr. Hume.) The resolu...tions in the eyes of the Public, would have the effect, however unfairly, of inferring criminality. Neither the House, nor any indi...vidual was bound to proceed upon the resolutions in another Session.
...Mr. Secretary Canning said, the question was, if the resolutions be reported to the House. If the resolutions should not be reported, the House could come to no determination. He was not bound to vote for any ulterior proceedings, though he had lent his assistance to form the charges into a tangible shape. It would be an act of great in...justice to the Chief Baron not to report the resolutions. It was the duty of the Committee to report, and the House to decide as to ulterior proceedings.
...Captain O'Grady said, he had hitherto carefully abstained from expressing any conclusive opinion either of assent or dissent from the course of the Committee during the progress of their labours; but he had now no hesitation in saying that he had no fault to find with any thing they had done. With respect to the ulterior proceedings of the House, however, he must deprecate any course which should tend to dispense with the opinion of the House upon the Resolutions which had been come to. If this were not done, an imputation, the weight of which every honest mind must feel, would rest on the character of the Chief Baron. The Resolutions had been much improved in their passage through the Committee, and he sincerely hoped they would be carried to a vote of the House upon them. He had said, early in this discussion, that when the House and the Public should under...stand the real state of the question, he should have no fear for their opinion, and that he would stake his life upon its being favourable and exculpatory to the Chief Baron. If this decision were longer post...poned, it would be a continuance of the injury which the Chief Baron had been suffering for the last three years.—After some further con...versation the Resolutions were ordered to be reported on Monday.

FRIDAY.

The Speaker went to the House of Lords to hear the Royal Assent, for which see the Lords.
The Exchequer Bills, the Barilla Duties, and the Equalization Duties Bill were passed.
Petitions were presented from the Ship Owners of South Shields against the Reciprocity of Duties Bill; from Alnwick against Slavery; from certain Wool Growers against Wool Duties; from Swansea against the Coal Duties.
The Irish Law Expences, the Malicious Injuries, and the Exche...quer Bill Bills were fixed for Monday.
The English Roman Catholics Civil Offices, the Irish Custom Duties, and the English Custom Duties Bills were passed.
On the third reading of the Irish Tithes Composition Bill,
...Mr. Calcraft considered the rejection of the Compulsory Clause, as going to render the Bill much less effective than it would have been formerly.
...Mr. M. Fitzgerald considered the Bill as a great boon to the Clergy; and, at the same time, as imposing a heavy tax on the landed interest.
...Mr. V. Fitzgerald was of a similar opinion, and, therefore, he would not now oppose it, though he considered it still as far from an efficient measure.
...Col. Trench also thought the compulsory clause was wanted to make the Bill efficient; still as it was, they should gladly adopt it.
...Mr. C. Hutchinson thought the measure would render the people of Ireland better satisfied with the payment of tythes; and have a good effect in Ireland.—The Bill was passed.
...Mr. Goulburn proposed a clause, authorizing the Lord Lieutenant, in cases of appeal, to refer the subject of appeal to the Judge of Assize next going the Circuit in which the county from whence the appeal came was situated, to be by such Judge heard and determined.—This clause was agreed to, and the Bill passed.
On the third reading of the Reciprocity of Duties Bill, Mr. Robert...son renewed his objections to the Bill, and read extracts from the evidence taken before the Foreign Trade Committee, to shew that the adoption of this Bill would prove ruinous to our trade, by giving an advantage to foreign-built ships, owing to the cheap rate at which they could be built and navigated. In the last year there had been a dimi...nution in our shipping to the amount of 150,000 tons, and of 8000 sea...men; and that had been, in part; the case for the last three years. The Hon. Member concluded by moving, that the Bill be read a third time that day three months.
...Alderman Thompson decidedly objected to the passing of the Bill, as it went to repeal those Regulations under which the Trade of the Country had flourished for 150 years.
...Mr. Wallace contended that the instances were innumerable in which it had been found necessary to relax the Navigation Laws. No Country had ever been a great Naval Power without an extensive trade. The present measure had been brought forward to protect us from measures that had been adopted by Foreign Powers.
After some further discussion, Mr. Huskisson said, in the year 1815, there were 104,000 men in the commercial marine of this coun...try, and now he found there were 147,000 employed in it. There was a great decrease in the foreign shipping employed in the commerce of this country. On the whole therefore he was sure we had nothing to dread from the supposed diminution of our maritime strength.
The House divided—For the Third Reading, 75—Against it, 15—Majority, 60. The Bill was then passed.
On the motion of Dr. Lushington, the House went into a Com...mittee on the Slave Trade Act Consolidation Bill. The Hon. Gen...tleman proposed two clauses regulating the Removal of Slaves from one colony to another, which removal caused great mortality.
...Mr. Wilmot Horton said the evil would be remedied by a clause he was about to propose, to authorise the removal of Slaves from one colony to another, where such removal was for the benefit of the Slave, and where the family of the Slave was not separated by such removal.
After some conversation the clause was postponed till the Report was brought up, which was ordered for Monday.

Families who have not yet visited MILES and EDWARDS'S China and Damask Furniture Warehouse, can have but little idea of the amazing reduction at which they are selling their splendid London Printed Furnitures, Damasks, Tabborets, Moreens, &c. If the introduction of an endless variety of new and elegant designs at such extraordinary low prices will ensure encouragement, the proprietors of this Establishment are determined to merit support.—No. 131, Oxford-street, between Hollies-street and Old Cavendish-street.

PRICE OF STOCKS AT THE CLOSE, SATURDAY.

There is nothing of any material importance to notice in the Money Market during the whole of the week, Consols having been comparatively steady, the fluctuations being about ¼ per cent. In the Foreign Market there is but little doing; Spanish Bonds were rather depressed, but not materially, their fluctuation being from 29¼ to 32¼; Columbian have been dull, and Chili Bonds on Friday opened at 65¼, but were done during the day at 68. They have since been doing about 1 per cent. under that price. Consols for the Account opened this morning at 82⅞, and closed at 82¾ ¼.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, JULY 6.

THE TIMES AND MORNING CHRONICLE NEWSPAPERS.

THERE is a baseness and depravity in Whig policy—a tortuous deviation from all that is high and honourable in the institutions of society unknown to this country until modern WHIG PRINCIPLES, imbued with the dregs of JACOBINISM, were inoculated into its very vitals—but we must go even beyond JACOBINISM for the example of an outrage committed upon ourselves, by the official champions of its doctrines.

The JACOBINS called a political enemy an ARISTOCRAT, and he was, as a matter of course, disposed of a la Lanterne—but it was reserved for the refinements of JACOBINISM under WHIG RADICAL forms, to insinuate like a street assassin, charges of the most detestable and abominable nature against a literary opponent in order to silence or overwhelm him: this is indeed the consummation of infamy, and cannot be suffered to poison the sources of public as well as private honour without a due measure of exposure and punishment.

The late cowardly and scurrillous insinuations of the TIMES and CHRONICLE levelled against this paper with an assassin-like baseness, have during the last week assumed a shape which renders it necessary to take serious notice of them, not because they remotely affect any individual connected with US, but because the attack is made upon the publication with a view to injure its character, weaken its influence, and decrease its circulation.

The villainous equivocations of these papers have until within these few days rendered their allusions less decided, and therefore more dangerously wicked in their tendency—they have at length, however, avowed their meaning, and enabled us to discover at whom they point, and as we are not so scrupulous in speaking the truth as they are whenever it militates against the object they have in view, we gladly avail ourselves of this opportunity of coming to an explanation.

In the TIMES of Monday last appears the following:—

"'Misery acquaints a man with strange bed-fellows:' faction has pretty much the same effect. Who would think it possible that there could be an association between the Tory Ladies of England (who, notwithstanding their politics, can never be considered without regard and respect,) and a certain writer in a weekly publication, whom his own taste as well as the general disgust of the female sex, have long banished from female society? Yet so it is, the venom of party spirit has induced several ladies to canvass their friends against the Spanish Fancy Ball; and their worthy coadjutor of the weekly press undertakes to throw mud at every lady who shall venture to have the generosity to contribute to the aid of suffering patriotism. We are almost ashamed to notice a writer whom it would be a foul stain to speak to; but we apprehend that no ladies will be deterred from the exercise of an amiable duty by the abuse of one whose name it would be pollution, not merely to female but to male lips, to utter."

In the TIMES of Wednesday last appears the following:—

"The Foreign Ambassadors at the British Courts are said to interest themselves warmly to prevent the success of the approaching Ball in aid of the Spaniards. This is a measure, we presume, of the haute diplomatie. It is worthy of such Ministers from such Courts. 'Most 'magnanimous representatives of most magnanimous Sovereigns,' we should say, 'exert all the functions of your eminent stations to pre-'vent the young ladies from dancing. Tie togs to their legs, as your 'masters would fix chains to those of their fathers and brothers. Unite 'yourselves with the writers who evince their hatred of the softer sex 'by their abuse. Erect high the standards of Gomorrah and Corfu—'bid defiance to the virtuous impulses of nature—and disturb the just 'cessation of innocent and honourable love.' We believe that our Ministers, to their credit, discountenance as much as they are able, these sinister proceedings; and, perhaps, even wish success to the Ball."

In the CHRONICLE of Thursday is the following:—

"The peculiar phaldry which distinguishes a certain weekly ministerial paper, would render it unworthy of serious notice, did it not dare to speak slightingly of ladies of the most spotless private character. The silence, that proceeds from contempt, may not always be understood, and there are circumstances under which it cannot longer be observed. Though the individual, who is generally supposed to be the author of the articles in question, may be one of the most despicable miscreants that ever disgraced human nature, though he may have been dismissed from a Government appointment, in consequence of detected peculation; and though his own brothers have changed their names, least they might be confounded with one whose crimes must be nameless; yet even such a wretch must not be permitted to wound the feelings of virtuous and exemplary females, without receiving the exposure which his infamy so richly deserves. If it be necessary to speak more explicitly upon a repetition of the offence, a particular detail shall be given."

The man to whom these paragraphs allude is a MR. HOOKER, who was we believe a Judge at CORFU, from which post he was dismissed, not, as the CHRONICLE, which cannot issue a paragraph without a constituent falsehood, says, for peculation, but for those crimes which, though nameless, have exiled him from society, and have induced some part of his family (which is highly respectable) actually to change their names.

Where this miserable outcast may be, nobody knows, but we, nevertheless, preparatory to other proceedings on our parts, think it right here to declare in the most solemn manner, that he was never connected or employed, directly or indirectly, in any manner with, or by or in this Paper, that he is known to no individual concerned in its conduct, and that the allusions to his infamy as affecting us, are unqualified and unfounded LIES AND LIBELS of the grossest and most cowardly nature, invented and issued with the vilest and most profligate motives.

We should probably never have heard of the history of the wretched creature of whom we are compelled to speak, but, that, in January last, we were informed from BELFAST, that a petition had been forwarded to MR. PEEL, in favour of two miscreants under sentence of death—the grounds of which were, that MR. HOOKER, equally criminal with themselves, was a man patronized as a writer in this Paper.

Lest, in any further proceedings which we may feel called upon to institute against the TIMES and CHRONICLE, they should plead ignorance of our former solemn disavowal of that person, we here quote a notice which appeared in this paper of the 19th of January last—

"We have received the packet from Belfast—the information contained in it is extremely important, and we have submitted the whole of the affair together with MR. BRYSON'S paper and hand-bills to Counsel.

"Our friend will perceive that we must decline noticing the matter here, farther than to assure THEM (MOST SOLEMNLY, which asseveration all parties concerned in BULL are most ready to substantiate BY OATH, that from the first establishment of this paper to the present moment, no person of the name of HOOKER has ever been directly or indirectly connected with it—that no such person is known to, or in communication with any individual of our establishment, and that the whole of the implications and statements in which that person's name has been associated with BULL are UTTERLY FALSE AND GROUNDLESS."

That we did not prosecute the persons concerned in the propagation of the scurrillous falsehood at that time, we have reason to rejoice, since it has given us an opportunity of bringing the matter more fully before the world, and of proving to the public the system of attack adopted by the LEADING WHIG PAPERS of the metropolis. To reply to the assassins in those journals is not the object of this article—it is to the PUBLIC—to the COUNTRY which upholds us—to the largest body of subscribers possessed by any paper extant—to the nobility—the gentry—the working classes—the learned professions—the army—the navy—that mass of the population from which we are daily and hourly receiving the most gratifying testimonials of service—it is to these we are anxious to explain the facts.

To find the TIMES and CHRONICLE driven into the savage madness of making charges and publishing allegations without the smallest foundation, would in itself be highly gratifying, as a proof of the punishment we have inflicted on them; but when, by the most detestable lies and insinuations, they attack the moral character of men concerned in a public work, it becomes us no longer to allow it to rest upon the footing of a literary contest; and we, therefore, give fair and public notice to the TIMES and MORNING CHRONICLE, that if, after this solemn disavowal on our part, of all personal knowledge, direct or indirect, at this or any preceding period, of this MR. HOOKER, and of his having contributed one single line to the columns of JOHN BULL, they dare to repeat their infamous insinuations, our only reply will be in the institution of that process which shall convince the world of their baseness and falsehood; and yet afford them every opportunity of "JUSTIFYING"—if such a term can even be technically applied to the conscious dissemination of such shameless calumny as theirs.

We have to apologize to our readers for what may appear egotistical—but we are MEN and ENGLISHMEN; and for once are compelled to feel indignation instead of contempt for creatures who seem, in all they say or do, to consider the end sufficient to justify the adoption of any means for the purpose of ensuring it.

"POOR WILSON!"—There is a sort of party howl to these words, which may be heard all up and down St. James's-street whenever one Whig meets another—"POOR WILSON!"—the very sweepers of the Pall-mall crossing, have caught the sound, and "POOR WILSON" echoes through the iron columns of the Opera Collonade.

POOR WILSON indeed!—for small as may be the portion of credit which our enemies will give us for the feeling, we are sincerely and seriously sorry for him. Some men to be sure are so fond of notoriety that, rather than not be talked of, they will consent to be the laughing-stock of society—but fate seems just now to frown upon radicalism, and the events which have precipitated "POOR WILSON" into the irretrievable depth whereat he rests at present, are so characterized as to seem expressly ordered to add absurdity to the melancholy catastrophe of his career.

When "poor WILSON" wrote his flourishing letter to MR. WOODENSPOON, and "desired his best regards to MRS. W." one smiled at the sanguine account which he gave of himself, and could not choose but laugh outright at his recommencement of a military life as a private in the Vigo Militia. It certainly did appear strange that a man, who was represented (by himself) as being of vital importance to the cause of some half score millions of people, should have had occasion to assume the manual labours of a common soldier in the ranks of the Militia, or that the vigour of mind and superiority of talent, which were to rescue a state from subjection, should be devoted to the mere mechanical routine of "halt," "dress," "carry arms," "stand at ease," and the subordinate duty of carrying a musquet—but we concluded that it was a little ruse de guerre, and that our English hero, having once taken the oath of allegiance to the King, to whom in fact he was opposed, and having surrendered the advantages and respectability of a seat in Parliament, would almost immediately be found heading forces, organizing troops, holding councils, and directing them, we anticipated that in a very few weeks there would have been nothing left of the DUKE D'ANGOULEME and his army, except their hats and boots—in short, we hoped that the nation to whom this exemplary Englishman had offered up his allegiance, into whose service he had enlisted in the teeth of an Act of Parliament, and for whom, he had abandoned his constituents, would have recognized the great virtue of the sacrifice he had made, and that we should have seen him at the very pinnacle of his glory.

But lo and behold, he continues marching and halting—and wheeling to the left and facing to the right with the small promotion from private to corporal in the same loyal militia regiment, and nothing more transpires, except, indeed, that we are told of the flourishing state of Spanish affairs, and the excellence of the cause, and the urgent importance of subscription—till we find "Poor WILSON" arrested at Oporto!!!

Our readers will perceive that the Spanish cause must utterly have failed before the gallant corporal would abandon it, and therefore we find him baffled, defeated, laughed at, and neglected in Spain, trying his hand at a struggle in PORTUGAL—this might not be extremely mortifying to his personal vanity, because, of course, "poor WILSON" could not inspire five or six millions of people with a feeling of patriotism if they had it not in them. But, in trying his luck in Portugal, he met with treatment which must have galled his spirit dreadfully.

When summoned before a Tribunal—he, in the true strain of democratic liberality, refused to obey, on account of RANK—I am no private soldier, says WILSON. I am, in fact, a Spanish General!—"Ah," says the messenger, "I do not know that, for you wear a private's uniform."

This was an unkindly stab—because, if he were really Spanish General, the humbug of affecting to be a private in Vigo militia is completely exposed, and the trickery laid open; if he were not a Spanish General, what an unpleasant thing to have this empty braggadocia published to the world. But when he found that even the Spanish Generalship had no effect upon the officer, he fell back upon his disavowal of country and discarded constituents, and resting himself upon the consequence attributable to a seat in that House which he has been foremost to represent as full of corruption and nothingness, declared himself a Member of the British Parliament.

"That does not signify," said the officer—"that gives you no protection, for you have abandoned your post."

These indignities, however, have, with the Radicals, secured what the air of persecution, and "Poor WILSON" we have no doubt would have made out an admirable history of his sufferings, and the oppression of tyrants; but, as if to fill the measure of his misfortunes, the POPULACE—the SOVEREIGNTY of the PEOPLE, fall foul of him and his silly parents, and hoot them, and pelt them, heap filth and reproaches upon them, and would have destroyed them had they not been rescued by the soldiery.

When WILSON saw the soldiers cutting and hacking the people to save him from their infuriated grasp, how came it that he did not cry out as he did at Cumberland-gate, "These are your fellow citizens, my brave soldiers!" When he saw two or three men trampled on and wounded, how came he might be rescued, how came he not to invoke the aid of the murdered HONEY and FRANCIS, and stem the fury of the troops thus unconstitutionally called out against a people, who were, as all PEOPLE have a right to do, expressing their feelings upon a popular question.

Who that has heard WILSON'S speeches—who that has read his letters about himself, would have thought to see the hero when the adored liberator of Portugal should be hooted and pelted by the people of Oporto, and saved from annihilation by the soldiery?—Who having heard and read all this, and witnessed all that has followed, can help joining the cry of the Whigs and the scavengers, and sighing over the lost reputation of a good-natured, weak fellow countryman, exclaiming with them and with us—"POOR WILSON!"

But this is not all—as MOORE the patriot says,

"Oh no, there is something more exquisite still,"

and that something still more exquisite is "poor WILSON'S" Manifesto to the Portuguese—not to say anything of his letters to LAMBTON, which somebody has been fool enough to publish.

We have not room here to set down the whole of WILSON'S parting address, but a little of it will suffice to show the wonderful share of conceit and vanity of which a notoriety-hero is possessed.

"Portuguese!—I entered your country as an affectionate friend, and an ancient companion of your arms. I entered it with the conviction that I had founded indisputable titles to your esteem, and that no individual in your nation could ever charge me with having done him an injury or unkind action."

Without going any farther than this first paragraph, or rather there be, we ask, anything upon earth more perfectly ridiculous—SIR ROBERT (as he calls himself) WILSON—an individual known by little but the favours of the British Government—goes to a town in Portugal—he is ordered away—society—the people are enraged, and express a general sense of dislike towards him—not one of them perhaps ever heard his name before—he appeared to them a meddling emissary in affairs contrary to the national feeling, and they pelt him and hoot him through their streets—whereupon he, "WILSON," as if everybody knew him, or rather as if he were somebody, issues an address to the Portuguese nation, talking of what he was going to do for them! &c.

One other paragraph is worthy of notice from the spirit it breathes, and the doctrine it inculcates with respect to the introduction of the military in cases of emergency.

"A frenzied populace at Braga, instigated by a few individuals who, I hope, only assumed the habit they wore, assembled to assassinate me and my unoffending companions, and in the absence of sufficient force, sufficient to prevent the violation of municipal as well as public law, prevailed so far as to detain us two days in their city."

Certainly we have not been in the habit of hearing Whigs call a people, exercising their rights, a frenzied populace, nor could we have supposed that a few individuals could instigate a mob. We are now, however, enlightened;—every thing indeed connected with the expedition of SIR ROBERT and his unlucky followers, seems to have turned out as badly as possible, and however much we lament the exposure of these infatuated men individually, we trust it will operate as a lesson to those who otherwise led away, might be induced to follow their example, and by fancying themselves to possess an influence and importance which they have not, leave their country and their families to be hunted from post to pillar by an incensed populace, who despise and abhor foreign interference as much as WE DO, and reject the paltry tamperings of MESSRS. LIGHT, WILSON, and ERSKINE, with as much disdain and indignation as we should, the contemptible assistance of a party of half-pay Lieutenants and dismissed officers from Spain or Portugal, who volunteered to new model the BRITISH CONSTITUTION.

We literally have not room for any observations upon MR. ROBINSON'S gratifying statement of the revenue; we refer our readers to the Debates, and think little more is necessary when the flourishing state of our finances is contrasted with the fact, that SIX MILLIONS OF TAXES have been reduced this year.

IT is universally remarked that the Session of Parliament, now drawing to a close, has been characterized by a particular tameness and want of interest. HUME'S real qualities have been ascertained by his quondam friends, and he fails any longer to find supporters in his vexatious meddlings and enquiries. The Minister, on the other hand, has furnished so noble an account of his national stewardship, that not a murmur of complaint is to be heard from the Opposition; and were it not for one circumstance which has occurred, little of the proceedings of the last five months would remain upon the minds of casual observers.

That, however, which distinguishes the present Session from any other, in the memory of man—and so distinguishes it, that we know not how to allude to it without a fear that our feelings may outrun our prudence—is the discussion (twice during its course) of religious topics, in a strain unheard till now within the walls of Parliament.

That MR. HUME, whose versatile abilities are ready to grasp at every subject which comes under discussion, should have treated the subject as he did, does not much surprise us—for, as MR. BUTTERWORTH very appositely said, this inion of an Honourable Gentleman who would vouch for e morality of MR. CARLILE is not very important upon h points; and as that Honourable Gentleman is always ng upon all occasions, we attributed to the "old cause" extraordinary doctrines he broached, and the astounding uments he adopted;—but that MR. RICARDO should, ce during the Session, have approached the subject of ristianity, does seem extremely strange. Strange!—it is tirely wonderful!

MR. RICARDO, in the money market is in his "vocation," although he must have conformed to the tenets of Chris- nity before he could sit in the House of Commons, a little the Jew might stick about him in the city, and nobody uld be displeased—but when we hear the sacred doctrines ur holy religion cavilled at in Parliament—when we are d that unbelief is merely a symptom of increasing en- tenement, and when we hear that to punish blasphemy is check the progress of knowledge, we cannot but feel ap- lled at the intrepidity or ignorance of those who broach such ctrines, or maintain such a course of argument.

SHERIDAN, in the DUENNA, speaking of little ISAAC and s recently assumed Christianity, expresses his doubt as to e efficacy of his conversion, by telling us "that he stands e a dead wall between church and synagogue, or the ank leaves between the Old and the New Testament."— e have no idea of the exact state of MR. RICARDO'S reli- on, but, we should have advised him before he made such eeches as those, which he is reported to have made upon the Blasphemous Prosecution" question, to have done one thing, d that is, to have changed his name to RICHARDS, and so ve got rid of an appellation which renders suspicious any nversations coming from its owner upon CHRISTIANITY— the SANHEDRIM or SYNAGOGUE it would, doubtless, ve its weight, and so it would in Parliament under certain rcumstances—for instance, if we heard MR. RICARDO clo- ent in his place against the repeal of the Usury Laws, we ould listen to his arguments with profound attention, be- use a man always in the money market must be conversant th the subject; if, on the contrary, we heard such a man as LORD PORTARLINGTON speak upon the Usury Laws, we ould think that he might have a feeling upon the subject, d pay as little attention to his Lordship's views upon that rticular point as we are disposed to afford to the representa- e of his Lordship's borough when HE discusses Christianity.

THE TIMES newspaper, which by order of its paymasters s, in the most infamous, false, and assassin-like manner, empted during the last week to cast insinuations of the osest nature against this Paper, because in the exercise of r duty of exposing humbug we merely noticed, without one mark, the Spanish Fancy Masquerade in a song, containing one invidious observation—not one line of calumny, sterday published an account of a private party given by RD HERTFORD to his friends, without the smallest re ence to political feeling, in his own house at Richmond, laced by a most wanton, false, and insolent attack upon Lordship.

Those who know LORD HERTFORD will know that the norance of the writer only could attribute ignorance to his rdship; and nobody who possessed one grain of candour uld attribute the report of the party which has appeared in newspapers to the PEN of the Noble Marquess, for un- rthy as so contemptible a falsehood may be of observation, appears to have been the only party, of this or any other son, which could not have been recorded by its donor—the nts, the account of which was published, having happened ring the period at which the Noble Marquess was inces- ntly engaged with the illustrious and honourable friends by om he was surrounded.

We trust that my LORD HERTFORD will forgive our hav- g mentioned his name as coupled with anything which ap- ars in the TIMES newspaper, it is not, he may rely upon it, cause we think it at all necessary to vindicate his Lordship m such "pitiful pelting." We only remark upon it, as a rious piece of consistency in a journal which has falsely d scandalously insinuated the vilest crimes against a paper, r opposing a political juggle, for remarking upon a PUBLIC ner ball, given in COVENT GARDEN PLAYHOUSE, to any ch who could muster money to go to it, and then wantonly ades the privacy of domestic life, and assails in the grossest nner a nobleman for having given a party to his own ac- uaintance, amongst whom were most of the very ladies of ose character and reputation the same newspaper was, two rs before, so particularly tender. These are the consistencies the WHIGS, and are alike creditable to the individuals from om they emanate, and the party whom they characterize.

THE Spanish FancyDress Ball took place at Covent Garden Friday. Of course we were not there, and can give no ac- unt of it beyond what we see in the newspapers, which give a list of fashionable ladies present, whose names have ap- eared as patronesses in print already. It seems that it was by means numerously attended, and that all the pompous rections that carriages coming from the west end of the wn should draw up at Paddington Canal and Kensington ravel Pits, and wait; and that those coming from the City ould wait in Finsbury-square and Moorfields—were quite verborous; that about nine hundred tickets were got rid of; d it seems, the remarkably elegant notice in the bills—that sons "taking vouchers were expected to pay for them"— as by no means unnecessary. The DUKE OF SUSSEX was re, but there was no disturbance.

A CURIOUS circumstance took place last week in the House Commons upon the question of the grant to the Trustees the British Museum, for providing a suitable place to re- ve the KING'S gracious gift of his library.

MR. CROKER divided the House against Ministers and beat em.

To us this is extremely gratifying, because it is one of the verous proofs which are daily occurring of the falsehood of e allegations, which make out that Ministers can command crifices against men's consciences.

It has always appeared to us, that a man conscious of an eriority of intellect, and admiring the public character of political leader, sacrifices a certain portion of his indepen- ce to the talent of him, whom he follows, and upon ques- s which he has not studied, nor which, perhaps, he is com- ted fully to understand—the confidence he has in that ecular person induces him to concede the greater ability for ing, and he votes with him upon all questions of polity, ther he entirely agree with him upon every one of them or —thus we see certain men always voting one way so long as lic matters and things above their ken are under discus- ; but when a matter of taste comes under observation, the m is broken; and we certainly regard any obstacle which may be thrown in the way of sending the books to the British Museum as beneficial to the country.

We are not wise enough ourselves to see why, upon the space of ground now occupied by the upper part of the late King's Mews, a building should not be erected which might contain the splendid gift of his Majesty in question, and in which building, and under one roof, the apartments of the Royal exhibition, together with rooms for any other authorized scientific bodies, might be concentrated—thus leaving Somer- set House for public offices only, and transfering to that building many of the minor boards, which now occupy private houses in different parts of the town at a considerable expence.

MR. CROKER'S opposition did not seem to be much relished by some persons; we, however, are surprized that he was not originally put upon the Committee, because his hostility to their proceedings would have shewn itself up stairs, and his influence in opposition to their proceedings have been suc- cessfully exerted in a less public manner.

WE last week made a few observations upon a statement made in the House of Commons by MR. BROUGHAM, who declared that of cases appealed from the decisions of LORD CHANCELLOR MANNERS, fifty in every hundred were reversed; so, said the learned Gentleman, his Lordship is lucky enough to be right once in two times!

We last week stated the fact, that of two thousand seven hun- dred decisions given by LORD MANNERS, only twenty-two have been ever appealed against; and of those twenty-two, eleven have been reversed. Now, whether the whole twenty- two had been reversed or not, forms no part of the question— forms no part of the charge—the imputation upon LORD MANNERS; because out of two thousand seven hundred de- cisions, two thousand six hundred and seventy-eight never have been appealed against at all—a proof of the confidence of suitors in the judgment of the Irish Chancellor, almost, if not quite unprecedented in the annals of such a Court during a similar period.

MR. BROUGHAM'S shuffling and quibbling when he was exposed, and his evasive remark that eleven and twenty-two bore a similar proportion to each other with fifty and an hun- dred, merited a vast deal more notice than we gave it last Sunday, although we did not mince the matter; but when we find the CHRONICLE newspaper of Monday putting forth the following observations, we feel it a duty to return to the subject, and call the notice of our readers to the low, vulgar, sneaking, equivocating, petty-larceny style, in which the Whigs conduct their attacks upon their superiors.

Hear the CHRONICLE—

"Of MR. BROUGHAM'S statement it is impossible to speak too highly. It is enough to say that it was in his best manner. That the Irish Chancellor was 'unknown as a lawyer until his elevation to the Bench,' is not a new piece of information to us; but it is a curious fact, that of the appeals from his decision which have come before the House of Lords, exactly one-half have been reversed. This is another illustra- tion of the excellent 'working' of our Parliamentary system—a certain great Ducal House has nine votes in a certain Assembly—what is the number of appeals compared with nine good votes?"

Would not any body who read this paragraph imagine, as it is basely and meanly meant they should imagine, that half LORD MANNERS'S decisions had been reversed? instead of which, we repeat, for never can it be too often repeated, only as a proof of LORD MANNERS'S fitness for the high office he holds, and as a specimen of Whig fairness and liberality, that out of two thousand seven hundred decisions, twenty-two only had been appealed against.

Any man who considers the nature of the Chancery Court— the delicacy with which every question arising in it must be approached—the vital importance of a decree—the vast re- sponsibility of a judgment, will discover in that delicacy— that importance—and that responsibility, ample reason for expecting disappointment and dissatisfaction to ensue at least in the breast of one of the parties at issue. Hence arise appeals, and the property and time of both, are again at stake, and again sacrificed in endeavouring to procure a reversal of the decision given. He who is able to keep down appeals to the lowest possible number, not only proves the confidence of suitors in his dicta, but does the state the most service, and we think that a Lord Chancellor against whose deter- minations only twenty-two persons could be found out of two thousand seven hundred to murmur, might have expected some fairer return for the exemplary discharge of his duties than the pert, voluble abuse of a stuff-gown barrister, who was not even at the bar when he was Solicitor-General.

We should be sorry to attribute any mean or envious feelings to BROUGHAM, because whatever he may be, out of the House, he no doubt puts off all private prejudices at the door; but of the MORNING CHRONICLE we must say that in making the sneaking and invidious statement which we have just quoted—it tells a dirty, wilful falsehood, and tells it in the most cowardly possible manner, because by a little Whig equivocation it could back out of the scrape, and return to the contemptible quibble, that of all the Appeals made against LORD MANNERS'S decisions, exactly one half have been reversed. Telling the truth, and telling the whole truth are two things; and in a few observations which we shall next week make upon the petition of MR. ROWAN, wherein MR. BROUGHAM also cuts a somewhat conspicuous figure, we may perhaps prove to the world the very wide difference existing between the two systems.

SUCH a humbug was never passed upon any country as what is called the Spanish Cause—we have touched upon it in another place, but facts which have recently reached us de- mand even further observations upon it. We have already ob- served that SIR ROBERT WILSON himself, the principal humbug in the affair, reputed to be the first general of the age because he chuses to assume that reputation, and although he never in his life was in a general action with British troops, and never commanded but three or four weak Spanish and Portuguese battalions, which he lost in a skirmish with MAR- SHAL NEY in the Puerto de Banos—he goes, as we have al- ready shewn, to Spain, attended by a suite of three or four foolish wights, and enlists himself and his followers as pri- vates in the Vigo Militia, and then harangues the Spanish officers and troops at that place and Corunna.

In those harangues he tells them, that he is the representa- tive of the British nation, and he and his three or four fol- lowers the advanced guard of ten thousand men of all arms com- ing to their assistance;—that they, the Spaniards, are the first of nations—that they are endowed with every virtue—and that they want nothing to enable them to destroy and annihi- late their invaders excepting money; and that want he, the representative of the British nation, is authorized to assure them that the patriotic people of England will supply to the full amount of the cost of their enterprize. Credit was obtained for this humbug—how will our readers suppose?—by the silent acquies- cence or assent of the Consul at Corunna to the truth of WIL- SON'S assertions.

And how was the silence of this public officer obtained? By making him believe that SIR ROBERT was really what he said he was. The Consul, poor man!—had read those admirable productions, our wise and disinterested newspapers, and was prepared for the belief of what SIR ROBERT chose to tell him, by the firm belief of every syllable in the news- papers regarding the enthusiasm of the British Government and Nation for what was called the cause of Spain.

Then conviction was produced upon the mind of this Re- presentative of the British Government, thus prepared to believe what SIR ROBERT should tell him of the authority vested in himself by the most impudent trick ever practised.

This HOAXER—who had quitted London secretly—who had arrived in Spain in breach and defiance of a law which he knew was in force—had the impudence to address his letters to his fellows in England, under cover to MR. CANNING, the Secretary of State for FOREIGN AFFAIRS, for no reason whatever, excepting to deceive the Consul, and to make him believe that he was the Representative of the British Nation, the advanced guard of ten thousand men, and authorized to promise uncounted millions to the deluded Spaniards. He succeeded accordingly in humbugging this wise Consul, and obtained his passive assistance to humbug the Spaniards. We will shew presently the result of this humbug in Spain as far as accounts have been received. We will first advert to what passed in England, upon the arrival of the accounts under cover to MR. CANNING, of what had occurred at VIGO and CORUNNA.

The Spanish question had been under discussion in England for nearly six months; above four months had elapsed since the delivery of the King of France's Speech to the Legisla- ture; and above two months since the invasion of Spain by the French troops. Till the arrival of intelligence from SIR ROBERT however nobody thought of subscriptions or of assist- ance to the Spaniards, except some few Radicals, who wished to involve the Government in the difficulties and dangers of a contest, in order that they might take advantage of those dangers to destroy the Constitution.

As soon as this intelligence arrived, however, all was bustle in the head-quarters of the Borough of Southwark.

Such a complete master in the art of humbug as SIR ROBERT could not be left exposed to the risk of the early discovery in Spain of the false colours he has assumed. He was to be sup- ported, at all events, at least to enable him to go on till he should have established himself in Spain; and then he was to be left to the re- sources of his own dexterity in the art of humbug.

The Representative of the Representative of Southwark, who had promoted himself to be the Representative of the British nation in Spain, immediately circulated opinions of the necessity for supporting the Spanish cause with money, and declared his intention to sub- scribe 1,000l. The ladies of the party also determined that they would have a Ball for the support of the Spanish cause of the same description with those with the profits of which in former years they had provided for their dependants; and a gull, with a great name, a general officer highly favoured in the service, was prevailed upon to take the Chair at a meeting, of which the professed object was to assist the Spaniards in a war in which His Majesty had declared himself to be neutral.

The subscription amounts to less than ten thousand pounds. The ladies ball, it is understood, will produce scarcely sufficient to pay its expences: and this party effort will be a humbug upon SIR ROBERT and the Spaniards, as well as upon the British public. If any real assistance could be given to the Spaniards by such measures, it would have been the duty of the King's Ministers to take some steps to im- pede them, not only for the sake of the interests of the country, which consists in NEUTRALITY, but for the honour of the King; and we hope that the Ministers have explained to the French Government the na- ture of this childish humbug.

But while this has been going on in England let us see what is doing in Spain.

The great HOAXER has given full powers to one of his dupes, a MAJOR BRISTOWE, of the army, to go to Seville, and there treat with the government for the raising and equipping, on his part, and the employment and payment on the Government of the Cortes of a corps of ten thousand foreigners, of which one third cavalry. This treaty has been signed by MAJOR BRISTOWE, and ought to be in the possession of his Majesty's Government. It is a curious docu- ment, and shews how far the system of humbug can be carried.

It provides for all the details of the service. It contains stipulations respecting the number of companies in each battalion and squadron, and the number of officers and men in each company of cavalry, in- fantry and light infantry, as if it were really intended to bring forward such a corps; and others relating to command in case detachments should be made. Nay more, provision is made for the disposal of the materiel of the corps when it shall return from Spain after the war.

This treaty is concluded with a FOREIGN GOVERNMENT, by an officer receiving the King's pay, under the authority of one of his Majesty's subjects, and this under the sanction and encouragement of a meeting at the London Tavern, LIEUT.-GENERAL LORD WILLIAM BENTINCK, Colonel of the Eleventh Dragoons, being in the chair!!!

If the whole transaction was not a humbug got up solely for the pur- pose of humbugging the Spanish Government out of the rank of General for WILSON, and of gratifying his vanity, and of reading his name in the newspapers of the day; if it was possible that a company or a cannon could be sent from this country to Spain in the way of aid, the Ministers ought to be impeached for the neglect of their duty to the King and country in permitting such transactions to be carried on with impunity. It is to be hoped that they are not deceived; and that the honour of the King, the interests of the country at large, and of the indi- viduals who might be sacrificed by entering into such plans, are safe in their hands. But see what is the effect of them in Spain. Read the ac- count of the entry, as he calls it, into Portugal of the great man, written by himself. The entry was probably upon a jack-ass, as his friends, the Constitutionalists in Spain, have taken care that there should not be a horse or mule in that country. We see that his exit was upon a mule!! Then there is a letter from GEN. MORILLO to the great man, in which, after compliments for his zeal and his sacrifices in the cause of liberty—(what sacrifices?)—he requests him to do his utmost, by all possible means, to assist the army, which is destitute of every thing, as his Excellency, the private in the Vigo Militia, has seen, with the ne- cessary supplies of MEN, arms, clothing, HORSES, and EVERY THING that may be required for the war.

We cannot too frequently draw the attention of our readers to these facts; and we wish to let the good Gentlemen and Ladies of the Meet- ing at the London Tavern, and of the Ball at Covent Garden, see that they are required to supply ONLY men AND horses, and every thing that is required for the war, and that this is the effect of the system of humbug carried on in England and Spain by the HOAXER-GENERAL, SIR ROBERT WILSON, Corporal of the Vigo militia.

OUR attention has been called to a little publication called "Historical Illustrations of QUENTIN DURWARD," and we have no hesitation in recommending it to our readers as a most interesting addendum to that admirable novel.

The views and intentions of the author of the pleasing pub- lication may, perhaps, be best developed by giving his preface, or "advertisement" entire.

"The Memoirs of Philip de Comines have long been esteemed, as furnishing an authentic, impartial, and lively delineation of the re- markable era of LOUIS XI. of France. They have recently acquired an extraordinary interest, as the ground-work of one of the most vigo- rous and beautiful of those masterly productions, by which the spirit of past ages is brought before us in the most natural and vivid colours; and the hard historical outline of great events and remarkable per- sonages, is worked up into a portraiture full of life and beauty. It is exceedingly curious and instructive to trace such a writer to the sources from which he has derived his incidents and characters;—to mark where he has followed, or where he has departed from, the authentic relations or established traditions of the periods of which he treats; and to discover how readily a creative genius avails itself of the most trifling anecdote, or the slightest description, to give a spirit and truth to his fiction which pure invention can never attain. The labour of such an inquiry is, however, great. To abridge that labour, has been the object of the present little work. In addition to the Memoirs of Comines, his various commentators, and other historians, have been carefully consulted; and the illustrations which they offered of 'Quentin Durward' have been introduced in observations upon each chapter of the novel, so as to enable the reader rightly to estimate each particular passage. The execution of this plan has been unavoidably hasty, but it is hoped that no material errors have escaped observation.—June 24, 1823."

To do our duty, however, by the author, we think we should also give our readers a specimen of the style and management of the illustrations, and for that purpose we select the seventh chapter of the third volume.

"'The contentions of passion in the mind of the DUKE of BURGUNDY, after the seizure of Louis, are painted with a glowing hand by the novelist:—

"'If the night passed by LOUIS was fearfully anxious and agitated, that spent by the DUKE of BURGUNDY, who had at no time the same mastery over his passions, and indeed, who permitted them almost a free and uncontrolled dominion over his actions, was still more disturbed.

"'According to the custom of the period, two of his principal and most favoured councellors, HEMBERCOURT and D'ARGENTON, shared his bed-chamber, couches being prepared for them near the bed of the prince. Their attendance was never more necessary than upon this night, when, distracted by sorrow, by passion, by the desire of revenge, and by the sense of honour which forbade him to exercise it upon LOUIS in his present condition, the Duke's mind re-embled a volcano in eruption, which throws forth all the different contents of the mountain, mingled and molten into one mass.

"'He refused to throw off his clothes, or to make any preparation for sleep; but spent the night in a violent succession of the most strong passions. In some paroxysms he talked incessantly to his attendants, so thick and so rapidly that they were really afraid his senses would give way; choosing for his theme, the merits and the kindness of heart of the murdered BISHOP of LIEGE, and recalling all the instances of mutual kindness, affection, and confidence, which had passed between them, until he had worked himself into such a transport of grief, that he threw himself upon his face in the bed, and seemed ready to choke with the sobs and tears which he endeavoured to stifle. Then starting from the couch, he gave vent at once to another and more furious mood, and traversed the room hastily, uttering incoherent threats, and still more incoherent oaths of vengeance, while, stamping with his foot, according to his customary action, he invoked Saint George, Saint Andrew, and whomever else he held most holy, to bear witness that he would take bloody vengeance on DE LA MARCK, on the people of LIEGE, and on him who was the author of the whole.—These last threats, uttered more obscurely than the others, obviously concerned the person of the King; and as one time the Duke expressed his determination to send for the DUKE of NORMANDY, the brother of the King, and with whom LOUIS was on the worst terms, in order to compel the captive monarch to surrender either the crown itself, or some of its most valuable rights and appanages.

"'Another day and night passed in the same stormy and fitful deliberations, or rather rapid transitions of passion; for the Duke scarcely ate or drank, never changed his dress, and altogether demeaned himself like one in whom rage might terminate in utter insanity. By degrees he became more composed, and began to hold, from time to time, consultations with his ministers, in which much was proposed, but nothing resolved upon. COMINES assures us, that at one time a courier was mounted in readiness to depart for the purpose of summoning the DUKE of NORMANDY; and in that event, the prison of the deposed monarch would probably have been found, as in similar cases, a brief road to his grave.

"'At other times, when CHARLES had exhausted his fury, he sat with his features fixed in stern and rigid immobility, like one who broods over some desperate deed, to which he is as yet unable to work up his resolution.'

"The parallel passages in COMINES will abundantly recompense the attention of the reader:—

"'The King thought himself a prisoner in the castle of Peronne, as he had good reason to do; for all the gates were shut and guarded by such as were deputed to that office, and continued so for two or three days; during which time the DUKE or BURGUNDY saw not the King, neither would he suffer but very few of his Majesty's servants to be admitted into the castle, and those only by the wicket, yet none of them were forbidden; but of the Duke's none were permitted to speak with the King, or come into his chamber, at least such as had any authority with their master. The first day there was great murmuring and consternation all over the town. The second, the Duke's passion began to cool a little, and a council was called, which sat the greatest part of that day, and night too; the King made private applications to all such as he thought qualified to relieve him, making them large promises, and ordering 12,000 crowns to be distributed among them; but the agent, who was employed in this affair, acquitted himself very ill, and kept a good part of the money for his own use, as the King was informed afterwards. The King was very fearful of those who had been formerly in his service, who, as I said before, were in the Burgundian army, and had openly declared themselves for his brother, the DUKE of NORMANDY. The DUKE of BURGUNDY's council were strangely divided in their opinions; the greatest part proposed that the passport which the Duke had given to the King might be kept, provided his Majesty consented to sign the peace as it was drawn up in writing and engrossed. Some would have him prisoner as he was without farther ceremony. Others were for sending him with all speed to the DUKE of NORMANDY, and forcing him to make such a peace as should be for the advantage of all the princes of France. Those who proposed this, advised that the King should be restrained, and a strong guard set upon him; because a great prince is never, or with great caution, to be set at liberty after so notorious an affront. This opinion was so near prevailing, that I saw a person booted and ready to depart, having already several packets directed to the DUKE of NORMANDY, and waited only for the Duke's letters.'

"'The third night after this had happened, the DUKE of BURGUNDY did not pull off his clothes, but only threw himself twice or thrice upon the bed, and then got up again, and walked about, as his custom was when any thing vexed him. I lay that night in his chamber, and walked several turns with him. The next morning he was in a greater passion than ever, stormed exceedingly, and was ready to put some great thing in execution.'"

This entertaining little work is illustrated by boldly-sketched and well-executed portraits of LOUIS the TENTH, CHARLES the BOLD, and PHILIP DE COMINES, and we only lament that we have not more room to devote to it.

THERE are still, we believe, some persons sceptical as to the extent and increasing influence of the JESUITS in Ireland and England; with respect to the establishment of the order in the former country, perhaps the following detail may not be uninteresting to those whose liberality at least equals their judgment. We return our thanks to the Correspondent who has favoured us with it.

"In the year 1814, Castle Browne, the seat of the late WORGAN BROWNE, Esq. in the county of Kildare, was purchased by the Jesuits, for a college, at the sum of 16,000l. Only four Jesuits then came over from Palermo; they were Irishmen, educated abroad. MR. KENNY was then head, and each had his own department. MR. KENNY afterwards went to America, to found an establishment there, but has since returned, and was succeeded by MR. AYLMER, who is now the PRINCIPAL.

"In 1817, I first visited the College, and was received with the greatest politeness, and taken over every part by MR. DIENAN. They had then only 200 pupils, but were building additions to accommodate 500, besides noviciates, (or philosophers as he called them) to increase the order. In the short space of time, since their purchase, they had built nearly a little town, at the back of the college; having their own BUTCHERS, BAKERS, TAILORS, SMITHS, &c. ALL BELONGING TO THE ORDER, as lay brothers; and several more Jesuits came over from Italy and Russia, after the EMPEROR ALEXANDER HAD BANISHED THEM FROM HIS DOMINIONS. The strictest silence was observed by the pupils, who appeared not to dare speak till they got leave, which made me imagine some of them were dumb. At this moment there are between 3 and 400 pupils, besides paupers, whom they teach gratuitously. Their refectory in the new building is eighty feet long. The dormitories are a mirably constructed. One room contained 144 beds, placed in squares of sixteen in a square, and built up like pews in a church, so that no boy can see another undressing. Six of the masters walk up and down in turns ALL NIGHT, that not a word may be spoken. The boys have a separate room to wash and another to dress in; with boxes all round the wall for combs, &c. In ALL the rooms, where the pupils are, there are private places, where EVERY THING CAN BE SEEN AND HEARD, without the boys KNOWING THEY ARE WATCHED. They all answer to their NUMBER, not their names; and the College is increasing every day. The students are clothed, boarded, and taught for 50l. a year each; they know nothing of their own clothes, but when new ones are wanted they find them laid ready, and no enquiry to be made about them.

"In wet weather they walk up and down the cloisters, which go round three parts of the building. I feel persuaded the Jesuits have spies in most houses, as incidentally I found they were aware of MANY FAMILY OCCURRENCES, that, OTHERWAYS, they COULD NOT HAVE BEEN ACQUAINTED WITH. Their correspondence is EXTENSIVE, and they succeeded in having a POST-OFFICE established at Clane, the nearest village. They do NOT DENY their being JESUITS, and wear the habit of that order, which is peculiar. Their LAST GENERAL WAS A POLE, named BROWNISKI. There was an election for a new one about two years ago; which a DEPUTATION from CASTLE BROWNE (now called Clongowes wood College) went to Rome to attend. They have also an establishment at HARDWICKE-PLACE, in DUBLIN, where MR. ESMONDE (son of Dr. ESMONDE) and several other Jesuits reside, and they frequently preach CHARITY SERMONS in the several Popish chapels of the metropolis. There is a BRANCH connected with them in another part of the County of Kildare, but that I know nothing about, further than their funds, and pretend not to hear them, or evade it. On my enquiring if they were aided by private subscriptions or donations? The reply was, 'That door, Sir, leads to such an apartment.'—Their influence is VERY GREAT. Since THEY settled in the country, all Roman Catholic servants are forbidden to attend FAMILY PRAYERS IN A PROTESTANT FAMILY, who used to attend formerly, and very few are suffered to peruse the Holy Scriptures.

"February, 1823."

Our readers will please to observe that the visit of the writer was made to the College six years since, and that, in influence and numbers, the order has been gradually increasing ever since.

WE have uniformly declared our opinion to be against the formation of political societies and associations, because we honestly confess we never could discover the utility of them; our views upon this subject, however, are not in accordance with those of a very great portion of the public, and without saying one word on either side of the question at the moment, we lay before our readers the following communication from a valued correspondent. We may, perhaps, go so far as to remark that we never remember the country more tranquil, more loyal, or more happy than at the present moment: if we except that portion of the WHIGS which calls itself respectable, there does not appear, in any class of the community, a disposition to anything but peace and good order; indeed, we should be surprised if there were.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR,—As the Radical pamphlets and irreligious tracts with which the country is inundated, particularly in the manufacturing districts, directly tend to injure public morals, and engender hatred and contempt for legal authority, by making the people the willing tools of mob orators, demagogues and incendiaries, several Noblemen and Gentlemen, with a view of counteracting the impending evil, have, provisionally formed themselves into a "Loyal and Patriotic Corresponding Society," not to prosecute the dupes of blasphemy and misrule, but to circulate amongst them small publications, which clearly and succinctly point out the necessity and utility of obedience, and plainly refute and ridicule the dangerous and absurd doctrines of modern infidels and seditious innovators. It is intended, I understand, to convene a general meeting of the friends of the measure, at an early period, for the purpose of permanently establishing the society. The enclosed "proposals" fully explain the nature of the undertaking, and their insertion, therefore, in your highly useful and meritorious paper, will much oblige a numerous class of readers, who have admired and advocated the principles of "JOHN BULL" from its commencement.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your humble servant,

Paddington, June 24, 1823. DETECTOR.

"PROPOSALS FOR THE FORMATION OF A LOYAL AND PATRIOTIC CORRESPONDING SOCIETY.

"To promote and perpetuate the welfare of the community is the first and last object of legitimate Government, and it may be remarked that this object has been realized in England to a greater extent than in any other part of the world. As legislative protection is the safeguard of our civil rights and immunities, each individual, according to his ability, is bound to meliorate the condition of society, and defend its privileges against both outward and internal attacks. But prejudice, ignorance, and human depravity, frequently enervate the best regulations, and impede the decisions of superior wisdom. Passion and self-interest will often supersede truth and justice, and usurp the place of patriotism and philanthropy. The virtuous cheerfully lend their aid to support national establishments, while the vicious strive to annihilate and destroy them, under the specious pretext of reform and regeneration. The good man reforms himself and his family—the bad one pretends to introduce amendments every where except at home. The former augments the blessings of subordination and social order—the latter counteracts their efficacy, sets a bad example before his friends and neighbours, and violates those moral maxims which are pre-eminently calculated to render us happy and contented. In the one case, the bonds of union are rent asunder; and in the other they are invigorated and cemented, until the difference becomes extreme, and coercion is required to uphold the stability of the legal edifice. To supply the defect in question, and separate, by temperate methods, the good from the evil disposed, is the sole aim of the projected society; and as the means in contemplation appear practicable and easy, the most salutary and beneficial results may be confidently anticipated from the proceeding. Little pecuniary assistance, and a very moderate share of attendance, would be necessary to carry the design into immediate execution.

"The Plan is to open a Correspondence with the chief towns in the Empire—to encourage and foster similar establishments—and ascertain, as correctly as possible, the real ideas and dispositions of the loyal and disloyal, the peaceable and turbulent, throughout the three kingdoms. The names of the members to be entered in a book, and their summary description, with other particulars, transmitted to the parent Institution in London, for the purpose of enrolment. It is presumed that the adoption of this plan will concentrate a vast force of public opinion—infuse confidence amongst the uncontaminated portion of the people—and effectually intimidate and appal the devotees of infidelity and misrule. Useful doctrines might be promulgated, constitutional pamphlets disseminated, and absurd theories refuted. Besides, a valuable body of men would always be at hand, to rally round the throne and constituted authorities of the realm—to withstand the inroads of foreign foes, and oppose the machinations of domestic traitors; thereby fixing our liberties on an immoveable basis, and dissipating the crude and dangerous plots of innovators and incendiaries. How is it that the disaffected dare to raise their unhallowed heads, and menace us with anarchy and confusion? Is not mutual support the mainspring of their strength and the foundation of their partial popularity? An elaborate and systematic development of their nefarious schemes would speedily cause all good citizens to shun their contagious and pestilential influence.

"To elucidate the nature and utility of the measure under consideration, let us suppose that twenty Gentlemen commenced operations with suitable ardour and perseverance; these would quickly increase to forty; forty would readily recruit their numbers to eighty; and by multiplied exertions, the best part of the population would soon join the Society as a matter of course. Thus would disloyalty vanish, sedition "hide its diminished head," and sound principle reign triumphant; thus, on the discussion of weighty and important subjects, Parliament would not be obliged to encounter the audacity of demagogues, the denunciations of forensic insolence, nor the brutal outrages of hired and furious mobs."

At Mary-le-bone Office, on Wednesday, John Jamieson, a soldier in the Foot Guards, was fully committed for trial for attempting to extort money from an old man named Cordine, in the service of Mr. Scott, of Portman-square, under circumstances of great atrocity on the part of the prisoner.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

Bayonne Papers to the 27th ult. are chiefly filled with details of gratulatory fêtes given in compliment to the presence of the D of Angoulême, the narration of which is thus concluded:—"I own that there appeared to us to be an air of melancholy in Duchess, which threw a damp over the expressions of joy and tion at her presence; she has, however, been extremely with the exertions of the city to welcome her."—Her Royal H left Bayonne on the morning of the 26th ult. for St. Jean de whence, she will proceed to Irun, over the bridge which thrown across the Bidassoa.

On their were instantly made prisoners, and again sent off, without lowed a moment's rest, by way of Vianna and Bayonne. advanced from Lugo towards some small parties of French lately been at Villa Franca and Astorga, but have fallen back lencia or to Leon. Some troops were sent out from hence since, to attack a party of the Loyalists at a small village bad, about seven leagues from hence. Guerilla corps are every province. Shortly after his arrival at Oporto, Sir R lished the following address:—

"Portuguese!—I entered your country as an affectionate as an ancient companion of your arms, I entered it with the tion that I had founded indisputable titles to your esteem, no individual in your nation could ever charge me with him an injury or unkind action.

"I was on my way to your Government with propositions for your safety and honour, connected, as I believed that honour to be, with the cause of independence in Spain; not deny that I did not entertain some authorized hopes of relations which could have permitted me to participate in the glory of your achievements. Checked in my progress by the actions which occurred at Lisbon, and disappointed in every the royal declaration, that the counter-revolution would be rantee of peace between Portugal and the invaders, I gave of honour to the new Government of Oporto, notwithstanding internal affairs of Portugal during my residence in the country I sought immediately to regain the Spanish territory, without hostile to the right of Portugal to alter and construct her Government, at her own will and pleasure, however I might the exercise of that right in the present instance, and particularly the present moment.

Believe me, defiance of every calumny wherever I may be, and under circumstances you may find me, you will always be the object sincerest and most cordial regard.

Mr. Sams has been honoured by the ascension of his Royal Highness the Duke of York in likeness to Mr. Wivell, whose efforts on this occasion, it is to remark, have been at least equally successful as in the portrait of his Majesty which has excited such unqualified of public admiration. The engraving of his Royal Highness form in point of size, and style, and general excellence, an able companion to that of His Most Gracious Majesty.

On Wednesday a Special General Court of Proprietors of East Stock was held at the Company's House in Leadenhall street, purpose of considering of a Bill now is progress through Parlia

Mr. R. Jackson adverted to the principal provision of the Bill, by which the Bishop of Calcutta is authorized to ordain any persons, who, on examination, shall appear to be duly qualified, without calling on such individuals to subscribe to those tests which are taken in this country, by persons entering into Holy Orders. This was a power which, he contended, ought not to be exercised without mature consideration. This clause was objected to by most of the Proprietors, and the Bill was agreed to with the exception of the clause in question.

KING'S THEATRE.—At the conclusion of the first act of the ballet on Tuesday night, the musicians packed up their instruments and music-books and walked away, and the lights were partially put out without the least explanation from the manager, although repeatedly called for. The ladies becoming terrified by the darkness, the audience thought it proper, after giving vent to one general burst of indignation, to retire. At the close of the present season, the Italian Opera House will, it is said, fall into other hands, Mr. Ebers having disposed of his interest in the lease for the remainder of his term.

The surgeon is of opinion that the sight is totally gone.

DISINTERMENT OF THE LATE ABEL GRIFFITH.—On Tuesday morning, about 5 o'clock, after the watchmen had left duty, several persons were observed removing the earth from the spot where the body of the late Abel Griffith, the parricide, had been deposited in the cross-road at Pimlico; in a few minutes it was taken out of the hole and put into a hackney coach, which drove up at the same time, the shovels, &c. were also put in, and the coach immediately drove away at a quick pace. Just as they had commenced to dig away the earth a man came up, and pulling out a constable's staff, declared he would not suffer them to proceed; the men, however, continued their efforts, regardless of his opposition, and he went away after taking the number of the coach. The coachman afterwards took the body to Bow-street, and told the officer in attendance that "in the middle of the night" he was called from a stand in Oxford-street by a respectable looking man who ordered him to drive gently towards St. Giles's. He had not proceeded far before he was stopped, and another man got in, and further down a third entered the coach, and he was then ordered to drive to the end of Eaton-street, Pimlico, fast as possible. When he arrived there they got out and "went to work," and dug up the body that was buried there. They covered in the ground, placed the sod in the coach, and having covered his plates with some paper to prevent the number from being seen, they ordered him to drive to Foley Place. He did so, and in Foley place they got out, and having desired him to wait a few minutes, walked away down another street in a hurry. He waited about five minutes, when finding they did not return he began to be alarmed at the probable consequences to himself, of being found in the sole possession of a dead body, and determined to drive straight to Bow-street. The officer advised the coachman to take it to the workhouse in Mount-street, Grosvenor-place, and he drove away avowedly for that purpose, and we are informed that the body was eventually deposited there.—On Thursday night, we understand, it was buried in the burial-ground for the poor in St. George's parish. Some of the deceased's friends called at the Workhouse to see the body, and had an interview with the gentlemen composing the board of management. A coffin was provided, and the corpse carried in it upon a bier, by four of the paupers, to the grave.—On Thursday evening, Wm. Chiswick, driver of the hackney-coach, No. 81, which had been engaged to carry away the body from the grave, was brought in Queen-square Police-office, by Banks, the officer, and underwent an examination, but it could not be elicited who were the persons who employed him.

Monday morning, as Collinson, a waterman, was rowing down in Chelsea-reach, he found the body of a female about the middle age, and respectably dressed, she had no pockets on, and her legs were tied together with a cord, to which a heavy stone was attached, there were several bruises upon the face and arms.

The Londonderry Journal says, in the late affair at Magherafelt, four were killed, ten have been variously wounded, (two of whom have undergone amputation,) but not one is considered dangerous.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH.

TUESDAY.—Beer v. Ward.—This case occupied the attention of the Court for three days. It is an issue from the Lord High Chancellor, to try the question whether the late W. Cotton, Esq. was the legitimate son of Wm. and Rebecca Cotton, late of Etwall, in Derbyshire. This question was some time ago before the Common Pleas.—A mass of documentary evidence, and a great number of respectable witnesses were called to shew that the children of the father of Mr. Cotton were recognized as legitimate by Mrs. Cotton, grand-mother of the testator. For the defendant a vast number of witnesses deposed to the contrary, among their testimony adduced in this respect was that of above forty years, who produced the registry of the marriages in the The Rev. John Penrose, Rector of Fledborough, in Nottinghamshire, parish of Fledborough, from which it appeared, that on the 14th of June 1742, Wm. Cotton, of Collingham, and Rebecca Webster, of Newark, both in Nottinghamshire, were married by licence.—The next material evidence was that of Lady Corbet (now deceased) given at the last trial was read. Her Ladyship, who was the niece of Mr. W. Cotton, swore, that her family and the family of her uncle were not intimate in consequence of Mr. Cotton and Rebecca Webster being considered unmarried until after the birth of some of the children.—The evidence of Mr. H. Calverley Cotton was to this effect, I am a brother of the late Lady Corbet; I am nearly 70 years of age. The general impression upon my mind was, that my uncle William was not married until after the birth of some of his children. I heard my mother make observations upon the irregularity of her brother's life. I have heard my father and mother say that Mrs. Ward and W. Cotton were born before the marriage. My mother never visited them, and the reason assigned was, that they were not married.

On Wednesday the Soliciter-General was heard in reply. The Lord Chief Justice then summed up the evidence. At the conclusion of his Lordship's charge, the Jury retired from the box, and returned at a quarter past four o'clock. The question was then put:—"Gentlemen of the Jury, do you find by your verdict that the lunatic was legitimate, or illegitimate?"—The Foreman answered, "Legitimate." A verdict for the plaintiff was consequently recorded, which will establish the legitimacy.

EJECTMENT.—The King v. Bingley.—This was an action at the instance of the inhabitants against the Lord of the Manor of Edmonton, to try the propriety and legality of supporting this fair. A great many witnesses were called who described the exact spots on which it was held, and the variety of exhibitions and articles shown and sold there. The Solicitor-General, for the defendant, said, the fair was not shown to be a meeting expressly for the sale of goods and merchandise, but for amusement; merchandise being accidentally brought there to be sold. Mr. Justice Best was of opinion there was no evidence to show that this fair was so constituted as to be considered legally authorised, and directed the Jury to find a verdict for the Crown, which would have the effect of putting this fair down, as a nuisance to the passengers on the King's highway. The Jury accordingly found a verdict for the Crown.

OLD BAILEY.

Thomas William Bayly, of Gerard's Hall Tavern, Basing-lane, and John Thatcher, lately an innkeeper at Worth, in Sussex, were indicted for conspiring to defraud the creditors of the said Bayly. It was proved by several witnesses that goods were seen unloading at Thatcher's house at Worth, which the latter said he had bought of Bayly. Flower, late waiter to Bayly, proved packing up a quantity of plate, a piano-forte, and other articles, with which, accompanied by his master, he left town for Worth, and there they were deposited. The Jury found them Guilty, and they were sentenced to four months imprisonment in the House of Correction.

The Sessions finished on Wednesday, and the Recorder passed sentence of Death on the following convicts:—Samuel William Miles, for forgery; William Wills, for housebreaking; Charles Gibbs and John Wilson, for burglary; John Henderson, Sarah Haslewood, Robert Howe, George Bevis, and Hannah Hutchings, for stealing in a dwelling-house.—The Sessions were adjourned till the 10th of September.

A GENTLEMAN'S HAT.—WM. PRITCHARD respectfully informs the Public that he has succeeded in manufacturing a genteel and economical SUBSTITUTE for the SILK HAT, so decidedly in genteel style of appearance, and so injurious to the health by reason of the perfect resistance it opposes to the escape of the perspiration, thereby very probably laying a foundation for serious injury to the health. Wm. Pritchard presumes that the family experience as manufacturers for more than half a century will preclude the necessity of any assertion to his friends, while it may guarantee his pledge to the public that his articles shall be substantially good, possessing a genteel appearance and closeness of nap, &c. and at the very moderate price of twenty shillings. 239, Regent-street, corner of Princes-street, Hanover square.

SUPERFINE BEAVER HATS.—RICHARD HITCHEN, Hat-Maker, respectfully begs to solicit the attention of his Friends and the Public to an elegant and extensive assortment of Gentlemen's Superfine Beaver Hats, of the best possible manufacture and approved shapes, which he is now ready to submit to their inspection, on the most reasonable terms. Also, a great variety of Ladies' and Children's Leghorn, Straw, Chip, and Fancy Hats and Bonnets, trimmed in the most fashionable style. No. 23, King street, corner of New-street, Covent-garden, London.

PATTERSON'S ICE PAIL.—JOHN PATTERSON, Furnishing Ironmonger, No. 41, New Bridge-street, Blackfriars, has invented an Ice Pail on a new and philosophical principle; by means of which, Wines, Cream, Butter, Fruit, and other Substances, fluid or solid, may be cooled and kept cooled, with a degree of efficacy and precision hitherto unknown. To prove this, it may be sufficient to state, that if spring-water be placed in these Pails at the common temperature of 52 degrees, it will retain that temperature for many hours, although surrounded by an atmosphere 30 degrees higher; and if the water be cooled down, as it easily and quickly may be, by Ice, or by a substitute for Ice, which may be had with the Pail, to any given point, the same uniformity may be maintained, as to the lowered temperature for a great length of time.—PATTERSON'S CREAM FREEZERS, by which Ice Cream can be made without the aid of Ice, and in half the usual time, may also be had; together with ICE BUCKETS, by which Ice can be preserve for several days.

The above are warranted by the assignees, and the lowest price fixed, at WM. TODD and Co.'s, No. 5, Great Russel-street, Bedford-square.

NEW ESTABLISHMENT for the SALE of SILKS.—LEWIS and Co. having completed their large Manufactory for making silks, they are enabled to offer them full 30 per cent. cheaper than any other house in the kingdom. Rich wide levantines, 3s. to 4s. 6d.; Gros de Naples, 3s. to 4s. 9d.; good satins, 2s. to 3s. 6d.: figured Gros de Naples, 3s. to 4s. 9d. sold in shops at 7s. 6d.: ell-wide silks, 2s. 2d. to 3s. 6d.: shaded and striped Gros de Naples, 2s. 6d. to 4s. 6d. The much admired Marcellines silk, also the new French rips, with a great variety of new articles for morning and evening costume, to be had at no other house. Family mourning in all its branches. Morning gowns 3s. to 6d. 6d.: 365 soiled flounced muslin dresses at half price: 286 rich gauze dresses, 5s. 9d. to 30s. sold last year at 3 guineas; 65 veils, 5s. 9d. to 30s.; 60 superb lace dresses, 40s. to 5l. worth 5 and 10 guineas: 300 Tulle dresses, just imported from their establishment in Paris. Rich silk cloaks, 36s. to 63s.; superb ripp cloaks made in all fashionable colours: 615 yards of black velvet, 1s. 9d. per yard: 5-4 wide, 9d.; black and white sarsnets, 2s. to 3s. 6d.; silk hose, 2s. 6d. to 7s. Ladies may rely on every article being sold at the prices advertised.—Lewis and Co. 195, Regent-street, four doors from Conduit street. Extensive Millinery Rooms.—N.B. 300 Edinburgh and other silk shawls at one half their value.

FAMILIES LEAVING TOWN.—Previous to Ladies leaving the metropolis they are particularly recommended to inspect the remaining part of the fashionable summer stock of silks manufactured by SEWELL and CROSS, Silkmen, in every pleasing shade of colour, from the most quiet drab to the royal gold and amber, being the decline of the season for stocks, they are now selling at prices greatly under cost to effect every lady giving her orders from any part of the kingdom. Rich single Gros de Naples, 2s. 7d. to 2s. 10d. a yard; double do. in every shade of colour, 3s. 6d. to 4s. 6d.; rich levantine silks, measuring three quarters wide. 3s. to 5s.; very rich ducapes silks, an article for which this house has been long famed for, in ever pleasing colour, 4s. 6d. to 5s. 6d. commonly sold at 7s.; 500 pieces of stripe silks for ladies' morning dresses, 2s. 3d. to 2s. 6d.; 300 pieces of Italian nets, for evening dresses, 1s. 2d. a yard: the 5-4 wide, 9d. per yard: 1s. 6d.; muslin flounces, insertions, and robes. These articles ought to claim more than ordinary attention, as S. and C. take upon themselves to say they have purchased the last 4 wrecks of two unfortunate manufacturers in Glasgow, 400 very rich white robes, elegantly flounced, which they intend selling at 12s., 15s., and 18s; some of which cost the manufacturers 35s. and 2l.; with an endless variety of muslins, flounces, and insertions at one half price; ladies who have made purchases at this establishment before are the best judges of the quality of their silks, and may depend on having any article punctually forwarded to their country residence from Sewell and Cross, 42, Frith-street, corner of Old Compton-street Soho-square.

KENSINGTON LACE WORKS.—FIFTY POUNDS REWARD.—It having been repeatedly represented to the proprietors by Ladies who have been deceived, that several shopkeepers are in the habit of endeavouring to substitute the spurious starched Lace for the genuine Kensington Lace productions, the above reward will be paid on conviction of any persons committing such gross impositions. The Nobility, Gentry, and Public are respectfully informed that the real Kensington Lace, in every article of Dress, can only be had, retail and wholesale, with the distinguishing ticket attached, at the manufactory, 14, Kensington-square, Kensington, and at the Manufacturer's warehouse, 30, Southampton-street, Covent garden. Hours to view the machinery, process of manufacture, and lace works by young females, from 10 to 1, and 2 till 5. Orders by post promptly executed.

THE GREATEST BARGAINS IN SILKS AND SHAWLS EVER SEEN.—In consequence of the Spring Trade being nearly concluded, a great sacrifice will be made upon the following Articles for Ready Money; a reduction will be made from the ordinary prices at about 40 per cent. Handsome muzze ball dresses, 10s. 6d. to 15s. sold at 42s. figured gros de Naples, 3s. 6d.; French width levantines, 4s. 6d.; white satins, 3s.; patent washing satins for slips; bombazeens, 1s.; Norwich crapes, 15d.; stripe sarsenets, lutestrings, duchapes, poplins, velvets, flowered silks, muslin dresses, 3s. 9d.; lace veils at half-price, silk stockings, cambric and jaconnet muslins. Also an immense quantity of square and long shawls, a few pieces of the most eminent though unfashionable factories, which must be sold at less than half their original prices—those at 41s. in India red, blue, white, fawn, crimson and black were sold at 84s. now on sale at Brown and Co.'s, Silk Mercers, 15, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden.

FLOUNCED MORNING DRESSES, 3s. 6d. each; rich silk gauze ditto, 12s. 6d. handsomely flounced; 3000 elegant Moravian robes, from 7s. 6d. to 5 guineas: very handsome 8s. and 10s.; beautifully worked, with 2 and 3 flounces, 12s. 6d. to 15s.; and those at 18s. and 21s. are well worth 35s.; and some of the most beautiful Moravian work ever beheld at 28s. and 30s. equal to those generally sold at 52s. 6d.; an immense stock of rich yard wide French silks, 3s. 6d. to 4s.; washing silks, 2s.; rich coloured and white satins, 2s. 6d. a yd.; Indian nett 8½d.; rich Gros de Naples, 3s. 6d.; yard wide lavantines, very stout, 3s. 4d.; rich ditto, 3s. 9d. and 4s.; rich figured lutstrings, 3s. 6d.; beautifully shaded, 3s.; yard wide Norwich crapes, 14d.; good bombazines, 10½d.; stout Persians, 9d.; 2000 yards of the richest silks and satins in remnants, from 2½ yards long to 12 yards to be sold at little more than half price; yard wide fine thread netts, 2s. 6d. a yard, with a most extensive choice of ladies' silk hose at 2s. 9d. a pair; stout at 3s. 6d.; very finest working at 4s. 6d. and fine dress do. 5s. 6d.; beautiful embroidered, 6s. 6d.; kid gloves 6d. a pair; long white ditto, 12½; 300 dozen Persian striped shawls, 2s. 6d. each, with every description of family linens, full 15 per cent. lower than any other house in Europe. Ladies or Gentlemen proceeding to either Indies suited with every requisite in a very superior style, at HODGE and LOWMAN'S, Wholesale and Retail Linen Drapers, Argyll House, Regent-street, three doors from the Argyll Rooms. N.B. They have just imported the richest looms of fine French cambric handkerchiefs, from 10s. a dozen to 42s.; a good quality, 22s.; fine 25s.; very fine, 28s. and 30s.; curiously fine, 35s. which cannot be equalled by any other house at 52s. 6d. No credit given or abatement made, unpaid letters not answered.

LATEST NEWS.

Paris papers have arrived down to Thursday, and their contents are highly interesting. The Duke of San Fernando Y. Quiroga, at the head of the deputation of the Grandees of Spain, assembled all in a General Junta, the instant he heard of the outrage committed on the king at Seville. The Assembly proposed that they should make an offer "of their persons, property, and all that they hold most dear," for the purpose of setting their captive King at liberty. The proposition was unanimously agreed to, and published in a Madrid Gazette Extraordinary.

We have received letters from Cadiz to the 20th inst. The Cortes re-assembled on the 18th; one hundred and ten Members were present, and declared that the Regency had deserved well of the country. They received the congratulations of the municipality of Cadiz, and referred to a special commission the proposition inviting the Government to indicate the means of rescuing the country from the real crisis in which it is placed. They afterwards occupied themselves with sanitary measures and with regulations relating to the laying up of provisions. They also directed the Committee of Legislation to present a project of law to suspend prosecutions for crimes of high treason and conspiracy. The Royal Family was transferred on the 18th inst. to the Palace of the Custom House. Sancho Salvador, Minister at War, cut his throat with a razor on the morning of the 18th, after having spent the night burning his papers. He left a writing, in which he declared that he terminated his life with the consolation of never having committed any crime. The City of Cadiz refused to admit the Madrid Volunteers who remained in the Isle of Leon. There are scarcely 5,000 men to guard both the Isle of Leon and Cadiz. General Vicolet has taken the command of all the troops; Zayas is not trusted. The two divisions of Generals Bourdesoult and Bourmont must have effected their junction on the 25th before Cadiz. Our squadron had also arrived in the Bay, and must have established its communications with the land.

Lord Clanwilliam, who succeeds Mr. Rose as Ambassador at Berlin, arrived at Frankfort on the 26th ult.

Yesterday morning the 2d and 3d battalions of the 1st or Grenadier regt. of Guards were reviewed in Hyde Park by the Duke of York. His Royal Highness was accompanied by the Duke of Wellington, and a numerous staff. Col. Townsend put the men through numerous evolutions, which they performed to the satisfaction of their officers.

The East India Company's ship Coldstream, has arrived off Dover. She sailed from St. Helena on the 16th of May for England. The Warren Hastings arrived at St. Helena on the 12th, and the Marchioness of Ely on the 15th of May.

In the Insolvent Debtors' Court, yesterday, James Beaumont was opposed for fraudulently making away with property, and putting his créditor (a relative) to great expences in frivolously defending an action. The charge was proved, and the Court sentenced the Insolvent to be confined for eighteen months within the walls of the prison.

At Bow-street, yesterday, the Magistrate was for a time occupied in hearing complaints from the officers against servants, for their violent and outrageous conduct the preceding night during the Radical Spanish Ball at Covent-garden Theatre.—Charles Read, one of the Patrole, stated, that between three and four, A.M. so completely were the passages of the theatre blocked up by servants, that no person could retire therefrom; he, along with other officers, was called in to clear the way, and in the performance of this duty a footman in the service of the Earl of Breadalbane collared him violently, and but for the aid of constables would have laid him on his back between the horses feet. Two other officers proved Read's statement, adding, that so tight did the servant hold him, that his face was black before they could rescue their companion.—The Noble Lord's servant partly admitted his conduct, but pleaded his master's directions.—The Magistrate said, that unless an apology was made to Read, he would send the case to the Sessions, cautioning him at the same time against receiving any pecuniary satisfaction.—The parties retired and shook hands.—A number of brawls and broken carriages are likely to be enquired into in the beginning of the week, arising out of this fete.

Daniel, Shiloh, Judah, St. George Rex! when interpreted, literally Is—the Judge of God—sent—to praise—his holy—and royal—Husbandry: i. e. regal plants of righteousness, which are to afford the Divine Majesty exquisite delight in the restored Paradise on earth before and during the Millenium.—N.B. Mr. Phillips's "Prophetic Sceptre," recall the nations of the earth, at this great, and very alarming, most perilous crisis, is constantly to be had, gratis, at No. 52, Paternoster row, olde 2 Cor. xi. 12 to 15; 2 Peter ii.; Matt. xxiv. 23 to 28; Deut. xviii. 1 to 5; and particularly Rev. ii. 20 to 25!!!

ELEGANT GLASSES, FURNITURE, &c.—The Nobility and Gentry are invited to inspect the Ware rooms of Cooper and Son, 93, Bishopsgate Within, where is exhibited a large Assortment of new and second-hand Plate Glasses, admirably suited to every description of drawing or dining-rooms. The prices are just reduced 40 per cent. on plates measuring 100 inches by 72, and upwards; and on those of smaller dimensions the alteration will be found equally important. The extensive preference given to this Establishment is thankfully acknowledged by the Proprietors, who, in their endeavours to evince their gratitude, by manufacturing articles in a superior manner, at prices suitable to the times, hope to merit a continuance of public support. In the furniture department is comprised every new and elegant article of upholstery, cabinet, and chair work, regulated upon such a scale of economy as to demand and ensure the patronage of rank and fashion.

FEETHAM'S SHOWER BATH, by the KING'S PATENT, for adjusting the force or quantity of water as agreeable, and the shower is increased or diminished at pleasure by persons using the Bath, rendering it suitable to persons of delicate habits or constitutions, either as a medical or pleasure Bath; it is made in every variety of situation as the size of the apartments. To be had at W. and M. Feetham's Store and Bath Manufactory, 9, Lancaster-hill, and 296, Oxford-street. A large assortment of Baths ready for inspection. Warm and Vapour Baths fitted up on a new and improved principal of economy and convenience.

D. VAN BUTCHELL, Surgeon, Man-Midwife, Son, and Assistant, of the late Martin Van Butchell, recommended by persons of distinction (references are given with permission), continues to cure Fistulæ, Piles, &c. by the improved method so long and successfully practised by his father, without Confinement, Cutting, Caustic, or Risk, for suitable fees.—No. 48 South-street, Berkeley square, London. At home till one daily. No remuneration required from persons of respectability, until they are satisfied a cure has been performed.

PRAY DONT LAUGH.

ALTHOUGH the Russia Bears laugh at the English Bulls, as there are petty perfumers, hair dressers, and others, who melt bullocks' fat and put it in pots, and take in the public by pretending to sell them Bears' Grease: but it is well known in Russia and other parts in the North, as bears' grease alone is too hard and harsh for the hair, and makes the hair turn grey and fall off, as a proof, the Greatest Personage in the North, and other persons of distinction, lost their hair at an early age, through using Bears' Grease for the hair; therefore, whoever recommends Bears' Grease in this country for the hair, must do it for imposition, or ignorant of its injurious effects upon the hair; but Prince's celebrated Russia Oil is mixed with the most nourishing oils in Europe, and it is always like a jelly, and it is proved by every one who has given it a fair trial, to be the only article that actually preserves and promotes the hair. Even Medical Gentlemen have published in the Gazette of Health, that Prince's Russia Oil is superior to any Oil for the Hair, and will, in cases of baldness and weak hair, what can possibly be done in the thickening, strengthening, and restoring it, if there is the least sign of roots. Ladies and Gentlemen will be particular, as impostors have made the covers of the Counterfeit Russia Oil like the Genuine; therefore Purchasers should be cautious, and have it of the Proprietor, or of respectable Venders. Ask for Prince's Improved Russia Oil with the ex ra ingredient, and observe his address "A. Prince, 9, Poland-street, Oxford-street, London," is on the cover of each bottle; without it is not genuine, and cannot answer the purpose. The ounce bottle 5s., or a large bottle, containing five ounces, for One Pound, which is a saving. Sold by the Sole Proprietor, A. Prince, No. 9, Poland-street, Oxford-street, near the Pantheon; and by most principal Perfumers and Medicine Venders.

BIRCHIN-LANE, CORNHILL.

CORPORATION of the LONDON ASSURANCE of HOUSES and GOODS from FIRE. Established by Royal Charter, in the Year 1720, for making Assurances against Loss or Damage by Fire, and for Assuring Lives.

The Public are hereby informed, that in conformity with the Plan lately adopted, Tables are prepared and now ready for delivery at this Office, for Life Assurances, the payments to be completed in short periods, according to the convenience of the Assured. The Rates upon Life Assurances are considerably reduced, and this benefit will be extended to the Old Policies, in respect to their future payments.—Persons Insured will have leave to pass in Steam or other decked Vessels (during peace) between any ports of the United Kingdom, and also between Great Britain and any Ports of the Continent, or Islands in the Channel, without the limits of the Penzance and Brest, without the necessity of applying for special permission as heretofore required.—Fire Insurances continue to be effected with this Corporation on the most moderate terms; and a deduction of one year's premium and duty, is made upon Insurances for seven years.—A discount of five per cent. is allowed on the fire premiums upon shipping.—N. B. A liberal Allowance to Professional Men, and others, introducing Insurances.

EUROPEAN LIFE INSURANCE and ANNUITY COMPANY, No. 10, Chatham-place, Blackfriars.—Persons affecting Insurances with this Company, for the whole period of life, are immediately entitled to participate in whatever division of profit shall take place, which, with the reduced rate of Premium demanded, will enable all descriptions of persons to make a provision for their families on terms the most unexceptionable. Tables have also been calculated by which the Premiums may be paid Quarterly, Half-Yearly, or Annually, at the option of the Insured. No charge is made for Entrance or for Policy, except the stamp. The Insured are permitted to go in steam, or other decked vessels, to and from any part of the united kingdom, and in time of peace to and from any part of the Continent, situated between the Elbe and Brest, without being required to pay additional Premium, or to procure a licence from the Directors. This Company contines to advance Money on Annuity, secured on Freehold, Copyhold, or long Leasehold Property, or Money in the Funds. JOHN CLARK, Managing Director.

BEACON FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY, No. 8, CHATHAM-PLACE, BLACKFRIARS, London.

Directors:

Robert Ward, Esq. M.P. Chairman—John Wray, Esq. Deputy Chairman.

Benjamin Ansley, Esq.	David Laing, Esq.
Henry James Bouverie, Esq.	Lawrence B. Morris, Esq.
Henry Hallam, Esq.	Sir Henry Parnell, Bart. M.P.
George Hammersley, Esq.	William Sotheby, Esq.
John Adair Hardy, Esq.	Wm. Robert Spencer, Esq.

John Clark, Esq. Managing Director.

Bankers—Messrs. Hammersley and Co. 69, Pall Mall, and Sir P. Pole, Bart. Thornton, and Co. Bartholomew-lane.

The above Company offers the following advantages—1st. The Premium for Insurances on Private Dwellings, not deemed hazardous, is 1s. 6d. per cent. in lieu of 2s.—2d. A reduction is made of 5 per cent. on the duty paid to Government.—3d. Insurances effected during lives, or for a fixed period.—4th. The payment of Rent may be insured during the rebuilding of Premises.—5th. A weekly allowance to Tradesmen and others, during the same period.—6th. Five per cent. is paid on the amount insured within one week after the fire takes place, and the remainder as soon as the loss can be ascertained.—Directors meet every Thursday, at No. 8, Chatham-place.

LAW LIFE ASSURANCES SOCIETY, established for the purpose of granting Assurances for Lives and Survivorships. Office, No. 58, Lincoln's Inn-fields. Assurances are effected by this Society upon the Lives of all persons, whether in the Army, Navy, Church, Law, or other ranks of life. The Capital of the Society is One Million Sterling.

Additions to the sums specified in the Policies of Persons Assuring for the whole term of life will be periodically made out of the savings of the Society, in a manner more advantageous than can be obtained in any other Office, having a subscribed capital, and exempting the assured from all liability. The assured will have the power to Elect annually, after the 24th of June, 1825, two of the four Additions. Every person not being able to continue the payment of his Premiums, may either sell his Policy to the Society, who will purchase it, or in lieu thereof, may receive another Policy payable at his decease, and he will not be required to pay any annual sum for the payments for such new Policy. Persons assured in this Office, are at liberty to pay the Premiums by payments, by payments for a limited number of years, or by continuing annual payments at their own option. Forfeited Policies may be received at any period within six months after the forfeiture, on the payment of a fine to be fixed by the Board of Directors, not exceeding 10s. per cent. on the total sum Assured, or the Policies may be received at any period within thirteen months, on the payment of such fines as a Board of Directors may think reasonable. This Office does not require any extra premium from persons engaged in the army, or navy, unless when called into actual service. Entrance money is not required, nor is any charge made for Policies beyond the cost of the Stamp.

Attendance is given daily at the Office, 58, Lincoln's Inn-fields, from ten till four o'clock, where the terms of Assurance may be had. Proposals for effecting Policies received, and every information respecting the Society obtained. The Board days are on Tuesdays and Fridays at two o'clock.

JAMES ANDERTON, Secretary.

THE ALLOYS of STEEL, made by Messrs. STODART and FARADAY, are now USED in the MANUFACTURE of EDGE INSTRUMENTS, by D. and S. STODART, 401, Strand. The respective Alloys are treated exactly as directed by the practical Chemists, to whose genius and perseverance we are indebted for this most valuable discovery in the Arts. As proofs of their excellence, Razors and Penknives, with various other articles, are submitted with perfect confidence, to public judgment. Sold at the manufactory, and by their agents, Messrs. Smith and Elder, Booksellers and Stationers, 158, Fenchurch-street.—D. and S. Stodart having for many years been assistants to their relation, Mr. J. Stodart, who has relinquished the business of Cutler and Surgeon's Instrument Maker in their favour, and who kindly continues to them his advice and assistance; they humbly solicit a continuance of public favour, trusting, that by attention and punctuality they will prove themselves worthy of it.

SELLING OFF, without the least reserve, at No. 111, Oxford-street, and corner of Regent Circus, by order of the Executors of the late Mr. J. Rice (who upwards of 30 years carried on the business of silk mercer and linen draper at the above premises, and who had the honour of serving most of the royal family and nobility, consequently the present stock, consisting of levantines, double sarsnets, Gros de Naples, satins, Irish linen, Irish and Russia sheeting, counterpanes, and quilts of all sizes, with every other article for family use, are of the richest and most approved manufactory; the whole of which, together with an immense quantity of superb shawls and opera cloaks, will be sold for the benefit of the family, consisting of nine children, at such prices as to enable a stock of 18701. to be cleared off in a very short period; the only correct idea that can be given of the prices is that they do not exceed the half they originally cost. The advantage to be derived by an early inspection must be obvious to those Ladies about to purchase any of the above articles.

STOCK EXCHANGE OPEN LOTTERY.

PIDDING and Co. never knew a Lottery commence so closely as the present, for they actually sold, at their Office, Change-hill, more Tickets in the first week only, viz. from May 21 to 27, than in either of the two previous Lotteries, during the whole time they were open. This arises from its being an open contract, and Tickets and Shares can be procured at prices very little beyond their intrinsic value, but it is expected they must advance, the demand increasing and the supply decreasing, thus:

A Sixteenth now is only		£1 5
An Eighth	only	2 10
A Quarter	only	5 0

There is another cause for the present unexampled demand at Spidding's Office, it is known that Lotteries are at last expiring, the drawing of which is hereby, for the Chancellor of the Exchequer has officially announced to the House of Commons that Government have determined to discontinue them. It is therefore, to be wondered at, that during this limitation of opportunity the public so readily adopt the suggestion of a morning paper, "that it is the best well venture," whilst the recollection of extraordinary past success attaches to the Lucky Corner, No. 1 Cornhill.

DUBLIN and BRISTOL.—The ST. PATRICK sails from Bristol every Tuesday, and from Dublin every Friday: the HIBERNIA, from Bristol every Friday, and Dublin every Tuesday. The following are the days of departure for the next four weeks.

From Bristol	From Dublin
July 8 — 7 morning	July 25 — 8 morning
11 — 9 morning	29 — 8 morning
15 — 12 morning	Aug. 1 — 8 afternoon
18 — 3 afternoon	5 — 8 morning
22 — 6 morning

From Dublin, at from 7 to 9 o'clock each morning.—The size and superior accommodation of these superb Packets, and the immense power of their engines, which are double that of the others upon the station, render their passage to Dublin channel certain and regular; they are not subject to the uncertainties of detention by troops for the War-office, nor to the inconvenience of waiting for the tide, nor to the dangerous shoals of the Liffey, to take them up to Dublin; but, on the contrary, being landed at the fine harbour of Kingstown, in large commodious steam vessels, longing to the establishment, where carriages are readily procured to convey them to Dublin, the distance being only five miles, and the road delightful. The Packets sail punctually, passengers are required to be on board at least one hour before the time stated.—Births secured on application, post paid, to Messrs. S. Protheroe, Cumberland Basin, Bristol, or Mr. Geo. B. Barton, Quay, Chichester-wick-street, Dublin, and further information will be given by Messrs. Pidding and Co. No. 12 Regent-street, Pall Mall, London, or Mr. Reilly, York Place, Dublin.

PENLLINE COURT, near Cowbridge, Glamorganshire. LETT unfurnished, and entered upon the 29th September next, with every convenience, and calculated for either a large or small family. The House contains well proportioned dining and drawing-rooms, each 21 feet by 18, bookcase, good sized bed-rooms, butler's-room, two kitchens, store-room, pantries, water closet, detached brewhouse and wash-house, with every excellent stabling, with rooms over, coach-house, cart-house, barn, cow stalls, piggeries, fuel-house, and all other requisite out-offices. The premises immediately surrounding the house, including gardens, orchards, &c. contain seven acres. The lawn in front is laid out with shrubs, flower and kitchen beds, &c. and thriving young plantations meet the eye in most directions from the house, forming altogether a highly desirable, comfortable, and retired residence. The whole has lately undergone great improvements at considerable expense. The village of Penlline is near the turnpike-road leading over a bridge to Swansea, and distant about three miles from the British Channel, from Cowbridge, and five from Bridgend, both good and cheap market towns. The situation proverbially healthy, the neighbourhood respectable, excellent sporting country, and an exclusive right of shooting over seven hundred acres. Rent and taxes particularly moderate. Any quantity of arable land may be taken with the House, and also Cottages for workmen, if required. Apply to Dr. Salmon, Mead House, Tidenham, Gloucestershire; or to Mr. Rhuvelan, near Cardiff, Glamorganshire. All written applications must be post paid.

TO BE LET, ready Furnished with every requisite, for a term, an exceedingly delightful VILLA, situate in the centre of Epping Forest, with 20 acres or more of meadow land, coachman's house, dairy house, stabling for 7 horses, cow-house, poultry yard, melon ground, &c. &c. well stocked with fruit, all in admirable order, and having lately been in the occupation of a most respectable family. The house contains on the first and second stories, drawing room, sitting room, 9 chambers, 2 capital dressing rooms, on the ground floor, entrance hall, with billiard table, dining room, breakfast parlour, kitchen, butler's pantry, cook's room, store closets, dairy, &c. with a washhouse and brewhouse detached; in the basement, excellent cellarage for coal, and other cellars. The post leaves and a stage passes twice a day. For particulars and cards to view, apply, post paid, to Benjamin Reed, 29, Fenchurch-buildings, Fenchurch-street, London.

SURREY.—CHARLWOOD PARK ESTATE, with the Mansion, Offices, Farm Houses, and Capital Farm Yards, &c. to be SOLD by PRIVATE CONTRACT, consisting of an Elegant Sporting Residence, with Manor nearly 30 miles in circumference, well stocked with Game, and 474 Acres of Freehold Land, and a Rich Pasture over 900 Acres of Unincloused Land; with suitable Farm Houses, &c. situate along the Turnpike Road, midway between London and Brighton, and about 4 miles from Reigate. The Villa is placed on an elevated situation, commanding Views, diversified with all the beauties of nature and art. There is a good kitchen garden, farm-house, stables, coach-house, and every requisite for a pack of hounds, at a convenient distance from the residence, and the whole of the farm-house have been built within twenty years. Postage only 1d. in the pound, all other rates low. The neighbourhood being noted for the Sporting World renders the situation peculiarly suited to the lessee of the Manor. To be viewed by cards only, which, with descriptive particulars, may be had of the first of July of Mr. Vaux, Land Agent and Surveyor, 3, Serle-street, Bloomsbury, who is authorized to treat for the same; a particular estate may be had at his office. Particulars may also be had of the Auctioneer, Brighton, Plough, Cheltenham, White Hart, Bath, and Mitre, Oxford, to be post paid.

And, 4th, Subscribers are admitted to the use of a costly series of Publications, embellished with highly finished and coloured Engravings, which illustrate in a beautiful manner the History, Antiquities, Costumes, Scenes, Pastimes, &c. of the Ancient and Modern World, together with Maps and Atlases.—Catalogues with Terms to be had on application. Books regularly forwarded to all parts of the United Kingdom and the Continent.—27, Old Bond-street, July, 1823.

LITERATURE.—To BOOKSELLERS and PUBLISHERS.—A Young Man, of respectable connexions, and with some Classical Attainments, wishes to engage with a Publisher or Literary Gentleman as his ASSISTANT. He has during the last two years been employed in COMPILING for a London Publisher, and has recently published an original Work. Letters (post paid) addressed to X. Y. Z. Mr. Miller's, 69, Fleet-street, will meet with immediate attention.

REVIVING of Classical Learning, Reading during Vacations from College, Preparation for the University, or for Holy Orders.—A married CLERGYMAN, A.M. of Oxford, accustomed to Tuition, receives into his House a few PUPILS only, whom he prepares for admission at College with strict responsibility, or for their respective Professions; he has ONE Vacancy.—For Terms, &c. address (post-paid) to L.M. Witney, Oxon.

PRIVATE PUPIL. A Married Gentleman, of the Established Church, resident a convenient distance from London, and receiving a few Pupils into his House, has now a VACANCY, the most satisfactory references can be given to Noblemen and Gentlemen whose sons have been under his care. Letters to be addressed to the Rev. E. S. I., Mr. Egerton's, Bookseller, Whitehall, London.

A MARRIED CLERGYMAN who has taken his Degree at Oxford, and who has obtained University Honours, RECEIVES PUPILS into his house whom he prepares for the Public Schools and Universities. The Pupils are treated in the most liberal way.—TERMS, 100 guineas per annum.—Letters addressed, post paid, to the Rev. B.A. at Mr. Harris's, Bookseller, St. Paul's Church-yard, will be immediately attended to.

EDUCATION.—Gentlemen are respectfully informed, that the Advertiser, who is a Member of the University of Cambridge, and has long been engaged in Educating a select number of Young Gentlemen, for every respectable Department of Society, has VACANCIES for Three Pupils. The Advertiser is confident that no pupils of ordinary talents and moral principles will fill these vacancies but with comfort to themselves and great satisfaction to their friends. This establishment, is, throughout, conducted on principles generally allowed to be far superior to others for improvement in every branch of education, and to be excelled by none except the Universities. Particulars to be known, only, by addressing D. D. post paid, at Andrews's Library, 167, New Bond-street.

A Married MEDICAL GENTLEMAN, residing in a small Market-Town, in one of the most healthy parts of the County of Buckingham, is desirous of receiving into his House a Lady or Gentleman, whose Mental State requires the daily care of a Professional Man. The first professional and moral testimonials can be produced, and will be expected.—Apply for particulars to A.B. Post-office, Buckingham.

A CLASSICAL ASSISTANT WANTED for a School in the Country.—For particulars address (post-paid) to C.C.C. to the care of Mr. Wetton, Bookseller, Fleet-street.

A LADY, who, with the assistance of an accomplished resident Governess, is EDUCATING the Daughter of a Gentleman with her own, wishes to receive a few more PUPILS. Terms moderate. Particulars, which the advertiser flatters herself will satisfy the most scrupulous inquirer, may be obtained by applying (if by letter, post paid) to the Rev. John Greenwood, Christ Hospital.

PURE FRENCH.—A Protestant Lady of English Parentage, though French her infant tongue, residing in her own house, pleasantly situated in the environs of town, would be happy to meet with a genteel Female wishing to acquire the Parisian dialect, who would join her in the expenses of house-keeping, or to board and lodge with her.—This advertisement is only addressed to such as either know from personal experience, or from the accounts of others, the awkward situation English females are so often placed in when abroad, from the want of that idiom, which so few professed Instructors of the French Language are capable of giving.—Address, Post Paid, to A. B. Wolten's Library, No. 23, Mount Street, Lambeth.

ANY LADY having a general acquaintance among Musical Families of opulence and respectability, and who would consider a present of TWENTY GUINEAS worth her acceptance, may have that sum immediately, for her good offices exerted in a way perfectly honourable, and likely to produce a permanent feeling of gratitude.—Address (post paid) to S.S. Two-penny Post-Office, Baker-street, Portman-square.

CORONATION.—HENRY ASTON BARKER'S PANORAMA, Leicester-square.—Now Open, a Grand Representation of the CORONATION PROCESSION, with Portraits of His MAJESTY, GEORGE the FOURTH, the ROYAL DUKES, and several others; particularly of the late Marquis of LONDONDERRY, in the full Habit of the Order of the Garter. The Panorama exhibits at least Thirty Thousand Figures!!!—A VIEW of LAUSANNE, with the LAKE of GENEVA, is also open.—Admittance to each Painting, 1s.

BOARD AND LODGING.—The Widow of a Professional Man having lately formed an Establishment for Ladies and Gentlemen has two VACANCIES, she flatters herself the liberal plan of conducting it renders it equal to a private family.—For Cards of address apply at No. 3, South-row, Blackheath, or at No. 60, Cheapside, and 308, Oxford-street.—Respectable references will be required.

LOST, on Friday, the 11th of July, instant, about 8 o'Clock in the Evening, near the Turnpike gate on the road between Dulwich and Beckenham, a GOLD WATCH, with a ribbon attached. A Gentleman going towards London in a gig, accompanied by a lady and child, was seen to pick it up close to the Turnpike-gate, and will be traced. A Reward of FIVE POUNDS will be paid on restoration of the Watch to Messrs. Wharton and Ford, Solicitors, No. 62, Lincoln's-Inn-fields.

MONEY on EQUITABLE TERMS.—The Advertiser advances Money to any extent, at moderate interest, whether on Freehold, Copyhold, Leasehold, Lifehold, Funded, Church Livings, or other ample Security, and assures those who may honour him with their confidence, that they will experience treatment the most candid, liberal, and expeditious, though similar business is sometimes viewed with mistrust, from the mal-practices of dishonest people.—Letters, post-paid, to A. Z. care of Mr. Williams, glover, Inner Temple-lane, Fleet-street, will receive immediate attention; where also a card of address may be had.—Reversions are purchased.

TO BE SOLD BY AUCTION, on Monday, 14th July, by Mr. C. DUBOIS, 38, King street, Covent-garden, SHELLS.—Many of the greatest rarity, and some Nondescript, with a remarkable fine Orange Cowry without a hole; all in one preservation.—Sale to begin at 12 o'clock.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—The rude and unskilful attempts constantly made to supply these substitutes for the masticatory organ, and the disgust which delicacy suffers from the unpleasantry attending them when permanently fixed, have deterred many from adopting the aid and comfort they are capable of affording, independent of the assistance they may contribute to digestion and consequent health. The ingenious application of mechanical science will enable us to obviate all these inconveniences, and allow the wearer at all times to keep the mouth in a state of perfect cleanliness, and to perform the functions of mastication, articulation, &c. with decided ease and comfort.—Mr. NICHOLLES begs to state, that he is in constant attendance from ten to four, and will be happy to give ocular demonstration of the comforts derived from his efforts, under every circumstance of simple and complicated deficiency.—115, Fleet-st.

DUBLIN and BRISTOL.—The ST. PATRICK sails from Bristol every Tuesday, and from Dublin every Friday; the HIBERNIA leaves Bristol every Friday, and Dublin every Tuesday. The following are the hours of departure for the next four weeks.

From Dublin, at from 7 to 9 o'clock each morning.—The size and strength of these superb Packets, and the immense power of their engines, being nearly double that of the others upon the station, render their passages across the channel certain and regular; they are not subject to the annoyance of carrying troops for the War-office, nor to the inconvenience of waiting for tides among the dangerous shoals of the Liffey, to take them up to Dublin, their passengers being landed at the fine harbour of Kingstown, in large commodious boats belonging to the establishment, where carriages are readily procured to convey them to Dublin, the distance being only five miles, and the road delightful. As the Packets sail punctually, passengers are required to be on board half an hour before the time stated.—Births secured on application, post paid, to Mr. Thomas S. Protheroe, Cumberland Basin, Bristol, or Mr. Geo. E. Davies, Great Brunswick-street, Dublin, of whom further information will be given by Mr. J. MEMOIRS of COUNT RAPP, First Aid-de-Camp to Napoleon. Written by Himself, and published by his Family, containing a multitude of curious facts and anecdotes hitherto unknown.

"What this work is highly interesting for is the intimate knowledge it gives us of the character of the French soldiery, and their leader. We have had several accounts of Bonaparte in his banishment, but Rapp saw him in the height of his prosperity, and in his trials, at the moment of giving orders for battle, in action, in victory, in retreat."—Times.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY.

The Exchequer Bills, the Irish Court of Exchequer, the Irish Church Rates, the East India Half Pay, the Irish Vessels Passage, the Equalization of Duties, and the Irish Duties and Drawbacks Bills were brought up from the Commons and read a first time.

LORD HOLLAND brought in a Bill to relieve persons married abroad from all doubts respecting the validity of their marriage, which was read a first time.

On the question for going into Committee on the Scotch Transfer of Securities Bill,

The EARL OF ABERDEEN moved that it be read that day three months, as the Bill would introduce a principle entirely new respecting hereditable property. The amendment was carried.

The EARL OF LIVERPOOL moved the House to go into Committee on the Irish Insurrection Act Renewal Bill.

EARL DARNLEY asked whether the Noble Earl intended to state any reasons for the Bill being introduced.

The EARL OF LIVERPOOL thought the necessity for the measure had already been admitted. He did not believe there was a single man who intended to reside in Ireland who was not fully impressed with the necessity of the renewal.

The EARL OF LIMERICK deeply lamented the necessity of the measure, but it would be impossible to live a fortnight in Ireland if such a measure should not pass.

The DUKE OF LEINSTER said, that Ministers refused all enquiry into the affairs of Ireland, and that being the case he could not consent to give them the powers contained in the Bill.

EARL DARNLEY contended that enquiry was necessary before such a Bill should be allowed to pass. The affairs of Ireland were at present in a more unfortunate state than they had ever been before, notwithstanding the hopes held out at the time of His Majesty's visit. He should himself, next session, bring forward an enquiry into the affairs of Ireland.

LORD CALTHORPE believed that the Act would be limited by the necessity that called for it. But the state of Ireland called for anxious and serious investigation. The elective franchise there seemed to be a symbol of vassallage, and that very circumstance called for enquiry on the part of Parliament. He looked at the Catholic religion in Ireland as existing in its darkest and most degraded state. Wherever the spirit of christianity prevailed, it tended to elevate the character of the people, and if that was not the case in Ireland, it shewed the depth of the darkness which overshadowed the land. He believed that the church of Ireland had acquired, and was acquiring much more efficiency than formerly, from which the best effects might be expected.

The House divided. Contents 36—Non-contents, 5—Majority, 31. The House then went into Committee.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH stated his opinion, that the Act was more calculated to irritate than to conciliate.

The DUKE OF WELLINGTON said, the advantage of the Act was to keep the people in their houses at night, as it was in the night that the outrages were committed. The military were ready to assist the Magistracy, but he must protest against their bearing all the odium.

EARL FITZWILLIAM had never given a vote with more satisfaction than against the committal of the Bill.—The Bill then went through the Committee.

On bringing up the Report of the Committee on Appellate Jurisdiction, the EARL of DARLINGTON thought that the Royal Family should be exempted from the provisions of this Bill.

The EARL of LIVERPOOL said, the Royal Family would be better pleased not to be exempted.

The EARL of DARLINGTON wished to substitute 100l. for 50l. as the penalty for non-attendance.

After some conversation on the part of Lords Holland, Liverpool, Rosslyn, Ellenborough, Darlington, and Bexley, the Resolution for 50l. was adopted, and the Resolutions were ordered to be entered on the Journals.

TUESDAY.

The Royal Assent was given, by commission, to the Beer, the Larcenies, the Felonies, the Irish Elections, and several private Bills.

The Barilla Duties, the Lottery, and the Irish Court of Chancery Bills were passed.

The Prisons Regulation, the Irish Stamps, and Viscount St. Vincent's Pension Bills brought up from the Commons, and severally read a first time.

The EARL of LIVERPOOL moved the second reading of the Irish Tithe Commutation Bill. The Noble Earl stated the objects of this Bill, which were in effect to give strength to the Established Church of Ireland, by removing the causes which injured and weakened it. The evils which prevailed in that country did not arise from Tithes, but from the number of small farms with indigent cultivators, and from that subdivision of property which prevented the existence of a middle class, which constituted the most useful of all classes in a community. The leading provisions of the Bill went to establish a voluntary composition, and in case of failure in that respect, then to provide a compulsory one; parochial vestries were to constitute a part of the machinery, and nothing could be more beneficial to Ireland.

The MARQUIS OF LANSDOWNE did not think the Bill sufficient to correct the numerous abuses and grievances that existed in Ireland, though the proposed composition might soften and qualify, in some degree, the Insurrection Act. He thought the Bill complicated in its machinery; besides it would be difficult to organize vestries, and it did not go upon the principle of reciprocity, which as much interested the Church as the payers of tithes. He was afraid that by the Bill the Agistment holder would be liable to the payment of tithes without an adequate compensation, from which he had been exempted by the Union.

The EARL of HARROWBY was of opinion the principle of reciprocity had been partly secured, nor did he think that any hardship would fall on the owners of agistment lands, because they would vote at the vestries, and only a small rate would be laid on their lands.

The EARL of CARNARVON approved of most parts of the Bill, but observed that if tithes were not got rid of, Ireland would be lost.

After some further conversation between the Lord Chancellor and the Earls of Caernarvon and Liverpool, the Bill was read a second time.

WEDNESDAY.

The Royal Assent was given by Commission to the Lotteries, the Barilla Duties, Irish Insurrection, and the Disembodied Militia Bills.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Cumberland took the oaths and his seat.

The BISHOP OF NORWICH presented a petition from certain persons resident in his diocese in favour of the Catholic Qualification Bill, and a Petition was also presented from the Archdeacon of St. Albans against the said Bill, and from certain inhabitants of Middlesex and Surry praying for the introduction of a system of poor laws into Ireland.

The MARQUIS OF LANSDOWNE moved for the second reading of the English Catholic Qualification Bill. The object of the Bill was simply to put the English Catholic on the same footing with the Irish. He was aware that the privilege of the elective franchise had been sometimes abused in Ireland; but if the Irish landlords were to blame, they must share that blame with the Government. The Bill gave the Catholic no advantage over the Protestant Dissenter; the case was quite otherwise, as the Protestant Dissenter was eligible to offices from which the Catholic, by the present Bill, was to be excluded.

LORD REDESDALE opposed the Bill. The consequence of granting the Irish Catholics the elective franchise had been the creation of two interests at every election, Protestant and Catholic, in violent hostility to each other. Whatever respect he might have for Catholics individually, he could not consent to sacrifice to that respect the Protestant Constitution of this kingdom. The Noble Lord concluded by moving the second reading of the Bill that day 3 months.

The EARL of WESTMORELAND was friendly to the Bill, though he was averse to any further concessions to the Catholics.

The BISHOP OF NORWICH must protest, in his own name, and that of his Clergy, against the opinions contained in some petitions to that House. The safety of no Christian State could be endangered by the practice of Christian principles. He trusted that no Holy Alliance would arrest the march of liberal opinions. Every thing human must yield to the law of change, and the senseless clamour against innovation had now disappeared; the Revolution was an innovation; nay, Christianity itself was the most important innovation that had ever taken place in the history of the world. The Clergy of the Established Church of England and Ireland, were, in the 19th century, almost the only advocates of intolerance. He claimed the same indulgence for the Catholic Dissenters of his day that had been granted to the Protestant Dissenters in the time of King William.

The BISHOP OF ST. DAVID'S was anxious to relieve the Catholics from any inabilities that could be done consistently with the safety of the State, but in the present case he must oppose the Bill.

The LORD CHANCELLOR could not see how the Learned Prelate who spoke last but one, could state that none but the Clergy were averse to the Catholic Claims. He had known the Rev. Prelate opposite (the Bishop of Norwich) during a long portion of a long life, and entertained due respect for him; yet he could not understand how that Rev. Prelate could reconcile to his conscience the sentiment which he had expressed and maintained, that there was no other body than the clergy of this country unwilling to grant the Catholic claims. But there seemed to be something peculiar in the See of Norwich, which led to singular opinions: for he had seen a statute, passed some centuries ago, on the express account of a Bishop of Norwich, from the operation of which all the other Bishops were excepted, although they were told to look into it. If for no other reason than the lateness of the introduction, he should vote that the Bill be read a third time that day three months. No man who did not take the Oath of Supremacy could bear true allegiance to the King. He had for the first time heard that the Revolution was an innovation. The Revolution was no innovation, but a restoration of the subject to his ancient rights. The great blessing of the Revolution was, that it brought about the establishment in Church and State.

The EARL OF HARROWBY was at a loss to conceive upon what grounds the measure could be opposed. Had the elective franchise in 1793 been restricted to the superior order of Catholics, he believed that all the benefits of the measure would have been secured, and much of the evil that afflicted Ireland would have been avoided.

The EARL OF LIVERPOOL said, whether the elective franchise was right or wrong, concession in Ireland was not the question before the House. He agreed with his Noble Friend, that had the elective franchise been limited to a higher order of electors, as the Catholics had prayed, much evil would have been avoided. He, for one, saw no objection to the principle of the first Bill, that went to give the elective franchise. To the object of the second Bill, that went to admit the Catholics to certain offices, he had no objection, though he had objections to the way in which it was proposed to effect it.

LORD CLIFDEN warned the House to take care that if they did not concede the present measure, it would one day be extorted from them.

The EARL OF LIMERICK supported the motion.

LORD SELKIRK agreed in principle with both the Bills, but should in the Committee move that their operation should not extend to Scotland, as he conceived such a procedure would be a violation of the articles of the Union.

The House divided. For the Second Reading—Contents, 43—Proxies, 30—Not Contents, 41—Proxies, 39—Majority against the Second Reading, 7.

LORD CLIFDEN, after some remarks, moved an instruction to the Committee, respecting the insertion of a compulsory clause in the Tithes Composition Bill.

The EARL OF LIVERPOOL objected to the clause, as in the first instance he thought the arrangement should be voluntary.

The House divided on the compulsory clause—Contents, 11—Not Contents, 31—Majority against the clause, 20.

The House then went into Committee, and the Bill was ordered to be re-committed on Friday.

THURSDAY.

The Royal Assent was given by Commission to the Land Tax Commissioners, the Prison Laws Consolidation, the Irish Court of Chancery, the Army Prize Money Distribution, the Marriages Abroad, the London Dock, and the Gaol Buildings Bills.

The English and Irish Customs, the Cork General Sessions, the East India Half Pay, and the Irish Malicious Injuries Bills were passed.

FRIDAY.

The Royal Assent was given by Commission to the English Customs, the Irish Customs, the East India Half-pay, the Irish Court of Chancery, and the Irish Malicious Injuries Bills.

The East India Army, the Millbank Penitentiary, the New South Wales Jurisdiction, and the Scotch Places of Worship Bills were brought up from the Commons and read a first time.

The Irish Church Rates' Bill was postponed till Monday, as was also the City of Limerick Regulation Bill.

On the question for the second reading of the Scotch Juries Bill,

LORD VISCOUNT MELVILLE objected to further proceeding with the Bill on the ground that no practical evil had arisen from the present mode of Striking Scotch Juries, and moved that it be read this day two months. Contents 9—Not Contents 20—Majority against the Bill 11.

In a Committee on the Irish Unlawful Oaths Bill, a clause was proposed by the Duke of Leinster exempting Free Masons from the operation of the Bill; but it was negatived.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY.

MR. DAWSON brought up the Report of the Committee on the Gas Light Establishments of the Metropolis. The Report stated, that not the slightest danger could occur from the use of Gas.—The second reading of the Gas Lights Establishment Bill was ordered for this day three months.

The Irish Passengers' Regulation, and the India Half-pay Bills were passed. On the Report of the Irish Linen Manufacturers' Bill,

The House divided—For receiving the Report, 33—For the Amendment, 7—Majority for the Bill, 26.—The Report was then received.

MR. WILBERFORCE presented a petition from the Rev. John Lampriere, complaining of the Trustees of the Exeter Free Grammar School, for having removed him from being Master of the said School.

MR. T. COURTNEY said, the Trustees did not remove Mr. Lampriere till necessary, by seeing the School declining in numbers, from year to year; under another Master the School had been progressively improving. The petition was ordered to be printed.

The House divided.—For printing the Petition, 31—Against it, 60—Majority against it, 29.

MR. BROUGHAM presented a petition from a Mr. Quin, complaining of gross abuse in the administration of justice in Ireland, in an action which he brought for an assault, and which was tried before Baron M'Clelland. He complained that the Sheriff who struck the Jury was cousin-german of the plaintiff, and that the cause, through a Special Jury, was called on first in the morning, and out of its regular turn. This was the charge against the Sheriff: next, as to the Judge, the defendant was a Clergyman of the Protestant Church, and the Petitioner a Catholic. The Petitioner was at the Belfast Theatre when the song of "God save the King" was sung, and the Petitioner not taking off his hat, the defendant addressed him in very strong language, describing it as shameful for him, the Petitioner, to wear his hat whilst the National Air was singing. The Petitioner told him he did not wear his hat out of disrespect to the air, which this Clergyman exclaimed:—"If you do not pull your hat off, by the immortal gods I will knock your head off," and proceeded to carry his treat into effect, treating the Petitioner with great personal violence. He stated that his case was proved; but that Mr. M'Clelland said to the Jury, the strict letter of the law is with the plaintiff, but you will find for the defendant, on account of the old King, who may be well called the Father of his People.

MR. GOULBURN wished it to be understood, that when the party applied for a new trial, the whole Court approved of the conduct of the Learned Baron, by refusing the petitioner a new trial.—The Petition was laid on the table.

MR. COURTENAY moved the consideration of the Lords' Amendments on the Prison Bill.

MR. HENRY GREY BENNET said, their Lordships had thought fit to make no less than 204 amendments in this Bill. He objected to which went to re-establish the abominable punishment of whipping. This had been left out of the Bill after mature consideration in the Committee up stairs. If this Bill was passed, they would have a prison a Dr. Thwackum, as in "Tom Jones," who would take revenge out of the breech of every prisoner. He never would have he had rescued the people of England from this disgraceful and barous punishment.

MR. COURTENAY would not detain the House on the general question, but propose that the amendments should be agreed to.

The House then divided. For the Lords' Amendments, 36—Against it, 22—Majority, 14.

MR. HENRY GREY BENNET hoped that means would be taken to remove the prisoners to some healthier asylum than the Penitentiary.

DR. LUSHINGTON said, that instances had occurred of lunatics confined for above 20 years in some of the smallest gaols in England. He hoped that means would be taken to remedy this evil.

The Lords' Amendments were then agreed to.

MR. WILMOT HORTON moved the re-commitment of the New South Wales Bill. The Hon. Gent. stated the objects of the Bill. were principally to re-colonize Norfolk Island, a place of great This would furnish a sort of extensive Penitentiary, where victs would have an opportunity of unmixed reformation.

MR. BRIGHT conceived that this Bill did not make sufficient sion for the prosperity of so great a Colony as New South Wales contended, that the colony of New South Wales was prepared to cise the privileges of trial by Jury.

MR. HENRY GREY BENNET thought but few of the convicts worthy of being trusted with any power whatever, much less of sitting on a Jury. It did not follow that because a convict required considerable property he was therefore fit to be a Juror.

SIR J. MACINTOSH maintained that the state of the Colony was fectly fit for the introduction of Trial by Jury, and that two Judge Advocates had been of that opinion, and that this Bill cruel breach of public faith and private right.

MR. BRIGHT moved, as an amendment, that the Report be into further consideration this day six months.

MR. WILMOT HORTON repeated his arguments in support of the

MR. SECRETARY PEEL had no objection to postponing the till next Session. This clause related to the issue of general The second clause, giving the vote to the Crown, might also alteration; and the third clause of the Bill he thought should be postponed, and made to form a part of the general Act, which be introduced in the course of the next Session. With these ments and alterations, he hoped the Bill would be allowed to proceed.

MR. DENMAN considered the explanation of the Right Honourable gentleman as candid and satisfactory; and, with such modifications those proposed, he would not oppose the Bill.

MR. BRIGHT then withdrew his amendment.

The House then went into Committee. On the clause for that Jurors should be formed of seven persons, Officers of the blishment,

SIR J. MACKINTOSH moved, as an amendment, to insert there "directing that the Jury should be formed of 12 of the Inhabitants New South Wales or Van Dieman's Land."

MR. W. HORTON opposed the amendment. The Colony was not in a state to adopt such a provision as that proposed by the Hon. Learned Gentleman.

Mr. Gurney, Mr. Wilberforce, and Mr. Bright, supported the amendment.

The Committee divided. For the clause, 41—For the amendment, 30—Majority for the clause, 11. The Chairman reported progress.

On the third reading of the Law of Merchants' Bill,

MR. CREEVY objected to the passing of this or any Bill till there was an explanation of a fraud in passing a clause of the Exchequer Bills Bill, for appropriating the sums voted for the year instead of the usual Appropriation Bill.

The CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER said, this was no fraud on the House, nor any stealing a march upon it. The appropriation of money was always a clause in some Money Bill, and not a separate Bill.

The Bill was then passed.

TUESDAY.

The Speaker went to the House of Peers to hear the Royal Assent (for which see the Lords.)

Petitions were presented from an individual in Yorkshire, complaining of certain vexatious surcharges under the Assessed Taxes, and from North Walsham and Aylesham, in Norfolk, praying for the Abolition of Slavery.

DR. PHILLIMORE brought in a Bill to enable Roman Catholics to solemnize marriages, under certain restrictions. The Bill was read a first, and ordered to be read a second time that day three months.

Viscount St. Vincent's Annuity Bill, and the Court of Exchequer in Ireland Stamp Bills were passed.

SIR J. MACKINTOSH presented a Petition from a body of emancipated Convicts in New South Wales, praying to be relieved from certain Disabilities unexpectedly imposed upon them by certain clauses in the Bill now pending in the House.

MR. HENRY GREY BENNETT brought up the Report of the Committee appointed to enquire into the state of Prison Discipline. The Hon Member said the Committee had visited that prison, and strictly examined every part of it, and they felt it but justice to say, that they were convinced no blame was imputable to the officers of the Establishment, the regulations of which were admirably adapted for effecting the object for which it was intended.

SIR H. PARNELL gave notice that he would, early in the next Session, move to revive the Committee on Irish Currency, with a view to assimilating the currency of the two countries.

MR. JOHN SMITH presented a petition from — Lowe, a merchant, engaged in the South American Trade, complaining of the inconvenience which himself, and others engaged in this trade, experienced in consequence of the indecision of our Government, in regard to the acknowledgment of the Independence of Columbia.

The petition was ordered to be printed.

MR. HUME, adverting to the manner in which the Appropriation Bill had been passed through the House, said, it had this year been passed in the shape of an Exchequer Bills Bill, not a single word being said to show that this was the Appropriation Bill; and not a Member of the House, except those of the Treasury Bench, had the slightest idea that the Exchequer Bills Bill contained the Appropriation Bill. He moved a resolution expressive of the opinion of the House, that the manner in which the Appropriation Bill had this year been introduced and passed through the House, was a departure from the usual proceeding of Parliament.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER contended that it was not necessary, according to the usual forms of Parliament, that the Appropriation Bill should be a separate Bill.

MR. Abercrombie, Lord A. Hamilton, Mr. Creevey, and Mr. Ogle craft thought the House had been taken by surprise.

MR. HUME said, all that he wanted was, that the Appropriation should be noticed as belonging to some Bill or other. The Resolution was then withdrawn.

The CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER moved the third reading of the Distillery Bill.

Some conversation arose between Mr. Douglas, Lord A. Hamilton, Mr. Bright, Mr. Wallace, Mr. Hume, Mr. Maberley, Mr. Hutchinson, &c. and then the Bill was passed.

MR. HUME moved several resolutions on the subject of the Collection of the Land Tax in London and Middlesex. The Hon. Member stated among other matters that the amount of Land Tax made permanent by the measure of Mr. Pitt was 1,989,673l.; in the year ending 5th Jan. 1822, the Land Tax accounted for was only 1,234,168l. shewing a diminution of 755,405l.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER shewed the fallacy and erroneousness of the Hon. Member's statements. He said the resolutions all assumed as facts what were not facts—they proceeded on a complete mistake. There was a capital error in the first resolution—that solution stated the Land Tax made perpetual was fixed at 1,989,673l. The Act of 1797 exempted from the Tax pensions and offices which had been included in the Act of 1797, and amounted to 127,000l. This sum, therefore, must be deducted from the 1,989,673l. The Hon. Gent. not having done so, all his conclusions were erroneous.

Mr. Maberley said, he would recommend to his Hon. Friend to withdraw the Resolutions, as they were founded on mistake. His Hon. Friend's error arose from not considering that the Land Tax was not made perpetual on places and pensions.

Mr. Hume admitted his error, and withdrew his resolutions.

A division took place on a motion of Alderman Wood's for a Committee of enquiry into some slate quarries of Lady Penthyn's, in Cornwall.

Ayes, 39—Noes, 43—Majority against the motion, 34.

Mr. S. Rice moved the Order of the Day for taking into consideration the remaining Resolutions respecting the conduct of the Chief Baron of Ireland.

The Solicitor-General could not agree to these Resolutions, which went to impute corrupt motives to the Chief Baron, for which there were, as he contended, no grounds. The Chief Baron had taken no fees which had not been taken by his predecessors. He moved a Resolution to follow the resolutions of fact, stating "that it did not appear to the House that the alterations introduced into the mode of taking fees by the Chief Baron could be imputed to any corrupt motive. The several Resolutions, declaratory of matters of fact, were then put and agreed to.

Mr. Scarlett then moved a resolution, stating, that it appeared that for the last 100 years a discretionary power had existed with the Judges of altering fees. That the House thought that power should exist no longer; but the House did not consider it necessary to adopt any proceedings against the present Chief Baron.

After some conversation, it was agreed that the debate on these questions should be adjourned.

WEDNESDAY.

The Speaker went to the House of Peers to hear the Royal Assent (for which see the Lords.)

The Cork General Sessions, the Irish Linen Manufacturers, and the Lancaster Court Bills were passed.

On the motion of Mr. Wilmot Horton the House resolved itself into Committee on the Acts relative to Newfoundland, and moved certain resolutions for altering and consolidating the Laws relative to Courts of Justice in that Colony. The Resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. Secretary Peel, in order to remove the evil that existed in respect to sickness prevailing to a great extent in the Penitentiary, obtained leave to bring in a Bill to remove the prisoners to the hulks, or other prisons, to see what might be effected by change of air.

Mr. M. A. Taylor and Mr. Holford agreed in opinion that the Penitentiary was not situated in an unwholesome spot, and therefore the disease of which so many prisoners had died was not occasioned by that circumstance.

Mr. Secretary Peel said, the strictest inquiries had been instituted on this subject, and the universal opinion of those best calculated to decide on the subject was, that the situation was healthy.

Mr. Brougham withdrew his Beer Bill. The reason was, the little prospect of his being able to carry a measure against which the monopoly of the brewers was arrayed, a monopoly which he had almost called illegal. The publicans certainly were not against it, but they were kept down by the brewers, and even the body most interested, the consumers, were entirely silent, and seemed as if now labouring under the influence of the brewers' beverage. The Hon. Member said, that when he brought forward a former measure calculated for the benefit of the lower orders—his Bill relative to the Education of the Poor—in that case, as in the present, he had been deserted by those who ought to have been his natural allies—the Dissenters, as well as the Members of the Established Church. This desertion was the only reward which he had received in return for a laborious devotion of his time for months, and even years, to bring these measures for the benefit of the public to perfection.

Mr. Western withdrew his Bill relative to the qualification of Juries in Counties for the present Session. He asked the Right Hon. Gent. (Mr. Secretary Peel,) whether he had come to any determination as to the question of holding the assizes more frequently.

Mr. Secretary Peel was friendly to the measure, but he saw many very great difficulties in the way of its general adoption. He was at a loss to see how it could be extended generally without increasing the number of Judges.

Col. Davies put a question to the Secretary of State for the Home Department, as to the establishment of the Isle of Man, which he considered could be much reduced; he particularly alluded to the office of Attorney-General of the Isle of Man, which was a sinecure, for which the individual holding it received a salary of 700l. a year.

Mr. Secretary Peel said, so far from the office of Attorney General of the Island being a sinecure, it was an efficient office, and the Secretary for the Home Department was in constant correspondence with him.

Mr. Brougham said, his Hon. and Gallant Friend's correspondent had certainly deceived him: instead of the Attorney-General having nothing to do, he was hard worked, and instead of being well paid with 700l. a-year, he was very ill paid with 200l.

Colonel Davies said, his correspondent might perhaps have made a mistake of 500l.

Colonel Palmer, in a speech which occupied much time, submitted a Motion respecting our Foreign relations, for a copy of our instructions to Sir W. A'Court, for the regulation of his conduct as to changes in the Spanish Constitution.

Mr. Hume seconded the Motion.

No Member replied to the gallant Colonel, and the Motion was negatived.

The debate on the case of Chief Baron O'Grady was then resumed, and the resolutions submitted the previous evening were taken into consideration.

Mr. Goulburn moved as an amendment to the Resolution, that the Chief Justices of the Common Pleas in Ireland have been in the habit of increasing the fees of suitors in their Court, at their own pleasure.—The amendment was carried.

Capt. O'Grady contended, that although the Chief Baron might be considered as judicially wrong, he was not to be accused of unworthy or corrupt motives.

Mr. Secretary Peel thought it unfair to keep the charges hanging over the head of the Chief Baron. If his opinion were asked, whether a Judge increased his own fees properly, when he was legally authorized to do so, he would say, at once, that an individual so situated should abstain from the use of such an authority; and he would therefore propose, that a Bill should be brought in to abolish the practice in future; but he could not consent either to remove the Chief Baron, or to impeach him at the Bar of the House of Lords. The Resolution was carried.

Mr. Scarlett gave up his next Resolution, but adhered to the third.

Mr. Hume was of opinion that the House had not sufficient information to enable him to come to a decision, and therefore he seconded the Resolution, which declared that, under all the circumstances, the House saw no reason to proceed further in the charges on Chief Baron O'Grady.

The House divided—For the Resolution, 38—Against it, 16—Majority for proceeding no further, 22.

THURSDAY.

The Speaker went to the House of Peers to hear the Royal Assent, (for which see the Lords.)

Mr. Abercrombie gave notice of a Motion for next Session, on the subject of Scotch Representation.

Mr. Brougham presented a Petition from Isaac Ritchie, formerly Lieutenant in the army, but pensioned since 1783, on the sum of 2s. 3d. per diem, complaining of the smallness of his allowance.—Petitions were also presented from Mr. George Williams, one of the Justices for Lancaster, complaining of his brother Magistrates; from Plumstead, in Hertfordshire, praying for a duty on Leghorn Bonnets; from certain Mechanics in the City of London, in favour of Mr. Owen's plan.

On the Motion of the Chancellor of the Exchequer the House went into Committee. The Right Hon. Gentleman then moved the usual Sessional Address to his Majesty for the grant of Salaries to the Chairman of Committees, and other Officers of the House, which were agreed to.

Colonel Davies postponed his Motion for an Account of the Application of the French Indemnity Money, until the next Session.

The Irish Law Charges, the Slave Trade Laws Consolidation, and the Marriages Abroad, Bills were passed.

On the third reading of the Scotch Law Commission Bill,

Mr. Brougham expressed a wish that care should be taken to have this Commission selected from persons well acquainted with the practice and constitutions of the Scottish Courts. The Hon. Member then referred to the opinions of Lord Eldon in respect to the proceedings in those Courts. That Noble Person had talked of the prolixity of proceedings in the Scotch Courts; now he was certain that none of the proceedings in the Scotch Courts, however prolix they might be, could be half so prolix as the proceedings of the Court of Chancery here were. His late Learned Friend Sir S. Romilly objected to Lord Eldon because he joined political duties with legal duties. He had to attend debates in the House, debates in the Cabinet, and audiences in the Closet; and what with Parliament, the Cabinet, and the Closet, the Noble Lord had not time to attend to the Court of Chancery. But in addition to all these duties, the Noble Lord had now taken upon himself the office of Prime Minister. It really was so. Lord Liverpool, Lord Liverpool was no more Prime Minister than he (Mr. B.) was. He (Mr. B.) had been defeated by Lord Eldon, so had Lord Liverpool; and that too against the opinion of the country and a large majority of the House of Commons. It was true Lord Liverpool did sometimes defeat Lord Eldon, so did he (Mr. B.)—he had defeated the Noble and Learned Lord on the Marriage Amendment Act and the Education Bill. In future, therefore, he should call Lord Liverpool his Noble Friend, with whom he had the honour and pleasure to act in another place. And, he would say, that never since he had had the honour of sitting in the place where he now sat, had he gained a recruit who he held in so high estimation as his Noble Friend Lord Liverpool. He had, indeed, gained another ally, whose conversion gave him as much pure surprise, if it did not give him equal pleasure—that was my Lord Westmoreland. Yet, with these two Noble colleagues, he hoped, in time, they should be able to turn out Prime Minister Eldon, though indeed that appeared almost impossible. The Hon. and Learned Gentleman then commented on the provisions of the Bill, and the recommendations contained in the Report for appointing a Deputy Speaker of the House of Lords. Some time ago, a Vice-Chancellor was appointed to relieve the Chancellor in the Court of Chancery, that he might attend the House of Lords; and now there was an application for a Vice-Speaker in the House of Lords, that he might attend a little to the Court of Chancery!—And thus, having got two Deputies, we should find the Lord Chancellor thinking much more of the Court of our Sovereign Lord the King at St. James's, than of the Courts of our Sovereign Lord the King in Westminster Hall.—He then passed a warm eulogium on the professional character of Lord Eldon, and said the Scotch people were satisfied with his decisions, though they went against them, so great was their confidence in his integrity and his honour—his experience, acuteness, and great legal knowledge; they knew that whilst the present Lord Chancellor of Great Britain watched over them the courts below must be honest. Under these circumstances he must oppose the present Bill, because he thought sufficient time had not been given for its consideration. Next, because he could not agree to have journeymen Lord Chancellors, journeymen Speakers, and, for any thing he knew, journeymen Vice Chancellors and Masters of the Rolls; and, above all, because the Scotch people and the Scotch Bar would not be satisfied at being deprived of the able superintendence and guardianship of the present Lord Chancellor whilst he retained the high situation he now held.

The Attorney-General defended the Bill, and at the same time could not avoid observing that the attack which his Hon. and Learned Friend had turned aside to make upon the Noble and Learned Lord at the head of the profession, was uncalled for on the present occasion. If his Hon. Friend would condescend to make enquiry, he would find that no Chancellor ever devoted more time to the duties of his Court than the present Lord Chancellor did. As to the proposed arrangement, it was not intended to be a permanent one; but was only adopted, if adopted it should be, to get rid of the present arrear of business. As to the business of Scotch appeals, he was persuaded that the revision of the Jury Courts of Scotland would greatly lighten, if it did not entirely do away the necessity of appeal.

Mr. Secretary Canning said the extent of the evil of the accumulation of business could not be denied. He would not now enter into the merits of the Appellant Report; opportunities would arise hereafter of discussing them. What he was anxious now to do was, to adopt some plan to lessen the evil complained of.

Mr. Abercrombie said this was a Bill of the utmost importance to Scotland; and what he complained of was, that no opportunity had been given to discuss it fully. Enquiry into the proceedings in the Court of Chancery must take place. He did not know whether his Hon. Friend, the Member for Lincoln, would bring the subject forward again next Session; but if he did not, some other person must, for the public voice would not suffer it to rest where it was at present.

Mr. J. Williams regretted that the Secretary of State for the Home Department had not favoured them with his opinions on this subject. The Committee of the House of Lords had agreed, that the great mischief of the Court of Chancery should be enquired into by the two Houses of Parliament. This was absolutely necessary for the benefit of suitors in the Noble and Learned Lord's Court.

Mr. Secretary Peel said, he had rather prefer delivering his opinion when the measure should be fully before the House in the ensuing Session.

Mr. Wetherall hoped that the introduction of Jury trials into Scotland, would have the effect of diminishing the number of appeals from that country, and then the Lord Chancellor would be able to deal with the whole of them, after the present great arrear had been got rid of.

Mr. Denman hoped the present Bill would get rid of the necessity of resorting to such an ignoble and useless Judge as a deputy Lord Chancellor; and he called on the Member for Montrose to oppose every grant of civil contingencies to this new Officer.—The Bill passed.

In answer to a question from Mr. Hume,

Mr. Wynne said it was true that Mr. Adams, the new Governor of India, had sent off to Europe, (after the departure of the Marquis of Hastings) Mr. Buckingham, the Editor of the Calcutta Journal. This had been on account of his continuing a line of conduct in his Journal for which he had received repeated warnings from Lord Hastings.

Mr. Hume wished to have copies of correspondence between Ministers and the Government of Malta and the Ionian Islands, respecting the quarantine in those islands. When Sir T. Maitland came from Tunis, he was allowed to land without being exposed to the quarantine, which had been broken, as was complained of to him, in other instances. This was, therefore, a very great hardship on the merchants. He was prepared to prove that Sir T. Maitland had not made correct returns on this subject; and therefore he complained that the health of 100,000 persons at Malta should not be exposed to such dangers and inconveniences. He moved for a variety of papers on this subject.

Mr. Wilmot Horton said, it was true that Sir T. Maitland did go to Tunis in 1815, where the plague had not been for 10 years, and did not appear for three years after. He only landed for two days, and resided all the time at the house of the British Consul. He denied that there was any favouritism or arbitrary power employed in the system of quarantine at Malta; and contended, that the theory of it was allowed on all sides to be perfect. The Hon. Member was welcome to Copies of all Correspondence on the subject.

Mr. Hume said, he should leave it to the Hon. Gentleman to select such parts of the Correspondence as he thought bore on the case.

Mr. Wilmot Horton agreed to do so, and the motion was withdrawn.

FRIDAY.

The Speaker went to the House of Peers to hear the Royal Assent, (for which see the Lords.)—Petitions were presented from certain bankrupts, prisoners in the King's Bench Prison, praying for relief; from the elders of the church of Selkirk, against Slavery.

A new writ was ordered for Newcastle-under-Lyme, in the room of W. S. Kinnersley, Esq. deceased.

An address to the King was voted praying that His Majesty would be pleased to confer some church dignity on the Rev. F. Bayley, chaplain to the House.

Mr. Calcraft gave notice that he would early next Session move to repeal the Leather Tax.

On the third reading of the New South Wales Jurisdiction Bill, in answer to a question from Mr. Denman respecting the nomination of Juries in Criminal Cases, Mr. Wilmot Horton said, it was more conducive to the administration of justice that the Governor should possess the power.—The Bill was passed.

On the third reading of the East India Mutiny Bill, Mr. R. Smith moved to omit the clause empowering the Governor of Bombay to assemble General Courts Martial to try Soldiers for Civil Offences.—The House divided—For the clause, 40—Against it, 13—Majority for the clause, 27. The Bill was passed.

On the third reading of the Millbank Penitentiary Bill, Mr. Hobhouse said, that Prison was not worth the expence it cost the public.

Mr. Gordon said, it could not be made wholesome.

Mr. Dawson said, the disease affecting the prisoners was not caused from that circumstance, but arose from causes which no human power could controul.

Sir C. Long said, such was the decided opinion of the medical men attending the prisoners.

Mr. Lockhart said, that the situation of the prison and the punishment were the causes of the disease.—The Bill was passed.

On the motion of Mr. Wilberforce, a select Committee was appointed to enquire into the condition of the Slaves and free Indians in Honduras.—Adjourned till Wednesday.

"For the dresslers of the numerous classes of men who love only leisure to read by fits and starts, this is an amusing and generally well-selected Miscellany. It is more original than most of the collections which have been compiled from time to time of late years, and, on the whole, presents a fair mixture of the grave and gay, selected from the ablest modern publications."—Lit. Gazette.

"This is an exceedingly entertaining and well-selected Miscellany, and, as a travelling companion, nothing can be conceived more calculated for amusement. It containing what is light and pleasant, as well as what is serious and speculative—and is enriched, diversified, and adorned with poetical extracts; so that we are sure, open the book where we will, to meet with some entertainment, more or less substantial, as we feel inclined. In short, this selection may be recommended as a model of works of this nature, and is the best literary contrivance that can be imagined for amusing a vacant hour."—Caledonian Mercury.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Before publishing the letter from Armagh, June 30, we must be made certain of the facts contained in it, by the name and address of the party—the affair seems to have been very great, but it is a question of property, and must be treated with caution.

The enclosure from TAUNTON is much too long for the poetical department of BULL, and moreover too serious—we should otherwise be disposed to pay every attention to it.

HUMPHRY CLINKER upon LAMBTON'S silly donation is quite wrong—we have many who could have done the same; besides, his joke upon LAMBTON'S affection for whiggery is stale—he makes all his money by the PIT system.

We are extremely glad to have merited the praises of our "great admirer"—it is particularly gratifying to receive such tributes from such sources.

"LEATHER and PRUNELLA" we cannot touch upon—the loves of MR. L. and MISS H. would be as uninteresting to the world as those of MR. H. and MISS L. in the "Liber Amoris."

We are obliged to A.O.S.

It is enough for us that MR. DUNCOMBE was defeated.

We cannot insert LUCY'S letter from Richmond, for although the whole thing was folly, still the people were amusing themselves, and not violating any of the decencies of society—we must decline any interference.

We would recommend a constant adherence to his own system to DR. SANGRADO.

A correspondent tells us that there is neither a Bible nor Testament in the City of London Tavern—at least he so infers from not having been able to get one there the other day—he begs us to mention the fact; but we disbelieve it—the waiters might not have one to lend, which makes quite a different story of it.

*In reply to a "*CONSTANT READER," *we assure him that he is mistaken—the author of "*Wine and Walnuts" is in the land of the living, and therefore our friend need not apprehend disappointment.

*We differ with an "*OLD SUBSCRIBER" about WIVELL'S print of the KING, and certainly if what he says be true, that HIS MAJESTY never sat to MR. WIVELL, the merit of the likeness is rather increased than diminished.

The Rev. Baronet is thanked for his extract from the Courier of 1804.

The recapitulation of nuisances in a letter from one of our correspondents is somewhat too much in detail—it becomes almost a nuisance in itself.

*"Beans" is the word the Member of the Horticultural Society is at a loss for—if he reads "*BACON on Vegetables" it may help him.

Hints to a popular preacher are clever, and might be called HITS—but we are not aware of the necessity of applying so severe a caustic.

*We have not read the pamphlet called "*A Letter to John Bull"—*a copy of it was sent to us, but it remains unopened—we will look at it—*perhaps—next week.

The enclosure from Brighton is tremendously long—what is it all about?

All our other numerous friends must remain unnoticed this week.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, JULY 13.

HIS MAJESTY is in town, and in the enjoyment of perfect health; several parties have been given at Carlton Palace, and a confident expectation is entertained that the KING will prorogue the Parliament in person.

WE propose, immediately after the prorogation, to lay a summary of the proceedings of the past Session before our readers, and as that period is so near at hand we delay till then noticing at length the last ridiculous blunder of that blockhead HUME, about the Land Tax—it really outdoes all his former out-doings, and winds up his fooleries for the season with the greatest possible eclat. MR. JOSEPH GRIMALDI himself was never more successful in raising a laugh by knocking his nose against a door in a pantomime than MR. JOSEPH HUME is when he thumps his head against a calculation in the House of Commons; without such a running commentary as his speeches our parliamentary history would not be worth reading—he is at once the clown and the chorus, and we anxiously look forward to next year when he will again assume the character for which his versatile talents so admirably qualify him.

WE hear in society some men express great admiration of the talents of MR. BROUGHAM, and no longer ago than yesterday one of these wondering people praised "in good set terms" the speech which that Honourable and Learned Gentleman chose to make on Thursday night upon the conduct of the LORD CHANCELLOR.

We have a longish score to rub off to-day with MR. BROUGHAM, and hardly know where to begin—but of one thing our readers may be certain, they shall have an extract from the report of that speech amongst other things which we shall notice, and if they do not agree with us as to its real character and value we shall marvel exceedingly.

The first little bit of MR. BROUGHAM'S conduct which it may be extremely right to look at, is that which he adopted in the case of MR. ROWAN. This affair, if considered as a trait of character, may be advantageously placed in a stronger light than any in which it has yet been seen, and as brevity conduces extremely to the adaptation of great things to small minds, we will tell the story in as few words as possible.

MR. ROWAN sends a petition to MR. BROUGHAM to present to Parliament, and refers MR. BROUGHAM to another Member for the justice of his statements—that Member in a certain degree corroborates some of those statements, but desires, for particular reasons, that his name may not be mentioned; whereupon MR. BROUGHAM takes out of his pocket the letter containing this injunction to silence, and reads every other part of it to the House of Commons, and particularly that passage in which, by stating the petitioner to be a relation of his, the writer (the Knight of Kerry) identifies himself.

This, it will be perceived, is conduct not usually observed in civilized society—we trust it is not even parliamentary—if we were to give our full and free opinion upon it we have little doubt but that we should be treated with Whig liberality and prosecuted for libel, by way of criminal information, the mode which has been hitherto adopted by that excellent party, whenever they felt inclined to vindicate their character from unjustifiable calumnies.

With respect to MR. ROWAN, and the extraordinary good character given him by the Knight of Kerry, we were somewhat startled; and we are greatly surprised that COLONEL CROSBIE did not move for copies of the reports made by MR. WORTHINGTON, Surveyor-General, when in charge of Tralee, from August, 1817, to May, 1818; and a copy of the minute by the Commissioners of Customs, assigning their reasons for dismissing MR. ROWAN.

But we have not done with the Honourable and Learned Gentleman yet—he presented another petition—another Irish petition too, from one MR. QUIN, and the conduct of the Honourable and Learned Gentleman upon that occasion was marked by as much folly and want of common consideration as generally falls to the share of a person so eminently gifted and so deeply read.

MR. QUIN it seems complained—as it is natural he should—of a jury which happened to give a verdict against him, and MR. QUIN set forth in his lamentations many dreadful aggravations of his pitiable case, such as that the Jury of a Protestant country should have happened to be all Protestants—that the sheriff's wife's cousin was uncle-in-law to the returning officer's brother, whose wife was niece to the great aunt of the defendant, or some such thing—and that BARON M'CLELLAND, (another of MR. BROUGHAM'S "marks") had behaved extremely ill in trying the case in one Court instead of another—in short, QUIN'S grievances were so vast, so innumerable, that the House were in a state of shuddering horror at the enormities of BARON M'CLELLAND, the JURY, the returning officer's wife's first cousin's sister's aunt, and indeed the whole of the Irish Government in Church and State.

Upon enquiry it turned out that all this happened five years ago—that the case had been already submitted to the Judges, and that they had unanimously refused a new trial—so that MR. QUIN, after having put his injuries in his pocket for five years, finds out that MR. BROUGHAM is hunting Irish Judges, and thinking it a good opportunity to "lay on" his petition, induces that Honourable and Learned Gentleman to move the House of Commons either to hang BARON M'CLELLAND, or to grant a new trial five years after the old one—such new trial having been legally and unanimously refused by the Judges of the Court four years and a half since.

To what a dreadful state is a patriot reduced when he presents such a petition as this, of which, after having presented it, he is made to say, "The grounds on which the charges rested were manifestly in many respects incorrect." Why did not MR. BROUGHAM read the petition before he presented it? Why did he not consider its manifest incorrectness before he brought it forward? Not he:—it was a complaint against a Judge—it was an attack upon Orangemen—it impeached the "Trial by Jury"—in short, MR. QUIN was an oppressed man, and to it went MR. HENRY BROUGHAM like a "French falconer," and after doing his all in its behalf, he is obliged to admit that many of the charges are manifestly incorrect, which admission goes, as we see, to invalidate those which are not so evidently ridiculous.

This is silly as well as troublesome, but we have not yet arrived at the climax of MR. BROUGHAM'S absurdity—we have no wish to try to make him out a knave, we would rather shew his folly, and in recurring to the speech in which he indulged himself by abusing the most conscientious, honest, and erudite lawyer that perhaps ever sat in the Court of Chancery, we will select the following passage from the reports in the Radical newspapers, which strikes us to be worth recording as a fair specimen of the Honourable and Learned Gentleman's talent in that way:—

"'As to LORD LIVERPOOL being Prime Minister,' continued the Hon. Gent. 'he is no more Prime Minister than I am. (Hear, hear, and laughter.) I reckon LORD LIVERPOOL a sort of member of opposition; and after what has recently passed, if I were required, I should designate him as 'a noble Lord in another place, with whom I have the honour to act.' (Much laughter.) LORD LIVERPOOL might have collateral influence, but LORD ELDON had all the direct influence of the Prime Minister: he is Prime Minister to all intents and purposes, and he stands alone in the full exercise of all the influence of that high situation. LORD LIVERPOOL has carried measures against the Lord Chancellor—so have I: therefore I say that we act together. If LORD LIVERPOOL carried the marriage act, I carried the education bill; and if LORD LIVERPOOL succeeded against LORD ELDON in some points on the Queen's trial, I say that I totally defeated him on that odious bill of pains and penalties. (Hear.) I might just as well call myself Prime Minister as LORD LIVERPOOL; he has no more claim to the distinction than I have: he acts with me, and I with him, and I call him my co-adjutor, and I trust we shall enjoy a long course of co-operation.—(Laughter.)—I am sincerely glad of it, and long as I have sat and fought on this side of the House, I never welcomed a recruit to our body with greater satisfaction than my LORD LIVERPOOL."

All this, we humbly submit to be NONSENSE—the recurrence to the QUEEN'S trial, to that QUEEN, whom for a silk gown he HENRY BROUGHAM offered to abandon altogether, is not only in bad taste, but ridiculous in the extreme—the rest is unintelligible stuff, and fit only to excite the sort of laugh which it actually produced.

WE are extremely sorry to announce the death of that highly talented artist, SIR HENRY RAEBURN. This melancholy event took place at Stockbridge, near Edinburgh, on Sunday last.

As a portrait painter, SIR HENRY, perhaps, was second only to SIR THOMAS LAWRENCE in the peculiar chasteness, depth of his colouring, and fidelity of likeness; in the strong and marking character with which he animated his pictures he has indeed left few compeers.

When HIS MAJESTY was in Scotland, at the moment of his departure he conferred the honour of Knighthood upon this celebrated painter, marking by this gracious act that feeling for the arts for which the KING is so justly and so universally celebrated.

NOTHING can be more disagreeable than the necessity of speaking of ourselves; but the dastardly attacks of the TIMES and CHRONICLE render it a duty imperative upon us to cause the matters to which they allude to be sifted, and the whole truth brought before the public, not only that this paper may stand cleared of every imputation which the assassin-like writers in those journals basely attempt to cast upon it, but that the character and nature of WHIG OPPOSITION may be fully exposed to the world.

The silence of the TIMES newspaper, after having twice published innuendoes and insinuations which it knew to be false, is strongly characteristic of the sullen determination to afford no explanation—to make no atonement for its criminal conduct towards us. The CHRONICLE meanly attempts to vindicate its calumnies by saying that perhaps MR. HOOKER may have changed his name, and under his new appellation be connected with our publication; but, as we have already declared, we speak with no equivocation—with no reservation ourselves upon the subject, and we will admit of none.

One circumstance will shew the purity of the Whig party, who are horrified at what they nick-named the Spy System, and which we will give our readers now.

MR. HARKER, a respectable tradesman, living at No. 37, Fetter-lane, was in conversation, ten days since, with one of the proprietors of this paper, in Fleet-street, and no sooner had he parted from him, than two men, employed by the Whig-radical faction, accosted him by the name of HOOKER, in order, as they hoped, to discover the connection which solemnly and indignantly have disavowed.

This trait will perhaps be enough for the present—they feel the injury which they have attempted to do us—they perceive how seriously they have involved themselves, to they are driven to every base and vile extremity in the hope of being able to justify before a Jury—for doing which shall every opportunity in due season.

INTERESTING TRAIT OF THE INFANT NIECE PRINCE LEOPOLD.

"The DUCHESS OF KENT, on her visit to the Palace in Parkstreet Thursday, was accompanied by her youngest daughter, the Princess VICTORIA, who had never, till that day, been introduced to his MAJESTY. She is an interesting child, of a very lively and affectionate disposition. She was full of joy on the morning of Thursday, at the thought of seeing the KING, whom, no doubt her juvenile imagination pictured to her as the living Monarch of her fairy tales. "Mamma!" says she, "to see the KING!" and turning round to her Royal Governess, asked, with infantine simplicity, "Oh, mamma! shall I go upon a donkey?" His MAJESTY, with a kindness that was worthy of himself, sent her his picture, set round with brilliants, as a present on her birth-day."

We copy this from the COURIER; indeed it would be a pity to lose a saying so extremely clever—so piquante, and so smart; nothing can prove the excellence of the young Princess's education more than this display—we congratulate the country upon so promising a personage.

THE MORNING CHRONICLE of Friday has the following quotation from and observation upon an article in the QUARTERLY REVIEW just published:—

"It is assumed by the Reviewer that infidelity abounds more at this time among us than it ever did at any former time, and that the Press is to blame for the evil.

'Of all engines that ever were at work for disorganizing society, 'the English Press is at this moment the mostactive, the most effective, 'and the most tremendous. More than eleven millions of newspapers 'are annually circulated among us, and at least two-thirds of these 'bear aim at the destruction of those principles which our fathers held 'sacred, and upon which public prosperity and private happiness 'founded.—While some Journalists, like HERBERT and MARCUS 'the populace to insurrection, others of a higher class, minic 'VOLTAIRE filth with blasphemy, impiety with lewdness, and 'their object with such devoted perseverance, as if the Devil had 'them for his Apostles.'

"We pass over this estimate of the respective numbers of the orthodox and heterodox newspapers, and the charge against some higher class of mingling filth with blasphemy, impiety with lewdness. We may mention, however, our suspicion that there is a slight error of the press here; that the words some of a higher class ought to have been printed, some for the higher classes: for with the exception of one Journal, patronized by the higher classes of this capital, and another, now no more, in which the Law Officers of the Crown of Scotland were partners, we are not aware of any of which filth forms a prominent feature."

Now, when it is recollected that all or most of the filth of the Twopenny Post Bag appeared originally in the CHRONICLE, that all the attacks upon honourable men and virtuous women were day after day systematically published in that journal, that whenever an opportunity offers, the most malignant scandal is to be found in its columns (as we have shewn in this paper by manifold quotations) one is apt to wonder at the cool impudence of an editor who disowns the imputation and casts it upon us. But, reader, when it disclaims the use or propagation of blasphemy, what must we think upon turning to the upper corner on the left hand of the same page in which this indignant language is used, and find this observation upon an ill-acted character at the Opera House Masquerade of the night before.

"The low parts were filled with more or less of ability; but those who attempted any thing elegant or great, failed most miserably—there was a RICHARD—OH, GOD, such a RICHARD!!!"

When an editor gravely disowns the use of blasphemy in one corner of his paper, and then invokes the name of the Deity upon the subject of a bad masque at the Opera House, it may, perhaps, be thought needless to add one single word.

As to the remarks of the CHRONICLE upon us, we wage no literary war with assassins—but we certainly do aver, that from the first to the present number of JOHN BULL, there has not appeared in its columns one single indecency or indelicacy, if we except the mention of the QUEEN'S adventures, which being full of both, imparted to that portion of the paper in which they were alluded to, a certain degree of their own "filth" and grossness.

LORD ERSKINE went to hear MR. IRVING preach—as we are somewhat surprized to observe the wisest and greatest amongst us also do—a trickery which we dislike:—it surely does not become those who must be interested in the support of the Constitution in Church and State to be running after quackery and cant. In Hatton Garden, however, amongst the mob went LORD ERSKINE, what must have been his feelings—if he have any,—when he heard the words of the Text?—

"He speaketh to the Jews words of comfort, but to the Greeks foolishness!"

WHO would have thought to see the day when Covent Garden Theatre should be opened to the multitude, at a "shilling a head"—who could have anticipated the degradation of this patent playhouse to the level of those canvas edifices wherein disport and dissipate MESSRS. GYNGELL, SCOWTON, RICHARDSON, and Co. at Peckham, Camberwell, and Croydon fairs?—The last of the Romans is gone; and the theatre which was classical and national, is sunk and fallen, and its respectability prostituted, first to Whig jobbery for the filthy lucre of gain, is handed over to the mob of St. Giles's for the trifling consideration of One Shilling.

We conclude that no inducement, except money getting, could have been found strong enough to entice the "Committee," (as it is called) to permit the Whig Fancy Masquerade to take place within its walls. The failure of that Tomfoolery, and the subsequent contributions of its silly patrons in order to cover their defeat, and their ACTUAL LOSS of FOUR HUNDRED POUNDS, are sufficient proofs of public feeling upon the contemptible exhibition; but it becomes the Committee of Covent Garden distinctly to state, whether the Patrons of the Spanish Masquerade have solicited them to permit this last exhibition, in order to save some of their cash, or whether the proprietors of Covent Garden are doing it of themselves, to pick up a few shillings at the end of an unsuccessful season—if the former be the case, the Covent Garden proprietors are a vast deal too good-natured; if the latter, they are a great deal meaner than we had thought to find them; because, what they will get by this shilling show, can be but little, inasmuch as the receipt, whatever it is, must be considered part of the profits of the theatre, and accordingly divided in proper proportions amongst the renters and annuitants.

The Humbug and trickery of the Spanish Ball is so particularly striking, and the folly of Whiggery so extraordinary upon the occasion, that it is hardly necessary to say a word about it—we know a person who was offered two or three

...gratis if he would go and take his wife and his wife's ...—the same offer was made in various instances—thus, ...of their purses, the Patrons and Patronesses ...expence of their discomfiture, and fresh ...endeavoured to conceal their discomfiture, and fresh ...contributions have been levied to make an appearance against ...

The CHRONICLE and the other papers who are hired to puff ...assures, state, that after paying 1400l. expences, 3271. was ...over to the Spanish Committee—the same papers tell ...fifteen hundred persons were present—now, calculating ...that one half of these persons were men and married women ...one guineas, and the other moiety unmarried ladies at one ...five shillings, the receipt would have been somewhere ...about two thousand four hundred and thirty-seven pounds. ...leaving, after paying 1400l. expences, a balance in favour of ...Messrs. MINA, BOWRING, WILSON and Co. of upwards of ...a thousand pounds; a comparison of the two statements is sufficient, therefore, to prove the imposition which has been practised. The truth is, that about six or seven hundred tickets were got rid of, and that the patrons and patronesses individually have paid for those which in the zealotry of Whiggism they distributed amongst their humble and accommodating friends.

Who gave SIR WILLIAM CONGREVE a ticket (for we conclude he did not purchase one) we do not at present know—whether there in full uniform; MR. HORACE TWISS was also there, but whether in the character of a partisan of the Spanish Revolutionists, or as nephew to MR. CHARLES TWISS, we have no idea. CONGREVE at Covent Garden has always been in request, but MR. TWISS might as well have been at home.

We have been furnished with a partial list of character ...ges who were present, but we are inclined to put little ...th in the report, because we think such curious coinci...dences as seem to occur in the catalogue would have been ...noticed by some of our contemporaries.

—The DUKE OF GLOUCESTER, it is said, intended to have been present as a Conjuror, but he could not get the habit to fit—a large portly person as Egalité, with a national cockade in his hat, and a pipe in his mouth, singing ca ira, was a capital masque.

—MR. WILBERFORCE, as the late BILLY WATERS, excited considerable merriment—MR. ABERCROMBIE, as Don Quixote, and LORD ALTHORPE as Sancho, were extremely good—his Lordship sang—with variations.

"Flora told a flattering tale,"

—MR. SPRING RICE, as an Irish Haberdasher, was uncommonly effective—and LORD NUGENT, as MR. ROBERT GORDON, filled the part excellently—his Lordship ...ed his cross-about one, and danced the bolero with great ...ect.

—LORDS AYLESBURY and FOLEY, as Messrs. HOWARD and GRAHAM, seemed quite at home. LORD ELLENBOROUGH as HARLEY, was very interesting—MR. ROGERS, as young RAPID in a Cere for the Heart Ache, was himself, and kept the company in a roar.

—SIR RONALD FERGUSON, as a Spanish windmill, excited considerable amusement—MR. MICHAEL ANGELO TAYLOR, as MR. GLASSE, was admirably dressed.

—MR. BROUGHAM, as Lord Chancellor, was very comical, and SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH, as a Collector of Taxes, carried every thing before him. DOCTOR LUSHINGTON, as Cockletop, in the Merry Mourners, rivalled MUNDEN; but we must object to the over-acting of LORD DUNCANNON as the ghost of TOM MODDY—he used his whip too frequently, much to the annoyance of the ladies.

—The Lady Patronesses had a box appropriated to themselves, and did not mingle much with the canaille on the floor. Those ladies who were present in character did not unmask."

We give this extract from a letter which we have received, in the full belief, without putting much faith in it—the real truth we believe to be that the ball in its decorations and arrangements was extremely handsome—that the company did not exceed seven hundred and eighty—that the tickets actually sold did not amount to half that number—that the whole thing was a failure, and we know the cause of the bitterest mortification to those who pique themselves upon such matters, and who cannot endure to be baffled by common sense in their silly attempts at political juggling.

MR. HUME.

We have received the following letter from CAPTAIN TULLIDGE of the Navy:—

"SIR—In the report made by the MORNING CHRONICLE of the debates in the House of Commons, on MR. HUME'S motion respecting Navy Promotions, I was exceedingly surprised to find my name mentioned by the Hon. Member among the number of those officers who, according to him, had not been promoted as their seniority or merits required.

"The Hon. Member could not possibly know my sentiments on this subject, for I never had any communication with him, either verbal or written, at any time. I know nothing of that gentleman beyond what I read in the public accounts of his continual calculations and estimates of the national expenditure. In these I find that he frequently is in ...considerable errors; but he never so mistook a case when he ascribed injustice to Government in the matter of my promotion.

"So far from being discontented, I am perfectly satisfied with the most sincere gratitude for the liberality with which my ...ral services have been rewarded. I shall be greater ...ed to the Hon. Member. if he in future will be so good ...s to forbear from bringing my name in his speeches, without my knowledge or consent.—These remarks, and this request, ...ded upon the report, and upon that only, which has appeared in the MORNING CHRONICLE of June the 20th.—I ...main, yours, &c. J. C. TULLIDGE, Commander.

"Plymouth, June 27, 1823."

This may be taken as a pretty fair specimen of the feelings of those in whose behalf the wise Member for Arbroath so generously interests himself.

PATRIOTIC meetings are getting up in all parts of the country in aid of the "Spanish Cause." At Norwich a very handsome display has been made, and a subscription entered into, which a quaker has contributed his mite—this is new, but such a CAUSE what consistency can be expected.

Even in the midst of all the dancing, and tumbling, and ...ing and contributing, what happens in Spain itself—who would have thought it, says one—bless us, exclaims ...—dear me! says MR. WOODENSPOON, the Regent of ...—MORILLO has joined KING FERDINAND), and sent QUIROGA about his business. What will be done with all the musquets, and flints, and bayonets? What will be done with MR. HOLMES'S pair of shoes?

Perhaps MORILLO'S proclamations may not be unacceptable here—we transcribe them:

"Soldiers of the Fourth Army!

"You have manifested your resolution not to obey the orders of a Regency which the Cortes have installed at Seville, by depriving the Constitutional King of his powers in a manner reproved by our social compact. Animated with the same sentiments as yourselves, I have formed the same wishes; and I declare to you that I do not recognise the Government which the Cortes have illegally established; but these provinces must not be abandoned to the fury of anarchy. I shall retain the command of the army, and, aided by a Government Junta, I shall adopt the measures which circumstances may require, obeying no authority until the King and the nation establish the kind of Government which ought to prevail in our country.

"Our first duty is to preserve public tranquillity, and to permit no person to be insulted, nor the least disorder to be committed, under the pretext of political opinions, or on any pretext.

"A flag of truce will make known our determination to the French General who is opposed to us, and to whom I will propose to suspend hostilities. If he does not accede to my propositions, and if he requires from us humiliating conditions, then you must prepare to fight. You have told me that I merit your confidence, and you have made me the depositary of the honour of the army. I shall know how to preserve them, and whatever may be the dangers which surround us, never will I yield with ignominy.

"Soldiers, nearly all of you belong to these provinces, and your fathers, your brothers, your compatriots need your aid in preserving peace and tranquillity, without which persons and property would be compromised. Your presence under your standards was never more necessary, and I doubt not that, impressed with the noble mission intrusted to you, you will give me constant proofs of your discipline and your union.

COUNT OF CARTHAGENA."

"Lugo, June 26."

"Inhabitants of the Provinces comprehended in the District of the Fourth Army!

"Since the intelligence has been confirmed, that the Cortes had at Seville named a Regency, thereby depriving the King of his powers, although no case had occurred which had been provided for by the Constitution to authorise those acts, which they performed without the forms required by the regulations and by the ordinances, I have received successive deputations of the chiefs and officers of the second and third divisions, who declared to me that all the troops under their command had determined not to obey that Regency. The inhabitants having manifested the same sentiments, I being desirous to prevent the disorganization of the army, and to prevent also ferocious anarchists from carrying desolation though these provinces, have resolved to declare in a public and notorious manner, that I do not acknowledge the Regency established by the Cortes at Seville; because the Constitution has been violated by that illegal act, and because I wish in no wise to be implicated in the evils, which, to all appearances, will arise from that inconsiderate proceeding.

"But in order not to act lightly, and to be completely certain as to the state of public opinion with regard to the affairs of Seville, I this morning assembled all the ecclesiastical, civil, and military authorities, and was thus enabled to convince myself that the population fully participate in the sentiments of the troops, and that a Government which is the result of the most illegal act cannot be recognized.

"In consequence I have resolved as follows:—

"1. The inhabitants of the provinces included in the district of the 4th army do not recognise the Regency installed by the Cortes at Seville on the 11th current.

"2. To maintain order in these provinces, and to protect the persons and property of the inhabitants, I retain the command of the army with the same powers I previously possessed. Wishing, besides, to attach to my measures the wisdom which in the existing circumstances is necessary, I have resolved that each provincial deputation, in concert with the superior ecclesiastical, civil, and military authorities now in the capital, shall nominate an individual of its body, who shall immediately repair to our head-quarters, for the purpose of forming with the other members, nominated by the different deputations and authorities, a Junta of Government to which the examination of difficult affairs may be submitted.

"This order of things shall subsist, until the King and the nation adopt the system of regular Government.

"4. Persons and property remain under the safeguard of the laws, the authorities, and the armed force. No insult nor the least disorder will be permitted under the pretext of opinion or political conduct; and whoever may endeavour to excite disorder, shall be punished with all the severity of the law, as a disturber of public order.

"5. The existing laws are maintained in their vigour, except those relative to offences of opinion, which are abolished, because no person shall be prosecuted or disquieted for the opinions he has heretofore held, and henceforth he only will be considered culpable in this respect who shall trouble public order.

"Such are the regulations which I think it right to establish as the basis of Government, during the continuance of this provisional state of things. My intentions are pure, and I have no other idea than to preserve, if possible, these provinces from invasion, to maintain peace and order in them, and to preserve inviolable the honour of the nation and the army.

"As some days must elapse before the individuals who may be nominated by the provincial deputations, for the Provisional Government junta can assemble, I have constituted a junta, ad interim, consisting of the Bishop of this diocese, the Political Chief of the province; the Marquis de Vallodares, deputy from the province of Vigo; Don Jose Montero, deputy for the province of Corunna; and Don Francisco-Andreso Alvares, deputy for this province.

"Inhabitants of these provinces!—If you wish to give to Europe a noble example, by showing that you have no need of foreign troops to maintain public order, and defend the national honour—if you wish to preserve peace, and the inviolability of your persons and properties, do not allow yourselves to be led astray by your passions; obey the laws and the voice of the authorities, who only desire order and the oblivion of resentments and injuries. You will then reap in abundance the fruits of your wisdom, without experiencing the incalculable evils which oppress the other provinces.

"Count of CARTHAGENA.

"Head-quarters, Lugo, June 26."

It is quite impossible to describe the ludicrous effect these proclamations produced in town yesterday; the cry of "POOR WILSON!" "POOR WILSON!" might be distinctly heard at both ends of the town, and the Whigs, finding the bubble burst, are about to turn round upon their allies, associates, and tools—the Radicals; and, following LAMBTON'S example, (not by putting down their money) cut the concern as contemptuously as he did last week, when he "shammed sick," and declined taking charge of the Borough electors, which the "Vigo corporal" had so liberally handed over to him.

We suppose the farce cannot much longer be kept up, but we warn those persons who have contributed, and particularly the foreigner who subscribed the five thousand pounds, to look after their money—we have fifty letters before us now, soliciting to know something about the QUEEN'S plate subscription—who can give an answer?—The sum to be sure was not large, but in this instance more than fifteen thousand pounds have been collected, and we repeat, it is quite necessary that the blockheads who have been silly enough to pay in their cash, should get some account of the manner in which it has been or will be PAID OUT.

A very patriotic meeting indeed, was held on the second instant at Tiverton, in Devon, at which several resolutions touching the "Spanish Cause" were entered into.

A gentleman last from Gibraltar of the name of CLAUS PELL, took the Chair—and an address penned by Lawyer PARTRIDGE has been briskly circulated; it has had a very great effect—the Colonel put down twenty pounds, Lawyer PARTRIDGE has been briskly circulated; it has had a very great effect—the Colonel put down twenty pounds, Lawyer PARTRIDGE himself two pounds—the religious and pious MR. PARTRIDGE himself two pounds—the religious and pious MR. SLATEY subscribed one pound—a MR. VOISEY (?) another pound—as did indeed COSWAY the carpenter—tailor VENMAN clubbed his five shillings, and BRYANT the blacksmith contributed two old muskets—B. D. 5s.—H. M. 2s. 6d. and T. M. 1s. 6d.

It is gratifying to see how rapidly subscriptions of this sort continue to accumulate.

THEATRICALS.

MR. KENNY'S musical play of "SWEETHEARTS AND WIVES" was produced at the Haymarket on Monday, and received with applause—the plot we gather from an account of it which has appeared in the newspapers (and how such little histories are written we really do not know) runs as follows:—

"ADMIRAL FRANKLYN has determined on marrying his son CHARLES to his niece LAURA, The latter, however, on his travels, has become enamoured of EUGENIA, the daughter of MR. MELBOURNE, an early friend of the Admiral, but with whom, in the impetuosity of his youth, he had quarrelled. LAURA, on her part, has also proved unfaithful, and yielded her heart to the addresses of SANDFORD. CHARLES lands with his wife at Southampton; the Admiral, who is an invalid, is lodging there at an hotel, during the completion of a villa he is building; there EUGENIA is introduced as a chambermaid, and the landlady's niece, and in this character steals on the Admiral's affections. He is still resolute, however, for marrying the two cousins, who, on their part, are in the greatest fear of making each other miserable. A scene of explanation ensues between them, which ends to their mutual satisfaction, and they part in such tokens of joy at discovering their mutual release as to make an equivocal impression on the minds of SANDFORD and EUGENIA, and set them in a ferment of jealousy. The meetings of CHARLES and his wife are at length detected by the Admiral, who insists on MRS. BELL'S sending away her niece, and securing the repose of his family. A critical scene follows between EUGENIA and the Admiral, during which his feelings are strongly wrought upon. A disclosure of the truth is then made—the truants are forgiven, and all parties mutually reconciled."

The striking character of the opera is a novel-reading gardener, which although not novel in its construction (a similar part being to be found in a piece called "FREE AND EASY") is in the hands of that unequalled artist LISTON highly effective. The assumption of the character of a chamber-maid by the heroine, reminds us of "SHE STOOPS TO CONQUER"—but as there is "nothing new under the sun," we are not to blame a similarity, which, on the part of the present author, may be perfectly unintentional; particularly in this instance, inasmuch as the whole piece is a translation from "La niece supposée," by PLANARD, which was acted for the first time at the Francais, on the 22d September, 1813.

TERRY, as ADMIRAL PLAMPIN, was extremely effective. TERRY has now attained that ease and confidence in himself which is essential to an actor, and which is derivable only from habit—we never remember to have seen any man so completely take hold of the town as he has done within the last two years, and now that he has the audience with him, we need not hint to him not to fall into a very common error of the very popular actors—we mean that of presuming upon public favour to "go greater lengths" than is absolutely necessary.

Our observations in this instance are not addressed to him, they are made only cautionally—and if MR. TERRY will keep his eyes about him as we do, he will perceive in others those mistakes by which ribaldry is confounded with comicality, and grossness and vulgarity with wit and humour, and with his good sense will steer clear of that "over-acting," which, (particularly at the Haymarket) however comical to the rest of the performers, is extremely embarrassing to the decent part of the audience.

In all MR. KENNY'S writings for the stage we discern a superior feeling to that which is ordinarily thrust upon the town—a better taste; and in this opera, which would have been infinitely more agreeable without the music, several touches present themselves which claim an unqualified approbation:—when a man gets such an actor in his hands as LISTON it is an excuse for any extravagance he may commit—the present piece, however, will answer every purpose of author and manager, and while a writer is able to fill the house and send the audience home laughing, we do not know what more is required of the caterers for a summer theatre.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR—I believe it is now clearly seen, and generally acknowledged, that your opinion upon the subject of agricultural distress was from the beginning sound, and correct; that there was no mode of relief to the farmer, without oppression and injustice to others, except that of lowering the rents to meet the current price of things. This mode, they, upon whose hearts the Christian rule of doing to others that, which they could wish others to do to them in similar circumstances, nobly adopted. Although, from wise and prudential motives, these upright and truly liberal characters did not cancel their leases, they have, from time to time, most generously returned their tenants a certain sum per cent. in proportion to the rent paid for the land, or the tythes, to meet the distressing exigencies of the times. This truly noble and patriotic generosity highly deserved an adequate return of grateful public acknowledgment; for, under providence, they powerfully assisted to disperse the storm, which, the mock patriots, the "wolves in sheep's clothing," were bowling up to convert their country into a wilderness for themselves; a country, which even the celebrated DR. PRICE, in his wiser days, publicly declared to be "A Land where Peace, Plenty, Knowledge, and Liberty, abound and flourish—a Land, which has the best King, the best Laws, and the best Religion, in the world." But, to my great astonishment, there has not, as far as I can learn through your paper, been one instance in any county of a meeting being called by the farmers publicly to acknowledge the great kindness done them, and to testify their gratitude.

I will now relate a case, on which, being myself a party concerned, I shall make no comment, but simply relate it, and leave you and the public to judge whether those farmers concerned in it have any sense or feeling of gratitude, and whether they are not themselves sadly guilty of the sin of coveteousness, with which they so frequently charge the beneficed Clergy.

I reside in a very large parish, the extent of which is near six miles long and three wide. The Rector has let his tithes on lease,—except in one or two instances, which was refused by the farmer,—and he has —voluntarily I believe—returned the farmers twenty-five per cent; and besides, he allows the upper and lower parts of the parish twenty pounds each for a dinner on the day of payment. In the lower part of the parish there is a chapel, of which I am the incumbent Curate, and they have been accustomed to allow my predecessors a certain sum to defray their expences at the visitations. But, at the last vestry for electing new officers, held at the mother church of Wrotham, it was put to the vote, whether the sum allowed, of one guinea, should be continued to me; and, although they contribute not one grain of corn to my support, there was one, and but one—and he lifted up both his hands—who voted for it. Now, mark well the reasons assigned by these men,—to whom the allowance would scarce have been a farthing a piece,—"The Rector ought to pay it."—The Rector ought to do this and that:—that Rector, who, with a large family of ten children, so generously gives up to these farmers five-and-twenty per cent. and forty pounds for a good dinner, when not a single landlord in the parish has returned them one mite. "The Rector ought!!" With what face can they dictate to the Rector, and presume to interfere between him and the Curate?

I pray you let the public judge, by your inserting this in your justly valued paper, whether the Rector (who deserves far higher commendations than they generally bestow upon him) or these farmers should be ranked among the generous, the excellent, and the honourable of our country, which, blessed be God! still "flows with milk and honey, and is the glory of all lands" upon earth.

With sincere gratitude for the brave and noble stand which you have made to preserve it from ruin, I remain, Sir, your very humble friend,

JOHN W. WYNNE.

Plaxtol, Wrotham, Kent, July 4, 1823.

THE electors of BATH are preparing a magnificent gold vase, embellished with classical ornaments and groupes of figures, from designs by CHANTRY, illustrative of the "Power of Eloquence," and the "Triumph of Liberty." In the front of this beautiful piece of plate is to be engraven the following inscription:—

TO CHARLES PALMER, ESQ.
Colonel in the Army,
Aid du Camp to the KING,
Late Lieutenant-Colonel of the Tenth Regiment of Hussars,
And one of the Independent Representatives in Parliament
of
THE CITY OF BATH,
As a sincere but trifling testimonial of the warm, high, true, and unqualified admiration of those wonderful talents,
That unimpeachable purity,
Those splendid abilities,
That general knowledge,
and Indescribable liberality, which Command implicit attention in Parliament,
and
Universal respect out of it;
But above all,
As a tribute of gratitude for the magnificent display
of
Wisdom, Patriotism, Virtue, and Oratory,
Which they have seen carefully reported
In the Times Newspaper,
As a speech delivered by him in the House of Commons, on Wednesday, the 8th day of July,
MDCCCXXIII,
This Vase is humbly presented by
His numerous, unbiassed, and eternally obliged CONSTITUENTS.

Here follow the names of all the electors, in a small scroll, beautifully chased and worked. The Cup is to be presented to the Colonel as soon as the present vintage is over, and filled with genuine claret of his own growth.

Nothing can be more encouraging to Members of Parliament than these tributes from their constituents; and certainly if any speech ever merited a mark of popular esteem, that delivered by the gallant Colonel, to which the inscription alludes, demands not only the gratitude of Bath, but of all the villages adjacent.

The world may not, perhaps, know the history of this affair. After a prologue in the TIMES newspaper, to "beget an awful attention," the gallant Colonel "brought forward" a motion on the affairs in Spain, which was seconded by MR. HUME; but so unanswerable were the gallant Colonel's arguments, so forcible his illustrations, and so commanding his address, that the House was paralyzed—his friends were conscious they could add nothing to the value and weight of that which had fallen from him—his opponents saw it was needless to attempt to combat it, and the motion was negatived without a word—without a division.

The extreme carefulness of the gallant Colonel as to the effect of the speech in the newspapers will now be amply repaid, and the gift which we have recorded, will, we hope, induce him during the next session to make another appeal to the good sense of the country in Parliament assembled.

LOYAL AND PATRIOTIC CORRESPONDING SOCIETIES.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR—Permit me to offer a few remarks on the comments with which you were pleased to introduce my letter in your highly valuable paper of last Sunday, relative to the formation of Loyal and Patriotic Corresponding Societies.

That the country is quiet and peaceable at the present moment, I readily admit; but I beg leave to observe, that the seeds of insubordination and blasphemy still remain behind, and are propagated with as much enthusiasm as ever—that the dissemination of seditious doctrines render the illiterate and unwary the easy and willing dupes of demagogues and incendiaries in times of peril and emergency; and that it is in vain to expect the effectual cure of such a national disorder without the application of strong and powerful antidotes. When pamphlets, whose publication, twenty years ago, would have consigned their authors to prison, are now freely patronized and encouraged—when every insidious effort is used to overturn our tolerant Church, and destroy the State—and when a convicted advocate of irreligion and regicide (CARLILE) triumphantly obtains from the pockets of the working classes, in the shape of weekly subscriptions, upwards of 250l. per annum, for his detestable performances; besides other contributions for the rest of his family, I think (with due deference to your opinion) that all is not right in the body politic, and that the adoption of some efficient means are absolutely necessary for the removal of the evil in question; and I know of no better remedy than that of circulating cheap or gratuitous writings of a moral and constitutional nature amongst the people, through the medium of Loyal and Patriotic Corresponding Societies, whose labours, being founded on union and mutual co-operation would concentrate a vast force of public opinion, and tend, in an essential degree, to counteract the dangerous attempts of both discontented Whigs and furious Radicals. I crave pardon for mentioning the Whigs first, since they are already sunk into a second rate party, and become mere WHACKUMS to the Radicals, as was clearly evinced on the memorable trial of ST. CAROLINE of Jerusalem, and on several important occasions.—I am, Sir, your humble servant,

Paddington, July 10, 1823. DETECTOR.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, JULY 6.—The counter revolution of Portugal has already restored the friendly relations between that kingdom and France. An Ambassador will set out for Lisbon without delay. The wishes of the Royalists are in favour of M. Hyde de Neuville, who sits on the extreme right in the Chamber of Deputies.

The Moniteur contains a printed letter from Madrid, dated July 2, which states that Gen. Morillo, who commands the Constitutional army in Galicia, on learning that the Cortes had, at Seville, decreed the deposition of the King, addressed to his army a proclamation, in which he declared, that the army having manifested a resolution not to obey the orders of a Regency which the Cortes had installed at Seville, by depriving the Constitutional King of his powers, he (Morillo) had determined not to recognise such Regency. He denounces the conduct of the Cortes as illegal, as imposing force on the King's will, and carrying off his person; and he reprehends the further confinement of His Majesty. However, he considers the prevention of anarchy and the preservation of tranquility as his paramount duty: he therefore retains the command of the army entrusted to him till the King's liberation, aided by a Provisional Junta, which he himself nominates, to aid him by its counsels. He professes his determination not to yield to the foreign invaders; and it is said he proposed an armistice, but the French answered there could be no suspension of arms unless he recognised the Regency at Madrid. Quiroga, the Captain-General of Gali in, having declined entering into Morillo's views, is said to have fled. The King of France, to conciliate Spain, has restored to the Spanish nation all the standards, forty-eight in number, taken by Buonaparte in the Peninsula, together with two other standards taken this war, and the keys of the city of Valencia.

General Morillo has written to General Bourck, and is preparing to dispatch an officer to the Head quarters of the Duke d'Angoulême. The famous Quiroga, Captain General of Galicia, not being desirous of entering into the views of Morillo, has embarked. The King is now imprisoned in a garret of the Excise Office at Cadiz, with no other furniture than two tables and four chairs. His Majesty omits no opportunity to protest against the violence which he has endured, and declares he has said nothing of what has been attributed to him, and that he neither will exercise nor accept the Royal power which they pretend to have restored to him. General Molitor has directed a column towards Grenada. Another has set out to Andouxar.—Journal des Debats.

BAYONNE, JULY 3.—The delay of the mail from Madrid, and the non-appearance of the bulletin, have given occasion to the circulation of various unfavourable reports, such as the Prince has given orders to Gens. Bordesoult and Bourmont to withdraw from Andalusia, and to concentrate their troops in the neighbourhood of Madrid. Some even pretend that secret orders have been given for the whole army to return to the Ebro; it is further added, that General Bourck, having suffered severely, has retreated to Valladolid, and that M. de Martignac is coming immediately to Paris, to give an account of the state of affairs in Spain.

PERPIGNAN, JUNE 28.—Our troops are advancing on Barcelona to undertake the siege. Marshal Moncey has written to the Minister, that as soon as he receives the reinforcement which his Excellency had promised him Barcelona will be invested.

AX, JUNE 29.—Mina, having left Seu d'Urgel on the 19th, arrived at Cervera on the 21st, where he shot, in cold blood, a respectable priest, named Soler, and then retired on the camp of Tarragona. We are still ignorant of his ultimate destination. He had with him about 900 infantry and 150 horse.—The seige of Seu is still pressed with great ardour. The town suffers much from the shot of the citadel, and will be entirely destroyed if the surrender does not take place in a few days. Some ravages were committed on the 25th by the artillery of the Fort of Figueras; the town has suffered much, and many of the inhabitants have been killed or wounded.—The fort of Venasque (in Arragon) is strictly blockaded by Mirailles (Royalist Chief.) The garrison remain tranquil, but refuse to capitulate.

MADRID, JULY 2.—The 18th Bulletin contains nothing important. It minutely details some advantages obtained in the Asturias by Hubert's division over a Spanish corps commanded by Campillo. It is affirmed that a French Colonel, named Goutefray, with 90 men, put to the rout Campillo's corps, 500 strong, and drove it from the village of Colunga. It is stated that Campillo was afterwards pursued to Gijon, and from that place along the sea coast. Longa, a Spanish General of the Faith, commanding French troops, is said to have defeated and taken prisoner a Constitutional Chief named Santo Bania.

In a letter from Saragossa, it is affirmed, that his Royal Highness the Duke of Angouleme had been in imminent danger of being carried off by a guerilla party on a promenade which he took in the environs of the capital.

CADIZ, JUNE 14.—A conspiracy has been discovered, of which Sir John Downie was at the head, which conspiracy was to excite the Royalists to rise to prevent the King from being carried away by force. The plot was discovered quite by a casualty. Sir J. Downie, and a nephew, are now on their way to Cadiz, under a strong escort, where they will be tried.

NEW YORK, JUNE 9.—A letter from Havannah to the Editor of the Norfolk Beacon, dated 24th of May, says, "By the British ship Romulus from La Vera Cruz, we learn that the Emperor Iturbide, with his family, was just about embarking for Leghorn in the English ship Rawlins, to sail in company with the English frigate Tamar, and that the Republic of Mexico had agreed to allow him 25,000 dollars per annum during life."

The following is a copy of the letter written by the Spanish Minister Salvador, before he committed suicide:—"Life every day becomes more insupportable to me, and the conviction of this truth impels me to take the horrid resolution of terminating my existence with my own hand. The only consolation I can leave to my estimable wife, to my beloved children, and friends, respecting this terrible determination, is, that I descend to the grave without my conscience reproaching me for ever having committed any crime or offence whatever. In the night from the 17th to the 18th June, 1823, it is my intention to do the deed with a razor, which I hereby declare, in order that no one may be charged with the crime. (Signed) ESTANISLAO SALVADOR."

LISBON, JUNE 22.—On the 16th, her Majesty the Queen left Ramalhao for the Royal Palace of Queluz, amidst the general acclamations of the people of all the places through which she passed. On the 18th, her Majesty came to the Palace of Bemposta, to visit the King and her sons. When she reached St. Sebastiao da Pedreira, the people took the horses from her carriage, and drew it to Bemposta, with extraordinary demonstrations of joy. The 23d was a day of real triumph, on which their Majesties and Royal Highnesses went in solemn procession to the Church of Santa Maria Maior, to return thanks.

Latest intelligence from South America state that President Bolivar had marched from Guayaquil for Cuenca: his army is said to amount to 8000 men, including the 3000 which returned from Peru. It was supposed the Spaniards were in possession of Lima. The armies of Canterac, La Serna, and Ramiriez, amounted to 10,000 effective troops. The Patriots had about 6000. General Morales was still in Maracaybo, with 9000 men. Gen. Montillo was in Rio de la Hacha, with 4,500.

NATCHES, May 15.—There is a tremendous inundation from the Missisippi, which is destroying all the hopes of the Louisiana planters. The low lands are all under water, and with but here and there a high ridge, this immense stream presents a breadth of 30 miles. It is a grand, but overwhelming and disastrous prospect. Crops are pretty generally abandoned. The destruction among the cattle, the deer, and the inhabitants of the forest generally will be great. Families flying from this irresistible evil present a melancholy sight. The immense quantity of vegetable matter borne along by this mighty river, when exposed to the sun, will, we fear, produce much disease.

We have received American papers to the 9th of June. It appears by the accounts in them, from Commodore Porte's squadron, that the system of piracy in the West Indies is completely broken up. A letter from Havannah of the 17th of May, says, "The troops here are in constant motion: the shot are piled on all the batteries, and every preparation for defence appears to be making; nothing is to be heard but the sound of drum and trumpet. 'Constitution or Muerte' is the favourite motto—how long it will be so remains to be proved."

MISCELLANEOUS.

On Thursday his Majesty gave a grand entertainment at his Palace in Pall-mall. The Duchess of Kent, accompanied by the Princess Victoria arrived at the Palace from Kensington. The Princess was introduced to the King by her Royal mother. The interview lasted upwards of half an hour. The King afterwards retired to a dinner to be given to a numerous and splendid party, consisting of several of the Royal Family, the Foreign Ambassadors, the Cabinet Ministers, and the Foreign Princes in England. His Majesty had also a numerous evening party of distinguished personages at half-past nine o'clock, who were gratified with a performance of most choice and chaste English music only, under the direction of Mr. Hawes.

On Sunday the Duke of York left town for His Majesty's Palace at Newmarket.

On Sunday afternoon, at two o'clock, a Cabinet Council was held at the Foreign Office, which was attended by most of the Cabinet Ministers.

On Thursday morning despatches were received at the Foreign Office from Spain, transmitted by Sir Charles Stuart from Paris. At half-past one Ministers assembled at Mr. Secretary Canning's office, to deliberate upon them.

The Persian Minister to this country, Miza Mahomed Saulit, being about to return home, has issued an official notification from the Prince Royal of Persia, inviting all British subjects who may be disposed to emigrate, to take up their residence in his kingdom; he states, that he will, immediately on their arrival assign them portions of land, with residences attached, and every requisite for their comfort and subsistence. The soil is very productive, the emigrants will be exempted from taxes, and the settlers will be allowed to enjoy their own religious opinions. The climate is very healthy.

Sir H. Wellesley arrived at Vienna on the 25th of last month. Lord Clanwilliam, the British Ambassador to the Court of Berlin, arrived in that city on the 3d inst.

It is now calculated that the business of Parliament will occupy about another fortnight; that the prorogation may take place on Friday the 19th, or Tuesday the 22d inst. His Majesty intends to prorogue the Parliament in person.

The accounts of receipts and disbursements for the Spanish Ball, on Friday se'nnight, has been made up, and the balance, 372l. 6s. has been paid over to the Spanish Committee.

Tuesday's Gazette contains a Proclamation by the Lords of the Admiralty, abolishing, from the 1st of Jan. next, the use of His Majesty's Union Jack in merchant ships for any purpose whatsoever, and ordering that the signal Jack, to be worn by merchant ships, should have an entire white border, such border being one-fifth of the breadth of the Jack itself, exclusive of such border, and that such Jack should also be in future used on board merchant vessels as a pilot, instead of the Union Jack at present used for that purpose.

The Lord Mayor has appointed to take the septennial boundaries of his jurisdiction as Conservator of the River and Waters of Medway, on Wednesday, the 23d of July three following days, upon which occasion he will be accompanied by the Aldermen and principal officers of the Corporation.

Tuesday, the Lord Mayor held a Court of Aldermen, which was attended by 15 Aldermen, the Recorder, Sheriffs, and City Remembrancer, G. H. Whittaker, Esq. and P. Laurie, Esq. Sheriffs Elect, &c. &c. to take upon them the said office.

The Grand Cricket Match in Lord's Ground between the Gentlemen of Kent and the Marylebone Club, was decided on Tuesday in favour of the Marylebone Club. In the two Innings Kent had 141—Marylebone 142. Marylebone won by 8 wickets—5 to 4 on Marylebone.

A balloon fell Wednesday evening at Chisworth Farm, in the parish of Horsham, Sussex. It had been two hours and five minutes travelling from Bampton, in Oxfordshire, from whence it was launched, a distance of more than eighty miles.

Amongst the numerous preparations to celebrate the approaching the Coronation on Saturday next, we perceive that the Proprietors of the Panorama at Spring Gardens is to be tastefully decorated with flags, and patronised by several families of distinction, which will render it a place of very great interest during the day and evening.

THE ARMY.—The 17th Regiment, which marched from Cork on the 7th, will arrive at Portsmouth to-morrow.—The 38th Regiment arrived on board the Coldstream East Indiaman, from Bengal, and barked at Gravesend on the 8th, and marched to Chatham.—The 53d Reg. which also came home from India in the Coldstream arrived on Wednesday at Chatham.—The 24th Reg. which embarked on board the Charlotte, country ship, from India, disembarked at Deal on the 3d inst.—The Head-quarters and two Squadrons of the 3d Reg. of Light Dragoons are at present stationed at Kensington. A troop of Horse Artillery has received orders to march to Woolwich for the purpose of being attached to the Cavalry intended to be reviewed on Tuesday.

On Friday, the Guards were reviewed in Hyde Park by the Duke of York. Of these, but four battalions were on the ground—the second battalions of the 1st regiment, and the second regiment being on duty, the Coldstream was the only regiment present in full complement. The military were on the ground by nine o'clock, at half-past nine a detachment of the 14th Light Dragoons arrived from Knightsbridge barracks to keep the ground, and were drawn up in single files, and presented an extensive and imposing line of about 7,000 men. At about 20 minutes after ten the Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief arrived upon the ground, accompanied by Field Marshal the Duke of Wellington, and a numerous train of officers. The usual military evolutions were gone through with the precision for which the Guards have long been so justly distinguished. The formation of the whole body into order was remarkably fine in effect. The review was over about twelve. The word of command was given by Colonel Woodford.

At the Grand Review of Cavalry on Tuesday next, the Regiments directed to be reviewed, are the 1st and 2d Regiments of Life Guards, the Royal Horse Guards, the 3d Regiment of Light Dragoons, the 7th and 15th Hussars. His Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief attended by several General Officers and a numerous Staff, will review the Troops. Major-General Lord R. E. H. Somerset, Inspecting General of the Cavalry in Great Britain, will give the word of command. The following movements of the Troops will precede the Review, has taken place. The 1st Regiment of Life Guards marched from Knightsbridge to the town of Hounslow. The Regiment of Life Guards from the Regent's Park Barracks, and Brentford, and the Royal Horse Guards from Windsor to Egham and Staines. The following Regiments have proceeded to the undermentioned stations, viz.—The 3d Regiment of Light Dragoons, Hampton Court Barracks: the 7th Hussars, Brighton: the 15th Hussars, Hounslow Barracks; the two squadrons of the 3d Regiment of Light Dragoons, which arrived at Canterbury from Birmingham on the 5th instant, are ordered to keep the encampment.

On Thursday the Hon. East India Company's Regiment under the command of Colonel Astell, had a field day, near Hounslow. The horse of Captain Dickinson threw him; the Captain fell upon his shoulder, which had been lately dislocated; his thigh was also considerably bruised. He was conveyed off the ground in a chair.

Sir T. Maitland, late Governor of the Ionian Islands, left Berwick last week at Berwick, on his way to Manderston, the seat of his brother-in-law General Maitland.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM PORTSMOUTH, JULY 8—"This day arrived the Termagant, Captain Dunlop, from Madras, touching at the Island of Ascension the 31st of May, and found there the Bucephalus, from the Coast of Africa, having lost her Captain, Surgeon, and 40 men of her crew, by the yellow fever, and which she had quarantined at the island, for out of the little garrison of twenty-five men, and 3 private marines had died of the fever; the assistant-surgeon being the only surgeon on the island) was ill with the fever, and not expected to live. Major Campbell, R.M. and Lieut. Bissenstrand, with the remainder of the small garrison, had gone up the highest rock in the island for change of air. The Termagant having herself sustained the loss of eight of her crew by the cholera morbus, was very cautious in communicating with the Bann; they did not go on shore, nor did remain longer than one hour at Ascension. Left the Cape the 14th and St. Helena the 26th of May.

A dreadful skirmish took place on Sunday night, between the Lascars and Chinamen, close to the Barrack, in St. George's East. The parties were armed with swords, dirks, long knives fixed in poles, and other deadly weapons, with which they fought in the most vindictive fury, to the great terror of the neighbourhood. Twenty-five of them were taken to the watch-house, several of whom received desperate wounds. Six have been committed from Lambeth-street Office for want of bail, and the rest discharged. The East India Company have taken up the ship Buckinghamshire to convey the men back to China, with orders to be in the Downs the 15th of the month.

Thursday morning, about nine o'clock, Mrs. May, who keeps a lodging-house in the Commercial-road, left her boy, about three years old, in the kitchen; during her absence the child went into the room of Capt. Fraser, one of the lodgers, whose dressing-case was on the table, from which he took a razor, and cut his throat in a most shocking manner. He is not expected to recover.

On Sunday night, about eleven o'clock, as a party of young men were returning from Richmond, where they had spent the day, and it is presumed had been making rather too free), when about a mile it was discovered that one of the party was missing. Their unfortunate companion fell overboard somewhere between Lender's Distillery and St. John's Wharf, Battersea, opposite to which place the body was found the following morning.

On Monday morning, the Union coach from Shrewsbury to London was robbed of a carpet bag, containing a parcel, directed to Messrs. Masterman and Co. Bankers, London, in which were 30 promissory notes, payable in London; one 35l. Bank post Bill, dated No. 8599; 36 Pensioners' Receipts, and sundry other papers.

On Friday was committed to Oxford gaol, John Carey, the celebrated pugilist, charged on a violent suspicion of having robbed the Banbury mail, on the 25th ult. of a parcel containing a bill, and three 1l. notes.

In consequence of the atrocious attempts lately made to extort money from persons of a blameless character, an Act has just passed which declares, that every person accusing another of any unnatural crime with the view to extort money, shall be deemed guilty of felony and be transported for life.

On Tuesday last, a young lady of elegant accomplishments, from Cheltenham, with her lover, but the father pursued the fugitives, overtook them at Aylesbury, and returned home with his daughter to Cheltenham.

At the Hertford Assizes, in the case of Pryor v. Nicoll and another, an action was brought by a publican at London Colney, to recover from the defendants, who are parish officers of St. Albans, within the liberty of St. Alban's, a sum of 3l. 16s. for the board, lodging, nursing, and liquors provided in the plaintiff's house for a woman named Britton. The defendants paid 3l. 11s. 6d. into Court. The object of the action was to recover the trifling sum of four shillings and sixpence, which sum the defendants disputed in the plaintiff's account. It appeared that Britton, a young man whose settlement was in St. Peter's, had been lodging two or three days in the plaintiff's house when he was taken dangerously ill with an inflammation in his bowels. An apothecary was sent for, and for several days he was attended and prescribed for. Notice of the pauper's situation was given to the proper officers of St. Peter's, and the former of the poor rate the plaintiff provide for him in such things as were necessary for his situation. LATEST NEWS.

Paris papers to the 11th instant, arrived yesterday; they contain two bulletins from Marshal Moncey, who announces that his troops are approaching Barcelona, where it is admitted that Mina had arrived, and had fixed his head-quarters at Sans, about half a league from the town. The other is from the Major-General, Guilleminot, and describes a series of skirmishes and movements in the Asturias, in which the enemy claims the advantage.

A letter from Gerona, dated the 5th inst. states that Mina is ill from the effects of a fall from his horse.

The Pilote of Thursday last, states, on the authority of a letter from Bayonne, dated the 4th inst. that Morillo had solemnly refused to acknowledge the Madrid Regency, but that having been made acquainted with the restoration of Ferdinand to the exercise of the Royal Functions, he had admitted the necessity of the case under which the Cortes had acted, and had made his troops take a fresh oath to the Constitution.

Advices of the 3d inst. from Madrid, announce that Ballesteros had reached Villa Nueva-de-la-Fuente on the 27th of June, with sixteen thousand men.

PARIS, JULY 9.—Yesterday the Duke of San Carlos, Ambassador from Spain, was introduced to a solemn audience of the King. The Journal des Debats gives the speech of the Duke of San Carlos to the King, praying him to "continue his noble and generous succour to Spain, united in wishes and intentions with his august Allies, who already show so much interest in the Regency."—The King, in his reply, said, "God has hitherto too visibly protected the most just of causes, not to afford a hope that he will continue his support of it. For myself, strong in the purity of my intentions, and those of the Sovereigns, my Allies, I am firmly resolved not to lay down our arms until I have restored to Spain happiness—and to its King liberty—and to Europe the repose of which the troubles of your country threatened to deprive it."

M. de Martignac has notified his recall to the Regency of Spain, and, previously to his departure, he received from the Regency the portrait of the King of Spain, and the Grand Cross of the Royal Order of Charles III.

A letter from Cadiz, states, that a convoy of 150 mules, laden with corn, which were endeavouring to enter that city, have been taken by our troops. The pregnancy of the Queen is confirmed.

The Journal des Debats says that Rear Admiral Rotour procured the restoration of the four French vessels taken into Algesiras, by threatening to batter the town.

On Friday, at one o'clock in the afternoon, the Marquis and Marchioness of Hastings arrived off the Tower Stairs, in the Earl of Liverpool steam packet, which left Calais at 2 o'clock in the morning.

The Duke of Bedford, Cunnynghame, from India, has arrived off Brighton. The York, Talbert, has arrived off the Isle of Wight; sailed from Madras Feb. 16, Ceylon, March 8, and the Cape, May 9.

Vauxhall Gardens was attended on Friday night by a fashionable and numerous company. The attractions of this favourite place of resort, aided by the beauty of the weather, will no doubt continue to secure to the liberal proprietors full gardens. The ballet of Cupid and Psyche is got up in good taste.

The Tale of "THE WILDERNESS," detailing some historical facts connected with the early life of the American Hero and Legislator, General Washington, indicates a fertile imagination, and excites an uncommon degree of interest.

In the Court of King's Bench, yesterday, an action was tried, White v. Bentley and others, proprietors of the Morning Chronicle, for a libel, which charged the plaintiff with fraud, in circulating, at Maranham, a quantity of base copper and silver coin among the troops, for which, according to the witnesses for the plaintiff, there was not the least foundation. The Jury gave the plaintiff a verdict, with 300l. damages.—The Sittings after Trinity Term, in London, are concluded, and the Lord Chief Justice and Counsel will proceed forthwith to join their respective circuits.

The admirers and patrons of the fine arts will have a treat during the ensuing week, in the exhibition of 30 Pictures of the first class, the property of a Nobleman, of whom it is said by Mr. Geo. Robins, that his "correct judgment and good taste are alike proverbial." We have heard these Pictures highly spoken of. The Duke of York, Prince Leopold, and a long list of the Nobility have already been to the private view, and corroborated the high eulogium previously passed upon them.—There is also a collection of the ancienne order of Sevre, with some pieces of great value in Dresden, Raphael, and Angouleme, collected by the same Nobleman. The whole comes to the hammer on Saturday.

A few days since, the Cork coach, via Cashel, was upset at Abbeyleix, on its way to Cork. Mr. Jones, of Cork-hill, one of the passengers, was thrown over the road ditch, into a field, by the violence of the percussion, and his thigh was broken in a dreadful manner. A young lady and two other passengers were also much injured.

An inquest was held on Friday night, on a Mrs. Lewis, who, in a state of intoxication, fell down stairs at her lodgings, in King's Headcourt, Shoe-lane, and broke her neck. Verdict—"Accidental death."

A few days since, as Mr. and Mrs. Lewthwaite were passing through Fenchurch-street in their Phaeton, they came in contact with the wheel of a hackney-coach, which threw Mr. L. from his seat to a considerable distance, by which he received a compound fracture of the elbow joint, with other severe injuries. Mr. Bassett, surgeon, was immediately sent for, who, after having removed several broken pieces of bone from the joint, set it. Mr. L. is rapidly recovering.

The following useful works have been lately published by Messrs. Colburn and Co. viz. 1. Pomarium Britannicum; or, an Historical and Botanical Account of Fruits known in Great Britain, with Practical Remarks on their Culture, &c.; by H. Phillips, Esq. F.H.S. 1 vol.—2. A History of Cultivated Vegetables; by the same Author, 2 vols.—3. The Florist's Manual; or, Hints for the Construction of a Gay Flower Garden; by the Authoress of Botanical Dialogues, one small volume, with plates.—4. PRICE OF STOCKS AT THE CLOSE, SATURDAY.

We have little to notice in the Money Market this week, the early part of which saw Consols for the Account bordering on 83¾, but the French Loan having been taken by an English House at a very high rate, has caused a depression this day, and they have been doing at 82¾ to 83. In the Foreign Market, Spanish Bonds have been doing from 32 to 32¾.

Families who have not yet visited MILES and EDWARDS'S Chintz and Damask Furniture Warehouse, can have but little idea of the amazing reduction at which they are selling their splendid London Printed Furnitures, Damasks, Tabborets, Moreens, &c. If the introduction of an endless variety of new and elegant designs at such extraordinary low prices will ensure encouragement, the proprietors of this Establishment are determined to merit support.—No. 134, Oxford-street, between Holles-street and Old Cavendish-street.

Undressed Leghorn and Foreign WHITE CHIP HATS.—The fashionable house of Askew and Normanville have received a few new patterns, which they beg leave to offer for the inspection of the Nobility and Gentry, 55, Oxford-street.

ELEGANT GLASSES, FURNITURE, &c.—The Nobility and Gentry are invited to inspect the Ware rooms of Cooper and Son, 93, Bishopsgate Within, where is exhibited a large Assortment of new and second-hand Plate Glasses, admirably suited to every description of drawing or dining-rooms. The prices are just reduced 40 per cent. on plates measuring 100 inches by 72, and upwards; and on those of smaller dimensions the alteration will be found equally important. The extensive preference given to this Establishment is thankfully acknowledged by the Proprietors, who, in their endeavours to evince their gratitude, by manufacturing articles in a superior manner, at prices suitable to the times, hope to merit a continuance of public support. In the furniture department is comprised every new and elegant article of upholstery, cabinet, and chair work, regulated upon such a scale of economy as to demand and ensure the patronage of rank and fashion.

Fine weather induces many to travel, and the human hair requires particular attention, as a serious change is often effected in that inestimable ornament. During travelling, sea bathing, and change of climate, the most essential requisite is Rowland's Macassar Oil, by a regular use of which, it prevents the hair sustaining any injury. The properties of this oil are as prolific to the hair as the waters of the Nile to the dry and barren soil of Egypt.

AMICABLE SOCIETY for INSURANCE of LIVES, Serjeants' Inn, Fleet-street, London, Incorporated by Queen Anne, 1706.

The Directors of the Corporation of the Amicable Society for a Perpetual Assurance Office, do hereby give notice, that attendance will be given at the Society's House, in Serjeants' Inn, Fleet-street, on WEDNESDAYS, the 16th, 23d, and 30th days of July instant, and on WEDNESDAY, the 6th day of August next, from Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon until One in each of the said days, and on the last WEDNESDAY of every subsequent Month, from Eleven to Twelve of the Clock, to pay claims arising by Deaths of Members of the said Society in the Year ending at Lady Day, 1823 (Old Style), when will be paid to the respective Nominees, Executors, Administrators, or Assigns of such Members, the sum of two hundred and forty one pounds eight shillings and sixpence, for each Share insured on their respective Lives.

The Directors have now to offer to the attention of the Public, TABLES of RATES for the INSURANCE of LIVES, at the various ages from 8 to 72; either for the whole Life; any specific number of Years; the contingency of one person surviving another; or for the joint continuance of the Lives of two or more Persons, the Insurance payable on the death of either.

Insurances in this Office are effected in certain cases at a reduction of nearly 20 per cent. and on the whole on terms greatly favourable to the Insured; and may be effected from £200 to £5000, and every kind of Insurance, however short the period of continuance, is entitled to a participation in the pecuniary advantages accruing to the Corporation. These advantages are wholly appropriated to the benefit of the Insured, in proportion to the amount of each Insurance.

In the last year Insurances on 146 Shares became claims, of which 59 receive additions amounting to 60 per cent.; four Shares 50 per cent.; three Shares 41 per cent.; three Shares 33 per cent; and 79 Shares 20 per cent. beyond the sums originally insured.

Abstracts of the Charters and By Laws, with Tables of the Premiums, may be had at the Office, where attendance is given daily from Nine till Three o'Clock. By Order of the Court of Directors, J. PENSAM, Registrar.

Two thirds of the profits of the Company are periodically added to the sums specified in the Policies of Assurance for the whole term of life, at the same time the Insured are protected by the deed of settlement, and the above ample capital, from every chance of loss by the responsibility which attaches to those who become mutual Insurers of each other.

Lives Insured are allowed to pass by sea from one part of the united kingdom to another, and also, in time of peace, to pass in King's ships and packets, or other decked vessels, between British Ports and such Foreign Ports as lie between Ostend and Havre de Grace, both included, without extra premium, or special leave of the Directors, as is usually required.

No extra premium is required from persons engaged in the army or navy, unless when called into actual service.

No Entrance Money nor Fine of Admission is charged except in the case of non-appearance.

Attendance is given daily at the Company's Offices from ten till four o'clock, where rates and conditions may be had, or at any of the Company's Agents, in the principal towns throughout the kingdom. By order of the Board,

JOHN GREY, Actuary.

A Dividend on the Subscription Capital will be paid to the Proprietors on Wednesday, the 16th inst. and following days between the hours of Eleven and Two o'clock.

LAW LIFE ASSURANCES SOCIETY, established for the purpose of granting Assurances for Lives and Survivorships. Office, No. 58, Lincoln's-inn-fields. Assurances are effected by this Society upon the Lives of all persons, whether in the Army, Navy, Militia, Law, or other ranks of life.—The Capital of the Society is One Million Sterling.

Additions to the sums specified in the Policies of Persons Assuring for the whole term of Life will be periodically made out of the savings of the Society, in a manner more advantageous than can be obtained in any other Office, having a subscribed capital, and exempting the assured from all liability. The assured will then be empowered to elect annually, after the 24th of June, 1825, two of the four Auditors. Every person not being able to continue the payment of his Premiums, may either sell his Policy to the Society, who will purchase it, or in lieu thereof, may receive another Policy payable at his decease, and he will not be required to make any annual or other payments for such new Policy. Parties Assured in this Office, are at liberty to pay the Premiums by one payment, by payments for a limited number of years, or by continuing annual payments at their own option. Interim Policies may be received at any period within six months after the forfeiture, on the payment of a fine to be fixed by the Board of Directors, not exceeding 10s. per cent. on the total sum Assured, or the Policies may be received at any period within thirteen months, on the payment of such fines as a Board of Directors may think reasonable. This Office does not require any extra premium from persons engaged in the army, or navy, unless when called into actual service. Entrance money is not required, nor is any charge made for Policies beyond the cost of the Stamp.

Attendance is given daily at the Office, 58, Lincoln's Inn-fields, from ten till four o'clock, where the terms of Assurance may be had. Proposals for effecting Policies received, and every information respecting the Society obtained. The Board days are on Tuesdays and Fridays at two o'clock.

JAMES ANDERTON, Secretary.

A DVOWSON.—To be SOLD in Fee a RECTORY, in the West of England, of very considerable annual value, with prospect of early possession. The Parsonage is excellent and beautifully situated in the midst of the Glebe at the top of a Lawn of many acres, with coach house, stabling, and every convenience. The gardens and pleasure grounds are extensive, and contain fish ponds, and have a trout stream adjoining; part of the purchase money may remain on mortgage. Further particulars by application to Mr. Charles Score, 12, Austin Friars, London. All letters to be post paid.

ARROWSMITH and CO. TROPICAL CLOTHIERS, Finch and Arrowsmith) No. 3, Cornhill, near the Mansion House, beg leave to apprize their Friends and the Public in general that the Business of that long established House upon the same broad principles has already obtained for it their distinguished support, viz. combining the interests of the vender and purchaser, by the sale of the best articles at reciprocal advantageous terms. Cadets, and passengers to India and elsewhere, furnished with every necessary article of equipment, so arranged as to supply upon their arrival.—Information respecting East India Ships sailing.

A GENTLEMAN'S HAT.—WM. PRITCHARD respectfully informs the Public that he has succeeded in manufacturing a perfect, economical SUBSTITUTE for the SILK HAT, so deficient in gracefulness of appearance, and so injurious to the health by reason of the perfect resistance it opposes to the escape of the perspiration, thereby very probably laying the foundation for serious injury to the health. Wm. Pritchard presumes that his family experience as manufacturers for more than half a century will render unnecessary any assertion to his friends, while it may guarantee to the public that his articles shall be substantially good, possessing all the shortness and closeness of nap, &c. and at the very moderate price of 16 shillings. 229, Regent-street, corner of Princes-street, Hanover-square.

WALSH'S ORIGINAL GINGER SEEDS having for thirty years been patronized by the Public and recommended by the Medical Men of the first eminence, their beneficial effects have been established; in consequence of which, many sorts have been offered for sale of very inferior quality, which has, in a great measure, brought the above valuable preparation into disrepute. The Public are, therefore, informed that they are prepared solely at the original Warehouse, No. 100, Strand, by the successor to the late Mr. WALSH. Where are also to be had, WALSH'S ANTIBILIOUS PILLS—DOCTOR MOSELEY'S ANTIBILIOUS PILLS—WALSH'S CORDIAL. Each the efficacy of which Medicines being universally known, requires no recommendation.

BLACK PELERINES, being so much in demand in the Fashionable Circles, has induced DYSON, WILLSON, and CO. to make a large assortment of them of the newest appropriate designs. To invite ladies to inspect their establishment previous to making their purchases amongst other novelties peculiar to their House, they have just received a selection of Parisian Cornettes in the Brussels fabric; La Bonne is the name for marine visitants; they have a few Brussels veils left from the late sale, superb Brussels dresses complete for 18 guineas, with every article of the manufacture at the lowest wholesale prices. No. 247, Regent-street, opposite the Argyll Rooms.

LADIES' superior fine polished elastic Steel Bracelets, 2s. per pair, warranted equal to those usually sold at 7s.; fine steel reticule clasps, 2s. 6d.; gilt reticule clasps, 1s. 6d.; purse snaps, 6d.; superfine snaps, steel waist buckles and snaps, from 1s.; rich reticule clasps, upwards of 500 Russia and Morocco reticules from 3s. 6d.; in all cases, 1s.; strong bankers' bill cases, 1s. 3d.; strong Russia card cases, with steel snaps, 6d.; sovereign purses, beaded purses with silver rings, Russia and Morocco pocket-books from 1s.; asses skin memorandum, thread-cases, work-boxes, and spectacle cases, &c. on sale at Mason's Cheap Wholesale and Retail Pocket-book and Reticule Manufactory, facing the Carpet of Middle-row, Holborn.

SURREY.—CHARLWOOD PARK ESTATE, with the Mansion, Heriots, Quit Rents, &c. to be SOLD by PRIVATE CONTRACT, consisting of an Elegant Sporting Residence, with Manor nearly 50 miles in circumference well stocked with Game, and 474 Acres of Freehold Land, and a Fine Pasture over 900 Acres of Uninclosed Land; with suitable Farm Houses, &c. along the Turnpike Road, midway between London and Brighton, and 20 miles from Reigate. The Villa is placed on an elevated situation, and is surrounded by Shrubberies, and Plantations, in a Park of 100 acres, commanding Extensive Views, diversified with all the beauties of nature and art. There is a large kitchen garden, farm-house, stables, coach-house, and kennel for a pack of hounds, at a convenient distance from the residence, allotted for the farm-house have been built within twenty years. Poor-rates extremely low in the pound, all other rates low. The neighbourhood being noted in the Sporting World renders the situation peculiarly suited to the lovers of Shooting. To be viewed by cards only, which, with descriptive particulars, may be had on the first of July of Mr. Vaux, Land Agent and Surveyor, 38 Gower-street, Bloomsbury, who is authorized to treat for the same; and the estate may be seen at his office. Particulars may also be had at the Libraries, Brighton, Plough, Cheltenham, White Hart, Bath, and Mitre, Oxford. Letters to be post paid.

"FOR GOD, THE KING, AND THE PEOPLE!"

No. 136. SUNDAY, JULY 20, 1823. Price 7d.

GRAND CORONATION GALA, UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MAJESTY.

ROYAL GARDENS, VAUXHALL.—TO MORROW Evening the Gardens will be most splendidly illuminated with upwards of 15,000 Additional Lamps, giving a most brilliant display in commemoration of His Majesty's Coronation. The Gardens will open at Half-past Six, and the Amusements commence at Half-past Seven; consisting of a Grand Vocal and Instrumental Concert, in which appropriate Songs will be introduced; also the Grand Coronation Anthems by the whole strength of the Company, assisted by numerous extra Choristers engaged for the Evening. The Tight and Slack Rope, by the wonderful young American, Mr. Blackmore. The grand, new, beautiful, and classic Ballet of Cupid and Psyche, by the whole Juvenile Corps de Ballet, under the direction of the justly celebrated Monsieur Hullin. Hydraulics by Mr. Morris. New Revolving Evening Star, executed by Mr. Saul, will be exhibited, at various intervals during the Evening. The never equalled Fantoccini, by Mr. Grey, will be performed two or three times, each time varying in the subjects. The pleasing Shadows, known by the name of Harlequin in the Shades, will also be exhibited. The Four New Cosmoramas of Rotterdam by Night—Paris from the Observatory—Storm off the Cape of Good Hope—and Eruption of Mount Vesurius, as it occurred on the 21st of October, 1822, and a new Piece of Artificial Fire-works will likewise be shewn. The Works by that celebrated Artist, Madame Heugler, who has so often delighted the brilliant assemblages at the Royal Gardens; and as she is paid a large sum extra for this joyful occasion, a more brilliant display than ever may be anticipated; and in the midst of the most splendid and really terrific feats, the unassisted young Blackmore, (the surprising American), makes his Ascent on the Rope, nearly 100 feet from the earth, and performs the unparalleled feat of standing on his head when near the top. The other Entertainments of the French Theatre, Mount Vesurius, Illuminated Fountain, Transparencies, &c. will be on the grandest scale, and the Gardens will be decorated with Flags, Banners, &c. The Chinese Walk will be Illuminated. ☞ The new Grand Chinese Entrance will be opened; and, if required, after Twelve o'clock, will be converted into a Supper Room. Additional Police will be stationed in various parts.—Admission, 3s. 6d. No Orders can be admitted.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—The rude and unskilful attempts constantly made to supply these substitutes for the masticatory organ, and their disgust which delicacy suffers from the unpleasantry attending them when prematurely fixed, have deterred many from adopting the aid and comfort they are capable of affording, independent of the assistance they may contribute to digestion and consequent health. The ingenious application of mechanical science will enable us to obviate all these inconveniences, and allow the wearer at all times to keep the mouth in a state of perfect cleanliness, and to perform the functions of mastication, articulation, &c. with decided ease and comfort.—Mr. NICHOLSON begs to state, that he is in constant attendance from ten to four, and will be happy to give decular demonstration of the comforts derived from his effects under every circumstance of simple and complicated deficiency.—115, Fleet-street.

DUBLIN and BRISTOL—The ST. PATRICK sails from Bristol every Tuesday, and from Dublin every Friday; the HIBERNIA leaves Bristol every Friday, and Dublin every Tuesday. The following are the hours of departure for the next four weeks.

From Bristol		From Bristol

From Dublin, at from 7 to 9 o'clock each morning.—The size and strength of these superb Packets, and the immense power of their engines, being nearly double that of the others upon the station, render their passages across the channel certain and regular; they are not subject to the annoyance of carrying troops for the War-office, nor to the inconvenience of waiting for tides among the dangerous shoals of the Liffey, to take them up to Dublin, their passengers being landed at the fine harbour of Kingstown, in large commodious boats belonging to the establishment, where carriages are readily procured to convey them to Dublin, the distance being only five miles, and the road delightful. As the Packets sail punctually, passengers are required to be on board half an hour before the time stated.—Births secured on application, post paid, to Mr. Thomas S. Protheroe, Cumberland Basin, Bristol, or Mr. Geo. E. Davies, Great Brunswick-street, Dublin, and further information will be given by Mr. J. Lancaster, No. 12, Regent-street, Pall Mall, London, or Mr. Reilly, York House, Bath.

This Association is founded on principles combining present and prospective benefits to the assured; for it not only offers the security of a Proprietary Company, but provides, by the Deed of Settlement, that the whole Funds of the Association shall ultimately devolve to the assured, for the whole term of life upon the principle of mutual guarantee.

CAPITAL £100,000.

The Rates of Premiums, which have been calculated expressly for this Society, are formed on as moderate a scale as to afford the greatest advantage to every description of insurers, consistently with a due regard to the stability and permanent prosperity of the Association.

No extra charge is made for sea risk, or persons passing at any time of the year from one part of the United Kingdom or of Europe to another, in a King's Ship, or in a Packet, or Steam Boat, employed by his Majesty's Postmaster-General.

One fifth part of all claims, not exceeding £1000, will be paid immediately upon satisfactory proof being adduced of the decease of the life insured, and the remainder within three months.

These latter advantages appertain exclusively to this Association.

Attendance at the office daily, from 10 till 4 o'clock, where printed particulars and every information may be obtained. By Order,

JOHN RATRAY, Registrar.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY.

Earl Grosvenor called the attention of the House to the office of Clerk of Parliament. On a former occasion it had been denied that this office was a sinecure. However, he wished to know what was to be done with it in this or the next Session.

The Earl of Liverpool said, whenever the present freehold expired, the office would not be filled up without reference to Parliament.

Lord Holland presented a Petition from Inverness in favour of the Scotch Jury Bill.—Ordered to lie on the table.

The Earl of Liverpool moved the third reading of the Limerick Local Taxation Bill.

The Earl of Clare contended that this was one of great public importance. If this Bill were refused to pass, it would be of fatal consequence in a country where it was already believed that the poor man had no chance for redress of his grievances.

The Lord Chancellor said, that on looking at this Bill it appeared to him that a gross case of abuse had been made out; but no one could say that such abuses could not be remedied by Courts of Law, without the necessity of re-modelling the constitution of the Corporation itself. He did not see how they were to say that a Corporation should have no more than a certain sum of money in their possession at one time.

Lord Redesdale objected to this Bill, on account of its being liable to be employed as an improper precedent in future.

The Marquis of Lansdowne thought the Bill deserved their attention, since it had for its object to protect the people of Limerick from improper taxation. There was not a clause in this Bill which was not consistent with Parliamentary usage; for there was a similar Act interfering with the chartered rights of Kilkenny, because the Corporation books had been destroyed by the Town Clerk. This was a case exactly similar to the present.

Earl Manvers supported the Bill, which was read a third time, and passed.

The amendments made by the Commons in the Irish Tythe Composition Bill being read,

The Marquis of Lansdowne moved, that the clause relating to agistment landlords should be left out of the Bill.

The Earl of Westmorland supported the clause.

The Earl of Rosslyn considered this clause as interfering with the rights of agistment landlords, and supported the amendment of the Marquis of Lansdowne.

The Earl of Liverpool supported the clause. The owners of agistment lands were generally the wealthiest proprietors in Ireland; and had, therefore, no right to indulgence which they could not have claimed had Parliament established a general commutation of tythes.

The Marquis of Lansdowne contended, that by this Bill the Rector's salary might be increased 20 per cent. and the parishioners relieved from 30 per cent. more, by their combining and throwing the whole burden on the agistment landlord.

Lord Maryborough thought the principal merit of the Bill was to bring the agistment land in aid of the poor in Ireland. The owners of such land were not to be allowed to break it up for cultivation, without payment of tithes. The measure would be not at all perfect, nor would it answer the purpose of this clause, were it to be omitted. About ten years ago the agistment land amounted to half the value of all the land in Ireland. This, therefore, was the most important clause in the whole Bill, and was calculated to relieve the small farmers, who were most aggrieved by the tithe system.

The Earl of Blesinton said, that if he were to be called on to pay tithes for his agistment land he should inevitably be ruined.

The Earl of Bandon said the removal of this compulsory clause had obviated most of his objections to the measure; still he had strong objections to the oath of the Commissioners, which, he contended, obliged them, as far as they could, instantly to increase the salaries of the Clergy one fifth.

The Earl of Liverpool said that it was the intention of the Bill to give one fifth only in the event of the average of the last seven years not being a fair one. If the average was a fair one, no addition was to be made. The oath only gave a discretionary power, and was not imperative upon the Commissioners. The evils of Ireland could not be cured till a new relation was established betwixt landlord and tenant.

The Bishop of Down was of opinion that the Bill would ultimately be beneficial to Ireland. The Clergy were ready to make great sacrifices of their property for the sake of peace; but if the measure had not been considerably softened he should have thought it objectionable. He had been entrusted with a petition from a very large body of the Clergy against the compulsory clause.

The Earl of Darnley should offer no opposition to the Bill, though he was not sanguine as to the result. He hoped his Noble Friend would not persist in his opposition.

Lord Clifden thought the best mode would be to sell the tythes for their value, and to buy land with the money. All the friends of Ministers, and who wished to separate the two islands, were desirous that the Catholic question should not be set at rest.

The Marquis of Lansdowne withdrew his amendment.

The amendments were agreed to, and the Bill was ordered to be read a third time to-morrow.

The Earl of Liverpool moved the third reading of the Irish Churches Bill.

Lord Holland thought the object of the Bill was to make Irish Catholics pay for Protestant Churches. There were no fewer than eight preambles to the Bill, and it was in fact no less than eight Bills. Whatever the Bill might be, it was anything but a Bill of Relief, as it went to impose a tax on parishes to which at present they were not liable. The Bill contained provisions, of the effect of which he believed its authors were not aware. The Noble Lord argued against the details of the measure, and contended that the Catholics would be unjustly dealt with, instead of being relieved by it. A Noble Friend of his had seen a letter to a clergyman, which stated that he need not come to the church on Sunday, because she was ill. Now this might be supposed to be the Mother Church. But no—she was the mother of the sexton—(A laugh)—and she formed the whole of the clergyman's congregation. In this state of things how could it be argued that there was a want of Churches? As the subject required that attention which their Lordships could not now give it, he should move that the Bill be read a third time that day three weeks.

The Bishop of Down defended the Bill. The Noble Prelate said, the Bill had received every consideration in the other House, its provisions had undergone the strictest scrutiny, and received the sanction of the present Lord Lieutenant, these were strong recommendations. Their Lordships must be prepared either to pass this measure, or see the Church of Ireland totally unable to enforce the necessary contributions for the holding of places for divine worship. The collection of the Church dues were in arrears in many places, in his own diocese they were seven years in arrears.

Lord Clifden thought that the number of resident Protestants in each parish should be ascertained before such a Bill was introduced.

The Earl of Liverpool defended the Bill, and contended that no new obligation was entailed on the Catholic population of Ireland.

The Earl of Darnley objected to the period of the Session at which the measure was brought forward.—The amendment was then negatived, and the Bill passed.

TUESDAY.

Mr. Tomlyns, from the Treasury, presented returns of Barley and Malt, pursuant to the order of the House.—Laid on the table.

On the motion of Viscount Melville, and after a few words from Earl Rosslyn, the Scotch Commissary Court Bill was read a third time and passed.

On the motion of the Earl of Liverpool, the Distillery Bill, the Irish Tythes Composition, the Irish Corporators, the East India Trade, and the General Turnpike Bills were read a third time and passed.

The New South Wales Jurisdiction, the Cork General Sessions, the East India Mutiny, the 17,700,000l. of Exchequer Bills, the Millbank Penitentiary, and the Irish Law Expences Bills went respectively through Committees, and were reported.

Earl Rosslyn presented a Petition against the Slave Removal Bill from three individuals who had estates in the Islands of St. Kitts and Grenada, and complained that if that measure passed into a law, and impediments were put to the removal of Slaves, their interests would be materially injured. They therefore prayed to be heard by Counsel at their Lordships' bar against the Bill. The Noble Earl did not intend to press the prayer of the Petition; but he did not think it exactly proper that a Bill altering so many laws, should be hurried through the House at the close of a Session, when it was impossible that it should receive due consideration.

The Lord Chancellor also objected to the late period at which the Bill had been brought. It was only at half-past three o'clock yesterday afternoon that printed copies of the Bill had been laid before the House, so that Noble Lords might know what it meant. It professed to be a Bill to amend and consolidate the laws relative to the Slave Trade, but it introduced new clauses, and recited various treaties with other Powers; and Noble Lords would not do their duty if they agreed to the measure, without comparing the laws as they originally stood with the manner in which they were given or altered by the present Bill.

The Earl of Westmorland also opposed the Bill.

Lord Calthorpe supported it, and moved that after the petition should have been laid on the table, the Bill be read a second time.

After a few observations from Earls Bathurst, Rosslyn, and Darnley,

The Earl of Shaftesbury moved that the Bill be read a 2d time that day three months. Agreed to.—Adjourned.

WEDNESDAY.

The Marquis of Londonderry took his seat as Earl Vane.

The Earl of Liverpool, by command of the King, laid on the table certain Papers respecting the Slave Trade. The Cork General Sessions, the East India Meeting, the Irish Law Expences, and the Millbank Penitentiary Bills were passed.

The Earl of Aberdeen, in order to shew the impolicy of Jury Courts in Scotland, moved for returns, specifying the issues of the several trials during the last Circuits in Scotland.—Agreed to.

Lord Ellenborough presented three petitions against the Silk Manufacturers' Bill—from Coventry, signed by 6000 silk weavers; from Macclesfield, signed by 2000; and another, signed by about 300. They were laid on the table.

Lord Bexley moved the third reading of the Silk Manufacturers' Bill. The Noble Lord said before the Bill had been forwarded every opportunity had been given to those concerned to petition against it. He contended it would be unjust to keep the Silk Trade in London under restraints. It had materially increased since the commencement of the present century, and the quantity of raw material consumed had risen from 800,000lbs. to 2,000,000; but that was principally in the country, for in London it had rather diminished. He denied that the peaceable conduct of the weavers depended on the laws. There had been considerable disturbances in 1763, but they had been appeased, and the weavers had grown perfectly tranquil in 1769, 14 years before the laws which it was now intended to repeal had been enacted. The question now was, whether the whole of the Acts were to be repealed, and he thought that there could be no difference of opinion as to the injury which they did to the manufacturers. With respect to the protection which the men conceived they derived from the interference of Magistrates in the regulation of their wages, it might at any time be rendered illusory by an agreement among the masters to limit the quantity of work put into the men's hands; for by reducing their work, their receipts would be as effectually reduced as if their wages had been lowered.

The Earl of Harrowby objected to the Bill, and contended that it was necessary to enforce strict regulations to secure the manufacturers in the metropolis. This was proved by what had taken place before the passing of the Acts which it was now proposed to repeal. There were then frequent disturbances, whilst since all had been universal tranquillity, and that large body of men had exhibited to the metropolis an admirable example of peaceful conduct and loyalty, at a time when almost every other class of manufacturing people in London and other places had given way to the seductions of political agitators. It the Bill should pass as it now stood, instead of having fifty or sixty thousand silk weavers carrying on the manufacture in the bosom of their families, the metropolis would see large buildings erected, with three or four hundred workmen shut up within them, exposed to greater sufferings from the failure of a demand, and to the certainty of their morals being in time destroyed. The effect might be to increase our exports; but if that augmentation were counterbalanced by the destruction of the morals of our weavers, by their exposure to more frequent distress and by greater danger to the peace of the metropolis, he could not conceive that any good would have been obtained. The Noble Earl moved that the Bill be read this day three months.

The Earl of Liverpool defended the Bill, and said that all the Noble Lords who had attended the Committee, with the exception of one, had unanimously declared that it was proper and expedient that the present Bill should be passed. His Noble Friend had objected to the increase of manufactures, but what formed the strength and power of this country? What had raised us to the height which we occupied, and enabled us to carry on the long war in which we had been engaged? Was it not our manufactures? Nay, had they not even contributed to render agriculture prosperous? The real ground on which the Bill was opposed was this: that a large body of manufacturers in the metropolis was a bad thing, and that the existing regulations having a tendency to drive them into the country, ought not to be repealed. His Noble Friend had said, that previous to the enactment of those restrictions there had been frequent disturbances, but none since. Now the origin of the silk manufacturers in this country was due to the emigration which took place from France, in consequence of the revocation of the Edit de Nantes. Nobody had proved more loyal under trying situations than the Spitalfields silk weavers, until after the peace of 1763. At that period a great importation of silk goods from France materially injured that manufacture, and the disturbances which arose were deeply mixed with political feelings. The Duke of Bedford, who had signed the treaty, and was unpopular on that account, happened to live in a part of the town not very distant from Spitalfields, and was often threatened by the weavers for having brought that evil upon them. Such was the chief cause of the disturbances which had preceded the existing Acts, and that cause was political. The Noble Earl concluded that these Acts operated in the most injurious manner to the manufactures of Spitalfields, and the only reason that could be urged against the Bill for their repeal, was not the necessity of protecting the weavers, but the propriety of driving the silk trade from London.

The Lord Chancellor considered that it would be inconsistent with his duty to give a silent vote on this subject. He saw it recorded on the fact of the Bill that the policy of the Act which it was proposed to repeal had been three times enforced at the expiration of nineteen years each time, by another Act, so as to be confirmed by the sanction of nearly half a century, and he thought it a policy of such long standing was to be changed, it ought to be done gradually and not suddenly. It was not only necessary to consult the interests of men who had always been distinguished for order and loyalty, but they must be made to feel that those interests had been consulted. If the question be to enforce the third reading of the Bill, he should not conscientiously be able to say content to the motion.

The Earl of Rosslyn suggested the propriety of repealing much of the existing Acts as would allow the free employment of capital on the part of master manufacturers wherever they might think proper.

After a few remarks from Lord Ellenborough, the Earl of Liverpool, and Lord Bexley, the suggestion of the Earl of Rosslyn was understood to be adopted, and the third reading of the Bill was postponed till to-morrow, to give time to prepare the Amendments.

THURSDAY.

On the third reading of the Silk Manufacturers' Repeal Bill,

Lord Bexley proposed several amendments in the Silk Weavers' Bill, with a view of satisfying the majority of those interested. It was not proposed to interfere with the power which the Spitalfields Acts gave to Magistrates to interfere in the settlement of wages between the masters and the men. But so much of those Acts as would be repealed as would enable master manufacturers to apply their capital in any part of the country which they might please. A clause was also be introduced limiting the time at which informations were to be laid for offences against those Acts, to three months, instead of the present extensive period.

Lord Ellenborough approved of the amendments, which he thought would do more good to the journeymen than the total rejection of the Bill would have done, as it would certainly have been brought forward again next year, when the whole of the Acts would undoubtedly have been repealed. But the indefensible and obnoxious part of them being removed, and the whole having been reduced to a mere measure of police, there would be no necessity for calling attention to the subject.

The Earl of Harrowby was perfectly satisfied with the proposed arrangements, and observed that if the journeymen were in any danger it was owing to the propriety with which the masters had conducted themselves.

Lord Calthorpe regretted that the Bill had not passed in its original form, as he thought it was founded on principles of sound policy, and according with the strictest principles of justice and humanity. But individuals who conceived themselves most aggrieved.

The Amendments were then agreed to, and the Bill was passed.

On the motion of Lord Colchester, an account of all the Corn in Ireland endowed by, and for Roman Catholics, was ordered to be laid before the House.

FRIDAY.

The Royal Assent was given by commission to the East India Company, the Irish Law Expences, the Scotch Law Commissioners, the Millbank Penitentiary, the Distilleries, the Foreign Merchandize, the Irish Church Rates, the Irish Unlawful Oaths, the Registration of Deeds, the Irish Unlawful Societies, the Passage Vessels, Viscount St. Vincent's Pension, the Church Lands Churches, the Marriage Act Amendment, the East India Company and the County of Cork Sessions Bills.

Lord Colchester presented a petition from the Debtors in the King's Bench Prison, praying for an amendment in the Insolvent Debtors' Act.

The Appropriation Bill was passed.

Lord Colchester moved for certain returns respecting Church property left by Roman Catholics. The Noble Lord said he understood that a Bill had been given in the other House to enable Roman Catholics to grant donations for establishing places of education and religious institutions in Ireland. He understood that several Roman Catholic Schools and Chapels had been recently endowed. His object was to get a correct list of them, in order that in a future Session they should consider how far it was good policy to allow the endowment of them, or of those religious houses which he called Monastic institutions. The Superior of Stonyhurst Establishment, in Lancashire, did attend at the Court of Rome, and voted at the election of the General of the Order of Jesuits. It was also known that it was the object to place the Jesuits at the head of all the Catholic seminaries and schools in England and Ireland. While he was Chief Secretary for Ireland there were no less than 69 religious houses of all descriptions, Dominicans, Franciscans, Augustines, &c.

The Earl of Rosslyn regretted the subject had been brought forward in the absence of his Noble Friends, for, he believed, it was productive of much mischief. They should abstain from any discussion on this subject until they saw what the measure to be brought by the other House was to be. The Noble Lord had proved the necessity for this Return on the existence of 67 Monastic Establishments in Ireland, and yet his motion did not extend to them. He knew the Noble Lord being aware that Monastic Establishments did not exist, by law, in this country, and therefore he wished to have unreputed Monastic Establishments. The motion had a direct tendency to excite tumult and discontent against all Catholic Establishments. He thought it unfair, without summoning the House, and at the end of the Session—when few were in the House who took a share in the Debates respecting the Catholics—to introduce a measure calculated to excite ill blood, hatred, and persecution.

The Lord Chancellor said they must all be aware that the Noble Lord who had brought forward the motion, had so done from a sense of deep necessity. Still, he thought it might be put off till next session, under a pledge that the Bill on this subject would be brought to that House early enough for their Lordships to make themselves masters of the question in all its stages.

Lord Colchester consented to withdraw his motion.

A message from the Commons requested a conference on the subject of the Amendments made by the Lords in the Scotch Commissary Courts Bill, which was agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY.

The Report of the Committee on the Poor Laws was brought up and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Joseph Hume presented a petition signed by 1800 inhabitants of Nottingham against the Combination Acts. He presented a petition from John Cokely, of Whitehaven, setting forth, that under the Act of the 1st of George the Fourth, for the more summary punishment of certain offences, he had been summoned before a Bench of Magistrates for a trespass, and sentenced by them to pay a fine of 1s. halfpenny. The costs, however, amounted to seven shillings, or 154 times the amount of the fine imposed; he prayed the repeal of said act. He presented a petition from Oliver Hayward, of Bridgewater in Somersetshire, complaining of being assessed to the House Tax after serving 14 years in the Yeomanry Corps. He also presented a petition from John Burrell respecting the dry rot in the Navy. The petitioner stated, that up to 1792, all timber for the Navy had been felled in winter, so that it had time to dry before it was used. Since the system was changed, the dry-rot had made its appearance in the Navy and cost the country immense sums. The Petitioner, therefore, called the attention of the House to this circumstance. He expressed upon them the importance of adopting a different system.

Mr. Huskisson said, at one period the dry rot had prevailed in the Navy to a considerable extent, but the Admiralty were of opinion that the system of building ships under cover had done more than anything else to check the evil. With respect to what was stated in the Petition of the deviation from the former practice of felling timber in winter, he could say that the greatest care was taken in that respect, and the timber was allowed to stand one year after it had been felled before it was felled, to give the sap time to dry out, that it might be properly seasoned.

Mr. Hume had understood that experiments had been made with oil and with coal tar, which had not succeeded.

Mr. Huskisson said, the experiment on which the Admiralty principally relied was the building of ships under cover, and allowing sufficient time for the seasoning of the wood. The ships built with due regard to these considerations were found to keep in a most perfect state.

Mr. Hume, in the absence of his Hon. Friend, the Member for Winchelsea, moved that the petition presented on the 5th of May respecting Mr. Plunkett, should be printed.

Mr. Goulburn remarked the Petition in question preferred a charge against an individual, at a period of the Session when it was impossible for it to be answered. It would, therefore, in his opinion not be just to print it, as it must stand over till next year. He was satisfied that when the proper time arrived, a satisfactory answer would be supplied. He hoped he might take this opportunity of saying a word on the petition which had been presented from a Mr. Daly few evenings back, who complained of having suffered great injustice from the conduct of Judge M'Clelland. He (Mr. Goulburn) communicated with the Learned Judge on the subject, and but for a circumstance of his being then on the circuit, and not having the notes of the trial with him, a complete answer would have been given to the charge. Some of the facts however he had dictated. One complaint was, that the Judge had gone out of the usual course to sit in the Criminal instead of the Civil Court. On referring to the Gentlemen of the Bar, it appeared that Mr. Daly (the other circuit-going Judge) was ill at the time, and the Learned Judge of whom Mr. Quin had complained consequence obliged to sit in both Courts. It had been said that, charging the Jury, the Learned Judge had declared that if an assault had been committed the plaintiff had no claim to redress, as he himself was at that time guilty of an illegal act in not taking off his hat while "God save the King" was being sung. The Learned Judge declared that he had never so charged the Jury, nor said any thing like it; but he (Mr. Goulburn) did not rest on his declaration, but had the authority of the counsel on both sides, the counsel for the Petitioner as well as his for his opponent, who concurred in declaring no such charge to have been made by the Judge. He would now tell what the Judge had really said in his charge. He had told the Jury, that "if they believed an assault to have been committed, he Jury, that "the plaintiff; but if they were of opinion that there had been no assault, their verdict must be for the defendant." He said the House if it were possible for more impartial language would put it to be used. These facts he had thought it right to offer, cause to the Session ought not to be allowed to close without giving some information on this subject.

Mr. Hume remarked with respect to Mr. Quin, that he had declared himself ready to prove all the allegations contained in his petition. As to the other petition, he should not urge the printing of it at present, under all the circumstances, and he therefore begged to withdraw his motion.

Dr. Lushington moved an address to the Crown, praying for a copy of a Proclamation issued respecting the Mosquito shore in 1776.—Ordered.

Mr. Hobhouse presented a petition signed by upwards of 5000 inhabitants of Somersetshire in favour of Radical Reform. It was laid on the table.

Mr. S. Rice brought up the Report of the Committee on the state of the poor in Ireland.

The Lords' Amendments to the Limerick Taxation and the East India Trade Bills were agreed to.

Mr. Secretary Canning presented copies of all correspondence which had taken place with foreign powers on the subject of the Slave Trade.

THURSDAY.

At 4 o'clock the Speaker took the Chair, when but fourteen Members being present, the House was adjourned till to-morrow.

FRIDAY.

The Speaker went to the House of Lords to hear the Royal Assent.

Mr. P. Moore gave notice, that he would, early in the next session, move for leave to bring in a Bill to consolidate the Laws relative to Assemblies.

Mr. Abercrombie said, he had received a letter from the Sheriff of Armagh, denying that he had presided at an Orange Meeting held in the County Court of Armagh.

On Mr. Goulburn moving the House to agree to the Amendments made by the Lords in the Irish Tithes Composition Bill,

Colonel Trench hoped this Bill, by which the Gentry of Ireland had consented to impose on themselves a heavy tax—in the shape of Tithes of Agistment—would prove a benefit. If, in addition to this measure, the benefit of a resident Clergy and Catholic Emancipation had been given, a great progress would be made in tranquillizing Ireland.

The Amendments were then agreed to.

Mr. Goulburn moved the House to agree to the Lords' Amendments in the Scotch Commissioners Bill.

Lord A. Hamilton said some of these Amendments interfered with the privileges of the House, and he therefore moved that they be read this day three months.

Some conversation arose on this amendment, in which it was stated that it did not interfere with the privileges of the House, it merely postponed certain fees which the House of Commons had declared should take place on the 1st of January next to the 25th of March; at length it was agreed to reject this particular amendment. On the motion of Mr. Secretary Canning a Committee was appointed to meet the Lords, and point out reasons to their Lordships for disagreeing with them in this amendment, and afterwards a message from the Lords informed the House that their Lordships did not insist on their amendment.

Mr. Calcraft said he was waiting to hear what was to be done with the Spitalfields Act Repeal Bill, which, he understood, had been amended by the Lords after enquiry, which enquiry, he it remembered, had been refused.

Mr. Huskisson said, the Bill in question was certainly introduced by him, and it might therefore be supposed that he should now again call the attention of the House to it; but the Bill had been so altered and so dwindled away, that he should not now think it consistent with his duty to support it in its present state.

Mr. Calcraft was glad this Bill was not to pass. This was another proof of the difference of opinion existing amongst his Majesty's Ministers; they had differed on questions of taste, and now they had differed also on trade. He hoped they would come next Session with a better understanding of each other's intentions.

Mr. Abercrombie was sorry the Bill was lost.

Mr. Bright rejoiced that the Bill was lost. It was plain the Lords had had more consideration for the suffering people than their own Representatives had had.

Mr. Gordon regretted that the Bill had been lost, and hoped his Right Hon. Friend would not be discouraged from bringing the measure forward again next Session.

Mr. Secretary Canning thought the Hon. Member for Bristol was to much elated by the triumph he had gained, as doubtless the Lords would act on their own Report next Session.

The Bill is therefore lost for the present Session.

Mr. Alderman Wood presented a petition from Mr. J. Wilfred Parkins, late Sheriff of London, complaining of the conduct of the Corporation in having interfered with him in the discharge of his duties as Sheriff. He also prayed the House would institute inquiry to ascertain by what authority the Corporation sold the office of Secondary to the Sheriff. The petition was received and ordered to be printed.

Caversham Park is coming to the hammer, and as it has been the subject of general conversation, we conclude it will not be unacceptable to our readers to gather an authentic report of this mansion and demesne; and to do so most effectually we will quote Mr. George Robins's introductory passage. It is to be open to public view until Thursday, and the anxiety to see it is said to be almost on a par with Penkill. Caversham Park, the distinguishing feature between London and Bath, is well known, and the beauties connected with it so long and so justly appreciated, that it may be supposed to partake of the works of supererogation to venture again to panegyrise it;—It has been well observed by several of the literary men who have written on Caversham, that it is no easy matter to give a fair notion of all the advantages to which it fairly puts in its claim; "how then can such a task be undertaken by the humble individual who has been honoured by the direction of this sale?" The attempt is a fearful one, and can only be undertaken in the assurance of being as concise as the duty imposes the propriety will admit; and this he does most readily, inasmuch as it will leave more room for all facts from one or two authors whose pretensions are of a higher class. Caversham Mansion was built by the Earl of Cadogan, in the reign of George I. and at an expence of 130,000l.; it has subsequently been much improved by the succeeding proprietors; it was, however, left to Colonel Marsack in the plentiful state in which splendid Mansion—to the words dictated by pleasure grounds. Which strikes by its lofty portico of the Corinthian order of architecture; these alone were wanting to make Caversham Mansion to the grand piece of standing second only in the county to Blenheim, to that it willingly yields the palm; in one respect, however, it yields exclusively the superiority; the views from Blenheim cannot be put in competition for a single moment with those that present themselves from this "lofty Paradise"—indeed the splendid Panorama that is seen from the summit of the Mansion may be considered as absolutely described; it extends, as we point to Cæsar's Camp, in another to Windsor Castles, while Portsdown Hill is visible on a clear day;—In the rich intermediate valley are an infinity of those admired seats that seem reluctantly to yield the palm to Caversham. The noble terrace we'll is 1800 feet long and 36 feet wide, terminated by the large Roman temple of Portland stone, of the Ilusticated Doric Order, from which the whole valley and almost imperceptibly to the undulating walks in the pleasure grounds and plantations. These are twenty-five acres disposed in pleasure grounds, the shrubbery walks, and plantations, clothed with a profusion of the choicest flowers and evergreens; and as far as good taste and correct judgment are concerned they may safely challenge a competition. It is of these grounds that Sir Humphry Brown spoke in such high terms:—If he were now to live he would not alter even more has been accomplished than his notions of capability had suggested. There are, however, quite secondary as compared with the park, which was always valuable for its beauty; it possesses in great variety, both hill and dale, with a lovely and luxuriant valley passing through it, and while the hills on each side, adorned by the full grown timber, are scattered about in all direction, in pleasing negligence; indeed it will be difficult to select a Park altogether so beautifully wooded; its contiguity to Reading (the Capital of Berks) will not be overlooked. It is not assuming too much to state that one of the Seats for the Borough of Reading would be amongst the most desirable advantages to be contemplated by the Possessor of Caversham Estate. The influence inseparable from this ancient seat could not leave this a matter of doubt; indeed there appears no reasonable limit to the variety of advantages that exclusively appertain to this property.

EDUCATION.—All the Books adapted to the practice of the Interrogative System of Education, and their various auxiliaries for reading, and for Elementary instruction, may be had with the fullest allowance on numbers, of every bookseller in Town and Country, by whom catalogues and most of the books are kept for inspection and examination. This series of books which has been twenty-five years in progress, is now completed, by its satisfactory extension to every branch of liberal and desirable education.

THE MORNING and EVENING SACRIFICE, or Prayers for Private Persons and Families, beautifully printed in post 8vo. 10s. 6d. and demy 12mo. 5s. 6d. boards.
"The language of these Prayers is pure, and much more simple and becoming than that of any similar work which has yet fallen under our eye."—Scottish Episcopal Review and Magazine.
"We conclude with strongly recommending the Morning and Evening Sacrifice as a book eminently calculated to promote either private or family devotion, and which cannot fail to elevate the minds of all who peruse it with sincerity and attention."—Monthly Literary Register.
"As to the volume before us, it is a highly respectable performance in every point of view. The forms of devotion are preceded by two Discourses on the Lord's Prayer, written with great neatness, and ably illustrating the different petitions in that compendium. And, indeed, the whole book must form a powerful rival to the Prayers of Smith and Jay, lately published."—New Evangelical Magazine.

Price 5s. bound.
2. NEW EDINBURGH SCHOOL ATLAS; consisting of 34 Maps of different Empires, Kingdoms and States throughout the world, engraved in a superior style by Lizars, from Drawings made expressly for the work, taken from the most recent authorities, and adapted to the text books of the most approved modern systems of Geography. Neatly half bound, 4to. price 11. 1s. coloured.
3. BIGLAND'S SYSTEM of GEOGRAPHY for the Use of Schools, on a new and perfectly easy Plan, in which the European Boundaries are stated as settled by the Peace of Paris, November 1815; with seven neatly engraved maps. Fifth Edition, price 2s. 6d. bound.
"We have recommended this small volume for adoption in schools, since it is, in our opinion, better suited to that purpose than any similar treatise that has lately fallen under our inspection.—On the first perusal of the preface, we thought that Mr. Bigland was rather too loud in praise of his own performance: but, on examination, we concur in his estimate as correct."—Monthly Review—See also the British Critic and Scientic Review.
4. DAUPHIN'S FRENCH PRONOUNCING and Explanatory Dictionary, adapted to all classes of learners; being a copious abridgement of the first part of Levizac's; and conveying in a simple and perspicuous manner, as nearly as English sounds will convey, the true Pronunciation of that universal Language. Price 5s. 6d. bound.
"This Work is executed with judgment and accuracy; its cheapness and portability constitute it a desirable companion for all who have occasion to use the universal language."—New Monthly Magazine.
5. THE NEW EXPOSITOR; containing Tables of Words, from one to seven syllables inclusive, accented, explained, and divided according to the most approved method of pronunciation; to which are added tables of synonymous words, vulgar anglicisms, remarkable events, discoveries and inventions, chronologically arranged, names of men of learning and genius, geographical tables, &c. &c.; originally compiled by Ashton and Clegg, of Liverpool. Revised, corrected and improved, by Mr. J. Knowles, author of the "The Principles of English Grammar." Thirty-third Edition, price 2s. 6d. bound.
6. COLLECTANEA GRÆCA MAJORA; ad usum Academicæ Juventutis Accommodata; enlarged and greatly improved, with copious and useful Notes, by Professor George Dunbar, 2 vols. 8vo. price 25s. bound. Either volume sold separately.

MYERS'S NEW SYSTEM OF GEOGRAPHY.
Now publishing in Monthly Parts, price 7s. each, (to be completed in 25 Parts, forming two large volumes), handsomely printed in quarto, on fine wove paper, and hot-pressed; or the Work may be had complete, price Eight Guineas in boards, or Nine Pounds, handsomely bound in calf.
A NEW and COMPREHENSIVE SYSTEM of MODERN GEOGRAPHY, Mathematical, Physical, Political, and Commercial; being a perspicuous Delineation of the present State of the Globe, with its Inhabitants and Productions; preceded by the History of the Science,—interspersed with Statistical and Synoptical Tables,—and accompanied with a Series of correct coloured Maps, forming a complete Atlas of the World; a great variety of appropriate Views; and a number of other Engravings, illustrative of the Manners, Customs, and Costumes of Nations. By THOMAS MYERS, A.M. of the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich.—London: printed for Sherwood, Jones, and Co. Paternoster-row.
☞ It would be superfluous to urge the importance and utility of Geography as a Science, and, no less so, to dwell upon the peculiar fitness of the present epoch for the publication of a New System. The territorial arrangements consequent upon the pacification of Europe, (after a war which had terminated the political relations of every Continental State), had, in fact, rendered all previous Works comparatively obsolete. Under such circumstances, therefore, the production of a NEW SYSTEM, adapted to the present state of the World, and embracing all the changes which have taken place, must possess paramount claims to patronage. It is not, however, on this ground alone, strong as it is, that the present undertaking rests its pretensions. Neither expence nor labour has been spared to render it, in every respect, worthy the public approbation. The most recent and authentic details respecting every Country, have been collected and arranged so as to enable the reader to estimate correctly the actual condition of each, and to supersede in a great degree the necessity of resorting to separate and expensive works.—The Maps and Plates are of a very superior description, and will be found to illustrate every part of the habitable Globe. In short, the endeavour has been, to present a System of MODERN GEOGRAPHY, worthy of the science itself, and of the enlightened age in which we live.

PLAN OF THE WORK.
1. It is preceded by a copious Introduction, commencing with the History of Geography; which is followed by a familiar explanation of its Scientific Principles, with their application to finding the positions, bearings, and distances of places, and the construction of Maps and Charts. A general delineation of the grand natural features and the principal physical phenomena of the Globe; with their influence on its Inhabitants and Productions, are then given. The elements of Political Geography, also, are briefly illustrated, and, to render all reference to other works unnecessary, a full explanation of Scientific Terms, with a variety of appropriate Tables, are added.
2. The different Sections of the work contain clear and comprehensive views of the local circumstances and peculiar productions of each country; its works of Art and objects of Curiosity; its Political State and Foreign Connections; with the Knowledge, Manners, and Customs of its Inhabitants. To these are added, such Statistical and Synoptical Tables as exhibit the natural resources, military strength, and commercial importance of each State.
☞ The Publishers have the satisfaction to state, that this Work has been honoured with the most flattering testimonials of approbation, as may be seen the detailed Prospectus, which may be had of all respectable Booksellers.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON. JULY 20.

YESTERDAY Parliament was prorogued by Commission, previous to which the Lords Commissioners delivered the following Speech:—

"MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,

"WE are commanded by HIS MAJESTY, in releasing you from your attendance in Parliament, to express to you HIS MAJESTY'S acknowledgments for the zeal and assiduity wherewith you have applied yourselves to the several objects which HIS MAJESTY recommended to your attention, at the opening of the Session.

"HIS MAJESTY entertains a confident expectation that the provisions of internal regulation, which you have adopted with respect to Ireland, will, when carried into effect, tend to remove some of the evils which have so long afflicted that part of the United Kingdom.

"We are commanded to assure you, that you may depend upon the firm, but temperate exercise, of those powers which you have entrusted to HIS MAJESTY, for the suppression of violence and outrage in that country, and for the protection of the lives and properties of HIS MAJESTY'S loyal subjects.

"It is with the greatest satisfaction that HIS MAJESTY is enabled to contemplate the flourishing condition of all branches of our commerce and manufactures, and the greatest abatement of those difficulties which the Agricultural Interest has so long and so severely suffered.

"GENTLEMEN OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS,

"We have it in command from HIS MAJESTY to thank you for the supplies which you have granted for the service of the year, and to assure you that he has received the sincerest pleasure from the relief which you have been enabled to afford his people, by a large reduction of Taxes.

"MY LORDS, AND GENTLEMEN,

"HIS MAJESTY has commanded us to inform you that he continues to receive from all foreign Powers, the strongest assurances of their friendly disposition towards this Country.

"Deeply as HIS MAJESTY still regrets the failure of his earnest endeavours to prevent the interruption of the peace of Europe, it affords him the greatest consolation that the principles upon which he has acted, and the policy which he has determined to pursue, have been marked with your warm and cordial concurrence, as consonant with the interests, and satisfactory to the feelings, of his people."

Parliament was then prorogued to Thursday the 30th of September.

SINCE we took leave to notice BROUGHAM'S ill-success in Parliament with his Irish petitions—about which we could tell some very pretty stories—he has been flourishing in his profession, and in one case indulged himself by abusing us, for which we return him our sincere thanks; the twitchings of his nose, and the workings of his countenance while descanting upon the high crime and misdemeanour of exposing Humbug and Whiggery evinced to all the spectators the violence of his rage—to know that he continues to feel our power is satisfactory—that he should shew his feelings to the public in proprid persond is quite gratifying.

But it is not for ourselves that we are moved against MR. BROUGHAM—we are moved against MR. BROUGHAM at the moment by feelings of humanity towards oppressed poverty and injured innocence. Hear what this upright BROUGHAM—this vindicator of the VIRTUE of a QUEEN—of QUEEN CAROLINE!—Hear what he says when hired to ridicule the claims of a POOR GIRL to reparation for injury—in the name of honour, honesty, whiggery, and good feeling, hear this QUEEN'S ATTORNEY GENERAL—for he shall speak for himself.

The case was this:—The daughter of an innkeeper at Huddersfield, had been accused of very Queen-like conduct by a person with whom she lived as servant, with some gross additions as to consequences, which we shall omit to notice—hear, as we said before, what BROUGHAM (that feeling vindicator of female virtue and purity, "spotless as unsunned snow") says, hear how he attempts to crush the claims of an innocent young creature for damages, on the ground of her poverty and insignificance.

"MR. BROUGHAM then addressed the jury for the defendant. He said he was truly sorry that at the very beginning of the first day of the assizes, they should be stopped, as it were, from the regular business, by a filthy and trumpery action of this description. What was the nature of the case? It was the complaint of the father of a trumpery bar-maid, living in a fifth rate inferior public-house, that his daughter had not been considered, like CÆSAR'S wife, not only strictly virtuous, but also above the possibility of being suspected—that no man should venture to insinuate, whatever were his information, that this woman deserved the name, which even those of her sex belonging to a certain degrading profession heard with almost greater indignation than they did—the name of a certain animal which sometimes followed them in their daily walks. Let the jury look at the witnesses who were called to sustain this ridiculous cause. The first of them, the butcher RAMSDEN, was in reality 'a tried character.' Oh, but he was honourably acquitted—thus using in the common law, the phrase reserved for the military tribunals; for the juries of the country, they all knew, always sent forth a successful defendant, by using the plain words, 'not guilty;' but any fellow now-a days, who had ever rubbed his shoulders to the gallows, and escaped by a quibble from his impending fate, always said, when reminded of his accident, 'I have been honourably acquitted.' So said this butcher. See the sort of fellow who was produced to sustain this case, and mark his story? He said that Taverner came to him and asked him 'How do you do?' 'Very well,' replied he, 'How do you do?' The natural answer would be, 'Very well, I thank you.' Not so Mr. Ramsden's version of Taverner's dialogue, for his answer was, 'Betty Milnes is so and so;' and this without a syllable of preparatory matter, to introduce the name of the lady into the colloquy. Was that version of the conversation likely? Was it credible by plain honest men of Yorkshire, or any other set of men? By the Somersetshire men—no, nor the dullest men of the dullest county in England would not believe such a tale. Then came the converted Quaker to prop up the butcher's story. He did justice to his conversion, and with all the zeal of a new convert entered most enthusiastically into his new practice of swearing, and gave the established church (were he a member of it) ample promise of being the greatest ornament of it in the alacrity of oath-taking. They had heard a great deal of TAVERNER'S readiness to compromise the matter, but to what did it all amount. Only to this—that when TAVERNER found he was likely to be involved in a law-suit, he did what any reasonable man, knowing or not knowing the law, would have advised him to do—he offered to retract the words privately, but peremptorily and positively refused to give public retractation: he naturally wished to avoid even the consequences of getting a verdict in a court of law, for every body knew the cost of such an advantage, and more particularly in this case, where TAVERNER had for an opponent in the litigation an old tailor, (the father of the girl,) who was not worth the ninth part of a penny."

Perhaps never upon the face of the earth was there a speech so replete with characteristic touches as this—a poor girl traduced is a "trumpery bar-maid," living in a "fifth-rate inferior public-house." It is not allowed that her father should have the feelings of a parent, or be jealous of his daughter's honour—it is held by this BROUGHAM—this hired defender of QUEEN CAROLINE—that any man may venture to insinuate away the character of a poor girl with impunity, and that because she is the bar maid of a fifth-rate inn, she is to get no satisfaction for an injury done to her reputation by the GENTLEMAN who hires MR. BROUGHAM to defend him.

This is the way this champion of female virtue treats an unoffending oppressed woman—But how does he treat her witnesses?—Why, this patriot, this lover of the poor, this jesuitical improver of their education, this exquisitely tender low-democrat, stigmatizes them, one after the other, for the lowdemocrat, stigmatizes them, one after the other, for the lowness of their origin, and the meanness of their station, and above all he makes a bad pun upon a man, whom he calls a "tried character," because he had been acquitted by a JURY OF HIS COUNTRYMEN of some offence with which he once stood charged.

That BROUGHAM should shew himself a bad man surprises not us—but that he should shew himself so bad a lawyer as to reproach a man with an acquittal seems strange. His great client was FOUND GUILTY by a majority of the tribunal which tried her, and BROUGHAM called that an acquittal—in precisely the same spirit of folly, or something worse, he assumes the acquittal of the plaintiff's witness against him to be a proof of his guilt.

Another witness, who had been a Quaker, but who had lately conformed to the Established Church, is stigmatized as a perjurer, merely because he had so conformed;—and the libellous harangue of this Edinburgh Reviewer—this QUEEN'S Attorney-General (in a stuff gown)—ends with a generous and honourable sneer at the honest father of the outraged girl, as "an old tailor not worth the ninth part of a penny."

There was a time when BROUGHAM, upon the very same circuit, thought better of tailors and their daughters—but no matter—he was then unmarried, and marriage with him, as with all other men, has made a difference, and we are now only speaking of his public conduct; but upon that ground, we will venture to say, that never was an exhibition of feeling, taste, and character more decisive, or more satisfactory to his opponents, made by man, than that in which the honourable and learned Gentleman was pleased to indulge upon this special occasion.

Let us however add, in justice to the jury, that in spite of all the vulgar intemperance, the groundless pride, the heartless insolence of which they were doomed to witness the display, the poor girl got her FIFTY POUNDS damages of MR. TAVERNER, the defendant.

IN our last Number we cursorily noticed the absurd fashion which has obtained, of following a Scotch Presbyterian Parson of the name of IRVING, and we were then inclined to laugh at the folly, as one which could not last, and which, during its temporary prevalence could not be seriously mischievous; but we feel called upon to look at the affair in a very different point of view now, and although we find amongst the followers of this man persons for whom we have the highest respect, we will not suffer that the sanction of their names (obtained we hope and trust merely from curiosity) should give countenance and support to one of the most flagrant and disgusting pieces of HUMBUG which has ever been foisted upon the people of the metropolis.

GOD knows the spirit of innovation is abroad and busy enough, and we should grieve bitterly if we believed one half of what we hear respecting the patronage offered to this MR. IRVING. To tolerate is one thing, to uphold is another; and when seceders are multiplying on every side—when papists and their claims are supported at all hazards and risques—when the bulwarks of the Constitution are trembling under the effects of CONCILIATION, what must be the feelings of the Orthodox members of the Established Church, to find those to whom we constitutionally look for the maintenance of our national institutions, flocking in crowds to listen to the ravings of presbyterian quackery, and obtain spiritual comfort amongst the kennels of Saffron-hill.

The trick of preacher-hunting has always struck us as disgustingly absurd—anything like a fashion in religion, is abominable and unholy; but while the church boasts such men as an ANDREWS, a GARDINER, or a DOD, or many others we could name, whose superior talents and acquirements place them far above the οι πολλοι of the cloth, it is natural and just that those who can, consistently with their regular habits, obtain the gratification of hearing such men, should avail themselves of the opportunity; but there is something so degrading, so theatrical, so laughable, and so contemptible, in the bustling and crowding to a Presbyterian chapel in Hatton Garden—scrambling, pushing, and squeezing for admission, with tickets, and the securing of places and ranging of carriages—for what? To hear a great, brawny Scotchman, with an accent as vulgar and abominable as HUME'S, talk the most detestable nonsense that ever came from human lips. The chapel resembles on this occasion a booth at a fair—the pulpit a stage for the mountebank.

MR. IRVING'S figure is quite suitable to the part which he performs—he is tall, somewhat Jewish in appearance, with black matted hair, and an obliquity of vision which, anywhere, except in the pulpit, would be extremely ludicrous in its effect—he appears conscious of the defect, as when he wishes to be imposing, he shuts his eyes.

As a specimen of the stuff which he utters, we quote the following, which has been published in the MORNING CHRONICLE:—

"Obey the Scriptures or you perish. You may despise the honour done you by the Majesty above, you may spurn the sovereignty of Almighty God, you may revolt from creation's universal rule to bow before its Creator, and stand in momentary rebellion against his ordinances; his overtures of mercy you may cast contempt on, and crucify afresh the Royal Personage who bears them: and you may riot in your licentious liberty for a while, and make game of his indulgence and long-suffering. But come at length it will, when Revenge shall array herself to go forth, and Anguish shall attend her, and from the wheels of their chariot Ruin and Dismay shall shoot far and wide among the enemies of the King, whose desolation shall not tarry, and whose destruction as the wing of the whirlwind shall be swift—hopeless as the conclusion of eternity, and the reversion of doom. Then around the fiery concave of the wasteful pit the clang of grief shall ring, and the flinty heart which repelled tender mercy shall strike its fangs into its proper bosom; and the soft and gentle spirit which dissolved in voluptuous pleasures shall dissolve in weeping sorrows and outbursting lamentations: and the gay glory of time shall depart; and sportful liberty shall be bound for ever in the chain of obdurate necessity. The green earth with all her blooming beauty and bowers of peace shall depart. The morning and evening salutations of kinsmen shall depart, and the ever welcome voice of friendship, and the tender whispering of full hearted affection shall depart, for the sad discord of weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth. And the tender names of children, and father and mother, and wife and husband, with the communion of domestic love and mutual affection, and the inward touches of natural instinct, which family compact, when uninvaded by discord, wraps the live-long day into one swell of tender emotion, making earth's lowly scenes worthy of heaven itself—All, all shall pass away; and instead shall come the level lake that burneth, and the solitary dungeon, and the desolate bosom, and the tossings of horror and hopelessness, and the worm that dieth not, the fire that is not quenched."

This twanged out in the broad Scotch dialect is quite worthy of squeezing to Saffron Hill, at the risque of arms, legs, shoes, hats, bonnets and wigs, to hear.—Did any body ever listen to such trash—"the clang of grief shall ring"—"the flinty heart shall strike its fangs into its proper bosom"—What does it go to—what does MR. IRVING mean by "revenge," and Despair, and Dismay shooting from the chief wheels of Anguish?"—Stuff—stuff—stuff—and this it is, men, orators, wits, senators, and statesmen, are said countenance by their presence. It is for this, that, following the example of those, to whom the nation looks up, crowds of emigrants from their parishes leaving their pews unoccupanted in their own churches, but LOCKED, huddle, helter skelter, pell-mell, to Hatton Gardea, and come away delighted, as they are told to be, with the powerful oratory of this new DOCTOR SQUINTUM from the North.

We are told that last Sunday this Presbyterian issued a proclamation, in the name of the King of Heaven, denouncing in no gentle terms all those who neglected to come and hear HIM. What did he mean in saying, the Sunday before, "that the GOD of natural religion was like the great desart—dry—disagreeable—comfortless—deadly—where no one would wish to dwell"?

Does MR. IRVING'S personal deformity enable him to love natural religion in one eye, and revealed religion in the other?—We do implore those, in whose keeping the birthrights of Englishmen are placed, not to encourage by their presence and patronage a defection from the national church, and a profane scramble after quackery which never can have obtained in the metropolis without their sanction.

We are told that MR. HEBER, our representative for the University of Oxford, literally sent to rent a pew in this Presbyterian chapel—it will be quite necessary, if he should wish to sit again for the same university, that he should explain whether this be the case or not; for, coupled with his profound silence upon all questions of POPISH EXTINCTION, which have been carried this Session in Parliament, would perhaps form an objection to his return which, even in his good intentions, the Honourable Gentleman does not anticipate.

Certainly there never was so strange a madness—Un COLOC'S giving lectures in Italian to crowds of people who not understand the language, is light in the scale of wrong to this; there is no sin in attending lectures on poetry, concert room, whether one understands them or not—but abandon one's church—to squeeze, as into a theatre, to tickets—to go early to secure places, to hear MR. IRVING, seem at once so indelicate, and so unlike the usual conduct moderate, well-regulated persons, that we cannot account it.—One only good effect can arise from this transient briety—we mean the joyous return of the "stray sheep" their own pastors, IN whose decent conduct, pious manners sound doctrines, and unostentatious expoundings of their they may enjoy the calm and pure blessings which a participation in the modest rites of the Established Church of England never fails to impart to the rational and well ordered Protestant Christian. The sooner this happens the more pleasure it will give us, and the less trouble we shall have lashing the Scotch innovator and his infatuated supporters.

MR. JAMES SMITH, one of the authors of "Rejected Addresses," who is moreover a lawyer, has recently published in a magazine a very whimsical song upon misnomers, after this manner:—

"Men once were surnamed from their shape or estate,
"(You all may from history learn it)
"There was LEWIS the Bulky, and HENRY the Great,
"JOHN LACKLAND, and PETER the Hermit.
"But now, when the door-plates of misters and dames
"Are read, each so constantly varies
"From the owner's trade, figure, and calling, surnames
"Seem given by the rule of contraries.

"MR. BOX, though provoked, never doubles his fist,
"MR. BURNS in his grate has no fuel;
"MR. PLAYFAIR won't catch me at hazard or whist,
"MR. COWARD was wing'd in a duel.
"MR. WISE is a dunce, MR. KING is a Whig,
"MR. COFFIN'S uncommonly sprightly,
"And huge MR. LITTLE broke down in a gig
"While driving fat MRS. GOLIGHTLY."

—and so on.

Our readers will perceive by the specimen which these verses offer, the general point and tendency of the song; but pleasant as it really is, we could point out to MR. SMITH a subject, if not for a song, for much whimsical speculation upon the different employments and pursuits of men bearing similar names at different periods.

Put away chronology—"a fig for your dates," as a punster would say, and see what a pretty confusion the world would be in, about the heroes and sages of antiquity, by a reference to in the metropolis at the present time.

"——— the door-plates of Misters and Dames"

For instance—HOMER is a coal-merchant at Paddington—CÆSAR a grocer and tea-dealer in Cripplegate—ALEXANDER makes trumpets near Leadenhall—REGULUS is a toyman in Newport-street, Long-acre—NERO keeps a hotel at the west end of the town—and CATO the elder makes meat-safes and wire-cages on Holborn-hill.

The little boys who have just come home for the holidays with "MARS, BACCHUS, and APOLLO" in their heads, will perhaps be puzzled what to think of the last deity, when they find MARS a leather-dresser in Snows-fields, and BACCHUS a manufacturer of decanters and wine-glasses in Thames-street.

Those, too, who have dabbled in poetry will stare to find LOVE a jeweller in Bond-street,—and PATIENCE, having left the neighbourhood of the Monument (where we presume he used to sit "smiling at grief") established as an architect in Wormwood-street.

Even the actors in the remotest scenes might, without the aid of chronology, be jumbled in a very extraordinary manner. What, for instance, would be thought of a change of circumstances which could have brought about a separation between our first parents, and have placed ADAM at the head of the Jury Court in Scotland, and set up EVE as a turner near WHITFIELD'S tabernacle in Tottenham-Court-road? What strange event could have made CAIN a Lieutenant-Colonel upon half-pay, or transformed ABEL into a merchant in Bucklersbury.

How, without the nicety of dates, could we account for finding AARON an ostrich feather manufacturer in Fenchurch-street, and MOSES a slop-seller in Ratcliffe-highway? PAUL a baker in Houndsditch, and PETER a barrister at law? How could we reconcile the discovery, that MATTHEW is a hair-dresser in Store-street, Bedford-square—MARK, a tailor in Holborn—LUKE a dashing Lieutenant of Artillery, and JOHN a shoemaker at Chelsea? What but the nice preervation of distance could induce us to understand why ELIJAH should be a wire-worker in Shoreditch—or NOAH a fashionable tailor in Bruton-street, Berkely-square? Why else could we believe that HEROD sold furniture in Castle-street, Long Acre—or DAVID was a boot and shoe maker—DANIEL a broker on the Stock Exchange.

But with moderns, undated, we should be still more bewildered—for instance, ALFRED, the pride of Britain, makes fishing-rods in Lothbury—THOMAS à BECKET is an attorney in Broad-street—SPENCER, the poet, writes lines to ladies' fans and sonnets to singing-birds—the admirable CRICHTON is physician to the Emperor of all the Russias—SHAKSPEARE commands a troop of horse—JOHNSON is superintendant of mail coaches—and, in the absence of FLETCHER, (who has absconded) BEAUMONT is managing director of a provincial fire-office.

The contemporaries of these, in searching after the characters immortalized by the bard of Avon, would perhaps be surprized to find the blind LEAR an optician in Fetter-lane, while EDGAR sells ale in Fenchurch-street—MACBETH and his wife are set up in a fruit-stall in Vinegar-yard, Drury-lane—the melancholy JAQUES is established as an apothecary and accoucheur in Warwick-street, Golden-square—ANGELO is celebrated as a fencing-master in Albany—ROMEO having been promoted to a Captaincy, is beating up for volunteers in the cause of liberty—PARIS is in full practice as a popular physician, and HAMLET himself keeps a silversmith's shop at the corner of Sidney's-alley.

But advance we, and what will be our astonishment to find ORWAY a Major-General in the army—MILTON breaking horses in Piccadilly—MOORE writing Irish melodies, and CREW's pretty black-eyed daughter singing them—ROWE and WALLER in partnership, as stationers in Fleet-street, and ISAAC NEWTON flourishing as a linen-draper in Leicester-square.

We have DOCTOR BUSBY, instead of whipping little boys for grammatical blunders and bad translations, making bad translations and grammatical blunders, for which, if he were a little boy himself, he would deserve to be whipped—ALEXANDER POPE, made strait and fattened up, acts tragedy at Drury-lane—ADDISON sells globes in Regent-street—RICHARDSON and SWIFT keep lottery offices in the City—CONGREVE'S pieces (which continue to go off remarkably well) are cannon, not comedies, and FARQUHAR, instead of a poor author, is a rich banker in St. James's-street

GAY, "in wit a man, simplicity a child," makes dolls in Goswell-street—COWLEY is a blacksmith—PHILLIPS is poetical only in his prose—PRIOR till very lately was an ensign in the 12th Regiment of Foot—COLLINS, instead of odes, makes glass chandeliers—BUTLER grinds Greek at Harrow, and COWPER may be seen writing his "TASK" at the table of the House of Lords any day during the sitting of parliament.

Our historians, too, might excite some astonishment if handed down undated, for HUME in parliament makes essays in the shape of long, blundering speeches—BURNET sells double proof gin—GIBBON trains dogs in Tothill Fields—HOOKE has the credit of writing for US, and the fair MACAULEY recites her historical effusions at the King's Concert Room in the Haymarket.

It would not be sufficient to know, without dates, that JACK CADE is a peaceable carpenter in Hyde-street, Bloomsbury, or that FAWKES blows up the parliament with words instead of gunpowder, to distinguish them from their turbulent predecessors—BURDETT, who wished the horns of his white buck in the throat of EDWARD THE FOURTH, might be mistaken for the loyal and constitutional Baronet of Westminster—old COKE might be blundered into a sage of the law, and LITTLETON, the Member for Staffordshire, who would not suffer an impertinent observation, be stigmatized as the man upon whom he made his copious observations.

In short, chronology is to history what perspective is to painting, without it, the jumble would be like that made on a china plate; we have no turn for the whimsical ourselves, and are as matter of fact as JOE MILLER, whom we find to beat this moment a distiller of choice spirits in Piccadilly, but if we had the knack and tact to write the song we have partly quoted, we think we could put the subject into rhyme with something like effect.

DON JUAN.

THREE new cantos of this precious performance have made their appearance, published by a MR. JOHN HUNT, at the moderate price of one shilling.

The publication of this "work" at this reduced charge is boasted of by the bookseller as a triumph over LORD ELDON, who has made it a rule not to give protection to the copyright of blasphemous and immoral books. Had MR. HUNT been an Irishman instead of a Cockney one might have understood what he meant by a triumph; as it is, it seems to us that the decision of the Lord Chancellor has had its fullest possible effect; for instead of being printed by MISTER DAVISON, of Blackfriars, on the finest wove paper, in the most beautiful type, and ushered into decent society through the agency of MR. JOHN MURRAY, at the rate of one pound five shillings, as the first portion of the book was, this detachment of trash is sent into the world through the medium of the printer, we believe, of the EXAMINER newspaper, and sold at its real value of one shilling.

If it is thought likely to be a good speculation the proprietors are mistaken—BYRON is not a popular writer with the lower orders, nor ever will be, even though he circulate his poetry and philosophy gratis—the prose attack upon LORD CASTLEREAGH in the preface might by its baseness please the rabble, but its folly would disgust even them. Read one passage of it—we shall quote no more.

"Of the manner of his death little need be said, except that, if a new Radical, such as WADDINGTON or WATSON, had cut his throat, he would have been buried in a cross-road, with the usual appurtenances of the stake and mallet. But the Minister was an elegant Lunatic—a sentimental Suicide—he merely cut the 'carotid artery' (blessings on your learning,) and lo! the Pageant, and the Abbey! and 'the Sybilline of Dolour yelled forth' by the Newspapers—and the harangue of the Coroner in an eulogy over the bleeding body of the deceased—to ANTHONY worthy of such a CÆSAR)—and the nauseous and atrocious taint of a degraded Crew of Conspirators against all that is sincere or honourable. In his death he was necessarily one of two things to the last—a felon or a madman—and in either case no great subject for panegyric. In his life he was—what all the world knows, and hall will feel for years to come, unless his death prove a 'moral lesson' to the surviving SEJANI of Europe. It may at least serve as some consolation to the Nations, that their Oppressors are not happy, and in some instances judge so justly of their own actions as to anticipate the sentence of mankind.—Let us hear no more of this man, and let us stand remove the Ashes of her GRATTAN from the Sanctuary of Westminster. Shall the Patriot of Humanity repose by the WERTHER of Politics!!!"

We would not wound the feelings of others unnecessarily even to shame LORD BYRON, but we cannot help again referring to the melancholy termination of the lives of ROMILLY and WHITBREAD, against whom we never heard LORD BYRON utter one syllable of reproach. Upon what ground an infidel attacks a suicide we cannot see, nor why MR. GRATTAN'S corpse should be removed out of Westminster Abbey lest it should be contaminated by its vicinity to the "WERTHER of politics."

This is an unfortunate phrase—"the elegant lunatic—the sentimental suicide" and the name of "WERTHER" might indeed apply to one who in paroxysms of the strongest and most sensitive grief for the loss of a beloved and amiable wife destroyed himself—the observation of the stake and mallet and cross-road might apply to a wealthy retired tradesman, who having mingled in politics, and in things above his comprehension, had involved himself in matters the disclosure of which he dreaded, and who in the full possession of his faculties terminated his existence—but who would tear up the earth to set the amiable failings of the one or the vulgar vices of the other in array against their memories?—no man; for he who would, could not be human.

The perpetual recurrence, with gloating satisfaction, of the Whigs and Radicals, to the death of LORD LONDONDERRY, are perhaps the most powerful indications of the feelings and doctrines of a party, who think the end justifies the means of ridding themselves of formidable opponents, and glory in the self-murder of one Minister nearly as much as they did in the assassination of another.

Perhaps however—as we shall shew—it matters little what LORD BYRON says—the twelve-penny-worth of his Lordship's labour now before the public has more folly, less talent, more blasphemy, less humour, more indecency, and less poetry than any of his former efforts.

His Lordship's answer to the objections already made to the early parts of the work are worthy of observation:—

"With regard to the objections which have been made on another score to the already published Cantos of this poem, I shall content myself with two quotations from Voltaire:—!!!

"'La pudeur s'est enfuite des cœurs, et s'est refugiée sur les levres.'

"'Plus les mœurs sont depravés, plus les expressions deviennent 'mesurées; on croit regagner en langage ce qu'on a perdu en vertu.'

"This is the real fact, as applicable to the degraded and hypocritical mass which leavens the present English generation, and is the only answer they deserve. The hacknied and lavished title of Blasphemer—with radical, liberal, jacobin, reformer, &c., are the changes which the hirelings are daily ringing in the ears of those who will listen," &c. &c. &c.

The retort upon loyal and constitutional persons, made by calling them "hirelings," is beyond measure absurd—LORD BYRON is a hireling—a hireling of MR. JOHN MURRAY'S, who pays him for his work as regularly as he pays his shoemaker or his taylor with the profits of that work again. Who the hirelings of Government may be we really do not know—we are none—and as far as the fact goes, the Whigs and their connexions appear to us not only to be as ready to be hired as their neighbours, but that there are more Whig hirelings than Tory hirelings; we put the Noble Lord's politics, however, out of the question for the present, and proceed to his continuation of the story as it is carried on through three cantos.

The facts contained in all this shilling's-worth of writing are these:—Don Juan, as a female slave, sleeps with a female slave—the consequences may be imagined, he and his enamorata are doomed to destruction, and there the sixth canto ends. The seventh begins with an account of the seige of Ismael, by SUWARROW, where we find JUAN and JOHN JOHNSTON (not the gentleman pensioner and late admirable actor) joining the army, attended by two females and a slave. The history of this seige is taken from the "Histoire de la Nouvelle Russie," and occupies the other two cantos, which are dull, stupid, and tiresome beyond expression, and the work ends for the present with JUAN'S finding a child on the field of battle, and vowing never to desert it, and of being sent to Petersburgh with the despatches containing an account of the victory.

Everybody knows the style of the noble author, and therefore as a proof of the inferiority of this portion of the thing to the other parts of it, or to "Beppo," we will give a stanza or two as they occur here and there, selecting those which, while they afford samples of the writing, may also give a pretty fair specimen of the delicacy, morality, religion, loyalty, high-mindedness, and purity of the noble author.

The opening stanzas are these:—

"'There is a tide in the affairs of men
"Which taken at the flood'—you know the rest,
"And most of us have found it, now and then;
"At least we think so, though but few have guess'd
"The moment, till too late to come again.
"But no doubt everything is for the best—
"Of which the surest sign is in the end;
"When things are at the worst they sometimes mend.

"There is a tide in the affairs of women
"'Which taken at the flood leads'—God knows where;
"Those navigators must be able seamen
"Whose charts lay down its currents to a hair;
"Not all the reveries of JACOB BEHMEN
"With its strange whirls and eddies can compare:
"Men with their heads reflect on this and that—
"But women with their hearts or heaven knows what!"

In the twenty-first stanza of the seventh canto we have a brilliant specimen of genuine wit, and refined taste:—

"I wonder (although MARS no doubt's a god I
"Praise) if a man's name in a bulletin
"May make up for a bullet in his body?
"I hope this little question is no sin,
"Because, though I am but a simple noddy,
"I think one SHAKESPEAR puts the same thought in
"The mouth of some one in his plays so doating,
"Which many people puse for wits by quoting."

The construction, the grammar, the pun, and above all the nonsense of this, are of the first order of BYRONIAN cockneyism—would we could say no worse of the following:—

"The columns were in movement one and all,
"But of the portion which attacked by water,
"Thicker than leaves the lives began to fall,
"Though led by ARSENIEW, that great son of slaughter,
"As brave as ever faced both bomb and ball.
"'Carnage' (so WORDSWORTH tells you) is GOD'S daughter:*
"If he speak truth, she is CHRIST'S sister, and
"Just now behaved as in the Holy Land."

To this stanza the following note is appended;—

"* 'But thy' most dreaded instrument
"In working out a pure intent,
"Is man arrayed for mutual slaughter;
"Yea, Carnage is thy daughter!'
"WORDSWORTH'S THANKSGIVING ODE.

We must admit that MR. WORDSWORTH'S lines are nonsense, but clearly not intended to be mischievous or blasphemous; all the folly of the affair is attributable to the LAKER—all the vice belongs to my Lord—the "legitimate."

His Lordship, in reference to the Portuguese proverb, that "Hell is paved with good intentions," observes—

"I almost lately have begun to doubt
"Whether Hell's pavement—if it be so paved—
"Must not have latterly been quite worn out,
"Not by the numbers good Intent hath saved,
"But by the mass who go below without
"Those antient good intentions, which once shaved
"And smoothed the brimstone of that street of Hell
"Which bears the greatest likeness to Pall Mall!"

His Lordship's opinions upon the battle of Waterloo, and of the merits and rewards of the DUKE of WELLINGTON, will endear him to all men who have English blood in their veins:—

"Among the first,—I will not say the first,
"For such precedence upon such occasions
"Will oftentimes make deadly quarrels burst
"Out between friends as well as allied nations;
"The Briton must be bold who really durst
"Put to such trial John Bull's partial patience,
"As say that WELLINGTON at Waterloo
"Was beaten,—though the Prussians say so too;—
"And that if BLUCHER, BULOW, GNEISENAU,
"And GOD knows who besides in 'au' and 'ou,'
"Had not come up in time to cast an awe
"Into the hearts of those who fought till now
"As tigers combat with an empty craw,
"The DUKE OF WELLINGTON had ceased to show
"His orders, also to receive his pensions,
"Which are the heaviest that our history mentions."

Perhaps the amiable candour of the following declaration will save us the trouble of quoting more of his Lordship's political doctrines:—

"But never mind;—'God save the king!' and kings!
"For if he don't, I doubt if men will longer—
"I think I hear a little bird, who sings
"The people by and bye will be the stronger.
"The veriest jade will wince whose harness wrings
"So much into the raw as quite to wrong her
"Beyond the rules of posting,—and the Mob
"At last fall sick of imitating Job.

"At first it grumbles, then it swears, and then,
"Like DAVID, flings smooth pebbles 'gainst a giant;
"At last it takes to weapons such as men
"Snatch when despair makes human hearts less pliant.
"Then 'comes the tug of war?'—'twill come again,
"I rather doubt; and I would fain say 'he on't,'
"If I had not perceived that Revolution
"Alone can save the Earth from Hell's pollution."

His political facts are, however, rather unfortunate:—

"Think how the joys of reading a Gazette
"Are purchased by all agonies and crimes:
"Or if these do not move you, don't forget
"Such doom may be your own in after times.
"Meantime the taxes, Castlereagh, and debt,
"Are hints as good as sermons, or as rhymes.
"Read your own hearts and Ireland's present story,
"Then feed her famine fat with Wellesley's glory.

"But still there is unto a patriot nation,
"Which loves so well its country and its king,
"A subject of sublimest exultation—
"Bear it, ye Muses, on your brightest wing!
"Howe'er the mighty beast, Desolation,
"Strip your green fields, and to your harvest cling,
"Gaunt famine never shall approach the throne—
"Though Ireland starve, great GEORGE weighs twenty stone."

The "joys of reading a Gazette" are strangely introduced to our notice while we are enjoying a profound and honourable peace—"the taxes, CASTLEREAGH, and debt," are with equal mis-management recalled to the recollection of the readers of shilling blasphemies since LORD CASTLEREAGH is no more—our debt is decreasing, and of the taxes six millions have been repealed in the current year. That the DUKE of WELLINGTON'S victories should have spoiled the potatoe crops of Ireland we think improbable, particularly when it is remembered, that the seed was never sown which was to produce those crops—and the subject of "sublimest exultation," which is made to rhyme with desolation—(desolation in England!)—is unfortunately noticed, particularly as the occupant of the Throne was the first man in the country to make a personal sacrifice to meet the then existing exigencies of the country.

The personal allusion to the KING is truly Whig—and coming as it does from a man open as my LORD BYRON is to very unpleasant attacks upon a very repulsive deformity, quite as judicious as it is gentlemanlike.

We should further one of the noble author's ends were we, for the sake of exposing, to quote the indecencies of these cantos. The explanation he has given in the preface of his feelings and views upon the subject of "modest language" will perhaps teach the reader what to expect, and effectually secure the eyes of our women from a collection of indelicacies and grossnesses of the lowest order, unillumined by one new thought, and unredeemed by one pleasing couplet.

That LORD BYRON might have been as vicious as he has shewn himself in this last effort we did not doubt—that he could be so foolish we really did not imagine.

The lovers of "hasty decisions" in the Court of Chancery will no doubt perceive, with great pleasure, that the "VICE-CHANCELLOR" has granted an injunction against a pirated edition of this work, in direct opposition to the doctrine and judgment of LORD ELDON—this comes of old hankerings.

"ENGLAND has for a long time been distinguished above all nations, by the excellence of her laws, and the purity of their administration. Whilst the foreign and domestic policy of the empire, and the character of its Ministers, have been the object of attack by conscientious inquiry or party virulence, the criminal and civil law of the country has been the theme of general commendation; but it seems to have been left to LAWYERS BY PROFESSION to attack, in our days, not only one of the first and most distinguished courts of judicature in the kingdom, but even the judgment and integrity of the first and ablest Law Officer of the Crown. These gentlemen, who are confessedly ignorant of the practice of the Court of Chancery, have, by their speeches, represented it to be a curse to the country, and that its Judges have so improperly and tardily discharged their duties, that their administration of the law amounts almost to a denial of justice. Thinking as I do, that 'the Place of Justice is an hallowed place; and therefore not only the Bench, but the foot-pace and precincts, and purprise thereof, ought to be preserved without scandal and corruption,'—I shall humbly endeavour, in this pamphlet, to prove that these attacks are alike unmerited and intolerable; and that if they do not proceed from ignorance, they must be instigated by an unworthy motive."

Thus begins a pamphlet just published by MURRAY, written, by some one well qualified for the task, in defence of the Court of Chancery and the LORD CHANCELLOR against the attacks of stuff-gowned common-law Barristers who are put into Parliament for rotten-boroughs as they call them when represented by TORIES—we have not room for half so many extracts as we would willingly make, but we cannot forbear quoting some of the most striking passages.

"Comparisons are odious," says an old proverb, and knowing all we do know, we should not be inclined to cite with unqualified approbation that part of the pamphlet which takes a comparative view of the Chancery Court and the Court of the Vice Chancellor, because we would rather shun than follow the example of those who have suffered their private feelings to prevail in the attack which this pamphlet so well repels; but the comparison has been made by others, and therefore the comparative view of the two Courts is absolutely necessary to the vindication of my LORD ELDON.

* "To wit, the Deity's: this is perhaps as pretty a pedigree for murder as ever was found out by Garter King at Arms. What would have been said had any free-spoken people discovered such a lineage?"

"It seems to be," says the author, "the practice of the Vice-Chancellor to send to Courts of Law questions of importance, depending on nice distinctions of law or fact; and frequently where he finds a contradiction in the evidence, or an unsettled and difficult point of law, he sends the questions to be decided by a Master, a Court of Law, or a Jury. He seldom bestows much time in investigating or reconciling contradictory testimony, in order to come to a decision upon it; but he perhaps acts on the conviction, that such labour does not form any part of his duty, and thinking it will be done best in a Court of Law, he at once directs an inquiry, a case to be sent to the judges, or an issue to be sent to a jury. The first stage of the cause is thus quickly dispatched, but the labour necessary to the dispatch is neither tedious nor of long duration.

"The Lord Chancellor acts on the belief, that what he may be enabled to decide by patient hearing or reading, and calm and deliberate consideration, he is bound to decide, in the honest discharge of the duty attached to his high office, without reference to any other jurisdiction. He considers that he is not justified in exposing parties to the enormous additional expense of a trial in hearing in another Court, unless where the ends of justice cannot be attained by any other means, and, influenced by this opinion, he does not often refer to Courts of Law or to Juries. He never does so if he can bring his powerful mind to a right decision, by laborious consideration of the evidence before him, whether that evidence comes before him on motion, on petition, or on a hearing. Those hours of retirement which other men devote to pleasing and interesting pursuits, he devotes to the wearisome consideration of common-place and contradictory facts—facts which perplex and weary the mind, without ever affording to it any pleasure or information worthy remembrance. He never suffers himself to be hurried into error, and this care, unjustly called delay, is a blessing to the suitors and the country. He is a Judge who appears to have read LORD BACON's hints on judicature with approbation and profit; for it cannot be denied that he has acquired that essential part of justice, 'PATIENCE AND GRAVITY OF HEARING. He considers it no grace to a judge first to find that which he might have heard in due time from the bar, or to show quickness of conceit in cutting off evidence or counsel too short; no man can accuse him of MEETING THE CAUSE HALF WAY, OR GIVING OCCASION TO THE PARTY TO SAY HIS COUNSEL OR PROOFS WERE NOT HEARD.'

"It is one thing to arrive at the truth by the comparison of contradictory evidence, and another, to send its contradictions to be reconciled before another tribunal. To decide on it may occupy a judge many hours, while to refer it for decision to another Court would not occupy him many seconds: and frequently it consumes more time to weigh and consider the evidence, and to deduce accurately the facts in one single cause, than is consumed by directing issues, inquiries, and special cases, on the hearing of one hundred.

"The Vice-Chancellor has credit for deciding a cause or petition, when he directs an issue to be tried, or refers a case to a Court of Law, and he often takes this course as soon as he discovers by reference to the affidavits or the depositions, that there is a plain and indisputable contradiction in the evidence not to be reconciled, without either requiring additional testimony, or bestowing great labour in examining minutely its worth, its competency, and its credibility. As soon as the issue is determined, he has credit for deciding another cause, when he directs a decree to be drawn up consistent with the finding of the Court, whose verdict or opinion has been obtained. This course of proceeding saves his Honour the tediousness of hearing or reading dull and uninteresting depositions and affidavits, in some cases covering upwards of one hundred brief sheets; but these issues, and these cases, which others are required to determine, INCREASE THE PARTIES' EXPENSES AT THE RATE OF FROM 100l. to 300l., or even from 500l. to 700l. in each cause; and sometimes an inquiry or an issue is not directed with sufficient precision to be useful, and a second inquiry or issue becomes necessary.

"The same parties, on similar occasions, when before the Lord Chancellor, whether on motion, petition, or at the hearing of the cause, if he decides their case, (as he commonly does without any appeal to a Court of Law,) get his judgment at a cost of a few pounds.

"I am engaged in the harmless drudgery of collecting facts to make out the case I have in hand, and I do not presume to decide which course is best; but I trust I may, without offence, contrast, and attempt to ascertain the relative advantages and disadvantages of these different modes of conducting Chancery causes. Most men will be disposed to believe, that a Judge of the Lord Chancellor's experience and attainments can, by patient hearing and reading, value evidence as correctly, and penetrate into all its bearings and tendencies, with as much acuteness as any Judge or Jury to whom it could be referred; and the known caution and care which guide him in his decisions, is a satisfactory pledge that he will not come to any conclusion on insufficient premises, or decide on testimony if the contradictory parts of it cannot be explained or reconciled. If some particular part is in doubt which an affidavit can explain, I have observed that the Lord Chancellor requires one to be made, and it perhaps tends to remove all doubts in his mind, and enables him to decide properly, at a saving of expense to the parties of many hundred pounds. For such benefits can any suitors regret a little delay?

"To do these things requires time, and perhaps the Lord Chancellor may not, in particular and difficult cases, give his judgment for several months; but are the parties injured by this delay, more than they are by having their cause suspended for six or ten months, that the facts or points of law on which it depends, may be referred, at a great cost, to a Jury, or a court of law? How stands this great and important question? Let those who abuse the Lord Chancellor answer. It is very evident which course is the least expensive to the parties."

Our readers will remember—God forbid they should ever forget—MR. BROUHAM'S pertinacious adherence to a quibble upon the appeals from LORD CHANCELLOR MANNERS's decisions in the Irish Chancery—which turned out to be twenty-two in two thousand seven hundred—the following are the observations of the author upon MR. DENMAN'S opinion of LORD ELDON:—

"MR. DENMAN, it seems, discovered that, in the course of more than a twenty years judicial life, the Lord Chancellor had given wrong judgments, as he supposed, in two cases; it is, however, not worth while to discuss this subject in order to expose the folly and the fallacy of his arguments; for I do not believe any lawyer can condemn the Lord High Chancellor of England because he does not always concur in his judgment with the City Common Serjeant, and it would be a most lamentable thing if this could reasonably be done, for no sensible man, who forms his opinion of the intellects and attainments of these gentlemen from what has proceeded out of their own mouths, and been submitted to the public in print, can suppose that in point of judgment, they possess many sentiments common to each other. It is the general opinion of the profession that the judgments of the present Lord Chancellor will, above all others, in aftertimes be looked for by his successors to guide their judicial decisions, and those judgments will stand for ages unshaken and undisturbed by the attacks of puny politicians. They are delivered with so much consideration and caution, that they will receive that spontaneous reverence which Justinian directed to be paid to his Digest of the Civil Law.

"His judgments are, indeed, a commentary on our laws; and when he decides an important case which involves in it legal principles, he examines all the authorities, both in his own days and in the old times before him; and these judgments are useful to the student, not only as decisions, but as commentaries on the law itself. When I turn my eyes to the thirty-five bulky and closely-printed volumes of reports in which these judgments are recorded, and reflect, that not one of his decisions out of one hundred is reported, I am astonished by the extent of his labours; and I cannot turn to the parliamentary debates on which I am commenting, without feelings of surprise."

We cannot do justice to the laborious search after truth to which the author of this pamphlet has devoted much of his time and talents, and must content ourselves with laying before our readers the following refutation of a statement made in Parliament by a lawyer.

It needs no comment, save that with which the author concludes:—

"It now becomes necessary," says the author, "to refer to a part of these debates which contains a statement so disgraceful and unfounded that while Parliament is sitting I dare not trust myself to comment on it; but I will copy the letter read by the speakers, and state, by way of narrative, two or three facts. Is it probable that the solicitor who presumed to write this letter to the Lord Chancellor was the dupe of others four years after his client's death? But here follows the letter as I find it in the newspapers:—

"WARE AND HORWOOD. "15th July, 1820.

"'MY LORD,—My clients have reason to complain of the injury 'they suffer by their causes not keeping their situation at the head of 'your Lordship's paper. Those causes have been seven years waiting 'for judgment; they were at the top of your Lordship's paper two 'years and a half ago; and I wish they could remain there until they 'are decided: 10,000l. is locked up, my Lord, in court until these 'causes are settled. It is painful for me to add, that I have learned 'that the infant, for whose benefit the original suit in these causes 'was instituted twenty years ago, has died of a broken heart in consequence of the distressed condition of his affairs; and I have to con-'tend, in all delays now, against the bitter feelings of his relations."*

"This assertion appeared to my mind so improbable, that, being a man unincumbered by any profession or employment, I determined to search into its truth, and I applied to a professional friend, who is generally and deservedly esteemed in the parish where the infant died, to make similar inquiries: the result of our inquiries was the same, and we learnt from the infant's friends, AND THE MEDICAL GENTLEMAN WHO ATTENDED HIM ON HIS DEATH BED, that there was not any reason to suppose his death was occasioned by a Chancery suit, or ANY THING CONNECTED WITH ONE; and I shall prove he had not any cause to grieve about it. Before his death he used often to lament that there could be no salvation, no grace, for such a sinner as himself; but he did not make any unkind allusion to the Court of Chancery, or to the Noble Lord, or other Judges who preside there. I am in possession, through the information of those who knew him, of the particulars of the offence that grieved him, and greatly depressed his spirits, which he refused to disclose to his doctor; but delicacy forbids my entering into the detail. The sentimental suitor, represented to have died of a broken heart, occasioned by a Chancery suit, was a labouring gardener, and he lived with a person at Peckham. He was buried at Linfield, in the twenty-third year of his age, in July 1816; and during his infancy there had been spent for his maintenance and education 466l. which was paid to his uncle CHARLES, he having been allowed that sum by the report of a Master in Chancery, dated the 1st day of July, 1822. The infant in his will disposes of what, 'if any thing,' should come to him from the chancery suit relating to his father's affairs; and the sum of 10,000l. ingeniously made use of in the letter, seems to have been, as regarded this infant suitor, (exclusive of what was due to his uncle for maintenance), about 134l. From searching at Doctors' Commons, I find that his uncle CHARLES, who was administrator to his father, administered to this infant's estate, SWORN NOT TO EXCEED 669l.; and out of this 600l. 466l. WAS DUE TO THIS UNCLE, which had been expended upon the infant during his minority, HE NEVER HAVING RECEIVED, OR BEEN IN A SITUATION TO RECEIVE ANY THING OUT OF COURT in his life-time; and therefore 134l. was all the infant's interest in the suit, unless we can suppose his uncle CHARLES to have sworn to a false amount on taking out letters of administration. I find, on searching at the proper office, THAT THIS INFANT WAS NEVER ARRESTED, and I cannot learn that he was ever known to be in pecuniary difficulties. A simple fact may easily confound an orator, who unworthily condescends to listen to calumnies, and to make statements prejudicial to others, without minutely examining into their truth.

"And now I will ask my reader, what is his opinion of the credit due to parliamentary motions, and the members' attention to the facts on which they are founded, even when those members are men who wear the robes of English advocates? I dare not tell him mine—but I dare ask if it be necessary, after an exposure like this, to be at the trouble of examining the truth and tendency of the other statements, as to this cause, in these notable debates, some of which I know to be false, and all of which, it seems, proceeded from the same office?† The above statement triumphantly answers this sweeping and general interrogatory.

"Christian charity teaches me to believe that this scandalous letter might be written in ignorance; and to write so heart-rending a letter to the first Judge in the realm, without due inquiry into the truth of that melancholy event which its contents insinuate and allude to, was culpable in no ordinary degree; but I hope there is not any man suffered to exercise the profession of a gentleman, who, if conusant of the truth of the case, could condescend to be the author of such a letter, or who, if he had done so, could read this statement without a blush."

* "I find in the MORNING CHRONICLE of the 5th of June, with reference to this letter, these words, printed as part of MR. J. WILLIAMS's speech. 'The solicitor went on to state to the Lord Chan-'cellor the pain he felt at being obliged to mention the fact of the in-'fant, for whose benefit this suit was instituted, having died of a broken 'heart at witnessing the delays which the cause had met with.' And the next day, in the TIMES, these words are printed as part of MR. DENMAN's speech: 'The decision in the case might have been most 'just and equitable, but it should have been given two years and a 'half before—before the individual for whose benefit it was intended 'had perished in despair of obtaining it.' If such libels as these had been published about an ordinary tradesman, we should, perhaps, have had an action or a prosecution; but when published with reference to a Judge of our highest Court, the publication, in the minds of many men, is considered perfectly fair and proper, and it is passed by in silence."

† "In what is stated to be MR. J. WILLIAMS's speech, in the TIMES of the 5th of June, I find these words. "All the cases he should bring forward, and all the documents he had, were furnished by one single office;' and the learned member seems to have been peculiarly happy in the selection of his office."

We do not apologize to our readers for having devoted so much space to this subject, conscious that they, like ourselves, are anxious only that truth may be known and justice done.

It would be presumption in us to say one word upon the talents and integrity of LORD ELDON—they are too well known and appreciated to need the feeble eulogium which we could bestow upon them—to the respectable part of the country and the profession, of which he is a splendid ornament, the simple fact that he was envied, hated, and attacked by MESSRS. DENMAN, WILLIAMS, and BROUGHAM will be sufficient of itself to establish his merits and cast additional lustre upon his character and conduct.

IRELAND.

His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant has graciously been pleased to transmit, through Mr. W. B. Upton, of Cashel, ten pounds, for James Heffernan, as a mark of his Excellency's approbation of his conduct on the 18th ultimo, in resisting the highwaymen who attacked the said Heffernan and his companion on their way to Clonmel on the public car.

A Correspondent writes us from Tandragee, that on Tuesday night, the 1st July, a range of office houses, in the town land of Shinaglish, county of Armagh, about 13 miles from that town, belonging to a farmer named Thomas Smyth, was burned to ashes. And on the same night, a house, the property of a Mrs. Warburtin, in the town land of Loughans, county of Down, was also burned. Another house in the same neighbourhood was discovered to be on fire, but the flames were got under before much damage was done.—Newry Telegraph.

In consequence of private information received by Mr. Blennerhasset, that gentleman proceeded, on the 9th instant, to a mountain called Knockfierna, six miles from Rathkeale, and found eighty pike-heads, which were concealed in a dry well. The pike heads are ten inches long, and similar in their formation to those used in the insurrection of 1803. They are so formed as to be easily carried in the pocket, and could be mounted in a few minutes.—Carlow Morning Post.

We are sorry to find, by a letter from Armagh, that the 12th of July has not passed over in that quarter with the same perfect tranquillity which distinguished it in this city. A small party of Orangemen, returning from the village of Killaleagh, to their home in Crossdawl, were waylaid and attacked by an immense number of Ribbonmen. The Protestant party immediately retired, and took refuge in the house of a man named Hamilton, in the townland of Cram—the Ribbonmen followed, and commenced a furious attack upon the house—from which some shots were fired upon the assailants, one of whom is dead, and one or two others wounded. The owner of the house, and one or two others of the party have surrendered themselves, and are committed for trial.—Dublin Mail.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

A letter from Paris dated July 13th, says—The Spanish [illegible] tune, which was carried into Brest the 6th inst. by the Cybele, is a vessel of 180 tons, armed with six 18-pounder carronades, 8 pounders, with 27 men, and 14 passengers; among them a Colonel, a Captain. The Cybele has also taken another Spanish vessel, the Alliance of the Nation, of 180 tons, with 40 passengers, among them a Colonel, Lieut. Colonel, three Captains, five Lieutenants, 19 other military men, and sent her to the squadron blockading the Torche captured, on the 3d instant, the Bella Catalina, a Spanish privateer, from Mahon, and carried her into Toulon.

The Journal des Debats, in a postscript says, that "a [illegible] Astorga mentions that Generals Bourck and Morillo had agreed preliminaries, and were marching together upon Corunna, [illegible] the Spaniards formed the advanced guard."

LISBON, JUNE 30.—(From the Lisbon Gazette.)—There continue to arrive Deputations and Congratulatory Addresses from all quarters of the kingdom. Those from Algarve are dated the 26th instant, at that period submission was complete. The only trouble left by the Authorities was to restrain the excess of zeal which was every where manifested against the Revolutionists, especially against the Freemasons.—The King has just granted a distinctive Medal to all the officers and non-commissioned officers who accompanied the Infant Don Miguel to Villafranca de Merina. It bears the legend, "Fidelity to the King and Country."

A letter from Betangos, in Galicia, under date the 28th of June, says that Quiroga had received from General Morillo a passport for 20 reals to proceed to England; but that some Revolutionists, having renewed his courage, he proceeded to Corunna, where a portion of the garrison declared for him, while the other part ranged themselves under the banners of Morillo.

Letters from Manilla, dated the 29th of December, announce information that one of those dreadful conspiracies of the native Chinese, which the Philippine Islands have so frequently witnessed, had been accidentally discovered and prevented. The conspirators had formed a plan to murder the European officers and residents, and give their property up to plunder. Fifteen of the ringleaders had been seized by the Governor, and sent on board the Spanish corvette Victoria. The conspiracy was to have broken out on the 25th of December.

A letter written from Seville of the 2d, by a relation of the Spanish Salvador, states, that that Minister did not kill himself, as reported, but that he was assassinated, at the very moment when he was proceeding to the Cortes to make a communication which would doubtless not have been very agreeable to them.

MISCELLANEOUS.

On Monday, his Majesty held a Court at his Palace in [illegible] which was attended by the Dukes of York, Cumberland, and [illegible] Leopold; the First Lord of the Treasury, the Lord Privy Seal, Secretary of State for the Colonial Department, the Master [illegible] of the Ordnance, the Master of the Horse, the Vice Chancellor, Treasurer of the Household, the Comptroller of the Household, [illegible] Harrington, &c.—The Marquess of Salisbury was introduced to his Majesty, and had an audience, to deliver up the Order of the Garter worn by the late Marquess his father. Mr. P. Elphinstone was introduced to the King to deliver to his Majesty the Order of the Bath worn by his brother, the late Lord Keith. His Majesty gave audience to the Duke of York, the Earl of Liverpool, the Duke of Wellington, Earl Bathurst, and the Duke of Dorset.

On Tuesday a Cabinet Council was held at the Foreign Office, which the Earl of Liverpool, Mr. Secretary Canning, Mr. Secretary Peel, Earl Bathurst, the Earl of Harrowby, Lord Sidmouth, Chancellor of the Exchequer, Lord Maryborough, and Mr. Vansittart were present.—The subject of deliberation was the royal speech.

On Wednesday His Majesty held a Court at his Palace in [illegible] which was attended by the Dukes of York and Cumberland, Prince Leopold, the Lord Chancellor, the Lord President of the Council, the Lord Privy Seal, the First Lord of the Treasury, Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Secretaries of State for the Foreign, and Colonial Departments, the First Lord of the Admiralty, the Master-General of the Ordnance, the Master of the Mint, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, the President of the Board of Controul, Viscount Sidmouth, the Netherlands, Persian, and Prussian Ministers, the Marquis of Hastings, Earl of Verulam, Marquis of Hertford, Earl of Hardwick, Duke of Rutland, Duke of Somerset, the Prince of Salms, Earl of Winchelsea, the Recorder of London, &c. &c.—Mr. Boreit, Minister Plenipotentiary of the Netherlands, was introduced to the King by Mr. Canning, his Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. Mr. Henry Willock, his Majesty's Charge d'Affaires to the Court of Persia, was introduced to the King by Mr. Canning, to take leave on his return to his post.

de Moltke, the Danish Minister, had an audience of his Majesty, and was also introduced by Mr. Secretary Canning. The Recorder of London made his report of the convicts capitally convicted at the last two Sessions in the Old Bailey, when John Wellford and Robert Roe, for house-breaking, and Samuel Miles, for uttering forged notes, were ordered for execution on Monday next. Twelve others were respited during His Majesty's pleasure.

The King held a Chapter of the Garter, at which the Marquis of Bath was invested with the usual insignia of a Knight of the Garter.

On Tuesday night Mr. Moates, the King's Messenger, was sent off with despatches to Sir Henry Wellesley at Vienna. At the same time Mr. Walsh, the King's Messenger, was sent off with despatches to Sir Charles Bagot at St. Petersburgh.

A Return has been received to the Order made by the House of Commons on the 5th inst. for an Estimate of the Income and Charge on the Consolidated Fund for the year 1823, ending the 5th of January, 1824; shewing more particularly how the surplus arises of 8,709,000l. as estimated in the year 1823. The Income is stated to be as follows: Customs, 7,300,000l.; Excise, 25,500,000l.; Stamps, 6,650,000l.; Post Office, 1,400,000l.; Taxes, 5,910,000l.; other branches of Revenue, 400,000l.; Total, 47,760,000l. The following is the Charge: Interest on Unredeemed Debt, 28,100,000l.; Civil List, 1,057,000l.; Miscellaneous, 993,000l.; Interest on Deficiency Bills, 160,000l.; Military and Naval Pensions, 2,800,000l.; Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, 5,000,000l.; Surplus, 9,710,000l.; Total, 47,760,000l.

We understand that an issue of double sovereigns is about to take place from the Mint, bearing the head of his Majesty, copied from the well known admirable bust by Chantry.

Sunday, at St. Martin's Church, the Rev. Mr. Kenny, late a Roman Catholic Priest, read his recantation, in the presence of the venerable Archdeacon Pott, and a numerous and respectable congregation.

Grand Review of Cavalry.—On Tuesday the grand Review of Cavalry, which has been ordered for some time, took place on Hounslow Heath. It being previously understood that the Review would begin at 10 o'clock, the Heath was crowded long before that hour with an immense assemblage of spectators. The Cavalry reviewed consisted of two Brigades and a Brigade of Horse Artillery. The Brigade of Cuirassiers, under the command of Col. Sir Robert Hill, was composed of the 1st Regiment of Life Guards, four Squadrons; and the 2d Regiment of Life Guards, four Squadrons; and the Royal Horse Guards, four Squadrons.—The Brigade of Light Dragoons, under the command of Col. Lord C. Manners, consisted of the 3d (or the King's Own) Regiment, three Squadrons; the 7th (or Queen's Own) Hussars, three Squadrons; and the 15th (or the King's) Hussars, three Squadrons, making an aggregate of six Regiments, or 21 Squadrons.—The whole was under the command of Major-General Lord Edward Somerset.—The Brigade assembled at an early hour, in contiguous columns of Squadrons, right in front, and deployed into line of parade, to receive the Commander-in-Chief.—At 12 o'clock, the Duke of York, accompanied by the Duke of Wellington, and a great number of General Officers, and attended by a very numerous Staff, was received in a most brilliant style, with the accustomed military honours. The troops then passed in review. The Commander-in-Chief frequently expressed to the officers around him his unqualified approbation of the movements and attacks of the troops. His Royal Highness retired with the grand cortege, highly gratified and delighted. The ground was kept by the 14th Light Dragoons.

On Wednesday a Court of Directors was held at the East India House, when Capt. Richard Glasspoole, of the ship Buckinghamshire, took leave of the Court previous to departing for China direct.

At a Court of Common Council, on Thursday, a question was put by one of the members named Savage, to ascertain whether the Lord Mayor, in his place in the House of Commons, had put any question to the Minister as to the legality of the Loan in aid of the French, as he had not to that Court as to the legality of their Vote in aid of the Spaniards.—The Lord Mayor replied in the negative, but he could inform the Court, that strong opinions had been given by high Law Authorities that the vote of money was illegal. He had done no more than his duty in presenting the protest, and he hoped the Court would bear him witness, that he had acted fairly in stating the nature of the document before it was read.—The Court referred the new Act for rebuilding London-bridge to a Committee, consisting of all the Aldermen, the Chairman for the time being of the Bridge House Committee, and a Commoner from each of the Wards, for the purpose of carrying the same into execution.

Navy Promotions.—Capt Septimus Arabin, Charles Phillips, and John Walter Roberts to the rank of Post Captains.—Lieutenants John B. Dundas, Robert Scallon, Robert Hagan, Alexander T. E. Vidal, Adolphus Fitzclarence, Thomas Stopford, Andrew Forbes, and John G. Graham, to the rank of Commanders.—Messrs. Joseph Grote, Wm. G. Skyring, Geo. F. Dixon, Geo. W. C. Lydiard, Cornwallis Ricketts, Henry J. Puget, Henry Byam Martin, William H. Geary, Wm. N. Taylor, Wm. Preston, Richard R. Mottorell, Edmund Stevenson, Geo. S. Dyer, Henry Fortescue, Geo. T. M. Purvis, William Pretyman, Thomas W. Langton, Geo. Daniell, Henry Raper, Samuel Baker, John Crisp, Richard Jones (1), Richard W. Hewitson, Henry Shapland, Wm. Turner, Thomas Greene, James E. Parlby, John H. Weller, Smyth Griffith, John D. Robinson, Frederick J. Jeffreys to the rank of Lieutenants.

The Cricket Match between the West Kent and Epsom Clubs was played on Epsom Downs on Monday and Tuesday, and decided in favour of the Kent Club. Kent, 1st innings, 107; 2d Ditto, 149; Total, 256; Epsom, 1st innings, 97. When the Kent had got 149 in the second innings, with only two wickets down, it was agreed by the Epsom Club they would give up the match.

At Cheltenham races on Wednesday, Mr. W. West's bl. c. Volunteer won the Cheltenham St. Leger Stakes; the same gentleman's Angelica, 4 years old, also won the Gloucestershire Stakes, 25 guineas each, 66 subscribers, beating eight others. This was a most beautiful race, and ran uncle deep in water; immediately after which there was one of the heaviest storms of hail and rain we ever recollect: the horses and their riders were in so pitiable a plight, as scarce to be recognized by their respective owners or the numerous spectators.

There will be a remarkable and total eclipse of the moon on Wednesday; and as it will happen soon after the moon has passed her apogee, her motion through the earth's shadow will be slow, and consequently render the eclipse of long duration.

The appearance of the hop plantations this year is said to resemble the prospects of 1802, which proved only 15,000l. old duty; at present the duty is estimated at 40,000l. to 45,000l.—The accounts from Worcester, Maidstone, and Canterbury, state that the hops are daily getting more foul.

The Assizes for Cambridgeshire will commence to-morrow, before Lord Chief Justice Abbott and Mr. Serjeant Bosanquet.—There are eleven prisoners for trial.

We are authorized to state that the recent accounts from Sierra Leone, mentioning the serious illness of the Chief Justice of that colony (the Hon. E. Fitzgerald), are incorrect. We learn, from a gentleman who left Sierra Leone on the 31st of May, that Mr. Fitzgerald was at that time rapidly recovering from a slight bilious attack.

An old travelling trunk, which had for more than 20 years been used in the loft house of a gentleman's garden some few miles from Lewes, as the depository of seeds for the use of the gardener, it was, a few weeks ago accidentally discovered, contained 368 guineas, which, by the ingenious contrivance of two secret drawers, must have been long concealed, as the guineas, we understand, were principally coined in the reigns of Charles and James.

On Tuesday evening, the 10th inst. between seven and eight, during a tremendous storm of thunder, lightning, and hail, eleven sheep, part of a flock belonging to George Read, Esq. of Crow Hall, Stutton, were struck dead by the lightning. The eleven which were lying in a knot under a low tree of thick foliage, escaped injury.

On Tuesday last, while John Jackson, labourer, was digging in one of the cells for the new gaol Newcastle, a large body of earth gave way, and killed him.

On Wednesday, a man in the employ of Mr. Gordon, distiller, in Gower-street road, went to a neighbouring barber's, and after being shaved, while waiting for change, he snatched up a razor and cut his throat. He was conveyed to St. Bartholomew's Hospital, but is not likely to recover. He has a wife and five children.

In the fine collection of Pictures which we noticed last Sunday a mistake has occurred to one, that had not been calculated upon. The Grand Picture by Raphael came from Paris in a large case, with some of the finest articles of Sevre China; the latter, to be effectually secured from breaking, was packed in boxes lined with silk, and the consequence has been the Custom House, in the exercise of their just privilege, unceremoniously detained them till Friday, the sale is therefore postponed till to-morrow. During the week the private view has been attended by an innumerable list of the nobility and amateurs. Geo. Robins is the officiator on this occasion.

THE MEMOIRS of the MARCHIONESS DE BONCHAMPS, on LA VENDEE; edited by the COUNTESS of GENLIS. Translated from the French.

This extraordinary work, which has just appeared as Paris, where it has produced the greatest sensation, is a narrative of female suffering and heroism of Madame de Genlis, in her preface, says, "I do not believe that a romance exists, the perusal of which can be so engaging as that of these Memoirs"

MEMOIRES DE MARQUISE DE BONCHAMPS, SUR LA VENDEE. Rédigés par Madame la Comtesse de Genlis. Reprinted from the Paris Edition.—London: printed for Charles Knight and Co. 7, Pall Mall East.

THE WARDER, DUBLIN NEWSPAPER.—The Friends of this Constitutional Weekly Publication, and the British Public in general are respectfully informed that, in consequence of its very increased and increasing circulation, the Establishment is about to be transferred from 19, St. George's-street, to No 6, Palace-street, adjoining the Lower Castle-yard, where the Paper will be published on Saturday, the 12th July inst. A New Type, enlarged Columns, and a character of arrangement and execution not inferior to the best London prints, together with its accustomed attention to the Local Politics of Ireland, and the best interests of the Imperial Union, it is hoped will maintain to THE WARDER that enlightened and honourable patronage which it has hitherto so largely and flatteringly experienced. Co-operating most effectively with the truly Loyal and Constitutional Members of the British Press, in the great and important objects of their advocacy, and sensible in these exigent times of the value of its labors, the Warder freely claims the protection and support of PROTESTANT ENGLAND, and confidently looks to subscriptions and other aids from that portion of the British People, duly appreciating the value and importance of infusing into the troubled and diseased elements of Irish Society, the salutary and dignified spirit of English sentiment; obedience to the laws, reverence of our pure reformed faith, and that deep sense of moral duty and excellence, without which no nation can be great, respectable, and happy.—Annual subscriptions 30s. and proportionably for the subdivisions of the year.—All commands, post paid, addressed to the Printer, No. 6, Palace-street, will be promptly attended to.—Dublin, July 1, 1823.

WRITING PAPER, cheap and of the best quality, at lower prices than ever yet offered to the public.—Bath post 4½ per quire; ditto, 5d.: superfine 7d. 8d. 9d. 10d. and 1s. the quire, or by the ream, 6s. 9d. 7s. 9d. 10s. 6d. 12s. 13s. 6d. 15s. and 17s. 6d.; very best hot-pressed Bath gilt, 1s. 1d. the quire, or 20s. the ream, J. WHATMAN'S superior manufacture; superfine laid post 6d. 9d. 10d. and 1s. the quire, or 12s. 13s. 6d. 15s. and 17s. the ream; superfine foolscap 1s. 1s. 2d. 1s. 3d. and 1s. 4d. a quire, or by the ream, 19s. 21s. 24s. and 26s.; very best bank 3d. 4d. 5d. and 5½. the quire, or 55s. the ream; large ditto, 1s. the quire, or 18s. the ream: best ruled thick post copy books, 5s. 6d. per dozen; foolscap ditto, 3s. 6d. per dozen; 12 sheet cyphering books, 14s. per dozen; 18 sheet ditto, 17s.; and 24 sheet do. 20s.; very best red sealing wax, 4s. 6d. the lb. The Steel Nib Pen, 1s. 4d. each; boys' school slates 4d. each, or 3s. per dozen; pinions and pens equally low in price; account books, drawing paper, and Bristol boards, in great variety; excellent copy, 7d. a quire, or 11s. a ream; at H. and W. SMITH'S, 192, Strand, Second House from the Crown and Anchor Tavern.

A GENTLEMAN'S HAT.—WM. PRITCHARD respectfully informs the Public that he has succeeded in manufacturing a genteel and economical SUBSTITUTE for the SILK HAT, so deficient in gentlemanly appearance, and so injurious to the health by reason of the perfect resistance it opposes to the escape of the perspiration, thereby very probably laying a foundation for serious injury to the health. Wm. Pritchard presumes that the family experience as many years, and more than a century will prove the necessity of any assertion to his friends, while it may suffice for him to inform the public that his articles shall be substantially good, possessing a genteel shortness and closeness of nap, &c. and at the very moderate price of twenty shillings. 239, Regent-street, corner of Princes-street, Hanover square.

PATTERSON'S ICE PAIL.—JOHN PATTERSON, Furnishing Ironmonger, No. 41, New Bridge-street, Blackfriars, has invented an Ice Pail on a new and philosophical principle; by means of which, Wines, Cream, Butter, Fruit, and other Substances, fluid or solid, may be cooled and kept cooled, with a degree of efficacy and precision hitherto unknown. To prove this, it may be sufficient to state, that if spring-water be placed in these Pails at the common temperature of 52 degrees, it will retain that temperature for many hours, although surrounded by an atmosphere 30 degrees higher; and if the water be cooled down, as it easily and quickly may be, by Ice, or by a substitute for Ice, which may be had with the Pail, to any given point, the same uniformity may be maintained, as to the lowered temperature, for a great length of time.—PATTERSON'S PARISIAN ICE PAILS, on Improved Principles, can be made without the aid of Ice, and in half the usual time, may also be had: together with ICE BUCKETS, by which Ice can be preserved for several days.

ARROWSMITH and CO. TROPICAL CLOTHIERS, &c. (late Finch and Arrowsmith) No. 3, Cornhill, near the Mansion House, beg leave to apprize their Friends and the Public in general that they conduct the Business of that long established House upon the same broad principle which has already obtained for it their distinguished support, viz. combining the interests of the vender and purchaser, by the sale of the best articles upon terms reciprocally advantageous. The Military and passenger trade known. To prove this, it may be sufficient to state, that if spring-water be placed in these Pails at the common temperature of 52 degrees, it will retain that temperature for many hours, although surrounded by an atmosphere 30 degrees higher; and if the water be cooled down, as it easily and quickly may be, by Ice, or by a substitute for Ice, which may be had with the Pail, to any given point, the same uniformity may be maintained, as to the lowered temperature, for a great length of time.—PATTERSON'S PARISIAN ICE PAILS, on Improved Principles, can be made without the aid of Ice, and in half the usual time, may also be had: together with ICE BUCKETS, by which Ice can be preserved for several days.

GUNS, PISTOLS, PLATE, and PLATED GOODS, are selling off at WILSON'S old-established Warehouses, Nos. 1 and 2, Vigo-lane, Regent-street, the premises being about to be re-built agreeably to the New Street Act.—Mrs. Wilson feels that she would be wanting in gratitude to the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public, were she not to return them her best thanks for the kind patronage and support with which she has so long been honoured. She also respectfully solicits their continuance, without loss of time, to an extensive and choice stock of Guns and Pistols, by the best London makers, many of them being on the most approved detonating principles, with all the requisite apparatus, together with a choice stock of Plate and Plated Goods, consisting of every article calculated either for the table or sideboard. Canteens for officers and travellers continue to be fitted up on the shortest notice. The whole will be sold at reduced prices for ready money.

BEAUTIFUL SHAWLS, SILKS, LACE, and MUSLINS SELLING OFF.—The whole of the Fashionable SILKS of HUBBARD and Co. is now selling off at an immense sacrifice, in consequence of the expiration of their lease. Morning dresses, 3s. 9d. each; handsome gauze dresses, 10s. and 15s.; French width levantines, 4s. 6d. instead of 6s. 6d.; bombasins, 1s.; wide Norwich crapes, 1s. 6d.; white satins, 3s.; lace veils, 12s.; Moravian flounced robes, 18s. sold at 2l. Added to the above bargains are new and very rich silks, much in demand amongst the nobility. Velon de Paris, duchapes, Gros de Naples, figured silks, striped silks, taffeties, sarsenets, velvets, poplins, rich white satins for dresses, and every article now in fashion. Very curious and handsome shawls, long and square, a very great bargain; Edinburgh and Norwich shawls, from 14s. to 5l. A large stock of remnants remarkably cheap; family mourning of every description. Spitalfields House, 12, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

OWING to the bad state of the weather, and the Spring Trade being certainly the worst that has been experienced in London for many years, J. ARMSTRONG, 32, Oxford street, has come to a fixed determination of selling all his REMAINING STOCK of SILKS, at cost price, considering that it will be better to do so than to keep them till the following year. Excellent rich silks, suitable for the sea-side, from 2s. 3d. to 2s. 9d. per yard; plain ditto, in all durable colours, 2s. 6d. to 3s.; French width, as low as 3s. 3d.; gros de Naples, 3s. 6d. to 4s. 6d.; rich ditto, 5s and upwards; satins for slips, both in colours and white, from 2s. 6d. to 10s.; levantines in all colours, from 3s. to 6s. 6d.; Norwich and Cashmere crapes, 1s. to 2s. 6d.; a large lot more lately come to hand, per yard, being the finest article ever offered at that price in London; zones, at 10d. per yard, being the newest article in fashion; a few pieces of rich Peruvian gauze do. 2s. 6d.; rich satin flounced do. 40s.; gauze dresses, 10s. above cost. Every article warranted. Mourning orders executed with the greatest dispatch. Observe the number, 32, Oxford-street.

WILLIAM LEIGH, many years in the house of Messrs. Whitter and Hardwick, of New Bond-street, has the honour respectfully to announce to the Nobility, Gentry, and his Friends, that he has purchased the Stock and Business of the late Mr. Charles Burrell, linen-draper, of 19, Hanway-street, Oxford-street, and having made a considerable addition to the same, he is desirous of submitting to their inspection a choice and elegant assortment of fashionable Goods, selected with the greatest care; also Sleisian Patch, and Irish damask table linen, French cambrics, Irish linens, sheetings, Welch flannel, &c. &c.—William Leigh intends immediately to dispose of the remaining part of the Stock of the late Mr. Charles Burrell at considerably reduced prices.

19, Hanway-street, July 1823.

LATEST NEWS.

Paris Papers down to Friday have arrived. Private letters and the French papers assert that Morillo and Sarsfield have actually joined the French with 3000 men. However inconsistent may be the treason of Morillo with the sentiments expressed in his Address to the troops under his command, the fact is corroborated by the Proclamation of QUIROGA, issued at Corunna. Lugo, of which he had possession, has been delivered to the French, together with the garrison, consisting of 1000 men, and Cardona has since surrendered. Quiroga is taking vigorous measures at Corunna for defending Galicia.

The Madrid Gazette gives a Proclamation of General Morillo, in which he complains bitterly as well of the Regency of Madrid and the French, as of the Regency at Cadiz.

An article in these papers, dated Ax, July 3, says:—"The blockade of the forts of Urgel has not been effected; but it is announced that a re-inforcement of 34,400 Frenchmen has joined the blockading party, and the seige will be undertaken with vigour. According to the ministerial journals, who now do not seem to be so positive on the surrender of Cadiz, it appears that two revolutionary parties have declared themselves, and a great difference of opinion prevailing—the most moderate party wishing for the safety of the King, at the head of which are Romero Alpuente, and Gasco, ex-Minister of the Interior; the other, called the fanatic party, wishing to sacrifice in time of danger the Royal Family, is conducted by Galliano and Arguelles; but the whole of the military power is invested in the person of General Valdes, Military and Political Chief of Cadiz, and commander of the naval forces. Alava, Riego, and Ballesteros are the lieutenants."

Bayonne Papers to the 11th instant, have also arrived, the contents remove all anxiety respecting St. Sebastian. All attempts to induce the Governor of that fortress to surrender have failed. The Guerilla system continues to spread, and seems already operating in the line of communication. The hot weather has commenced its debilitating havoc in the French army.

Letters and papers have been received from Corunna, which state, that the advanced posts of the French army were expected to be in the immediate vicinity of that place on Monday the 14th. A part of the garrison, about 1,500 strong, had sallied out to oppose their approach. This party was headed by Sir Robert Wilson, Quiroga, and the Guerilla Chief, known by the name of El Medico.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

SATURDAY.—At two o'clock, the following Commissioners took their seats in front of the Throne—the Earls of Eldon, Westmorland, Harrowby, Liverpool, and the Archbishop of Canterbury.—The Usher of the Black Rod having summoned the House of Commons, and the Speaker, with several Hon. Members, having arrived at the bar, the Royal Assent was given to the following Bills:—Exchequer Loan, Turnpike Regulation, New South Wales Jurisdiction, Irish Tithe Commutation, and Scotch Confirmation Bills.

Parliament was then prorogued to the 30th of September, by a Speech, for which see another part of our paper.

Yesterday being the anniversary of the King's Coronation, the bells in the cities of London and Westminster rang a merry peal throughout the day. The Royal standard was hoisted on the several church steeples, and the Park and Tower guns were fired at one o'clock. It was also observed as a holiday at the Bank, Stock Exchange, and other public offices.

The correspondence between Mr. Secretary Canning, and Don Victor Saez, the Secretary of the Madrid Regency, was laid upon the table of the House of Commons on Friday night. It appears that his Majesty's Government had declined to receive the communication made to it by the newly installed Regency at Madrid, which the Regency itself must have anticipated. Mr. Secretary Canning, of course had but one reply to make, that his Majesty, "having a Minister resident near the person of his Catholic Majesty, could not receive a communication," of the kind forwarded by Don Victor Saez. Similar communications were made to our Government by the Regency of Urgel, and by that which was instituted after the entrance of the French army into Spain. To neither of these communications, however, was it thought necessary to return any answer, "and," says Mr. Secretary Canning to M. Saez, "if I now deviate from the course pursued in those two instances, it is only because I would not appear to be guilty of incivility in sending back your Messenger without a written acknowledgment of your letter.

On Thursday, as Master W. Garratt, son of Alderman Garratt, was riding on a donkey at Brighton, he fell and broke his arm, but is now in a fair way of recovery.

THE ARMY.—Gen. Sir David Baird, Bart. G.C.B. and K.G. will inspect, in the course of a few days, the 24th Regiment of Infantry, lately arrived at Gosport, on board the Charlotte country ship, from India. The depot of the 34th Regiment of Foot, lately arrived at Chatham, on board the Coldstream East Indiaman, from India, is ordered to Woolwich. One troop of the 14th Light Dragoons has been ordered from Devizes to Warminster. Another troop belonging to the same Corps has been ordered from Melksham to Frome. One troop belonging to the 2d Regiment of Dragoon Guards has been ordered from Newcastle to Abergavenny. The 34th and 53d Regiments of Infantry, lately returned to this country from India, have come home mere skeletons, the former having returned with only 73, and the latter with 45 men.

PORTSMOUTH, JULY 18.—This morning orders were received for the Rifleman, Capt. J. Montague; and the Cameleon, Capt. Burton, to form part of the Royal squadron. The Royal yachts were under weigh yesterday; every moment seems to augur the speedy arrival of his Majesty. The Royal squadron at present consists of the following yachts:—Royal George, Capt. Capel; Prince Regent, Capt. Sir M. Seymour; Royal Sovereign, Capt. Adam.——Escort—Seringapatam, Capt. Warren; Rifleman, Capt. Montague; Cameleon, Capt. Burton. The whole under the command of Rear-Admiral Sir Charles Paget.

The murderer of Major Going was landed on Thursday at the London Docks, from the ship St. Lawrence, from Quebec. He was heavily ironed, and in the custody of a party of the 80th Regiment.

Friday, a boy was driving a horse and chaise in the Whitechapel-road, towards town; when he got near the church, the horse, a spirited animal, became unmanageable and run off in a full gallop. In his progress he upset a fruit-stall, and ran over the woman who kept it; the poor creature was so dreadfully injured that she expired at the London Hospital a few hours after the accident.

Joseph Nicholls Collins and Thomas Crowe were tried a few days since at the Sessions for the city of Norwich, for stealing a dead body out of Lakenham Church-yard, which they packed in a box and booked for London. They were found Guilty, and sentenced to be imprisoned three months, and to pay a fine of 50l.

At the Special Sessions at Mallow, Henry Smith, John Smith (brothers), Timothy Deady, John Deady, Thomas Deady (brothers), Jn. Driscoll, William Driscol! (brothers). Cornelius Sullivan, John Sullivan (relatives), Michael Donoghue, William Donoghue (brothers), and John Hennessy, were charged with being idle and disorderly persons, for being absent from their dwellings on the night of the 6th of July, at Johnstown. The facts were proved; and they were found guilty, and sentenced to be transported for seven years.

☞ The Dublin papers received yesterday state that on Sunday morning an occurrence took place in the North Roman Catholic Chapel, in Cork, which had nearly caused the loss of lives, and been otherwise destructive in its consequences. About the hour of 8 o'clock, while a great concourse of people were at mass, a drummer of the 1st Royal Veteran Battalion, stationed in this city, rushed into the chapel with his sword drawn, seized a crucifix and dashed it in pieces. He then hurried through the passage to the main altar where the Priest was officiating, and immediately seized him—on which a tremendous uproar ensued. The mob outside insisting the drummer was an Orangeman, several stones were thrown, the military were called out, and the mob dispersed. It turned out that the drummer was a Roman Catholic and insane. He was conveyed to the Lunatic Asylum.

ELEGANT GLASSES, FURNITURE, &c.—The Nobility and Gentry are invited to inspect the Ware rooms of Cooper and Son, 63, Bishopsgate Within, where is exhibited a large Assortment of new and elegant Cut-head Plate Glasses, admirably suited to every description of drawing or dining-rooms. The prices are duly marked at 20 per cent. on plates measuring 100 inches by 72, and upwards; and at 40 per cent. on plates measuring 100 inches by 72, and upwards; and on those of smaller dimensions the alteration will be found equally important. The extensive preference given to this Establishment is thankfully acknowledged by the Proprietors, who, in their endeavours to evince their gratitude, by manufacturing articles in a superior manner, at prices suitable to the times, hope to merit a continuance of public support. In the furniture department is constantly kept a good and elegant article of upholstery, cabinet, and chair work, priced every article, and the regulated upon such a scale of economy as to demand and ensure the patronage of rank and fashion.

A candid examination of professional pretensions is only to be feared by those who are conscious of incapacity. Messrs. Goss and Co. Members of the Royal College of Surgeons, confine their studies to the treatment of such disorders as arise from nervous debility. Their works, "The Ægis of Life," and "Hygeiana," (the latter addressed to females) in full explanation of these subjects, may be had gratis, or forwarded free of postage, by letter (post paid) addressed to them, No. 20, Paternoster-row, London, Porter, 72, Grafton street, Dublin, or and at No. 20, Paternoster-row, London, Porter, 72, Grafton street, Dublin, or at any Booksellers. Medicines can be forwarded to any part, however distant, on receiving a Bank note.—11, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street, London.

TO FAMILIES LEAVING TOWN, and fitting up their COUNTRY RESIDENCES.

MILES and EDWARDS'S splendid Stock of London Chintz Furnitures, Spanish Damasks, Cashmere Chintzes, Moreens, &c. is, without exception, the largest, the most select, and the cheapest in the kingdom. This immense assortment having been entirely manufactured since the extraordinary diminution in the value, the proprietors are enabled and determined to sell them full one third below the regular prices of old establishments. M. and E. are aware that by this innovation upon the system of the trade, they have incurred the anxious fears of their friends, but the unprecedented encouragement experienced from the principal Nobility and Gentry is an ample compensation and a sufficient inducement for them to adhere to their present plan. In fitting up Drawing Room and Dining Room Curtains, Four-post and French Beds, &c. Families may, in many instances, effect a saving of nearly one half by inspecting this matchless stock.—Miles and Edwards's only establishment is at No. 134, Oxford-street, between Holles street and Old Cavendish-street.

In 4to. price One Guinea, half bound; or full coloured II. 11s. 6d.

☞ This Atlas includes all the recent discoveries; and the boundaries of the several states are carefully delineated, on an entirely new set of Plates, accurately to the present improved state of Geographical Science, so as to exhibit, with fidelity, the various natural and political distinctions. The Introductory Dissertations will be found to possess a degree of novelty hitherto unattempted in works of this nature; a variety of practical illustrations, examples, and precepts, having been introduced, by attention to which the student may easily acquire a competent knowledge of the natural and political divisions of the globe, and of the relative extent and positions of its various empires, kingdoms, and states.

4. A NEW and COMPREHENSIVE SYSTEM of MODERN GEOGRAPHY, Mathematical, Physical, Political, and Commercial; being a perspicuous Delineation of the present State of the Globe, with its Inhabitants and Productions; preceded by the History of the Science,—interspersed with Statistical and Synoptical Tables,—and accompanied with a Series of correct coloured Maps, forming a complete Atlas of the World; a great variety of appropriate Views; and numerous other Engravings, illustrative of the Manners, Customs, and Costumes of Nations. By Thomas Myers, A.M. of the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich. Handsomely printed in two large volumes quarto, on fine wove paper, and hotpressed, price 8l. 8s. boards, or 10l. handsomely bound in Russia.

☞ This valuable Work is also republishing in Monthly Parts, price 7s. each.—The Publishers have the satisfaction to state, that it has been honoured with the most flattering testimonials of approbation, as may be seen in the detailed Prospectuses, to be had of all respectable Booksellers.

5. A New Edition of SIR WILLIAM BLACKSTONE'S COMMENTARIES on the LAWS of ENGLAND. By John Williams, Esq. of the Inner Temple. In 4 vols. 8vo. with a beautiful Portrait of the Learned Judge. Price 2l. 4s. bds.

☞ This Edition (which, while in MS. received the approbation of a late eminent Advocate and Statesman) contains the last corrections of the Author, as also the variations of reading between the first and subsequent editions, respecting the liberty of the press, and with copious Comments and Annotations, the correction of nearly two hundred errors and mis-statements of the learned Commentator; and is preceded by the Author's own ANALYSIS of the Work. It is also the last Edition of that celebrated work, and brings down the Law sixteen years later than any other edition extant.

6. The LAWS RELATING to the CLERGY; being a Practical Guide to the Clerical Profession in the legal and canonical discharge of their various duties, and forming a body of Ecclesiastical Law; with instructions to candidates for Holy Orders, and the papers, certificates, testimonials, &c. necessary to be sent to the Bishop on being ordained Deacon or Priest; and on appointments to Curacies and Lectureships; and on institution to Benefices: together with the forms of Certificates of Residence, of Petitions for Licence, of Non-Residence, &c. also a comprehensive Digest of the Law of Tithes, &c. &c. alphabetically arranged. By the Rev. David Williams, M.A. late of Christ Church, Oxford. Second edition, much improved. 8vo price 16s. boards.

7. THE FAMILY CYCLOPÆDIA; being a Manual of useful and necessary Knowledge in Domestic Economy, Agriculture, Chemistry, and the Arts; including the most approved modes of treatment of diseases, accidents, and casualties. By James Jennings. In 2 large vols. 8vo. price 11. 14s. in boards. ☞ This original and valuable work is printed in double columns, on good paper, and contains upwards of 1,500 pages of information, immediately connected with the pursuits of domestic life. By means of close printing and a large page, it comprehends as much matter as is usually found in six volumes of the ordinary size, and cannot, it is presumed, fail of being considered a most valuable addition to the Family Library. In addition to the great heads of Domestic Economy, Agriculture, and Chemistry, it points out the best modes of curing diseases, and obviating the effects of sudden accidents.

8. The SCIENCE of SENTIENT FACULTY; and on the principles of Human Magnetism. Translated from the French of Count de Redern, and elucidated with Notes. By Francis Corbeaux, 8vo. price 7s. boards.

☞ This Work accounts for the cures performed by Prince Hohenlohe and other Magnetists, upon philosophical principles.

"The author's object has been, chiefly, to demonstrate that our five senses bear upon a common point of analogy, indicative of a primary and general form of perception, modified by each sense in a specific manner. He defines and compares our perceptions, sensations, and ideas, and traces, under the influence of different states or conditions of human existence; and what changes take place with reference to the complication of those states, and, as it were, the separate modes of existence in one and the same person, abounds in new and profound conceptions."—Translator's Preface.

9. LETTERS on the CORN LAWS, addressed to the Right Hon. Robert Thornton, M.D. Lecturer on Botany at Guy's Hospital, and Author of several Works on Botany. In 12mo. illustrated with Plates, price 8s. or with the Plates beautifully Coloured after Nature, 12s. in boards.

☞ This Work is calculated to initiate the Student by easy gradations into a systematic acquisition of the principles of this pleasing department of science. The terms of art are familiarly explained, with reference to their etymology, and the work is enriched throughout with much useful and agreeable information, the subject being so treated as to induce a habit of arrangement, and a perception of order, distinction, and subordination, which is of the first importance, not only in this but in every other department of knowledge.

WALSH'S ORIGINAL GINGER SEEDS, &c. having been for thirty years patronized by the Public and recommended by Medical Men of the first eminence, their beneficial effects have become fully established. THE WARDER, DUBLIN NEWSPAPER.—The Friends of this Constitutional Weekly Publication, and the British Public in general are respectfully informed that, in consequence of its very increased and increasing circulation, the Establishment is about to be transferred from 19, St Andrew-street, to No 6, Pauce-street, adjoining the Lower Castle-yard, where the Paper will be published on Saturday, the 12th July inst. A New Type, enlarged Columns, and a character of arrangement and execution not inferior to the most London prints, together with its accustomed attention to the Local Politics of Ireland; and the best interests of the Imperial Union, it is hoped will maintain to THE WARDER that enlightened and honourable patronage which it has hitherto so largely and flatteringly experienced. Co-operating most effectively with the truly Loyal and Constitutional Members of the British Press, in the great and sacred objects of their advocacy, and sensible in these exigent times of the value of its labours, the Warder freely claims the protection and support of PROTESTANT ENGLAND, and confidently looks to subscriptions and other aids from that portion of the British People, duly appreciating the value and importance of infusing into the troubled and diseased elements of Irish Society, the salutary and dignified spirit of English sentiment; obedience to the laws, reverence of our pure reformed faith, and that deep sense of moral duty and excellence, without which no nation can be great, respectable, and happy.—Annual subscriptions 30s. and proportionably for the subdivisions of the year.—All commands, post paid, addressed to the Printer, No. 6, Palace-street, will be promptly attended to.—Dublin, July 1, 1823.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, JULY 19.—An Ordinance of the 29th of June last, appoints to the Sub-Prefecture of Sens, M. Olivier de la Rochefoucauld, grandson of M. the Duke de la Rochefoucauld, who has already distinguished himself in the Sub-Prefecture of St. Ménéould, by sentiments worthy of the entire confidence of the Government.

The movement just made by the army, by closing the line near Barcelona, has determined Mina to quit hastily the village of Sans, where his illness compelled him to tarry, and to proceed to shut himself up in the capital of Catalonia, which Milans has left and directed his march towards the vast plains of Tarragona. A superior Employé in the Commissariat Department was arrested at Perpignan on the 8th instant, and conducted by a detachment of gendarmes to the head-quarters of the 4th Corps.—A riot took place at the theatre of Beauvais on the 15th ult. during the performance of the tragedy of Regulus. The authorities interfered, caused the audience to withdraw, and closed the theatre.

The Moniteur gives a Royal Ordonnance, which orders that the corps, commanded by Marshal Lauriston, which had been entitled the Second Corps of Reserve, shall henceforth be called the Fifth Corps of the Army of the Pyrenees. Its first destination is Navarre and Biscay; and the first service it shall have to execute is to transform the blockade of Pampeluna and that of Sebastian into regular sieges. Large battering trains for this purpose have already arrived at Bayonne.

BAYONNE, JULY 15.—It now appears certain, that the sieges of St. Sebastian, Pampeluna and Santona, are going to be begun seriously, and without delay. For this purpose, the materiel of the great park of artillery at Toulouse arrived here the day before yesterday, under the care of a Captain of Artillery; we may be allowed to conjecture that the probability of a longer duration of hostilities renders it expedient to have a strong line of operations behind the Ebro, which cannot be done without the possession of the above mentioned fortresses. For the same reasons, depots of grain, &c. are forming; for instance, at St. Jean de Luz, to which place 12,000 sacks of flour are now going. It seems, that the siege of Cadiz will be prosecuted with great vigour at the same time, this being now in fact one of the chief objects of the war; as the King, whom we wish to deliver, is in that place. Merchant vessels are freighting here on high terms, to convey the immense quantities of ammunition and military stores which will be required, and which are to be landed at Port St. Mary. On the 11th, a strong column of troops, with six pieces of cannon, marched for Madrid. It is not known whether they went towards Toledo, where they might succour the Swiss of the Royal Guard, who, it is said, have been attacked near Templique, and forced to retire towards Toledo, losing part of the convoy, with money, which they were conveying to Andalusia. Colonel Astor, with a corps of Constitutional troops, has entered Caceres, and levied a large contribution, and shot several Monks and Priests. The Authorities appointed by the Regency retired.

AX, JULY 13.—We learn from Braga, that on the 9th inst. between five and six in the evening, the Governor of the Castle of Cardona having gone to the town, the Colonel of the Regiment of Siguenza took advantage of his absence to hoist the white flag, and cry "Vive le Roi," in which he was joined by the whole garrison. The Governor hearing a shout so inimical, hastened back towards the Castle, and when he reached its walls, he exclaimed, "Vive la Constitution." The soldiers were at first silent; but a corporal cried out, "Vive notre Colonel," when the cries of "Vive le Roi" being repeated, the Governor, accompanied by the militia, took to flight. On the next day, the uncle of Baron D'Eroles, with the troops blockading the place, joined the garrison.—The reduction of this fort, though small, is of the highest importance to the campaign in Upper Catalonia, which by this event alone will be freed.

MADRID, JULY 16.—An officer has this moment brought the intelligence that a sharp action had taken place between our troops and Gen. Quiroga, who has been completely defeated. General Huber, who commands the vanguard of General Bourck's division, has taken possession of Ferrol, and is at a short distance from Corunna, which, it is said, has shut its gates against Quiroga, and awaits the French General to open them. Yesterday afternoon his Royal Highness the Duke of Angoulême reviewed all the troops of the garrison, French and Spanish. The fine order of this corps has obtained the admiration even of those individuals known for their Constitutional opinions. They will be the first to admit that the tyrants of Cadiz are without hope. Abril, chief of a Constitutional corps, after being routed by the Portuguese cavalry, has fallen into the hands of the brave Merino. He has been sent, with his brother, prisoner to Segovia. All the roads in the kingdom of Grenada are covered with deserters from the ci-devant army of Ballesteros. These unfortunate beings, without food or clothing, inquire after the places occupied by French troops, for the purpose of enrolling themselves under the colours of the King. Ballesteros, with the feeble remains of his army, is wandering among the mountains. It is thought that he is near Las Penas de San Pedro. The Royalist chiefs are in pursuit of him.

JULY 17.—We hear that Sir W. A'Court has received orders from his Government to retire to Gibraltar. It is said that we are masters of Ferrol, and that the inhabitants of Corunna have refused to receive General Quiroga. The squadron holds Cadiz in a state of strict blockade; no sort of vessel can possibly enter. Within these few days, a great number have either been taken or stopped. The revolutionists are reduced to rations. General Huber has entered Galicia. His advanced-guard had a brilliant engagement on the 7th of July, at Navia. He has marched a part of his troops towards Ferrol, whilst he himself goes in the direction of Mondonedo. Desertion is complete in the ranks of the Revolutionists of Galicia. Gen. Bresson, commanding the third Military District, and Colonel Villanouva, have given in their submission, and have presented themselves at General Huber's head-quarters. The two Constitutional Juntas of St. Sebastian and Vittoria have done the same.

There is no doubt that the force of Bourdesoult, which is 16,000 men, including the Royalists, is sufficient for the present to blockade Cadiz; but it is necessary to keep Ballesteros in check, who, after putting Alicant and Carthagena in a state of defence, and, leaving a division of 3000 men on the right of the Xucar, has marched towards Grenada with 8000. Another Constitutional division of 4000 men is in the province of Cuenca; its guerillas extend to Somo-Sierra, the Province of Madrid, and almost to the gates of the capital. The communications between the Portuguese Cabinet and the Regency at Madrid are very frequent, and it seems there is an intention of forming on the banks of the Minho an Expedition to act against the Constitutionalists of Galicia, the command of which, it is said, will be given to Count Amarante.

The Madrid Gazette of the 17th contains a Decree of the Regency for the establishing anniversary honours to the memory of General Elio, who was executed last autumn in Valencia. The same Gazette contains an account of the presentation of the Russian and Prussian Envoys to the Regency, and the speeches which their Excellencies made on the occasion.—Accounts have been received from Port St. Mary of the 13th. The blockade of Cadiz had then begun to be more rigorous. Two vessels that endeavoured to enter with provisions had been sunk by the cannon of the French blockading squadron. It was calculated that in ten or twelve days a bombarding flotilla would be formed for throwing bombs into the city. General Bourdesoult sent word every day a boat with fresh water, vegetables, and meat for the King's table. The present had been accepted without any observation.

The last accounts from Madrid state that General Molitor was marching from Murcia on Grenada. Ballesteros was retiring with 3000 men on St. Rock. The whole of Jaen is freed from the revolutionary yoke.

A despatch from Badalona, dated July 16, states that a third sortie was made from the walls of Barcelona on the evening of the 13th, on two parts of the French line, in two columns. Count Curial sent against the latter column, which consisted of about 1200 men, some companies he had at Gracias; but two battalions soon came up, the 3d of the 32d and the 1st of the 60th. These battalions taking the enemy in flank, soon put them to the rout, and pursued them under the walls of the place, with shouts of "Vive le Roi!" The enemy had about twenty men wounded, while the French had but three.

Letters have been received from Peru, dated 3d March, and also Cusco Gazettes, containing the Royalist official accounts of the late defeat of the Independent Army of Peru, under Gen. Alvarado, who, after his defeat, retired to Iquique, a sea-port to the south of Arica, and belonging to the Province of Atacama, where he was again attacked and defeated by Gen. Ollaneta. In this action the remains of the Independent troops are represented as having been broken, their leader escaping with only a few followers and his Staff. Generals Valdes and Canterac are said to have already left Moquega with nine battalions of infantry and eight squadrons of cavalry, in order to attack Lima. The consequence of this advantage had been, that the whole of the coast from Canete to Iquique had fallen into the hands of the Royalists.

Letters from Andalusia state, that great confusion prevails in Cadiz: the levies of contributions are extravagant, and yet neither the soldiers nor the employés of Government are paid. The people are discontented.

As none of the summonses to the Governors of St. Sebastian or Pampeluna have been listened to, preparations are making for attacking these places in great force. In consequence, several officers of engineers have received orders to repair immediately to these places to commence the siege.

They write from Logrono that the Empecinado has entered Soria, where he has levied a large contribution, to punish the inhabitants for the eagerness with which they received the French and the Royalists. Many of the soldiers of the 20th regiment, that arrived yesterday (they say 56) deserted last night.

GIBRALTAR, JULY 3.—Two Columbian privateer brigs have been cruizing out side the Straits, one them is the President Bolivar, of 18 guns, they have taken several valuable Spanish vessels. The British steam packet, rigged as a three masted schooner, arrived at Cadiz the 1st inst; she was detained by the French squadron for about two hours; it appears she was not allowed to enter that port by the blockading squadron, but her passengers and mail were sent on shore, and she afterwards steered to the eastward.

The States of the Province of Holland opened their session on the 7th inst. The Governor, in his speech, informed the assembly that a plan for draining the Lake of Haarlem and the Bylmeer was under consideration. He concluded by holding out a confident expectation of this great undertaking being accomplished. The Lake of Haarlem, which communicates with the Zuyder Zea by the river Y, is extensive but not deep; it is about fourteen miles long, and from seven to ten broad.

ROME, JUNE 20.—The Palace of Lucien Buonaparte is really sold to his brother Jerome, the Ex-King of Westphalia, for the sum of 150,000 Roman crowns (above 800,000 francs). The furniture which has been carrying to the palace for the last fortnight, its extraordinary beauty and splendour, and the fine situation of the palace, will make it an enchanting abode. Napoleon's mother is, as it were, come to life again; she often appears in public, with her brother the Cardinal, but always in her own carriage, never in that of his Eminence, because she strictly adheres to the Imperial etiquette.—The accounts from Naples say, that the crop of silk has not turned out well, and the prices paid for the finest silk have been very high. The accounts from Sicily are more favourable.

The Emperor of Russia will leave Petersburg the 27th of August. He will be at Moscow on the 12th of September to celebrate his birthday. From thence he will set out to review the different divisions of the army. The Emperor will return to Petersburgh about the middle of October.

ODESSA, JUNE 23.—We have accounts from Constantinople as late as the 13th of this month. On a mere report of a change in the Ministry at St. Petersburgh, four ships from this port were detained at Constantinople, and are not allowed to proceed to the Archipelago, but must return hither. The Divan seemed almost to repent the step it had taken towards a reconciliation, in sending the letter of the Reis Effendi to Count Nesselrode. With respect to Lord Strangford, the Porte is in a very embarrassing situation. While he appears as the opponent of the Greeks, another Englishman, Captain Hamilton, who, as far as we can learn, also negociates in the name of the English Government, has made, in the Archipelago, overtures to the Insurgents, which, if hitherto without success, aim at bringing about an arrangement with the Porte. Lord Strangford affirms that he knows nothing of the object, or even of the existence of those negociations.

SEDUCTION AND ATTEMPTED SUICIDE.—A cause remarkable for its romantic details came before the Sixth Correctional Chamber. The Sieur Azzolari de Bergamo, aged 23, had in 1821 been obliged, in consequence of the political commotions which then agitated Piedmont, to leave Turin, where he studied medicine. On taking refuge in France he fixed his residence at Paris, where he lodged in the house of a locksmith, who had a young and handsome daughter. Azzolari abused the advantages which this situation afforded him, and the young woman became the victim of his seductive arts. The father having discovered the intrigue, reproached the Piedmontese for his conduct, and a quarrel ensued, in the course of which Azzolari hit with such fury the thumb of his host, that the nail came off. After this scene Azzolari carried off his mistress to Versailles, where they lived together for a few days. But destitute of the means of existence, and reduced to the last degree of despair, the two lovers formed the resolution of putting themselves to death. They hesitated between pistols and poison. Deciding at last for the latter, they took each a draught composed of white vitriol infused in water. The medical witnesses proved that this infusion was not of a nature to cause death, and in fact Azzolari and his mistress escaped with some suffering, in consequence of the beverage acting as an emetic. This event, however, led to inquiry, and Azzolari was arrested. The Chamber of Accusation set aside the charge of poisoning and also of abduction, as the girl had completed her 16th year when she followed her seducer. The only charge on which proceedings were founded was the assault on the father. Azzolari was sentenced to one year's imprisonment, and 50 francs fine.—Journal des Debats.

Some reports reached town on Thursday from Liverpool and Plymouth, announcing that a severe action had been fought on the 15th and 16th inst. at Corunna, between the French under Bourck, and the Spanish Constitutionalists under Quiroga, and Sir Robert Wilson, in which the enemy had been repulsed with considerable loss, though not sufficient to prevent him from renewing the attack the following day. Sir Robert Wilson, according to some of the letters, had been slightly wounded as early as the 15th, though it appears that he was still able to retain the command. Col. Light had been severely wounded; but comparatively few of the Constitutionalists had fallen as they were protected by the walls of the town, whilst the French being in a more exposed situation, are reported to have lost between 7 and 800 men in killed and wounded. According to some reports, Quiroga had retired with 5000 men to make a diversion on the flank of the enemy, leaving Sir Robert Wilson with 3000 men to maintain Corunna.

Plymouth Dock, which is two miles from Plymouth, has a population of above 33,000 inhabitants, exclusive of the navy and army. At a meeting of the inhabitants, held at the Town Hall last week, it was resolved to alter the present name of the town to one more indicative of its rising wealth and importance.

The Antelope troop ship at Chatham is ordered to be fitted for the reception of 300 convicts, who are to proceed to Bermuda, to be employed at that settlement. It is supposed in future a number of the convicts will be sent annually to that place.

The number of persons for trial at the Assizes, which will commence at Bury on Friday next, is less than has been remembered for many years—there being only five prisoners at present in the county gaol, and three for the liberty of Bury.

IRELAND.

On Saturday last, an immense assemblage of rank and fashion crowded to see the Crown placed on the Pillar in commemoration of his Majesty's visit to this country. All the vessels in the harbour were dressed, including the Active frigate, the William and Mary yacht, the Shamrock, the St. George steam-packet, and many others. At one o'clock a royal salute was fired from the shipping (with their yards manned,) which was answered by the neighbouring forts. Shortly afterwards Lord Combermere (Commander of the Forces), with his Lady, and many Officers of distinction, arrived and were conducted to an awning prepared for the occasion, where they were received by a party of the 23d Welch Fusileers, Admiral Lord Colville, Capt. King, Capt. Malcolm, and a great number of Naval and Military Officers. At two o'clock the masons commenced raising the Crown to its destination, where it was placed in about 35 minutes. The Royal Standard was then hoisted to the top of the column as a signal for the shipping, which was followed by another grand salute of artillery. On the south side of the column the following inscription runs from top to bottom:—"Erected to perpetuate the recollection of the King's visit to this part of his Dominions, and that on the 3rd of September, 1821, his Majesty did, in person, name this Asylum Harbour the Royal Harbour of George the Fourth, and embarked from hence on that day."

The following movements are spoken of in the military circles:—The 23d Fusileers from Dublin to proceed to Gibraltar, to replace the 75th Regiment; the 79th from Naas to succeed the 23d in Dublin; the 84th from Templemore to replace the 79th at Naas; the 30th to proceed to Templemore.—Dublin Evening Post.

At twelve o'clock last night, at about eight miles this side of Limerick, on the new line of road to Tipperary, a house was burned by incendiaries; it contained a family of seven persons, the owner a poor cripple with a wooden leg; and had it not been for a lighted tarf, (which had burned through the thatch,) falling on a woman in bed, by which she was awakened, the entire family would have been destroyed, as well as the house; all their wearing apparel and little articles of furniture were burned to ashes, and they were themselves seen wandering about the roads early this morning in a wretched condition, having no habitation to retire to.—We regret to have to state, upon unquestionable authority, that before dusk yesterday evening Mr. Andrew Nowlan, a proctor, who this season leased the tythes from the Rev. Mr. Sutton, was shot through the body by some miscreants, while on his way from the neighbourhood of Ballyporeen, county Tipperary, to his residence at Kilworth, county Cork. Unfortunately the wound is mortal. It appears that Mr. Nowlan was a man of very good character, and has been a dealer in butter for many years.—Cork Advertizer.

The men who lately committed a murder in the county of Clare, upon a person named Ryan, have been, through the activity of the police, apprehended in the following curious manner:—A party of the police followed the foot-prints of the murderers from the impression upon the ground:—one of them wore new brogues or strong shoes, the soles of which were thickly set with nails; and they observed the vacancy left by the head of one nail being wanting in one of them. This track they pursued to the ruffian's house, where they took him into custody with the identical shoes yet wet upon his feet. They immediately measured the shoe with the impression upon the fatal spot, and found it to answer in every respect, even to the absent nail. The other man, they observed, had on but one shoe. This track they also followed, and actually took him into custody in his own house, having on a wet and a dry shoe! This circumstantial evidence, we are glad to say, has been strengthened by the identification of both the prisoners by the family of the unfortunate victim. Both the above have been committed to gaol, and the family of Ryan has been brought into town for safety.—Waterford Paper.

CORK ASSIZES.—Murder.—Edmond Riordan was tried for the murder of Joanna Connor. Joanna Egan remembered the 5th of April last, when the deceased was killed; she saw the prisoner beating his wife with a large stick. Joanna Connor came to the door, and asked him if he had a mind to kill her, he said he had, and her too, and he gave her a blow with a stick on the head, and then took out a bayonet, put it to witness's breast, and swore he would kill her if she said a word. The deceased then came inside the door, and the prisoner gave her another blow in the left side. The deceased, Riordan, and his wife, then went out, and witness remained in the house, but in a moment, hearing a scream, she ran out also, and saw the deceased on her knee against the wall, she was bleeding and sighed, but never spoke after. The prisoner was walking away towards his own house, and witness threw a stone after him, he had the stick and lapsed in his hands at the time.—Julia Donovan confirmed this evidence. She added, that the prisoner then came out after his wife and struck her, and the deceased then said—"At the hazard of my life you shan't do that again," and seized hold of the stick. He said—"I will, and you too," and stabbed her with the bayonet at the moment. The deceased staggered a step or two, and said faintly—"Oh, you villain, you villain!" and never spoke after. She could not say whether the prisoner was intoxicated. He was in a great passion.—Dr. Sharpe stated that he had examined the body of the deceased at the inquest, and had no doubt that the wound, which appeared to have been inflicted with a bayonet, was the cause of her death. It was at the left side of the neck, under the collar bone. She had other marks of violent blows from a heavy blunt instrument.—The prisoner himself declared, that nothing but being drunk would have induced him to commit the act, which he did not deny doing, and he therefore appealed to the merciful consideration of the Jury and the Court. At his request a boy named Berkley, was examined, who deposed that the prisoner had drank a large quantity of porter and spirits in his father's house on that day. Baron Penefather, in charging the Jury, adverted to the questions put by the Jury, and the evidence produced with respect to the state of intoxication of the prisoner at the moment the act was committed, and which instead of being, as they seemed to think, a palliative, was in fact an aggravation of the crime, in the eye of the law and of morality. He then expatiated at length and much feeling on the circumstances of the case, pointing out to the Jury how far it might be possible to reduce the criminality in their opinion so far as to find a verdict of manslaughter, and how far they might be bound to consider and pronounce it an act of deliberate murder. After the Jury had remained some time in deliberation, they returned their verdict—Not Guilty of murder, but Guilty of Manslaughter.—Sentenced to be transported for life.

DROGHEDA ASSIZES.—John Hatch was indicted for the wilful murder of John Byrne, by inflicting a wound on his side with a bayonet.—Peter Mathews stated, that on the evening of the 5th of April, he saw two countrymen standing in Shop-street, one had his arm across the other's shoulder; they were in good humour. Two policemen came down the street, one of whom seized one of the countrymen, who resisted. The policeman then drew his bayonet, and fixed it on his musket, and proceeded to drag the countryman. The other countryman interfered to prevent him; the second policeman then fixed on his bayonet. Christopher M'Kenna asked policeman was he going to commit murder? Policeman replied no; are you going to rescue him? In a scuffle, policeman, countryman, and M'Kenna fell. A man took up policeman's musket and broke it. Policeman got up and ran towards the bridge. The other policeman was then surrounded by a crowd, and having unscrewed the bayonet from his musket, endeavoured to keep the people off. In a few minutes Byrne, the deceased, came up the street to the place where witness was standing. Witness said to him, "John, don't go near them, for there will be murder." Byrne replied, "I'll make peace if I can." Deceased then went towards the crowd. At this time Hatch came up the street, and finding a gun and bayonet lying on the ground, took them up and down the street with them down the street. Byrne had his hands on a countryman's shoulder, removing him from the crowd, when Hatch returned and stabbed him in the left side with the bayonet which he had fixed on the gun. Deceased staggered and fell opposite the house of Patrick King, a publican. He was brought into the house, and died in two minutes.—Another witness confirmed this testimony.—The Judge here observed, that there was a clear case of manslaughter made out, and that it was unnecessary to proceed with the further examination of witnesses.—The prisoner received an excellent character from the Rev. Mr. Turner and the Rev. Bigoe Henzell; the latter gentleman said he had come from Cheltenham, for the sole purpose of testifying to the quiet and unexceptionable conduct of Hatch and his family, for a term of 40 years that he had known them.—After a charge from the Judge, the Jury retired, and in 20 minutes returned with a verdict of "Guilty of Manslaughter," recommending the prisoner to mercy, on consideration of his good character.—The Judge said he would have great pleasure in attending to their recommendation.—Hatch was then sentenced to one month's imprisonment.

The murderer of Major Going was landed on Thursday at the London Docks, from the ship St. Lawrence, from Quebec. He was heavily ironed, and in the custody of a party of the 60th Regiment.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

PALACE COURT.

SUMMARY.—John Bell v. Isaac Newton.—This was an action brought by the plaintiff against the defendant, of the "Central Mart," to recover the sum of 100l. partly on a Promissory note, and partly for the value of a house belonging to the plaintiff, and let at a rent of 30l. per week. J. G. Etherington stated that he was in the service of the plaintiff, and knew of the occupation of the house at the corner of Southampton-street, Strand, who styled it the Central Mart. The Duke of Bedford was landlord, and it was rented by Mr. Bell. Mr. Emerson proved the hand-writing of Mr. Newton to the promissory note, which was for 10l. at two months, and given for rent owing in part. The defendant put a plea on the record, but no defence was offered. The Judge (B. Morrice, Esq.) having summed up the case, the Jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff—Damages 100l. 9s. 3d.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS' COURT.

WEDNESDAY.—John Knight was opposed by Mr. George Wilson, who pleaded his own cause. Mr. Wilson said, that about six months ago he was induced to give credit to the insolvent to the amount of 20l. after having paid prompt for 15l. worth of goods previously delivered. The agreement was, that bills should be given for the unpaid delivery of the goods. The present complaint) at three and four months after the subject of the present witness accidentally met him with a cart full of furniture, and on making inquiry as to his extraordinary conduct relative to the removal of his property and the non-payment of the bill, his answers were so vague and unsatisfactory that he strongly suspected him, and had him soon after arrested. The Chief Commissioner observed, that the young man at the bar as a petitioner for relief, had shewn by his conduct that he was not at all times a fit person to enjoy it. It appeared to the Court to be a deliberately concerted plan to defraud, hence they did order and adjudge, that the petitioner be confined within the walls of the Marshalsea Prison for 10 calendar months.

ASSIZES.

SURREY.—Thomas Farrage was indicted for assaulting Elizabeth Lucas on the King's highway, at Croydon, on the 24th of April, and stealing from her in fear, and stealing from her a basket, containing some articles of wearing apparel.—The prisoner upon the arraignment pleaded Guilty, after being repeatedly urged to take the chance of a trial. It appeared, that since the robbery the prosecutrix had been in a state of derangement, which was supposed in consequence of the fright which the attack upon her had occasioned.—Mr. Serjeant Onslow, after looking into the depositions, was of opinion that there were no circumstances of violence upon which would warrant him in passing the sentence of death; and as there was strong reason to believe that the prisoner had committed the robbery under the pressure of want, he should recommend a commutation of his punishment from death to 12 months imprisonment, to be held labour, in the House of Correction.

Bridget Hobbs was indicted for a similar offence in robbing Joanna Bromley Scott, at Lambeth, on the 8th of July, and stealing from her person a reticule, containing a sovereign and other monies.—This prisoner also pleaded Guilty.—Judgment of death was recorded, but the Learned Judge said he would recommend a commutation of the sentence to transportation for life, there being no circumstances of violence disclosed upon the depositions.

Lawson v. Lucett.—This was an action to recover a penalty of 100l. from the defendant, for having, as the keeper of a private receptacle for lunatics, received into his house a patient without a certificate from a physician, surgeon, or apothecary, contrary to the statute 14 Geo. III. c. 49. s. 27. The action was brought in the name of the Clerk of the Peace for the County, who is by the statute declared to be Secretary to the Commissioners for Private Madhouses. The defendant keeps a private asylum for lunatics at Ewell, and was duly licensed to receive patients. In the autumn of last year a medical Gentleman having been afflicted with a brain fever, was admitted into the defendant's house. On the 3d of January last, Mr. Hudson, one of the visiting Magistrates of the county, accompanied by Dr. Morrison, the visiting Physician, and the Clerk of the Peace, called at the defendant's house to make their report, and desired to see his patients. Two Gentlemen were introduced, one of whom was the patient alluded to. The defendant was asked whether he had obtained the usual certificate for the latter, and whether he had made a return to the College of Physicians that he had received such a patient. Both these questions the defendant answered in the negative; and being asked why he had omitted to comply with these requisites, he said he had done so out of delicacy to the gentleman, who, being a medical man, might be prejudiced by making such a return. The defence set up was, that the gentleman was not a patient of the defendant, but had been merely received into his house as a boarder and lodger, for the benefit of country air. The gentleman had been attacked for a very short time with a brain fever, from which he had perfectly recovered. He was not treated as a patient; he was perfect master of his actions, and even visited some of his patients whilst he was lodging at the defendant's house. Evidence was called to confirm these allegations, but the Counsel for the plaintiff contended that the Jury were bound to find a verdict for the plaintiff. The defendant's language and demeanour at the time he was questioned by the visiting Magistrate and Physician, demonstrated that the unfortunate gentleman alluded to had been received into the house as a patient.—Mr. Baron Graham summed up the evidence for the Jury, and left it to them to determine whether the case opened for the plaintiffs had been established in evidence.—The Jury found their verdict for the plaintiff, for one penalty of 100l.

James Tomlinson was indicted for feloniously embezzling at Wandsworth, the sum of 15l. the property of his master, Mr. Wm. B. Luttly, Esq. attorney. The prisoner was a clerk in the employment of Mr. Luttly, and in June last he was employed to collect half a year's rent for a tenant of Mr. Luttly. The prisoner received the money, made a false entry in his account book, and absconded. This led to suspicion of his honesty. His accounts were examined, and it was discovered that he had embezzled the money in question.—The case being clearly established, the prisoner was found Guilty, but was recommended to mercy on account of his previous good character, both by the Jury and the prosecutor. He was sentenced to three months imprisonment in the House of Correction.

STAFFORD.—Joseph Garrett, a farmer and butcher at Westbromwich, was indicted for manslaughter, in killing Isaac Whitehouse, by forcing him into the canal.—On the 13th of March last, the deceased, who was an old man of 70, climbed over a rail into a field of the prisoner, to cut off an angle, and so to shorten his journey. The prisoner overtook him as he had just reached the rail at the opposite side of the enclosure, took him violently, and in the struggle forced him over the rail upon a towing path of six or eight feet wide, which lay between the fence and the canal. He then shook him again on the towing path, and at length forced him into the water. While he was there, Garrett called to Horton (the witness) to come and take the old man out, but Horton refused saying, "He had business of his own to attend, and as Garrett had put him in, he must bring him out himself." Lawrence (another witness) came in a boat to his assistance, and in three or four minutes after he was taken on shore, but he was then dead. When found, he still grasped a bundle of provisions which he held in his hand.—The prisoner being called on for his defence, stated that he should have gone to the water to the assistance of the deceased had he not been unable to swim.—Two respectable neighbours were called, who gave the prisoner an excellent character.—Mr. Baron Hullock summed up the evidence, and left the Jury to decide, on the conflicting testimony, whether the death of Whitehouse arose from accident, or from the act of the prisoner.—The Jury, after some deliberation, returned a verdict of Guilty.—Mr. Baron Hullock addressed the prisoner in terms of severe admonition, declaring that the verdict met with his entire concurrence, and that the offence differed very slightly from that of murder. He sentenced him to be imprisoned in the county gaol for nine calendar months, in addition to three months during which he has been in custody.—The capital convicts, William Bibb, for highway robbery, and Thomas Poyser and William Poysery, for horse-stealing, were placed at the bar, and sentence of death recorded against them. As the sentence was not formally passed, it will not, of course, be carried into execution.

Bowley v. Taylor.—This was an action for not delivering a trunk. The plaintiff's case was, that she lived with her mother, and in consequence of some difference with her step-father, quitted the house in May last, and repaired to Mr. Jones's, a friend's house, at a place called Pipe's-gate. While there, intending to go to Newcastle to obtain a situation, she packed up her wearing-apparel and other articles in a trunk, and requested it might be taken to the defendant, who is a coachmaker, and occasionally acts in the character of a common-carrier, by taking boxes to Newcastle. It was directed to the plaintiff at Miss Hodges's, at Newcastle. The defendant said he knew her perfectly well, and would take it. In the cart in which the defendant put this trunk, Mrs. Brassington, the mother of the plaintiff, took her passage, and thus became acquainted with the fact, that this trunk which had her daughter's name on it, was about to go to Newcastle in this cart, and on that she possessed herself of it, the defendant's servant, who was driving, permitting her to take it away. The plaintiff brought this action for the breach of duty.—Mr. Woodcock, the articled clerk of an attorney, lodged at Mr. Brassington's, and paid attentions to Miss Barker, who was under age, which gave umbrage to the parents, and they intimated a wish he should change his premises. He left, but still kept up an intimacy with Miss Barker, and frequently saw her without the knowledge of her parents. One morning in June last, her mother missed her, she looked for her clothes, and found every thing gone. Struck by her daughter's absence, and fearing the cause, she went to Newcastle; on and he permitted her to ride. There she saw a box directed to Miss Barker, by her daughter, and without having the least care about the articles, she wished, by detaining the box, to compel her daughter's return. Very frequently, said Mr. Pearson, when a lady has eloped, she has gone without any clothes, and the lover has been satisfied with gaining her person; but no man forgot his original calling, and Mr. Woodcock, the articled clerk of an attorney, in all his golden visions of love, still found a leisure moment to dream of suits. Skilful she must prove under his instructions; he had before taught her the art of love, now he instructed her in the science of law. Mr. Taunton, in reply, said they had nothing to do with any thing about Mr. Woodcock; the simple question was between Miss Barker and the defendant, for a breach of duty. If she did run away to throw herself into the arms of her lover, how happened it she had kept single from that time to the present. If Mrs. Brassington had stopped the clothes before her daughter left the house, it would have been difficult to have maintained this action; but having quitted it, and under the circumstances in which they came into the defendant's possession, it did not lie on him to dispute her property. Mr. Justice Park said he felt so anxious to preserve the relation which should ever subsist between parent and child, that he had endeavoured some time ago to induce the parties to come to an understanding. He was sorry to have family matters brought into a Court of Justice, and thought the plaintiff had been ill advised. If he had been the parent he should have acted in the same manner. They had now agreed to withdraw a Juror. He should have summed up pell-mell for the defendant, as the direction given to him was to take care of the trunk, if nobody came for it; and the mother did come.

HUNTINGDON.—William Adams stood indicted for having feloniously stolen from the house of Mr. Lindsell, corn-dealer of St. Ives, seven country bank notes of the value of 10l. each; 40 country bank notes of the value of 1l. each, and 15 country bank notes of the value of 5l. each; also 12 sovereigns, 16 crowns, 237 half-crowns, 692 shillings, 313 sixpences, and 120 halfpence. Mr. Lindsell stated that the prisoner was his clerk, and having suspicions of his honesty, he, with his female servant, examined his desk, and in it found a red morocco pocket-book containing notes to the amount of 185l. and in a bag 26l. of different pieces, all in silver. In another room they found crowns, sovereigns, sixpences, &c. to the amount of 52l. altogether, all laid on a shelf in a cupboard. On apprehending the prisoner they found on his person, two keys, one of which opened the cupboard, and the other opened the desk. The prosecutor's female servant confirmed his testimony.—The Rev. Mr. Tillard said—I am a Magistrate of this county. When the prisoner was brought before me I asked him what he had to say to the charge. He then made the disclosure which I have here in writing. This witness and Mr. Lindsell were cross-examined as to the circumstances under which this disclosure was made. They declared they held out neither hope nor threats to the prisoner. The written statement was then put in evidence. It was a confession of having taken the money to the amount of 221l. On this his Lordship put the case to the Jury, who without hesitation found the prisoner—Guilty.

NOTTINGHAM.—Hughes v. Emmes, and others.—This was an action of damages. Mr. Clark said, the plaintiff was the daughter of a respectable person of London. The defendants were the proprietors of the Highflyer Coach, running between London and York, by which coach the plaintiff was a passenger on the 30th of July, 1822, and she brought this action to recover a compensation for the injury she had received by the overturning of that coach, through the negligence of the defendants' servants. On the day the accident occurred, the young lady was coming down from London, to take a situation in Miss Taylor's seminary at Bawtry. Miss Hughes was an outside passenger. On their arrival at Newark, between one and two o'clock in the morning, the coach stopped to change horses. While the ostler was bringing out the fresh horses the coachman and guard were in the house, and when the horses were put to, the ostler, instead of continuing to stand at their heads, placed himself by one of the wheelers, and began playing tricks. The guard at this moment was assisting a gentleman into the coach, and before he had seated himself the horses set off at full speed, and on their reaching a sharp corner in Newark the coach was overturned with a dreadful crash; all the outside passengers were thrown off, and one gentleman was so much injured that he died the next day. The plaintiff was pitched with dreadful velocity against a post, and her jawbone broken and several teeth knocked out. She was hurled beneath the luggage, which fell on her, and when lifted up she was speechless, and could only make herself understood by pointing to her pocket, where a letter was found by which her connexions were discovered. Mr. Baron Garrow said, the case stands thus:—soon after the arrival of the coach the care of it is given to a man who does not act like one who is sober; and for want of due care, the horses set off and the coach is overturned, by which accident one gentleman lost his life, another threw himself off at the hazard of being killed on the spot, and the plaintiff was reduced to that deplorable condition as to be unable to state who she was except by signs. Let us look at the condition of this young lady. Miss Taylor, the head of a respectable seminary for young ladies, sees Miss Hughes in London, and having satisfied herself of her abilities, engages her as an assistant in her school; she goes to that situation, but in such a state that she must be considered rather as an incumbrance than otherwise, and at the end of ten months after, she leaves the place incapable of attending to her duties. Under these distressing circumstances I think you are bound to make an ample compensation, and to consider the situation in which she was, and in the which she has been cast down by the negligence of the defendants. The Jury after being absent from the box several hours, gave a verdict for the plaintiff—Damages 525l.

YORK.—The King against Alex. Nowell, Esq.—This was a criminal information filed by Mathew Wilson, Esq. a Magistrate of the West Riding, against Alexander Nowell, Esq. Lieutenant of Underly-hall, county of Westmorland, for contriving and maliciously intending to do him great bodily harm, and for writing and sending to him several malicious and unlawful letters, directly tending to a breach of the peace, and meaning to provoke him to fight a duel. The defendant resided near the prosecutor, and it was stated, that being very fond of shooting in the season, he wished to obtain permission to shoot upon a particular manor of the Duke of Devonshire's, but did not succeed in his application. He then sought the same privilege upon another manor, but with the same result—in both cases Mr. Wilson was most anxious to facilitate the defendant's object. There was another manor subsequently mentioned, and Mr. Wilson thought he should find no difficulty; as Mr. Nowell's cousin, Mr. Heber, M.P. for the University of Oxford, was joint lord of it with another. Mr. Wilson subsequently finding, by a letter from Mrs. Robinson, who was nioce to the defendant, that he had abandoned the intention of applying for it, made the application for himself, as it was one he long contemplated, having property close adjoining the manor. These proceedings produced several letters from the defendant, which formed grounds for the present prosecution, and which it was alleged tended to a breach of the peace.—Mr. Justice Bayley, in summing up the evidence, said, that the single question for their consideration was, whether these letters of the defendant's had a tendency to a breach of the peace, for into the nature of the provocation, whatever the defendant may have supposed it to be, they had not the power to enter.—The Jury found the defendant guilty.

William Meade and Robert Bett stood indicted for the wilful murder of James Law, farmer, at Burniston, near Scarborough, on the night of the 13th, or morning of the 14th of February last. The evidence in support of the prosecution proved that Law, Dodsworth, Watson, and several other persons had been to Scarborough, and some of them were in liquor; when they reached Burniston, Law was a little before; and witness began to sing; the others sung stopped before the house, and witness began to sing; the others sung as well as they could; none of them molested the house; there is a causeway which separates the house from the road; they did not alight from their horses; thinks he had nothing in his hand, and does not know whether the others had sticks or whips, or any thing in their hands; they used no other expressions except the words of the song; it was a song concerning Meade's perjury; witness saw either a gun or a pistol fired from Meade's house, five or six minutes after they began to sing; he looked at the window because he heard the glass fall on the causeway, not before it was fired; he heard nothing said from the house; after the fire Law rode away; they all went with him; Law said he was shot; they went to John Dodsworth, which was nearer to Burniston than Law's house; Law said Wm. Meade shot him. Two female witnesses who slept in Meade's house were examined. One of them, Elizabeth Jennison, was awake about two o'clock on that night; first heard the sound of horses' feet on the high road; it did not approach near the house; she next heard singing; she believed the horses' feet were at the time opposite her part of the house, which was before they came to Meade's; she heard one voice, but could not distinguish the words; there was no exterior attack upon the house; she heard a voice within say, shout, shout him. (She now understood the words to be what the Counsel meant by shoot) she heard glass fall, and immediately the report of a pistol; she heard a voice in Meade's chamber say, John Dodsworth is very drunk; she heard Meade say, that if they had not broke his windows he should not have molested them, but then he thought it was time.—John Stockdale, one of the constables of Scarborough, said, that he demanded admission into Meade's house, on the morning of the 14th of February—but no answer was given. The door was afterwards broke open. Meade was getting out of bed when they ran up stairs. He asked with apparent surprise what the matter was? When told a man was shot out of his chamber, he asked, what man? Witness answered, James Law. The prisoner was then handcuffed—and witness found powder and ball in a box in his room. They asked the prisoner for the pistol with which James Law was shot. Prisoner answered, that if they would take off his handcuffs, he would find it for them. They did so, and the prisoner produced two pistols. Dr. William Holland, physician at Scarborough, attended Law; he had a wound in his back from a pistol ball, which entered over the blade bone. He sent for a surgeon. Law died on the Friday following the 14th of February. After his death the ball was found in his throat, close to the spine. The surgeon who attended gave a similar statement. Mr. John Edmonds, a farmer in the neighbourhood, saw Meade, the prisoner, at Scarborough, on the 15th of February. Meade asked how poor James (meaning Law) was? and was told he was very bad, and not likely to recover. The prisoner, Meade, said, "I hope he will!" and seemed desirous to have Law's forgiveness. —— Haxby, the constable, confirmed the last witness's testimony, referring to the anxiety of Meade for Law's forgiveness, and that he promised if Law forgave him, to do something for him at the approaching trial in York for the riots.—The prisoners declared their innocence, and stated that they were not influenced by malice towards any person. The Court adjourned till the following day, and then several witnesses were examined for the defence. John Dobson, who had been a witness for the Crown in certain Exchequer prosecutions, stated that he had been attacked at Scarborough by a mob, on the 13th of February, the day preceding that on which Mr. Law was shot, treated with the utmost cruelty, and almost murdered, and that Law had said to him, if his friend Meade had been with him, neither of them should have returned alive. Mr. Henry Richardson was a farmer at Ayton; he corroborated the account given of the barbarous treatment of the last witness, by the mob at Scarborough. Among other indignities offered to Dobson, he was tied to a ladder and paraded through the town; other witnesses spoke to the same effect. The Jury retired for about twenty minutes, and found Meade guilty of Manslaughter, and Bett Not Guilty.

POLICE.

GUILDHALL.—On Wednesday, David Warren, one of the Bow-street patrole, was placed at the bar, and his cutlass and staff laid on it, charged with an outrageous exertion of his authority. G. Mulford, a hackney-coachman, said he observed the prisoner, on Tuesday, flourishing about him, and very much intoxicated, at the foot of Blackfriars' Bridge. He first stopped, and insisted upon searching a glass-coach, and scarcely had the driver got clear of him, than he stopped a little girl carrying two bundles of dirty linen. She told him it was only clothes going to be washed; but although she showed him the washing bill, he insisted on examining them, and handled her so roughly that the witness interfered, saying, that if he was an officer he ought not to use the child so. The prisoner instantly struck him violently with his staff, and repeated his blows. Wyatt, a coalheaver, also said he attempted to reason with him, and received a violent blow in the mouth. A mob came round, the prisoner was overpowered, handcuffed, and taken to the Compter. He made no defence, only observing he recollected nothing of the circumstance. He was ordered to find bail, and a copy of the depositions to be forwarded to Bow-street.

MARLBOROUGH-STREET.—On Wednesday Stanley Goddard was charged with riot and assault, under the following circumstances:—Mrs. Penelope Goddard, widow of the late Mr. Steel, who established the Navy List known by that name, stated, that after the death of her husband, Mr. Steel, who left her in possession of a large independence amounting to many thousands, she had the misfortune to marry the present defendant. He squandered away the whole of her property and then deserted her, leaving her totally destitute of all means of subsistence, with three young children to provide for. Unable longer to procure food for her children, she placed two of them in St. Mary-le-bone and one in St. Giles's workhouse. On Tuesday evening about six o'clock, as Mrs. Goddard was passing through Fleet-street, she met her husband. He not content with calling her by opprobrious epithets, collected a large crowd about her, and employed a parcel of butchers' boys and others from Fleet-market, to pursue her along Bridge-street, hooting after her. An old gentleman of the name of Fitzgerald met her near the Bridge in this distressing situation, and determined at once to rescue her from the fury of the excited mob. He accordingly hurried her into a boat, in which he accompanied her, and rowed off with all speed towards Westminster. Mr. Goddard as promptly manned another boat, and, accompanied by three of his associates, followed the course of Mr. Fitzgerald's boat, calling out the whole way along the river to the different watermen and others to stop them. Mr. Fitzgerald, however, kept a head of the enemy, landed his charge in safety at White-hall stairs, and took the precaution of depositing Mrs. Goddard in the settling-house at the Horse Guards, under the care of some soldiers, while he procured a constable, took Mr. Goddard, and lodged him in St. James's watch-house, where he remained all night.—The Magistrate called on Mr. Goddard to account for his extraordinary conduct. He launched out into violent language towards his wife, whom he represented to be a common street walker. The Magistrate reproved him for this line of defence; and said that as he had no letter to offer, he should find good bail to answer for his conduct. The defendant said he should procure no bail, and he was committed to prison.—The parish officers who had warrants against him were in the office, and very happy to see him there.

WORSHIP-STREET.—On Thursday Fishwick Hawkesley was charged with being a deserter from the 58th Regiment of Foot.—The prisoner said he had served nearly six years in the 2d Dragoon Guards, in which reg. he always maintained a good character. He had been in the 58th Regiment only six weeks, when, to his own disgrace, he absented himself. His hope was that he might be allowed to go into some regiment abroad, where he would endeavour to retrieve his character. He entreated the Magistrate would take notice of his wish to the Secretary at War. Mr. Twyford promised to do so, and the prisoner was committed to the House of Correction, to await the orders of the Secretary at War.

BOW-STREET.—On Wednesday, a repectable and interesting female applied to Mr. Minshull for his assistance, in the recovery of her daughter, aged 19, who had eloped from her mother's residence at Chichester, in Sussex, with a stranger, and she feared for the purpose of seduction; she stated that she was a dress-maker, and the industry of her daughter was her principal support. In answer to a question from the Magistrate, she said her husband was dead, and that till now she had always found her daughter obedient. Mr. Minshull, on the applicant stating that she did not exactly know where her daughter was secreted, but believed somewhere in Bond-street, regretted his inability to render her service, as if an officer was to accompany her in a search, he perhaps might break the peace instead of keeping it. Here the unfortunate mother burst into tears. Ultimately the Magistrate directed enquiries to be made, and upon a discovery, promised his assistance; upon which the disconsolate parent, thanking his Worship, withdrew.

Sharkell, 11, Johnson's-court, Fleet-street, by whom, and by all Newsmen, orders are received.

A MONDAY'S EDITION, containing the LATEST NEWS, the STOCK LIST, the LONDON MARKETS, and the STATE OF THE COUNTRY MARKETS by that Morning's Post, is published at Three o' Clock.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, JULY 27.

THE latest intelligence received from Spain arrived on Thursday at Liverpool, and was brought by the Brig Margaret, Capt. WILLIAMSON, after a passage of seven days from Corunna. CAPTAIN WILLIAMSON left that place on the 15th inst. and he states that the French had invested Corunna with four thousand five hundred men, and had commenced bombarding it. The amount of the Spanish force was estimated at six thousand men, militia included. SIR ROBERT WILSON, who had the command, had fortified the city, and was determined to defend it to the last—at least such is the intelligence the Captain brings. The City was, it is said, supplied with provisions for six months. A CAPTAIN TAYLOR came home in the same vessel with despatches, with which he departed for London.

Another (Foreign) vessel L'Atreveda, Capt. CORTIENO, arrived at Bristol on Friday. She left Corunna on the 18th, three days later than the Margaret, and reports that up to that period the attempts of the French had been repulsed with considerable loss, and the advanced troops were retreating.

With respect to the movements of the French, it is understood, and on pretty good authority, that they were to retire across the Ebro and to act on the defensive in that quarter. The heavy artillery will invest the strong positions in that line. Should the differences between the contending parties in Spain not be accommodated, the DUKE D'ANGOULEME will withdraw the troops from before Cadiz. There are strong dissensions between the Royalists themselves, as well as with the Cortes. A letter from Madrid says, "the violent party are anxious to negociate with the moderate party of the Cortes—they find no support in the DUKE D'ANGOULEME or his adherents—they rather seek to save the King's life, by giving favourable terms to the former. The supporters of arbitrary power are averse to treat with the rebels in Cadiz. The fact is that delay bears heavily on the French finances, and that power must of necessity shortly join the advocates of arbitrary despotism, or leave the contending parties to settle matters with the Cortes as they please."

It is stated that the 20th Light Corps shewed symptoms of mutiny at Bayonne. Fifty one deserted when MARSHAL LAURISTON refused permission to them to join the campaign in Spain.

FRANCE would never have been revolutionized—at least would never have been made the scene of such bloody and cruel persecution as arose out of the revolution—had its Constituent Assembly been composed of men really devoted to the interests of the people and their fellow-countrymen. Unfortunately for that country and the interests of human nature, for the last thirty years, the whole direction of this formidable irruption upon established authority fell into the hands of men who were sophists by profession, and adepts in all the intricacies of a crooked and tortuous policy—we mean LAWYERS—a profession, which, bright and elevated as are the examples in our own history of men who have shaken off their professional trammels when higher objects claimed their exertions as patriots, is necessarily subjected to an influence ruinous and destructive to all the higher motives of human action. A man who is in the habit of exerting his energies to disprove one day what he has maintained the day before—who is to endow what he knows to be vicious with the attributes of virtue—and to shame innocency and integrity out of countenance at a stipulated price from the purse of his client or employer, cannot be supposed to be especially qualified by habit to controul or conduct the political councils of a great country upon any high or elevated notions of so important a trust. We repeat there are great and splendid exceptions to this general induction, in the present as well as past times—but these are men whose principles and education have been extraneous of their profession—not formed or founded on it—not so hardened and confirmed in the practice of the courts as to consider victory and not conviction the object of every discussion of interests, whether of a public or private nature.

To the prevalent league of Lawyers in the ranks of opposition—and in the conduct of the Whig Press—may be traced that bold and audacious sophistry which is fast tending to undermine the civil and ecclesiastical establishments of the country, and that utter disregard and contempt of consistency, which has perverted the genuine principles of our Whig ancestors into a jacobinical faction, friendly only to the enemies, and hostile to every sincere and loyal adherent to the interests of his country.

We never talk without a meaning—we have not space nor leisure for abstract reasoning, except where we find it necessary to shew the tendency of positive facts and positive acts—we last week gave a pretty fair specimen of lawyer-like justice, in Mr. Lawyer BROUGHAM'S contemptuous attack upon the character of an unfortunate and calumniated young woman—and upon the poverty of her father!—we are this week drawn again to the subject by the conduct of another lawyer, one WILLIAMS—the man, we believe, for we know nothing about him—who was hired under BROUGHAM to support the cause of her late Majesty QUEEN CAROLINE—and the vituperator of the venerable LORD ELDON, in a brief, elaborated in the House of Commons.

This person, who—if we are correct in our man—was among the foremost to excite the mob of London—nay, as his master, BROUGHAM, said, "reckless of consequences," to call down the vengeance of the people upon the Government, for producing witnesses against "her most gracious Majesty" from among servants, attendants, and waiting-maids, is found upon a cause (relating to BURTON'S insurance, at the York Assizes) in which his honourable and consistent Whig opponent, or rather "learned friend," MR. SCARLETT, presumes to throw some strongish imputations upon MR. WILLIAMS'S witnesses, who, as boxers, bankrupt attornies, waiters, and all, or the greater part, residentiary inmates of a jail, might fairly be subjected to the facetious imputations of an opposing lawyer—But no!—the sensitive delicacy of MR. WILLIAMS is wounded—he forgets or abandons the political compact—he is deaf to the manly contempt of BROUGHAM himself, who had so happily proved that innocence clothed in rags was a fit subject for merriment and contempt—he loses sight of all that "delicious descant" upon plebeian witnesses in the "GREAT CAUSE," and abuses his "learned friend" in "good set terms," as if he were really angry—instead of being hired for the day to act it—for "unjustly and unfairly making such animadversions"—"as if," cries he, "as if inferiority of station in life, as was the case with some of the witnesses, (jail tenants!) constituted a MORAL difference in man!!"

To recount all the instances of Whig consistency which from time to time develope themselves to the world, would be useless, if not impossible; but we cannot in justice to the party, omit to notice the following extract of a letter from one of the infatuated companions of WILSON to some of the people who do the Morning Chronicle:—

"For God's sake, say whatever you can to get men sent to us—recollect what depends now on 2500 men. I would forfeit my life if the country is not saved by it. The energy of the people would be roused. The factions decrease, and again by giving that command to an intelligent Foreigner, the union of action among the Spaniards themselves will be more secure. No paltry misjudgment or dread of failure would then exist—all would look up to the British Legion for the brunt of trial, and while their duty would be only to aid by lighter exertion, hesitation of meeting the enemy would cease, and triumph must be the result.—I am not speaking for myself; I love the country, and am ready to sacrifice every thing, my life—to save it; and when I see her struggle depending only on the assistance of so few British soldiers, it is heart-breaking to find them not furnished."

Is it to be believed that a toad-eater of WILSON'S could carry his folly and personal subserviency to such a pitch as this!—"Two thousand five hundred Englishmen," commanded by "an intelligent foreigner," would settle the business—only conceive that a fellow who can write, should be so great a fool as to write this—and that the CHRONICLE people should be such extraordinarily great fools as to publish it.

The whole spirit—the whole point—the only ground in the world for the Spanish revolution—the whole CAUSE of Spain, rests upon the injustice and tyranny of "foreign interference"—"foreign bayonets" is the cant phrase. What right has a foreign force to dictate to a people the form of government which they shall adopt? This is the question asked—the outrage committed upon Spain—the grievance, the oppression is the interference of a foreign power in its government; and here we have a fellow who fancies himself vastly clever asking for two thousand five hundred foreigners, each with his musket and bayonet, to be put at the disposal of an intelligent foreign commander, to interfere in the domestic government of Spain, and force a revolution upon the loyal inhabitants. Why was there ever such egregious folly?

We think we should add that the MAJOR BRISTOW, whose services we recorded a fortnight since, has been removed from the British army.

MYSTERIOUS EVENT.

WE seldom are indebted to the Whigs for the disclosure of very important occurrences, but the following paragraph which appeared in the CHRONICLE of Thursday is of a nature to demand our most serious attention. We publish it, unawed by consequences, and regardless of the dangers and difficulties to which, as our readers must perceive, it is likely to expose us:—

"The MARQUIS of HERTFORD was some time in close conference with LORD LOWTHER, in the box of the latter, during the latter part of the evening, at the Opera House, on Tuesday!!!"

This intelligence, coming from the highly respectable source whence it is derived, considering at the same time its vast importance, will doubtless overwhelm the country with astonishment—that two Noblemen, who have been for many years on terms of strict intimacy, should sit in the same box at the Opera is indeed curious; but that they should converse together is perhaps one of the most singular occurrences upon record—to us we admit the intelligence was astounding.

PAUL POTTER'S REVIEW OF THE LATE SESSION OF PARLIAMENT.

JOHN BULL has done his duty manfully, and so effectually exposed the shifts, and tergiversations, and backslidings of the WHIG FACTION, as day after day, during their late disgraceful campaign in Parliament, they have laid themselves open to his lash, that any animadversions upon the general tendency of their policy, as it was working, appeared to be wholly unnecessary and superfluous;—but contrary to a popular, and in most instances a just, maxim, that "Dulce latet in generalibus"—the "cunning devices" of the MODERN WHIG can only be duly sustained by a daily succession of petty and paltry shifts and expedients in detail, by which the public mind is bothered and perplexed, and the general tendency and purposes of his confederacy obscured—this is the advantage the WHIGS propose to themselves from a Parliamentary Session. During the recess they retire into the background, powerless and innocuous, except when a public misfortune, or any thing that can be so misconstrued by the Machiavelism of their hired reviewers and journalists, draw them forth to give vent to their unopposed diatribes and denunciations against the existing order of things.

As a sort of PERORATION, then, to my good friend JOHN'S weekly labours during the Session just closed, I propose to myself to retrace the general bearings of WHIG POLICY in the late proceedings—and to deduce from the daily tricker of their principal performers—leaders we dare not call them—the true object which they must, as an inevitable consequence, have in view in all that they have said, and in all that they have done—or rather attempted to do. In other words, pithily supplied by SALLUST, who knew what WHIGS were long before they were specifically classed—

"Bonum publicum simulantes, quisque pro Potentiâ suâ certabat.

Among such persons principles are estimated only as they are consistent with the views of a particular faction; and measures are weighed only as they contribute to its support. Thus, every measure proposed by their political opponents—every act which does not originate with themselves, is rejected and impugned. Not that their favorite school presents an alternative always to be recommended by way of substitute—or that the acts of the French apostles, on which they found their creed—if creed of any kind they can be said to acknowledge—display any very ostensible superiority over the old fashioned notions of the sober portion of our countrymen; but because their political opponents have, by identifying themselves with the CONSTITUTION of the country, taken up a position which is impregnable as long as the principles which have made England what it is, remain in force—and whilst the great body of the people retain the inspiring conviction WHICH IT IS THE MAIN OBJECT OF WHIGGERY TO UNDERMINE—that to the laws and institutions of the country, and to the spirit in which they have been exercised and administered, they are indebted for the possession of more happiness, and more real liberty, than ANY COUNTRY ever did, or probably ever will again enjoy.

Before we proceed further, I wish to shew that as men in all ages have suffered the disappointment of their hopes to subvert their principles—so that, generally speaking, there have been no limits to the vengeance considered due by such persons, to the crime of those who have excluded them from the objects of their ambition—When I rank, therefore, hostility to the CONSTITUTION among the crimes of WHIGGERY, I only exhibit a leaf out of Nature's book, and pin it as a scapulary on their shoulders, to shew what man is when his passions are embarked in a common cause, urged forward by a zeal essentially selfish, and concentrated against all impediments to the advancement of his aspiring hopes.

The transfer of hatred from THE PERSON to the PRINCIPLE is one of the most facile transitions of the human mind, and he who begins—under the goad of such feelings—by denouncing the supporter of a certain set of opinions, although wholly unconnected with his first ground of offence, will soon find himself at war with those opinions which perhaps, under other circumstances, he might consider it his duty to defend.

MR. BROUGHAM—who, as well as MR. HUME, or any other of the disorderly corps of WHIGGERY, may be denominated a Guerilla Leader—openly professed before the highest Tribunal of the Empire, that the Constitution, the King, Peers, and Commons of the Realm were nothing in his estimation when balanced against the interests of a client—he was to be sure paid, and well paid, for supporting the cause of this client—but a SILK GOWN IS PAY, where it is coveted—and as a Silk Gown would have overpaid the pay per diem which this stipendary Politician received for preaching sedition as the Queen's Advocate—the loss of it may well be deemed an amply sufficient stimulus to a sentiment in his own case, which he so hardily expressed in the cause of another.

THE CONSTITUTION therefore—espoused and supported by Ministers whose policy and public conduct the country for the last thirty years has been compelled to respect—is so identified with them, that the WHIGS perceive no practicable mode of destroying the one without in some measure at least setting aside the other—as every act of Ministers is necessarily supported upon the grounds of precedent, or in accordance with what are received and recorded as Constitutional principles—the WHIGS are as inevitably driven to undermine or depreciate those principles, because they are the immediate bulwark set up against the incursions of doubtful or dangerous politics—and that they do so con amore may be ascertained by a simple reference to their speeches, and their concurrent illustrations in the self indited pages of "the blue and buff Review," and the commentaries of their hired, profligate, and unenglished journalists!

With these men every thing that is established is necessarily fallacious or corrupt—every received opinion founded on antiquity or experience is a prejudice—in short—whatever is —IS WRONG! It really would be a matter of amusing speculation to trace the means through which our ancestors contrived to blind themselves, as well as their descendants—previous to the present "ENLIGHTENED ERA"—to the barbarism and insufficiency of their political system!—Dating only from the revolution of 1688, it is marvellous how these men, whom we have dignified with every epithet of grateful veneration and respect, managed even to get on at all—how, during so long a period they manœuvred to keep the machine in motion, and steer it clear of those shoals and shelves which the microscopic eye of our present enlightened race of Politicians discovers around us on every side! They appear to have been in utter darkness—to have been so deeply immersed in fogs and mists as not even to apprehend, much less perceive the hazard they ran of every moment going to pieces!—It is true they had a CHART of their own—and worked by a compass, called THE CONSTITUTION—but what have philosophical and heaven-born politicians to do with charts and compasses!—Men, who in this age of light, heat, and machinery, can impel the vessel by a sort of political "STEAM ENGINE," supplied by the lungs and breath of "Garlic eating" Patriots, may sail gallantly down the stream—reckless of "ills to come"—and without even the supplement of a SAFETY-VALVE!

They have—as a precious relic—one old saw at least in their favour—

"By line and rule,
"Works many a fool;"

and the Whigs are as little chargeable with this species of folly, as with any disposition to act upon any regular principle. Boys are taught to swim with corks, but men—Whigs—patriots—good Lord, what have the wise ones of this "luminous era"—this "nineteenth century"—to do with guides ...principles, which every old woman can read, and every ...politics choose a road by!

...truth however must be told—and although the WHIGS ...the credit of establishing the true worship—as the ...and the BOLTONS enjoy that of bringing the MAR... WORCESTER'S discovery of the powers of steam to ...the articles of their creed are, as we have hinted ...a date antecedent even to the birth of WHIGGERY ...SIR THOMAS OVERBURY, who knew something of ...times, has, in the following quaint account, shewn ...express image and form of a WHIG, which, for want of a ...appropriate designation, he entitles,

"A DISTASTER OF THE TIME;"

...he says, "a winter grassbopper all the year long, that looks ...for harvest with a lean pair of cheeks, but never sets forward ...His malice sucks up the greatest part of his own venom, ...empoisoneth himself; and this sickness rises rather of ...or ever GREAT EXPECTATION, so, in the conceit of his ...worthiness, like a coistrel" (a coward or paltry fellow), "he ...himself with wind, and flies against it. Any man's ad...vancement is the most capital offence that can be to his malice; yet ...like Plutaris' Bull, makes that a torment first for himself ...for others. ...IF SIR THOMAS had lived in these days, we should pro... have had those active Citizens BENNET, HUME, and ...impleading him at the Bar of the House for a personal ...certain of its Members; or brought up for judgment ...the verdict of a conscientious Jury, for bringing into ...men struggling for the liberties of their country. ...ved man drew his character from human nature and ...life, as it was exhibited in his own times—and ...we apply to it the term of WHIG or DISTASTER, ...shall find the character under every form of society, from ...beginning of time to the present hour, among that class ...who, essentially selfish, make their own paltry views a ...matter of principle, and transfer their hatred of those who ...the march of their ambition, to the institutions which ...or protect them.

...We have only to look back upon the Session just closed to ...the identity of the WHIGS with this heresy against the ...principles of our nature, and against that gallant pa... which, whilst it boldly and openly opposes itself to ...encroachment of arbitrary power, still loves and re...the Constitution, and postpones every private conside... to the higher motives of public utility and national ...Look at the recent conduct of these men, I repeat, ...let them answer at the bar of public opinion. Is there ...institution, political, civil, or ecclesiastical, against which ...abundance of invective and the intrigues of faction have ...been laboriously employed? The King, as the head and ...of the Constitution, has met with less reverence and ...spect, than the most arrogant of his assailants dare evince ...their animadversions upon the meanest of his subjects— ...where these have failed of their effect, as applied to per...sons the most Constitutional Monarch who ever adorned the ...throne of these Realms, they have descended to the hateful ...expedient of base and dastardly insinuation against him. That ...attacks are treated with equal contempt by the Sove...reign and the great body of the people, is most true; but ...their object is the less treasonable, it would be difficult ...to prove even by that subtile sophister MR. BROUGHAM ...himself. Our Ecclesiastical Laws—and the Church, out of ...which they arise, we need not observe to the most superficial ...observer—have been the especial objects of vituperation, and ...unqualified hostility. Here, there has been no disguise ...as to motive, whatever may have been the system of ca...lumny and falsehood adopted in the prosecution of it. ...The bigotry and malignancy of the Court of Charles the ...Second could not have vented itself in terms of more per...fect scorn and spirit than these men, who make their firmest stand ...upon the professed principle of universal toleration and li...berality of sentiment toward all creeds as well as no creeds! ...Yet, whilst this un-Christian warfare was at its height, that ...last prop and last hope of WHIGGERY, the Edinburgh Re...view, in one of its maudlin panegyrics upon COBBETT'S Cot...tage Economy, laments that he should even, en passant, speak ...contemptuously of the METHODISTS! The reader will recollect ...that under this general title of Methodism is comprehended ...as much divided in principle, doctrine, and modes of ...worship as any one of them is from the ESTABLISHED CHURCH ...—and that consequently the only criterion by which the ...WHIGS judge of the respect due to any creed is its secession ...from, or hostility to the Church of England. Pause for a ...moment on this, good reader, and ask yourself what it is the ...WHIGS have been taught to abhor and execrate in the princi... of CATHERINE of MEDICIS and the GUISES which led— ...NOT BECAUSE THEY HAD THE POWER—to the most atro... scenes ever exhibited before the eyes of mankind!

...That the KING and the CHURCH—as the corner stones of ...the Constitutional Establishments, according to all our re...ceived and hitherto unquestioned opinions, are in their se... degrees to be disposed of according to the new school— ...in plainer terms, according to the patriotic specimen af...forded by the Spanish reformers, exalted and glorified equally ...by THE and the WHIGS—the abolition of the Church and ...plunder of its revenues—the reduction of the Sovereign ...to a cipher, to be used or rejected as this or that faction may ...happen to preponderate.

...This has never been sufficiently noticed that in this object of ...fond and tender anxiety of the WHIGS, in this chaos called ...a Constitution of Spain there is a radical and inherent ...principle, which goes directly to sap the foundation of all that ...hitherto been considered the perfection and safeguard of ...Crown—and it is this which gives it a value in the estima... of all those agitators who are scattering discord through... Europe, and whose views are extended to the universal ...establishment of REPUBLICANISM. There is NO BALANCE ...OF POWER! There is no intermediate estate between the ...throne and the people—and the universal admission that no ...such entity exists for such a state possesses the two-fold advan... so effectually obtained by the ORIGINAL JACOBINS— ...the suppression of the NOBILITY, and the establish... of a virtual REPUBLIC. The name of monarchy is ...preserved in order to prevent a too sudden shock, and a pro...bable re-action from the existing prejudices of mankind. The King under these new fangled Constitutions may be removed at pleasure, because no obstacle—not a shadow of impediment can interfere between the authority of the people—usurped by an oligarchy which inevitably will establish itself in such a case—and the mere personal influence of a monarch, without a prerogative, and without an aristocracy to support him. This, then, is the system advocated—nay, in favour of which a crusade has been preached up by the WHIGS—whilst the French, who both as REPUBLICAN TYRANTS and IMPERIAL SLAVES were eulogized by them as the "greatest and most glorious people on earth," are now stigmatized and reprobated for submitting to a Constitution whose only defect is a semblance—as far as circumstances will yet admit—to OUR OWN!

Read again, I say, the Chronicle, and the whole of the WHIG RADICAL press—read the Edinburgh Review—for it is only "out of their own mouths" that I desire you to pass your judgment upon them—and you will find, whatever may be the topic under discussion—Arts, Belles Lettres, Literature, no less than politics—that the leaven of an IMMITIGABLE HATRED and ABHORRENCE of all institutions connected with MONARCHY or RELIGION, runs through and pervades the mass of their writings.

Can this—I put the question to every honest man in the country, and let him answer it to his conscience in his closet—can this be the policy of men attached to their country—can it be adopted and urged for any purpose with which our interests are blended—can we, in short, believe in the general professions of good intention in the mouths of such men, in the face of their hired and pensioned writers—and their own daily career, in, as well as out of Parliament?—The question must resolve itself into this—either they are sincere and cordial in the cause of anarchy and mis-rule, or they are NOT: if the former, they can no longer profess to "hold on" upon the Constitution, and we are bound to be on our guard against them—if the latter, there is no term sufficiently indicative of the ABHORRENCE and DISGUST which their conduct must generate in every bosom not darkened by HYPOCRISY, or hardened by the BIGOTRY OF PARTY.

The retort of this party bigotry upon those who oppose their schemes and principles cannot avail them—there is a principle which liberality itself must respect, whilst it rejects it—and the love and veneration which men feel towards a tried and unfailing source of happiness and prosperity, is too strongly allied to the better and more creditable feelings of our nature, ever to be effectually superseded by the cold and bitter calculations of Republican philosophy—an honest zeal in support of our public institutions can never be confounded with a principle of disorganization, which loses itself in generalities as to its motive, and only displays itself in active hostility against every thing which our sense of duty towards God or man has hitherto induced us to hold sacred. When we hear an uneducated surgeon's mate,—raised by circumstances which in any other country would more surely have consigned him to his native obscurity—thrust into public life as a British legislator, and holding up to the world A CONVICTED LIBELLER AND BLASPHEMER as "a man of high moral character"—when we behold a renegado Jew, a money-jobber from 'Change-alley, legislating upon the affairs of the Established Church, and advocating the principles which have invariably tended to the subversion of Christianity, wherever they have obtained currency—when we are assailed by a knot of lawyers—hirelings by profession, "to make the worse appear the better reason"—heading and commanding the Opposition in Parliament—and labouring day after day "in their vocation" to convince mankind that all our institutions, social, civil, and political—our Criminal Laws—our Ecclesiastical Laws—our Jury Laws—our Marriage Laws—our Commercial Laws—our Maritime Laws—are mere remnants of barbarism, and can be amended only by the fripperies and quackeries of the new French school of philosophy and legislation—we cannot but be justified in feeling, and spreading that alarm which every man must experience when he beholds the "axe laid to the root," and "the brand to the foundations" of all that is endeared to him, not only by grateful recollections, but by the perfect conviction that to them alone can he trust for the salvation and continuance of all that has hitherto rendered life worth possessing, or country worthy his care and affection.

I am compelled to postpone the further analysis of the principles of WHIGGERY, more especially displayed during the late Session, until my next, for which the "thick coming" facts from every quarter, and upon every question to which its adherents stand committed, are hourly supplying ample and portentous materials!

PAUL POTTER.

THERE has been some fighting before CORUNNA—CORPORAL WILSON was wounded in the leg, and however satisfactory it must be for that exemplary gentleman at last to have this honourable certificate of good behaviour in an action, we should think the sequel will be less pleasant—as he has been pleased to take the oaths of allegiance in Spain, to wear a Spanish uniform—(having no English one)—and if he has fallen into the hands of the French, who cannot forget his eminent services in the cause of BUONAPARTE'S postmaster LAVALETTE—his situation may be less agreeable than GLORIOUS—GOOD GOD, what fools some people are!

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR—I read with much pleasure the extracts from a recent publication, which appeared in the BULL of Sunday last. The practice of directing an issue in every case in which there are opposing affidavits as to facts, is certainly most destructive in point of expence to the suitors in the Chancery Court, and has been justly censured by many leading members of that Bar.

"What," (said an advocate whilst addressing the Lord Chancellor on an appeal case), "is a Judge in Equity to repudiate his jurisdiction, and common sense at the same time, by declaring that points of law and questions of fact are not to be judged of and inquired into by him, but to be submitted to a Bench of Common Lawyers, and twelve mechanics in a Jury box?—If the opinion of the highest Judge in the realm is only to be obtained when there is no dispute on the law, and a perfect agreement on the facts of a case, we shall not be put to much expense for reports of judicial decisions in our Courts of Equity, and an automaton may be wound up to direct an issue by a nod in every matter which may require the ordinary exercise of common sense."—This in modern phrase would be called "getting through business," and twenty nods would be reckoned as so many decrees.

I certainly feel that this is not a fit subject for a jest, but cannot refrain from telling you what I heard a foreigner say only a few months ago:—"I ave often thought for why de Inglis people die so much in Chancery, and now I ave found out de cause—I read in the newspaper they are all afflicted with de issue."—Having related to you a fact, I'll conclude my letter by giving you a fable:—

The Fox reproached the Lioness with the tardiness of her gestation, adding, "I bring forth frequently, and many at a time." The Queen of the Forest gave for answer—"True, you breed many Foxes, but when I labour I give birth to a Lion."—I am, yours,

Q.P.

DOCTOR SQUINTUM.

"Walk in, Ladies and Gentlemen, walk in;—shew your tickets, Ladies and Gentlemen, if you please;—walk in, and see the wonderful DOCTOR SQUINTUM, just arrived from Glasgow—the most magnificent preacher as ever was seen in this here world, or anywhere else. Tumble up. Ladies, mind your pockets:—now, MR. BASILICO, tip the gentlefolks a speech—here they come;—stand out of the way, you poor looking chaps, we wants no paupers here;—now's your time—just a going to begin;—crow a little if you please, MR. ROMEO. Don't waste the precious minutes—come in and be saved, or stay out and be ———. Silence there, you little boys—mind the nobility:—never such another opportunity will offer so long as the world lasts. Now, DOCTOR SQUINTUM, here we are—quite full, Doctor—just a going to begin. Look at him, Ladies—look at him—what a magnificent cretur—all his own hair—every bit of it, whiskers and all:—this here Doctor is capable of seeing two sides of a thing at once, and keeps one eye upon earth and the other upon heaven. Here comes the Ministers—and here comes the Duchesses—and here comes my Lady, and all the rest of the Royal Society;—tumble up—tumble up;—now, MR. BASILICO, shut the doors, and keep out the beggars."—Per Opener's Exordium.

After which may be sung a new ballad, entitled and called

DOCTOR SQUINTUM,

To the Tune of "NANCY DAWSON."

COME, beaux and belles, attend my song,
Come, join with me the motley throng,
The time is apt, the tide runs strong,
Your hearts no longer harden;
The world at once is pious grown,
And vice a thing no longer known,
For DOCTOR SQUINTUM'S come to town,
To preach in HATTON GARDEN!

The Doctor is a charming man,
A good deal on the WHITFIELD plan,
Men's vices he doth plainly scan,
Not delicately hint 'em;
A fire upon his flock he'll keep,
And treats them more like wolves than sheep,
'Till some go mad—but more to sleep,
Oh! Charming DOCTOR SQUINTUM!*

Such crowds of fashion throng the door,
With tickets, numbered, to secure
"EXCLUSION" to the PIOUS POOR,
Who never pass the entry;
HUMILITY the Scot doth teach,
In tones the hardest heart to reach,
But when he condescends to preach
'Tis only to the GENTRY!

The chapel's like a playhouse quite,
When throng'd on MR. LISTON'S night,
The boxes—gall'ries, bursting tight,
Besides a very full pit;
And there they crowd to hear their DOOM
From one who talks like DOCTOR HUME,
And works and jerks like LAWYER BROUGHAM,
Exalted in a pulpit.

When wand'ring quacks expose their stuff—
Themselves not quite absurd enough—
They hire JACK-PUDDING fools to puff
Their trash to ev'ry noodle.
So SQUINTUM Zanies gets in pairs,
As other HUMBUGS do at fairs,
And MONTAGUE, upon the stairs,
Harangues with COCK-A-DOODLE!

Small TAYLOR leaves his teeming board,
SAXE COBOURG quits his shining hoard,
And Poodle BYNG gives up a Lord,
To join the pious jostle.
With lightning speed LORD SEFTON flies,
And COOKE contrives betimes to rise,
While little BENNET sighs and cries
At HOLBORN'S high Apostle.

My Lord, the Duchess, and his GRACE
All join the scrambling melting race,
And Ministers in pow'r and place,
Whose names——we scorn to print 'em;
These leave their pastors in the lurch,
And much it grieves us in the search,
To find the STATE desert the CHURCH
For such a thing as SQUINTUM.

But vanity doth never know
At what to stop, nor where to go;
His Sermons are attractive, so
He undertakes to print 'em.
This last manœuvre spoils the whole,
For partisans like MISTRESS COLE
Peruse, and cry—"GOD bless my soul!
"Are these by DOCTOR SQUINTUM?"

Like that Hibernian blazing star,
Great MR. PHILLIPS at the Bar,
His metaphors his matter mar,
Nor does he care to stint 'em:
In holding forth he tops his school,
But readers find—(then being cool)—
The sermon trash, the man a FOOL—
A very DOCTOR SQUINTUM.

* This may seem ill-natured, but is moreover true. An Irish friend of ours, who was at the show last Sunday, declared that he did not like SQUINTUM so much then as he did before; for, said he, "The first time I heard him I slept mighty well, but to day he made such an infernal noise I could not get above a ten minutes' nap."—SQUINTUM preached an hour and a quarter.

We really think we only do justice to the talents and spirit of one of our Bishops—we mean the BISHOP OF ST. DAVID'S—by recording here a corrected report of his Lordship's speech upon LORD NUGENT'S Bills, to give the elective franchise to English Roman Catholics, which had been sent up from the Commons, and were under discussion in the House of Lords.

"My Lords—On the subject of the Bills now before the House, it is my misfortune to differ so widely from my Right Reverend Brother, the BISHOP OF NORWICH, who spoke last: and I am so far from thinking it illiberal and uncharitable to oppose any further encroachments of the Church of Rome upon the Church of England; or to think and speak of that foreign Church in the language of our own Church Articles and Homilies; that I cannot suppress my reasons for the vote that I shall give this night against admitting Roman Catholics to offices of trust and profit, and to the Elective Franchise. My Lords, the oath and declaration, which it is the object of these Bills to repeal, were intended to exclude Roman Catholics from offices of trust and profit, because the principles of their Church were held to be inconsistent with the safety and tranquillity of the State. My Lords, those principles are precisely the same now, as they were at the enactment of the oath and declaration; it is the boast of that Church that they are so. Persons therefore professing those principles are as inadmissible to offices of trust and profit now, as they were formerly. —They are inadmissible to those offices, because they are incompatible of the allegiance which is due from subjects to their Sovereign. My Lords, they are incapable of that allegiance, because they are bound by a contrary allegiance to a foreign Sovereign.

"My Lords—The oath, which one of these bills proposes, as a security for a Roman Catholic's allegiance, is perfectly nugatory, because it is superseded and nullified by the solemn declaration of true obedience to the Pope, which he has already made, or which is implied in his submission to the Pope's supremacy—that supremacy, which they hold to be superior to the sovereignty of the realm. My Lords, the Romish Clergy, (says BLACKSTONE, in his chapter of Treasons,) 'when they take orders, renounce their allegiance to their temporal Sovereign, that being inconsistent with their engagements of canonical obedience to the Pope.' By these engagements they are bound to oppose, to execrate, and, as far as in them lies, to extirpate every thing heretical, that is, every thing which is contrary to the religion of the Church of Rome.

"My Lords—This principle of extirpation is not a dormant and obsolete principle. It is at this moment, in Ireland, in full and active operation. We have been told very lately on the best authority, that the leaders of the sanguinary bands, which infest that country, declare boldly and candidly, that their object is to drive the heretics out of the country, and to take their property.—My Lords, the most effectual way to tranquillize Ireland, is, not to encourage Popery, but to strengthen the hands of Protestantism, and at the same time to afford that protection to converted Priests, which was granted to them formerly, which is absolutely necessary to the free exercise of their will; and without which they are in danger of assassination in one country, or of destitution in the other. It is indeed to be hoped that another Session of Parliament will not be suffered to pass without reviving that humane and beneficial Act, which expired on the 24th of June, 1800, by which a provision was made for the subsistence of destitute Clergymen, who had renounced the errors of the Church of Rome, and were conformed to the Church of England.

"I object then, my Lords, to the admission of Roman Catholics to offices of trust and profit, because the principles of their Church are contrary to the allegiance which is due from subjects to their sovereign, and inconsistent with the safety and tranquillity of the state. The grant of the Elective Franchise would be attended with still greater inconsistencies and mischiefs. My Lords, I need not remind your Lordships that Parliament is convened by the writ of summons expressly for the defence of the Kingdom and of the Church; not of the Kingdom only, but of the Kingdom and the Church. A representative of a Roman Catholic district, is, and to his constituents, must instead of defending the Church of England, be the advocate of measures most adverse to the King's prerogative, and most hostile to the Protestant Religion. The Elective Franchise has been very injurious to the peace of Ireland, and productive of many ill consequences, especially by the sub-division of property, which it has led to. It could not, indeed, do so much mischief at present in England, on account of the comparative paucity of Roman Catholics here. But the grant of this important privilege would add greatly to their numbers, activity and influence. And, why should we, in defiance of the Constitution, and of experience, put the tranquillity of England to such a hazard, and expose it, in any degree, to the degrading and demoralizing consequences which have resulted from this fatal boon in Ireland?

"My Lords, for these several reasons, I shall give my vote against both the Bills now before the House."

The Bills passed notwithstanding.

A piece of extremely gross impertinence and affectation has for some time offended our eyes—we hesitated to notice it because we thought the insolence might have been accidental or unintentional, but as it is regularly continued we shall say a word or two upon it.

There is in Charlotte-street, Bloomsbury, an "establishment" called a Surgical Dispensary—and the following names appear at the head of the advertisement which the managers thrust into every paper which will admit it:—

"His Royal Highness the DUKE OF YORK, President. Governors, EARL of EGREMONT, EARL of LEITRIM, HON. COL. J. BARRY, J. LATOUCHE, M.P., Surgeons, K. and HERMAN, Members of the Royal College, London."

The insolence to which we allude is this—MR. KIERNAN, the surgeon, who is the "dispensary," or whatever it may be, continues to insert the names of a prince of the blood royal, two highly honourable noblemen, and two highly respectable gentlemen, at the head of an advertisement into which he is ashamed of putting his own.

What right has MR. KIERNAN to put K. and HERMAN, and not KIERNAN and HERMAN—if the thing be fair and honourable and respectable, MR. KIERNAN need not be so particular; and if it be a disgraceful affair, MR. KIERNAN should, if he chose to conceal himself, at least have removed the titles of a Prince and two Noblemen who gave their sanction to it, at a time when his name figured as conspicuously in the advertisement as their own.

THE following advertisement of a meeting held in Dublin nine years since, seems to us to breathe a spirit awfully prophetic—it might at that period have been deemed somewhat violent, but time and circumstances have proved its justice and foresight:—

"COUNTY OF DUBLIN.

"We the undersigned, the High Sheriff and Grand Jurors of the county of Dublin, assembled at Easter Term, 1814, have entered into the following resolutions:—

"Resolved—That we have, for some time beheld, with great indignation, the unwarrantable and seditious proceedings of a Body styling itself the Catholic Board, which, under the avowed pretence of being formed for the purpose of promoting a petition to the Legislature, has, as it has lately been conducted, assumed and exercised an uncontrouled Legislative jurisdiction.

"That in the course of its proceedings every branch of the Constitution has been attacked and reviled, the Executive arraigned and traduced, the tribunals of justice aspersed and calumniated, while the religious authorities, by law established, have been openly vilified and defamed.

"That the natural results of such conduct have been fully exemplified in the acts of insubordination and outrage which have broken forth in various parts of Ireland; nor can we hope for a return of tranquillity while the disaffected are publicly encouraged and defended.

"That without meaning again to advert to the merits of the Catholic Claims, which we leave altogether to the wisdom of Parliament, we deem it our duty to declare, that we consider the Catholic Board, as so conducted, a public nuisance of the most dangerous description, and highly injurious to every class of society.

"That we sincerely hope, should stronger laws be deemed necessary, the present Session of Parliament may not be permitted to pass over, without the enactment of such as may secure the annihilation of the Board.

"That we beg leave to express our perfect reliance on the Wisdom and Energy of the Nobleman, to whom the Government of Ireland is now entrusted, to pursue the manly example of his predecessor, and to give every effect to the powers, with which he may be invested, for the suppression of seditious assemblies, and the consequent establishment of permanent tranquillity.

It is needless for us to remark, that these loyal and constitutional resolutions never were attended to.

CRICKET.—On Tuesday and Wednesday the grand return match at cricket between 11 gentlemen of Hambledon Parish and 11 of the Portsea Island Club, was played on Windmill Down, and won by Hambledon, by 199 runs, as follows:—Hambledon—First innings, 146; Second innings, 173; Total, 319.—Portsmouth—First innings, 53; Second innings, 65; Total, 118.—A match at cricket was played on Friday between 11 of Purbrook and 11 of Cosham, which was won by Cosham by six wickets.

MISCELLANEOUS.

On Tuesday the Duke of York held a levee, as Commander-in-Chief, at his office in the Horse Guards, which was attended by between 60 and 70 military officers. Among those present were Generals the Earl of Rosslyn and Garth, Lieut.-Gens. Wood and F. Maitland, Major-Gens. Sir E. Barnes, Sir C. Grant, Sir L. Otway, and Gubbins, Lord E. Somerset, Lord Templeton, and Lord Barnard, and Rear-Admiral Sir John Gore.

Wednesday night a Spanish courier, named Bego, arrived in Downing-street, with despatches from Sir Wm. A'Court. The despatches were dated the 13th. inst. They were forwarded to Mr. Secretary Canning.

The Prince de Polignac, Ambassador from his Most Christian Majesty to the Court of London, reached town on Monday evening.

Sir John Wrottesley was on Wednesday elected M.P. for Staffordshire, in the room of Sir J. Boughey, deceased.

THE ARMY.—It is understood that the Lieut.-Governorship of New Brunswick, which has become vacant in consequence of the death of Major Gen. G. S. Smyth, has been offered to Major-Gen. Sir P. Maitland, K.C.B. and Lieut.-Governor of York, in Canada.—The 2d Regiment of Dragoon Guards is ordered, when relieved by the 1st (Royal) Regiment of Dragoons, to march from York to Birmingham and Coventry.—The 53d Regiment of Foot, which marched from Chatham, was expected to arrive at Portsmouth on Friday. It is to be stationed at Haslar Barracks, Gosport.—The 3d Reg. of Dragoon Guards, which marched from Newcastle on the 22d inst. will arrive at Manchester and Nottingham, by distinct routes ordered by Major-Gen. Sir J. Byng, who commands the Northern District.—The 1st Battalion of the Coldstream Guards having been relieved by the 3d Battalion of the Grenadier Guards, has marched from the Tower to Paddington, and embarked on board canal boats for Liverpool, on its route to Ireland.

An order has been received at Chatham by Admiral Sir B. Hallowell, Port Admiral, for the whole of the ships fitting in the Medway, which consist of four flag ships, and some smaller vessels, to be fitted to their full war establishment. Such is the hurry for the equipment of the Revenge, of 74 guns, Admiral Sir H. B. Neale, fitting for the Mediterranean, that the men of the Preventive Service are to be immediately drafted into her to complete her complement.

It appears that already this year there have been imported into the port of Liverpool alone 100,000 bags of cotton wool more than were imported into the same port in the same time last year.

The usual annual dinner, on the close of the Session, to the clerks and officers of the House, was given by the Speaker on Monday, in his official dining room, where he entertains the Members during the Session, and which is situated directly underneath the House of Commons.

On Tuesday, at a Court of Aldermen, a petition from the Company of Watermen and Lightermen was presented, praying the Court to revise its Bye Laws, and increase the present rates of fares payable to watermen, which was read, and referred to a Committee of the whole Court to consider and report.

On Wednesday morning the Lord Mayor, accompanied by the Aldermen and Members of the Corporation, and attended by the usual Officers, started from Blackwall, on the ceremony performed every seven years of inspecting the boundaries of the City Jurisdiction, and visiting Rochester, Sheerness, Southend, and other places.

The Royal George steam-packet, fitted out by Sir John M. Doyle, arrived off Cadiz on the 1st inst. The French squadron refused to permit her entrance, but the mail and passengers were landed, and the Royal George was seen on the 3d, steering to the eastward, supposed for Gibraltar.

On Thursday a General Quarterly Court of the Proprietors of Bank Stock was held at the Court House, according to the charter, for the consideration of the general business of the Company. The minutes of the last Court were read, but no business was brought before the Court. There were only six Proprietors present, when it was dissolved.

At the Hants Session, the Committee appointed to examine Mr. Hollis's (the treasurer's) accounts, made a report, which stated that Mr. H. had not acted up to his assertions of readiness to forward the inquiry, and also gave particulars of various deficiencies and balances due from Mr. Hollis to the county. Sir T. Baring moved that the sum acknowledged by Mr. Hollis to be owing by him to the county, for arrears of rates, amounting to 1698l. 15s. be forthwith paid into Court, or security be given within 24 hours, for payment in one month. This was carried. Mr. Hollis not having complied with this resolution, was suspended, upon which he resigned the treasurership. Three candidates then started for the situation. Mr. Hollis has also commenced a canvass.

A distressing accident occurred lately at South Luffenham, Rutlandshire, to Miss Trollope, sister of the late and aunt to the present Sir J. Trollope, Bart. She was taking an airing, when the rein became fastened under the horse's tail, which was so alarmed by the endeavour made to disentangle it, that he ran off, and dashing over some heaps of stones, upset the chaise, by which the lady's skull was fractured. The servant's arm was likewise broken.

The practice of working at the salt-pans at Droitwich on the Sabbath Day, which tended to involve the manufacturers in the grossest ignorance and barbarity, has been completely abolished, and Sunday the 6th inst. was the first Sabbath for many centuries whereon not a basket of salt was warehoused, nor any work done at the salt-pans in Droitwich.

Tuesday a large party embarked on board the Sovereign steam packet, in order to take an excursion to the Nore, the profits of which to go in aid of the Union Schools of Wapping. Mr. F—x, a grocer [illegible] ford-street, placed himself on the top of a cart which covered [illegible] the wheels, and though warned of his danger, still kept his seat, [illegible] in a short time, one of the paddle-bolts gave way, and he was [illegible] overboard, and drowned.

On Saturday se'nnight, Moses Yates, a miller, was killed while [illegible] work at the wind-mill on the Stafford-road, near Wolverhampton, [illegible] some part of the machinery catching his clothes and drawing him [illegible] tween the cogs of the wheel and a beam.

The neighbourhood of Leicester was visited with a short but [illegible] thunder-storm on Tuesday week. Between 6 and 7 o'clock the lightning fell upon the spire of Birstall Church, which brought down the weathercock, spindle, and four or five yards of the steeple; [illegible] through the roof, and doing considerable damage to the church. [illegible] steeple was rent in various parts of it.

On Wednesday morning, between eight and nine o'clock, as a horse waggon, heavily laden with sugar from the West India D[illegible] was coming up the Commercial Road, one of the Blackwall stage[illegible] following at a sharp pace, and upon coming nearly abreast of the [illegible] gon, one of the fore horses of the coach became restive, and after [illegible] the driver used his best exertions in endeavouring to keep clear of the waggon, we are sorry to say he came in violent contact therewith, which the stage, with a number of passengers, was completely [illegible] turned, and those on the outside were thrown with great force a [illegible] siderable distance. Most of the passengers received severe bruises and contusions, but three of those on the outside (two gentlemen and a female,) were so seriously hurt as to be sent to the London Hospital. One of the men had a leg broken, the other his right arm [illegible] located, and the woman had her shoulder put out, besides [illegible] bruises which they all three met with.

On Wednesday afternoon, between three and four o'clock, George Smith entrusted his horse and cabriolet to a man attired as a sailor, at the Admiralty gates, while he went into that office. On his return a short time after he found the fellow had driven off. In the seat of the cabriolet was property to the amount of 20l. and a large cloak. The fellow's appearance was of the dirtiest description, without a coat, and his face nearly covered with hair. No trace of him has been discovered, but it is supposed he has taken the road to Brighton, as he was inquiring his way thither just before he was entrusted with the cabriolet.

On Wednesday last, the daughter of the unfortunate man who drowned himself lately at the bank, Leeds, was found drowned in the Nether Mill Goit, in this town. She had been amusing herself by collecting some pieces of wood, and fell in whilst attempting to reach one of them from the water.

On Tuesday evening last, about seven o'clock, the inhabitants of Sloane-street were thrown into great confusion by a report that a [illegible] had destroyed herself, during the absence of the rest of the family. The first alarm was given by a young lady of the name of Wilson, residing in the same street, who perceived from a back window the unfortunate lady attempting to put a period to her existence, by suspending herself to a large pear-tree in the garden. The young lady immediately informed her uncle of the circumstance, who lost no time in getting over the garden wall, and fortunately arrived in time to prevent the completion of an act of self-destruction.—Morning Post.

Lately, in Manchester, an inquest was held on the bodies of two infants, aged six weeks and ten weeks, neighbours, who died in consequence of the indiscreet administration to them of what is vulgarly called "Infant's Relief for the Bowels," a mixture of opium, &c. The Jury found a verdict accordingly; and the Coroner remarked, that it was surprising with what avidity the lower class bought such nostrums, becoming too often the dupes of artful men.—A young lady, the daughter of a most respectable inhabitant, a day or two ago put a period to her existence, by taking a very large dose of laudanum. The unhappy lady had for some time laboured under a despondency of mind, occasioned by a notion that she was a great sinner, and lost to redemption.

Friday afternoon two persons in a garden at Stenton heard dreadful cries, as from a man in distress, apparently near Long-bridge-lane; and proceeded that way to ascertain the cause. They found a man of the name of Wild dreadfully mutilated, his thumb bare to the [illegible], his nose bitten, his arm broken, and he had sustained other injuries. After some time they ascertained that a male ass in the close, belonging to Wild, had attacked him in so furious a manner as to knock him down, mutilate him as above described, and leave him apparently dead upon the ground.—Nottingham Paper.

We have to record the loss of two lives, on Sunday in the Thames, occasioned by boats being let to boys not capable of managing them. In the first instance a boat was upset near Vauxhall-bridge, [illegible] sail. There were four more children in it, one of whom was drowned. Another boat, with six persons in it, was run down within sight of Battersea-bridge, and —— Sawyer, a youth of respectable parents, in Silver-street, St. James's, was drowned.

On Monday morning the awful sentence of the law was carried into effect at Newgate upon John Willford, for a burglary at Battersea; Robert Roe, for an extensive similar offence in the house of Mr. Donovan, Oxford-street; and Samuel William Miles, for uttering very extensively forged Bank of England notes.

On Monday morning a Mrs. Brydges, of Great St. Andrew-street, Seven Dials, left her child, about six months old, in the care of a girl who laid the infant on the bed and covered it over with the clothes, while she went up stairs to do some work. In her absence a female who was in the habit of cleaning Mrs. Brydges's room, turned up the bed, and it was not until the return of the mother that the accident was discovered, when the child was found quite dead.

Intimation was given on Saturday se'nnight at the police office, that it is the intention of Government to establish a head police office at Sidney, in New South Wales, from which other offices of a similar nature are to emanate, and to effect which an experienced police magistrate, clerk, and eight officers, or police constables, at a liberal salary, are to go from London to serve for five years, at the end of which period they will be at liberty to serve for a further term of five years, or return home, when a free passage and every expence will be paid.

The following inquests have been held during the week:—At St. Bartholomew's Hospital on the body of T. Hall, a post boy, who was riding with the Coachman on the box of one of the Brentford stages into the Black Lion Inn, Water Lane, when passing through the archway over the entrance, the deceased raised his head, which struck violently against a beam and broke his neck. On the body of Mary Ann Albury who had been sent into a cellar to draw some beer, and the candle fell upon her clothes, which caught fire, and she was so dreadfully burned as to cause her death. On John Woodcock, aged 20 months, who was scalded to death by a kettle of boiling water falling over him.—At the White Lion near Vauxhall-gardens, on the body of F. Cechini, aged 18 years. The deceased was one of the dancers in the ballet at the above Gardens, and was drowned on Saturday last whilst bathing in the Thames.—At the Greyhound, at Chelsea, on the body of a child, aged 18 months, son of Mr. Pyne, of that place, who drank some fly water which was left in a tumbler window, and caused his death in about six hours.—At the London Tavern, Mary-at-Hill, on the body of C. Tindal, a brush-maker, found in the River. The deceased had spent the evening at a Lodge of Odd Fellows, and had afterwards passed over Waterloo-bridge, but how he came in the water could not be ascertained.—Verdict, "Accidental death."—At the Black Horse, Poplar, on the body of Mr. Weeks, an officer of the Customs, which was found near the entrance of the West India Docks; but there being no evidence to prove how he came into the water, the verdict was "Found Drowned."—At the Albion, Vernon-place, Bloomsbury, on the body of Sampson Perry, Esq. aged 78, a gentleman formerly well known in the political circles, who died suddenly on Tuesday, whilst eating his dinner, in consequence of the rupture of the chief artery of the heart. Verdict—"Died by the visitation of God." Mr. Perry's widow is left in extreme distress.

INDIA.

ACCOUNT OF THE REVENUES AND CHARGES OF INDIA FROM 1812-13 TO 1821-22.

The total of the revenues of Bengal, Fort St. George, and Bombay with Bencoolen and Prince of Wales's Island, in 1812-13, amounted to 16,488,934l. and in 1821-22 to 22,195,068l.

The total charges in India, interest on debt, expense of St. Helena and political charges paid in India, were in 1812-13, 16,535,670l. and in the year 1821-22, 22,195,008l. In the former year there was an excess of expenditure above revenue of 440,468l.; in the latter there is a surplus of revenue above the expenditure of 602,128l.

The only years out of the ten compromised in this account, in which there appears a surplus of revenue, are 1812-13, and the two last years; in the seven others there have been deficiencies, more or less considerable, so that the debt in India grew from about 30 millions (in 1813) to about 40½ millions in 1821. The last account for 1822 reduces it to 37,817,666l. of which 6,486,489l. is debt not bearing interest. The amount of the interest is 1,980,417l.

LATEST NEWS.

Hamburgh papers to the 19th instant, and Dutch papers to the 24th instant, arrived yesterday; they state that in consequence of the alterations in the celebrated Navigation Act made by the British Parliament, a ship had arrived at Hamburgh from Jamaica direct, bringing the produce of that Island without having touched in an English Port. The report of a considerable assembling of troops in Poland is wholly unfounded.

Mr. Tothill, of his Majesty's ship Semiramis, the Flag Ship at the Cove of Cork, was drowned a few days since, while attempting to float the boat, about ten o'clock at night.

A Cabinet Council was held on Friday at the Foreign Office, which was attended by all the Cabinet Ministers.

The two last volumes of the "HENRY AHBOAD," completing the series, we perceive are announced for publication on Tuesday next. These volumes are full of incident, point, and humour, and display a perfect knowledge of life among the higher classes of England and France, with interesting details of all that came under the view of the lively author in both countries.

On Thursday night, a quarrel took place between two privates of the Fusileers, who occupy the barracks at Brighton, when the one gave the other a blow on the left side, which killed him on the spot.

As a waggon, conveying the baggage of the 15th Hussars, was going down Shooter's Hill, it was overturned: two women were severely hurt, and the child of a sergeant was killed.

On the night of the 15th instant the lightning struck the Cathedral of Strasbourg, melted the lead which cemented several stones, and destroyed the sound of the largest bell.

Inquests were held, on Friday night, on the body of a male child, found in a ditch near Cold Bath-fields. There was a wound on the back part of the child's head, apparently inflicted by a sharp instrument, and the suspicion was of opinion it was sufficient to cause death. Verdict.—Wilful Murder against some person or persons unknown.—On the body of Charlotte Sharp, aged 11, who, while skipping with a rope, slipped from the curb, and was run over by a waggon. Verdict—Accidental Death.

Yesterday, Samuel Hallett, a well-known character, was examined before Mr. Hanson, a magistrate at Hammersmith, charged with having committed a highway robbery in January last, in that neighbourhood.—Richard Lamb, a gardener of Kensington, said, that early in January he met with a cyprian named Sarah Berry, late at night, in Hammersmith church-yard, and while in converse with her, the prisoner, who had long associated with Berry, came up and robbed him of a silver watch, a gold seal, and 10s. in silver. Lamb secured Berry, who was tried at the Old Bailey as an accomplice, but acquitted from want of evidence. The officers had been in search of Hallet ever since the robbery was committed, but it was not until Friday evening that Taylor, Allan, and Morgan, three of the dismounted patrole, secured him, for he left Hammersmith on the commission of the robbery, and did not make his appearance there until a few days ago.—Mr. Walker, a blacksmith at Hammersmith, proved having seen and spoken to Hallet in the church-yard a few minutes before the robbery was committed. The prisoner was fully committed.

At Queen-square, yesterday, Mr. M. Smith, who described himself to be an officer in the army, Edward Brown, also a military man, and Margaret Saunders, and Margaret M'Carthy, were charged with felony. On Friday, about two o'clock in the afternoon, the prisoners ordered dinner at the house of M. Rankin, and it was served up in a room next to which was a bed-room, which opened into the room in which they were, and the door was unlocked. They paid the bill and departed about four o'clock; in an hour afterwards, Mrs. Rankin found a trunk, which was in the bed-room, broken open, and sovereigns, &c. to the amount of 71. 9s. 11d. stolen therefrom. She then recollected having met the prisoner, M'Carthy, on the stairs tying a quantity of sovereigns and silver in the tail of Mr. Smith's shirt. This was the ground of suspicion, and they were taken into custody.—Mr. Smith said he had only arrived at the Swan tavern, Battersea Bridge, last Monday, from France; his friend, Mr. Brown, arrived there on the same day from the Continent, and he (Smith) applied to his agent, who on Friday advanced him more sovereigns, in fact, than M. Rankin pretended to have lost, and he exhibited them to Mrs. M'Carthy, and made her a present of part of them, as well as some fancy articles found upon her, which he brought from India. The Magistrate sent to enquire whether the account he had given was true, and the messenger upon his return reported that it was perfectly correct. The Magistrate discharged the prisoners.

At the Surrey Assizes on Friday, Philip Stoffell and Charles Keppell were tried for the murder of Mrs. Richards at Clapham on the 8th of April. The principal evidence against the prisoners was an accomplice, Thomas Scott, who described the particulars of the robbery as they have been already detailed:—viz. getting into the house by pretending that they had a parcel for Mrs. Bell an inmate. Keppel held Mrs. Richards down on the floor, while Stoffell, Pritchard (not found) and Scott ransacked the house, other witnesses proved some of the property stolen, and the Jury after retiring for half an hour pronounced both the prisoners Guilty, and they were sentenced to be hung to-morrow and to be anatomized.

At the Assizes for Derby an indictment was tried (the King v. James Smith) for a libel in the Pottery Gazette, of which the defendant was publisher, charging the prosecutor James Stamp Sutton Cooke with being a swindler, a sharper, and a bigamist, and for this libel the Jury gave the plaintiff a verdict with one farthing damages. The Grand Jury have found a true bill against Cooke and several other persons, for conspiring to oust Sir George Jerningham out of his estates, by pretending that Cooke's brother was entitled to them.

At the Maryborough Assizes, (Ireland,) Fanton Moore, James and Patrick Young, Thos. Cooney, Patrick Leahy, and Peter and Timothy Egan were indicted for setting fire to a house, for assaulting Denis M'Cormick, and cutting off both his ears. Daniel M'Cormick, sen. was awakened in his bed by the falling or throwing down of the end wall of his house; on getting up he saw eight persons outside, they were armed with a scythe, wattles, a hurl, and fire-locks. The man entered, and he saw Denis M'Cormick, his brother, lying in a ditch, weltering in his blood, both his ears were cut off close to his head! Denis swore that Peter Egan, Thomas Cooney, and three others held him while Patrick Young cut off his ears! John Hobhan, an old man, another witness, also swore that the assailants mangled him most dreadfully, his skull was split nearly to the bridge of his nose, his collar-bone and arms were broken, and two of his fingers nearly cut off. The Jury found James and Patrick Young Guilty, and acquitted all the other prisoners.

ELEGANT GLASSES, FURNITURE, &c.—THE NOBILITY and Gentry are invited to inspect the Ware rooms of Cooper and SON, 53, Bishopsgate Within, where is exhibited a large Assortment of new and second-hand Plate Glasses, admirably suited to every description of drawing or dining-rooms. The prices are just reduced 40 per cent. on plates measuring 100 inches by 72, and upwards; and on those of smaller dimensions the alteration will be found equally important. The extensive preference given to this Establishment is thankfully acknowledged by the Proprietors, who, in their endeavours to evince their gratitude, by manufacturing articles in a superior manner, at prices suitable to the times, hope to merit a continuance of public support. In the furniture department is comprised every new and elegant article of upholstery, cabinet, and chair work, regulated upon such a scale of economy as to demand and ensure the patronage of rank and fashion.
