MILES and EDWARDS'S splendid Stock of London Chintz Furnitures, Spanish Damasks, Cashmere Chintzes, Moreens, &c. is, without exception, the largest, the most select, and the cheapest in the kingdom. This immense assortment having been entirely manufactured since the extraordinary diminution in the value, the proprietors are enabled and determined to sell them full one third below the regular prices of old establishments. M. and E. are aware that by this immediate reduction upon the system of the trade, they have incurred the animosity of other houses, but the unprecedented encouragement experienced from the principal Nobility and Gentry is an ample compensation and a sufficient inducement for them to adhere to their present plan. In fitting up Drawing Room and Dining Room Curtains, Four-post and French Beds, &c. Maples make, in many instances, effect a saving of nearly one half by inspecting this establishment. Miles and Edwards's only establishment is at No. 134, Oxford-street, between Holles street and Old Cavendish-street.

FOX'S PATENT AQUATIC GAMBROON WAREHOUSE.—Gentlemen are respectfully informed, that owing to the increased importation of the Mohair, that his OAKS are now cheaper than Camlets, and much superior in every respect, which have been proved by several years experience; the best of which he warrants never to get wet through, if properly made up, from 40s. upwards. To prevent the imposition of Camlets being sold for Gambroons, they are now stamped on the back, Fox's Patent Aquatic Mohair Gambroons, 26, King-street, Covent garden, next door to the Westminster Fire Office.—Fashionable light and strong superior Shooting Jackets, made of the plain and twilled sorts, which possess more requisites for the field than any other article, and nothing will turn so much rain but oil-skin.

EUROPEAN LIFE INSURANCE and ANNUITY COMPANY, No. 10, Chatham-place, Blackfriars.—Persons affecting Insurances with this Company, for the whole period of life, are immediately entitled to participate in whatever division of profit shall take place, which, on the reduced rate of Premium demanded, will enable all descriptions of persons to make a provision for their families on terms the most advantageous. Tables have also been calculated by which the Premiums may be paid Quarterly, Half-Yearly, or Annually, at the option of the insured. No charge is made for Entrance or for Policy, except the stamp. The insured are permitted to go in steam, or other decked vessels, to and from any part of the united kingdom, and in time of peace to and from any part of the Continent, between the 35th and 60th Degrees of North Latitude, without being required to pay additional Premium, or to procure a license from the Directors. This Company continue to advance Money on Annuity, secured on Freehold, Copyhold, or long Leasehold Property, or Money in the Funds. JOHN CLARK, Managing Director.

DUBLIN and BRISTOL—The ST. PATRICK sails from Bristol every Tuesday, and from Dublin every Friday; the HIBERNIA leaves Bristol every Friday, and Dublin every Tuesday. The following are the hours of departure for the next four weeks.

From Bristol	From Bristol
July 29 — 10 morning	Aug. 15 — 1 afternoon
Aug. 1 — 1 afternoon	19 — 6 morning
5 — 6 morning	22 — 7 morning
8 — 8 morning	26 — 9 morning
12 — 10 morning	29 — 11 morning

From Dublin, at from 7 to 9 o'clock each morning.—The size and strength of these superb Packets, and the immense power of their engines, being nearly double that of any others upon the station, required for passages across the channel certain and regular; they are not subject to the annoyance of carrying troops for the War-office, nor to the inconvenience of waiting for tides among the dangerous shoals of the Liffey, to take them up to Dublin, their passengers being landed at the fine harbour of Kingstown, in large commodious boats be longing to the establishment, where carriages are readily procured to convey them to Dublin, the latter being only five miles, and the road delightful. As the Packets sail punctually, passengers are required to be on board half an hour before the time stated.—Births secured on application, post paid, to Mr. Thomas b. Frotheroe, Cumberland Basin, Bristol, or Mr. Geo. E. Davies, Great Brunswick-street, Dublin, and further information will be given by Mr. J. Lancaster, No. 12 Regent-street, Pall Mall, London, or Mr. Reilly, York House, Bath.

A WORD IN TIME.—T. BISH, of the Old State Lottery Offices, 4, Cornhill, and 9, Charing Cross, thinks it right to lay before his best Friends, the Public, some important facts respecting the present Lottery.—First—It is a Government Lottery for 200,000 Prize Money, to be drawn according to the old regular system,—every Ticket singly—each deciding its own fate and no other.—Secondly.—There are Three 20,000l. Prizes, Two 10,000l. Prizes, and Thirty-four 1000l. Capitals, all Money, and 10,000l. for the very First Prize drawn out of the Wheel.—Thirdly.—There are more Prizes than Blanks!—Fourthly, (and the most important point of all)—The Tickets and Shares are very considerably cheaper than they have been in any Lottery for Thirty Years, owing to their being all on Sale in the open Stock Market with the other Government Funds and Securities, instead of being locked up in the hands of Contractors, as heretofore; but as by this system the price of Lottery Tickets, like that of any other article, will be influenced by the demand, there is every probability of a very considerable advance soon taking place; for T. BISH assures his Friends, that the Sale is great beyond precedent. The arrangements of the Scheme, and the low Price of the Tickets, having rendered this the most popular Lottery that has been for many Years. Tickets and Shares are selling by T. BISH, Stock-Broker, No. 4, Cornhill, and 9, Charing-Cross, of whom Schemes may be had, gratis. ☞ BISH is so proverbially successful in the sale of great Prizes, that any particulars are unnecessary; suffice it to say he sold 25 Capitals last Lottery alone. N.B. The DRAWING begins 25th of SEPTEMBER.

WILLIAM JONES (late Walsh) Operative Chemist to His Royal Highness the Duke of York.—The Original GINGER SEEDS having for nearly thirty years been patronised by the Public, and recommended by Medical Men of the first eminence, their beneficial effects have become fully established; in consequence of which, many sorts have been offered for sale of a very inferior quality, which has, in a great measure, brought the above elegant preparation into great disrepute. The Public are therefore informed, that they are prepared, solely at the original Warehouse, No. 100, Strand, by WILLIAM JONES, successor to the late Mr Walsh. Where are also to be had WALSH'S DINNER PILLS—DOCTOR MOSELEY'S ANTIBILIOUS PILLS—WALSH'S GOUT CORDIAL—And WELCH'S FEMALE PILLS. The efficacy of those Medicines being universally known, requires no recommendation.

Assurances are effected by this Society upon the lives of persons in the Army, the Navy, the Church, the Law, and in every other station of life.

This is not a Society of mutual Assurance, and the assured are exempted from the proprietors from all responsibility.

As large a proportion of the savings as shall be deemed consistent with the security of the Society, will be periodically divided between the assured and the proprietors, as follows: Four-fifths will be added to the sums specified in the policies effected for the whole term of life, to be payable at the expiration of the term, and the remaining One-fifth will be carried over to the Proprietors' Guarantee Fund.

No extra premium is required from persons in the Army or Navy, unless they be called into actual service.

No entrance money is charged; nor is any charge made for any policy, except the cost of the stamp.

Arrangements have been made, under which assurances may be effected on the lives of persons resident at considerable distances from London, without the payment of a fine for non-appearance at the Office.

Attendance daily at the Office, from ten till four, where a Prospectus, and every other information respecting the Society, may be obtained.

☞ The Board Days are on Tuesdays and Fridays, at Two o'clock.

TRANSPARENT BLINDS.—W. BACON, inventor of superior Transparent Window Blinds, and imitation of stained glass, 40, Great Russel-street, Bloomsbury, respectfully informs the nobility, gentry, and his friends generally, that he has prepared an elegant assortment of the above articles, consisting of architectural, Italian, Swiss, and rural scenery, correct in drawing, colouring, and general effect, also various designs of GOTHIC devices, in the Bill, in imitation of stained glass, well adapted for church, chapel, library, and staircase windows. Gentlemen resident in the country may be supplied with blinds painted to any design, mounted complete for fixing, by sending the exact dimensions of their windows. Holland blinds, plain or with neat printed borders. Near the British Museum.

PORTRAIT of his Most Gracious Majesty King GEORGE IV. from a Drawing by WIVELL. This Portrait continues to attract the highest admiration. Not many weeks have elapsed since it was first announced for publication, yet such is the sensation excited by it, that it may now be seen handsomely framed in the houses of more than half the Nobility and Gentry of the United Kingdom. The exquisite execution of the Engraving does ample justice to the extraordinary merit of the drawing, faithfully conveying all the life, character, expression and intelligence so striking in that masterly performance, and which so pre-eminently distinguish this Portrait of our Illustrious Sovereign from all others. Proof Impressions 1l. 1s. Prints 12s. A Portrait of his Royal Highness the Duke of York is in preparation by the same Artist, to be dedicated by permission (already obtained) to his Majesty.—Persons desirous of possessing Proofs are requested to forward their names to the Publisher without delay.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—The rude and unskilful attempts constantly made to supply these substitutes for the masticatory organ, and the disgust which delicacy suffers from the unpleasantry attending them when permanently fixed, have deterred many from adopting the aid and comfort they are capable of affording, independent of the assistance they may contribute to digestion and consequent health. The ingenious application of mechanical science will enable us to obviate all these inconveniences, and allow the wearer at all times to keep the mouth in a state of perfect cleanliness, and to perform the functions of mastication, articulation, &c. with decided ease and comfort.—Mr. NICHOLLS begs to state, that he is in constant attendance from ten to our, and will be happy to give ocular demonstration of the comforts derived from his efforts under every circumstance of simple and complicated deficiency.—115, Fleet-st.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, July 26.—The following circular has been addressed by the Minister for Foreign Affairs, to the Ambassadors and Ministers of the Maritime Powers accredited at the Court of France:—

"MONSIEUR L'AMBASSADEUR—The French Government, faithful to the principles of generosity which it manifested in not issuing letters of marque, and leaving commercial vessels to pass freely, did not think it necessary to announce the effectual blockade of the ports of Spain, before which it had established cruizers. It was thought that the laws of war and of nations were sufficiently well known, and that the liberal conduct of France would be so well appreciated, that no attempt would be made to force the formal blockade, and to victual the places besieged by the forces by land and sea of His Most Christian Majesty. Experience has proved the French Government has been deceived. Every day vessels under different flags attempt to introduce provisions and ammunition into the ports of Cadiz, Barcelona, Santona, and St. Sebastian. Several of these vessels, particularly at Cadiz, have been captured by his Majesty's cruizers, and their cargoes placed in depôt.—The Government of His Majesty, desiring to prevent the subjects of neutral powers exposing themselves any longer to the inconvenience of carrying on commercial communications with the blockaded ports, finds itself compelled to declare that the ports of Cadiz, Barcelona, Santona, and St. Sebastian are strictly blockaded. I pray you, Monsieur l'Ambassadeur, to announce to your Government, and make known, that conformably to the principles of maritime war, the vessels of any nation whatsoever, that attempt to enter the ports abovementioned, will be seized by the forces of his Majesty, and confiscated.—The Government of the King hopes that the measures it has adopted will not be of long duration, but that the blockaded ports will soon be re-opened to the commerce of every state.—I have the honour to be, &c.

"Paris, July 24, 1823." "CHATEAUBRIAND."

JULY 28.—It is now averred that the fire at Madrid, as we said, was the result of an infernal machination or the work of some Constitutional scoundrels. Letters and Journals received to-day leave no doubt on that point.

JULY 30.—His Highness the Duke of Angouleme was to set off on the 28th, at nine o'clock in the morning, for Seville; some persons attribute his departure to his wish of occupying a more military position than that of Madrid, and it is affirmed, that Marshal Lauriston will replace the Prince; others state that his Highness wishes to be near the operations before Cadiz. It was reported on 'Change, that the Spanish Government had no other object in the sortie from the Isle of Leon than to put Riego in the field with 10,000 men. It is also asserted that the Empecinado is at Segovia with his corps of partizans. According to the reports to-day, General Bourck, after the affair of the 18th, judged it proper to take a new position.

The Journal de Paris announces that they will soon bombard Corunna, but first they must have bombs, for in Galicia they have none, and not even a single piece of artillery for a siege.

The King of Portugal had requested permission of his Catholic Majesty that his august daughters, and the Infants Don Carlos and Sebastian, might pass a few months in Portugal, more particularly those in which the yellow fever is most prevalent at Cadiz. The Revolutionists have returned the following answer to his Most Faithful Majesty—"The King has consulted his Council, whose opinion is contrary to granting the permission requested."

The Moniteur says—"Letters have been received by express from Corunna. They announce that the place was vigorously attacked on the 15th and 16th inst. by the French troops under the orders of General Bourck. In the first affair, which was very warm, General Wilson had his thigh pierced by a ball, and one of his Aides-de-camp was mortally wounded. We are also informed that Ferrol had opened its gates on the 14th by capitulation, and that Morillo was marching upon St Jacques of Compostello and Vigo."

A private letter from Perpignan, the contents of which it is said may be relied on, states that Llobetas and Rotten, with an imposing force, had left Barcelona, and were on the rear of the French army. Milans was in the field on another point. The blockade is said to be anything but rigid, and up to the 19th instant had caused little or no inconvenience.

PORT ST. MARIE, JULY 18.—I wrote you word yesterday that a Spanish Officer had, with a degree of noble rashness, swam over the canal to bring some very important information to General Bourdesoult; report says, that the advices he has brought give great hopes of a speedy denouement, but at the same time that they seem to require the presence of his Royal Highness the Duke of Angouleme in the vicinity of Cadiz.

SEU D'URGEL, JULY 8.—Details of the Affair of Llobregat, July 10.—The Constitutionalists struck their tents the first of this month, which they had in the plains of Barcelona, to establish their head-quarters on the other side of the Llobregat. Llobera is at Martorell with 2000 men. The division of Manso is stationed at Villafranca, with more than 1000 men, and Milans has 5000. They are masters of the important post of Molins del Rey, but the attack of the French was directed to dislodge them from that important situation.—[The above ends with the French account of the attack, in which they succeeded.]

FRENCH OFFICIAL ACCOUNT OF THE SORTIE FROM CADIZ.

MADRID, JULY 20.—On the morning of the 16th, 8 or 9000 men, supported by the fire of 60 pieces of cannon and nine gun-boats, made a sortie from the Isle of Leon and Trocadero, advancing in six columns on the different points of our line. The right column, about 20,000 strong, passed the canal by the fort of St. Petri. Three other columns debouched by the bridge of Suazo; one consisting of between 2000 and 3000 men, with artillery, took the direction of Chiclana; another, consisting of between 1200 and 1500 men, and 150 cavalry, advanced on the redoubt of Belluno; and another, amounting to between 1200 and 1500 men, marched on the mill of Osio, which was fortified and occupied by a company of sharp-shooters. The fifth column, consisting of between 1000 and 1200 men, left the Caracca to march on the redoubt Ruffin; and finally, the sixth, amounting to upwards of 1000 men, issued from the Trocadero. At Puerto Real, a company of grenadiers and one of the sharp-shooters of the 36th, after waiting until the enemy came within 20 paces before they fired, advanced on his flank with such boldness, that he retired in the greatest confusion, pursued as far as his pont-on bridge by our two companies, who, notwithstanding the fire of 20 pieces of artillery, made several prisoners; the fire of 20 pieces of artillery, made several prisoners; the line of fire of 20 pieces of artillery, made several prisoners; the line of fire of 20 pieces of artillery, made several prisoners; the line of

The Dublin Morning Post mentions that the news of the abandonment of the Bill to repeal the Spitalfields Acts was received by the weavers in that City with great rejoicings. They had bonfires, illuminations, &c. and a triumphal arch extending from one side of the street to the other, which was ornamented with blue ribbon, laurel, &c. with the shuttles of the different branches appended. The festivity of the weavers was peaceful throughout the evening.

On Wednesday, the 15th inst. Bartholomew Molony, Esq. High Sheriff for the Barony of Tully, sent three of his men to drive for rent in the neighbourhood of Sixmilebridge; a large mob soon assembled and attacked the three men, one of whom was so desperately beaten that his life is despaired of.—Ennis Chron.

On Saturday (July 22) an inquest was held on the bodies of Thomas Fleming and Sarah Kelly, two servants of David John Wilson, of Esq. It appears that a dispute had arisen between the servants, and on investigation Mr. Wilson was compelled to discharge one of them; an attachment seemed to exist between Fleming and Kelly. On Monday morning Fleming said he would shoot himself, and took a pistol, which he found in the kitchen, for that purpose, with the pistol being taken from him, he went out towards the river Shannon, threw off his coat on the bank of the river, and told Mr. W.'s, after he left the house, Sarah followed him immediately, and before him jump in, she, in attempting to save him was drowned. Sarah was a married man, rather in good circumstances, and bore a correct character. The verdict of the Jury was—"That Fleming by his death by drowning himself in a fit of mental derangement, and that Sarah came by her death by being drowned in attempting to save Thomas Fleming."—Ennis Chronicle.

Assizes, July 26.—Abduction of Miss Goold.—After Baron Richards's Charge to the Grand Jury, James Leahy, Maurice Leahy, and David Leahy, for the abduction of Miss Goold, who had entered into their own recognizances since last Assizes, came forward, when Mr. Pennefather having been made acquainted with their case, the Clerk told them that they were now discharged from their recognizances, and at liberty—the omission of "then and there," in the body of the indictment, had saved their lives, which had been forfeited to the laws. He was happy to hear that their previous character was good. To the laws of their country they were indebted for their safety, and he hoped such lenity would be a lesson to them for the future conduct—such was not the code, his Lordship emphatically stated, that they would bring on the country.—The Clerk of the Crown was directed to record their appearance, and they were accordingly discharged.

Spring Assizes.—Patrick M'Cormick, John Riley, Michael Smith, Anthony Donovan, and James Kelly. The prisoners were then given in charge—That on the 8th of April, at Sarsfieldstown, in this county, Patrick M'Cormick, with a loaded gun, discharged and fired at Alexander Mackay, one of the guards of the Derry coach, and inflicted in his breast one mortal wound of which he instantly expired, and did John Riley was aiding and assisting, &c.—A second indictment charged the prisoners with having, on the 8th of April last, at Sarsfieldstown, feloniously robbed his Majesty's mail, which had been sent from the Dublin Post-office. Sackville-street, containing mails for Monaghan, Omagh, Ardee, Clogher, &c. and also having aided and assisted on the same day and place, in feloniously killing and murdering Alexander Mackay.—Several witnesses were examined to prove the charge against the prisoners (two of whom, Michael Toole and John Hughes, were approvers), and they in substance stated, that previous to the 8th of April last, there had been a consultation by the prisoners at the bar, for the purpose of devising the best means of robbing the mail. This outrage was planned and discussed amongst them, in a cool and manner regularly debated, and all the other circumstances were arranged by the prisoners. There was even an actual examination from the party to reconnoitre the line of road where the outrage was to be passed, in order to choose the most eligible spot for the attack. A suitable one was therefore selected, contiguous to a farm-house, in the yard of which there were cars, and other obstructive articles, necessary to impede the coach on the moment of its attack; this spot was near to a smith's forge, where sledges, hammers, &c. were procured to break the trunks and lockers of the coach. The assailing party were numerous, and all armed with ready weapons to attack on the approach of the mail-coach. When it had arrived at the appointed spot it was violently assailed by a number of shots, the result of which was the death of Alexander Mackay, one of the guards, who had made an heroic and courageous resistance; but which the passengers deeming to be fruitless, prevented any further resistance, and interior shielding themselves up to the banditti. The robbery and plunder were very considerable, each man's share amounting to the sum of 91l. after having robbed the coach, the booty was taken to Garston Bog, and there concealed until the following night, when the party met at the house of one Scahan, where the booty was divided, share and share alike. One of the prisoners, Michael Smith, intimated through his agent a wish to withdraw his plea of "Not Guilty," and plead "Guilty." The Chief Baron, on the score of humanity, would not allow the original plea to be altered; evidence was called for the prosecution, and after an examination of great length, the Jury, after upwards of two hours deliberation, returned a verdict of Guilty against all the prisoners. By order of the Court, Patrick M'Cormick was put forward, when his Lordship addressed the culprit on the magnitude and enormity of the crime upon which he had been just convicted—the prisoner was the nefarious and atrocious outrage a principal and leader, it was in vain for him to build upon any hopes of escaping the awful fate that awaited him, and the just punishment due to his crimes. He was then sentenced to be hanged. Anthony Donovan and Edward Kelly pleaded guilty to the indictment for the robbery of the Belfast mail on the 30 of January last. Lawrence Caffrey, who was in custody charged with the same offence, died in gaol two days previous to the assizes. By the event of this day the County has got rid of this most notorious banditti, whose nocturnal depredations and daring outrages have made them the terror of the neighbourhood.

Trial at Assizes.—The King, at the prosecution of Sir Charles Gordon, v. John B. H. Curran, Esq. and Capt. Neil M'Kennon.—Mr. Serjeant opened the pleadings. In the month of February last Sir Chas. Gordon was in London, away from the regiment, which was then in Ireland; when he received at his lodgings in Argyle-street a visit from Capt. M'Kennon, who was at that time in treaty about the sale of a commission. During that visit Capt. M'Kennon first insinuated that he suspected him of improper freedom with his wife (Mrs. Gordon,) and asked him where he had been in September last; (Sir Charles replied, (we believe,) at Heydon, in Yorkshire; but Mr. M'Kennon asserted that he had been at Bruff. This Sir Charles denied—he offered him every explanation in his power; he assured him he had never seen his wife but in his presence; and even offered him a statement of the times and places when he had seen his lady, and used his power to remove the suspicions which had taken possession of the mind of his friend. The delusion, however, of Capt. M'Kennon was too strongly and too deeply rooted to leave him open to conviction, and he inconsiderately rejected this candid and manly offer, stating that the wrongs he had sustained were too grievous to be done away with such an assurance. Here the matter rested: Captain M'Kennon sold his commission; Sir C. returned to his regiment, and the event of the matter until he received the message that occasioned the institute the present suit. Sir Charles was now in Court to answer upon the solemn obligation of an oath, before his country and God, the truth of what he had stated at the interview in question—that he had never injured Capt. M'Kennon in the manner charged—but it was a great injustice to impute the crime to him—and that he had never given Capt. M'Kennon any cause of offence whatever. Mrs. Gordon was examined, and proved the statement of the learned counsel. He underwent a cross-examination by the counsel for the defendant. Plaintiff's counsel expressed a hope that enough had been done to enable Captain M'Kennon to see how unfounded his claims had been, and again offered the terms already proposed. Defendant's Counsel said they had one question to ask, which was that Sir Charles would answer with candour:—Did you tell Captain M'Donnell that you wished him to inform Capt. M'Kennon that you had executed his commission?—I positively did not. The defendant's counsel then consulted, and on the terms for ceasing the action being again proffered, they accepted them, at the same time stating that the defendant was not incited to send the message, as to the conviction of the improper attentions of Sir C. Gordon to Mrs. Gordon from his (Sir Charles) having violated a pledge which he had given him relative to the delivery of his communication to Colonel M'Kennon. Recognizances were then entered into by Captain Curran to keep the peace towards Sir Charles Gordon; himself in the sum of 3000, and Captain Lunt, his surety, in 2000. Mr. Curran was required to give any bail, and a verdict of acquittal was recorded.

Shrewsbury.—The trial of Mr. and Mrs. Knight for shop-lifting, having excited great interest, the Court was crowded to excess. The female prisoner, who has borne the name of Captain Knight in the neighbourhood, and who is said to have moved in fashionable circles, some months ago took a cottage near Shrewsbury, where he resided with his wife until they were taken into custody. Two indictments, each for stealing articles of small value, were found against them by the Grand Jury. Mr. Knight, a tall, dark man, with rather a military air, appeared at the bar in rather a shabby and negligent dress; Mrs. Knight stood charged with privately stealing a quantity of curtain rings, brass hinges and nails, the property of Thomas Ansley, from his shop in the market place, Shrewsbury; they severally pleaded not guilty. Park summed up the evidence, directing the Jury that in point of law, the female prisoner was entitled to an acquittal. The Jury, under this direction, immediately found Mr. Knight Guilty, Mrs. Knight Not Guilty.

Mr. and Mrs. Knight again stood charged with having on the same 30th of June stolen a prayer-book, a parcel of cards, and a number of pen-holders, the property of Mr. Howells. Several witnesses proved the facts. Mr. Justice Park, in his charge to the Jury, again directed them to acquit the woman, but informed them if Knight were present, acting in concert with her, he would be guilty of stealing as much as if he had taken the goods with his own hand. The Jury immediately found Knight Guilty, and as before acquitted his companion. Mr. Justice Park then adjudged that he should be transported for the term of his natural life. The prisoner, when he heard his sentence, seemed for a moment astonished; but he apparently made a strong effort to master his feelings, and walked with an air of indifference from the bar. The lady wept while the Judge was passing sentence.

The King v. Whitcombe.—This was an indictment against the defendant, for misconduct in the discharge of his office of Coroner; first, for unlawfully calling before him, before swearing in the Jury, divers persons, and enquiring the means and manner of the death of Mrs. Newton; secondly, that before swearing in the Jury he conversed and had communication with John Newton, the husband, well knowing him to be suspected of having caused the death of his wife, by violent means, and undertook to persuade the Jury he did not cause the death by violent or unlawful means; the third, for the dismissal of twelve Jurymen; fourthly, that Mr. Coley examined the body of the deceased, and had deposed that there was a bruise and laceration in a certain part of the body, which was the cause of the death; nevertheless that he (the Coroner) endeavoured to convince the Jury the cause was different and natural; the fifth charge was, that the Jury had opportunities of viewing the body of the deceased, but was prevented by him. Several witnesses proved these allegations, but the most material was Mr. James Milman Coley, a surgeon, who examined the body, and detailed the particulars of a conversation with the defendant on the subject. The witness said, I observed a mark on one of the shins, which appeared to have been occasioned by a kick, and not a burn or scald. Mr. Whitcombe had an opportunity of seeing these marks; and I remarked to him, "this looks like a kick." He said, "Oh, no! it is a burn; she has burned her shins by the fire." I observed an injury on the hand, as if great violence had been used; one of the fingers was either dislocated or fractured, and Mr. Whitcombe could not avoid seeing it. These were the external bruises I remarked at that time. The surgeon then went on to describe the observations which he made on opening the body. On the Coroner's leaving the room after the examination, he said, "I see, Mr. Coley, this is a very simple business; no criminal proceeding can arise out of it. I had subpœned twenty-four Jurymen, but I shall retain only twelve, and dispatch twelve." A very short time afterwards, while I was washing my hands in the room where the body lay, in consequence of a message from me to him, he came up stairs, and I told him I felt dissatisfied with the proceedings he was going to adopt respecting a Jury, and that he must take all the responsibility on himself. He said, "Certainly, there is not the least necessity for more than twelve Jurymen." I followed him down stairs, and was present while 12 men were sworn. The Coroner said, "Gentlemen, I am happy to inform you this is not so serious a business as we apprehended; nothing criminal can attach to any one; only twelve Jurymen will be necessary." And in consequence part went away. The witness then described other conversations with the defendant when the latter called on him. He told me he called to get me to sign a fair copy of my evidence at the inquest. I told him Newton had been committed on suspicion of being guilty of murder. He said a magistrate may commit on suspicion, but a coroner could only commit on facts. He said he had no doubt in his own mind that Newton had killed his wife, but the facts were not sufficiently strong to find him guilty. I told him the public and jury were dissatisfied with the verdict at the inquest. After which he said they had better not subpœna him at the trial; for if they did it must be in the prisoner's favour. That was after he said he had no doubt Newton had killed his wife. I was at Shrewsbury on Newton's trial. I saw the coroner in this Court just before the trial began. He said, "Mr. Coley, you have come on Newton's business, I suppose?" I told him I had. He then said we must do what we can to get him off.—The Foreman of the Jury, John Davies, said they went into the room to view the body, but only saw her face, the rest of the body being covered with a sheet. He said, when the evidence had closed we went to another room to consider of the verdict. I gave it in as foreman, "That she died through the loss of blood." The coroner turned his head towards Mr. Whitmore, and said, "Oh, then we'll say she died from the visitation of God." Mr. Whitmore said, "No, put it down as the verdict is given in."—Other Jurors corroborated this testimony.—On the part of the defendant Thomas Whitmore, Esq. M.P. and several other respectable witnesses were called to shew that the enquiry had been fairly carried on, and they spoke to the defendant's general character for uprightness.—Mr. Baron Hullock commented upon the whole of the evidence. He said it was not necessary that a bribe should be proved to have been received, and it was the province of the Jury to say what were the motives that induced the defendant to act in the manner proved by witnesses who were uncontradicted and unimpeached. The defendant, it was proved, wished to alter the verdict to "Died by the visitation of God," he having at that time, and subsequently, expressed his conviction that Newton killed his wife; these facts, joined also with the fact of the defendant having said, "that if he were called on Newton's trial, he must be a witness in his favour;" and his also stating to Mr. Coley, in Court, "that they must do all they could to bring Newton off," were circumstances pregnant with suspicion against the defendant.—At 12 o'clock on Tuesday night the Jury returned a verdict of Guilty, but that there was no proof of his having received a bribe.—He will be called up for judgment in the Court of King's Bench next Term, his attorney passing his word for his appearance.

Sussex.—John Jones stood capitally indicted for committing a certain assault upon Sarah Hampton, a young girl, 13 years of age. The unfortunate girl was the daughter of a small farmer, who was in the employ of the Earl of Chichester. The prisoner was employed to milk cows in company with the girl, and on one or these occasions, viz. the 27th of May last, between 6 and 7 o'clock in the evening, the prisoner succeeded in effecting his base intentions. From the simplicity and backwardness of the girl in depcsing to the fact, to an extent sufficient to authorize the Jury in finding a verdict, the effect of which would have been to take away the life of the prisoner, the Learned Baron directed the Jury to find a verdict of acquittal.—His Lordship reprimanded the prisoner in very strong terms before he left the bar.

Thomas Howard and Henry Worley were tried and found Guilty of an attempt to extort money from a person of the name of Mills, under a threat to charge him with a shocking offence.—The former was sentenced to transportation for seven years, and the latter to 12 months imprisonment.

Durham.—Thomas Watson was indicted for robbing, on the highway, Jane Sherlock, on the 27th of August last, in the neighbourhood of South Shields. The circumstances were these:—The prosecutrix, Jane Sherlock, was going into South Shields at nine o'clock, on the night of the day mentioned in the indictment, when she was met by the prisoner, who charged her, as a married woman, with having indulged in a profligate intercourse with another man, and was proceeding to use some violence to make her yield to his wishes, when she offered to give him all the money she had if he would desist. Relying on his promise to let her go away, she gave him sixpence and half-a-crown; however, he still continued his attempts to accomplish his purpose, but without effect. And he was now prosecuted for having robbed her on the highway of 3s.—Several witnesses were called, who confirmed all the circumstantial part of her testimony.—Mr. Justice Bayley, in charging the Jury, said, that though a person voluntarily gave money to another, still if it were given under the influence of a threat or menace, and with a view to make that person desist from using further violence, it amounted in effect, and the law so held it, to a highway robbery.—The Jury returned a verdict of Guilty.

Exeter.—Parker v. Bartlett and another.—Mr. Sergeant Peil, for the plaintiff, stated that this was an action of ejectment to recover possession of an estate called Shute, in the County of Devon, at present held by the defendants, who were sisters of the plaintiff's father—a man at whose name the country had once trembled. The Jury would recollect, that in the year 1797 the inhabitants of London experienced a visitation which no other metropolis had ever suffered, by the blockade of her proud port, not by hostile natives, not by a foreign foe, but by her own ships manned by British seamen. The leader of that memorable mutiny at the Nore was no other than Richard Parker, the father of the present plaintiff, John Charles Parker. That unhappy man had at last paid the forfeit of his crimes, for many undoubtedly he had committed—The only question which it was his duty to satisfy the Jury upon, was the legitimacy of the plaintiff: because, if he could establish that he was the heir-at-law of the last Parker who was in possession of the estate, there could exist no doubt of his title. Witnesses were called, who proved that the estate had been in the possession of Rd. Parker's eldest brother, and that no issue of him were now alive.—Ann Parker stated that she was the mother of the plaintiff by her late husband, Richard Parker, to whom she was married in the year 1793. He was at that time a master's mate of a man of war. She lived with her father, who was a gentleman farmer. Her acquaintance with Parker first commenced at the Ferry at Leith, from the boat of which he handed her, and at the time he said he would never lose sight of her. They were shortly after married in the Cowgate, Edinburgh, in the presence of her brother, who is now dead, and two of his servants. The plaintiff was born in Edinburgh, ten months after the marriage. They visited Exeter in 1795. In the month of May, 1797, her husband quitted her to join a ship at the Nore, (she was then at Edinburgh,) and she never saw him afterwards. He was buried at Sheerness, but she had the body taken up and buried like a gentlemen at Whitechapel church. The child (the plaintiff) was sent to the Highlands, and has been there ever since with her sister, whom she had visited from time to time.—The Jury found a verdict for the plaintiff.

Suffolk.—Thomas Taylor pleaded guilty to a charge of having set fire to a barn and stables, at Cooms, in April, 1822; a period that will long be remembered in this district, from the dreadful state of alarm in which the country was placed by the frequency of the diabolical crime of which the prisoner was charged. The Learned Judge urged him to withdraw his plea, and abide the event of his trial, but he resolutely persisted, declaring that he had been wretched ever since he committed the crime, and that his conscience compelled him to make the disclosure. His plea was therefore received, and sentence of death recorded against him, but not passed.

Robert Wade, aged 20, was also indicted for feloniously firing a barn at Tattingstone, in March last, in the occupation of a widow, Mrs. Elizabeth Smith; some remarks made by the prisoner at the time of the fire excited suspicion, in consequence of which he was apprehended, and on testimony which hardly admitted the shadow of a doubt, the Jury returned a verdict of Guilty. The Learned Chief Justice immediately prepared to pass the awful sentence of the law, when the unhappy man with the most solemn energy declared his entire innocence of the fact alleged against him, and on the adjuration of his Lordship to prepare for the change which awaited him, and a hope that he might find mercy in another world, he very firmly exclaimed, "I am not afraid."

SURREY SESSIONS.

Wednesday.—Ezekiel Cohen was indicted for obtaining from Ann, the wife of Thomas Dias, a sum of money under false pretences. The prosecution was carried on by the Metropolitan Law Society, against the defendant, for having obtained a sum of money by pretending that he was an attorney. Ann Dias, wife of Thomas Dias, deposed, that in the month of July, 1820, having heard that her horse and cart were taken for having no licence, she was running down Union-street in a great fright, when Lawyer Cohen (the prisoner) met her. They went together to the Catharine Wheel public-house, where he asked her for 6s. 8d. for a lawyer's fee, which she gave him, and he appointed to meet her at the same place on Monday to finish the business, Union Hall police office being then shut. On Monday the prisoner did not come at the time appointed, and witness gave bail for an appearance at the sessions against the conviction, which she told the prisoner when he came. The prisoner afterwards, for the alleged purpose of carrying on the appeal, obtained of her at different times 10s. one guinea, and a half-crown, another 10s. and three guineas. Witness went to the Sessions at Kingston, and having heard her name called in Court, went to the prisoner, who was outside, and asked him to come in. He replied it was time enough, and refused. Witness cried at the refusal, and being advised by a gentleman, she went to the prisoner, and asked him to give up the brief, which he refused, saying it would be time enough next day. The conviction was in consequence confirmed, but the fine was remitted. This testimony was corroborated by other witnesses, and it was given in evidence that the prisoner declared that he was a regularly enrolled attorney.—Mr. James Anderton, solicitor for the Metropolitan Law Society, deposed, that the name of Ezekiel Cohen was not on any of the rolls.—The Jury without hesitation returned a verdict of Guilty.—The prisoner was sentenced to be transported for seven years.

Thursday.—Joseph Price and John Rollowere indicted for assaulting James Walkingshaw. The prosecutor stated, that he went to a public-house in his neighbourhood, in Bermondsey, where the defendants were drinking with several others. On seeing the prosecutor they declared he should treat them all with a gallon of ale; he positively refused; they swore if he did not, they would saw his head off, and frightened him almost out of his wits by calling for a saw for that purpose. Not being able to procure a saw, they determined on hanging him from a tree in a garden behind the house, and took off his neckcloth in preparation. The prosecutor being certain his life was in the greatest danger, drew out his knife, and declared he would cut his way out of the house, or die in the attempt. He was quickly disarmed by the party, who then beat him with a bed post and other weapons, and at last threw him down the steps of the door, by which he was lamed for upwards of a month.—The prisoners were both found Guilty.—Price was sentenced to be imprisoned two months, and Rollo six weeks.

LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR ERSKINE.

At a meeting of the undermentioned Magistrates of the territory of New South Wales, at present residing at Sydney, held on Wednesday, the 12th of February, 1823, J. T. Campbell in the Chair; Present—William Cox, John Piper, Edward Riley, Thomas Macvitie, Alexander Berry, Edward Wollstonecraft, Richard Brooks, per J. Piper, John Oxley, per J. T. Campbell, and Charles Throsby, it was unanimously resolved—That an Address, in the following words, should be presented by the Honour Lieutenant-Governor Erskine, C. B. Colonel, commanding the 48th regiment; and that J. T. Campbell, Wm. Cox, and J. Piper, Esqrs. should be a deputation to deliver the same to his Honour, at such time to-morrow as his Honour would please to appoint.

"To his Honour Lieutenant-Governor Erskine, C. B. Colonel, commanding the 48th Regiment, &c. &c.

"Sir,—We, the undersigned Magistrates of the territory of New South Wales, at present residing in Sydney, beg leave to express our regret at your approaching departure from the Colony, and at the same time to offer our grateful acknowledgements for the upright, impartial, and obliging manner in which you have, for so many years, conducted the high office of our Lieutenant-Governor.

"To the inhabitants of this Colony you have alone been known by your urbanity and politeness, and by the prompt attention invariably shewn to their interests and welfare.

"In conclusion—We beg to offer our sincere wishes for a prosperous voyage to England, and for your enjoyment of every happiness through life.

(Signed) "JOHN THOMAS CAMPBELL.
"WILLIAM COX.
"JOHN PIPER.
"EDWARD RILEY.
"THOMAS MACVITIE.
"ALEXANDER BERRY.
"EDWARD WOLLSTONECRAFT.
"RICHARD BROOKS, per J. PIPER.
"JOHN OXLEY, per J. T. CAMPBELL.
"CHARLES THROSBY."

THE ANSWER.

"To the Magistrates of New South Wales, assembled at Sydney, on the 12th Feb. 1823.

"Gentlemen—The Address you have this day been pleased to honour me with, calls forth my warmest thanks, which I most sincerely beg your acceptance of.

"To meet with the approbation of any body of men must always be pleasing; but when I find my general conduct, for a period nearly of six years, so handsomely approved of by so numerous and respectable a body of the Magistrates of New South Wales, must ever be to me a source of gratification and pride.

"I shall ever feel interested in the prosperity of New South Wales, which, although the most remote, I consider the most valuable of the British Colonies.

"Individually, and generally, I return you many thanks for your kind and friendly wishes for my safe arrival in England; and believe me sincere when I assure you, I shall always be happy to hear of your health and happiness.

(Signed) "JAMES ERSKINE.

Sydney, 13th Feb. 1823. "Lieutenant-Governor of New South Wales."

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, AUGUST 3.

THE KING remains at Windsor, and takes his usual airings in the neighbourhood, but it is expected that HIS MAJESTY will very shortly resume his aquatic excursions.

THAT we were not wrong in anticipating the mischief and dangers which we foresaw as consequent upon the quackery of the WILBERFORCES and the BUXTONS, we have now the melancholy satisfaction of perceiving —SUCH HAS ALREADY BEEN THE EFFECT OF THE REPORTS WHICH HAVE REACHED BARBADOES TOUCHING THE ROMANTIC EMANCIPATION OF THE BLACKS, WHICH WAS DISCUSSED IN PARLIAMENT, that SIR HENRY WARDE, the Governor, found it necessary to issue the following Proclamation on the 10th of June:—

"BARBADOES.—By His Excellency SIR HENRY WARDE, Knight Commander of the Most Honourable Military Order of the Bath, His Majesty's Captain-General and Governor in Chief of this Island, Chancellor, Ordinary, and Vice-Admiral of the Same:

"(L. S.) HENRY WARDE.

"A PROCLAMATION.

"Whereas it has been represented to me that various unfounded reports have been spread among the Slaves in this Island, stating, that they may shortly expect their freedom:

"I feel it my duty to assure them, that no grounds exist for such false reports—had they been true I must have been the first person to have been made acquainted with them by his Majesty's Government, and any intelligence which might in any respect have been beneficial to them would have been immediately publicly proclaimed for their information, in the same manner, and with the same kind feelings with which I now declare to them that the rumour of a speedy emancipation is FALSE; and that all persons who may fill their minds with such falsehoods must be their enemies, and wish to URGE THEM TO MISCONDUCT, which would entirely put an end to the benefit otherwise to be expected from any kind intentions towards them.

"The Governor earnestly requests that all owners and managers of estates will cause this Proclamation to be read to their Negroes, and FULLY EXPLAINED TO THEM.

"Given under my Hand and Seal at Arms, at Government House, this 10th day of June, 1823, and in the 4th year of His Majesty's Reign.

"God save the King!

"By his Excellency's Command,

"WM. HUSBANDS, Dep. Sec."

The pious endeavours of the canting hypocrites, joined to the active representations of their agents in the colony, have thus already worked as they were expected to work by all, and as IT WAS INTENDED THEY SHOULD WORK, BY A FEW.

We are sorry to be obliged to add that the conversations which have been overheard amongst the negroes, closely resemble those which preceded the insurrection of 1816—that one negro has actually been committed for trial on a charge of exciting the slaves of a neighbouring plantation to revolt, and that the governor had written to the heads of the militia to hold themselves on the alert.

So much for morbid sensibility—hypocritical cant—a thirst for popularity, and the maintenance of HUMBUG.

THE most important intelligence touching Spanish affairs which has of late been received, is that relative to the strict blockade of Cadiz by the French;—it is important at the moment, because those malignants who find comfort, plenty, and prosperity the concomitants of PEACE, are struggling to make it a ground of quarrel between FRANCE and ENGLAND.

There are different degrees of absurdity in the efforts of these persons; but we confess ourselves greatly surprised at finding an extract from the journal kept on board a steamboat! which runs between London and Cadiz, published in the MORNING POST of yesterday, containing matter little likely, as we should have thought, to find its way into a loyal and popular paper. There is something excessively ludicrous in certain parts of it; and as we believe the POST has the exclusive honour of its dissemination, we will quote it as a specimen of the ludicrous and the loyal combined:—

"In the Tagus, June 27.

"JUNE 28.—Detained in the river by a heavy gale.

"29.—At half-past 7 A. M. took pilot on board, and weighed, blowing hard; at nine passed the Bar, and the pilot left us; a heavy fog, and a heavier swell.

"30.—A beautiful day, and a fair wind, with a smooth sea; at six, A. M. doubled Cape St. Vincent; at 11 passed Lagos; and at 2 P. M. veered round Cape St. Mary; spoke a Spanish corvette, and heard that Cadiz was invested; at 8 P. M. 35 miles from land, and 55 miles from Cadiz.

"JULY 1. 4. A. M.—Made the land, and were fired at by a French frigate, and obliged to bring to; a French officer came on board, who ordered us to steer a different course, that we might overtake the French Admiral, and obtain permission to go into Cadiz!!—Here let me pause for a moment to indulge in one expression of horror at this humiliation: I that had been accustomed to sweep the horizon, and to kindle at the sight of a capture, a certain capture, over whatever number of guns the French flag might float, to be obliged to see this!—God knows what I might feel did I take my wife in adultery; but I hardly think the sense of loss of honour, disgrace, and bitter wrong, a burning of the soul, with sickness of the head, could surpass what I endured when I saw the French lieutenant swagger on the deck of the Royal George YACHT, and direct the course of the Union flag. Sir JOHN DOYLE went on board the French ship, and obtained the gracious permission of the Admiral to land his passengers in fishing boats at Cadiz, but the yacht could not be allowed to enter the Bay; she might, however, go to San Lucar, which was in possession of the French. These flattering and amicable terms were obtained from a Mons. HAMELIN, Rear Admiral on board Le Colosse, of 74 guns, and 700 men. Having received permission to proceed without the French Lieutenant, and having a passport from the French Admiral, we were soon out of sight, but were presently met by another French frigate, who also fired at us, and we were again obliged to bring to, and Capt. BISSELL went on board. At nine o'clock we were off Cadiz, and those who chose were landed in row-boats at the garrison. The gentleman who went on shore with the mail returned, and said Cadiz was in high feather; that he had seen the King at his residence in the Custom House, amuse himself with flying a kite. At half past 2 P. M. we proceeded to San Lucar, where we anchored at 8 P. M.

"JULY 2.—Landed at San Lucar, an ordinary town; some French officers came on board, who said they had marched through Spain, via Madrid and Seville, one thousand eight hundred miles, without firing a shot.

"N. B. The Peninsula, from N. to S. is seven hundred miles, being the extreme length.

"At four, P. M. 200 French troops were drawn up in the square to march for Cadiz—all drunk.

"[Here follows a corroboration of the Seville conspiracy for effecting the KING's escape; the particulars of which we have already laid before the public.]

"The conspirators, amongst whom is the ARCHBISHOP of TOLEDO, are confined in the prison of the five towns in the Island de Leon.

"The British Consul at San Lucar received a dispatch from SIR WILLIAM A'COURT, the English Ambassador, addressed 'To be forwarded immediately on his Britannic Majesty's service to the British Vice-Consul at Cadiz.' A Courier was sent on accordingly. But the DUKE DE CHRON, the French Commandant, refused to let the Courier pass into Cadiz, and the letter was sent round by sea three days after it should have arrived. What will GEORGE CANNING and ARTHUR WELLESLEY say to this? And what will GEORGE the FOURTH, and the British Parliament say to it? Neither the flag which represents the British nation, nor the signature of the Ambassador, who represents the King of ENGLAND, are regarded by the Admiral or General of France.

"JULY 3, 4, and 5.—Remained at San Lucar—waited on the Prince of ANGLONA, and presented my letter of introduction, who received me very kindly; he is the son of the Duke of OSSUNA, one of the first Spanish Grandees. Some persons arrived in the Dwarf cutter, from Cadiz, who declare the place can never be taken, unless it is betrayed. Cadiz, who declare the place can never be taken, twenty and 30,000 troops PROVISIONS ARE IN ABUNDANCE, AND BETWEEN twenty and 30,000 troops in the garrison, who declare themselves ready to die in the cause.

"JULY 6.—Got under weigh, and obtained leave from the French Admiral to anchor off Cadiz; went on shore; delighted with the beauty and splendour of this unrivalled sea-port; visited the Sitting of the Cortes, which is held in a Church. Sir ROBERT WILSON has the rank of General in the Spanish service, with power to organize corps.

"JULY 8.—Took on board forty-seven passengers for Lisbon, Vigo, Corunna, and England; weighed, and stood to sea; took on board a Gentleman charged with Sir WILLIAM A'COURT's despatches, who had been fired at, and nearly killed by the French.

"JULY 10.—Fine weather; brought to off Lagos; at 8 P.M. passed Cape St. Vincent, wind and tide against, BUT STILL GOING SEVEN MILES AN HOUR.

"JULY 11.—Entered the Tagus, passed Belem Castle, hoisted the quarantine flag; the steam vessel between Lisbon and Oporto ran on the rocks, from the ignorance of the Pilot, and all lost.

"JULY 12.—We proceed from hence to Vigo, where I join Sir ROBERT WILSON, and from whence I shall continue my Journal."

This precious morceau is well worth analyzing. The sensations of an Englishman who saw a French Lieutenant swagger on the deck of an English man of war, or on the deck of the ROYAL GEORGE YACHT, might feel sorrow and burning as much as if he had taken his wife in adultery—(the oddest simile ever hit upon, by way of being complimentary to the parties most particularly concerned)—but when it is recollected that the Royal George in question is not a man of war, —that the Royal George yacht is now waiting the KING's orders at Spithead, and that the Royal George upon whose deck a French Lieutenant swaggered, is a public passage-boat—a steamer, which sails for hire and pay, and, as the journal itself shews, sails for the purpose of conveying partizans to Spain, we honestly confess that we do not enter into all the fine feelings of the Journalist.

"SIR JOHN DOYLE went on board the French ship"—lest the world should suppose that the General and K.C.B. who was so long Governor of Guernsey, and who is full of Whig wit and conviviality, was the SIR JOHN DOYLE here alluded to, it is but right to let our country cousins know that it is SIR JOHN MILLEY DOYLE, a much younger man—a K.C.B., and moreover, K.S.P., i. e. Knight of the Steam Pachet. This gentleman went and asked leave to land "HIS PASSENGERS," which was granted.

The next assertion made is so evidently a truth that it gives a colour to the whole story—"the gentleman who went on shore had seen the KING at his residence at the Custom-house FLYING A KITE!"—it does not appear very necessary to make any remark we think upon this little statement, but we marvel the more at the conduct of the POST in publishing such things.

The appeal to the DUKE of WELLINGTON and MR. CANNING in terms of vulgar familiarity which follows may be quite in character with the mate (for such we conclude him to be under all the circumstances) of SIR JOHN DOYLE's passage-boat, but is certainly not in the style usually adopted by a fashionable newspaper, nor can we yet imagine what strange fancy has seized the POST which can have induced it not only to change its principles, but its mode of expressing itself.

On the 8th of July came a gentleman—all the people in the steamer are gentlemen—"who had been fired at and nearly killed by the French." This sounds odd enough—that he might have been fired at is probable; but how he could have been nearly killed, unless by the alarm, we do not understand; because it is an established axiom that a "miss is as good as a mile," and the different degrees of peril from distant gun shot are calculated with some degree of difficulty.

The observation upon July 10, smells of the shop. "Fine weather, brought to off Lagos, at 8 P. M. passed Cape St. Vincent—wind and tide against, still going seven miles an hour." Here, to our minds, the murder is out—the Journal is a puff, paid for, on the part of the steaming concern; and as for the "Spaniards, the CORTES, or KING FERDINAND," they are mere make-weights in the scale to call attention to the fact, that the Royal George Steam Packet, SIR JOHN MILLEY DOYLE, K.C.B. K.T.S. K.S.P. &c. &c. &c. goes seven miles an hour against wind and tide.

As to the story of abundant provisions and innumerable high spirited troops in Cadiz, we think it necessary only to add this extraordinary tale to King FERDINAND's kite, in order to judge of its veracity.

WILSON, it appears, has power to organize troops—"he can call spirits from the vasty deep—but will they come when he does call?" His wound—if ever he had one—seems forgotten—and certainly nobody appears to know exactly where it is, one paper says, he is shot in the leg, and therefore does not intend standing for Southwark at the next election —another tells us, he is wounded in the wrist, and has made a bad hand of it—a third mentions his having been hit in another place, which will prevent his sitting in Parliament again, while a fourth with more reason informs us that he received a musket ball in his head, which passed through the scull without giving him any considerable uneasiness, and without touching the brain—many people say, it was his horse that was shot, and that the Corporal hurt himself in tumbling over him—but even that is doubted by persons who have not seen KING FERDINAND flying a kite!

How circumstances operate upon events. Had WILSON, in the service of his country, received a wound, every British heart would have sympathised with him. As it is—the only reply one gets to any observation upon his mischance, is—"Serve him right, a fool."

THE miracle "wrought" by PRINCE DE HOHENLOHE, a popish priest, upon MISS LALOR, who had been dumb for six years and five months, has been pretty generally talked of, and consequently laughed at; but we find that a name-sake of our steam-packet master DOYLE—a popish bishop—has thought proper to publish an account of this HUMBUG, accompanied by certain remarks and observations, which we consider it quite necessary to notice.

The fact being so well known, we shall pass over the narrative here, and come to the expressions of this soi-disant bishop, touching the present state of POPERY.

"In times when the minds of men are deeply anxious and strongly agitated, they cannot divest themselves of friendship and hatred, of fear and love; and when these passions prevail, they impart their own colours to the subjects of deliberation, and sway the subject of the most enlightened men: we ourselves have our fears which are groundless, and our antipathies which are ill-founded; we are often a prey to false alarms, and impute to others thoughts which, perhaps, they never once conceived—yet we overlook our own mistakes—we pardon our own errors, and why not, dearest brethren, mete to others as we would measure to ourselves? is it not a rule of equity to do so? is it not the law of the Gospel? Time will restore the dominion of truth—facts will disprove the strongest and the loudest imputations—patience will soften down the anger of our opponents—and charity will sweeten even the bitterness of their gall. They will yet blush at the injuries they have done us, and finding no justification for themselves in your reproaches, they may yet relent—nay, they may forgive, and be unmindered amongst your friends; but the storm of passion must be first allayed. Who has ever been converted till he ceased to hate? Who ever repaired an injury whilst he was upbraided with injustice? Recall to your minds, dearest brethren, the situation of those whose proceedings you complain of, and see whether that 'charity which thinketh not evil,' may not excuse their errors, and palliate their faults! Have they not imbibed with their mothers' milk prejudices which nothing but education, of which many of them are destitute, and a free intercourse of Catholics could remove? The nurse told them you were a nation of idolators, their pastors pointed you out to them as followers of Anti-Christ, their books of instruction represented you as the enemies of God, the LAWS proclaimed to them that you were disaffected, and the Courts of Justice not unfrequently announced it in judgment. When the Laws and the Prophets were thus 'PERVERTED' to condemn you—when from the pulpit, as in the nursery, you were denounced as heathens and publicans—when the titles of property, the pride of conquest and of ancestry, the laws of the empire, the maxims of the wise, the conduct of all those placed in 'authority,' proclaimed you as impious or disaffected, how could you be estimated as ordinary men? How could you be considered as religious Christians and faithful subjects? And if to these be added any infringement on the privileges of those who, from time immemorial, have been your masters—if men ESSENTIAL to the law were at once to be elevated to the rank of citizens by a new and a too perfect kind of social compact, could the laws themselves endure it? Could the master be seated with the servant, or the bondsman with the heir? And if these things have been, and still are, dearest brethren, marvel not if the frame of society be disturbed, and if clashings be produced by every new occurrence to excite old prejudices and inflame every angry passion.

"But, you will ask me, are we then to suffer in silence and not vindicate our good name? FAR FROM IT, BRETHREN—you should uphold, by every lawful means, your own character, and promote your own interests. These interests are the interests of truth and justice, and they must advance. The ways of their progress are obvious, and nothing can retard them but your own imprudence.

"You have increased in property, in numbers, and in strength; these give you a moral weight which carries you forward with an accelerated motion. Education has arrived to a state of excellence amongst those of you who are blessed with the means of obtaining it, and is united with a pure and sound morality. These will illuminate, and enlarge, and direct the movement of our body, that we may act in concert, dissipate prejudice, make our merits manifest, and attach to our cause the virtuous and the intelligent of every creed and class. The progress of our religion, which is such as to excite even our own surprise, will, of itself, make known our principles, and refute every calumny—the piety and zeal of your priesthood, the appearance of your places of worship, the multitudes who frequent them, their pious demeanor, their strict integrity, their faithful attachment to the ever uniform creed of the saints—these of themselves will have, as they daily have, an insensible, but yet a powerful effect; but when aided by the exertions of your friends, and the violence of your enemies, joined to your own willing obedience to the law, were a balance to be found they would compel them to exclaim, 'how lovely are the tabernacles of Jacob, and the tents of Israel!' these are the lawful and efficient means of mitigating the evils you now endure, and a few of the grounds of your future hope. These will plead for you in a language which will speak to the understanding of the wise, to the interests of legislators, and to the hearts of men. Supported on these pillars let your cause rest, and the errors and the tricks of State prejudice, selfishness, and odious privilege, will yield to its power, or seek its alliance. But do not, dearest Brethren, justify intolerance by your imprudence; do not verify the imputations of calumny, by deviating from your usual course; do not paralyze your own energies by dissensions, and enable your opponents to rivet your chains anew. A momentary cloud has overcast the legislature; a bad spirit has breathed on their councils. Some of those who lead in the Senate have adopted a false maxim, others have unwisely exalted an unholy league over thy King's subjects, and placed it perhaps too near the throne. Those men will regret having cast away principle, or acted on a bad one, and the collective wisdom of the nation will yet penetrate this cloud which overhangs it, and by a new effort of its power and its justice secure the throne, and fill with gladness the hearts of the people."

Nothing can be more strongly indicative of the HOPES of these Papists than this titular Bishop's address, which has nothing on earth to do with the miraculous cure of MISS LALOR—perhaps it may not be displeasing to those not fully acquainted with the credulity of the priest-ridden Christians to see the letter, seriously written by a Priest to this very Bishop, detailing the sudden and miraculous cure of the young lady in question.

MISS LALOR having been dumb for nearly seven years, her friends, confident in the powers of PRINCE HOHENLOHE, send to beg him to intercede and get her relief from her dreadful malady, to which the Prince graciously condescends the following reply:—

"To MISS LALOR, and all those who will spiritually unite in prayer,

"On the 10th of June, at nine o'clock, I will agreeably to your request offer my prayers for your recovery—Unite with them at the same time, after having confessed and received the Holy Communion, your own, together with that evangelic fervour, that full and entire confidence which we owe to our Redeemer JESUS CHRIST. Excite in the recesses of your heart the divine virtues of true contrition, of an unbounded confidence that you will be heard, and an immovable resolution of leading an exemplary life for the purpose of preserving yourself in a state of grace.

"Accept the assurance of my consideration.

"Hultenheim, the 9th of May, 1823, near Bamberg."

"His Most Serene Highness recommends some devotion in honor of the Most Holy Name of JESUS and of SR. JOHN NEPOMESCENE, MARTIN MICHAEL, a truly religious man, united in friendship with the Prince and with me, will join his prayers to those of his Highness. To avoid the expence of postage, I shall send this letter by Holland. This instant we have received an account from Verdelais, Diocess of Bordeaux, in France, stating with the utmost joy that a young female, deprived of the use of speech for five years, had been restored to it in the Church, on the day and hour appointed, namely, the 16th of March—'May God grant increase and preservation.'

"On the part of his Most Serene Highness the Prince,

"JAS. FOSTER, Parish Priest.

"To the Most Reverend, &c. &c. James Doyle, O.S.A. Bishop of Kildare and Leighlin, in Ireland, at Carlow."

The following postscript to the directions for Mass is not unworthy of notice:—

"P. S.—As the meridian of Bamberg differs from that of Maryborough, by an hour and about twelve minutes, you can direct the Mass to be celebrated for MISS LALOR at a little before eight o'clock on the 10th of June."

The climax of all this absurdity, however, is to be found in the following account of the miracle; and although we believe it has been published before, we feel it a duty to repeat it here, as a document worthy of preservation by our numerous subscribers:—

"Maryborough, June 11, 1823.

"MY LORD—In compliance with your request, I send you a statement of the facts relative to MISS LALOR, which I have heard from others, and witnessed myself.

"I am now in the house where she was first deprived of her speech. She is at present in the eighteenth year of her age; and as she is connected with most of the respectable Catholic families in this country, and has had frequent intercourse with them, her privation of speech during six years and five months, is established beyond contradiction. Her hearing and understanding remained unimpaired, and she carried a tablet and pencil to write what she could not communicate by signs.

"Medical aid was tried by DOCTOR FERRIS, of Athy, and SURGEON SMITH, of Mountrath, but without effect. The latter Gentleman (as a similar case never occurred in the course of his practice) resolved to have it submitted to the most eminent Physicians in Dublin, of whom were consulted by him, and the result was, that no hope could be entertained of her recovery. This decision was imparted by DOCTOR SMITH to her Father, apart from Mrs. and Miss LALOR; all which circumstances the Doctor recollected on the 14th inst. when he saw MISS LALOR, heard her speak, and declared the cure to be miraculous.

"You, my Lord, are already aware, that according to your directions, written to me on the 1st of June, I waited on MR. LALOR, re-

"To the Right Rev. Dr. Doyle, Old Derrig. Carlow."

Putting out of the question the numerous blunders incident to an Irish correspondence, such as their having ...heard the young lady's confessions by signs," and the ...se which the priest strictly kept by command, having ...acquired somewhat," we ask our readers, our Christian, ...readers, if they could believe such infatuation, ...ignorance, besotted folly as are contained in all this affair, ...exist at this moment in the British empire?

We know nothing of Miss Lalor, and, thank our stars, never met with a dumb girl in all our lives; but since she is a devoted papist, and since devoted papists, between fear and something else, will commit any tom-foolery which their priests, for the advancement of their church, direct them to enact, and since she had her voice perfectly till she was twelve years old, and since she recovered it exactly at nine o'clock—Bentley time—under the auspices of Prince Hohenlohe, a person who has three more h's in his name than are necessary) we honestly confess that, instead of believing in the miracle, which we are not weak or impious enough, thank God, to do, we should rather incline to believe Miss Lalor a novice who had been tutored to the trick by her confessors, and that she is one of many who have either lent or let themselves to imposition, in order to astonish the world at a given and critical period, in favour of the abominations and absurdity of the vain and sickening idolatry of the Popish religion.

The case stands thus—if this Irish titular Bishop and Father O'Connor really believe in this miracle, they are greater fools than we take them to be—if they do not, but carry on the farce which Miss Lalor has acted, wantonly and knowingly to deceive and delude their flocks into implicit obedience to the priesthood—for there is the object—the Bishop and his parish priest are two—what we will not call them here, because it would not read well on a Sunday morning.

The Bishop of Norwich is not dead, it was only a report—but there is a truth connected with his conduct which we are sorry to record: he has given Glover, the ranting radical parson, the toad-eater of old granny Coke, the Archdeaconry just vacant, in preference to his son Robert, a most amiable, exemplary person, who never meddles in politics, but whose fault, in his father's eyes, is his Tory principles—we think Mr. Glover will find his new situation any thing but agreeable: the intentions of the Bishop however are the same.

The public are beginning to open their eyes to the Presbyterian quackery with which at first they were so surprisingly struck—the most zealous of Squintum's adherents and followers are repenting them of the rashness with which they committed themselves by an avowal of their admiration; as the bills off, however, from that tipsy popularity which, for a week or two he acquired, it becomes necessary for his brother quacks to lend their aid to keep up the humbug by which dissension from the Established Church is to be promoted, and Presbyterianism exalted above reason and religion.

The Rev. John Clayton, jun. of the Poultry Chapel, it appears, said that which follows, in his pulpit last Sunday—without a patient reading:—

"There has recently appeared in our Metropolis an extraordinary man, of whom I have endeavoured to suspend my opinion till I had seen and examined his promised production. And now, to what shall I compare him? I will liken him to a fine young eagle out of the bleak regions of the North, which has lately escaped from the nest. His eye is piercing, and he can look at the solar orb: his wings are strong, and capable of a lofty flight. At present, he sits dreadfully among rocks and caverns, amidst wild and romantic scenery. Though he floats with some irregularity of movement over the ocean and plain above which he soars—though he pounces with indiscriminate eagerness upon his prey, and though, when he alights, he may sometimes strike his broad wings against the projecting points of the craggy cliffs—yet give him the fair opportunity to plume his wings and renew his flight, and (if God still sustain him) the evidently tendency of his course is to direct the eyes and minds of the nations to the 'Sun of righteousness,' and to those glorious skies in which that everlasting luminary shines.

"For my own part, I have been grieved to see a number of lesser birds of meaner nest, of feebler wing, and harsher note, flocking around him, and attempting to impede his ascent by their flutterings, their sings, and cries. I hope that you, my beloved people, will prove yourselves to be of a better brood. Refuse not to honour the man whom God has been pleased to honour. Pray that the Church and the world may reap the benefit of his ministrations, and God have all the glory. Cast, shake off from the wings of your spirits the earthly dust of pride, malice, and all uncharitableness—

" Pale envy, withering at another's joy,
Which hates the excellence it cannot reach!"

There is enough of metaphor and figure in this effusion to ...fy the most ardent lover of noise and nonsense—now let ...ook at the plain facts contained in it.

Why is Mr. Irving like an eagle?—an eagle is a bird, so is a goose—and, for all we can see, more like Mr. Irving than an eagle—an eagle can fly in the face of the sun—true—but he does it without blinking or squinting—a goose cannot, but he does it without blinking or squinting—a goose cannot, but he can stand on one leg and quack—so can Mr. Irving.

How does Mr. Clayton, Jun. shew that Mr. Irving is like a bird "just escaped from his nest?" What does he mean by "his pinions being strong?"—his Opinions may be strong and wrong too, but as for having escaped from his nest, it is most true that he is come here to feather his nest—and as for escaping from Scotland, if he calls that his nest, it has so long been the instinct of birds of his tribe to fly southward, that we feel neither gratitude nor admiration for the favour.

"At present," says Mr. John Clayton, jun. "he dwells chiefly among rocks and caverns, amidst wild and romantic scenes."—How can Mr. John Clayton jun. tell such abominable bounces—he dwells chiefly in Cross-street, Hatton-garden—among houses and chimneys, between Saffron-hill and High Holborn, and as for his "broad wings," and all that figurative trash, at which common sense revolts, if he be any bird at all he is a cock, crowing upon his own dunghill, fed and attended by Mr. Romeo Coates, whose affection for the breed has led him to devote himself particularly to his service.

We laugh at the contemptible absurdities of these mountebank ranters, because the nonsense which they prate is below any serious criticism; but when we hear any man with reverend prefixed to his name, direct his congregation not to refuse "to honour the man God has been pleased to honour," we shudder at the temerity, while we sicken at the blasphemy of the language used.

How can Mr. John Clayton, jun. of the Poultry Chapel presume to call a Scotch Presbyterian parson, with an unintelligible dialect and a cast in his eye, a "man honoured of God?"—What does he mean?—how honoured?—how favoured?—how marked?

Mr. Irving has the consummate vanity and presumption not only to say but to write—that men were ignorant of the use of religion, of its attributes, of its advantages, till he came to teach the word—the stocks and the whipping post might bring such daring pretenders to their senses—but for those of the established church who lend themselves to the mummery, we can only cry with a loud voice—Shame!—Shame!—Shame!

Lest all this should sound emptily, we will next week lay before our readers an examination of the orations which Mr. Irving has printed, together with his conceited and abominable preface, and our readers then shall judge how far we are borne out in the fervent and undisguised expression of our sovereign contempt for him and his followers.

There is nothing like crying up, and crying down. We lay before our readers an extract from the new number of the Liberal, but our observations are not at the moment directed towards the verses, which are quite as good as any of the later productions of Lord Byron—we merely call attention to the remarks by which the extract is accompanied in the Chronicle of yesterday.

"TRANSLATION OF PULCI.

"Lord Byron's contribution to the fourth Number of The Liberal, is a literary curiosity, in the shape of a translation of Pulci's Morgante Maggiore. His Lordship puts it forth as an experiment, which, should it be well received, will probably be followed by the other Cantos. The Noble Poet appears to us to have chosen for translation an author, who writes in a vein very congenial to his own—particularly as regards that happy union of the serious and satirical which distinguishes the Don Juan. The naivete with which parts of the Morgante are rendered, produces some exquisite humour; and the serious romance loses nothing of the quaint simplicity of the Italian.—We supply a specimen—

" And thus great honour to Morgante paid
" The Abbot: many days they did repose.
" One day, as with Orlando they both stray'd,
" And saunter'd here and there, where'er they chose,
" The Abbot shew'd a chamber, where array'd
" Much armour was, and hung up certain bows:
" And one of these Morgante for a whim
" Girt on, though useless, he believ'd, to him.
" There being a want of water in the place,
" Orlando, like a worthy brother, said,
" 'Morgante, I could wish you in this case
" 'To go for water.'—'You shall be obey'd
" 'In all commands,' was the reply: 'straightways'
" Upon his shoulder a great tub he laid,
" And went out on his way unto the fountain,
" Where he was wont to drink below the mountain.
" Arrived there, a prodigious noise he hears,
" Which suddenly along the forest spread;
" Whereat from out his quiver he prepares
" An arrow for his bow, and lifts his head;
" And lo! a monstrous herd of swine appear,
" And onward rushes with tempestuous tread,
" And to the fountain's brink precisely pours,
" So that the giant's joined by all the boars.
" Morgante at a venture shot an arrow,
" Which pierced a pig precisely in the ear,
" And pass'd unto the other side quite through!!!
" So that the boar, defunct, lay tripp'd up near.
" Another, to revenge his fellow farrow,
" Against the giant rush'd his fierce career,
" And reach'd the passage with so swift a foot,
" Morgante was not now in time to shoot.
" Perceiving that the pig was on him close,
" He gave him such a punch upon the head
" As floor'd him, so that he no more arose—
" Smashing the very bone; and he fell dead
" Next to the other. Having seen such blows,
" The other pigs along the valley fled;
" Morgante on his neck the bucket took,
" Full from the spring, which neither swerved nor shook.
" The tun was on one shoulder, and there were
" The hogs on t'other, and he brush'd apace
" On to the abbey, though by no means near,
" Nor spilt one drop of water in his race.
" Orlando, seeing him so soon appear
" With the dead boars, and with that brimful vase,
" Marvell'd to see his strength so very great;—
" So did the abbot, and set wide the gate.'

"'Gli dette in sulla testa un gran punzone.' It is strange that Pulci should have literally anticipated the technical terms of my old friend and master Jackson, and the art which he has carried to its highest pitch. 'A punch on the head,' or 'a punch in the head,' 'un punzone in sulla testa,' is the exact and frequent phrase of our best pugilists, who little dream that they are talking the purest Tuscan."

We say nothing—because we must give The Liberal its fair portion of notice next week—but we should be pleased with any very intelligent friend who could discover the "naivete"—the "exquisite humour"—the "serious," and the "satirical" of all this "quaint simplicity;"—it is Italian nonsense rendered into bad English, and nothing else.

No. II.

PAUL POTTER'S REVIEW OF THE LATE SESSION OF PARLIAMENT.

As far as we have hitherto proceeded in analyzing the measures, or rather the policy, of the New Whigs during the late Session, I think it has been fairly shewn—not by any ingenuity of induction, not by any attempt at sophistry, neither by mis-statement nor over-statement, but "out of their own mouths" and under their own hands, in their speeches and in their writings—that not only have their attacks been directly pointed against the King and the Church, but indirectly against almost every institution which is engrafted on the Constitution of our forefathers.

To proceed with this disgusting operation, which, like dissection after death, can only be defended on the principle of public utility, we must first advert to the grand question with which the Opposition advanced to the attack of Ministers on the opening of the Session, and for which they came prepared and armed from the County Meetings, which it had cost them many sacrifices, as well as indefatigable labour and trickery, to "get up" in almost every portion of our home empire.

That the Whigs—the friends of the People, whom they had for so many years described as sinking under the oppression of "high prices"—should have rested their hopes of baffling and defeating Ministers upon one of the first effects promised to that people from a restoration of peace, namely, a reduction of prices in the first article of life, might be considered simply as one of those inconsistencies peculiar to Whiggery, and into which men who act without any fixed principle are always liable to precipitate themselves, if there were not clear and positive evidence to the fact, that their conduct upon this occasion was influenced by motives which appear to govern every measure originated or supported by the party.

Unfortunately for the country, as well as for those who have suffered themselves to be degraded into an acquiescence in the grossness of their ambition, the faction which is represented by such men as Brougham, Hume, and Peter Moore, boasts of aristocratic members, great landholders and proprietaries, who, blind or careless respecting events which may arise out of speculative policy, are among the first to cry out against any practical mischief when it arrives at their own threshold. These overgrown landlords and impropriators had derived and enjoyed all the advantages of the "high prices," which their parliamentary talkers might deprecate in diatribes of six hours in length, or in half a number of the "Blue and Yellow" Depository of Whig bile, as long as they considered their declamation and oratory to be a mere "brutum fulmen," or rather an uncharged shell, which might serve for a time to throw the ranks of their opponents into confusion—but when events, over which they could have no control, actually effected that which they had so long and so vehemently professed their anxiety to carry for the good of the people, they were compelled to retrace their steps, or lose the support of their High Mightinesses by whom they were kept together and paid, and whose estates in the exchange from War to Peace prices were reduced to half their previous value!

There was no standing this. That the poor man should pay sixpence instead of eighteen-pence for his loaf, was an indulgence never contemplated by the Patriotic Whig. It was very well to talk of, and made an admirable Whig caricature, where John Bull was represented with "shrunken stomach" addressing his "tyrannical rulers," and threatening if the loaf aloft "did not come down—he should rise!" But this was when there was no chance of its "coming down," and there might be a "chance of a rising." Down, however, at length it came—and John, instead of rising, rather thought of dancing, and augured the better of the Whigs, because, for once, the picture they had painted of the "Blessings of Peace"—throughout every period of the war—appeared about to be realized! No—cries the Whig—here is a mistake; we wish you mighty well—but not at our expence. We, too, have a war to carry on, and "high prices" are necessary for the purpose. We have danced to you—you cannot refuse to pipe for us—"and pay the piper too." To be serious—here was a test of Whig professions. I am neither so sanguine, nor so visionary, as to suppose that human nature will ever arrive at such a state of purity and philanthropy as to dispose men—and more especially large bodies of men—to sacrifice their own interests for the simple purpose of contributing to the interests of others; but those who practise a delusion for the purpose of securing exclusive advantages to themselves—those who rest their only claims to public approbation upon their disinterested devotion to the public good, must either go to the full extent of their professions when the emergency arises, or they must be content to abide by the sentence of condemnation which, sooner or later, invariably awaits the detection of hollow and false pretenders!

Nay—so unblushing, even in the moment of exposure, was the effrontery of these men, that, after assailing Ministers night after night—in motion after motion, during which not one shadow of a rational remedy could be proposed, to counteract the "superabundant results of peace and plenty," the proposition of National Bankruptcy—for of such the proposed invasion of funded property would have been the declaration—was made in the face of a rich and prosperous country, and the principle of spoliation advocated, to make up the deficiency of income among those who had revelled for years in a state of artificial prosperity at the expence of all who derived their subsistence from fixed income. What right had men, who for a series of years had drawn from their land twice or threefold the rental paid to their fathers or predecessors, to complain of their sufferings when the period arrived for reducing things to their proper level, rendered absolutely necessary for the benefit and well-being of every order in society? Why were these pampered proprietors so improvident as not to secure from their partial prosperity a remedy against a reverse which every man of common sense must have anticipated? Had the fundholder, when in a state of comparative depression, acted upon the principle of this improvident class, his capital must have been sacrificed—and would the great landed aristocracy among the Whigs have stood forward to sacrifice a per centage on their property "to make up the difference?"—

" I give thee sixpence?
" I'd see thee —— first!"

That the discontent arising from the temporary depression of agriculture was confined to the Whigs it would be unjust and unfair to affirm, whatever effect, as a party measure, they may have produced in their itinerary campaigns in bringing others over to such sentiments. Every man when he feels called upon to make sacrifices, or is suffering under difficulties, will give a ready ear to those who profess a fellow feeling for his privations, and readily join in a cry which is directed against those whom they affirm to be the cause, or agents in his sufferings. The foolish and ignorant farmer was easily persuaded, when well dressed gentlemen, with white hats and well shined boots, took the trouble of travelling round the country to tell him he was ruined, and that Government had wantonly and wickedly reduced his income and ters like wild beasts, and to sign any thing or every thing which might best express his hatred and abhorrence of his oppressors.

That the WHIGS carried the joke rather further than was consistent with their policy, may be inferred—from what always happens upon such occasions—namely, from their having their heels tripped up by more active citizens, whose views, if they were more extensive in the first instance, were at least openly avowed, and consequently lost much of their mischievous qualities by the honest exposure of their tendency;—but that they made the whole, as they had done in the Manchester affair—the Queen's affair, and upon every other occasion which for the last few years has presented an opportunity of practising delusion upon the people—a mere political question for PARTY as well as PERSONAL purposes, is too self-evident to need illustration from particular instances or insulated motions during the late Session. Their having made one of their few converts the constant object of their ridicule, for affording them his countenance and support upon this question, is a pretty clear proof, that principle had nothing to do with their policy—and the purchase of so unstaple a commodity as the support of SIR THOMAS LETHBRIDGE was not worth making, even at the sacrifice of a joke.

Ministers wisely declined all direct interference with a question, which has always suffered under the experiments of legislation, or baffled its wisest enactments—and they were charged with indifference to the sufferings of the people. They avowed their conviction that the evil would remedy itself, and they were denounced as imbeciles incapable of appreciating the situation or resources of the country!

MR. SOLOMON RICARDO harangued upon political economy, and MR. LAWYER BROUGHAM ran through the Encyclopædia of moral and municipal expedients. The Ex-Contractor MABERLEY, and the Ex-Surgeon HUME, daily broke Prisician's head, and falsified all the calculations of Cocker—Babel was re-edified, and the confusion of dialects was only exceeded by the chaos of opinions which were in succession urged, with legislative gravity, as remedies for the evil arising out of the prosperity of the country, and the necessary consequences of peace!

But, alas!—just as the uproar had nearly infected the ignorant mass of the people—just as they were about to be convinced that the cheapness of their markets was a clear proof of an intention on the part of Government to starve and oppress them—the remedy, which the weakness of Ministers had anticipated, and which the foresight and penetration of the WHIGS had, in the plenitude of their wisdom, scouted and laughed at—quietly and progressively began to operate—and the Session, which began with a solemn assurance that the country was on the eve of ruin from "the appalling state of the AGRICULTURAL INTERESTS," closed—without one single enactment touching the question—not only with the question set at rest, as admitted and affirmed by the great convert SIR THOMAS, of Somerset—but with something more than an apprehension on the part of the landholders and farmers—that PRICES MIGHT RISE TOO HIGH and involve them in an opposite extreme of prosperity!—It is a fact too notorious to need a single illustration, that at this moment the landed interest is exerting its strongest influence to keep down PRICES, lest they should exceed the average fixed by Parliament for the admission of foreign grain!!

Now, my good readers, do pray picture to yourselves what would have been the effect of that meddling, diurnal policy, as it may fairly be called, upon which the WHIGS, if they had been at the head of public affairs, during this one Session of Parliament last past, would have acted!—Are they honest?—If so, they would have led the country to the brink of destruction!—Were they insincere? If so, what opinion ought we to entertain of men who endeavour, upon every occasion which presents itself, to overthrow the existing order of things, for the purpose of establishing opinions which they know to be ruinous and subversive of the BEST INTERESTS OF THE COUNTRY!—and upon which they would not dare to act, at the risk of their heads—if they were actually possessed of power!

It is to be recollected that all this is SYSTEM—it matters not whether there be, or be not, real cause of complaint arising out of the measures of Government—whatever IS, I repeat IS WRONG, and the head and front of Ministerial offending, is the POSSESSION OF POWER—and the support of the great body of THE PEOPLE. The patriot BROUGHAM was as loud and declamatory in his visitation upon Ministerial delinquency, when the "MANUFACTURING DISTRESSES" were alleged as a crime against Government—never did that eloquent Gentleman discharge more bile and froth than upon that occasion—and in 1819. he pronounced a funeral oration over the lifeless corse of Birmingham knives and Manchester stuffs—cruelly slaughtered and mangled by His Majesty's Ministers! Before, however, the Coroner's inquest could be taken, or a verdict delivered upon his alleged murderers, THE CORPSE ITSELF arose like an unwelcome phantom before the lawyer's eyes, and displayed such feats of activity as drove him and his train of mourners to seek some other victim whom Ministers had more effectually prepared for the operation!

The ghost of agricultural distress has—alas, for these worthy patriots—degenerated also, into a plump, matter of fact, contented sort of personage, and once more broken the spell of WHIG incantations. What may arise before the next meeting of Parliament I do not venture to prognosticate, but must leave to the ingenuity and industry of the WHIGS themselves; although, if I were deemed worthy of proffering counsel to so sage and experienced a body, I might suggest, for once, by way of experiment, that they honestly avow their motives of action, and having failed in proving national distress as an incentive to national discontent, declare in the face of the country, THEIR OWN DISTRESS and BANKRUPTCY, and make these a ground of appeal for a bounty, or an admission to office!—How their claims may be received is another question; but JOHN BULL is a very good-natured animal, and easily attracted by novelty—on this ground, such a measure of WHIG candour and honesty might have its effect.

But I have not done with the late Session. There are still topics of high national importance which must be attended to—and if I do not succeed in tracing the SAME SYSTEM, as applied to each and every one of them—the same obvious tendency of ALL, to illustrate the beautiful maxim of WHIG POLICY so decently and reverently pronounced before the House of Lords on her late MAJESTY'S trial, by her pure, uncorrupted, and incorruptible advocate, MR. HENRY BROUGHAM, I will submit to be placed at the bottom of the list of WHIG PATRIOTS, and be declared incapable of ever again serving my country and fellow-citizens.

PAUL POTTER.

On Thursday, at three o'clock, a Cabinet Council was held at the Foreign Office, which was attended by all the Cabinet Ministers in London. The Cabinet continued in deliberation about an hour.

On Friday a Board of the Lords of the Treasury was held at the Treasury Chambers. An extra Board was held on Thursday.

The Gazette of Tuesday contains the following announcement:—

"Foreign Office, July 28, 1823.

"It has been notified by the French Minister for Foreign Affairs to the Ambassadors and Ministers of Neutral Powers, at Paris, that the Cadiz, Barcelona, Santona, and St. Sebastian."

On the 12th of August (his Majesty's birth-day) the first stone of the intended additional quadrangle at Trinity College, will be laid by the Right Hon. C. Manners Sutton, Speaker of the House of Commons, and member of that society.

His Majesty has written a letter to his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, authorising a collection for the Incorporated National Society for Promoting the Education of the Poor in the principles of the Established Church throughout England and Wales. The letter in question, which has been sent by the Archbishop to the several dioceses, and is directed to be read immediately after Divine Service, on the first Sunday consequent upon the receipt of it, after observing "that in no case can the great end of public happiness be so essentially promoted as by cultivating the principles of religious faith and moral duty," states that "the returns of last year have presented the welcome spectacle of the near and distant operation of the comprehensive scheme of education practised by the National Society, as exhibited in 1867 United Schools, affording religious culture with every beneficial influence on the minds and manners, the habits and appearance of more than three hundred and fifty thousand children," but adds that "the sums contributed by Royal munificence and individual bounty in former benefactions, have been expended in erecting schools upon the model of the Central School, the charge of building rooms of suitable dimensions forming the chief burden of expence in these provisions; whilst a bare sufficiency remains in annual subscriptions for the maintenance of the central school, from which so much benefit is derived to all parts of the country." It is under these circumstances that the Royal Mandate authorises an appeal to the liberality of the public; the contributions to be applied in multiplying schools and in lending aids for procuring sites and for building public seminaries.

On Tuesday the Duke of York, as Commander-in-Chief held a levee at his Office in the Horse Guards, which was attended by General Lord Howden, Lord Hawke, Lieut.-Gens. Stevenson, Sir F. Maleolm, Major-Generals Darling, Sir C. Doyle, Fuller, Riall and about 30 other officers.

At the final close of the poll for a Member to serve in Parliament for Newcastle-under-Lyne, the numbers were, for Mr. Denison 336—Mr. Heathcote, 313—Majority, 23. Mr. Denison was of course elected.

THE ARMY.—It is understood that, should Major-General Sir P. Maitland, K.C.B. accept the Lieutenant-Governorship of New Brunswick, vice Major-General G. S. Smyth, deceased, Major General Sir Howard Douglas, Bart. will obtain the Lieutenant-Governorship of Upper Canada. The 1st Regiment of Dragoons, which marched from the Regent's Park Barracks, on the 16th inst. arrived at York on Wednesday. The 2d Regiment of Dragoon Guards, having been relieved by the 1st Dragoons, have marched from York for Birmingham. The 1st Regiment of Life Guards removed from Knightsbridge quarters on the 25th instant, to Knightbridge Barracks. The 17th Regiment of Light Dragoons stationed at present in Romford Barracks, has recently received a draft of 60 men from the depôt of the 16th (or the Queen's) Regiment of Light Dragoons at Maidstone Barracks.—The troops were reviewed in the Park, Dublin, on Monday, by Lord Combermere, Sir Henry Torrens, &c. The evolutions were executed with much precision, and the spectators were highly gratified with the splendour of the scene. Two officers and 16 non-commissioned officers belonging to each regiment of infantry stationed in Ireland are now in Dublin, for the purpose of being drilled in the new system of field tactics, under the immediate superintendence of Major-General Sir H. Torrens, Adjutant-General to the Forces.—The first division of the 2d Rifle Brigade arrived at Limerick on Monday, from Kinsale, the inhabitants of which place have presented a complimentary address to Col. Mitchell and the corps, for their excellent conduct whilst stationed there.—The 57th Regiment arrived at Kinsale, from Buttevant, on Thursday.—A troop of the 14th Light Dragoons marched into Exeter on Tuesday last, from Radipole Barracks.

The Revenge, of 74 guns, Capt. Sir Charles Burrard, Bart. being completed to her full war complement of 650 men, will shortly leave the Medway for Spithead, where she will receive the flag of Vice-Admiral Sir Harry Burrard Neale, and then proceed to Malta, to relieve Sir Graham Moore, in the Rochfort. It is expected this ship will call off Cadiz.

We understand that very shortly a considerable augmentation will be made to our Naval Force in the Mediterranean. The formal notification which the French Government has made of the blockade of the ports of Cadiz, Barcelona, Santona, and St. Sebastian, has made this measure necessary for the protection of our commerce. The additional force will consist of frigates only, which will cruise off the blockaded ports; and be in the way to give every necessary information and protection to British merchantmen. The number of frigates will not exceed five or six.

It is in contemplation to add to the extensive improvements at the West end of the town, by throwing open the Green Park, to terminate the view from Pall Mall, by a removal of the buildings at the bottom of Cleveland-row.

A splendid entertainment was given Monday, at Willis's Rooms, to the Marquis of Hastings, by a number of gentlemen connected with East Indian affairs, Lord W. Bentinck in the Chair. The Marquis was placed on his right. Among the distinguished individuals present were, the Duke of Sussex, Prince of Saxe Coburgh, Lord Holland, Lord W. Russell, Lord Bexley, Earl of Bredalbane, Lord Howden, the Right Hon. Mr. W. W. Wynn, the Earl of Gosford, Sir John Doyle, &c.

RACES.—At Edinburgh Races, on Monday, Lord Kelburne's br. c. the Pirate won the produce sweepstakes of 50gs.; and Sir D. Moncrieffe's Negotiator won the gold cup of 100gs.—At Knutsford Races, Lord Stamford's b. h. Peter Lely won the Pecover stakes of 10gs.; and Mr. Yates's b. c. Adventurer the Knutsford stakes. Mr. Wood's b. c. Clapham won a cup value 50gs. given by the Officers of the Cheshire Yeomanry.—At the Winchester Races, Mr. J. Walker's Langtonian won the gold cup of 100gs.; the Noblemen and Gentlemen's plate of 50l. was won by Mr. Dilly's b. c. Bertram.—At Lewes, the King's plate of 100gs. was won by Lord Egremont's b. h. Centaur; and the Ladies' plate of 60 sovereigns, added to a sweepstakes of 10 sovereigns, was won by Lord Egremont's b. f. Elfrid.

A sailing match for a Silver Cup, given by the Cumberland Sailing Society, took place on Wednesday. The vessels, in number twelve, were sailed by their respective owners, from Blackfriars-bridge round a boat moored near Putney-bridge, and back to Cumberland Gardens, Vauxhall. The boats were all at their stations at half-past three, ready for the signal to start. They started at five o'clock, and made sail, led by a barge with the Members of the Cumberland fleet. A light breeze from the westward was directly in their teeth, and all obliged to work to windward. The tide was running up. The Swift sustained some damage before she had made much way, and was unable to continue the contest. At Westminster-bridge the St. George took the lead, and displayed great superiority in sailing. She was followed closely by the Spitfire, and a better match between two sailing vessels has seldom been seen. After an excellent trial of skill the St. George kept her advantage, and returned first to Cumberland Gardens at about eight o'clock in the evening; she was closely followed by the Spitfire.

The Prize Wherry given by the Gentlemen of the Funny Club, was rowed for on Thursday. About five o'clock seven boats started from Westminster Bridge, rowed round a boat moored off the second windmill beyond Vauxhall, returned down the Surrey shore, round the Beacon on the same shore below Westminster Bridge, and back through the centre arch of the same bridge. The wherry was won by W. Knowton and W. Chandler, at 20 minutes before eight o'clock.

Friday the Annual Coat and Badge, left by the will of Doggett, the Comedian, to be rowed for on the 1st of August, by six Watermen who had completed the term of their apprenticeship in the course of the year, took place by the following:—G. T. Butcher, Hungerford; James Braithwaite, ditto; Wm Mason, St. Catherine's; Edw. Voss, Fountain-stairs; J. V. Hallam, Bankside; James Woodford, Chelsea. They started against wind and tide, from the Swan, at London-bridge, about four o'clock; when Braithwaite took the lead, and kept it until they came to Blackfriars'-bridge; Hallam and Butcher then came alongside of him, and a very sharp contest took place between them till they came to the Nine Elms; when Butcher passed, and kept the lead until he arrived at the Swan, at Chelsea, about 10 minutes past four o'clock, and won the Coat and Badge; the second, five guineas, and the third three guineas.

A boat was launched on Monday last on the Seine, opposite the Louvre at Paris, which is constructed on a new principle. It is moved by a wheel, similar to those of steam boats, placed at the stern, which is turned by a simple crank, directed by a man. The experiment succeeded perfectly, and the boat, with eight or nine persons on board, rapidly descended the river towards St. Cloud.—Paris Paper.

The Asylum in the Regent's Park, which was appropriated for the reception of the military labouring under bad eyes, and to which Sir William Adams was appointed superintendent as well as oculist, being at present quite freed from the military, it is said will be immediately appropriated for the reception of the female convicts from the Penitentiary. Millbank, while the males are to be sent on board the hulks until the prison has been thoroughly cleaned and repaired.

THE NORTH-WEST EXPEDITION.—Much interest was excited on Wednesday in the city, by supposed intelligence of the safe arrival of Captain Parry in the Pacific, from which it was of course conceived that his arduous undertaking had been completed. The account contained in the following extract of a letter:—"Valmer, July 20—Of course you have heard that a South Sea whaler passed through on Monday evening from Valparaiso, with the news that Captain Parry had succeeded in finding a passage to the Pacific, and was then all well. This statement, however, is not entitled to the smallest confidence. Had Captain Parry reached the Pacific early in the spring, which must have been the case to allow the intelligence to arrive at Valparaiso at the time the whaler made that port, he must have passed Behring's Straits in the depth of winter, which is obviously impracticable. Captain Parry, on leaving England, had no expectation, even if his enterprise succeeded, that he would be heard of before the beginning of the year 1824.

We copy the following from an Irish paper:—"Lost on his passage to the East Indies, along with the ship, all the passengers, and crew on board, John Hely Hutchinson, youngest son of the late Rt. and Rev. Lorenzo Hely Hutchinson, and nephew to the Earl of Donoughmore and Lord Hutchinson."—Dublin Evening Post.

On Wednesday night, about 11 o'clock, the wife of Mr. Weightman, residing at 110, Tichfield-street, in a fit of temporary derangement precipitated herself from her bed-room window, two stories high, on to the pavement at the back of the house. She was much hurt; it was found, however, that the skull was not fractured, but the head was otherwise so much injured that she is in such a state as to leave no hope of her recovery.

A few evenings since some silver spoons and forks were stolen from one of the pantries in the Royal Lodge, Windsor; it is thought that the robbery must have been effected by some persons connected with the establishment, as there are sentries placed all round the house at night, so as to prevent the approach of strangers; active measures are pursued for the detection of the thieves.

On Thursday night, about eleven o'clock, as one of the Clapham stages was proceeding along the Hackney road, loaded with passengers, inside and out, a ruffian jumped up behind and snatched a valuable shawl from a lady, who was seated by the side of a gentleman in the dickey. The coach was stopped and an alarm given, but the felon escaped.

A Sergeant of the 84th shot himself through the neck, at Newtenn, county Tipperary, on Saturday last. He was a native of Germany. There are hopes of his recovery.

Thursday morning, at low water, the body of Elizabeth Anthony, suspected to have been murdered by William Dyson, was found upon the shore at Chelsea reach, where it was drifted by the tide. It was shockingly mutilated, supposed to be caused by the friction in the water. Information was sent to Mr. Wood, landlord of the Union tavern, Air-street, Piccadilly, in whose house she had been a tour-maid a short time she became acquainted with Dyson. Mr. Wood went to Queen square office immediately to consult the Magistrate how he should proceed. Mr. White, who was the sitting Magistrate, ordered him to acquaint the Coroner, in order that an inquest may be held upon the body, and ordered that time sufficient might be allowed to procure the attendance of all witnesses who knew any thing of the parties, as it was a case which required serious consideration.

At the assizes lately holden for the county of Essex, a parish clerk was called to prove a rate, who could not read! This fact was mentioned by Mr. Serjeant Onslow on the bench at Lewes, last Tuesday.—Brighton Gazette.

At Worcester Assizes a prisoner was acquitted on a charge of stealing two eggs! The Judge said the prosecution was most frivolous, and refused the prosecutor's expences.

A woman has been arrested, and committed to the prison of Douay, charged with the horrible crime of interring a child alive in the cemetry of that town. Her name is Victoire Herniquet, and she is not more than twenty-three years of age. She has already undergone two examinations. It appears that the mother had entrusted the child to her, with an allowance to place it in the hospital.

At the Berwick Gaol Delivery, after a trial, which began on Wednesday se'nnight, and lasted till two o'clock on Thursday morning, Grace Griffin, the wife of the late John Griffin, publican, in Berwick, who died from ill usage received in his own house, on the 20th of April last, was capitally convicted of the murder of her husband, and sentenced to death.—The unhappy woman was executed on the 26th ult. She was brought from the gaol about three o'clock, in a cart, seated on a chair covered with black cloth. She was decently dressed in black, and seemed much composed, and even prepared to meet her awful fate. On arriving at the place of execution she ascended the scaffold, (which was erected a little way out of Berwick, where the roads separate,) with a firm step. After which she stood for a few minutes in an attitude of supplication, and then dropt her glove as a signal, when the executioner, who had arrived from Edinburgh on the preceding evening, instantly launched her into eternity. As an execution has not taken place in Berwick for a very long period, an immense concourse of people were attracted from all quarters of its vicinity to witness the present one.

At Bow-street, on Friday, George Colney was charged with robbing Ann Rockhall, of a shawl and a small parcel. The prosecutor accompanied the prosecutor on one of the stage coaches to Sydenham; and under pretence of seeing her home, through a bye lane, took the opportunity of plundering her. He was remanded.

At Guildhall, on Friday, Margaret Davies was charged with robbing Mr. Draper of Fleet-market, of sundry wearing apparel. She had only lived in his service six days, and took the opportunity of stripping the drawers during the absence of the family; she decamped with the property, but was robbed in the Kent Road of part of it by a number of fellows; this led to her detection, the watchman having found her crying on the steps of a door and lamenting her loss. She was fully committed.

At the Thames Police Office on Friday, Aaron Smith was charged with piracy. Captain Hill of the Vittoria stated that he was lying off Cuba on the 7th of August, when he was boarded by a number of men, carried on board the pirate, (the prisoner being one of the men who boarded), and plundered of 150l. in doubloons. Captain Cook of the Industry also made a similar charge, the captain of the pirate was killed by his crew. The prisoner was fully committed for trial.

TOWN HALL, SOUTHWARK.—On Thursday, a gipsy woman, whose appearance is far superior to that of those who generally go about in gangs, was brought before the Magistrate, charged with having robbed the shop of Mr. Jones, linen-draper, in High-street, in the Borough, of a great quantity of lace. The shopman of Mr. Jones stated, that the prisoner came into the shop, and asked to look at some lace, and while handling it, was seen to conceal two pieces, with which she walked into the street. She was followed and brought back, and the lace was found upon her person. She told many falsehoods about her place of abode, but one of the officers contrived to learn the fact, which led to the discovery of a large quantity of lace, also the property of Mr. Jones. He locked up with the prisoner a confidential female, who pretended that she was also confined for robbery, and that sort of communication which usually takes place between thieves soon informed the "female nose" that her companion was of the wandering tribe, and resided near Norwood, in one of those buildings which a donkey can remove in a short time. The officer forthwith proceeded upon this information to the spot described, and found a gypsy's hut at the distance of a quarter of a mile from any other dwelling of the same kind. It was guarded by two fierce dogs, which were chained to stakes on each side of the entrance to the hut, and it was not without difficulty the officers overcame such a guard. After they had entered the hut, they saw the children of the gypsy, and questioned them particularly but the trade of theft was carried on in the family with too much ability to be betrayed by those who obtained a livelihood by it. The officers then proceeded to search the hut, in which were two donkeys. They found nothing of a suspicious nature until they turned up the donkey's hampers, and then they found about 30l. worth of Mr. Jones's lace, part of which had been stolen the very day after it had been brought into the shop.—She was committed for trial.

FERDINAND the SEVENTH; or, a Dramatic Sketch of the recent Revolution in Spain. Dedicated to the Right Hon. George Canning, &c. &c. &c. Translated from the Spanish of Don Manuel Sarratea.

"'Tis Liberty alone that gives the flow'r
Of fleeting life its lustre and perfume,
And we are weeds without it. All constraint,
Except what Wisdom lays on evil men,
Is evil; hurts the faculties; impedes
Their prospects in the road of Science; blinds
The eyesight of Discovery; and begets,
In those that suffer it, a sordid mind,
Bestial, a meagre intellect, unfit
To be the tenant of man's noble form."

Published by Sherwood, Jones, and Co. Paternoster-row.

Just published, price 2s. 6d

SMITH'S, 192, Strand, Second House from the Crown and Anchor Tavern.

ARROWSMITH and CO. TROPICAL CLOTHIERS, &c. (late Finch and Arrowsmith) No. 3, Cornhill, near the Mansion House, beg leave to apprise their Friends and the Public in general that they conduct the Business of that long established House upon the same broad principle which has already obtained for it their distinguished support, viz. combining the interests of the vender and purchaser, by the sale of the best articles upon terms reciprocally advantageous. Cadets, and passengers to India and elsewhere, furnished with every necessary article of equipment, so arranged as to form a supply upon their arrival.—Information respecting East India Sides given as usual.

WARD'S DIGESTIVE SEGARS.—Health and Luxury united in the use of these celebrated Segars; their medicinal virtues in cases of indigestion, &c. are already well known and highly appreciated; are mild and gentle in their operation, and do not cause the unpleasant debility attendant of by those who are unaccustomed to smoking; indeed in the use of them arises a most grateful perfume.—Sold only by Ward, (sole proprietor) 16, Piccadilly; Soulier and Co. 4, Burlington Arcade; and Ward, 9, Newgate-street, who also begs to recommend to the notice of Connoisseurs in Segars, that they have on sale the finest Cabanas in London, imported by them direct from the Havannah.

BURGESS'S NEW SAUCE for general purposes, having given such great approbation, and the demand for it continuing to increase JOHN BURGESS and SON beg most respectfully to offer this their best acknowledgments to the Public for their liberal patronage of its merits, its utility and great convenience in all climates, has recommended it to the most distinguished foreign connexions, who have all spoken highly in its recommendation.—It is prepared by them ONLY; and for preventing disappointments to families, all possible care has been resorted to, by each bottle being sealed upon the cork with their dim and address, as well as each label having their signature, without which it cannot be genuine.

JOHN BURGESS & SON'S long established and much-esteemed ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES, continues to be prepared by them after the same manner that has given the greatest satisfaction for many years.—Warehouse, 107, Strand, corner of the Savoy-steps, London.—The original Fish-Sauce Warehouse

EASE and COMFORT in SHAVING.—To those Gentlemen who experience inconvenience in Shaving from a tender face or strong beard, J. T. RIGGE most particularly recommends his celebrated MAGNETIC RAZOR TABLET, which, with its late improvement, he engages will produce so keen an edge as to supersede all grinding, honing, &c. and render the operation of shaving as easy and agreeable as it would be unpleasant and painful. Its use is simple, its effect certain; price 7s. 6d. J. T. Rigge's Aromatic Shaving Soap will also be found an invaluable addition. Manufactory, 65 Chesshire and 52, Park-street, Grosvenor-square.

DR. SYDENHAM'S FAMILY PILLS OF HEALTH.—These Pills (entirely vegetable) are unrivalled in cases of Head-ache, Loss of Appetite, Noises and Giddiness in the Head, Lowness of Spirits, Flatulency, Obstructed Digestion, together with all affections of the Liver, and Bilious Disorders. These Pills contain not one atom of mercury or mineral, and are so peculiarly mild, as to require no restriction or alteration in diet. The most delicate females find them materially beneficial to their general health, and all who have used SYDENHAM'S PILLS pronounce them the most safe, mild, and effectual family medicine extant. Nothing can prove the superiority of these Pills more than the numerous cases communicated by persons of the highest respectability, and the countenance shown them by the first medical characters in present practice. Naval and military men, —Persons residing in hot climates—those leading sedentary lives, and Commercial Gentlemen will find them a certain assistant to repel the attack of disease arising from neglect, intemperance, the want of exercise, or the effects of climate. One Pill taken at the hour of dinner is admirably calculated to assist digestion, correct excesses of the table, and give a healthy action to the stomach In Boxes 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d.; and for the use of exportation, large boxes by which there is a considerable saving at 11s.—CAUTION—Purchasers are requested to observe the Name "J. RIGG, Bristol," is written on the Government Stamp affixed to each box, to distinguish them from Imitations sold under similar titles. Sold by Butlers, 4, Cheapside, and Regent-street; Newbury's, Edwards, St. Paul's Church-yard; Sutton's, Bow Church-yard; Barclay's, Fleet-Market, London; and most respectable Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom.

BEARS' GREASE.—A small quantity of this article has just been received, by the Elizabeth, from St. Petersburgh, consigned to J. Atkinson, 44, Gerrard-street, Soho square, which is potted for use just as imported, except the addition of a little perfume to prevent its turning rancid; and as several disappointments arose from the last lot being quickly sold he recommends an early purchase. The striking properties of this Grease when procured from the animal in its native climate has been so demonstrated from a lecturer of physiology of the present day that it is unnecessary for the importer to give any opinion of his own, further than to add, that independent of making the hair grow it is extremely pleasant for dressing it, making it very soft and glossy; price 2s., 3s. 6d. and 5s. a pot, and a reduction on taking a quantity. Sold as above, and a supply has been sent to most perfumers and hair dressers. Caution —J. Atkinson none of his importations have a bill round the pot with his signature, and he sells no pot at less price than 2s.

TO THE FASHIONABLE WORLD.—J. ATKINSON, Perfumer, 44, Gerrard-street, Soho-square, respectfully informs the Fashionable World, that he continues to sell, wholesale and retail, the following articles, they are also to be procured at most Perfumers and Hair Dressers in town and country; but as they have been very generally counterfeited, the genuine has his signature and address on the Label:—ATKINSON'S DOUBLE REFINED WINDSOR SOAP, divested of all caustic properties, is peculiarly calculated to Ladies or Gentlemen who have a delicate skin to preserve. It is long still very old, and consequently economical in use; it is very highly perfumed, and where the skin has got hard, rough, or uneven, it gradually corrects such imperfections, and makes it soft, white, and even; price, half pounds, 1s. 2d.; pounds, 2s.; by taking a dozen pounds, 1s. 9d.; also, the Old Brown Windsor Soap, possessing the same properties, but still older, and higher perfumed, price 2s. 3d. a pound.—ATKINSON'S CURLING FLUID, or VEGETATIVE HAIR OIL, is allowed to be the most elegant article ever invented for giving the hair a beautiful gloss in dressing, and for keeping it in curl, in exercise, or in damp weather, and for regenerating the growth where it has fallen off, from illness, perspiration, change of climate, or any cause occasioning premature decay, price 3s. 6d.—ATKINSON'S VEGETABLE DYE changes grey or red hair on the head or whiskers to a permanent brown or black, price 5s.—Agent for HUDSON'S ROMAN TOOTH POWDER, and Tincture, which have been so generally adopted; they not merely cleanse and beautify the teeth, but preserve them from decay to the latest period of life, they eradicate the scurvy and tartar from the gums, fasten such teeth as are loose, and sweeten the breath, and so undeviating are their effects, that there never was an instance of any one who regularly used them ever having the teeth ache or a tooth [illegible] each.

LADIES and GENTLEMEN may rely on it [illegible] hair fall off or turn grey, by now using Prince's celebrated Russia Oil, as it is so improved with an extra valuable ingredient, through which it has made the Russia Oil the greatest preserver to the hair, will make it grow thick and long, and prevent its falling off or ever turning grey, and is such a nourisher to the roots of the hair, that if it even has begun to turn grey, will restore it again to its natural colour, and is sure to clear the scurf, from infancy to old age, and will always keep the hair clean and beautiful. Each Medical Gentlemen have published in the Gazette of Health, that Prince's Russia Oil is superior to any Oil for the Hair, and will do in cases of baldness and weak hair, what can possibly be done in the thickening, strengthening, and restoring it, if there is the least sign of roots. Ladies and Gentlemen will be particular, as impostors have made the name of the counterfeit Russia Oil like the Genuine; therefore Purchasers should be cautious, and have it of the Proprietor or of respectable Venders. Ask for Prince's Improved Russia Oil, with the extra ingredient, and observe his address "A. Prince, No. 9, Poland street, Oxford-street, London," is on the cover of each bottle; without, it is not genuine and cannot answer the purpose. The ounce bottle 3s. or a large bottle, containing 5 ounces, for One Pound, which is a saving. Sold by the sole Proprietor, A. Prince, No. 9, Poland-street, Oxford-street, near the Pantheon; and by most principal Perfumers and Medicine Venders.

DR. VAN BUTCHELL, Surgeon, Man-midwife, Son, and Assistant, of the late Martin Van Butchell, recommended by persons of distinction (references are given with permission), continues to cure Fistulæ, Piles, &c. by the improved method so long and successfully practised by his father, without Confinement, Cutting, Caustic, or Risk, for suitable fee.—No 48, South-street, Berkeley square, London. At home till one daily. No remuneration required from persons of respectability, until they are satisfied a cure has been performed.

LATEST NEWS.

Paris papers down to Friday, have arrived by Express. The Moniteur of Wednesday last contains a telegraphic despatch, dated Madrid July 26, which announces the occupation of Ferrol, on the 15th, by the Corps of General Huber.

An article from Bayonne, dated the 24th ult. says:—The preparations for the siege of Pampeluna are carrying on with the greatest activity, and it will be regularly commenced in a few days. We are informed from the environs of Pampeluna, that the garrison still makes frequent sallies. On the 16th they killed 30 men, on the 17th 40, and the 18th and 19th 200 men of the troops of the Faith, and 100 French. A guerilla corps of four hundred infantry, and eighty cavalry, had appeared within two leagues of Pampeluna.

The Journal des Debats of yesterday stated, that the Regency of Madrid had ordered all the volunteers, militia, and all the secularised monks, who had taken refuge at Madrid, to quit that capital immediately. If the Regency had wished to send reinforcements to the Guerillas, it could not have acted otherwise.

The Moniteur has not published any intelligence from Corunna subsequent to the 15th. The anxiety of the public looked for some details of the events of the 16th and 17th, which have hitherto only been mentioned in the English Journals.

We learn that the assault upon Cadiz was certainly to take place between the 26th and 30th ult. Simultaneously with the attack by land would be a bombardment of the city by the ships in the bay.

Hamburgh to the 26th, and Dutch mails to the 31st ult. arrived yesterday. An article from Odessa to the 5th of July brings accounts from Constantinople to the 29th of June, which state that the Porte has yielded to the recent representations and threats of Lord Strangford, and released the four Russian ships. But they are to return to Odessa instead of going to the Archipelago.—Nothing was known at Constantinople respecting the events in the Peloponnesus. The capital was tranquil. The communications with the Mediterranean are become more and more difficult—A ship which left Constantinople on the 2d, brings word that the negociations with Persia had failed, and that hostilities had re-commenced.

The Ipswich paper of yesterday says, "We regret to state that yesterday morning, William, the second son of Sir Philip Broke, Bart. of Broke Hall, was drowned. This young gentleman, about twelve years of age, was amusing himself by angling in a pond near the house, and it is supposed fell from a rail upon which he had been sitting.

Mr. Sergeant Taddy was thrown from his horse between Tunbridge Wells and Maidstone a few days since, and received a very serious injury; he was not able to proceed on his journey.

Yesterday morning, at half-past five, a destructive fire broke out at the foundry of Mr. Hamby, Goswell-street, which consumed the whole of the manufactory, together with three houses, and damaged two other houses.

At the Surrey Sessions, T. C. F. Sandon, a prisoner in the King's Bench, was found Guilty of defrauding a person named Putland of various sums of money, and sentenced to be transported for 7 years.

An inquest was held yesterday at the King's Arms, Chelsea, on the body of Eliza Anthony, aged 19, who was supposed to have been murdered by Dyson, who has undergone several examinations at Queen-square Police Office. Dyson had been a waiter, and the unfortunate girl a servant at the same public-house, in Air-street, Piccadilly.—Mary Johnson, the mother of the deceased, deposed to the intimacy of her daughter with Dyson. She identified the body. Dyson asked witness's consent to marry her daughter, which she refused in consequence of his inability to support her as his wife. A few days afterwards the deceased left home to go to live with Dyson. Witness did not see them for two months afterwards. About six or seven weeks ago saw deceased and Dyson by appointment at a public-house; Dyson wished to part with her in a friendly manner, but she told him he was a villain, and had robbed her of her daughter. Had not seen her daughter since, until after her death.—Mr. Jefferies, a surgeon, who examined the body (which was taken out of the water near Chelsea), found it in a very advanced stage of putrefaction; the face and head much swollen, black, and disfigured; (she was far gone in pregnancy); was of opinion that the discolouration of the face was the consequence of external violence committed previous to her death; did not discover any other marks of violence on the body; the lungs were gorged with black blood, which leaves no doubt in his mind of her death having been caused by suffocation.—Several other witnesses were examined. The Jury retired for above two hours, and returned a verdict of Wilful Murder.

A General Meeting of the Members of the Norwich Union Life Insurance Society was held at the office in this city, on the 28th July, and was numerously and respectably attended. The President of the Society, Mr. Alderman Patteson, took the chair, and having shortly stated the object of the Meeting, viz. to declare a Bonus on the Sums Insured by the Members, called upon the Secretary to read the Auditors' Report, from which it appeared that the Assets of the Institution, at the 25th of March last, exceeded half a million, advantageously invested, and that the income had trebled within seven years, and amounted to upwards of 130,000l. per annum. The Actuary then read his Report and an Abstract of the result of his calculations; in the former he adverted to the advantage derived by the Members from the reduction of rates (of which this office set the first example) and which is in effect an annual bonus to the insured, and by the statement of assets and engagements shewed, that in addition to an Annuity Fund of above 106,000l., and a protecting Life Department Capital of about 250,000l. the Society possessed a disposable surplus of upwards of 145,000l. which would allow a bonus of 24 per cent. on all premiums deposited previous to July, 1822, besides largely augmenting the Reserve Fund. The Chairman afterwards addressed the meeting, and stated, that he had himself made a computation of the profits which would probably arise on the insurances, and felt satisfied that at the close of the existing contracts, a surplus of many hundred thousand pounds would be found to have arisen. The Members expressed great satisfaction at these statements, and passed several resolutions which will be found amongst our advertisements.—The cordial thanks of the meeting were then voted to the worthy President, and the meeting dissolved.—Norfolk Chronicle.

PRICE OF STOCKS AT THE CLOSE, SATURDAY.

The amount of Stock sold this week has been even larger than that disposed of during the whole of the four weeks preceding. Consols for the Account this day week closed at 82¾, but on Friday touched 80¼, and have since varied between 81 and 81¼. The Court of Chancery bought largely both yesterday and to-day, and has rendered Stock very scarce. Consols at the close to-day are 11⅛.

The LITERARY MUSEUM.—The Museum and the Literary Register having been united, will henceforth be published under the above title. The Number of this day contains, among other interesting articles, Reviews and copious extracts from Irving's Orations; the new Number of the Liberal; Mrs. Holderness's Account of New Russia; Bakewell's Travels among the Grecian and Pennine Alps, &c. &c. Poetry; Amusing Sketches of Men and Manners; the Theatres; Foreign Literature and Correspondence; Science, &c. &c.—Price 8d. and 1s. Stamped for country circulation. Published by John Warren, 7, Brydges street, Covent Garden; and to be had of all booksellers and newsmen in the kingdom.

The public have always some object which attracts general attention. In former times Wilkes and Liberty, Animal Magnetism, and the Cock Lane Ghost, were subjects which engrossed public notice. Now the favourite topics of general and fashionable conversation are the Rev. Mr. Irving and Rowland's Macassar Oil.

ELEGANT GLASSES, FURNITURE, &c.—The Nobility and Gentry are invited to inspect the Ware rooms of Cooper and Son, 93, Bishopsgate Within, where is exhibited a large Assortment of new and second-hand Plate Glasses, admirably suited to every description of drawing or dining-rooms. The prices are just reduced 40 per cent. on plates measuring 100 inches by 72, and upwards; and on those of smaller dimensions the alteration will be found equally important. The extensive preference given to this establishment is thankfully acknowledged by the Proprietors, who, in their endeavours to evince their gratitude, by manufacturing articles in a superior manner, at prices suitable to the times, hope to merit a continuance of public support. In the furniture department is comprised every new and elegant article of upholstery, cabinet, and chair work, regulated upon such a scale of economy as to demand and ensure the patronage of rank and fashion.

A candid examination of professional pretensions is only to be feared by those who are conscious of incapacity. Messrs. Goss and Co. Members of the Royal College of Surgeons, confine their studies to the treatment of such disorders as arise from nervous debility. Their works. "The Ægis of Life," and "Hygeiana," (the latter addressed to females) in full explanation of these subjects, may be had at No. 29, Paternoster-row, London, Porter, 72, Grafton street, Dublin, or at any Booksellers. Medicines can be forwarded to any part, however distant, on receiving a Bank note.—11, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street, London.

TO FAMILIES LEAVING TOWN, and fitting up their COUNTRY RESIDENCES.

MILES and EDWARDS'S splendid Stock of London Chintz Furnitures, Spanish Damasks, Cashmere Chintzes, Moreens, &c. is, without exception, the largest, the most select, and the cheapest in the kingdom. This immense assortment having been entirely manufactured since the extraordinary diminution in the value, the proprietors are enabled and determined to sell them full one third below the regular prices of old establishments. M. and E. are aware that by this innovation upon the system of the trade, they have incurred the animosity of other houses, but the unprecedented encouragement experienced from the principal Nobility and Gentry is an ample compensation and sufficient inducement for them to adhere to their present plan. In fitting up Drawing Room and Dining Room Curtains, Four-post and French Beds, &c. Families may, in many instances, effect a saving of nearly one half by inspecting this matchless stock at Miles and Edwards's only establishment is at No. 134, Oxford-street, between Holles street and Old Cavendish-street.

EUROPEAN LIFE INSURANCE and ANNUITY COMPANY, No. 10, Chatham-place, Blackfriars.—Persons affecting Insurances with this Company, for the whole period of life, are immediately entitled to participate in whatever division of profit shall take place, which, with the reduced rate of Premium demanded, will enable all descriptions of persons to make a provision for their families on terms the most advantageous. Annuities have also been calculated by which the Premiums may be paid Quarterly, Half-Yearly, or Annually, at the option of the Insured. No charge is made for Entrance or for Policy. Persons engaged in trade are permitted to go in steam, or other decked vessels, to and from any part of the united kingdom, and in time of peace to and from any part of the Continent, situated between the Elbe and Bordeaux, without being required to pay additional Premium, or to procure a license from the Directors. This Company continue to advance Money on Annuity secured on Freehold, Copyhold, or long Leasehold Property, or Money in the Funds. JOHN CLARK, Managing Director.

NORWICH UNION LIFE INSURANCE SOCIETY. Instituted July 1809. London Offices, Waterloo-place, Pall-mall; and Birchin-lane, Cornhill.

At a GENERAL MEETING of the Members of this Society, duly convened by Public Advertisement, and held on the 28th day of July, 1823, at the Society's Office, in Surrey-street, Norwich, JOHN PATTESON, Esq. President, in the Chair.

The Reports of the Auditors and Actuary were submitted to the Meeting, shewing the progressive accumulation and appropriation of the Funds, and stating the result of a recent valuation by the Actuary of the engagements and assets of the Society at Midsummer 1822.

These Reports having been read, it was moved by Mr. Alderman Francis; seconded by Timothy Sheppard, Esq., and unanimously resolved:

First, That this Meeting is highly gratified with the Reports of the Auditors and Actuary, which have been now read, and by which it appears, that on the 30th of June, 1822, the Society's Life Insurance Capital amounted to 393,248l. 9s. 6d. besides 106,467l. 16s. 2d. reserved to meet its engagements to Annuitants, and that its present income exceeds 130,000l. per annum.

Second, That in pursuance of the Actuary's Report, a bonus of 24 per Cent. be now declared upon the Deposits made by the existing Members of the Society, whose Policies were effected previously to the 30th day of June, 1822.

Third, That this Meeting has had peculiar satisfaction in viewing the steady and successful progress of the Society through a period of 15 years, during which time it has constantly afforded to the Insured the benefit of reduced rates of Premium, and will now have realized bonuses of 24 per Cent. to the more recent Members, and of 44 per Cent. to those of longer standing.

JOHN PATTESON, President.

It was then moved by Jeremiah Ives, Esq. seconded by William Simpson, Esq. and unanimously Resolved—That the cordial thanks of this Meeting be given to the President for his conduct in the Chair this day, and particularly for the able exposition he has now made of the result of his own investigation into the affairs and general business of the Society.

Velour de Paris, ducapes, gros de Naples, figured silks, striped silks, taffeties, sarsnets, velvets, and every rich silk now in fashion; very curious and beautiful long and square shawls, a great bargain, from 14s. to 5l. A large stock of remnants very cheap; family mourning of every description.—Spitalfields House, 12, Henrietta street, Covent Garden.

TWO THOUSAND SOILED DAMAGED TABLE CLOTHS, AT HALF PRICE; rich clintz furnitures, 1s. per yard, worth 2s.; moreens, 1s. 4d., best ditto, 1s. 6d.; linings, in every shade, 6d. per yard: handsome Marseilles quilts, 3 yards square, 13s. 6d.; counterpanes, 10s. 6d.; large blankets, 8s. the pair; yard wide furniture dimity, 9d. per yard: Russia sheeting, 8½d.; Irish ditto, yard and a quarter wide, quite free from dress, 1s. 4d.; a few pieces of real Russia, two and a half and three yards wide, for noblemen's beds; bucking, three yards wide, Russia ditto, 5s.; brilliant napkins, 7s. per dozen; the largest size dinner ditto, 21s.; Cotonna stripes and Cadiz plaids, for dresses; 1s. 6d. per yard; jacconot muslins, 18s. 9d. the piece of 21 yards, worth 30s.; yard and a half wide cambric ditto, 11s. 9d., worth 16s.; fashionable chintz prints, for dresses, 1s. 4d., worth 2s.; French width sarsnets, 2s. 10d.; rich gros de Naples, 3s. 6d.; bombasins, 1s.; Italian nets and poplins equally cheap; 10 bales of twilled and figured stuffs; 16 bales of Lancashire and Welsh flannels, and a lot of linen cloths and coatings, just received by the packets means under those of last year, several boxes of Irish linens and French cambrics, of superior make and bleach. The above articles are to be had in any quantity, with every other article of Linen Drapery, Silk Mercery, Hosiery, &c., for ready money, at CRAIG and D'OYLEY'S Family Linen Warehouse, 77, Oxford-street. A discount allowed on all purchases amounting to twenty pounds and upwards.—No abatement.

FAMILIES LEAVING TOWN.—Previous to Ladies leaving the metropolis they are particularly recommended to inspect the remaining part of the fashionable summer stock of silks manufactured by SEWELL and CROSS, Silkmen, in every pleasing shade of colour, from the most quiet drab to the very first, being the choice of the summer stock, they are now selling at prices sufficient to induce every lady giving her orders (if not part of the kingdom.) Rich single Gros de Naples, 2s. 7d. to 2s 10s. a yard; double do. in every shade of colour, 3s. 6d. to 4s. 6d.; rich levantine silks, measuring three quarters wide, 3s. to 5s.; very rich ducapes silks, an article for which this house has been long famed, in every pleasing colour, 4s. 6d. to 5s. 6d. commonly sold at 7s.; 500 pieces of striped silks for ladies' morning dresses, 2s. 3d. to 2s. 6d.; 600 pieces of netts for evening dress, 1s. 2d. a yard to the best quality made at 1s. 6d.; muslin flounces, insertions, and robes. These articles ought to claim more than ordinary attention, as S. and C. take upon themselves to say they have purchased the last wrecks of two unfortunate manufacturers in Glasgow, 400 very rich white robes, elegantly flounced, which they intend selling at 12s., 15s., and 18s.; some of which cost the manufacturers 35s. and 2l.; with an endless variety of muslins, flounces, and insertions at nearly half price; ladies who have made purchases at the same establishment before are the best judges of the quality of their silks, and may depend on having any article punctually forwarded to their country residence from Sewell and Cross, 42, Frith-street, corner of Old Compton-street, Soho-square.

CHEAP and FASHIONABLE CABINET, CHAIR, COUCH, and SOFA MANUFACTORY.—Fifty different Patterns, and from twenty to thirty dozen of well-seasoned mahogany, real rosewood, stained rosewood, cottage, and bed-room chairs, of all colours, ready for inspection. Real rosewood chairs as cheap as stained; card, sofa, and loo tables, and cabinets to match. A large assortment of mahogany patent dining tables of all sizes; sideboards, wardrobes, drawers, and all other articles of furniture, too numerous to mention. All manufactured on the premises, and warranted of the best quality, at ROBERT WALKINGTON'S, 214, High Holborn, opposite Southampton-street, Bloomsbury-square. All Goods sent free of expence within twelve miles of London.

WILLIAM JONES, (late Walsh,) Operative Chemist to his Royal Highness the Duke of York. The Original GINGER SEEDS having for nearly 30 years been patronized by the Public, and recommended by medical men of the first eminence, their beneficial effects have become fully established; in consequence of which many sorts have been offered for sale of a very inferior quality, which has, in a great measure, brought the above elegant preparation into great disrepute. The public are therefore informed, that they are prepared solely at the original Warehouse, No. 100, Strand, by Mr. JONES, successor to the late Mr. Walsh.—Where are also to be had WALSH'S DINNER PILLS—DR. MOSELEY'S ANTIBILIOUS PILLS—WALSH'S GOUT CORDIAL—And WELCH'S FEMALE PILLS. The efficacy of these Medicines being universally known, requires no recommendation.

THE GENUINE SYRUP OF DE VELNOS.

THE Depôt for this useful Alterative is No. 52, Berner's-street, Oxford-street, where it is prepared according to the Recipe of the late Mr. Swainson, entrusted to his Nephew and Successor, Mr. Thomas Canham, alone. Among all the Medicines of this denomination, the VEGETABLE SYRUP of DE VELNOS has obtained a distinction which its efficacy alone can support. It corrects, purifies, and sweetens the blood; and those who are afflicted with scrofula, leprosy, scurvy, scorbutic eruptions, and many of those melancholy diseases arising from impurity of the blood and juices, those who suffer by diseased liver, or from the dissipations and indiscretions of their youth, or whose constitutions are broken down and debilitated by mercurial, antimonial, or narcotic medicines—should submit to a regular course of the Vegetable Syrup. The effect of this Medicine, principally on the insensible perspiration, animal juices, and requires only the common restraints of moderation in diet. It is dissolved in the chyle of the stomach, is conveyed by the circulating fluids, and corrects their tendencies to all those diseases which originate in vitiated blood. It is a safe, though a powerful substitute for mercury, and removes those evils which an unsuccessful use of that mineral occasions. The Syrup is prepared and sold at the Proprietor's house, No. 52, Berner's-street, Oxford street, at 13s. a bottle; and by his appointment, at Mr. Atkinson's, 196, Bishopsgate-street Without; and by Mr. Canham's Agents, in every considerable Town of the United Kingdom; and the Concentrated for warm climates, by his deputed agents in the East Indies, viz.—Messrs. Mackintosh and Co. Calcutta; Messrs. Forbes and Co. Bombay; and Messrs. Papell and Johnson, Madras.

Assurances are effected by this Society upon the lives of persons in the Navy, the Church, the Law, and in every other station of life.

This is not a Society of mutual Assurance, and the assured are exempt from the proprietors from all responsibility.

As large a proportion of the savings as shall be deemed consistent with the security of the Society, will be periodically divided between the assured and the proprietors, as follows: Four-fifths will be added to the sums specified in the policies effected for the whole term of life, to be payable at the expiration of the same, and the remaining One-fifth will be carried over to the Proprietors' Guarantee Fund.

No extra premium is required from persons in the Army or Navy, unless actually called into actual service.

No entrance money is charged; nor is any charge made for any policy but the cost of the stamp.

Arrangements have been made, under which assurances may be effected on the lives of persons resident at considerable distances from London, without the payment of a fine for non-appearance at the Office.

Attendance daily at the Office, from ten till four, where a Prospectus, containing every other information respecting the Society, may be obtained.

☞ The Board Days are on Tuesdays and Fridays, at Two o'Clock precisely.

JAMES ANDERTON, Secretary.

CIDER, PERRY, ALE, &c.—THOMAS FIELD and SON, to acquaint their Friends and the Public, that their genuine Cider, Perry, Burton, Edinburgh, Taunton, and Welsh Ales, Brewster Beer, Brown Stout &c. are now in fine order for use. They have also a very superior Foreign Wines, Cape Madeira, Brandy, (white and coloured) Rum, Hollands Geneva, and Orange Shrub; and they have been enabled to make a considerable reduction in their prices generally.—22, Henrietta-street, Cavendish-square.

SURREY.—CHARLWOOD PARK ESTATE, with the Manorial Heriots, Quit Rents, &c. to be SOLD by PRIVATE CONTRACT, consisting of an Elegant Sporting Residence, with Manorial Courts, and a Farm well stocked with Game, and 474 Acres of Freehold Land, and a Rich Pasture over 930 Acres of Uninclosed Land; with suitable Farm Houses, &c. along the Turnpike Road, midway between London and Brighton, 25 miles from Reigate. The Villa is placed on an elevated situation, surrounded by Shrubberies, and Plantations, in a Park of 200 Acres, commanding most Views unrivalled with all the beauties of nature and art. There is a kitchen garden, farm-house, stables, coach-house, and kennel for a pack of hounds, at a convenient distance from the residence, and most of the farm-house have been built within twenty years. Poor rate very low in the pound, all other rates low. The neighbourhood being noted before the World renders the situation peculiarly suited to the lovers of field sports. To be viewed by cards only, which, with descriptive particulars, and a plan of the Estate, may be had of Mr. Vaux, Land Agent and Surveyor, 58 Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, who is authorized to treat for the same. A part of the estate may be seen at his office. Particulars may also be had at the Libraries, Brighton, Plough, Cheltenham, White Hart, Bath, and Mitre, Oxford. Letters to be post paid.

GLOUCESTERSHIRE.—FORSALE, with immediate Possession, the MYTHE HOUSE, and ESTATE, one mile from Tewkesbury, on the road leading to Worcester and Malvern.—The Premises comprise a convenient and well arranged Mansion House, having spacious and lofty apartments, dry arched cellaring, domestic and other offices, forcing and conservative houses, plentifully supplied with spring and rain water, and forming a most desirable residence for a family of distinction; together with a capital walled-in kitchen garden, in which is stalled and open stabling, double coach house, cow house, pig-sties poultry-houses, workshops, and various other buildings, &c. &c. 28 acres of valuable pasture land, and flourishing plantations adjoining the House, which is of modern structure, and has lately undergone a thorough repair, is seated on a bold and commanding elevation, at a convenient distance from the turnpike-road, between the beautiful Hills of Malvern and Bredon, which, as well as of the rich and extensive valleys beneath, with the venerable remains of its much admired abbey church, and the junction of the Severn and Avon, it affords the most delightful prospects. Mail and other coaches pass the house almost hourly; and the facility of land and water carriage to all parts of the kingdom adds greatly to the advantage of the situation.—The tenure is freehold of inheritance, is tythe free, and the land is considered. The furniture, which is of the most modern style, and has been recently laid in new, may be taken to or not at a fair valuation, at the option of the purchaser.—The premises may be viewed on Tuesdays and Thursdays, between the hours of Ten and Three, by Tickets, which may be had at Mr. John Moore's, Auctioneer, Tewkesbury, who is fully empowered to treat for the sale.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, Aug. 6.—A letter from Toulon, dated July 30, after detailing the various excesses committed at Saragossa, on the 20th, and following days, on the authority of an eye-witness, says that—"after the arrests a great number of respectable inhabitants left Saragossa by night. The 22d and 23d, the discontent of the people was general, because they remained alone with the Priests in the city, which now more resembles the meanest village of Arragon than the capital of the province. Extraordinary Couriers were dispatched by the French Authorities to the Duke of Angoulême, and it is hoped that his Royal Highness will order a detachment of at least 5 or 6000 men, to maintain tranquillity at Saragossa. Such is the fine use made of the 8000 muskets distributed to the populace on the entrance of the French. Persons from Valencia assert, that similar scenes to those acted in Saragossa, had taken place in that city; and that 3000 families had left it, and were wandering over the country. There are some guerillas in the province, who have already captured several hundred black cattle destined for the army.

The Quotidienne announces that six Madrid Merchants had been arrested on the 27th ult. in that capital, charged with conspiring against the Government of the Regency; and that the number of Constitutionalists thrown into prisons in Saragossa amounted to 1100.

The Moniteur of Sunday contains a despatch from Marshal Moncey, dated from Ygualada, 26th ult. and stating that Milan's had departed the evening before with the mass of his troops, leaving only 12 or 1500 to cover his retreat, which was directed to Cervera. The authorities of Ygualada had followed Milans, and it was necessary immediately to establish others. Lieut.-General Sarfield took this trouble on himself. While the French troops were taking their position reconnoissances were sent out, and they found the enemy's outposts at St. Genis, in front of the famous position of Jorba. The Marshal made dispositions for attacking him; the position was vigorously attacked and vigorously defended. The arrival of two battalions of the 60th, a little after the commencement of the attack, decided the success of it, and forced the enemy to abandon the position of Jorba, the eminence behind Jorba, the position which commanded it, and lastly, the summit of the left bank of the Noya between Jorba and the Altar del Guanche, and the enemy was forced to retreat, with, as the Marshal says, considerable loss. The Marshal thus concludes:—"Our loss is five killed; one of the 16th, and four of the 60th, among whom is an officer. Thirty-two wounded, viz. seven of the 16th, 24 of the 60th, and one of the artillery. Baron Eroles, on his side, advanced upon Calaf, where he surprised the enemy. That town, according to his report, the day before was occupied by 500 men. Those who could get out were overtaken and partly destroyed, or picked up by our men, detachments of 20 horse, belonging to the 18th Chasseurs, and by some officers and orderly men of the Staff of the Spanish division. In the end 200 prisoners were taken here, among whom are 23 officers. The loss of the Spanish Royalists was two killed, (one of them an officer,) and 11 wounded. The Baron remains at Calaf, which he occupies. I shall acquaint your Excellency with our further movements, and have the honour to add a list of the officers, subalterns, and privates who have distinguished themselves."

GRAND HEAD-QUARTERS.—TEMBLEQUE, JULY 30.—The fort of Monzon surrendered on the 23d July to the troops of the Spanish General Santos Ladron.—The fortified city of Morella, in the kingdom of Valencia, surrendered at discretion to the troops of the Spanish Royalist Gen. Capape. The place was defended by 150 men of Ballesteros' army.

BREST, AUGUST 1.—La Clementine, of Havre, which left Brest to join the convoy destined for Martinique, was captured by a Spanish privateer four hours after her sailing from Brest.

A letter from Frankfort, dated July 24, says:—"It is generally reported in our political circles, that the present situation of the Peninsula will give rise to a new European Congress, to be held at Vienna in the month of October next. It is also added, that not only the Powers of the first rank, but likewise those of the second and third, will assist at the approaching Congress. The object of this general assembly will be, to form into statutes the great maxims of the Holy Alliance, giving them the form of a code, which will be recognised by all the States, as establishing the public rights of nations."

Letters from Madrid affirm that the sortie from Cadiz was directed by two veteran foreign Generals—that the troops of Bourdesoult sustained great loss—that Lopez Banos had moved on Talavera, and effected his junction with Colonel Amor, their united strength being 6000 foot, and 1,500 horse.—Villa Campa was also endeavouring to join Ballesteros, and it was probable that the blockading army before Cadiz must send large detachments to reconnoitre them.

The Madrid Gazette of July 30 contains the following General Order, which was issued by the Duke of Angoulesme immediately before setting out:—"The Marshal Duke of Reggio (Oudinot), Commander-in-Chief of the first corps of the army, shall have the supreme command of the provinces of New Castile, Estremadura, Segovia, Leon, Salamanca and Valladolid, Galicia, and Asturias. His head-quarters shall be at Madrid.—His Serene Highness Prince Hohenlohe, Commander-in-Chief of the third corps of the army, shall have the supreme command of the provinces of Biscay, Alcadero, Burgos, Soria, Santo Domingo, Alava, and Biscay. His head-quarters shall be at Vittoria.—Marshal the Marquess of Lauriston, Commander-in-Chief of the Second Corps of Reserve, shall take the supreme command of the provinces of Guipuscoa, Navarre, Arragon, and the Lower Elbe. His head-quarters shall be at Tolosa.—Lieut.-Gen. Count Molitor, Commander-in-Chief of the Second Corps of the Army, shall have the supreme command of the kingdoms of Valencia, Murcia, and Grenada. (His head-quarters are not mentioned.)—Gen. Viscount de Foissac Latour, commanding in chief one column of operations, shall have the supreme command of the kingdoms of Cordova and Jaen.—Lieut.-Gen. Count Bordesoult, commanding in chief the first Corps of Reserve, shall exercise supreme command over the kingdom of Seville, and the operations in front of Cadiz. His head-quarters shall be at Puerto de Santa Maria.—The preceding distribution of corps may be modified according to circumstances; but until a fresh order be issued, all the Generals and Commanders of the French and Spanish troops shall correspond with the above named supreme Commanders.—The present General Order, signed by his Royal Highness the Duke of Angoulême, shall be communicated to the Regency of the Kingdom of Spain, in order that it may issue the requisite instructions to the Captains-General, Commanders of Provinces, &c."

MADRID, JULY 24.—Bourck continues his operations in Gallicia; Morillo was advancing against Vigo; Corunna, which is blockaded, will not be able to hold out long, on account of its position, any more than Ferrol.—O'Donnel has written to the Regency, that till a body of troops is kept at Valladolid, and Ciudad Rodrigo blockaded, Old Castile will not enjoy tranquility. Pampeluna and St. Sebastian hold out obstinately.—The present state of things in Spain is very unfavourable to foreign commerce, the French cruizers stationed before Barcelona, Tarragona, Carthagena, Malaga, Algesiras, Cadiz, Corunna, Vigo, Ferrol, Santandar, Santona, and St. Sebastian, strictly searching all vessels, and hindering them from entering these ports; and even on the ports occupied by the French and the soldiers of the Faith, the duties are very high.

JULY 30.—By an Extraordinary Courier.—News from Cadiz of the 21st has arrived, and great solicitude was experienced there in regard to Ballesteros, and with reason. We learn that this General is in the environs of Jaen, shut up between the corps of General Molitor, on its way from Granada, that of General Latour Foissac from Anduear, and the entire population, who have risen and are armed against him.—A French Officer having been sent with a flag of truce into Cadiz on the 25th of July, was received with transports of joy by the people, who loudly expressed their wish for the deliverance of the King. The scarcity of water, bread, and meat, is beginning to be felt by a numerous population, weary of suffering for a cause which is not their own.

JULY 31.—Their Majesties and their Royal Highnesses were in good health on the 25th inst. The scarcity and dearness of provisions augment daily in Cadiz; the consequence is, that the artisans and workmen find no longer any employment, and that discontent is general among the inhabitants of all classes.

CADIZ, JULY 7.—By a Royal Order of the 5th instant, the Royal George steam vessel is exempted from paying any port charges whatever, on account of having engaged to convey the Government correspondence from this place to Lisbon, Corunna, and England, and likewise to bring it from those parts as safely as my couriers.

By a decree of the Cortes, the Count de Carthagena (Morillo) has been declared a traitor to his country, and deprived of his rank, titles, and dignities.

AT THE BIVOUAC OF THE ADVANCED POSTS BEFORE CORUNNA, 18th JULY.—It has pleased God, the disposer of all things, to grant to our 7th Light Infantry a complete victory over the most furious revolutionists, drawn up under the walls of Corunna, and commanded by Quiroga and Wilson. On the 15th Bourck's division passed the heights to attack the out-posts which defended the approach of the town. We were ordered to push forward, and the fire soon became general throughout the whole line. On our right was a strong redoubt which supported an entrenchment occupied by the enemy on the left; on a high hill was another intrenchment, strengthened by windmills, wherein were three pieces of cannon, and, besides this, a large body of infantry. Our Colonel, Baron Lambot, marched by a very bad and difficult road towards the works on the left. He contrived to draw up in front of this position. He saw it was of no use to begin a fire in front of a line so well protected. He ordered us to charge at a brisk trot the windmill on our left, which was the highest point. Our brave men, without minding the balls which hailed on them as they passed along the line, followed their Colonel at a quick pace. We soon saw the enemy waver and give way. We redoubled our speed; and what with astonishment at our audacity, and fear of being taken in the rear, the enemy abandoned every post, and took to his heels. The Colonel, the first to arrive at the mill, stuck on it his white pocket-handkerchief, as a sort of flag, as far as we continued our pursuit of the enemy. Our battalion having on their side carried the redoubt on the right, joined us in pursuing the enemy, even to the walls of the city. Berthier's brigade, which came up to support us, did not arrive till the enemy had been forced from every post; we exchanged shots during the whole night, and our regiment took post at the distance of a pistol shot from the gates of the town. Never did I serve under more vigour and courage than our 7th. We have lost forty or fifty men in this affair. Quiroga and Wilson were present in the works which we took, and it was a ball from the 7th which wounded Wilson. They had but just time to make two discharges of cannon, loaded with grape-shot, and which they speedily carried away; we have, however, got their two ammunition waggons, with the mules, which they had not time to put to. Thus our regiment has, as it were, insured its button No. 7, and every one will think it an honour to wear it.

BLOCKADE OF ST. SEBASTIAN, JULY 29.—Marshal Lauriston arrived here yesterday. He has inspected the camp of the 19th light troops and the 43d of the line, and has also visited the advanced posts. Immediately on his arrival, he sent Col. Cloud to demand the answer of the besieged by four o'clock this afternoon. It has not yet been received. The Marshal has established his head-quarters at Ernani.—The day before yesterday three artillerymen deserted from St. Sebastian. On being brought before Gen. Ricard, they stated that the besieged were preparing to make a sortie; but the precise time was not known, because the soldiers, who mistrusted their officers, were desirous of making it by day, while they, on the contrary, wished it to be a night sally. The arrival of the Marshal, and his summons to the garrison, will doubtless change the intention of General O'Donnel.

ROYAL GEORGE, OFF VIGO, AUG. 2.—We have just arrived from Corunna with the Governor, General Vigo, and his Staff, he is appointed to succeed Gen. Romago here. Corunna is invested closely by the French troops, and is daily expected to fall; the Burgos militia and some Biscayan troops of the line, have hitherto defended it. The French General has embarked a battering train on board a French frigate, which blockades Corunna by sea, and which has already landed a sufficient number of cannon to mount the French batteries which occupy the heights commanding the town; when I left, many persons had been wounded, even in the streets, by the fire of the French musketry, so completely is the town at their mercy. General Quiroga and his Staff, who came with us from Corunna, have just returned on board to sail with us for England. Every thing is in the greatest confusion. Morillo is within fifteen miles, at Ponte Vedra, joined by some French troops. He will not listen to any terms, and, as there are no troops here, the place must soon fall. Morillo is, I understand, most anxious to take Sir R. Wilson, who is here with several English Officers. The troops here cannot be relied on. Eight hundred, which were sent against Morillo two days ago, went over to him, and the Authorities are fearful that the remaining part may follow their example. Information has this moment arrived, that 2000 French troops are within 11 miles of this place. The guns have been spiked.

AUGUST 3.—Sir R. Wilson has just engaged a small British schooner in the Newfoundland trade, to take himself, Captain Erskine, and two or three others, who are still with him, to Cadiz. The few troops that remain here (about 300) are now going to Bayonna (in Galicia) with a view of rendering it defensible. Every boat in the harbour is pressed for this service, and the guns in the citadel have been spiked. The Governor-General Romago, his Lady, and Aid-de-Camp, have just embarked on board the Royal George for England. Sir Robert Wilson's wound is almost well, but poor Colonel Light, although much better, is still in a state of great suffering at Corunna, and was not considered sufficiently convalescent to join Sir Robert here. It is supposed the French will have 5,000 troops to send to the Army of the South by the fall of Corunna and Vigo.

MATARO, JULY 30.—This morning, at three o'clock, the garrison of Barcelona made a sortie. The principal attacks were directed upon a point occupied by 200 Frenchmen. A strong detachment of cavalry came out soon after, to sustain the column of infantry. Our 200 brave fellows suffered the enemy to approach to within half musket shot. Three discharges were sufficient to break the Constitutional ranks, and two pieces of cannon, masked by a hedge, having played upon the cavalry, the route was complete.

PORT ST. MARY, JULY 23.—We have received from Seville eight 24-pounders. Two were placed immediately on Fort St. Catherine, and four on the Puerto Real, to oppose the fire from Fort Trocadero. Since the 15th the soldiers on duty at St. Catherine have been ordered to fire on all boats which, coming from Cadiz, attempt to enter this port. On the 20th an officer on guard at this fort perceived an American vessel arrive, and fired at her some shots, fortunately none of them took effect. The officer had not observed her national colours. The mistake has been explained. Eight gun boats have been constructed here, which will in a few days put to sea.

A report had prevailed that General Lallemand had lost both his legs in the late engagement. This is since denied. The fact is, that an officer, clad in a Spanish General Officer's uniform, was found on the field of battle. Two grenadiers of the 36th having attempted to raise him, he addressed them in French:—"My friends, leave me to die. I am an unfortunate Frenchman who has taken up arms against my country. I do not deserve your kindness." They however brought him to the next hospital, where he died half an hour afterwards. In his pocket was found a portefeuille inscribed with the French word, "Souvenir." The prisoners being interrogated as to the name of this officer, replied, that they knew nothing about him, except that he was a superior French Officer who had within a few days arrived at Cadiz, and was concealed under a feigned name.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

TUESDAY.—Ex-parte the Hon. Newton Fellowes in the matter of the Earl of Portsmouth, a Lunatic.—Mr. Attorney-General.—This is the Petition of the Committee of the Person, praying that it may be referred to the Master to report and state what proceedings it is fitting should be taken in the Ecclesiastical Court with respect to the marriage of 1814; and also with respect to the validity of certain deeds executed by the Earl. I am not aware that this application is opposed, or that it will be necessary to trouble the Court by going through the Petition.—Mr. Heald.—I have no instructions to oppose it.—The Lord Chancellor.—Then you had better take the order in the language of the Petition, only insert the words "whether any and what proceedings," so that the investigation may not be prejudiced by any act of mine.

VICE-CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

THURSDAY.—The question of the demand of Mr. Hooper against her late Majesty's property, was again brought before the Court. The question here was, whether the sum of 2300l. due to Mr. Hooper, should be paid out of the general assets of her Majesty, or out of the 5000l. claimed by Mr. Austin.—The Vice-Chancellor directed that the Master should draw up a report to be submitted during the recess, to the consideration of the Master of the Rolls, upon which that learned person would decide which fund payment should be made from: 1000l. it appeared had already been paid; and should his Honour the Master of the Rolls direct the payment of the remaining 1300l. to be made from the 5000l. there would still remain 3700l. as some provision for the young man.

ASSIZES.

KENT.—Wm. Donallan alias Donally, was indicted for the murder of Bridget Donallan, his wife, at Chatham, on the 19th Sept. 1818, by drowning her in a well.—In the year 1816, the prisoner was brought as a deserter from Porchester gaol to the depôt of the 98th regiment (to which he belonged), at the Isle of Wight. The regiment being then in Canada, he, together with his wife and two children, was sent to America: and in 1818 he returned to this country, and was quartered at Brompton. In September in that year he was billeted at the Duke of York public-house, and a back kitchen, to which was attached a bedroom, was assigned to him and his family. His wife (who was represented to be a very respectable woman), was then in an advanced state of pregnancy. On the morning of the 19th of Sept. the deceased was missing, and the prisoner being asked by the wife of a serjeant who was abroad what had become of her, said she had gone off with a soldier of his regiment, and taken three pounds with her, and her clothes, leaving him but fifteen shillings. He then proposed to the serjeant's wife, who was preparing to join her husband at the Cape of Good Hope, that she should cohabit with him. She treated the proposition with derision, and told him she had no doubt his wife would return to him in a day or two, knowing her to be a woman of correct habits. He, however, said, he would be d—d if his wife would ever be seen in Chatham again. On the same day the serjeant's wife agreed with the publican to take the apartments which had been occupied by the prisoner, who was let into possession of another room in the House. Upon examining the bed-room, it appeared, that there were stains of blood upon the bolster, the sheets, and the ticking, which was said not to have arisen from natural causes. This circumstance excited no suspicion against the prisoner, and he remained in the house for a week after. Immediately under the window of the room was a well. In a few days after the deceased was missing; it was observed that the water was tainted and unfit for use. At the end of three weeks something was discovered in the well which excited curiosity, and a man was sent to examine it, and the result was that the body of the deceased was brought up in a state of nakedness and putridity. No marks of violence were discernible from the length of time the body had lain in the water, but no doubt was entertained of her identity. It was admitted on the part of the prosecution that nothing would turn upon the nakedness of the body, as it was the practice of the lower orders of Irish to sleep in that state. At this time the prisoner had left Chatham, having been discharged from his regiment, and no traces of him could be obtained. In the year 1819 a private in the 2d West India Regiment, named Thompson, who was stationed in the Island of Barbadoes, and had been a sergeant in the 98th in the year 1816, when the prisoner was received at the depôt in the Isle of Wight, picked up at the guard-room door, a piece of an old newspaper, containing an account of Mrs. Donallan's murder by her husband, which brought to his mind the conviction that the prisoner was the man. In the month of March, 1822, Thompson was quartered at Clanmorris, in Ireland.—Being on duty one day the prisoner passed the barracks, he immediately recognised him as an old comrade. They fell into conversation, and Thompson asked him how Biddy and the children were, meaning the prisoner's wife.—The prisoner became much agitated, and answered that his wife died, or that he had buried her (which the witness could not say,) at Chatham, in 1818. In a day or two Thompson communicated his suspicions to Captain Smith, and in consequence of his information, he and two soldiers were sent by the Hon. Denis Browne to desire the prisoner to attend him. The prisoner being informed of the message became again violently agitated, and expressed a wish first to put on a clean shirt, which he was incapable of doing without assistance, from extreme perturbation at the communication which had been made to him. Upon his appearing before Mr. Brown, he was sent to this country to answer this charge. The prisoner stood for trial at the last Assizes, but in consequence of the absence of material witnesses his trial had been postponed. Two circumstances were admitted to be favourable to the prisoner—first, that within a week after his wife was missed, he had drank the water of the well; and, secondly, that he had made no attempt to escape when suspicion was attached to him. The Jury found the prisoner Guilty—Death. The prisoner being called upon in the usual manner to say whether he had any thing to argue why sentence of death should not be passed upon him, again solemnly declared his innocence.—He was executed on Friday morning.

BRIDGEWATER.—Edgehill v. Haine.—This was an action of damages for a breach of promise of marriage. The damages were laid at 2000l. The plaintiff is the daughter of a publican at Glastonbury, aged 27; the defendant a farmer, aged 50. They had been acquainted for ten years. The defendant had several times promised her marriage, but had as frequently broken his promise. After the courtship had continued for three years, the defendant had been called on to explain his intentions, which he declared were honourable, and that he intended to marry the plaintiff. Sometime after, the plaintiff's mother, being on her death-bed, was anxious to know the meaning of the defendant's conduct towards her daughter, she had him up into her bed-room, told him she was dying, and he then told the mother that he would never desert her daughter. Not long after the death of the mother, without assigning any cause, he discontinued his attentions to the plaintiff. Subsequent to this, a young man of the name of Wood offered his hand to the plaintiff, and would have been accepted, had not the defendant sent for the father, and said that he wished to make his daughter his wife; the father replied, that he had no objection if it were to make them both happy, but that defendant was not to deceive her as he before had done. The plaintiff again accepted his addresses, and since then a day was appointed for the wedding; he told her to prepare clothes for the ceremony, which she did. The defendant subsequently succeeded in obtaining his wishes, and the plaintiff could not now boast of that purity which, but for the scandalous conduct of the defendant, she otherwise might have done. When the defendant discovered the situation of the plaintiff, he absented himself from her, and refused to perform the promises he had so repeatedly made.—Mr. Justice Best commented severely on the conduct of the defendant; and observed, that though the jury were not to inflict damages as a criminal punishment, because this was an action to recover a civil right, still they ought to give a fair and reasonable compensation for the loss sustained.—The jury, without retiring from their box, after a few minutes consultation, returned a verdict for the plaintiff—Damages 400l.

Samuel Yoke, the son of a respectable farmer, was capitally indicted for shooting at Thomas Pearce, gamekeeper to Lord Glastonbury. The prisoner was found trespassing on the noble Lord's manor, when the prosecutor insisted upon his accompanying him to the bailiff's: the prisoner followed; and after proceeding about forty yards, he fired at the prosecutor, and then ran away; the latter followed, but being faint from the loss of blood, he turned round, and at that moment another shot was fired, which completely destroyed one of his eyes and forced out several of his teeth. The Jury found the prisoner guilty, and he was sentenced to be hung.

On Friday Mr. Littlewood, the King's Messenger, arrived in town with dispatches from Paris.

General Sir Thomas Maitland has left town to resume the Government of the Ionian Islands.

POLICE.

MANSION-HOUSE.—On Tuesday, a decrepid man, named Shelton, was brought up on a charge of having violently assaulted a boy. The prisoner was a poor old man of eccentric habits, and was frequently annoyed by the boys in the neighbourhood of Petticoat-lane, who maliciously made sport of him. The boy was seen fighting with him; at length they fell, the old man uppermost, and the boy's head was inflicted against the kirb-stone. He was remanded until the fate of the boy shall be known.

WORSHIP-STREET.—On Monday Samuel Hoskinson, Joseph Maxfield, and William Rowlinson, three inland navigators, were charged before Robert Bevill, Esq. with a rape and robbery. Elizabeth Clayton, a young woman, was the complainant. She stated that while coming along the canal in a boat she was treated in the most barbarous manner by the prisoners, who not only violated her person but robbed her of several articles. The prisoners were remanded.—At a subsequent examination, Richard Snellgrove, a watchman of Chapel-street, Edgeware-road, who humanely sheltered the poor woman on Sunday-night, stated that about twelve o'clock on Sunday night, he was in his box, near the second mile-stone from Tyburn-gate, at the third bridge on the Paddington Canal, when he thought he heard a man's footstep, and he turned his lanthorn, which throws a distant light, and saw a tallish man at the gate close to the bridge, and immediately after him a woman, whom he since knows to be Elizabeth Clayton. They both passed over the bridge in the direction to Harrow. Then he heard the man say, "You'll go a little further, and turn to the right, and you will come to the Tea-pot, and that will take you to Oxford-road." "My good-fellow," said the watchman, "you are directing that woman wrong, you are directing her to Harrow instead of Oxford-road." The watchman then called the woman back, and she came back. The man disappeared in a moment the same way as he came. When the woman came back she seemed much agitated, and scarcely able to speak, and the watchman said, "good woman, what part of London do you want to go." She said, appa-rently in distress, "I don't care where I go." The watchman observed, "Is there any thing the matter with you?" She said, "there was a good deal the matter, for she had been very ill used, and that she had been ill used by some of the boatmen." He remarked, "it's no use for you to go into London to night, for you will not get a lodging, and I will let you sit in my box till I go away at five o'clock." She said, "she would, and be glad." After he had gone his rounds, and returned to his box, he asked her what the ill treatment had been? She told him, "three men held her down in bed, when one of them committed the crime already stated, and that the man who came up the bank with her was the man, and that her arms and legs were bruised very much." The watchman said, "I wish you had told me of this sooner, and I would have taken the man into custody." He then gave her some refreshment of bread and cheese and beer, provided for himself, and she became more tranquil. He asked her if she should know the boat, and she said she should know it by some painting on it. She remained in his box till five o'clock on Monday morning, when he went with her to the Gunning House on the Canal, and there he inquired what boats had passed about midnight, and they were informed there were three, two of which were going to Paddington Wharf, and one of them was going to Sneland Robins's Wharf, at the Basin in the City-road. They afterwards went to view the two boats at Paddington, but she said neither of them was the boat. The watchman then took her home to his wife, and after humanely giving her a breakfast, he put her on a Paddington stage, with directions to put her down at the Basin in the City-road. Thomas Shaw stated that he was a labourer from Killashee, in Ireland. He and his sister, and five children, took their passage to London in Hodgkinson's boat. On Sunday last he was informed a woman was in the men's cabin, which was so distant from them that he could not hear what passed.—About midnight he was awoke by his sister's screaming. He started up, and found a woman had got into their place, and he helped her up, and said, if she did not be off quickly, he would push her overboard. The woman said, "God pity the stranger." and then got up and sat upon the top. He heard a man insisting upon her leaving that part of the boat, to which the woman answered, "Where shall I go?" He answered, "In the cabin." The woman said, "Will you protect me?" He said he would. The woman said, if he would engage to do that she would go upon her knees to him. Witness heard the man who was steering the boat call to the driver to stop the horse, and the boat was stopped about ten minutes. He afterwards heard the woman crying, but there was a noise from the boat and the horse. He also heard her say, "You are, I suppose, a gentleman of your word."—Some time afterwards he heard bustings, as of two persons going down from the boat. Catherine Linden, the sister, corroborated this account; but said, she was so frightened as not to recollect what passed. The prisoners were committed to Newgate for trial.

MARY-LA-BONNE.—W. Barnes and T. Woodward, were charged with robbing —Barnett, who stated, that on Tuesday he was coming down Lysson-grove, Mary-la-bonne, when the prisoners knocked him down, and after giving him some tremendous blows, Woodward snatched his hat, and retreated. He pursued them to the Tunnell of the Regent's Canal, and requested the restoration of his property, but Woodward dashed him into the Canal. He however succeeded in getting on shore, when they were again about to immerse him, but, on his imploring them to spare his life, they threw him on the ground, and loosed a large dog, when he made a hasty retreat. Two officers found them in two barges, which they boarded. On making known the nature of their errand, an attempt was made by other navigators to cut the barge adrift; but the officers produced their fire-arms, and threatened destruction to any one who persisted. This induced them to desist, and the prisoners, after a desperate struggle, were secured. The prisoners made no defence, and were committed.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A special Messenger was sent off on Friday morning to the King at Windsor, with the result of the deliberations of the Cabinet on Thursday, and at two o'clock Mr. Secretary Canning and Lord Francis Conyngham left town for Windsor Lodge, in order to lay before his Majesty the result of the deliberations of the Cabinet Council held on Friday. M. Bego, one of the Cabinet Messengers, is held in readiness to depart for Spain with dispatches, by the Royal George steam-packet, which will be sent off forthwith.—No Messenger has been sent with dispatches to Paris since the sitting of the Cabinet.

Tuesday morning, at three o'clock, a Messenger arrived from Paris, with despatches from Sir Charles Stuart, which were forwarded immediately to Mr. Canning, at Coombe Wood.

Sunday afternoon, the Duke of York left town for Brighton, where his Royal Highness is expected to remain about three weeks.

On Tuesday morning despatches from Paris, forwarded by Lord Francis Conyngham, were received at the Secretary of State's Office, and were immediately sent express to Mr. Secretary Canning, who was on a visit to Lord Liverpool at Coombe Wood. Orders were instantly issued to summon all the Members of the Privy Council for Wednesday. The Council continued in deliberation till a quarter past five o'clock. Soon after the Cabinet had assembled, Mr. Ward, attached to the Embassy of Sir William A'Court, arrived in a chaise-and-four, with despatches from his Excellency at St. Lucie, from which place he travelled in ten days. During his journey he was attacked, plundered, and shot at near Seville.

Sir John M. Doyle, K.C.B., Mr. Price, and Mr. Clay arrived last night in town, with despatches for Government, and the Spanish and Portuguese Ambassadors, after a passage of 84 hours from Vigo to Plymouth, which place they left on Saturday night last.

An important document has lately been issued from the Office of Taxes, addressed to the Select Vestry, Churchwardens, and Overseers of Parishes, where arrears have arisen in consequence of the neglect of Collectors of Taxes not enforcing and paying the sums due from their respective tithings. After stating the powers of 43 Geo. III. cap. 99, sec. 42. which authorises "the Select Vestry, Churchwardens, and Overseers, to require of the Collectors, in their several parishes, an account in writing (after 14 days' notice) of the sums received by such Collectors, of the sums in arrear, of the sums remaining in hand, and also of the same paid by him or them to the Receiver General—a default of rendering such account subjecting such Collector so refusing the same to a penalty of twenty pounds;" it also refers to 43 Geo. III. c. 161, which states that the parish or place "shall be answerable for the amount of the duties charged thereon, and also for the said duties being duly demanded within ten days after the same are payable, and every arrear of the said duties, arising from the default or failure of the Collectors shall be re-assessed on such parish or place."

THE ARMY.—The 1st Battalion of the Coldstream Guards, which proceeded from the Tower on the 25th ult. by canal boats to Liverpool, embarked there on the 3d inst. for Dublin, to relieve the 1st Battalion of the Grenadier Guards, which is ordered to England.—The 2d (or the Queen's) Regiment of Dragoon Guards, which, on being relieved by the 1st (Royal) Dragoons, marched from York on the 29th ult. will arrive at Birmingham by routes, ordered by Major-Gen. Sir J. Byng, K.C.B. who commands in the Northern District.

A ballot took place at Lloyd's, on Wednesday, on the question—whether the house should be closed on Good Fridays and Christmas days? There were 325 for the question, and 238 against it; being a majority of 86; consequently no business will be transacted at the house on those days.

Madame Quiroga, the wife of the Spanish General, has been captured by the French on her voyage from Corunna to this country, and carried into L'Orient. A letter has been received from this Lady, from which it appears that she has been refused permission to proceed on her voyage, and that she is detained a close prisoner in the house of the Prefect.

On Friday se'nnight the Mermaid revenue cruiser captured, close to Whitby, the Flora, of Flushing, a beautiful smuggling lugger, with a cargo of gin, brandy, and tobacco. The smugglers endeavoured to draw the Mermaid on Whitby rocks, but grounded themselves in the attempt; they then got into their boat, and reached the shore just as the cruizer's galley came up with them. Seven of the smugglers effected their escape, and five were drowned in the surf or on the beach. The Flora has long infested the eastern coast of England, and was one of the most active vessels out of Flushing.

FORGERY.—The daily papers say that a system has prevailed within the last few years of robbery and plunder, attended with the crime of forgery, that has caused great alarm in the commercial world, and requires the active interference of the Legislature to endeavour to check the evil. In the course of the last fortnight two instances have occurred, both individuals previously holding a respectable rank in society as tradesmen; 500 guineas have been offered for the apprehension of the first, and 1000. for the last; their cases are similar, each having drawn and accepted bills with forged indorsements. The plan adopted by them was to go to a Bill-broker, with 700l. or 800l. of bills out of date, and request the loan of 500l. upon them, until they come within the two months. The apparent respectability of the person asking the favour, with the known character and respectability of the supposed accepters and indorsers, was quite sufficient for the broker; the money was always advanced, and just before the bills became due, they were regularly called for by the party that had received the money, and taken up. It has since been ascertained that a fresh manufacture of forged bills was prepared in time to cover the others, and at length brokers and private individuals, when the detection took place, had bills belonging to one of these men, amounting to upwards of 12,000l. The principal sufferers by this fraud are those resident in and about Watling-street. It is said the other person that has absconded, had obtained nearly half a plum.

PLYMOUTH, AUG. 6.—Arrived this afternoon, the Royal George steam packet, from Vigo, which place she left on Saturday last. Sir John Doyle, with two officers, landed and set off immediately for town, charged with despatches. Gen. Quiroga, Governor of Corunna, also landed, and will set off for town to-morrow. It is stated to be his intention to take command in another part of the Peninsula. Gen. Romay, Governor of Vigo, is also arrived with about 40 Spanish officers and gentlemen. Sir R. Wilson had recovered of his wounds, proceeded to Vigo, and from thence to Cadiz.

Accounts which we have received from various parts of the country concur in stating, that the crops in general look remarkably well; in some parts better than they have appeared for several preceding years.

AGRICULTURAL DISTRESS.—A young farmer, who resides not a hundred miles from Lewes, entered a horse for the Members' Plate at the Lewes Races on Friday last, which was distanced! A Nobleman on the course observed, that this might be regarded as another proof of "Agricultural Distress!"—Brighton Gazette.

A few days ago, a melancholy accident took place near the village of Wæmlip, Leicestershire. A party of gentlemen, after they had finished fishing, crossed over Burrow-pool, near the mill, in a boat; and when they had proceeded a little way across the boat upset, and precipitated the whole into the pool, by which accident Mr. Barker, a builder, at Rothley, and his son, six years of age, were drowned.

BURGLARY AT LAMBETH PALACE.—A burglary has been committed in the above venerable Palace. The Archbishop and family are out of town. About eleven o'clock on Thursday night, Mrs. Courtney, the housekeeper, and the domestics retired to rest, and at about seven o'clock on Friday morning the sweeps came to clean the hall chimney. On opening the window to let out the dust occasioned by the job, the porter discovered a ladder in the little garden, placed against the lobby window. On further search they discovered a small crow-bar, hanging on a branch of a tree near the ladder. The porter ascended the ladder, and got in at the window, when the work of plunder presented itself. In this apartment 16 locks were picked and the contents they secured stolen. The villain next broke into the dining-room, where they appear to have met with little property, but considerable damage was done to the furniture. Their next visit was to his Grace's study, to get an entrance to which they had to break open two strong doors. Here they seem to have made the greatest havoc, every receptacle therein being broken open and ransacked; about fifty drawers and cabinets were completely demolished. Amongst other deposites, was a red-morocco box, bearing an inscription, "H. R. H. the Duke of York's Council Box." His Grace's books were spread about the study, and a beautiful satin-wood cabinet was nearly dashed to atoms. The robbers then went into Mrs. Sutton's bed-chamber, in which every drawer was emptied: on the bed lay some valuable necklaces and other trinkets, which the villains forgot to take with them. The next object was the long crimson gallery, where they did considerable mischief: on the ground lay three ebony writing-desks, broken to pieces, and their contents stolen. In fact, the whole range of apartments did not escape the notice of the burglars. They effected their entry by getting over the wall of the palace in York-place, at the back of which are small gardens: they then drew the bolts of the gate, and picked the lock, by which the gang entered; they then crossed the meadow and lawn till they came to another gate, the lock of which they also picked—this was the last obstruction they met with, as the window of the lobby was merely fastened with a common holdfast.

At half-past nine o'clock on Monday night a fire broke out at the Castle Tavern, New Brentford, which in a short time was completely destroyed, together with all the outhouses adjoining.

An inquest was held on Monday at the George Inn, Ryslip, near Uxbridge, on the body of William Aldridge, who was murdered by his brother, George Aldridge, on Wednesday last. Mr. B. Slade, assistant to Mr. James, a surgeon, of Uxbridge, stated, he found the deceased lying on a bed, with the greater part of the intestines protruding through the abdomen. After uniting some wounds in the intestines, witness returned them into the abdomen, which occupied more than an hour. The wound was in length seven inches, which must have been inflicted by some sharp cutting instrument. The deceased died about one o'clock on Friday morning, which was occasioned by the inflammation and mortification of the wound. John Arters deposed, the deceased and witness were mowing together in a small field adjoining his house; deceased's brother, G. Aldridge, was also mowing in the field; the first word that took place was by George saying to his brother, "B——t your eyes, you told master we could not mow no more than an old woman, and you know that I can now mow your legs off." He made use of many such expressions, when his brother (the deceased) made some answer to him, and said, "You cannot mow, nor keep up in company." G. Aldridge replied, "if he did not get out of his way, he would break his scythe to pieces;" at the same time he aimed a blow at the deceased two or three times with his scythe, which struck him in the side. Deceased said, "You have ruined me for ever," instantly dropped his scythe, and came away, walking to his house with his entrails partly out; the brother still kept mowing the grass until he finished it, but, in his passion, he chopped his scythe into a tree. Several witnesses deposed to the same effect. When brought before the Jury, the prisoner merely said he was sorry for what he had done, and that he intended no ill-will toward his brother; but that he was quite insensible when he did it. The Jury returned a verdict of—"Wilful murder" against the brother, G. Aldridge, who was committed to Newgate.

MILES and EDWARDS'S splendid Stock of London Chints Furnitures, Spanish Damasks, Cashmere Chintzes, Moreens, &c. is, without exception, the largest, the most select, and the cheapest in the kingdom. This immense assortment having been entirely manufactured since the extraordinary diminution in the value, the proprietors are enabled and determined to sell them full one-third below the regular prices of old establishments. M. and E. are aware that by this innovation upon the system of the trade, they have incurred the animosity of other houses, but the unprecedented encouragement experienced from the principal Nobility and Gentry is an ample compensation and a sufficient inducement for them to adhere to their present plan. In fitting up Drawing-Room and Dining-Room Curtains, Four post and French Beds, &c. Families may, in many instances, effect a saving of nearly one-half by inspecting this warehouse first.—Miles and Edwards's only establishment is at No. 134, Oxford-street, between Holles-street and Old Cavendish-street.

A MONDAY'S EDITION, containing the LATEST NEWS, the STOCK LIST, the LONDON MARKETS, and the STATE OF THE COUNTRY MARKETS by that Morning's Post, is published at Three o'Clock.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, AUGUST 10.

HIS MAJESTY has finally relinquished his aquatic excursions, and the yachts have proceeded to their ordinary stations; this has caused an universal gloom in those watering places which would, in all probability, have been honoured by the Royal presence, and which have been thronged with visitors in hopes of catching a glimpse of our beloved SOVEREIGN.

Preparations are making for the KING'S occupation of Windsor Castle, and amongst other alterations consequent upon the royal determination to reside there, the closing of the Terrace from the public is the most important visibly.

From the nature of the building, as every body knows, the only outlet from the Palace, should the KING choose to take air or exercise, is the Terrace—and the admission of the public would be tantamount to close confinement to the KING. But such is his MAJESTY'S gracious feeling towards his subjects, that regardless of any personal inconvenience to himself, he has been pleased to direct that on Sundays, the day when Windsor is generally fullest, the Terrace shall be opened as usual when he was not resident there.

THERE is nothing like staunchness in a partizan, and, we must say, we never saw a more vigorous incredulity, a more devoted attachment to a cause, or a more inveterate determination to be pleased with events, than have been exhibited by the TIMES, the POST, and the CHRONICLE, in their liberal and unceasing support of the Spanish Revolution; their hopes seem refreshed by every new defeat—the enthusiasm with which the French are received is as gratifying as the plaudits bestowed upon themselves; every fresh disaster is hailed as some new success, and the defection of some of the patriot leaders, and the running away of others, are hailed as the finishing strokes of triumph and victory.

One would think that the news brought by the Royal George steam packet, COLONEL SIR JOHN MILLEY DOYLE, K.C.B.!!! Master, would at once have dissipated the vapours with which the eyes of these partizans, if not wilfully closed to passing events, have been dimmed. The French are marching over Gallicia without the possibility of resistance; not a person could move in the streets of Corunna without being at the mercy of their troops—the place is blockaded by sea as well as land—QUIROGA has run away in one direction, and CORPORAL WILSON in another, and this is immediately perverted into great success, and the intelligence, wherever unfavourable, is set down as false and incredible.

The POST of yesterday, being forced however into a belief that if Corunna had not actually surrendered it shortly must surrender—and having found out that it is such a place that "if the French intend seriously to attack it, it must surrender"—as if people were playing at soldiers, or making attacks in fun—tries to make up for its disappointment there by telling us how gloriously the French have been beaten at Alicant, leaving the field for several leagues covered with dead and wounded.

This most glorious defeat of our allies, boasted of and delighted in by a ministerial journal of a decidedly neutral power, is very little greater in detail, or more satisfactory in appearance, than the glorious sortie from Corunna, when WILSON'S horse and aid-du-camp were wounded, and which has produced by way of result, the undoubted capture of that place, and the flight of the gallant corporal and his crony QUIROGA.

We are not in the habit of disbelieving a gentleman and an officer merely because he happens not to be an Englishman; and at all events we see no reason for giving less credit to a Frenchman than to a Spaniard, and accordingly we beg our readers to peruse the following letter from an aid-du-camp of Gen. de la ROCHEJACQUELIN, and coupling its contents with the intelligence brought by the steam boat, we think they will be able to estimate how much of that which the liberal journals publish upon the subject is truth, and how much mere empty braggadocia.—

CAMP BEFORE CORUNNA, JULY 17.—"General—Of all the operations of the campaign, that which took place here the day before yesterday is certainly not the least important, and the investment of Corunna will figure in the history of the war as a feat of arms which does as much honour to GENERAL BOURCK as to the troops under his orders.

"We quitted Lugo on the 13th, at three in the morning. GENERAL MORILLO accompanied us till within a league from the place, and there the separation was most amicable between the Spaniards and the French.

"On the 14th our advanced guard came up with the army at Betanzos, the birth-place of QUIROGA. Whether it be that the revolutionary Chief had made use of his credit for these three years past, to torment all who were not Constitutional, or that the inhabitants are really more attached to the ancient order of things, I know not; but never have I seen public opinion manifest itself with so much warmth: men, women, and children, fell on their knees before us, and embraced us in their arms; called us their liberators, and Vive la France! Vive le Roi Louis XVIII.! Vive l'Armee Francaise, were in every mouth.

"Between Betanzos and Corunna there is an important pass, of which it was essential to obtain possession. We were informed that the enemy had undermined the bridge of Burgo, and that a first explosion had not blown up the arch. Some workmen, protected by 30 cavalry, and 50 infantry, were occupied in making a second mine to finish the business, and render the passage impassable. My General gave me 60 horse, and ordered me to proceed with all haste to Burgo, to drive away the enemy, and occupy the post. I arrived there at nine o'clock at night, and occupied the village. Some moments later, the mine would have been sprung, and we should have been stopped. My first care was to destroy the mine.

"General Bourck arrived at seven (next morning) with the remainder of the division. As soon as the 7th Light, and Berthier's brigade, had passed, General Bourck gave orders to my General, to crown the heights, which are about a league from Corunna.

"The enemy had, for fifteen days, been labouring to intrench the formidable positions of St. Marguerite; he might, with a small force, as has been done before, have stopped an army ten times stronger than ours. I confess to you, that it appeared to us the height of temerity to advance a step with our small numbers, while the Spaniards were in so redoubtable a position.

"The order is given to attack. Instantly our brave volunteers of the 7th Light precipitated themselves on the Spanish tirailleurs; the latter could not resist the impetuosity of the shock, and retired within their lines.

"'Soldiers of the 7th Light,' exclaimed Gen. Bourck, with a loud voice, 'it is to you that is reserved the honour of carrying these intrenchments: there, aloft in the rocks, you are to find the enemy—advance—charge!'

"'The bayonet! the bayonet!' was the cry on all sides. The firing ceased on our side; and amidst a shower of balls, our brave men scaled the heights. The intrepid Col. Lambat, mounted upon a rock, sword in hand, pointed to the soldiers and waving a white handkerchief in his hand, pointed to the soldiers which it was necessary to occupy. The view at this moment was superb—he appeared a giant—all pressed around him—we were all electrified.

"General Bourck was on foot, and in spite of his old wounds was always in front, and directed the march of our columns with admirable coolness; while my general (LA Rochejacquelin), by his brilliant valour, inflamed the courage of his soldiers, and well sustained the splendour of his name.

"The enemy lost heart, and fell back, when we had advanced about 60 steps. The firing re-commenced on our side, and we entered, pell-mell, into the retrenchments, to the cries of Vive le Roi!

"The Spaniards effected their retreat by two great roads; we could not take prisoners; our soldiers were harassed with fatigue; and had only strength to fire their guns.

"A small battalion of French refugees (the same, I believe, as that which appeared on the Bidassoa, and which makes now a great part of the garrison of Corunna) stepped for some minutes on the glacis of the place, exhibiting an enormous tri-coloured flag. Our soldiers proved the profound contempt which they entertained for them; on the appearance of this signal of revolt, the cries of 'Vive le Roi!' redoubled; they forgot all the fatigues in order to compel them to retire within the place. Our loss is about from 60 to 80 wounded, among whom are several officers, very severely."

IF any proof were wanting of general prosperity, we should adduce the fact that there was so little litigation at Hereford during the last assizes, and so small a proportion of crime exhibited in the calendar, that the lawyers abandoned the bar for the bat—the wig for the wicket, and devoted two legal days to the noble game of cricket, at which they beat the natives of Hereford in great style. We see by the papers that MR. HORACE TWISS excelled in skill and activity in these legal gymnasia: we have no doubt of his success at the game he has been so long practising, provided he does not play too often with a Spanish BALL.

IT would be vain, at this time of the world's age, to enter upon a serious disquisition into the "art or mystery" of Punning; it would be useless to argue upon its utility, the genius and talent required for carrying it on, or the pleasure or amusement derivable from it. The fact is self-evident, that puns are an acknowledged ingredient of the English language amongst the middling classes, and are, in their societies, the very plums in the pudding of conversation.

It may be said that punning is a vice—and we are quite ready to admit the charge; but still it exists and flourishes amongst dapper clerks in public offices, hangers-on of the theatres; amongst very young persons at the universities; in military messes amongst the subalterns; in the city amongst apprentices; and, in some instances, with old wits razee, who are driven to extravagant quibbles to furnish their quota of entertainment to the society in which they are endured.

A punster (that is, a regular hard-going thick and-thin punster) is the dullest and stupidest companion alive, if he could but be made to think so. He sits gaping for an opportunity to jingle his nonsense with whatever happens to be going on, and, catching at some detached bit of a rational conversation, perverts its sense to his favourite sound, so that, instead of any thing like a continuous intellectual intercourse, which one might hope to enjoy in pleasant society, one is perpetually interrupted by his absurd distortions and unseasonable ribaldry, as ill-timed and as ill-placed as songs in an opera sung by persons in the depth of despair, or on the point of death.

Admitting, however, the viciousness, the felonious sinfulness of punning, it is to be apprehended that the liberty of the pun is like the liberty of the press, which, says the patriot, is like the air, and if we have it not we cannot breathe. Therefore, seeing that it is quite impossible to put down punning, the next best thing we can do is to regulate it, in the way they regulate peccadilloes in Paris, and teach men to commit punnery as Cæsar died and Frenchmen dissipate—with decency.

The proverb says, "Wits jump,"—so may punsters, and two bright geniuses may hit upon the same idea at different periods quite unconsciously. To avoid any unnecessary repetition or apparent plagiarisms, therefore, by these coincidences, we venture to address this paper to young beginners in the craft—to the rising generation of witlings; and we are led to do this more particularly, from feeling that the TYRO in punning, as well as in everything else, firmly believes that which he for the first time has heard or read, to be as novel and entertaining to his older friends, who have heard it or read it before he was born, as it is to himself, who never met with it, till the day upon which he so liberally and joyously retails it to the first hearers he can fall in with.

For these reasons we propose, in order to save time and trouble, to enumerate a few puns, which, for the better regulation of jesting, are positively prohibited in all decent societies where punnery is practised; and first, since the great (indeed the only) merit of a pun is its undoubted originality—its unequivocal novelty—its extemporaneous construction and instantaneous explosion—all puns by recurrence, all puns by repetition, and all puns by anticipation, are prohibited.

Secondly, all words spelt differently having a similar sound, which are carefully collated and arranged in a catalogue prefixed, for the use of little punnikins at schools, to ENTICK'S small Dictionary, of whatever sort, kind, or nature they may be, are prohibited—take for example:—

AUGUR	-	a soothsayer.
AUGER	-	a carpenter's tool.
ALL	-	every one.
AWL	-	a shoemaker's gimblet.
HAUL	-	(for the Cocknies) to pull.
HALL	-	a vulgar proper name.
BOAR	-	a male pig.
BORE	-	MR. CREEVY.
WAX	-	the produce of Bees.
WHACKS	-	thumps on the head or body, and so on.

In the next place, all the following travelling puns are strictly prohibited:—

All allusions upon entering a town to the pound and the stocks—knowing a man by his gait and not liking his style—calling a tall turnpike-keeper a colossus of roads—paying the post-boys charges of ways and means—seeing no sign of an inn—or, replying, Sir, you are out, to your friend who says he does—talking of a hedger having a stake in the bank—all allusions to sun and air to a new married couple—all stuff about village belles—calling the belfry a court of a peal—saying, upon two carpenters putting up paling, that they are very peaceable men to be fencing in a field—all trash about "manors make the man," in the shooting season—and all such stuff about trees, after this fashion—"that's a poplar tree—I'll turn over a new leaf, and make my bough," &c. &c.

Puns upon field sports, such as racing being a matter of course—horses starting without being shy—a good shot being fond of his but and his barrel—or saying that a man fishing deserves a rod for taking such a line; if he is sitting under a bridge calling him an arch fellow—or supposing him a noble man because he takes his place among the piers—or that he will catch nothing but cold, and no fish by hook or by crook. All these are prohibited.

To talk of yellow pickles at dinner, and say the way to Turn 'em Green is through Hammersmith—all allusions to eating men, for Eton men, or Staines on the table-cloth—on Egg-ham, are all exploded—as are all stuff about Maids and Thornbacks, and Plaice—or saying to a lady who asks you to help her to the wing of a chicken, that it is a mere matter of a pinion—all quibbles about dressing hare and cutting it—all stuff about a merry fellow being given to wine—or upon helping yourself to say you have a platonic affection for roast beef—or when fried fish runs short, singing to the mistress of the house, with TOM MOORE—

"Your sole, though a very sweet sole, love,
"Will ne'er be sufficient for me,"

are entirely banished.

At the play-house never talk of being a Pittite because you happen not to be in the boxes—never observe what a keen eye one actor has, or that another can never grow old because he must always be Young—never talk of the uncertainty of Mundane affairs in a farce, or observe how *Terry*bly well a man plays MR. SIMPSON—banish from your mind the possibility of saying the Covent Garden manager has put his best Foot forward, or that you should like to go to Chester for a day or two—or that you would give the world to be tied to a Tree—or that Mr. Make ready is a presentable actor—all such stuff is interdicted.

In speaking of Parliament, forget BROOM and BIRCH, WOOD and COLE—SCARLETT and WHITE, LAMB and the LEAKES, the HARES and the HERONS, the COOTES and the BRUSH—such jumbles will lead into great difficulties, and invariably end, without infinite caution in an observation, that the conduct of that House is always regulated by the best possible MANNERS.

There are some temptations very difficult to avoid—for instance, last Saturday we saw gazetted, as a bankrupt, "SIR JOHN TRADE, Cornhill, watch-maker!" Now this, we confess, was a provocation hard of resistance—when one sees a lot of sixty-four set up only to break down, and perceives that whatever he may do with watches, he could not make a case before the Insolvent Debtors' Court; and moreover since his taking to watch-making, arose from his having, in the spring of life, gone upon tick, and that the circumstance may be considered as a striking instance of a bad wind up—we admit that in the hands of a young beginner such a thing is quite irresistible, but such temptations should be avoided as much as possible.

We have not room to set down all the prohibited puns extant; but we have just shewn that the things which one hears, when one dines in the city, (where men eat peas with a two pronged fork, and bet HATS with each other) as nordics, and the perfection of good fun, are all flat, stale, and unprofitable to those who have lived a little longer and seen a little more of the world, and who have heard puns when it was the fashion to commit them at the west end of the town.

These hints are thrown out for the particular use of some sprightly persons, with whose facetiousness we have been of late extremely pestered—we apologize to our rational readers for the insertion of such stuff, even by way of snuff to our quibbling patients.

THE CHRONICLE had the following paragraph last week:—"In the JOHN BULL of Sunday last there is a paragraph beginning 'Monday,' being what is called Election Saturday at Eton, &c. We beg to state from authority that Mister Etona is altogether innocent of so atrocious a Bull."

We plead guilty to an error of the press—but as we perceive in the same paper a minutely detailed account of a shooting match at Harrow which never took place, we think the CHRONICLE had better account for telling a deliberate falsehood relative to one public school before it attempts to be witty upon a clerical error in a statement concerning another.

LORD BYRON.

WE are certainly not aware of the real state of LORD BYRON'S present feelings, but we believe an instance never has occurred, in the annals of literature, where a bookseller came into open Court, to prove the licentiousness and indecency of a poem, in order to establish a right to publish it. The VICE CHANCELLOR was doomed to hear, not only the following speech of MR. DUGDALE, the publisher, but to have his ears polluted by the repetition of the passages selected by that person in support of the charges of indecency and depravity which he made against the noble author.

The extracts we decline publishing, but MR. DUGDALE'S speech itself is worthy of a place in every journal in the empire, as shewing the opinion of the trade concerning LORD BYRON'S works, and as indicative of the advantages of the FREEDOM OF THE PRESS.

DON JUAN.

"LORD BYRON v. DUGDALE.—The defendant in person appeared to move to dissolve the injunction which had been granted in this case. He began by apologising to his Honour for not addressing him on that occasion through the medium of Counsel, and declared that he would not then have appeared in Court had he been able to avail himself of the learning and ability of the Gentlemen at the Bar. As it was, however, he must throw himself on the indulgence of the Court, while he proceeded to state the grounds on which he conceived the injunction already granted could not be supported. This injunction had been granted on the application of the Learned Counsel now in Court. The defendant was not present when that application was made, but he had good reason to believe that the Learned Gentleman had stated to the Court that this book contained nothing improper or immoral, and was therefore entitled to the protection of the Court. That statement he should this day endeavour to disprove, and he should shew that the scenes in this book were not only highly-coloured, but were positively immoral and licentious, and calculated to produce the worst effects on the minds of those inexperienced persons who might read them; indeed, that they were positively destructive of the moral feeling of the community at large. If he proved this—if he could shew the ridicule and contempt with which every thing in Church and State, and every thing that dignified human nature were treated—if he could read from this book scenes so warm, so highly coloured, so licentious, that no father of a family would permit the book to be seen in his house; he confidently relied on the removal of the injunction which had been obtained against him. Two Cantos of this Poem had been published about three years ago, and the person who was really the publisher was so convinced of the immoral tendency of the work, that he was actually ashamed of acknowledging it as his publication, and positively shrunk from avowing it; and though Mr. Murray was the real publisher, though he sold the book openly in his shop to any one who asked for

...ground never avow his interest in the publication, and had not ...ged it up to this day.

"In these Cantos, Don Juan was conducted through luxurious ...scenes were more highly coloured, and the descrip... and those scenes painted than any of the others which had been pre...viously published, and they were more calculated to produce an injurious ...effect on the morals of the reader.

* * * * * * *

"This Canto was the warmest in its description, and colouring of ...that had been published, and on that account was the most likely to injure both, if the destruction of those feelings, which we had been ...taught to call moral, really deserved such a name. The poem, ...moreover, was not alone immoral, but contained principles of the most ...revolutionary tendency, and fully exhibited the author's principles of ...Atheism and licentiousness.

* * * * * * *

"It must be observed here, that the author had imagined a mille... which would arise which would sweep what he called tyranny from the ...earth, and which would probably prove as great a blessing as that ...projected by JOHANNA SOUTHCOTE to her followers; certain it was, ...that if his writings were circulated to the extent he wished, the de...structive principle would go on increasing until at last we should be... overwhelmed in a revolution as great, as awful, and as dangerous as the French ...Revolution.

* * * * * * * He should proceed ...further in these observations; he should content himself with re... requesting his Honor to read over the whole of the poem, and he was sa... tisfied the result would be the dissolving of the injunction. The par... ties would never dare to bring their case into a Court of Law, nor to ...claim damages for the piracy committed on their publication. He ...then referred to the principle which declared that no property could ...be claimed at law in respect of an immoral work, and he was convinced ...that his Honour on perusing these cantos would at once discover such ...immorality in them as to disentitle the author to the protection which ...he now claimed.

When one recollects that the once proud, high-spirited BYRON is the author in question—that he is thus degraded and debased in his native country, while herding in exile with Cockneys and atheists, it really pains the heart. What his own feelings must be when he hears of this affair, GOD knows!—would it might work a reformation.

With Mr. DUGDALE, whoever he is, or with his views or objects, we have nothing to do, the opinion he has expressed of DON JUAN is that of the public in general; and we only doubt upon our minds is, whether it would not become the Chancellor to issue an injunction against publishing such a book at all, which, after the elaborate exposure of its mischievous tendency by Mr. DUGDALE to the Vice Chancellor, we think his Lordship would be fully justified in doing.

Our readers will perceive, however, that all the observations of Mr. DUGDALE upon the works of the wretched and debased Lord have had their full effect—for the Vice-Chancellor yesterday dissolved the injunction. We have a great respect for Sir JOHN LEACH and his talents: but we hope that this trimming lesson which one DUGDALE has given him, will teach him upon other occasions to copy his Master—(we do not mean Sir ROBERT TAYLOR, the bricklayer, little MICHAEL ANGELO's father)—LORD ELDON, and think a little before he decides—it does not add respectability to a Vice-Chancellor's Court to have its hasty decisions put aside by such a person as the would-be publisher of BYRON'S immorality, disloyalty, and blasphemy.

No. III.
PAUL POTTER'S REVIEW OF THE LATE SESSION OF PARLIAMENT.

As far as I have proceeded in our analysis of WHIG POLICY, as displayed during the late Session of Parliament, I think we have succeeded in shewing that it is circumscribed within the narrowest bounds, and embraces simply the objects of faction, without reference to the interests of the country, or even the decent covering of public principle. We have heard the invidious attacks of these men upon the KINGLY POWER, against which one of their most industrious partisans roared publicly in his place "the friends of liberty were in direct hostility"—we have witnessed their undisguised hatred and warfare against THE CHURCH—and we have seen them labouring with more than ordinary zeal to persuade THE PEOPLE—to whom they PROFESS exclusive attachment!—that they are oppressed and miserable, because peace had produced plenty—and plenty had lowered prices, and taken off from their shoulders five-and-twenty millions of taxes! That none of the three estates of the realm might escape free from the attacks of these "distasters of the times," a hue and cry was even raised against ARISTOCRATICAL appointments in the ARMY and NAVY; and because men elevated—heaven only knows how—from the very dregs of society to the rank of legislators, infer that their own example is an illustration that merit, like mushrooms, is to be found most abundant in dunghills—they liberally pronounce a sentence of exclusion against every man of family or high birth, as if the annals of the country teemed with disgrace and infamy, and called upon it by the cowardice or incapacity of our nobility! But do these hollow declaimers think that we or the nation are so blind as not to be able to read the Red Book, or so deceived as not to detect their hypocrisy, when we behold a disproportion of the WHIG ARISTOCRACY availing themselves of their rank and influence to push aside "modest merit," should it dare to compete with them!—Do we not every day find the names of men who might be supposed most remote, from their political connexions, to the powers "that be," dwelling in offices and appointments, which the tolerant disposition of Ministers, rather than their own merits, permits them undisturbedly to enjoy!—So much for their sinecures—and as for their liberality, which would lead to a system of exclusion on account of rank and birth, which by the nature of things must afford an additional stimulus to honourable exertion, it may be fairly placed on the same level with their Patriotism—more might be urged on this head, but it is only necessary to touch upon it at present, in order to shew before we proceed to details, that the sweeping views of the Whigs extend to every branch of our National institutions, and that neither King, Lords nor Commons, are exempted in their schemes of Reform from general condemnation.

One of the great measures contemplated in the opening of the campaign, was that which has obtained through their colleagues the misnomer of "Catholic Emancipation"—I call it a misnomer, because the Church of Rome is not the Catholic Church—and the application of the term is not only calculated to mislead, but has the far greater advantage of throwing the ESTABLISHED CHURCH into the back ground—as being what the ROMANISTS deem it, an heretical and contemned branch of the UNIVERSAL CHURCH!

Nor is the happy phraseology by which men, whom the Constitution solemnly declares unfit, by their sworn and exclusive allegiance to a foreign potentate, for the conduct of our domestic affairs, are represented as SLAVES groaning in unjust fetters, less a misnomer in the estimation of those who still hold the plainest of all political as well as Christian axioms, that "a man cannot serve two masters" and be faithful to both—more especially when the interests of these masters are diametrically opposed to each other. But the impudence of those who thus attempt to bolster up a cause under false colours is the more especially conspicuous in the present day, because for the last fifty years our Law Books, form a regular record of concessions to the Irish Papists, and those penal enactments which self-preservation compelled our ancestors repealed in order to afford equal liberty of person and property to all who live under the tolerant Constitution of England. In the Roman Catholics but POWER—and the very anxiety professed for it—the tricks and evasions resorted to in order to obtain it—the intrigues of the Priesthood, and the intemperate hopes and expectations of final ascendency in the success of the measure, are just so many portentous and speaking warnings to the country, of the ultimate consequences of taking down the last and only barrier against the aggressions of a Church, which is the natural ally of arbitrary power, and deems liberty a crime in any other hands than its own.

And what is it that indeed excludes the adherents of Rome, being British subjects, from a participation in political power? What is it that involves in one common censure of bigotry and intolerance those who still raise their voices against the return of men to authority and Government who always abused it, to the injury of the people, and the hazard of our free institutions!—a weak and ignorant SUBSERVIENCY to the mere shadow OF A POWER, which, for a long period was dominant over Europe—and whose usurpation was marked not only by the most GROSS and IMMORAL conduct—by the total absence of even assumed decency in its aggressions as a temporal government, but stigmatized by acts the most tyrannical and oppressive—exceeding in corruption, and paramount in profligacy over the worst of their imperial predecessors, as they stand recorded by all writers and historians of their own church and creed!

Are we to be esteemed intolerant and illiberal because we do not conceive men to be trust-worthy in our high places who are governed by such infantile prejudices as to regard a superannuated old man, shut up in a closet of the Vatican, the empty representative of a tyranny the most intolerant and arbitrary that ever existed—and claiming in his reversed and abject state of dependency to be the depository of ALMIGHTY POWER!—who voluntarily swear allegiance to such a master while they deny to the Government of the country which protects and ensures to them the blessings of personal and civil liberty!

Are men, so incompetent to judge of the attributes of GOD, to become especial objects of our solicitude, as the guardians and upholders of temporal government—If they refuse to sacrifice an empty shadow, whom—if they are capable of reading or drawing an inference from the stores of history—they must personally regard, at best, with compassionate contempt—are we "at one fell swoop" to carry away every bulwark and defence which the ACTUAL EXPERIENCE of our forefathers deemed necessary and essential to the preservation of our RIGHTS and LIBERTIES!

Are we to surrender at discretion, with the possible chance of renewing scenes the most bloody that ever blackened the page of history?—whilst the only pledge THEY can give of their attachment to the Constitution, over a puerile prejudice, is not only refused, but made by themselves and their political supporters, an argument in favour of their integrity and sincerity! Let them enjoy the full benefit of such an inference,—but let not the bigotry which is proved upon them by their consistent adherence to the prejudices of their forefathers, be transferred to those who owe every thing they possess, worth possessing, in civil society, to their having renounced it. Let the Papist glory in his submission to the Roman Pontiff—but let us have equal credit for glorying in our redemption from spiritual bondage and temporal oppression! Let him prefer the servitude with which he is infatuated—but let him not charge us with the bigotry which is all his own. Let not the odium which common sense and common observation have long assigned to the exclusive principles of his own creed, be transferred to the supporters of the reformed religion, because they choose not blindfold to deliver over the institutions by which it is especially guarded, to the hands of men whose sworn duty to the power they worship, is to ANATHEMATIZE and WAR against it, by "all means, LAWFUL or UNLAWFUL!"

The generality of people have not been at the pains to look at this question in its naked and simple state, as it appears when divested of the mists and vapours with which the artifices of its supporters have involved and surrounded it. The ROMAN CATHOLICS have no one single grievance or oppression from which they can be EMANCIPATED! They are on a perfect equality with their Protestant brethren, in the enjoyment of all rights and privileges flowing from the Constitution; but they desire to become our Legislators, and Judges, and Governors. WHY ARE THEY NOT SO?—WHY are they incapacitated from holding this rank in the state?—DO WE exclude them? No! Do we shut the door against them?—No! The avenue is as open to them as to any other description of subjects throughout the realm; but THEY REFUSE TO ENTER upon the terms, to which all must subscribe who wish to enter. The gates stand open—but they demand a BREACH to be made in the walls, that they may march as VICTORS into the CITADEL! They WILL NOT swear to maintain THE CONSTITUTION they so zealously express their ambition to serve. They will not acknowledge allegiance to the SOVEREIGN whose servants they are so anxious to become!

The BRITISH CONSTITUTION, though superior to all others, claims the necessary and common right of all Governments which have subsisted from the beginning of time, to demand A TEST of the sincerity of those who are admitted to a share in its Government, either in the making or in the administration of the laws! It is so obvious and necessary a precaution, that it descends to every transaction in private life—and we admit not a servant on our establishment without securing, as far as circumstances will admit, SUCH A TEST, to the fidelity and honesty of the individual. How much more important then is such a safeguard, when we compare the interests of an individual with the trust to be reposed in PUBLIC SERVANTS, in whose hands are to be deposited the pledges of our LIBERTY, and the CUSTODY of our dearest rights? But NO; say the Roman Catholics and their WHIG SUPPORTERS—we deny your right—you have no right to suspect us—you are bigots and persecutors, because—why, my good reader?—because we will not, upon THEIR refusal to conform to the CONSTITUTION, have the condescension to make the CONSTITUTION conform to THEM! Because we will not admit, as our trustees, men avowedly in league with the bitterest enemies of ONE BRANCH OF OUR CONSTITUTION—and whose boast of consistency is founded upon the principle of SUBVERTING IT; and who refuse to give that pledge of their sincerity and affection to the EXECUTIVE BRANCH, which EVERY OTHER DESCRIPTION AND ORDER OF MEN, throughout the realm, MUST GIVE before they are admitted to the lowest office of the State!

Where then is this intolerant principle of EXCLUSION, with which all the diatribes of ROMAN CATHOLIC agents and supporters charge us, to be found—and how does it apply? The Constitution excludes NO ONE—but it requires testimony to character and attachment from ALL—and what is worthy remark is, that it is to this very principle, attributed to those who oppose themselves to this paring down of the Constitution to particular prejudices;—it is, I say, to this principle of EXCLUSION inherent in, and seated in the HEART'S CORE of the POPISH CREED, that may be traced the persevering determination of its adherents not to make a SINGLE CONCESSION to an HERETICAL GOVERNMENT!!

But how again can a regulation of the CONSTITUTION be perverted into a principle of EXCLUSION against the ROMAN CATHOLICS?—I have already shewn, that it demands only a test of attachment, so reasonable from those who are to be employed in the guardianship of it—But it is not exclusively demanded of the ROMAN CATHOLICS, it is universal in its application—and not only that, but operates with ten-fold injury on other PROTESTANT SUBJECTS, and WHOLE ORDERS of them, by virtually disfranchising them. There are PROTESTANTS, born to the Peerage, and others inheriting its privileges as their birth-right, who by a regulation of the Constitution can sit as Members in NEITHER HOUSE OF PARLIAMENT. There are PROTESTANTS, who, holding certain situations and offices, whom the jealousy of the CONSTITUTION, considering as possibly dependent upon ministerial influence, TOTALLY excludes from the Legislature—whilst every individual, whatever may be his inclination, whatever the necessities which urge him to change his line of life, having once taken even DEACON'S orders in the ESTABLISHED CHURCH, is for ever barred admission to the Legislature!—But we hear nothing of the arbitrary DICTA of the CONSTITUTION in this DIRECT EXCLUSION of PROTESTANT SUBJECTS! A possible inconvenience only can be urged in defence of it—and yet, so jealous are Englishmen of their rights, that no voice—even among those who most suffer by its enforcement—is raised against it; and a party who should erect itself upon a pretence of advocating the rights of these disfranchised Protestant bodies, could not subsist a day, or command a voice in either House of Parliament!

Upon what ground or pretext then—divesting the question of all its false eloquence and mystification—can the claimants for A BREACH of the CONSTITUTION, in favour of the ROMAN CATHOLICS, support their pretensions! We are not to be carried away by the trickery of BAR ORATORY, which can speak as glibly, as FOOTE I believe has it, "on a Cauliflower as a Corregio." We must not suffer ourselves to be talked out of our rights by men who "reckless of consequences" seek only VICTORY, and where they cannot CONQUER, are content to UNDERMINE US.

The ROMAN CATHOLICS have not a single grievance, I repeat, to be redressed—and they are excluded from offices of trust and confidence, only in so far as they require an EXCLUSIVE PRIVILEGE granted TO NO OTHER ORDER OR DESCRIPTION OF MEN in the State, as a qualification for admission.

And upon what plea is this exclusive benefit to be conferred?—Is it because we feel the loss of services to which our ancestors were indebted for some boasted acquisition?—Is it because the influence of ROMAN CATHOLIC COUNCILS tended to meliorate OUR CONSTITUTION, and bring it to the standard of which we are so justly proud?—Is it that we are indebted to them for the "BILL OF RIGHTS" or the "GLORIOUS REVOLUTION" which THE WHIGS have hitherto been so forward in claiming as their own work!—or, is it for the purposed recurrence to a "more ancient" criterion of our laws in CHURCH and STATE—and the sacrifice of the exiled JAMES to THEIR counsels and suggestions!—is it for their HIGH TORY PRINCIPLES when their allegiance was truly sworn beyond the seas, or their loyal attachment to the CONSTITUTION amid all the temptations so manfully withstood during the eventful periods of 1715 and 1745!—Or, if none of these, their more ancient deserts—Is the demand of a sacrifice of one of the first and universal principles of government, enforced on the conduct of the representative body of ROMAN CATHOLIC CLAIMS—the loyal and peaceable deportment of their boards—the uninteriguing spirit of the PRIESTHOOD, and the restoration of MIRACLES—the dissemination among every class of the Roman Catholic population in Ireland of enlightening pamphlets—the decent and humble protest of the hierarchy against our own bishops for advocating PROTESTANCY—OR—from the declared and avowed HATRED and ABHORRENCE of their WHIG SUPPORTERS, against the ESTABLISHED CHURCH!—To these or to such pleas must their claims to power be ultimately referred, for I defy any advocate of the cause to produce one single argument, RESTING UPON ITS OWN FOUNDATION, which either in a political or moral point of view can be weighed in the scale against the danger and hazard of INNOVATION UPON THE CONSTITUTION in one of its most vital and fundamental ARTICLES.

But I must have done, lest my friend BULL, or his friends, should cry out against prosing, and when they come to laugh, complain of being made to yawn. As a WHIG TOPIC, and in the late Session as a WHIG MANŒUVRE, this question is one of grave importance, and must not be slurred over. It is essential to the best interests of the country, that the policy of the WHIGS should be thoroughly understood—not as a party measure—not because we may be partial to the existing Administration—but because in their desperation these men are playing like bankrupt gamesters—and having staked and lost EVERYTHING, year after year, session after session, which could PROPERLY be called THEIR OWN, they are ready to pledge THE CONSTITUTION ITSELF—we have their word for it—to redeem their losses or perish in the COMMON RUIN.

PAUL POTTER.

MR. IRVING.

WE have been obliged to delay our observations upon MR. IRVING'S "orations" till next week from circumstances not quite under our controul, but the numerous letters which we have received commendatory of our proposed review of them, renders it necessary that it should only be postponed; and in the interim, although we rarely quote from any contemporaneous publication—and honestly confess we never heard of a work called the Album till we saw an extract from it in a morning paper—we think we shall do a service to the cause of the Established Church, by giving an extended circulation to the following natural and well-written description of MR. IRVING'S manner and talents, which has appeared in that Magazine:—

"It must be somewhat strange to the small quiet congregation of the Scottish Church in Hatton-garden, to see the whole town, fashionable, political, legal, literary, critical, crowding to their remote place of worship. I doubt whether so many dashing equipages have been n the heart of going eastward in a body since the days when GARRICK drew the whole polite world to Goodman's-fields.

"This comparison is not meant irreverently, nor is it so in fact—for the very first thing which strikes you is the theatrical air of the whole business; how very like the assembly is to an audience, and how exceedingly unlike it is to a congregation. The ticket given and scrutinized at the door may, perhaps, first create this impression; but, even without that, it is impossible to look round without feeling it. It is evident to the most unskilful eye that the great mass of the persons around you are not the usual and natural frequenters of the place. Faces well known upon town in every way, whether those of public men, or fashionable men, or fashionable women, surround you on every side. They are evidently brought there by some strong and peculiar motive, and the general buzz and hum of indifferent conversation plainly prove that that motive is not to pray to GOD. There is none of that staid and decorous aspect and manner which, in those who cannot be called devout, supply an appearance fitted to the place. The company here are evidently come to see a show, and they converse with one another until the show begins.

"I arrived at the church about a quarter before eleven. It was not so much crowded as I expected; the pews, indeed, were all full, but the standing-space had not many persons in it. Just at eleven, a sort of motion and murmur through the assemblance told that MR. IRVING was entering. He had some difficulty in making his way to the pulpit, the stairs of which were covered with gaily dressed ladies. When he entered it, which, being against the wall in the centre of its extent, is visible in every part of the church, I had a full view of his person and features. He was not at all the sort of man I expected to see. In some respects my anticipations had been above, in others below, the reality; but in all unlike it. MR. IRVING appears to be under forty, and, as far as I could judge in the pulpit, rather above the middle height. The general contour of his countenance is fine, though somewhat coarse; it reminded me, in the capacious forehead, the formation of the chin, and the sort of square cut (if I may thus express myself) of the whole face, of the less beautiful heads of our SAVIOUR. The complexion, however, is wholly different; MR. IRVING'S being extremely dark. He has a quantity of black strong hair, arranged, I thought, with some view to effect; and a very large bushy black whisker, which appeared to me rather too hussar-ish for the pulpit. But, in despite of the somewhat hard and wooden cut of some of his features, MR. IRVING would undoubtedly be a very handsome man, if it were not for the extreme imperfection of his eyes, the obliquity of their vision being worse than that which is called a squint, as it varies according to the direction in which he looks.

"The service commenced by MR. IRVING reading a hymn, which was, immediately afterward, sung by the clerk and the children of the Caledonian school. I was disappointed with the first effect of his voice; it seemed to have little modulation or tunefulness. I was still more displeased with the manner in which he read, it being with extreme pompousness of tone and contersion of countenance. But this was only a foretaste.

"After the hymn, MR. IRVING read a chapter from the epistles, to which followed another hymn, and then the prayer. I must, however, note a circumstance which previously occurred, and which was not a little curious and characteristic. After the service commenced the doors of the entrance were closed; but before that which was opposite to the side at which I had come in, and which, as it appeared to me through the windows, opened into a narrow court, there was, as was evident from the sounds, a great crowd collected. By degrees these sounds became louder and more tumultuous, and, at last, quite alarming. It seemed as if, from the narrowness of the space, and the extreme pressure, there was danger of some of the people being crushed to death. At length the confused sounds terminated in distinct cries, and it was deemed advisable to throw open the door and admit the crowd into the chapel. The moment the door was opened they poured in, pushing one over the other, with dripping hair and dirtied clothes, in short exhibiting all those marks of violent struggling and pressure which are usual on emerging from a crowd of this kind. The persons thus collected must have been very numerous, for they continued flocking in during the whole time the hymn lasted. At last, at its close, MR. IRVING addressed the congregation to the effect, that it was impossible the Divine Service could be duly performed while there was this noise and tumult in the chapel, still more that it was vain to expect the mind would be composed to prayer; he added that they were about to proceed to prayer, and he therefore entreated that the silence and quiet might be restored which were so necessary; and that if there were any more persons outside the door, they might be informed that the congregation was now at prayer, and, therefore, that they should be begged to give no further interruption. This address was certainly no more than was very necessary; it was well and simply worded, and delivered with that mixture of solemnity and kindness which is well fitted to a pastor when speaking to his flock. In itself, there was no reason particularly to remark upon it; it was its contrast with what followed that rendered it striking. When he had ceased speaking, MR. IRVING paused for a few moments, as if to give time for the assembly to be still, and then began the prayer. It was scarcely possible to believe it was the same man! The natural tone of voice, and the unaffected manner had vanished totally, and at once. Instead of these, the eyes were forcibly closed—the mouth was drawn into an expression so pompous as almost to be farcical, the enunciation was studied and stilted to the last degree; the gesture (of which I shall have further occasion to speak,) was ungraceful throughout, and often vehement, and the matter was a succession of Scriptural phrases linked together by language aiming, not very happily, at the same style. The sudden and total transition was, beyond measure, striking and extraordinary. "MR. IRVING," I said to myself, 'means to make his prayer impressive by this manner; it is a pity he does not know that it is impossible to be impressive and unnatural at the same time.'

"My opinion with regard to his claims to eloquence, as far as delivery is concerned, was determined before his sermon began. The prayer was concluded by the Lord's Prayer, and the way in which he gave this was perfectly sufficient, I thought, to decide his taste and manner. The unequalled beauty of this prayer arises from its simplicity. It is this which gives to it that solemnity, that sublimity, which, perhaps, no other form of words ever reached. And how was it pronounced by MR. IRVING? With that pure and chastened intonation, that gushing yet subdued fervency of supplication, which should give breath to such a prayer? No.—It was mouthed, I might almost say panted, in the manner in which we are accustomed to hear the mock invocation in the Critic spouted upon the stage; the face was more than usually contorted—the voice was more than usually violent and unequal—and the gesture! During the preceding prayer, MR. IRVING had stood chiefly with the arms slightly protruded from the body, and crossed, by the right hand clasping the left arm about half way between the wrist and the elbow; but this curious and somewhat awkward posture was changed when he commenced the Lord's Prayer, into one still more curious, and far more awkward. The arms were placed close to the sides, but raised perpendicularly from the elbow, with the hands erect? Let any one, for a moment, place himself before a glass in this attitude, and he will see its full effect.

"At length the sermon began, and I listened with anxious interest; for, sorely as I had been disappointed in MR. IRVING'S delivery and manner, I concluded that such sudden and great celebrity could not have been acquired unless the substance of his discourses was of such extreme merit as not only to be admirable in itself, but to be able to throw all those faults out of view.

"His sermon was, as I had been before informed, written; which is, I believe, unusual in the Scottish church, I do not see, for my own part, any sort of objection to the discourse being written down. The greater appearance of nature which speaking is said to give to it, does not, I think, apply in this instance; for, the matters which are discussed from the pulpit are not only necessarily the subject of premeditation, but must have been deeply inquired into and digested. Nobody imagines, or can imagine, that the matter of a sermon is extemporaneous or immediate; and as there is no answer, there can be no reply. There cannot, therefore, as far as I see, be any cause why the preacher should not mature his arguments, both in method and language by reducing them to writing; which gives a clearness and consecutiveness which are seldom, and an absence of repetition which is never, possessed by an unwritten oration.

"The first thing which struck me when MR. IRVING began, was, that the Scotch accent, which is not heard very strong during the reading and the prayers, encreased to a remarkable degree; and this, too, before he had time to warm much into his subject. I augured well of this at first, for I thought it betokened that he would be more natural than he had been in the former part of his service; but in this I was miserably deceived.

"The ostensible subject of the sermon—that is the subject of the text, with which he began, was to expose the fallacy and pernicious tendency of human confidence in the mercy of God. This doctrine was given very plainly in the first sentence, as some what to startle me; but the more he explained his meaning to be, that it was self-deceiving and sinful to confide in sin, trusting to the Divine Mercy for forgiveness, without reformation and repentance. But I do not purpose, in any degree, to enter into the matter of doctrine, (which however, in any degree, to enter into the matter of doctrine, (which however, were not many or much brought forward), that the sermon involved. It is as an orator, not as a theologian—as a preacher, not as a divine, that I am to consider MR. IRVING.

"I had heard a good deal of the peculiarity of diction which MR. IRVING has adopted, after the model of JEREMY TAYLOR and the IRVING has adopted, after the model of JEREMY TAYLOR and the other old writers of our Church. It was as it had been represented to me, and its effect, was, also, what I had anticipated it would be. The diction which he employs is not now in use; and it, consequently, application which he employs is not now in use; and it, consequently, appears affected, is unnatural, and therefore unimpressive. He uses the third person singular of the verb according to old form—for instance, he says 'it hath'—'it doth'—'it cometh'—'it goeth,' &c.—instance, he says 'it hath'—'it doth'—'it cometh'—'it goeth,' &c.—and he employs a consonant obsoleteness of diction. It is said, in and he employs a consonant obsoleteness of diction. It is said, in apology, that the writers whom I have alluded to above, all used such apology, that the writers whom I have alluded to above, all used such diction,—but the answer to this is obvious. In their time it was the diction,—but the answer to this is obvious. In their time it was the universal written language of the period; and, as far as we can judge, universal written language of the period; and, as far as we can judge, the spoken language also. But now, it is unusual and startling to the ear, and draws the attention from the power of the sentiment to the strangeness of the words, which, in oratory, is the very thing which ought to be most avoided. So far from JEREMY TAYLOR being an example to bear out this system, it is precisely what he would not have done, if he had lived at this day. His discourses were meant to be effective, and he, consequently, would not have made them fantastic. I am far from desiring a colloquial style to be used in the pulpit. The exalted subjects which are there treated of, should be embedied in due gravity, and even solemnity, of phrase;—but contemporary language is fully equal to this. It can clothe the most solemn and sublime sentiments in fitting words—without the recourse being had to a style which has ceased to exist for nearly two hundred years. The 'well of English undefiled,' of which so much is said, is, in my opinion, the diction of the period at which we speak or write, used in its purity, and divested of all temporary and conventional expressions.

"In another point, also, the too close imitation of our earlier prosewriters seems to me to be unwise and hurtful. I mean, in the temptation which it holds out to too great profusion of metaphor. Nobody can venerate more strongly than I do the free, vigorous, and energetic tone of thought which was peculiar to that race. But the style of the period was, in many respects, vicious—that they have fallen into it is not a fault of theirs, but it is certainly a blemish in their writings. The succession of similies and metaphors, now running into mere conceits, succession of similies and metaphors, now running into mere conceits, and even puns,—and now sinking into what is coarse and unseemly and even puns,—and now sinking into what is coarse and unseemly—cases, I think, be an object to be admired, still less to be imitated. It is in despite, not in consequence, of these things, that the old writers are great. There are some occasions when metaphorical language is appropriate and effective,—and these passages, in their works, are to be admired unreservedly. But, above all, it is the sterling weight and value of the thought that makes us unmindful of the faults of the style, and perhaps even, from long use, sometimes causes them to appear beauties.

"The occasional and moderate use of this style of language is, I fully admit, fitting in most kinds of composition, and of strong effect in some. A correct and brilliant metaphor, an apt and striking simile, give much increased power when brought in with good tact and taste;—and even a flight of some length is not only to be allowed, but to be admired, to be felt, when the occasion is well suiting. But the continued use of this style must necessarily be, for by far the most part, out of place, but it totally destroys the force of those passages where it is admissible, and, indeed, needed—and which would, in themselves, with the necessary contrast, be of great beauty and effect.

"Now, not only is MR. IRVING'S style overcharged with metaphor to the utmost degree—but, by some fatality, those metaphors are nearly always false and broken. During the whole sermon, which lasted an hour and five-and-twenty minutes, there was scarcely any image which was perfect; and positively not one which remained impressed upon the mind by its beauty, terseness, and truth." The discourse was one flood of inappropriate and bombastic language—extravagant, without being in the least degree poetical—furious, without ever, for a moment, being forcible. I have since heard MR. IRVING called 'a eloquent barbarian,' but I cannot grant even this. The barbarism was not very apparent, but I discovered no eloquence. I could recognise no deep thought—no fine images—nothing pathetic—nothing impressive; there were a great number of words—and, as I have said, not good words—and these, in my judgment, do not constitute eloquence.

"The manner of delivery displeased me as much as the composition. The Lord's Prayer had prepared me for a good deal; but I had no conception that it was possible that any thing like the violence of enunciation and gesture which MR. IRVING displayed, could have been used in the pulpit, or indeed any where else. I am the very farthest in the world from belonging to that very orthodox school of persons, who consider all preaching extravagant which goes beyond a dull and drowsy reading; or, to speak more fairly, an unimpassioned and sober delivery. I fully take into consideration, also, the school in which MR. IRVING has been reared, which permits and inculcates a vehemence of manner to which we, in this country, are unaccustomed. I am, indeed, far from disliking this when not carried to excess. For the orator to be enwrapped in his subject, and to speak on it with all the earnestness and energy of conviction, are the surest means of carrying his hearers along with him. But earnestness and energy are very distinct from violence and raving. On the contrary, the latter are sure to fail ineffective. I am also as far as is possible from objecting to the feelings being occasionally appealed to from the pulpit. I consider a sermon of strong language, delivered with the solemnity befitting some parts, and the passion even which I am willing to allow to others, to be the thing of all others calculated to produce a strong and fearful impression—in the Scotch phrase 'to gar us grew'—which may be rendered, to make the shake in our shoes. A preacher has, above all other orators, means to affect his hearers, both from subject and illustration; he, indeed, to borrow the expression of one of the first of preachers, can 'return us to the world with understandings elevated, and with hearts made better.' But MR. IRVING'S solemnity is vehemence: MR. IRVING'S passion is fury. And what is worse than all, he is not guided in these bursts of convulsive frenzy by the matter which he is delivering. He throws himself into all the variations of attitude which are consistent with every one of them being ungraceful—his hands are clenched—the sweat starts from his brow—his whole frame shakes—and his voice comes forth with a quivering sound from the extremity of his agitation; and all this at a passage where manly earnestness is all that is needed, or, indeed, admissible. As an instance of this, when speaking of the omnipotence of GOD—that the whole universe was in His power—as he pronounced the word universe, he absolutely waved his arm round and round above his head, in a manner which is usual only when the hand contains a hat, and the mouth is uttering Huzza! Huzza!

"He occasionally, also, drops his voice into a low and strangely quiet tone, which is equally uncalled for with his vehemence—equally void of the slightest reference to his words.

"A style of delivery such as this was not likely to reconcile me to the matter of which I have striven to give an idea. They are both, it is true, very similar to each other, but both, as it appears to me, totally bad; and the very last things which ought to be held up as models of eloquence. MR. IRVING'S style has, with me at least, the worst of all faults—it is wholly unimpressive. If I may be allowed to use a simile after all I have said of them, above, I should liken it to the waves which break against a rock, both with reference to their froth, foam, and violence, and to all this being utterly ineffective and unavailing.

"I went away last in wonder—not at the notoriety which MR. IRVING has gained, for his style is very much ad captandum—but at the report which I had heard (but which I must say I now doubt,) that some of our most really eloquent men have spoken of him in high praise—and, above all, at the fact which is undoubted, that DR. CHALMERS chose him as his assistant."

" "I do not bring into my argument the volume which MR. IRVING has lately published; for I confess, I have found it impossible to read 548 octavo pages written in the style of which I have been speaking: and it is scarcely fair to critique a book of which I know so little. But I have read fully sufficient of it, to be able to pronounce upon its style, and I fearlessly refer to it the generality of the Philippian manner, for a proof of the justice of what I have said on this point; I cannot, resist, however, quoting the following passage, which is evidently meant to be pre-eminent:—"Sorrow was not indigenous to her planet, "nor did this eclipse of the Divinity frown upon her birth: her birth-star was "the light of her Maker's countenance; her birth-song was the music of the "starred spheres; her birth-right was a womb teeming with wholesome fruits, "and the ornaments of which was a face clothed with beauty, and blushing "with virtue, happiness, and peace. Into this stately palace, created and furnished for his reception, man was introduced to rule over it, and enjoy it."—I pass over the slip of grammar, and the downright nonsense of the greater part of this passage, to notice the metaphors. First, sorrow is a substance which may, or may not, be indigenous, and then it is an eclipse!—(the earth is personified as a female being, (her birth) whose birth-right is her own womb, and the ornaments of whose birth are a face!) And then, after all, this female being, thus gifted, turns out to be—a palace!!—Oh! Jamaetis."

THEATRICALS.

THE wet weather, unfavourable to farmers, fills the ... market nightly, and the managers of the little laughing ... will we suppose fill their pockets—a consummation devoutly ... to be wished. That they occasionally produce a wretched ... farce, is more a fault than a misfortune; and certainly the ... endeavours never were more successful in the art of ... hunting, than when they put up and ran a thing called ... "SPANISH BONDS," which appeared for the first and last ... time on Saturday.

Who that could write out a farce, or had ever seen one, would think of putting LISTON into the part of an Old Dog, or who in these days would think of a Spanish farce at all? Farce is a caricature, as comedy is a picture, of real life: and it is only necessary to ask, whether we relish a caricature of DE CAZES or TALLEYRAND half so much as one of JONES, HUME or LORD NUGENT—in order to ascertain the comparative effectiveness of a piece of ridicule, the scene of which is laid in England, with one the business of which is carried on in Spain.

The loss of JONES at the Haymarket is seriously felt—even if he were not decidedly the best actor extant in his line, we should miss him grievously in the parts which he has always been in the habit of filling—there is an ease, an inscribable tact in "playing up" (as the stage cant goes) to other actors, in which the original performer of a character is sure to baffle all followers; and although it is quite hopeless to expect the same players always to play the same parts, still while one knows that MR. JONES is comfortable, it is hard to feel his absence.

Upon the whole, however, the company is an efficient company, and those stars of the theatrical hemisphere, LISTON and TERRY, are ably supported by their tributary subordinates, and nothing seems wanting but tolerable farce-writers to make the thing go admirably; for nothing is more absurd than the notion that the Haymarket is the place for stiff comedies or regular tragedies. One turns absolutely sick when one sees the School for Scandal, or Venice Preserved, or such plays, advertised at the Haymarket; and, on the other hand, we run to see SWEETHEARTS AND WIVES, or the GREEN MAN, TEAZING MADE EASY, or any of the pieces peculiar to the place, which, let it be said, not to the disparagement of SHERIDAN or OTWAY, are much more suitable to the talents of the actors, the size of the house, and the state of the weather.

We would just throw out one friendly hint to the Manager, which is directed towards the scenery. The scenery is detestable; a barn at Bartholomew fair excels the Haymarket in its painting; and even the old scenes, to preserve which the stage has been reduced to a ridiculous shape and diminutiveness, have been now so often touched up by the sacrilegious pars of the present bunglers, that they have become as bad as those which are purely original. A word will be quite sufficient we are sure; and the present state of the Haymarket finance will not sanction any apologies for inability to do the very best—at which no persons more sincerely rejoice than ourselves.

IRELAND.

TIPPERARY ASSIZES.—Patrick Carroll v. Richard Faulkner.—It was an action to recover damages for falsely imprisoning the plaintiff, a shopkeeper in the town of Birr, the defendant is a gentleman of rank. The former, in the course of dealing, became possessed of the bill of Mr. Charles Walsh, which was dishonoured; a writ was sent down to plaintiff to have served on Mr. Walsh; the plaintiff's brother having gone to Walsh Park to serve the writ, was brutally assaulted and his scull fractured; the copy and original were taken from him. Two persons were taken under the warrant, who were invited by defendant. The plaintiff having received information that two others were secreted at Walsh Park, he went to Mr. Dexter, who desired him to take the three police stationed at Carrigahorig, and some friends to effect the arrest. Defendant was then in the house, and called on the plaintiff to take off his hat which he refused, and irritated the defendant that he ordered the police to take him into custody, and actually gave the constable a committal under the Insurrection Act, who took them to Carrigahorig, a distance of six miles from Walsh-park, and ultimately to Borris-I-kane, and placed in the black-hole, without any light or air. The defendant now began to think he was acting rashly—and had plaintiff brought before him, and having given him a severe lecture and admonition, he discharged him. The Jury retired for upwards of five hours, and then gave the plaintiff a verdict for 150l. damages.

Laurence v. Dempster.—This was an action for false imprisonment, brought by the plaintiff against the defendant. The damages were laid at 1,000l. Both plaintiff and defendant reside in Nenagh, at one Mr. Flinn, the Barrack Master, who having occasion to leave home last summer, appointed plaintiff to act in his place. Defendant, thinking it would be a good opportunity to get grass for his horse in the barrack field, applied to plaintiff for the key, which had been entrusted to him, and which he refused to give. Defendant seeing plaintiff in the street on the evening of the 13th of June, 1822, called to the police, and desired them to take him to the Bridewell, and gave them this warrant—"Receive the body of Thomas Laurence, an idle and disorderly —JAMES DEMPSTER."—For the defendant a witness was called, who stated that he was with Dempster when he saw Laurence in Castle-street; he began to abuse Mr. D. who asked what brought him at that hour? The reply was, "Were it not for the Insurrection Act I'd cut the coat off your back, and would riddle you so that all the tailors of Nenagh would not darn you." On that Mr. D. ordered him to be taken into custody, when Mr. Laurence said, "I'll not go taken by any damned rascal, but here is Serjeant Phelan, I'll go with him."—Phelan took Mr. L. into custody; it appeared as if he was going to strike Mr. D.: his hand was down by his side. The bogle sounced before this time, at nine o'clock; it was ten or after ten when Mr. Laurence was taken up and brought to gaol.—The Jury retired about seven o'clock, and returned shortly after ten, finding a verdict for the plaintiff. Damages—75l. and 6d costs.

Muthall v. Palmer.—This also was an action of false imprisonment. The defendant on the 2d of December, 1822, summoned the plaintiff before him to give evidence on a prosecution depending between some persons for sporting and killing game on a part of Lord Rosse's estate, without his permission. The plaintiff, who is a farmer, and occupies part of his Lordship's estate, was unwilling to prosecute, and refused to give evidence, whereupon the defendant, Mr. Palmer, both with made out a committal, directing plaintiff to be conveyed to the gaol of Clonmel, 40 miles from the town of Roscrea, and there confined plaintiff remained 14 days in gaol when a Habeas Corpus was issued and he and three others confined for a similar offence were removed to Dublin, and there discharged by the Judges of the Court of King's Bench. The Chief Justice told the Jury that defendant's conduct was quite illegal, and that they were bound to assess substantial damages to compensate plaintiff, who should not suffer by defendant's ignorance of the law, although he may not have been actuated by malicious motives. The Jury found a verdict of 50l. damages, subject to a point of law.

IN SIX EASY LESSONS OF ONE HOUR EACH.—MR. BRADBURY, Private Tutor at Westminster School, solicits the attention of Ladies and Gentlemen to his unrivalled and infallible system of beautiful PENMANSHIP, whereby he pledges himself to teach persons of all ages to write with ease, elegance, and expedition, (whatever may be the deformity of their present writing) in six progressive Lessons. This system, as it equally promotes the attainment of a bold and masculine hand calculated for business, and of a light and graceful manuscript adapted to Ladies; also secures to the Pupil the certainty of writing straight, without lines, with wonderful dispatch and accuracy; and, moreover, will steadily the hand of the most tremulous writer. Upwards of 200 specimens, and numerous recommendatory letters may be seen, and references given to persons of the first distinction, some of whom are upwards of 50 years of age. Private tuition at home. Ladies and Gentlemen attended at their own residences. A new and practical system of Short Hand, taught in a few lessons, so as to enable the writer to decipher what he has written with inconceivable ease.—Apply, (or direct, post paid) at the Academy, 464, Strand, near Charing Cross.

WHATMAN'S superior manufacture; superfine laid Post 8d. 9d. 10d. and 1s. the quire, or 13s. 15s. 18s. and 17s. the ream; superfine foolscap 1s. 1s. 2d. 1s. 3d. and 1s. 4d. a quire, or by the ream, 19s. 21s. 24s. and 26s; very best bank post 10d. the quire, or 15s. the ream; large ditto, 1s. the quire, or 18s. the ream; best ruled thick post copy books, 5s. 6d. per dozen; foolscap ditto, 3s. 6d. per dozen; 12 sheet cyphering books, 14s. per dozen; 18 sheet ditto, 17s.; and 24 sheet do. 20s.; very best red sealing wax, 4s. 6d. the lb. The Steel Nib Pen, 1s. 4d. each; boys' school slates, 4d. each; Cambridge thick ditto, 6d.; and pens equally low; the celebrated bonnet, drawing paper, and Bristol boards, in great variety; excellent copy, 7d. a quire, or 11s. a ream; at H. and W. SMITH'S, 192, Strand, Second House from the Crown and Anchor Tavern.

SW. SILVER, TROPICAL CLOTHIER, READY-MADE LINEN and OUT-FITTING WAREHOUSEMAN, begs to inform his friends and the public generally, that the concern of "Arrowsmith and Silver" was dissolved on the 24th June last by mutual consent, and to acquaint them he has no connection with "Arrowsmith and Company."—S. W. SILVER is removed to No. 9, Cornhill, where he continues the same business which he conducted with so much satisfaction to his friends at his late warehouse; he has commodious premises, with an operative establishment for manufacturing, an ample capital to command the advantages in bought bargains, and by adopting the present system, namely—smaller profits (rigidly adhering to the best quality of work and material) he is enabled to offer linen shirts, for home use, handkerchiefs, &c. ready-made or made to order, at much lower prices than they can be obtained by purchasing the materials, &c.—Cotton shirts, for tropical climates and sea use, from 3s. 3d. to 5s. 9d.; and, with the aid of a clever tailor, he is manufacturing white jean fashionable trowsers, for medium sizes, from 5s. 9d. to 8s. 6d.; ditto waistcoats, 3s. 9d. to 5s. 9d.; ditto jackets, 5s. 9d.; drab ditto, 5s. 9d.; ditto trowsers, 5s. 9d.; drill ditto, 6s. 9d. to 11s. 6d.; dressing gowns, from 10s. 6d. to 18s.; and all light clothing in the same proportion; (if made to Order, 12s. per dozen extra) Writers, Cadets, and Passengers generally to all parts of the globe, fitted out with care and attention, to effect comfort, economy, and dispatch. The outfit will be so arranged as to form a supply on arrival.—East India Naval Uniforms.—Midshipmen equipped.—No. 9, Cornhill.

RICH GROS DE NAPLES, 2s. 11d. per yard; and Cyprus Crape Dresses 15s. each.—Only by inspection can the public credit the immense sacrifice on those goods. 2000 yards black and coloured sarsenets, 2s. 9d. per yard; crape shawls one guinea each; levantine silks, French width, 3s. 6d. per yd.; very rich ditto, 4s. 6d. and 4s. 9d.; Velve's, 5s. 6d. per yd.; very rich ditto, 10s. 6d.; ditto, the richest made, 12s. 6d.; Lapland coats, 3s. 6d. per yard; 4-4 ditto, 4s. 6d. per yard; Gros de Tours, 4s. 6d. per yard, in every novel and brilliant colour; Norwich crapes, the widest made, 1s. 3d. per yard; rich sattns for dresses, 2s. per yard; poplins and lustres, 1s. 6d.; rich ditto, 2s.; Irish ditto, 2s. 6d.; figured poplins, 1s. 4d.; rich tabbinets, 2s. 2d.; fine coloured bombasins, 1s.; black ditto, 1s. 2d.; fine ditto, 1s. 6d.; shawls and scarfs of the most chaste and elegant patterns, and scarcely to be known from the original cachemere, from one guinea to five guineas each; those at 2l. 50s. and three guineas, are the most superb patterns; Norwich silk shawls, 12s. each; drab each; Braganza shawls, the largest size, 5s. each; cloth shawls, bound, &c. 7s. 6d. each; seal and ermine shawls, 21s. each; beautiful gauze handkerchiefs for turbans, 22d. each; morning wrappers, 3s. 6d. each; handsome flounced and tucked robes, 6s. 6d.; beautiful Moravian work, 18s. 6d. (really worth 31s. 6d.); something new in elegantly embroidered book dresses at 20s. suitable for full dress; uncommon fine jaconet, 20s. the piece (21 yards); fine cambrics, 10s. the piece (12 yards); fine India book, 6d. a yard; checks and stripes ditto, yard and half wide, 11s. the piece (12 yards); white and coloured trimmings, &c; a most splendid selection of Parisian silk cloaks, trimmed in the most admired and prevailing fashion, fine habit cloths, and foreign cachemere ditto for ladies' dresses, &c. at one-half their real value; velours sinuiez, 23s. the dress, and every fashionable article for the season, with a superior stock of family linen drapery. The fullest value given for India shawls, turbans, and birds of paradise, at RILEY'S India Warehouse, No. 113, Oxford street.

CURIOUS INDIA SHAWLS, 19, Hanway-street, Oxford-street.—WILLIAM LEIGH, many years in the House of Messrs. Whittir and Hardwick of New Bond-street, has the honour respectfully to announce to the Nobility, Gentry, and his Friends that he has purchased the STOCK and BUSINESS of the late Mr. C. BURRELL, Linen Draper. He begs also to observe he has just received some superb Cachmeres of the most costly description, well calculated for ladies or gentlemen going abroad. Also Imitation shawls, Silesia, Irish, and Scotch damask table linen, Scotch and Irish sheetings, grass-bleached Irish linen, undressed French cambrics, Welch flannels, &c. &c. all of which are considerably reduced in price. Ladies writing from the country will find their orders punctually attended to.—August 6th.

N.B. India Shawls bought or exchanged.

BURGESS'S ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES.—Warehouse, 170, Strand, corner of the Savoy-steps, London.—John Burgess and Son, being apprized of the numerous endeavours made by many persons to impose a spurious article for their make, feel it incumbent upon them to request the attention of the Public, in purchasing what they conceive to be the Original, to observe the Name and Address corresponds with the above: the general appearance of the spurious descriptions will deceive the unguarded, and for their detection, J. B. and Son submit the following cautions,—some are in appearance at first sight, "The Genuine," but without any name or address:—some "Burgess's Essence of Anchovies;"—others—"Burgess's,"—and many more without Address.

John Burgess and Son having been many years honoured with such distinguished approbation, feel every sentiment of respect towards the Public, and earnestly solicit them to inspect the Labels previous to their purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments.

BURGESS'S NEW SAUCE for general purposes, having given such great satisfaction, continues to be prepared by them, and is recommended as a most useful and convenient Sauce: will keep good in all climates.

Warehouse, 170, Strand, corner of the Savoy-steps, London.—(The original Fish-sauce Warehouse.)

WARD'S DIGESTIVE SEGARS.—Health and Luxury united in the use of these celebrated Segars: their medicinal virtues in cases of indigestion, &c. are already well known and approved: they are mild and gentle in their operation, and do not cause the nausea usually complained of by those who are unaccustomed to smoking: indeed in the use of them arises a most grateful perfume.—Sold only by Ward, (sole proprietor) 18, Piccadilly; Soulier and Co. 4, Burlington Arcade: and Ward, 9, Newgate-street, who also begs to recommend to the notice of Connoisseurs in Segars, that they have on sale the finest Cabanas in London, imported by them direct from the Havannah.

EASE and COMFORT in SHAVING.—To those Gentlemen who experience inconvenience in Shaving from a tender face or stiff beard, J. T. RIGGE most particularly recommends his celebrated MAGNETIC RAZOR TABLET, which, with its late improvement, he engages will produce so keen an edge as to supersede all grinding, honing, &c. and render the operation of shaving as easy and agreeable as it was before unpleasant and painful. Its use is simple, its effect certain; price 7s. 6d. J. T. Rigge's Aromatic Shaving Soap will also be found an invaluable addition. Manufactory, 65 Chery-side and 52, Park-street, Grosvenor-square.

WILLIAM JONES, (late Walsh,) Operative Chemist to his Royal Highness the Duke of York. The original GINGER SEEDS having for nearly 30 years been patronized by the Public, and recommended by medical men of the first eminence, their beneficial effects have become fully established; in consequence of which many spirits have been offered for sale of a very inferior quality, which has, in a great measure, brought the above elegant preparation into great disrepute. The public are therefore informed, that they are prepared solely at the original Warehouse, No. 100, Strand, by WM. JONES, successor to the late Mr. Walsh.—Where are also to be had WALSH'S DINNER PILLS—DR. MOSELEY'S ANTIBILIOUS PILLS—WALSH'S GOUT CORDIAL—And WELCH'S FEMALE PILLS. The efficacy of these Medicines being universally known, requires no recommendation.

SARSAPARILLA SYRUP, Concentrated.—Two table spoonsfull of this preparation are equal to a pint of the decoction. It is particularly convenient to persons in the country, or travellers, as it will keep good for years. Mr. Fisher introduced this preparation into practice three years since, and it has met with such decided approbation from most of the Physicians and Surgeons of eminence, that persons are now vending an imitation of it.—Observe, that W. H. Fisher and Co. 19, Sandall-street, Hanover-square, London, is printed on the label of each bottle.—Sold also by appointment by Mr. Compton, chemist, 41, Bishopsgate-street within, London.

DR. VAN BUTCHELL, Surgeon, Man-Midwife, Son, and Assistant, to the late Martin Van Butchell, recommended by persons of distinction (references are given with permission), continues to cure Fistula, Piles, &c. by the improved method so long and successfully practised by his father, without Confinement, Cutting, Caustic, or Risk, for suitable fees.—No. 48, South-street, Berkeley-square, London. At home till one daily. No remuneration required from persons of respectability, until they are satisfied a cure has been performed.

LATEST NEWS.

Paris papers of Thursday and Friday arrived yesterday. They contain a telegraphic despatch transmitted to Bayonne, August 6th, at night, by the Major General to the Minister of War in these terms:—"The advanced guard of General Molitor dispersed on the 25th, near Guadix, the whole of Ballesteros' cavalry.—On the 27th Grenada was occupied. On the 28th General Molitor completely defeated Campillo. Not a night has interrupted this despatch. They wrote from Bayonne, of the 3d August, that the Governor of St. Sebastian had given a negative answer to the flag of truce sent to him by Marshal Lauriston to surrender the place."

PARIS, AUGUST 8.—The following was posted up on 'Change—"A Telegraphic Despatch, commencing the 6th, and terminating the 7th. The 25th General Molitor was near Guadix. The 27th Grenada was occupied. The 28th he defeated, at Campillo de Atonar, the cavalry of General Ballesteros, who has retired into the mountains of Cazarla. General Foissac-Latour is at Villa Cerello. Gen. Loverdo has returned to Guadix, and is in the rear of the enemy, who wishes to come to terms."

Letters from Cadiz, of the 21st, announce that the same spirit prevails in that city, and that the inhabitants agree with the troops, and are determined to defend themselves.

BADALENA, JULY 28.—We this moment learn, that a forced contribution of four millions of piastres has been made on Barcelona, by Roten, who is the Governor—which has caused great discontent amongst the inhabitants.

We hear from Madrid, by an extraordinary Courier of the 30th July, that the division, commanded by the Prince Generalissimo, has experienced in its march a storm of rain and hail, the most severe ever experienced in that country.

We have received by an extraordinary Courier, the Gazette of Madrid of the 2d of this month. The Regency have received information from Cadiz of the 27th July: the King and his august family were in good health.

There has been no later arrivals from Corunna than those noticed in another part of our paper.—In the absence of Quiroga the command of Corunna has devolved upon General Novella, an officer who distinguished himself in Mexico, where he was opposed to the Viceroy Apodaca. The garrison is said to be about 4,000 strong, of whom 400 were artillery.—On the arrival of the Royal George, at Vigo, Sir R. Wilson came on board, and had his wound dressed by the surgeon of the packet. He could not walk, but the next day he was enabled to ride on horseback. He was shot just above the inside of the left knee. Colonel Light is wounded through the right hand, and upper part of the right thigh. Sir Robert was becoming somewhat unpopular from having held out that the English troops might be expected. As it was fully expected Corunna and Vigo must yield, all the French and other foreigners in the way of the Constitutionalists, at those ports, were eager to get on board the Royal George. She brought about 75 passengers. They expect to be sent to Cadiz by the London Spanish Committee.

In the Vice Chancellor's Court, yesterday, the case of Lord Byron v. Drysdale, which was an injunction to restrain the defendant from selling Don Juan, was decided. The Vice Chancellor observed that where the common law did not give the party complaining a remedy in an action of damage for piracy, because of the immoral, irreligious, or libellous character of the work, a court of equity would not grant its injunction to restrain the piratical sale of such publication, as not falling within the rules of common law, for the protection of literary property. Upon these grounds (after having conferred with the Lord Chancellor) this Court now thought proper to dissolve the injunction.

QUEEN-SQUARE.—Yesterday a stout looking fellow, who gave his name William Butler, was brought before the Magistrates, charged with begging. Condie, one of the Bow-street patrol, was at the Rose and Crown in King-street, Westminster, on Friday night, to meet his party to go on duty, when the prisoner came in craving charity. Condie told him to apply to the Magistrates, and they would put him in a way of being relieved. "Oh, no, my dear friend," replied the beggar; "I know better than that—they shall not catch me at their Office." He then went away, but shortly afterwards returned, and came up to Condie. "Sir," said he, "I know you be an officer, take me into custody instantly, or, by God"—(pulling a knife from his pocket)—"I'll either murder you or myself; my life is miserable and unhappy."—The officer took him to the watch-house, and on searching him he found 4d. in one pocket, and 5s. in silver in another, and a bundle filled with bread and meat, sufficient food for two days.—On being questioned before the Magistrates, he conducted himself with great violence. He was committed to the mill for one month.

John Kirkman, a black servant, and Mary King, were charged as follows:—The black is servant in an officer's family in Westminster, preparations were made for the departure of the family to France. The prisoner was to join at Brighton, but instead of his going there, he was detained on business, and was returning home at 11 o'clock at night, when his master saw him taking the woman into the house by the area gate, and he sent them to the watch-house. They were both committed to prison for a month.

GUILDHALL.—Yesterday, William Slang, a genteel youth, was charged with having disturbed a congregation of Protestant Dissenters at the Chapel in Grub-street. The officer stated, that the prisoner had been at the Chapel frequently, and as often remonstrated with for indecorous conduct—but such was his behaviour that he was induced to take him into custody. The father of the youth addressed Mr. Alderman Key, and observed that he was extremely sorry that he should be placed in the situation he stood—it was contrary to his (the father's) injunction that such should be the case, and he thought that a suitable admonition would prevent the recurrence of the evil complained of. Mr. Alderman Key addressed the prisoner in forcible language, who promised never to offend again, in case he was discharged, which was eventually ordered.

WORSHIP-STREET.—Yesterday, William Bennett was complained against by Sergeant-Major Best, of the London Recruiting District Department, for unlawfully refusing to supply billets to seven recruits. The defendant was a constable, residing in Whitecross-street. The defendant demanded of complainant to parade his men before his door, and exhibit their hands, as he (defendant) much doubted but the whole was a fraud upon the parish. The Magistrate observed, that the complainant had acted with great propriety in not allowing his party, after a day's march, to be without their quarters; but he did not conceive that the defendant came exactly within the Act, which states that "any constable, &c. refusing to supply billets to his Majesty's troops, upon proper notice, shall be liable to a penalty, not exceeding 5l. or less than 40s." Had the complainant applied a second time, and been refused, defendant would have certainly been liable to punishment. The complaint was then dismissed.

BOW STREET.—Yesterday, William Edwards was brought up for re-examination, charged with picking the pocket of Mr. John Mattocks, on Thursday evening last, in the lobby of the English Opera House. Mr. Mattocks stated, that on the evening mentioned, he went to the theatre, and in the crowd entering the pit, he saw the prisoner and others engaged in stopping the people from going in; Edwards came upon him violently, and upon witness's going to pay for his admission, he found his money gone, and upon feeling for his pocket-book in his coat pocket, he discovered his coat cut, and his book gone. Lack took the prisoner into custody a few minutes afterwards, and instantly searched him, when he found Mr. Mattocks's pocket-book, containing bills to a large amount, on his person; but the loose money was not found upon him. He was fully committed.

Laurence Cleary, for robbing Timothy Foy of 39l. in gold, was re-examined, but he still persisted in saying that he found 48 sovereigns in the Haymarket. He was committed for trial.

PORTSMOUTH.—Orders were received on Wednesday for the disposal of the Royal Squadron under the orders of Rear-Admiral the Honourable Sir Charles Paget. The Royal George yatcht, bearing the Rear-Admiral's flag, came into harbour the same day to be laid up, after which her officers and crew will be employed in the Calliope, tender, as heretofore. The Royal Sovereign and Prince Regent yachts, have sailed for Deptford, to be laid up.

The following are amongst the passengers who landed from the Royal George: Gen. Quiroga, and his Aide-de-Camp, Mr. Ramey; Col. Colegno; Col. Hussendelier; Gen. Ramon Romany, and two Aides-de-Camp; Col. Janssiens; Gen. Pamplona, and two Aides-de-Camp; and about forty other officers—Captains and Lieutenants.

RACES.—At Rochester, on Thursday, the Members' Plate of 50l. was won by Mr. Woollett's b. h. Minister, and the City Plate of 50l. was won by Mr. Page's ch. m. Prosody.—At Salisbury, Mr. Ireson's Sir William won the City Bowl with 30gs., and Mr. Farquharson's b. m. Spinette, won the Sweepstakes, with the City Members' Plate of 50 sovereigns added.—The Huntingdon races concluded on Thursday, when Mr. Rush's b. f. Pioneer, won the 60l. Plate for all ages.—At Newcastle-under-Lyme, the Members' Plate of 50gs. was won by Lord Grosvenor's Hymettus; the Sweepstakes by Sir T. Mostyn's ch. c. Colchicum, and the Pottery Plate of 50gs. by Sir. W. Wynn's Belmont. At Kencal, Mr. Hudson's ch. f. White Rose, won the 50l. Maiden Plate.—At Knutsford, Lord Stamford's b. f. Ostrich, won the 25gs. Sweepstakes; Mr. Clifton's b. c. Lytham, won the 60l. for all ages; and Sir T. Stanley's ch. c. General Mina, won the Sweepstakes of 50 guineas.

Sarah Lamb, the Gipsy, committed for stealing lace from the shop of Mr. Jones, haberdasher, in the Borough (and who for some time evaded the officers' inquiries, but whose retreat, in a lane between Norwood and Peckham, was discovered by stratagem, and lace to the amount of 30l. recovered), on Friday night made her way through the Borough Compter, by forcing the roof of the cell she was confined in, and effected her escape by letting herself down the outer wall by the water-spout.

An accident occurred on Tuesday while the boats were unloading oysters, which has been misrepresented in all the daily papers. It is true, as stated in those papers, that the hold and buoys which supported the boats gave way, but no lives were lost. From the general uproar and confusion that prevailed, 20 persons, (some very intoxicated,) from their anxiety and hurry to get into the boats, were forced by the throng into the water; and it has since been ascertained all of those, by catching the ropes of the lighters, succeeded in saving their lives, although many were severely hurt.

ROYAL GARDENS, VAUXHALL.—GRAND MILITARY FETE, in honour of the Birth of his Royal Highness the DUKE of YORK, Commander-in-Chief, and the Illustrious Brother of his Majesty, the Patron of Vauxhall. The Proprietors of the Royal Gardens respectfully announce that they would have felt it their duty to celebrate the Birth Day of his Royal Highness on the 16th had it not fallen on a Saturday, which would necessarily have curtailed the Amusements; consequently it will take place TO-MORROW, Monday 18th August. The Amusements will commence with a Superior Concert of Vocal and Instrumental Music, in which appropriate Songs will be introduced. The Grand Musical Temple, Forty Feet in height, has been entirely refitted. On this occasion an entirely new Ballet will be produced, under the Venetial Ball, composed, arranged, and produced by Monsieur Hullin, under new and splendid Scenery, Dresses, and Decorations. The other entertainments will consist of the unequalled Fantoccini, by Mr. Grey, who nightly receives unbounded applause for his superior skill. The wonderful young American, Mr. Blackmore, will go through his surprising Performances on the Tight and Slack Rope. The Cosmorama will be changed so as to produce Four Views never exhibited, and a new Piece of Artificial Fire-works will be let off by the Hydraulics will be on a most extensive scale. The amusing Gardens known by the name of Harlequin in the Shades. The Revolving Evening Star; the Illuminated Fountain; Mount Vesuvius, &c. &c as on former occasions. The Fire-works will be by that eminent Artist, Signior Mortram. The Ascent on the Rope, by the undaunted young American, Mr. Blackmore, will be made in the middle of the most brilliant part of the Fire-works; and in the Present on the Rope, Mr. Blackmore will wear a Cap from which Fire-works will be exhibited, being similar to that produced on Monday, the 4th inst. which astonished the Company, and drew forth applause unprecedented. The Illuminations will be on the grandest scale ever known, exhibiting, besides their usual brilliancy, upwards of 15,000 additional Lamps in appropriate Mottoes, Devices, &c.—Doors will be opened at Half-past Six. Concert commences at Half past Seven.—Admission, Gentlemen's New Entrance Entrance will be opened, and the Chinese Walk Illuminated.—Numerous extra Police will be in attendance. ☞ The Gardens will be opened on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, as usual.—No orders can be admitted.

THE WIDOW of a CAPTAIN and SHIP-OWNER was left in March, 1820, with SEVEN CHILDREN, quite DESTITUTE, and otherwise under circumstances of peculiar affliction. Some of the family have been partially provided for, and a Private Subscription entered into to put the Mother in a way of supporting the rest. The larger portion of the sum necessary has been obtained, but the delicate health and severe indisposition of the Mother, occasioned by over-anxiety, have prevented that success, which there was every reason to anticipate had she not been rendered incapable of her usual exertion. It was not intended that this case should have been made thus public; but which, however, there cannot be one moment's hesitation in presenting the remedy of the effect of humane.—Subscriptions will be thankfully received at the Banking-house of Sir William Curtis, Robarts, and Co. Lombard-street, where further particulars, and a list of most respectable names (who have already subscribed) will be furnished for the inspection of those who may be disposed to interest themselves in behalf of the helpless widow and fatherless.

PRIVATE PUPIL.—A Married Clergyman of the Established Church, resident within a convenient distance of London, and receiving a few Pupils into his House, has now a VACANCY. The most satisfactory references can be given to Noblemen and Gentlemen whose sons have been under his care.—Letters to be addressed to Rev. E. S. I., Mr. Egerton's, Bookseller, Whitehall, London.

A MARRIED LADY, of highly respectable connexions, having no family of her own, is desirous of meeting with the Guardians of one or two FEMALE ORPHANS or Children, who would have the advantage of a superior private education, with the comforts of a home and maternal care, at a very moderate expense; references of the first respectability will be given. Direct A. B., Graham's Tea Warehouse, Ludgate hill.

MR. P. N. JOHNSON begs to acquaint Gentlemen engaged in MINING PURSUITS on going abroad that he gives INSTRUCTIONS in the most ready Methods of Analysing Metallic and Mineral Substances. Metals, Minerals, &c. assayed.—79, Hatton-garden.

FOR CALCUTTA direct, to sail early in AUGUST, the teak Ship BENGAL MERCHANT, Burthen 500 tons, ALEXANDER BROWN, Commander, lying in the City Canal. Abercrombie, 4, Birchin-lane, or J. S. Brinley, 14, Birchin-lane.

FOR POYAIS DIRECT.—The superior, first-class SHIP ALBION, JOHN WHITE, Commander, coppered and copper-fastened burthen 370 tons, is chartered, and warranted to sail from the Thames on the 26th inst.—For freight or passage immediate application must be made to Messrs. HASLOPE and WATSON, Ship Brokers, 11, Leadenhall street.

BRISTOL, DUBLIN and CORK.—The ST. PATRICK STEAM PACKET COMPANY respectfully inform the public, that they have been influenced by a powerful interest in the South of Ireland to put one of their Packets upon the Cork line. On the 19th instant, therefore, the St Patrick will commence that route, and the Hibernia confine no more her present arrangement. Thus, the ST. PATRICK will sail from BRISTOL for Cork every TUESDAY, and from CORK for Bristol every FRIDAY: and the HIBERNIA will sail from BRISTOL for Dublin every FRIDAY, and from DUBLIN for Bristol every TUESDAY. The following are the hours of departure from Bristol.

For Cork			For Dublin

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—The rude and unskilful attempts constantly made to supply these substitutes for the masticatory organ, and the disgust which delicacy suffers from the unpleasantry attending them when permanently fixed, have deterred many from adopting the aid and comfort they are capable of affording, independent of the assistance they may contribute to digestion and consequent health. The ingenious application of mechanical science will enable us to obviate all these inconveniences, and allow the wearer at all times to keep the mouth in a state of perfect cleanliness, and to perform the functions of mastication, articulation, &c. with decided ease and comfort.—Mr. NICHOLLES begs to state, that he is in constant attendance from ten to four, and will be happy to give ocular demonstration of the comforts derived from his efforts under every circumstance of simple and complicated deficiency.—115, Piccadilly.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, Aug. 12.—According to the Convention concluded on the 4th of this month, between General Molitor and Ballesteros, the general, and the troops under his command, acknowledges the authority of the Regency. General Ballesteros orders besides to the generals and governors of the strong places, in the extent of his command, to obey the Regency. Hostilities having ceased on each side, the army of Ballesteros, to the number of 7000 men, has entered the cantonments assigned to it.

We have received by an extraordinary conveyance Madrid Gazettes of the 7th. Cadiz becomes more and more surrounded; discontent begins to manifest itself not only among the inhabitants, but also amongst the troops.—We have heard of a new trait of revolutionary ferocity—the director of the post at St. Roche has been arrested and shot, by an order of the cruel Ordogaez, for having expressed the opinions of a Royalist.

GRAND HEAD-QUARTERS.—(By an Extraordinary Courier.)—LA CAROLINA, Aug. 6.—Count Molitor has concluded with Ballesteros a convention, in which the latter, as well as the troops which he commands, recognize the authority of the Regency. Gen. Ballesteros will also issue orders to the Governors of Carthagena, Alicant, Pampeluna, St. Sebastian, Penisrola, Los Penos de St. Pedro, Mozen, and Venasque, all placed within the circle of his jurisdiction, to recognize it equally. Provisional cantonments have been assigned to Gen. Molitor for the reception of the troops of Ballesteros, which consist of about 7000 old soldiers.—Ballesteros engaged afterwards to induce Gen. Zayas to follow his example, and no doubt he will be able to do so; the knowledge of this convention cannot fail to produce the greatest effect at Cadiz, and in every other place. This important event has been the result of the success obtained by the 2d corps d'armée.

The defection of General Ballesteros will deprive the factious of their last hope. This important event is due to the wise combination of his Royal Highness the Duke d'Angoulene, seconded by the able movements of General Molitor, and by the bravery of our troops. After having marched several nights, in order to press the corps of Ballesteros between Molitor's division and his own, the Prince arrived at La Carolina, in the Sierra Morena, where he was immediately joined by the Count de la Rochefoucault, his Aid-de-Camp, who, after having overcome numerous obstacles, brought from Grenada the capitulation of Ballesteros. General Ballesteros, in his capitulation, stipulates for the preservation of his rank and titles. He made the same stipulation in favour of all the officers under him.

MADRID, JULY 30.—The journey of the Prince to Seville, and to the Camp before Cadiz, is one of the chief subjects of conversation here. Various opinions are entertained respecting his Royal Highness's manner of leaving the capital, but the general supposition is, that the Duke considered Madrid as a point of small importance under the present circumstances, and has preferred placing himself at the head of his army, where his presence may encourage his soldiers and save Cadiz, and where he may be able to attempt to negotiate with the Cortes, by the aid of Sir William A'Court, who is supposed to have some influence in the Prince's journey. It seems certain, that Cadiz is in a respectable state of defence, and has provisions for three months. The garrison consists of 6000 troops of the line, 8000 militia, half of whom are resolved to fight, and a civic guard of 25,000. It has also 60 gun-boats, which are a great support to the garrison. It seems certain that the Cortes are not inclined to accommodation, but will protract the resistance as much as possible; first, because they will not treat with the Regency; then, because they do not think the Prince can afford them a guarantee, since most violent re-actions take place even in the houses occupied by his troops; and lastly, because several of the Members do not yet despair of the triumph of their cause, according to the accounts they receive from different parts of the Peninsula, and especially Catalonia, where their commanders propose to defend themselves to the utmost. A plot, it is said, has been discovered at Barcelona and Cadiz, to make the inhabitants rise and carry off the King, proclaiming the overthrow of the Constitution. The time when the garrison had made a sally was to be taken advantage of for the execution of this plan, which had entirely failed; the loss of Galicia has greatly alarmed the Constitutional party.

ARMY OF THE PYRENEES.—BULLETIN.—Lieut.-General Count Molitor has transmitted to his Royal Highness a report of his operations subsequent to the taking of Loreo. General Vincent having learnt that a column of 1,200 men had left Carthagena, in order to forage and levy contributions, put himself in march to attack it. He came up with the rear-guard of the enemy at the village of Roda and made prisoners of the whole, consisting of three Officers and 100 soldiers, all veterans of the regiment of Marine. General Molitor, on arriving at Guadix, on the 24th, with the advanced guard of the division Loverdo, ascertained that the enemy had at last taken up a position to wait for him. General Zayas, commanding a separate corps, was at Grenada; Ballesteros and Balanzar, with the main body and flower of the army, had advanced as secretly as possible from the environs of Grenada and Jaen, and had reached Guadelhuertuna, on the right of the road from Guadix to Grenada. Count Molitor made dispositions for attacking them on the following day. The enemy, who reckoned on his cavalry, composed of old soldiers, hastened to push forward 1200 horse in front of Guadalhuertuna; we had only at this point 400, who had marched 12 hours. After three regular charges on the Spanish squadrons stationed in front of the town, who opposed an obstinate resistance, they were overthrown; the enemy were driven from Guadalhuertuna, and pursued for two leagues beyond it. The enemy left the field of battle covered with dead and wounded; we have taken a standard, and made 200 prisoners, among whom are three Lieutenant-Colonels, and eight other officers. On our side two chasseurs have been killed and two Officers and eight Sub Officers have been wounded.

"After this glorious combat, Ballesteros having still about twelve thousand men, retired upon Huelma, and made many marches and counter marches. General Molitor followed all his movements, and having learnt, that on the 27th he had taken position in the steep mountains of Campilla de Arenas, and had resolved to defend himself there, he determined to march against him. Not being able to draw subsistence, except from Grenada, which was occupied by Zayas, he dispatched on the 27th, General Ordonneau, with five battalions and a regiment of cavalry, against that city. General Zayas retired at his approach, and agreed to leave there a battalion until our arrival, to maintain tranquillity; and when our troops appeared, his battalion joined them with cries of Vive le Roi.—The different detachments left by General Molitor on the line of communication, and that which he had moved forward to Grenada, had reduced his force to 14 battalions. The enemy had more than double this force, and among his troops were many veterans; but Count Molitor, full of confidence in the intrepidity of his men, assembled the whole on the morning of the 28th at Montelegicar. After an hour's march, General Molitor encountered a reconnoitring party of 150 horse, who, stationed on an eminence, fired at the head of the column. Captain Lauferna, of the 20th Chasseurs, who commanded his escort, fell immediately on the enemys and cut them in pieces. A Lieut.-Colonel, three officers, and ten men, remained pierced with wounds on the field of battle. We made fifteen prisoners, and shortly after thirty other cavaliers, as well mounted as officers, came and surrendered. The march of the columns was made with such accord, that they arrived and commenced the attack at the same time. The infantry of Ballesteros crowned all the heights, and his reserve immediately advanced to turn the right of General Loverdo. But this General had taken his measures. A battalion of voltigeurs, supported by the 1st and 11th line, in close column, drove back the left of the enemy with considerable loss, and occupied the position of Las Albuncles. At the same time General Bunnemains, with the 4th and 8th light, attacked, with great success, the mountains which command Campillo. On the left, where Count Molitor was stationed, the enemy endeavoured to defend the approaches to Campillo; but General St. Chamans, at the head of the 4th and 20th Chasseurs, made several brilliant charges, sabred and overthrew all who opposed him, and our troops entered Campillo amid the ringing of the bells and the acclamations of the inhabitants, who, under the fire of the enemy, came to point out the bye-ways by which we might attack and cut him off. The enemy, repulsed from Campillo, fled in disorder in the direction of Cambil, but, obliged to pass under the fire of the division of Loverdo.

"The fire was extremely brisk at all points, but principally on the part of the Revolutionary troops, who had the advantage of occupying the heights. On the side where the division Loverdo was posted, the enemy, after being broken, made great exertions to form again. It was then that the battalions of that division executed with intrepidity several charges with the bayonet, destroyed the greater part of the infantry regiments of Arragon and Valencia, and took their colours. All the positions were successively carried. The combat lasted till night put an end to the pursuit. The enemy only escaped being annihilated in consequence of the mountains saving them from the action of our cavalry. They fled in disorder as far as Cambil and beyond it, after having lost in the rocks from 400 to 500 killed and wounded, and 200 prisoners, of whom 20 are officers. On our part we have lost 14 killed, of whom two are officers, and had 40 wounded."

[The Bulletin then proceeds to enumerate the Officers who distinguished themselves on the occasion.]

"The defeat of the 28th has so discouraged the enemy, that 1,500 of them deserted on the night of the 29th. General Zayas has been separated from Ballestros; the latter has plunged into the mountains, and occupied Quesada, Pazo, Alcon, and Cazorla. He has in front of him General Foissac Latour, who has pushed forward with all his troops at Baeza and Villa-Carito; and, as it is possible that he may endeavour to return into the kingdom of Murcia, Count Loverdo has retained with his division to Guadix, to observe his movements. Before the affair of the 28th, General Ballesteros had sent flags of truce with propositions, which were not accepted. There is every reason to believe at this moment he has sent anew to treat of submission to his Catholic Majesty.

"Major-General Count GUILLEMINOT.

"Head-quarters, Manzanares, 6th August, 1823."

BEFORE ST. SEBASTIAN, AUGUST 3.—Besieging artillery is arriving continually at Renani; 156 pieces of ordnance are about to invest the fortress of Pampelona, and will be followed by 24 companies of artillery. They speak of the assembly of 10,000 men under the walls of Pamplona, in order to commence operations. It is thought that the trenches will open towards the middle of September. Many copies of the capitulation of Ferral have been thrown into the fort of St. Sebastian, by order of the Lieut.-General commanding the blockade. A young soldier was appointed to place these papers on the ramparts. Having attached them to the end of a pole, he advanced, favoured by the night, to the foot of the glacis, and returned to his post without being perceived. He was distant forty paces only from the covered way.

SANTA MARTI, AUG 6.—BLOCKADE OF BARCELONA.—Twelve hundred infantry, 300 cavalry, and two pieces of cannon were sufficient to repulse the sortie on the 30th. Milans and Llobera are in a dangerous situation. Manso has submitted with about 2 or 3000 men, and going to give up Tarragona. This news, which I believe to be true, still wants confirmation.

VILLA FRANCA, AUGUST 2.—General Curial writes, that on the 30th day of July, at four o'clock in the morning, the enemy presented himself on the extreme left of the line of investment of Barcelona, with 5000 men, six pieces of cannon, and 80 horses. These forces were directed on St. Martt. Their right was supported by six gun-boats. A brisk fusillade took place from the sea-shore to the village of Clot. The 6th light regiment, seconded by the 23d Chasseurs, and two pieces of light artillery, attacked the enemy with their accustomed bravery. He was forced to make a retrograde movement on several points. Two pieces of artillery, under the orders of Lieutenant Carnal, advanced by the road of the shore within half-gun shot, and fired with constant success on the enemy's artillery and cavalry, and on the gun-boats. The firing was very brisk at Clot. General Curial tells me that he led a battalion of the 19th, which he caused to be preceded by his chosen companies. The enemy being thus taken in flank, was forced to give out on this point. Our soldiers pursued him to the very walls of the citadel. The battle lasted several hours; the enemy, repulsed with the greatest disorder, had 12 or 15 killed, and 100 wounded.—Our loss was four killed and 12 wounded.—According to all accounts, Mina, whose health is still bad, is yet at Barcelona. The investment of that fortress by land is complete. Milans and Llobera, who were moving rapidly by Mont Blanc towards Santa Colonna and the Col de Santa Christana, appear to have directed their march towards Tarragona, on being informed of ours on Igualda and Villa Franca. It is affirmed that a great desertion has taken place among the militia.

By the Prince Regent packet, a mail has arrived from the Brazils, communicating very important intelligence. The advices from Bahia reach down to the 24th of June, and it appears by them that the garrison of that place were suffering so much from the want of provisions, that preparations were making for the embarkation of the troops to Lisbon. General Madeira had fixed the 25th of June for their departure. It was imagined that the Brazilians would not allow him to take the squadron with him, but that it would be destined for the service of the Emperor.

DRESDEN, JULY 25.—An important investigation is carrying on in the University of Leipsig; a kind of pilgrimage made here by some students from Halle, excited suspicions of secret associations, and led to energetic measures; since that time an innkeeper of Stetteritz struck a Polish Gentleman, who was a student at Leipsig. A hundred students (only a small part of those who are at Leipsig) then went to Stetteritz, forced their way into the inn, which was barricadord, tore the billiard-table, broke the looking-glasses, and, in short, destroyed all the furniture; so that the damage is estimated at 500 crowns.

Buenos Ayres papers to the 6th of May have arrived, they contain the message of the Government of that place to the Hall of Representatives. After congratulating the Hall, upon having preserved peace with all the American Continent, it says:—"The emancipation of Brazil has completed the independence of our Continent; but the policy which, unfortunately, appears to sway the Cabinet of Rio Janeiro, in respect to Montevideo, places obstacles in the way of that good and cordial friendship which ought to exist between nations, which, while they are neighbours, are equally engaged in the cause of their independence. An Envoy is ready to proceed to the coast of Brazil, with a view of establishing relations between both Governments, and of securing the integrity of the territory of our provinces, adopting such means as become just and truly civilised nations, at all events, the liberty of the province of Montevideo, no less from foreign violence than from domestic tyranny, will be always an object of preferable attention; but it will demand at the same time great prudence and circumspection." The Mission then developes in a perspicuous manner the increasing internal prosperity of that rising State.

A letter from Malta, dated June 24, says—"His Majesty the King of the Two Sicilies, by a Royal Decree, issued at Vienna on the 23d ult. and published at Naples on the 7th instant, has extended the provisions of his former Decree of the 28th of February last, prohibiting the importation of the manufactured cotton yarn of Malta, to all kinds of manufactured cotton yarn, from whatever country it may be imported."

CARLSRUHE, JULY 27.—Our Gazette contains an article, dated Augsburg, to the following effect:—"Letters which we receive from all quarters inform us, that the English Cabinet has made important overtures to those of Copenhagen and Stockholm. Denmark, it is said, enters entirely into the English policy. Sweden has not yet given a decided answer to the Note of the British Minister; but the Council of State has met several times to discuss his proposals, and the Swedish Minister for Foreign Affairs has had conferences with the English Ambassador, the object of which is to draw still closer the bonds which unite the two countries.—On the other hand, a letter from Vienna gives us to understand that the East will shortly be the theatre of important events, as the Cabinet of St. Petersburgh at length perceives that the intervention of the English and Austrian Ministers at Constantinople has produced no satisfactory result. A report has already been circulated at Vienna, that the Porte has withdrawn the forces which it had assembled in Thessaly, to send them to the Banks of the Danube."

BERLIN, AUG. 5.—On the 2d his Majesty came from Toplitz, his birth-day being on the 3d, which he kept with his family in the Pfaunerinsel (Isle of Peacocks). The greatest sensation has been excited on this day, which is so dear to all Prussians, by the publication of the Bulletin of the Law, No. 13, which contains the following general law respecting the Provincial Assemblies:—"We, Frederick William, &c. to give our faithful subjects a new and desirable pledge of paternal favour and confidence have resolved to introduce Representative Assemblies into the Monarchy, and to that end to establish Provincial Assemblies in the spirit of the ancient German Constitution, such as the peculiar situation of the country and the spirit of the times require. A Committee, of which his Royal Highness the Crown Prince is President, has been appointed by his Majesty to prepare this measure, and consult upon it with experienced men from each province."

On the Report of this Committee, his Majesty gave the following, dated the 5th of June:—"I. Provincial Assemblies shall be called into action. II. Landed property is the basis of the Representation. III. The provincial estates are the legal organ of the various subordinate estates in each province.—According to the decision, his Majesty will—1. Cause to be put to them for their discussion, the project of laws, which shall concern the province only. 2. So long as there are no General Assemblies of the States, send to them for discussion such general projets of laws as relate to changes in the rights of persons and property, and to the taxes. 3. Receive from the Provincial Assemblies petitions and remonstrances which concern the special welfare and interest of the province, or a part of it; examine them, and decide upon them. 4. Leave it to them to decide on the commercial affairs of the province, with the reserve of his Majesty's approbation."

To the present law, which, however, is not applicable to Neufchatel and Vallingen, it is said will be added a special law for each province. Should his Majesty think that changes in these special laws will be useful or beneficial, he will not make them without the concurrence of the Provincial Assemblies. When a convocation of the general estates of the kingdom will be necessary, and how it shall then proceed for the provincial estates, remains for his Majesty, in his paternal care, to determine. The special laws, all dated July 1, relate principally to the provincial estates. 1. For the March of Brandenburgh and the Marquisate of Lower Lusatia. 2. Those of the Kingdom of Prussia, comprising (a) East Prussia, (b) Lithuania, (c) West Prussia, (d) Pomerania and Rugen.—The estates of the first province to meet at Berlin; of the second, at Konigsburg and Dantzic, alternately; and of the third at Holstein.—The special laws contain detailed regulations respecting the eligibility of the deputies, the right of election, the exercise of the right of estates, the convocation and the duration of the provincial assemblies, the communal assemblies, the assemblies of circles, &c.

LEGHORN, JULY 20.—Lord Byron arrived here on the 22d, and sailed the next day for Zante, on board the English brig Hercules, Captain Scott. He will immediately go to the Peloponnesus. He has several Greeks with him, and some English Officers, as well as ammunition, and 70,000 piastres for the Greeks. The King of Naples is expected here to-morrow, to embark on board the Neapolitan squadron, which is waiting to convey him home.

A vessel arrived from Bilboa brings intelligence, that by a recent order from Madrid, that port had been restored to the freedom of trade which existed previous to the establishment of the Constitutional Government.

Accounts from Constantinople, dated July 10, state that 15 Ipsarit armed vessels, accompanied by above 100 barks, appeared in the Bay of Adramit and Sandarly, landed some thousand men near the latter place, plundered the town, murdered the greater part of the inhabitants, and carried a great number of them into slavery; among whom was the Harem of Cara-Osman Oglou. After this they plundered and burnt all the villages and farms in the neighbourhood, and after a short action with some troops that were sent against them too late, and in which they lost about 30 men, returned to their ships laden with booty. So unexpected an attack filled the whole country with terror and with boundless rage. The consequence was, that in the town of Pergamo, which is not far from Sandarly, the Turkish inhabitants, united with some Turkish soldiers, fell on the Greek population; and notwithstanding all the exertions of the Cadi, a venerable old man, who is said to have received 18 wounds on this occasion, a dreadful massacre took place, in which about 1000 were killed.

The accounts from Salonichi are equally afflicting. Abdallah Pacha had sent twelve thousand men to the Gulf of Volo, to quell the insurrection that had broken out there. The Insurgents fled to Trikeri, but the Turks laid waste 24 of the Greek villages, on which occasion, according to the Spectateur Oriental of the 4th July, 3000 Greeks perished. The women and children were carried into slavery.

IRELAND.

On Sunday evening as Margaret M'Kales, of Knocknakill, in the parish of Turlough, was digging potatoes in her own field, an altercation arose between her and a man named William Hopkins of that place, who several times struck her with a spade about the body. The woman, we are informed, cried for mercy, and Hopkins is reported to have said that "he would not quit the place until he'd finish her." This purpose he unfortunately accomplished, and absconded forthwith. The circumstance of a woman digging potatoes on a Sunday, in the foregoing paragraph, may appear strange to distant readers, but the practice is very common, and is even considered perfectly harmless amongst us.—Mayo Con.

On Sunday last, when a number of persons of the Protestant party (who had been charged at last Londonderry Assizes with various offences, arising out of the unfortunate transactions which took place at Maghera on the 12th June last), with their witnesses, had arrived at Dungiven, under military escort, on their return to Maghera from said Assizes, a mob assembled about them, and showed the strongest disposition to create riot and to assault and make an attack on said persons. From the very great appearance of riot and disturbance manifested on this occasion, it became necessary for Mr. Donnelly to take the military party, who had come from Derry along with his own detachment, as a protection for the said persons over the mountains, on their way from Dungiven to Maghera. On Tuesday last, being a fair day at Dungiven, a serious riot took place. Several strangers with bludgeons were observed coming into the town in the evening, and about the hour of six o'clock a violent attack was made by said persons on some of the Special Constables. The riot and disturbance rose to such a height, that it required the utmost exertions of Major Gibson, the resident Magistrate, aided by the said Mr. Donnelly and the military detachment stationed there, to restore tranquillity—nor was it until the Riot Act had been read three times by the Magistrate, the people could be prevailed on to disperse. At one period of the riot, when stones were thrown at the Special Constables and military, some person in the crowd called, "Fire, fire"—upon which two of the soldiers levelled their muskets, one of whom fired, by which a woman was wounded, but not dangerously. Several persons on their way home were waylaid and beat. The two soldiers have, of necessity, been committed to gaol.—Belfast Commercial Chronicle.

Callaghan, a Dublin patrol, died on Tuesday evening, in consequence of having received the stab of a needle in the ball of his thumb, which festered. He would not submit to an operation in time, although advised by many medical gentlemen, and died of a lock jaw.

Andrew Sullivan, Patrick Hennessy, sen. Patrick Hennessy, jun. John Finn, and David Magner, were executed this day, (Saturday, the 9th inst.) at Gallows-green, for setting fire to the mills and dwelling-house of Charles Hennessy, near Castletown, in this county, on the night of the 24th of April last. They declared their innocence at the gallows, through the medium of the Rev. Justin F. M'Namara, within the hearing of the unhappy men, and in the presence of the Sub-Sheriff and the multitude, the following words:—"These men now about to die, have severally and individually directed me to say, what in their presence I now say, that though these died with respect for the laws of their country; yet, injustice to their own characters, they think themselves bound, as before God they are in their conscience enabled to do, that they are innocent of this single transaction for which they are about to suffer."—Sullivan, moreover, added that Sheehan, who had been respited, was not at the burning of Hennessy's mills. The unhappy men were soon after launched into eternity. They died with little pain or struggle.—Cork Pape.

On Wednesday morning, at two o'clock, one J. Hopkins, Esq. of Cottage Terrace, Dublin, was discovered in his bed-chamber, actually in a blaze! It appears that the unfortunate gentleman had been reading in bed, and it is supposed that the candle had communicated with the sleeve of his shirt. He was found on the floor scorched in a terrible manner; and although medical aid was instantly procured, all efforts to save his life proved unavailing—he lingered till Wednesday, about two o'clock, when he expired.

ASSIZES.

GLOUCESTER.—John Poole was indicted for stealing in the dwelling-house of Mr. Isaac Brain, a shopkeeper, at Bitton, in this county, silver plate of the value of 12l. and 20l. in silver monies.—Harriet Hall, aged 16 years of age, stated that she lived with the prosecutor. On about 16 years of age, stated that she lived with the prosecutor. On Sunday, the 7th of October, two men entered her master's house, and one of them, named Britain, asked her for tobacco; she told him that her master did not sell tobacco on a Sunday; the other man, who was disguised by wearing a mask which entirely covered his face, she was positive was the prisoner at the bar. On witness refusing to supply Britain with tobacco, he seized her by the throat, and having nearly choaked her, threw her upon her back, and the prisoner ran up stairs and remained there about a quarter of an hour, during which time Britain stood guard over her, and attempted to force her into a coal cellar. On the prisoner coming down stairs Britain put her apron over her eyes, and therefore she did not see whether he had any property. In a few minutes after the prisoner left the house; Britain went away, and witness discovered that the boxes and trunks had been broken open, and their contents carried off.—George Hoskins, a constable, stated, that he was informed of the robbery on the day it took place, and on the following day the last witness informed him that Poole was the man who wore the mask. The reason Poole was not apprehended sooner was because the Magistrates wished to secure Britain first, and they knew that if Poole was taken Britain would never make his appearance. Britain had been convicted of another capital crime at the late Taunton assizes, and that was the reason of his not appearing to take his trial. Cross-examined.—Witness searched the prisoner's lodgings and found nothing.—This was the case for the prosecution.—For the defence—Sarah Hoskins was called, and she deposed, that on the Sunday afternoon in which the robbery was committed she passed by the prosecutor's house and saw the witness (Harriet Hall) crying at the door; witness asked her what was the matter, and she said her master's house had been robbed, and one of the men wore a mask. She said she knew the little one who held her and knocked her down, his name was Britain; but the big one, who went up stairs with a mask on, she did not know. On her cross-examination witness admitted that her husband and the prisoner had been both at Gloucester on some unpleasant business; they were both charged with the same offence.—Mr. Baron Bullock summed up the case, and the Jury found the prisoner Guilty—Death.

Smith v. Coxwell.—This was an action brought by Mr. Stafford Smith, a druggist, of Cheltenham, against Miss Ann Coxwell, daughter of the Rev. Mr. Coxwell, of Cheltenham, for a breach of promise of marriage. The lady was above twenty-one years of age, and their first interview took place in the plaintiff's shop, at Cheltenham, where the defendant called to make purchases of lavender-water, eau de Cologne, &c. After this interview she frequently called to see the plaintiff, and always made her purchases at his shop; and they occasionally met in private. On one occasion the plaintiff met the defendant in private in the kitchen of her father's house. The following letters, addressed by the young lady to the druggist, were read:—

"26th Jan. 1823.—Should Mr. S. feel the slightest wish to be acquainted with Miss A. C. if he will attend the next public ball, he will be introduced by Mr. Marshall, master of the ceremonies, to Miss A. C."

Such was the overture made by the defendant; but it was not allowed at Cheltenham, that a resident tradesman should be admitted to the public balls, and therefore the parties took opportunities to meet in private, and on the morning after an interview in the father's kitchen, the plaintiff received the following letter:—

"Feb. 4th.—I am just returned from an unpleasant walk, and after what I have heard I cannot resist the impulse of my wretched heart to write to my dearly beloved Strephon, and relieve the sorrow I am overwhelmed with. I am sorry, my dearest love, at the bare idea of your shedding tears on my account, it gives me a deep pang, as I would sacrifice my life for your happiness, if I could only have a five minutes interview with you uninterruptedly. Many says you will not meet me again, where you did last night, in private. When will you meet me at the Ells? When shall I have the pleasure of meeting my beloved again? Will you wear a lock of my hair if I send it, as it may remind you of me when absent, and I will wear a lock of your hair if you send it? It is nearly dark, and my fingers are cold by writing. Send me a long letter, my dearest dear. Yours, &c. ANN."

The following evidence was then called:—Mary Turner sworn—In January last I was a servant in the family of the Rev. Mr. Coxwell, at Cheltenham—I was sent by Miss Ann Coxwell, in January last, to Mr. Smith's shop, to pay for cleaning and filling a vinegaret. Mr. Smith refused to receive the money—he said Miss Coxwell was a very handsome young lady, and if he had twenty thousand pounds he would throw it at her feet. I told Miss Ann what the plaintiff said on my return, and she said he was a nice young man. I took this letter to Mr. Smith from Miss Coxwell (the first letter above) after Mr. Smith had written three letters to my young lady. I brought the three letters from the plaintiff to the defendant. She threw the first on the ground, and would not open it. I persuaded her to read it. She said it was very impertinent in Mr. Smith to write to her. When I took the note about the ball, the plaintiff said he hoped I would do what I could for him. I said that I would. He said, if Miss Ann would give him some pledge or assurance of her meeting him at the ball, he would engage me. I went back home, and my young lady gave me a ring to give him, as a pledge of her meeting him, and he was to return the ring to her at the ball. I told him my lady said he was a nice young man. He said he would change his name, give up business, hire servants, and buy a new carriage, if she would have him. She said she would have him if he would do all this before her mother discovered it—and if he did not, he must not expect to have her. She carried this (the second) letter to Mr. Smith from Miss Ann. He said Mr. Marshall would introduce him to Miss Ann at the ball, or to any other lady. I thought Mr. Marshall would not, because he was a tradesman. After I gave him the ring, he said he would not go to the ball; but he would rather meet her at Mr. Lovesay's at Charlton. When I took the second letter, I told him that my young lady said she could not be introduced to him, except at the ball. I heard that he was going to a tradesman's ball at Cheltenham—on that night he visited my young lady, he was dressed for the ball. Mr. Smith had previously asked me if my young lady would see him at her home—I said I thought not—he then persuaded me to let him into the kitchen that night; but I was not to let Miss C. know of his coming. I let him into the kitchen, and went up stairs, and told defendant she was wanted in the kitchen. She came down stairs, and expressed her surprise at seeing him there, and was afterwards angry with me, because I let him in. He told the defendant in the kitchen, that he would meet her at the ball—he would change his name, buy a carriage, hire servants, and marry her. She said, if he would do that, she would marry him. He gave me a shilling, and told me to come next night at eight o'clock, and he would give me some riband. He gave me three yards of pink riband. I took the ring with me when I took the first note to the plaintiff. This was after his last resolution, that he would not go to the ball. No, it was when he would go, and then he would not; but he would come to the house. No, I had not the ring when I took the first note—he said he would meet her at the ball, if she sent him a pledge.——(This witness, who was very adverse to the plaintiff, was repeatedly called to order by the Judge, who asked her if she took the ring at the time or after the first letter.)

Witness continued—I did not take the ring till after I delivered the note about the ball—I did receive the pink ribands—my young lady did not say on what occasion I was to wear it—nothing about the marriage—I told Mr. Smith he might visit my mistress again in two nights after—my mistress told me to say so—my mistress consented to my entreaty—on the second visit in the kitchen, I was present all the time, and Mr. Smith said he would change his name, and do all he had promised—she said she would marry him if he did so before her mother discovered it—I can't say how old Miss Ann Coxwell is, I never heard her say she was of that age she could do as she liked, and she had an independence and expectations also from her aunt Rogers—I was to live servant, the defendant said, with them when they married, and the marriage was to take place when Mr. Smith had changed his name and done the rest he had promised—nothing was said about Oxford, or travelling, or any of these visits. No time was fixed for marrying, but it was to be after all he had said was done—Mr. Smith asked Miss Coxwell, if she would have a miniature likeness of him—she said yes, if he would get one done—I have seen a gold chain round her neck—this was on a night that she was going to Lady Faulkner's ball—I recollect seeing nothing else, though I dressed her on that occasion—of this I am positive. The witness here said that she did not recollect her pointing to a pin that was on a cushion upon her toilet while dressing—I never gave these particulars to Mr. Smith—on the night of Mr. Marshall's ball, I, at the desire of Miss Ann, told the plaintiff he might visit her—he did visit her—I can't say what was said, except his promising to change his name, take a house in London, get a place under Government, hire servants, and buy a carriage—he said nothing about my having her wardrobe on her marriage—I never heard her say, if she was a servant, and had not sixpence, what she would do as regards the plaintiff—Miss C. and Mr. S. met four times in the kitchen—they were five minutes together the first time, ten minutes the second, an hour the third, and about ten minutes on the last occasion, when Mrs. Coxwell, the defendant's mother, came accidentally into the kitchen and saw Mr. Smith—I do not know where they stood when the mother came—Mrs. C. ordered the plaintiff to quit the house, and never show his face there again—on the night after this discovery, the defendant sent a note to plaintiff, stating she could not now have him, and she was glad he had not sacrificed any thing for her.

Witness in continuation.—This letter I now remember to have taken to the plaintiff a week after the discovery—it contained a lock of her hair—the plaintiff said, if I got him a lock of my mistress's hair, he would never mention her name again. Cross-examined—When I told him my young lady would not have him, he said he was glad of it, for he had made no sacrifice for her, and if he had she would have served him like that d——d Miss S——, and not have married him after all.

Re-examined by the Judge—I am still in the Rev. Mr. Coxwell's service.

John Green, livery servant to the Rev. Mr. Coxwell, sworn—I was present at one of the interviews of the plaintiff with the defendant, and at his dismission from the house—I cannot recollect what Miss Ann Coxwell said—I told Mr. Smith next day—I don't recollect—I told Mr. Garnett, the attorney, and my master, but I can't recollect what at this time. This witness prevaricated so grossly that he was committed by the Judge. Miss Ann Rogers, the aunt of the defendant, was called, but failed to prove any thing like a breach of promise of marriage.

Miss Mary Coxwell, the sister of the defendant, was called—She said she had conversed with her sister, the defendant, about Mr. Smith, and she told her that she would marry Mr. Smith provided he would change his name, give up his business, obtain a situation under government, take a mansion in town, buy a carriage, hire servants, and have plenty of money.

Mr. Justice Parke, in various parts of the trial, said that no foundation had been laid for the action, and this witness's evidence being closed, stated that he could not find in his notes any case to go to the Jury, as a conditional promise was no promise whatever. Mr. Ludlow, Mr. Twiss, and Mr. Cross argued that there was evidence to go to the Jury, who might infer from the letters read, and the tokens of love sent by the lady, that there had been a "forgone conclusion," or an actual promise of marriage. Mr. Justice Parke still remained of his former expressed opinion, and, after observing in strong terms upon the evidence of the servants, and expressing his surprise that the Rev. Gentleman should keep them in his service after they had been guilty of such impropriety, directed a nonsuit.

POLICE.

THAMES POLICE.—On Thursday Thomas H. Harris was charged with stabbing and cutting Mr. Wm. Appling. Mrs. Appling stated that herself, her husband, and child, went down the river in the Royal Sovereign steam-boat, on Tuesday.—The prisoner was also a passenger. Upon their return, when near Gravesend, the prisoner pushed a lad with a basket against Mr. Appling, and afterwards against the child; upon which the witness gave the prisoner a slap on the face. The prisoner went away, and in about ten minutes returned, and struck her husband twice. Several of the passengers deposed, that there was a scuffle between the prisoner and a boy on board, and that the prisoner pushed the boy against Mrs. Appling's child. In about ten minutes afterwards the prisoner accosted a Mr. Westwood, one of the passengers, and said, "Where is the man who insulted me?" and turning quickly round to Mr. Appling, stabbed him twice in the face with a broken knife, over the right eye, and on the side of his nose. Mr. Appling is confined to his bed, but hopes are entertained of his recovery. The prisoner was remanded.

MARLBOROUGH-STREET.—On Thursday, Mary Burns, the woman who has been some days in custody, charged with the murder of Mary Rowley, was brought before T. A. Roe, Esq. the Magistrate at this Office, for re-examination. The prisoner, who appeared in a state of the greatest agitation, with a child in her arms, being placed at the bar, Mr. Roe inquired what was the result of the Coroner's inquest? One of the Beadles of St. James's parish, in which the offence was charged, said, the verdict was—"That the deceased died of fever, caused by the blows given by Mary Burns." Mr. Roe said that this was a very indecisive sort of verdict, for although it tended to inculpate the prisoner either in murder or manslaughter, yet it was so indefinitely worded, that no proceedings could be taken upon it. She was remanded.

BOW-STREET.—On Wednesday the driver of the hackney-coach No. 51, appeared upon a summons to answer the complaint of a Gentleman. The defendant demanded five shillings as his regular fare from Vauxhall to Westminster, the fare being only two shillings. He was fined in the mitigated penalty of ten shillings.

One Kenny, an Irishman, was charged by his better half with intent to "murther her and knock her down." The Magistrate regretted the daily quarrels of man and wife, and asked Kenny what he had to say in his defence? to which the Hibernian replied, "Why, your Honour, this creetur is a very vixen, and, your Honour, I'm very awkwardly situated, being exposed and disposed, that is, your Worship, exposed in this office, and disposed to make it all up." But it appeared Mrs. Kenny was not so disposed, and poor Kenny was obliged to find sureties to keep the peace.

UNION HALL.—WEDNESDAY.—For some time past the officers of this establishment have been aware that a miscreant in the shape of a man has infested the Great Dover Road, leading from the Borough High-street to the Bricklayers' Arms in the Kent-road, and attacked several females in the most shameful manner; at length he fell into the hands of an officer, who conducted him before the Magistrates. He gave his name George Smith.—Mrs. Elizabeth Ann Roberts stated, that she was a resident in the family of Sir Francis Burdett, Bart. and lived at Barnet, the seat of Sir F. Burdett. Between four and five o'clock that afternoon, she was passing along the New Dover Road alone, when the prisoner attacked her in such a manner that she shuddered. He pursued her some distance, making use of bad language; he continued his importunities for some time, when he thought proper to depart and attack another lady, but who, fainting, fell to the ground. The villain then made his escape, but was pursued, and eventually delivered over to the constable.—Thomas Woodham, Esq. stated that he was driving down the road in his gig, and saw the prisoner ill-using the lady alluded to by the last witness in a most horrible manner. Witness heard her cry out, "Oh, good God, do assist me." He jumped out of his chaise for the purpose of arresting the villain, who retreated into Kent-street, where witness came up to him and secured him. Many vagabonds came round him to rescue, and would have succeeded in their object, had not the officer come up and conveyed him to the cage. Witness never saw such conduct pursued to a female as that adopted by the prisoner. The Magistrate consigned the wretch to the tread mill for three months.

HATTON-GARDEN.—On Thursday, Sarah Hunter and J. Jones were put to the bar under the following charge. On Monday afternoon they went to the Vernon Arms, Pentonville, with two bundles, when the female said, she had just arrived by the coach from St. Alban's, and had never been in town before; and after having some refreshment, she requested to leave the bundles there. To this Mr. Cook, the landlord, agreed; and they both departed. In the evening Jones called, saying, the woman had procured a lodging in the City, and deputed him to fetch the bundles, which were given to him. The next morning, however, she applied for them, when she was told they were given to the man who came with her. On which she affected great surprize, saying he was a perfect stranger, whom she had met on the road, and had given sixpence to carry them for her, and as she had entrusted them to Mr. C. he must be responsible for the value, which was 37l. and enumerated several articles which they contained, besides apparel; among which were seven sovereigns and four silver spoons. Mr. C. however, persisted in not making any compensation, and she repaired to the Maidenhead at Battle Bridge, where the landlord, commiserating her story, recommended her to Mr. Colton, the constable, who invited her to breakfast with his family; during which he was sent for to take a charge, which proved to be no other than Mr. Jones, who, finding the bundles to contain merely dishclouts and other rubbish, had the honesty to return them to Mr. Cook, who caused him to be detained. The parties were of course much disconcerted at the sight of each other; and, instead of being strangers, it appeared they were old acquaintances, having slept together the preceding night. They were then brought to this office, where, after a long investigation, Sergeant Sellon expressed much regret, that as no crime had been actually committed, he could not detain them. In which regret we most sincerely join, as they are now turned loose on the public, whence, we fear, their next attempt may be more successful.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We have received a long letter from LADY ——, on the subject of MR. IRVING; and it appears that her defection from the Cross-street faction arises from having discovered that the preacher is a Tory. We honestly confess, from the tone of her Ladyship's politics, and the deep blue colouring which she has given to her letter, we do not much care about the good opinion of "her set,"—but as her Ladyship has thought proper to write harshly upon the crime we have committed in calling MR. IRVING, DR. SQUINTUM, we think it necessary to observe, that we quite agree with her Ladyship in thinking, that personal defects have nothing to do with principles or conduct—indeed it is a remark not sufficiently new to entitle her Ladyship to the merit of perfect originality—but we beg to observe, that we merely applied to MR. IRVING the nick-name of SQUINTUM at second-hand, it having been applied by all the contemporary writers of the late MR. WHITFIELD to that gentleman, whose visual organs were unfortunately defective in a similar degree.

MR. GLOVER, the new Archdeacon of the BISHOP OF NORWICH, has written to us, disavowing all RADICAL principles—denying that he had any hand in an Address to Parliament, which was rejected on account of its intemperate language—and calling upon us to retract all we have said about him, and to publish his letter. This last we will do next Sunday, together with such observations as may seem pithy, and a detail of such facts as may serve to illustrate the avowals and declarations which are contained in it.

We have received a letter from a MR. TURNBULL, North Bridge, Edinburgh, who is very angry at our remarks upon MR. IRVING, and declares he will never read our Paper again. To him, were we desirous of replying, we should make this answer—"TURNBULL, we are sorry you are displeased, but we must do our duty—you may think to "make us alter our tone by your anger, but you never will TURN BULL."

We are sorry not to be able to notice the subject alluded to by our numerous correspondents at KIDDERMINSTER. We never heard of the Paper in which the offensive paragraph appeared till they mentioned it, and in all probability never shall hear of it again. The trick of endeavouring to attract our notice, and thus get spoken of, has been too frequently played by the obscure radical prints to succeed now. We can assure our friends at KIDDERMINSTER, that they will suffer in no man's estimation by the scurrility of such opponents; but we regret that the rule we have established to ourselves, not to notice the publications which they conduct (and which are literally unknown and unnoticed in London) prevents our adopting a line of conduct which the loyal and respectable members of the JOHN BULL Club would otherwise be entitled to expect from us.

We have made the necessary enquiries about MISS L.—she is at that school. We can do no more in the affair, unless we were to communicate with MRS. L. personally. We have been told the disorder is not infectious—it may be contagious—and certainly a visit to the Hague is not likely to make the patient better.

The letter on the subject of Prison Discipline, which was put into the post near Finsbury-square on Tuesday, will meet with the most serious attention—it is only because we wish to give it every care, that we delay taking up the subject till next Sunday. We beg to thank our correspondent.

The letter about the Haymarket Theatre does not appear suited to a public paper—whatever the inconvenience or apparent neglect may be, we have no doubt the Manager will readily lend his aid to correct it, and as for the private scandal of a Green-room, we really cannot take upon ourselves to enter into its merits—we quite agree upon the one point, and confess that the joint support of the person in question is somewhat disgusting.

A correspondent, some fortnight or three weeks since, wished for the name of one of our friends whose views with respect to loyal associations coincide with his own. We believe there would be no objection to giving this information; and if our enquiring friend will favour us with "an address" which will find him, we will make his wishes known to our other friend, and thus bring them together.

In answer to QUERIST, we say—MABERLY, SIR CLAUDIUS HUNTER, LORD NUGENT, SIR GERARD NOEL, MR. FAWKES, the DUKE OF GLOUCESTER, ALDERMAN WOOD, MR. PARKINS, DR. EADY, MR. KEAN, the REV. MR. SAYNG, MR. HUGHES BALL, MR. CHRISTOPHER HUTCHINSON, and MR. CLARENCE of Covent Garden Theatre—and we will trouble him to find any more shrinking.

MR. ROGERS informs us that MR. IRVING'S preaching is said, in consequence of the manner in which he thumps his pulpit, frequently to remind his hearers of KNOX!

The letter respecting LORD ELDON appeared in the last number of our Wednesday's Evening Paper, the British Mercury, which will give it an extensive circulation.

Our other friends must stand over.

Barrymore, being engaged for a limited number of nights, will perform in the favourite Bagatelle of Wlening a Husband; or, Seven's the Main. After which, a new Swiss Divertisement, in which will be introduced a Comic Dance by the celebrated Flexmore. To conclude with a new farcical Burletta, called, Black and White; or, Which is Thomas?

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, AUGUST 17.

IT is quite painful to be obliged to occupy one's time, or that of our readers, by an account of such super-eminent Tom-foolery, as that which SIR GERARD NOEL and a man of the name of TUCKER thought fit to play off at the Tavern in Great Queen-street on Thursday last.

These persons thought proper to convene a meeting, to take into consideration the claims of MRS. SERRES to be a Princess of England, and a Princess of Poland, and to raise a subscription to make her one or the other, or both, for all we know. Wwe remember a great laugh was raised at an account which appeared in the papers of the first march of three regiments of infantry to put a stop to the yellow fever which had broken out somewhere in Spain, but we think the notion of quelling an epidemic disease by force of arms is not so truly absurd as that of making MRS. SERRES a Princess by subscription.

The miserable appearance of poor old NOEL in the House of Commons, the unintelligible stuff the poor creature talked, and the deplorable exhibition he made when he brought forward MRS. SERRES's case, checked in a great degree the almost irresistible temptation to laugh at his egregious folly and credulity, and when MR. PEEL put the whole affair to rest, (as one would have thought for ever)—one really felt glad that it was over, and the poor victim of her cunning relieved from the extremely unpleasant position in which he had been induced to expose himself—little did we think that our pity would so soon be turned to disgust, or that the stupidity which could induce one exhibition of the sort would assume the character of obstinate pertinacity, after all belief in the woman's claims must entirely have vanished.

The meeting which these infatuated people called—(and for which even the Crown and Anchor room was refused)—was held at the Freemasons' Tavern, and consisted of about thirty shabby, dirty-looking fellows, exclusive of the gentlemen of the press and SIR BALAAM and his Ass—we mean SIR GERARD NOEL and DOCTOR TUCKER, who, it must be confessed, appeared a little abashed at the thin and dingy appearance of the assembly.

SIR BALAAM opened the business of the day by telling the people that the Princess's claim had been submitted to the consideration of the Commons House of Parliament—"her Royalty had been denied, but no proofs had been set up to invalidate the claim"—he drew a parallel between her Highness's case and that of the late QUEEN—talked of his opposition to the Bill of Pains and Penalties, and surmised, moreover, (which we must take leave to doubt) that if he had been bred a lawyer he should have been an eloquent man. After a few observations, however, he referred the company to his Ass-essor, DR. TUCKER, who thereupon began like the other Ass to speak for his master, and never certainly did man speak more Assishly.

He said if he did not make out MRS. SERRES's claims he would blow his brains out. Perhaps he meant shoot himself through the head. He declared that every branch of the Royal Family knew she was a Princess—though LORD SIDMOUTH and MR. PEEL had stigmatized her as an impostor. Moreover, the said Doctor observed, that the late DUKE OF KENT called her cousin; and moreover he knew she was a Princess Royal, because, by a day rule which came from her cousin's bench, she was recognized as Princess of Cumberland. This day-rule of the Clerk of the King's Bench certainly is a staggering document. The Doctor, who is her Highness's legal adviser, then observed, that while men were hanged every day for forging one pound notes, it was very hard that her Highness was not executed for having committed forgeries upon the Government to the amount of fifteen thousand pounds—evidently forgetting that, owing to the incredulity of the Government itself the crime was not complete, inasmuch as she had not obtained the money, and was, therefore, unfortunately not in a state to be hanged, as he appeared to wish. The Ass proceeded at great length to observe, that the DUKE OF SUSSEX had recognized her Highness, and that she was in a direct line for the Crown, and that she was undoubtedly the true and genuine daughter of the DUKE OF CUMBERLAND, and so on.

Upon this, MR. SHERIFF PARKINS, who knows a thing or two, observed, that he believed no such thing; but added, that when SIR BALAAM'S ASS proved the fact to his satisfaction, he (that is, MR. SHERIFF PARKINS) would give her five thousand pounds.

MR. HUNT (who, it must be confessed, is one of the most active of the modern Whigs) was present, and praised the late QUEEN, and supported the object of the meeting. A decent-looking man here ventured to observe, that "morals ought to be considered in such subscriptions, and that more deserving objects of charity might be found;" upon which, at the word MORALS—and we believe VIRTUE was incautiously used—the hubbub was tremendous, and cries of "Shame, shame," resounded from the lips of those who had just cheered the vituperations of the Royal Family which fell from MESSRS. HUNT and PARKINS.

SIR BALAAM informed the company that, in addition to the testimonials of HIS MAJESTY GEORGE THE THIRD—now dead, in favour of the Princess, he held in his hand those of the DUKE OF KENT, deceased—the EARL OF WARWICK, now no more—MR. ATTORNEY-GENERAL DUNNING, dead—and the late DR. WILMOT, he knew that the late MR. NUGENT BELL, (whose name never was mentioned during his life time,) had a perfect conviction of the justice of her claims—to which the Ass added, that she was recognized at the Mansion House by SIR WATKIN LEWES, defunct—and that the gate-keepers at the Park had let her through, and that the Clerk of the Rules of the prison called her princess, and that she paid no taxes! and that to a dead certainty, she was bond fide a princess.

SIR BALAAM subscribed £20—HUNT, £5, (this latter person put down his name for £100 to the Spanish subscription, but refused to pay it in,) and PARKINS £5. SIR BALAAM'S familiar, the Doctor, was not such an Ass as to subscribe any thing—but SIR BALAAM, not satisfied with the absurdity of the affair as it stood, volunteered a speech about himself; conceive the poor man saying this:—

"I have no doubt of this matter's success because every-"thing I take in hand succeeds—I was engaged once, Gen-"tlemen, in a large banking concern, but it failed"—(shouts of mirth)—"aye, but all the debts were paid"—(OH, OH!)—"Gentlemen, I once raised a regiment—I defeated the Bill of "Pains and Penalties against the QUEEN"—(Indeed!)—"I "did, Gentlemen, and the thanks of all Mary-le-bone were "voted me at Cole's coach-house, in Portland-street, which vote "I have brought with me, and I hope you will allow me to "read it"—(oh, certainly)—Here SIR BALAAM read—actually read—a long string of flummery praises upon his noble, excellent, wise, and intrepid conduct—after which he said in addition, "Gentlemen, I am poor myself, but my son "is a peer, Gentlemen, and has five-and-twenty thousand "pounds per annum, Gentlemen."

Here the Ass whispered SIR BALAAM, that the people were going away without subscribing any thing. "Ah—indeed—said SIR BALAAM—that's worth thinking about?"—The sound was heard, and the meeting dissolved,

"Like the baseless fabric of a vision," leaving SIR BALAAM and his Ass behind—and so far as this part of the affair goes we are inclined to laugh as heartily as the unwashed artisans did who attended the meeting.

It really seems to require no further serious consideration, for in addition—were they necessary—to the deciding facts stated by MR. PEEL in Parliament, a reference to the columns of this paper will furnish facts and circumstances which must put the question of the unfortunate woman's claims at rest for ever.

We shall resume the subject should it again be pressed upon public attention, but for the present we think it is in the most safe and suitable possible keeping. A cause supported by the intellect of SIR GERARD NOEL—the industry of DR. TUCKER—the virtue and moderation of MR. HUNT, and the philanthropy and exactitude of MR. X.X.X. SHERIFF PARKINS, need only to be spoken of to be respected.

THERE is nothing so truly farcical as matter of fact—truth and nature beat fancy and fiction hollow—no wag who wished to ridicule the cause of Spain, and render the whole affair contemptible, could have succeeded half so well as the author of the following "interesting" letter, which appeared in the CHRONICLE of yesterday—it is worth one of BERNAL's eyes:

"VIGO, AUG. 2, 1823.—I left this place about the last of July, along with SIR ROBERT, and arrived in Corunna, after a pleasant journey of five days. When I had been there a week, I attached myself along with Lieut. WILKINSON and Capt. MATHERS, to the Foreign Legion forming there, commanded by a French Count. We were under arms all night of the 13th, expecting every moment to receive orders for marching next day. SIR ROBERT received the Decree of the Cortes, appointing him Lieut.-General of the Province, and giving him power to raise a foreign corps of 10,000 men; he immediately sent for us three, and told us he would commission us to raise men, and that he had hired a vessel for us. MATHERS to England, WILKINSON to Ireland, and I to Scotland. We were to draw upon the London Committee for the expence. However, in the afternoon he changed his mind, as he was afraid the Committee would not pay the expences. WILKINSON, however, was sent to Ireland, where I wish to God he may succeed in getting men. Capt. MATHERS and I were just sat down to dinner after seeing him off, when we were roused by the fire of musketry outside of the town; I caught hold of a sword which was in the house, and went out with the intention of informing SIR ROBERT; but I met him galloping to the field, whence I followed him; he was the first General officer in the field of action; General QUIROGA and the Governor soon followed. MATHERS and I placed ourselves at the head of the Foreign Legion, which was just marching on the field when we got there.—The following are the regiments belonging to the enemy before Corunna:—

Infantry.	Cavalry.
1 Legion	1 Regiment Hussars
15 Infantry	1 Legion Dragoons
22 Do.	Artillery.
37 Do.	8 Pieces of Light Calibre
38 Do.	In all 4,500 men.

"They in the first place attacked the outposts, drove them in, and then attempted to gain possession of the heights, which they did after a severe conflict well maintained by the Spaniards. The enemy was four times our number, so it was impossible to keep our ground. The Corunna Volunteers fought well. The enemy lost 700 men killed and wounded; and we lost 100 killed and wounded; among ours killed was a Spanish Officer, a brave man. COL. LIGHT, who came from England with SIR ROBERT WILSON, was commanding the advanced troop of the Spaniards, encouraging them by his brave conduct, and length was obliged to retreat, and when endeavouring to get in here within the gates a musket ball went through his right thigh; he fell just at my side. I carried him off the field to the Consul house, where I got a surgeon for him. I was just returning back to the field, when I met them carrying SIR ROBERT WILSON off also. He was wounded in the left thigh. He shut the gates against the enemy himself. The inhabitants were in a deplorable state about him, crying 'Oh! the Angel, the Angel, our Saviour is killed.' He, however, was shouting 'Viva la liberta.' His wound is not half so bad as Col. LIGHT'S. The latter has been in 45 actions, and never was wounded till now. I was at the out-works the rest of that day and the next. On the 12th SIR ROBERT sent for me, and told me he was very well pleased with my conduct in the action, that I was to be Lieutenant, and if he would to-morrow, he would make out my papers. He has done so, and I have got my commission as Lieutenant. The enemy are erecting batteries on the heights, but have not fired a great gun into town. The enemy's sharp-shooters keep still firing into batteries and out-works, which we always repay with interest. A party of our soldiers made a sortie two nights before I came away, burned the houses the enemy were in, went into the garden, brought so many vegetables into the town, that a basket-full was selling for one halfpenny next day. SIR ROBERT embarked for Vigo on the 21st. He requested I would go along with him. We were in Vigo in 22 hours, after sailing 150 miles. We could not take poor LIGHT, he was so ill with his wound. I was very sorry to leave him behind, he has been my friend and companion since the first moment I saw him; he is a gentleman, a brave soldier, and a man of learning. When we came into the harbour of Vigo we saw the Royal George Steam Packet, into which we got SIR ROBERT, as we were afraid that night of MORILLO, but he came ashore next day. SIR JOHN DOYLE asked me to dinner on board the packet, and never ate I at so splendid a one. Forty persons were at dinner, and in the afternoon a number of the most respectable ladies in Vigo came to keep us company. The soldiers and inhabitants shout death to MORILLO, and success to WILSON. I will be in Scotland in two or three months. Give my compliments to all friends who may inquire. Keep your mind quite easy, for I am quite well. I am very happy as yet; affairs are not so bad as you appear to think. I suppose SIR ROBERT will go immediately to Cadiz, and I suppose I shall go with him."

This letter, (the writer of which is a native of Glasgow,) so completely eclipses all the famous despatches upon record, that it is worthy of preservation in the annals of Scotland.

The writer attaching himself, WILKINSON, and MATHERS to a foreign legion, forming under the command of a French Count, whose name he either does not know, or does not choose to try to spell. WILSON's sending for them, commissioning them to levy troops, and then changing his mind—the earnest wish the author expresses for WILKINSON's success in getting men in Ireland—the pathetic description of his having just sat down to dinner—the "catching hold of a sword" with the intention of informing SIR ROBERT of what, (considering the Corporal has ears as well and as long as his officers,) he must have perfectly known at the same moment, are all beautiful and animated touches of nature hardly to be surpassed.

The fact of the enemy having, in the first place, attacked the outposts, though a novelty to the writer, does not appear sufficiently important or extraordinary to demand a particular recital, but to say they "attempted to gain the heights" is an extraordinary mode of describing the fact that they "did gain the heights," which might have been stated in fewer words with equal effect.

The pathetic description of CAPTAIN LIGHT'S wound, who could get "his horse within the gates," ought to be a warning to all gallant adventurers in the cause, to suit their cattle to their circumstances, and not mount nags of too large a size to squeeze through door ways in cases of emergency.—It appears that WILSON himself "shut out the enemy," a very wise measure indeed, and prudent withal. Upon the nonsensical blasphemy which follows we make no comment, except as it may fix upon the Corporal the nick-name of ANGEL WILSON—however, as we anticipated, his wound is not half so bad as COLONEL LIGHT'S. It seems that the Ass who served the writer the same trick we foresee he will play LORD NUGENT—he made him a Lieutenant—he has got his commission. We remember a money-lender confessing on an examination before the Commissioners of Bankrupts, that he had discounted six thousand pounds worth of bills for a man who shall be nameless—"What did you get for your money?"—"His Lordship's own bills, I have them now!"—(great laughter)—Of what profession are you now Sir?"—"A money-lender"—(shouts of merriment).

Commissioner—A money-lender!—bless my soul!

We certainly do not mean to draw any comparison between the real value of the Lord's bills and the Lieutenant's Comssed, but it is curious to see how strangely some men are ngulged, and how easily they are satisfied.

The description of the sortie is, however, the best of the ole affair. "The troops went into the garden, and brought so many vegetables into the town that a basket-full was selling for a halfpenny the next day."
Here is a sortie for you! We heard of this sortie before, it never till we read this letter, ascertained its real object its complete success. Conceive what ecstasies the ANGEL ust have been in when a despatch was furnished him of this ort:—
"EXCELLENT SIR,—I have the honour to inform your Excellency, that last night after dark, I, together with the gallant and undaunted troops under my command, burning with ardour in the glorious cause for which we are all prepared to die, sallied forth and proceeded along the high road until we thought we were quite unobserved, when, halting for a few minutes, to reconnoitre, we perceived a large body of cabbages, flanked by two beds of cauliflowers, and a patch of large radishes, on our left, under cover of a spring gun and steel-trap—of which, however, due notice was given us by a painted board.
"Perceiving with my glass that several of the cauliflowers were running to seed, I thought no time was to be lost, and by a pre-concerted signal, a movement in echelon was made, by which we contrived to surround the whole garden, and capture its contents.
"The zeal with which the arduous duty of pulling up the plants, which had been set by a notorious royalist, was undertaken and performed, I cannot adequately describe. I received the greatest assistance from the officers recently arrived from Great Britain, and succeeded to the fullest extent, not only in clearing the garden, but in breaking the steel trap, and in bringing off the spring gun, which, with very little alteration, may be serviceably employed by our corps of artillery when it is raised.
"God preserve your Excellency many years. Your most confiderate, AMORGANTO UMBOGO.
"P.S. I have the honour to enclose a list of prisoners taken in the affair:—
" 6 dozen and three White Cabbages (large hearts)
" 48 Sprouts
" 19 Cauliflowers (excellent)
" 13 Do. (seedy and run)
" 1864 Onions, large
" 3741 Do. small, and Chalots
" 3 Pumpkins and 1 Gourd
" 85 Radishes
" 73 Turnip Do.
" 1 Spring-gun, 1 Rake, and 1 Dibble
" 1 Spade, damaged
" 1 Spud Handle (serviceable).
(Signed) "COUNT GARDENROBER,
" Dep. Adj.-Gen."

Such a despatch as this must indeed have been gratifying; and the fact that the booty was sold reasonably, marks the tender consideration of these heroes for their fellow sufferers when out of the field.

We cannot conclude our observations upon Sandy's "interesting" letter without remarking that the writer and the ANGEL himself admit that they were very much afraid of MORILLO; nor is it possible to quit the subject without referring to the account of SIR JOHN MILLEY DOYLE'S dinner—we are free to admit, to a young Scotsman transplanted to Vigo a steam packet ordinary might be the most splendid sight he ever beheld in the way of banquet, but blabbing the story of the ladies coming on board afterwards "to keep them company" is injudicious, and may injure the ROYAL GEORGE, inasmuch as it will bring down the hum-fums upon her and her gallant master to a certainty—the BETHEL UNION, which will not allow JACK a sweetheart on shore, will be outrageous at hearing that the VIGO ladies even go on board to "keep company" with him. We thank SANDY, however, for writing his letter—we thank his friends for letting it be printed, and we thank the CHRONICLE for aiding their laudable efforts to give so comical a production publicity.

A VERY disagreeable incident occurred to His Royal Highness the DUKE OF GLOUCESTER in travelling towards the Coast in France; his carriage was stopped by the gens d'armerie, who asked for his passport—(he called himself COUNT OF CONNAUGHT)—the simple WILLIAM had it not—his Royal Highness's ideas were in the coat pocket of his equerry, who was some miles in advance; the police were peremptory: when his Royal Highness attempted to make himself understood by them his efforts were melancholy, when he tried to play the dignified they became ludicrous—in short, all he did or tried to do was unavailing, and the scouts would accompany the carriage to the next post town, and accompany it they did.
This really was an unpleasant affair:—we do not mean to say that the FIELD MARSHAL was at all alarmed, but it was derogatory to his dignity, and what makes the matter really more galling, is the knowledge that a tip of half a dozen francs to the Thief takers would have set all to rights at once. The experiment of a trifling disbursement never entered his Royal Highness's head—his Royal Highness, however, is returned safe, in the full enjoyment of his health and talent.

WHERE is my LORD CASTLE-ROSSE?—We are really in want to know that nobody can give us any information, and since MR. WHITE, the Queen-square Magistrate, has kicked out the gentlemen of the press, we perhaps have less chance of hearing of his Lordship than ever.
No paper that we have seen, except the MORNING POST, has taken the least notice of this brilliant hoaxer, who, without the conditions circumstance of a good exterior to carry it off, we are told carried it on to an extraordinary length: cheating jockeys, or saddlers, or coffee-house keepers, is quite low when compared with his latter efforts, for to crown all his frolics, his Lordship having paid a visit to LORD HARRINGTON'S to endeavour to get into his regiment, actually dined at Harrington-house. LORD HARRINGTON, whatever dislike he might feel at having a man of my LORD CASTLE-ROSSE'S appearance in the Life Guards, having no objection to be civil and civil, and hospitable, which he proverbially is.
LORD CASTLE-ROSSE accepted the invitation, and met BRERSHAM and the DUKE OF LEINSTER; this last was somewhat an unfortunate rencontre—for the Duke, much to his credit, being a frequent resident in Ireland, happened to know a little more of his own country than many of his comrades, and in the course of conversation, having perhaps a little suspicion, he attacked his Lordship with sundry questions touching his father—the young Lord appeared at fault; and more observations upon his uncle absolutely put his "head in chancery," and the discovery that he never had been in Ireland at all—where "sure his Lordship was born" Duke and his brother-in-law soon discovered that his Lord-MORETON upon GUNTER, and who had ordered two roasted ducks for supper at an hotel—the "DUX opus" being my LORD HARRINGTON—who had the kindness—so like him—to allow the impostor to remain till he had "done his wine," conejectment. We have heard nothing of "my Lord" since, as we said before; but it may be no bad caution to people about to put them on their guard against a man so styling himself, whose address is quite mediocre, and whose appearance, even if he had been a Nobleman, would have excluded him from the 1st REGIMENT of LIFE GUARDS.

THE following account of MITCHAM Fair we copy from the MORNING POST of Thursday.

"MITCHAM FAIR.

"Yesterday being the second day of Mitcham Fair, the road leading thither presented a pleasingly animated scene. The crowd was not great, but the attendance was singularly respectable. RICHARDSON'S show, and a number of other booths were there, with the usual varieties of round-abouts, pony riding, and toy and refreshment stalls. But the most singular feature in the scene was furnished by a well-dressed individual, who went for the purpose of calling on the idlers, attracted by the amusements of the day, to withdraw their thoughts from them to think of eternity. The contrast thus furnished to the manner in which the majority of the crowd were occupied, can hardly be described. Several men of respectable appearance were with the preacher, and seemed to be known to him. These assisted in the devout exercises to which he desired to call others, and while the cries of "Walk in Ladies!"—"Show 'em up!"—"Nice gingerbread nuts," and similar exclamations, were heard severally and together, preceded or followed by bursts of laughter at the grimaces of a scaramouch or the antics of a monkey; on a sudden, to the low tone of pious supplication, succeeded the bold strains of religious harmony. The friends of the minister sung a hymn, the lines being given out, two at a time, by the preacher. Their performance, THOUGH IN SUCH A PLACE it was CALCULATED to excite mirth, was too good to be laughed at, and generally the crowd had more regard for decency than to sanction those indecorous interruptions which one or two foolish persons attempted.

"When the singing concluded, the individual who acted as Minister addressed those who had assembled round him with much clearness, and without any of that extravagance which might be expected from the eccentric zeal which led him there. He said 'the reception he might meet with was matter of uncertainty, but that his conscience would approve the effort which he was then making, in that moment which sooner or later must arrive, when he must account to his Creator for his conduct, was that of which he had no doubt; and he was confident that if those who were near him would withdraw but one hour from those which they had designed to spend in what he and his friends considered unprofitable, useless, and soul-murdering practices, to listen to the few and feeble remarks which he might offer, they would never regret such an appropriation of their time.' He then proceeded to his text and sermon in the midst of a holiday group who seemed really attentive. The Preacher was young, well-looking, and wholly free from those indications of vulgarity and ignorance which are usually the characteristics of an itinerant preacher. These advantages, though they do not prevent all interruption, caused the experiments of that kind to meet with an unfavourable reception, and several utterers of reprobate jokes, though unnoticed by the patient and enduring preacher, sneaked off ashamed of their speeches, which moved contempt where applause was expected. The majority of those who noticed him were unfriendly to outrage, and if they did not profit by the sermon, they had English feeling enough to admit that 'all was fair in fair time.'"

We differ very much from many of our correspondents upon the suppression of these suburban fairs. We are quite sure that the extinction of Brook-green Fair, West-end Fair, Parson's-green Fair, Barnes Fair (perhaps), and all those fairs which, from the rapid increase in size of the metropolis, have become equally vile and debased with Bartholomew Fair in Smithfield, having facilities for vice and immorality even beyond that, has been serviceable, and was in fact almost politically necessary to preserve the tranquillity of the vicinage of the metropolis—but we differ toto cœlo from the canting hypocrisy which would rob the poorer classes of their amusements. We loathe the stuff which is talked and written about the attention paid to Methodist preachers at a wake—if Harlequin were to mount the pulpit, the thing could not be more ridiculous. What earthly harm, what possible sin, what implied crime, can there be in the enjoyment of the sports of Mitcham Fair, or any other fair in England?—Was there any vice or sin in any of the fairs which have been suppressed which did not exist out of them, till thievery, and even murder, found their way into them from the very circumstance we have just noticed of their proximity to the metropolis?

Common sense, common sense, awaken from your slumber!—come into the world and shew yourself!—Why, in GOD'S name, and the appeal is sacred and serious—why are we to affect an unnatural puritanism?—Why are we to set ourselves up to despise, deride, or abhor the customs and manners of our ancestors?—Are they all condemned?—were they all vicious—all villainous—all profane, who for ages attended fairs and wakes, and danced and sang, and were merry and happy?

In the whole composition of the pure Protestant religion there is no such ingredient as gloom; the character of the religion is cheerfulness, and we cannot conceal our feelings towards the POST—not for its active co-operation with the canters who would subvert the state by sapping the foundations of the established Church—but for its passive admission into its columns of such detestable quackery as that which we have extracted in praise of the itinerant spouter at Mitcham.

There are times and seasons for all things. That our religious duties should occupy a portion of every day is most true; but that we should talk of nothing else, and think of nothing else than religion, is neither expected nor required; in fulfilling our moral duties, in our intercourse with this world (transitory as it is), it is absolutely necessary to our existence and well being, that much—very much of our time should be occupied in worldly pursuits; and although it is mighty fine, and sounds most marvellously pious, for saint-like ladies and gentlemen to sit upon their sofas and read sermons, and tell us that we are wicked, and vile, and base, because we presume to think of any thing but prayer and preaching, it is notorious and self-evident, as matter-of-fact incontrovertible and established, that if the brothers, husbands, sons and nephews of these very ladies and gentlemen, did not "labour in their vocations," and devote their minds to the business of this dirty and vile earth, they—the saint-like ladies and gentlemen—would have no sofas to sit upon, nor any opportunity to rail at the vices of their industrious neighbours.

The repentance which is produced on Mitcham Common in a fair day, after a good drink of strong ale, is not that which is likely to be really serviceable to MAN—it is at home in the closet—in the cabin, in the hut—in the sight of GOD—that the prayers, the promises, the professions of frail humanity are effectually made and graciously heard—it is in the solitude of the chamber, in the quietness of abstraction, that these daily duties are best performed—at the up-rising and the down lying hours the humble supplicate for the coming day's safety—the careful review of the past day's conduct, the repentance of foregone sin, the pious resolution of amendment—in these and in communion with his neighbour at public worship, upon the day wholly set apart for such devotion, the true, pure, and honest christian performs to the best of his finite power his duty to his Maker and his Redeemer—but when we find religion always upon the tongue, we doubt its presence in the heart, when the terms, nay, the very language of the holy scriptures, are adapted to the illustration of the most paltry acts of peddling exchange and groveling intercourse, when authorities form the sacred volume are quoted for the most insignificant acts and the commonest proceedings in life, we cannot choose but sneer at the pretension, and despise the affectation which taints and properties the conduct of those who make this outward shew.

Of this class, doubtless, were those mountebanks who preached at Mitcham fair—or they might have been of a class more innocent in their intentions, but not less mischievous in their acts—we mean those whose weakness of intellect exposes them to the artful machinations of designing talent, and who are made tools in the hands of directing knaves and, mole-like, carry on their undermining toils, themselves being entirely blind.

YESTERDAY was the anniversary of the birth of His Royal Highness the DUKE OF YORK, and it was hailed with every demonstration of affection and respect for his Royal Highness. The various steeples displayed their flags without, while their bells rang merry peals within, and at night the several tradesmen of his Royal Highness displayed their taste and their attachment to his person by a tasteful display of illumination.

The gaieties were not confined to any particular class, for there was a REGATTA on the Thames, which was extremely amusing, where a large assortment of ladies and gentlemen from Fleet-street, Whitechapel-road, Aldermanbury, Fenchurch-street, and Bishopsgate, were packed, under the direction of sundry Civic Officers, into the MARIA WOOD, a vessel known ordinarily to the cockneys as the "Navigation Barge," and closely resembling the pictorial representations of Noah's Ark. In this machine they proceeded towards Teddington, and ate their way back to Kew in high spirits at the elegance of the fête, notwithstanding the damp which it encountered by the fall of rain towards its close.

Some of the beaux wore white kerseymere breeches.

No accounts have yet been received from LORD NUGENT, who has left his seat in Buckinghamshire for Spain, to give his great personal weight to the Constitutional cause. His Lordship's abandonment of Lillies is not surprising, considering his hostility to the BOURBONS, but we are somewhat puzzled to know in what manner his Lordship will be enabled to assist the great struggle for liberty—perhaps with his counsel, because he is not a good figure for running away. Should he be successful in his undertakings, WILSON will doubtlessly bestow some mark of his favour upon his Lordship, similar to that which was bestowed upon the "true love" of BILLY TAYLOR—who "followed after"

"All by the name of RICHARD CARR."

Lest our readers should have forgotten w at the Captain did for that disguised lady who shot her sweetheart, we will quote the concluding stanza, with a hope that the Right Hon. LORD NUGENT, who has "followed after" Corporal WILSON, under his own proper name and title, may meet with a similar reward for his invaluable services.—

"When the Captain he came for to know it,
"He very much applauded the deed he had done;
"And he made him first Lieutenant
"Of the gallant Thunder Bomb."

THE DOYLES.

WE have received the following letter from a friend of "all the DOYLES," to which we give a ready insertion. It only shews, that when one has got a character for any peculiar virtue, or vice (if ye will), how immediately every word and action which one says or does, is perverted into a proof of the existence of that pre-supposed pre-disposition.

In our observations upon the stupid Journal kept in the Royal George steam-boat, we meant not the slightest attack upon the DOYLES. We merely wished to call public attention to a fact which, we honestly confess, we feel to be annoying—we mean that a man of high rank in our army—a Knight Commander of the Bath, and of half-a-dozen other orders, should, under any circumstances, be placed in the situation of Master of a Steam-packet. JOLLIFFE'S connexion with steamers we do not consider quite respectable or orthodox in a Clergyman, but still he is purely a private individual, and if he chooses to build bridges, sell planks, or run boats, we have nothing to do with it. But when a man, known to the world in a distinguished rank, decorated with orders, which, our correspondent tells us, are the fruits of his honourable exploits in arms, becomes the ostensible, visible, tangible Master of a steamer, landing his passengers, and going through all the eighteen manœuvres of the regular packet-boat managers, it vexes us—and we said so; and we say that the Journal, published by the MORNING POST, is the most absurd stuff ever circulated, and that the history of KING FERDINAND flying a kite is the most absurd part of even this absurd stuff. We are, however, happy to let the friend of "all the Doyles" make his statement—observing that when he says that we are mistaken in saying that SIR JOHN MILLEY DOYLE is a K.S.P., he betrays a disposition towards matter-of-factism we could hardly have expected from such a connexion—especially as we took the trouble to explain that those letters might be added to all the ST. A.'s and ST. B.'s, and K.'s and C.'s, which we found appended to SIR JOHN'S name, because he was, as he is—K. S. P., KNIGHT OF THE STEAM PACKET. But for our friend—it is his turn now; and he shall have it all his own way—even to the figure about Hercules!

TO JOHN BULL.

Wimbledon, Aug. 8, 1823.

SIR,—When I recollect the pleasure which I have received from several of your expositions of bad taste, in a spirit that reminds us of the old Grecian comedy, I lament, on your own account, the insertion of an article in your last number, which mixes up men and things that are as distinct as possible, and thus enables the criminal to escape from your castigation.

As I have observed that agreeably to the true manly spirit, you have acknowledged an error into which you had been misled, I trouble you with a few facts and observations, with a conviction that you will not refuse some attention to them.

The journal, or rather semi-demi log-book, of a voyage to Cadiz, &c. is such wretched trash, so destitute of every requisite quality, and yet so offensive in every way, as to deserve that the writer, if he become known, as I presume he will soon make himself, should swing in effigy on your lowest literary gibbet all the days of his life.

I dare say you recollect the numerous "journals," and "sketches," and "letters" that pestered the DUKE of WELLINGTON'S campaigns in the early period of his command in the Peninsula war; not a young ensign joined the army from school, (who could not in course see anything beyond the company of which he was in the rear,) who did not out-Cæsar Cæsar! Marvellous adventures and details of not only all that had been done, but all that LORD WELLINGTON must do in future, were transmitted home for publication, and as strangely, as in the case of the present journal, were published.

It was in vain that the Duke prohibited such disgraceful and injurious conduct; at length a CAPT. GRIFFITHS drew some excellent humourous sketches, in which he included a faithful portrait of a young officer reclined under a tree, with the title of, "Johnny Newcome writing an Account of the Campaign for The Star!" When it reached the great Commander, he at once said, "This will do more good than all the orders I can issue upon the subject." His Grace was right—and I trust you will accept the hint with regard to the JOHNNY NEWCOMES of WILSON.

That the eminent person whom you have so severely visited, could have no more to do with this "journal" than the DUKE OF WELLINGTON had with the others is quite obvious—if from nothing more than its highly injurious tendency towards himself, which, if it were not so impotent, would seem to have emanated from malice towards him rather than ignorance; perhaps both were united.

That you will be sorry to have treated the subject as you have done, is, I think, equally certain (for you have but rarely occasion to force your wit) when you find that your communication is erroneous in fact, as witness your K. S. P. and your estimation of the character of SIR JOHN MILLEY DOYLE, all whose honours are derived from hard, extensive, and approved service in the field.

You have alluded to his youth: I remember a very good answer of MR. PITT, when his was objected to him in Parliament, "that if it were a fault it was one sure to grow less every day." The authority of the Royal Military Calendar will shew, that however young a man, SIR J. M. DOYLE is not a young soldier; since we find him Ensign in the 107th Foot, on the 31st May, 1794, between twenty-eight and twenty-nine years ago; and thence serving in Gibraltar, Minorca, Malta, Sicily, Italy, on the Coasts of Africa, Asia, and in Egypt (where he received the Ottoman Knighthood of the Crescent); and from the beginning of 1809 throughout the DUKE OF WELLINGTON'S campaigns in Portugal and Spain, where he commanded a Portuguese brigade in a manner which obtained him from that country the Knighthood of the Tower and Sword; as well as the honour of being mentioned in the despatches of the DUKE of WELLINGTON. Indeed he was rarely without the thanks of the Commanders under whom he served, down to the honourable mention in General Orders of MARSHAL LORD BEARSFORD, nearly at the close of the war. After it, he received from his own Sovereign British Knighthood, and subsequently the Knight Commandership of the Bath.—These facts, I am sure you will agree with me, require no comment.

When he could no longer be actively employed in his former rank, he became Inspector of Militia in one of the islands at the mouth of the channel.

When by the reduction of the forces he became on half-pay, his active enterprising mind would not suffer him to be indolent, and he continued fondly to visit Portugal and Spain—the scene of his former activity and glory.

In these visits he, in common with every intelligent traveller, lamented the condition of both countries, and the apathy of the people; and he contemplated rouzing those with whom he had so successfully associated in war, to acquire the arts of peace, and to public improvements. He deemed, and justly, that a great help to this project would be a more ready communication with England, the want of which was always felt, and which would also be beneficial to this country. Ardent in a just pacific object as in war, he immediately purchased a fine steam vessel, not dissimilar to a sloop of war, at his own expence, and named her in honour of his own beloved Sovereign; and was successful, in opposition to the fears of many, in crossing the Bay of Biscay for the first time by that navigation.

He is thus enabled to enjoy his enterprize by means of his own; while in course his vessel carries British and foreign mails and despatches, and passengers—of whose, while they hold the passport of His Majesty's Government, the Captain of the vessel, still less the mere owner, has no right to inquire the intentions. That agriculture, and civil engineering, were the objects of some, I can aver from my own knowledge. With the war this vessel has nothing to do; and I doubt not the King of Portugal himself would confirm my assertion.

I think I may be satisfied, that on a full examination, you will find nothing in all this either dishonourable, or in bad taste, or subject to ridicule; for I am sure your Aristophanes does not desire a Socratic immolation. I have only to add, therefore, that this communication is utterly unknown to any person whatever beyond the writer.

Your CONSTANT READER.

P.S. Of GENERAL SIR JOHN DOYLE, so gratuitously brought into the present question, most truly as a "make-weight," I have said nothing, lest I should be asked the Spartan question—"Who ever blamed Hercules?"—He was indeed "so long Governor of Guernsey" as will be much longer remembered by the inhabitants of that island, from the improvements which took place during his government, as well as its general character. But JOHN BULL would not, I am sure, willingly have it conceived that he did not know much more of one who commenced (according to the legitimate authority before quoted) in 1771, military services which subsequently extended to every quarter of the world, and always with a commendation (including the thanks of Parliament) only to be equalled by his moderation and every complacent quality, under the high honours which a recognizant king and grateful country have bestowed on him. Though I dare say he smiled at your article as much as yourself; or would at least throw it off "as dew drops from the lion's mane;" yet if, from constant attention, I can judge of your feelings, I think you would not willingly add even a puny thrust to the many wounds which have been received from the enemies of the country, by the justly exalted veteran of more than half a century's service.

With the Suffragan Bishop of Kildare, I have much less to do. How he came into "the steam boat" talk, with MISS LAEON in one hand and PRINCE HOHENLOHE on the other, I cannot, nor do I think you can, tell. From your having become their chaperon, however, I have read the account, and my wonder is, I confess, increased, to find no letter of that ecclesiastic put in evidence in support of the accusation, resting almost solely upon his bearing a certain name. On his having any thing to do with the question there is not even the slightest charge.

I have seen JOHN BULL reason thus, and have loved him for it: if he like not this humble imitation, let him throw it into his very outer office, so that the junior devil may on Monday, return it to

Z. R.

We must, however, add, in conclusion of this article, that a wag who came over in the ROYAL GEORGE with the runaway Constitutionalists and others returning from the disappointment; upon being asked how he liked his voyage during the bad weather, said, that the whole affair reminded him of the witches in Macbeth, for it was one continued scene of—

"Double, double, DOYLE, and trouble,
"Fire burn, and cauldron bubble."

THEATRICALS.

IN theatrical tactics, next in order of judgment to the production of good novelty stands the revival of old favourites, and we very much applaud the revivification of that mirth-moving Farce, called O'KEEFE'S Comedy of the YOUNG QUAKER, at the little Haymarket, last week. The play is well cast—LISTON is super-eminent, and MR. WILLIAMS, if he would not "split the ears of the groundlings" by an over-exertion of the most powerful voice with which little man was ever gifted, would add very much to his well-earned reputation by his performance of SHADRACK.

MR. TERRY disappointed us—he played CHRONICLE as if he did not like it—he was cold and stiff, and did not even warm in his interview with ARAMINTA, at which, considering who played it, we were not a little surprised. The aptly-named MISS LOVE was exactly what ARAMINTA should be.

We are not aware whether MR. O'KEEFE be still living—but whether he be or not, the length of time which has elapsed since he ceased to write for the stage has made his dramas matters of history, and we think of them and speak of them as of things of an age gone by, and canvass their merits as we do those of MURPHY, or GARRICK, or FOOTE.

With persons who are all for nature and probability in the world)—O'KEEFE farce—(and there are such ninnies in the world) has no chance of success, but in the art of laugh-rasing he stands unrivalled, where reason is not to interfere with the mirth—nothing on the stage can be more eminently ludicrous than his AGREEABLE SURPRIZE?—but where was there ever such a being as LINGO—what then?—one does not go to a farce to see real life—we go to see probability outraged, and nature caricatured, and in these particulars O'KEEFE excels his competitors—he is, or was the GILRAY of the theatre—wanting, however, the quaintness and wit of FOOTE, and the literary ability of GARRICK and MURPHY. Who but cockney editors would quarrel with a man for making a mouse-trap because it happened not to be a county jail. In WILD OATS, O'KEEFE tried comedy, but it was only a lengthened farce—in short he was a farce writer, and amongst his happiest efforts is that now acting as a comedy at the Haymarket.

MATHEWS is about to re-appear in London, and to-morrow commences a short engagement at the Lyceum. His return to public life after his Trans-Atlantic trip, will, we have no doubt, be hailed not only with rapturous applause, but by crowded houses, which is still more important: we have had no very clear account of the impression he made upon the Americans, but from several observations which we saw scattered through some of their papers, "WE GUESS" that they did not quite understand his entertainment—a fault certainly not imputable to the performer—we know that even here in London eight persons in every ten who go to see him fail to take half his jokes, for what hits one part of the audience falls still born upon the ears of another part, so that although a continued roar of laughter is kept up throughout, the labour of mirth is divided amongst different classes.

In America we can easily conceive that his admirable delineation of national manners and provincial dialects—his introduction of quaint sayings, cant phrases, and personal allusions, must have been strange and unintelligible in many parts—here he is really "At Home," and we quite rejoice at his return to the stage at this dull season—it will give a fillip to society, and enliven the hundred and fifty thousand wretched nobodies, who are left to polish the pavements while the world is in the country.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE KING.—On Tuesday, though the ANNIVERSARY of his Majesty's birth was not observed as a national day of rejoicing, it being kept as a festival, by command, on the 23d of April: the King, however, received the congratulations of the day from a private circle of the Nobility and persons of distinction. The King's Pages, and some of the principal domestics had an entertainment upon the occasion, which concluded with a ball, to which some of the Pages and the principal domestics of his Majesty's Royal Relatives were invited. Those now in waiting at the King's Palace, Pall-mall, had a dinner parties on the occasion. The theatres and the houses of the King's tradespeople were brilliantly illuminated in honour of the birth-day of his Majesty, who has now completed his sixty-first year.

Mr. Dykes, the King's Messenger, arrived in town on Sunday morning, about two o'clock, with despatches from Sir Wm. A'Court, but which were not so late by four days as those brought by Mr. Ward on Thursday; Mr. Dykes having been detained at sea by contrary winds.

The Anniversary of the King's Birth was celebrated on Tuesday evening at Vauxhall Gardens, with much splendour. Fifteen thousand extra lamps were displayed in various appropriate devices. Amongst these, beautifully arranged in lamps, were the words, "Long life to our Patron, the King." A superb musical temple was also erected in the saloon. There was a display of fire-works, in the course of which was seen a well-executed bust of his Majesty, surrounded by brilliant lights, with a motto, "Long life to our Patron." Upwards of ten thousand persons were present, many of them of distinction, and several Foreigners, who appeared highly delighted with the scene.

A very handsome monument is about to be erected in Weybridge Church, to the memory of her late ever-to-be-lamented Royal Highness the Duchess of York. Chantry has the execution of the work.

On Friday morning, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, accompanied by Prince Leopold and suite, proceeded to Ramsgate from the Tower Wharf, by the Hero Steam yacht. A guard of honour was in attendance, and their Royal Highnesses embarked under a salute of 21 guns.

CAMBRIDGE, Aug. 15.—Tuesday last, the birth-day of our most gracious Sovereign, being appointed for laying the first stone of the new quadrangle at Trinity College, the ceremony took place, attended by all those circumstances of pomp and splendour which belong to so interesting an occasion. His Majesty had previously been graciously pleased to signify to the College, in his capacity of visitor, his royal sanction to this important undertaking, and to accompany that sanction by a munificent donation of 1000l. in aid of the funds for carrying on this grand design, and to appoint the Speaker, as his proxy, to represent his royal person in laying the first stone. The ceremony took place at two o'clock, when the academic body, in full costume, proceeded to the ground, and the Speaker, having first addressed the Master of Trinity on the occasion, stated that the work in question was commenced in consequence of the present edifices of the University being inadequate and insufficient for the reception of the numerous students, who come from every part of the kingdom, with an anxious desire to be received within its walls. After the ceremony, at which many thousand spectators attended, the Master and Fellows of Trinity College gave a sumptuous dinner to about 150 Noblemen & Gentlemen.

A letter from Cheltenham, states, that the Duke of Wellington has been there for some time, and was called from thence to town to attend a Cabinet Council, and set off at 20 minutes before four o'clock on Thursday morning, previous to which he took the waters, and to the agreeable surprise of the promenaders, on Friday morning, at 10 o'clock, he again appeared on the walks; thus exhibiting a singular instance of a person partaking of the waters in Cheltenham two successive mornings, and travelling to and from London in the interim, including four hours which he employed in the metropolis, and six hours sleep which his Grace enjoyed at Oxford. We are happy to state he has derived most decided benefit from the use of the Spa.

Mr. Lionel Harvey, late Secretary of Legation at Madrid, is going out immediately, it is said, at the head of a commission to Mexico with powers which cannot fail from their extent and importance to put the British Government in possession of the actual state of that fertile country.

OXFORD RACES.—TUESDAY.—A Gold Cup, value 100gs, and 60gs, in specie. Four-yr olds.—Mr. Scaith's Nethefield, 4 yrs old, won Brown's ch. c. Brilliant.—The Noblemen and Gentlemens' Plate of 50l., three-yr olds, the winner to be sold for 200gs if demanded, was won by Scarpa, beating three others; there were three heats, but the superiority of Scarpa's running was such as to give little chance to his opponents, and the two last heats were won in a canter.

WEDNESDAY.—Nothing could be worse than the race of this day. The City Members' Plate of 50l. was won in two heats by Mr. D. Faulkner's Unfortunate, beating Mr. Weller's Waverley, Mr. Beechy's Man Friday, and Mr. Sheard's Emily. The Sweepstakes and 40l. added, were not run for, in consequence of lack of horses—the whole amusement of the day was two easy heats.

At the Goodwood races, on Tuesday, the Old Goodwood Plate was won by Lord Egremont's Elfrid, and the Portsdown Stakes by A. Berkeley's b. m. Little Mab. Lord Egremont's b. f. by Sir the Sweepstakes of 25 sovereigns, and the Sussex Sweepstakes by Mr. Whiteside's b. c. brother to Antonio, beating the Richmond's gr. c. Swap. The Duke of Richmond's gr. c. Jo won the Goodwood's Stakes (first year) of 20 sovereigns each. day, Mr. Scott's Brother to Antonio won the Waterloo Lord G. Lenox's Swindon, the Cocked Hat Stakes. Richmond's gr. f. Dandizette, won the Ladies' Plate Jones's Prosody won the Handicap Stakes.

The driver stated ...that he was leading his horse, but that in consequence of a descent the ...horse was going round, and came in contact with the ladder, ...which the cart swung round, and came in contact with the ladder, ...and he was out of his power to prevent.—At the Spotted Dog, in the ...parish of —— Clift, aged 18, who was in the service of ...Mr. Ackerman, and while bathing near Waterloo-bridge, got into a ...hole of considerable depth. A waterman saw him sink, and having ...received drops from the Toll-house, got the body up. It was taken ...to the Spotted Dog, where the abdomen was rubbed with brandy, and ...other methods used, but it was nearly half an hour before medical as-...sistance arrived. Verdicts—"Accidental Deaths." Some of the Jury ...expressed that as this dangerous spot was well known to the water-...men, a beacon should be erected on it as a caution to the unwary.—...At the Golden Lion, King-street, St. James's, upon the body of Mary ...——, reported to have been murdered. James Rowley, husband ...of the deceased, deposed, that he was in bed about the middle of the ...night, when he heard a scuffle between her and Mary Burns upon the ...stairs; his wife cried out murder, and soon after rushed into the room, ...followed by Burns, who kicked her in the lower part of the abdomen, ...and she fell upon the bed; he got up and turned out Burns; his wife ...remained of the kicks next day, and then she could not walk, and ...died of the injury she sustained would cause her death. Several wit-...nesses proved that the prisoner and the deceased were always quar-...relling. The inquest was adjourned till the following day, and then ...Mr. Rose, surgeon, stated, that he examined the body of the deceased: ...there was considerable swelling in the right thigh and leg, evidently ...the result of erysipelas inflammation; there was no trace whatever of ...any severe injury inflicted on the part, either bruise or extravasation of ...blood, or secretion, such as would follow any injury of consequence, ...and he considered the cause of her death to be fever and erysipelas. ...Mr. Armstrong, of the Fever Hospital, made several observations ...which were conducive to fever. There was inflammation in the skin, ...lungs, and brain, which were strong indications of her dying of the ...disease of fever, but he could not give any opinion of the cause of that ...fever; the state of the atmosphere, the confined air she breathed, ...or the injury she received, would in either instance produce fever. ...The Jury again retired, and in about half an hour returned. The ...foreman announced that they found a verdict—"The deceased died ...from fever, produced by the injury she received."

TALES of OLD MR. JEFFERSON, of GRAY'S INN, collected by YOUNGER MR. JEFFERSON, of LYON'S INN. The first Series, containing the Welsh Cottage; or, the Woodman's Fireside. Mandeville; or, the Voyage. The Greeks; or, the Negro Suicides.—Printed for G. and W. B. Whittaker, Ave-Maria-lane.

"Of these Tales 'Mandeville' is our favourite. It is the production of an author who knows the world, and who has seen the wonders of the deep. One is acquainted with naval history and naval discipline; and who has worked a number of points of both into an interesting tale, which contains several animating scenes and vivid descriptions."—Literary Chronicle, June 7.

Just published in 2 vols. post 8vo. price 14s. bds. Second Edition of HIGHWAYS and BY-WAYS; or, Tales of the Road-side, picked up in the French Provinces. By a WALKING GENTLEMAN. Printed for G. and W. B. Whittaker, Ave-Maria-lane.

"There is a great deal of novelty and humour, as well as pathos, in these Stories, and they are told with a graphical character painting, that could have only resulted from long residence in France, and from habits of social intimacy with the unsophisticated and country part of the French community, with whom the English traveller seldom gives himself the trouble of getting acquainted."—New Monthly Magazine, April 1, 1823.

REMARKS on the COUNTRY extending from CAPE PALMAS to the RIVER CONGO, including Observations on the Manners and Customs of the Inhabitants; with an Appendix, containing an Account of the European Trade with the West Coast of Africa. By CAPTAIN JOHN ADAMS.—Printed for G. and W. B. Whittaker, Ave-Maria lane.

"From Cape Palmas to the Congo the Author has landed at every important place; and he has thrown together, almost in the form of notes, the observations which occurred on these occasions. Thus he makes his readers better acquainted than they could before have been (even by Tuckey's Narrative, Bowditch's Ashantee, and other recent writers), with the gold, ivory, and palm-oil coasts; with the Fantees," &c. &c. &c.—Literary Gazette July 5, 1823.

Just published in 8vo. price 12s. boards.

THE LUCUBRATIONS of HUMPHREY RAVELIN, Esq. late Major of the —— Regiment of Infantry.

"We'll con the French at any thing we see."—Shakespeare. Printed for G. and W. B. Whittaker, Ave-Maria-lane.

"The best papers in the volume are unquestionably those of a general character. The Essays on modern extravagance and charity are evidently the work of a man who has read life with an eye of wisdom. The observations are faithful to fact, and the remarks either ingenious or sound."—Literary Gazette, March 22, 1823.

"The Author's remarks exhibit the frankness, acuteness, ease, and good feeling, which we are proud to think, and pleased to say, so often belong to the character of the experienced British Officer: while they are so well conveyed, and in fact with such particular correctness, that not only few military men have the opportunity of forming and maturing so good a style, but many of our practised writers must fall into the rear in competition with Major Ravelin, who may stand muster with Geoffrey Crayon."—Monthly Review, May, 1823.

NEW NOVEL.

Just published in 3 vols. 12mo. price 21. boards.

OSMOND, a Tale.—By the Author of "The Favourite of Nature." Printed for G. and W. B. Whittaker, Ave-Maria-lane.

"The characters are drawn with natural ease and correctness; the incidents are probable, and often striking; the language is chaste and nervous, and the interest of the Tale well sustained from the beginning to the denouement. With such claims there can be no doubt of 'Osmond' becoming a great favourite with the large portion of Society—the Novel-reading Public."—Literary Chronicle, October 26, 1822.

"Caroline's death is truly affecting: and of the after-meeting between Osmond and his angelic wife, and their parting interview, we cannot speak in terms of too great praise. We yield the amiable Author our unqualified eulogy for the religious tendency of the book. And, as a parting word, we consider 'Osmond' one of the most successful Novels of that class which undertake to wean us from strong passions, and teach us the philosophy of virtue."—Literary Register, November 9, 1822

GENUINE STORIES.

Just published in Two Volumes, with Engravings, price 14s. bound, or 16s. elegantly bound.

PICTURES or STORIES, drawn from English, Scottish, and Irish History chiefly from the Ancient Chronicles and other extensive works of detail. By JOHN GALT, Esq. author of the Life of West, &c. &c. This Work is designed to furnish Reading for Young Persons, at once rational, instructive, and interesting; serving as a substitute for romances and works of fiction, while it equally stimulates curiosity and furnishes unalloyed entertainment. It contains above two hundred several stories, which are not to be met with in modern Language, or in books of easy access, all of them illustrative of Events and Characters connected with our National History, from the most remote ages to the death of George the Third.—London: printed for Sir Richard Phillips; published by Longman and Co. Paternoster Row, and by all Booksellers. Of whom may also be had, having the same design in regard to Geography, Popular Illustrations of Geography, or Interesting Readings in Geography, with Seventy Engravings, price 15s. bound.

BOYS AS THEY ARE.

Just published, price 2s. neatly half bound, with a frontispiece,

TALES OF BOYS AS THEY ARE; containing the NOISE, the REFUSAL, the HEAP of STONES.—London: printed for Baldwin, Cradock, and Joy. Of whom may be had, by the same Author, LIVES of LEARNED and EMINENT MEN, taken from authentic sources, adapted to the use of Children of four years old and upwards, in 2 vols. 18mo. with portraits, price 5s.

☞ In all previous compilations of this sort, great conquerors appear to have been made the prominent characters, as if their example alone were worthy of imitation. The author of the present little work, being of a contrary opinion, has selected such as seemed best calculated to convince young persons, that industry, perseverance, and firmness, gentleness and kindness of disposition, are among the truest sources of lasting happiness. The volumes are sold separately. Also, just published,

The PEASANTS of CHAMOUNI; containing an account of an Attempt to reach the Summit of Montblanc, and a delineation of the Scenery among the Alps; in 18mo. with a frontispiece, half bound, 2s. 6d.

☞ This little volume contains an account, adapted to the juvenile reader, of the attempt to reach the summit of Montblanc, lately made by Dr. Hamel, and a party of friends, in which several of the Guides were overwhelmed by an avalanche of snow.

WARD'S DIGESTIVE SEGARS.—Health and Luxury united in the use of these celebrated Segars; their medicinal virtue in cases of indigestion, &c. are already well known and highly appreciated by the wise and gentle in their operation, and do not cause the nausea usually complained of by those who are unaccustomed to smoking; indeed in the use of them arises a most grateful perfume.—Sold only by Ward, (sole proprietor) 14, Piccadilly; Souller and Co. 4, Burlington Arcade; and Ward, 9, Newgate-street, who also begs to recommend to the notice of Connoisseurs in Segars, that they have on sale the finest Cabanas in London imported by them direct from the Havannah.

BURGESS'S NEW SAUCE for general purposes, having given such great approbation, and the demand for it continuing to increase JOHN BURGESS and SON most respectfully to offer to this their best acknowledgments to the Public for their liberal patronage of the same; its appointed and ready convenience in all climates, has recommended it to the most distinguished foreign connexions, who have all spoken highly in its recommendation.—It is prepared by them ONLY; and for preventing disappointments to families, all possible care has been resorted to, by each bottle being sealed upon the cork with their arm and address, as well as each label having their signature, without which it cannot be genuine.

JOHN BURGESS & SON'S long established and much-esteemed ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES, continues to be prepared by them after the same manner that has given the greatest satisfaction for many years.—Warehouse, 107, Strand, corner of the Savoy-steps, London.—The original Fish-Sauce Warehouse

CARPENTER'S VEGETABLE SPECIFIC for the HOOPING-COUGH—the most safe and certain Cure ever yet discovered for that distressing and too frequently fatal disorder. Infants a week old may take it with perfect safety, and it needs no other recommendation than a trial, which will be sufficient to establish its claims on public patronage. A single bottle will seldom fail to produce considerable relief, and in the most inveterate cases not to fail to yield to three or four; indeed, when given regularly and persevered in, it may fairly be inferred from the unparalleled success which has hitherto attended its use, that it will be found a quick, safe, and never-failing cure.—Sutton and Co. (late Dicey and Sutton), Bow Church yard, London, are appointed the sole Wholesale Agents, of whom likewise it may be had retail. Sold also by Sanger, 150, and Chappell, 95, Oxford-street; Hannam, 63, Piccadilly; Prout, Temple-bar; Stradling, Royal Exchange; Osborne, Bishopsgate-street; Jordan, Whitechapel; and by all the principal Venders of Medicine throughout the kingdom, in bottles at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. each.

EASE and COMFORT in SHAVING.—To those Gentlemen who experience inconvenience in Shaving from a tender face or razor's hand, J. T. RIGGE most particularly recommends his celebrated MAGNETIC RAZOR TABLET, which, with Rilate Improvement, he engages will produce so keen an edge as to supersede all grinding, honing, &c. and renders the operation of shaving as easy and agreeable as it was before unpleasant and painful; its use is simple, its effect certain; price 7s. 6d. J. T. Rigge's Aromatic Shaving Soap will also be found an invaluable addition. Manufactory, 65 Chere side and 52, Park-street, Grosvenor-square.

TO THE FASHIONABLE WORLD.—J. ATKINSON, Perfumer, 44, Gerrard-street, Soho-square, respectfully informs the Fashionable World, that he continues to sell, wholesale and retail, the following articles, as are also to be purchased at most Perfumers and Hair Dressers in the country; but as they have been very generally counterfeited, the genuine has his signature and address on the Label:—ATKINSON'S DOUBLE REFINED WINDSOR SOAP, divested of all caustic properties, is peculiarly calculated to Ladies or Gentlemen whose skin is tender, and to the nursery. It is kept till very old, and consequently economical in use; it is very highly perfumed, and where the skin has got hard, rough, or uneven, it gradually corrects such imperfections, and makes it soft, white, and even; price, half pounds, 1s. 2d.; pounds, 2s.; by taking a dozen pounds, 1s. 9d.; also, the Old Brown Windsor Soap, possessing the same properties, but still older, and higher perfumed, price 2s. 3d. a pound.—ATKINSON'S CURLING FLUID, or VEGETABLE HAIR OIL, is allowed the most elegant article ever invented for giving the hair a beautiful gloss in dressing, and for keeping it so for exercise, or in damp weather, and for regenerating the growth where it has fallen off, from illness, perspiration, change of climate, or any cause occasioning premature decay, price 3s. 6d.—ATKINSON'S VEGETABLE DYE changes grey or red hair on the head or whiskers to a permanent brown or black, price 5s.—Agent for HUDSON'S BOTANIC TOOTH POWDER, and Tincture, which have been so generally adopted; they not merely cleanse and beautify the teeth, but preserve them from decay to the latest period of life, and eradicate the scurvy and tartar from the gums, fasten such teeth as are loose, and sweeten the breath, and so undeviating are their effects, that there never was an instance of any one who regularly used them ever having the tooth ache or a tooth decay, pr. 2s. 9d. each.

DR. SYDENHAM'S FAMILY PILLS OF HEALTH.—These Pills (entirely vegetable) are unrivalled in cases of Head-ache, Loss of Appetite, Noises and Giddiness in the Head, Lowness of Spirits, Flatulency, Obstructed Digestion, together with all affections of the Liver, and Bilious Disorders. These Pills contain not one atom of mercury or mineral, and are so peculiarly mild in their action as to require no confinement or alteration in diet. The most delicate females find them materialy beneficial to their general health, and all who have used SYDENHAM'S PILLS pronounce them the most safe, mild, and effectual family medicine extant. Actual experience can prove the superiority of these Pills more than the numerous cases communicated by persons of the highest respectability, and the countenance shown them by the first medical characters in present practice. Naval and military men.—Persons residing in hot climates—those leading sedentary lives, and Commercial Gentlemen will find them a certain assistant to repel the attack of disease arising from neglect, intemperance, the want of exercise, or the effects of climate. One Pill taken at the close of dinner is sufficiently calculated to assist digestion, correct excesses of the table, and give a healthy action to the stomach. In Boxes 1s. 1½d.; 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d.; and for the use of families and for exportation, large boxes by which there is a considerable saving at 11s.—CAUTION—Purchasers are requested to observe the Name "J. REES, Bristol," is written on the Government Stamp affixed to each box, to distinguish them from imitations sold under similar titles. Sold by Barclays, 4, Cheapside, and Regent-street; Newbery's, Edwards, St. Paul's Church-yard; Sutton's, Bow Church-yard; Barclay's, Fleet-Market, London; and most respectable Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom.

BALDNESS or GREY HAIR will now sure not be seen. In short, Ladies and Gentlemen may rely on it, they will not have a hair fall off or turn grey, by using Prince's celebrated Russia Oil, as it is so improved with an extra valuable ingredient, through which it has made the Russia Oil the greatest nourisher and preserver to the hair in the Universe, will make it grow thick and long, and prevent its falling off or ever turning grey, and is such a nourisher to the roots of the hair, that it even has begun to turn grey, will restore it again to its natural colour, and is universally allowed from infancy to old age, and when dressing with it will always keep the Head and Hair clean and beautiful, and in curl. Even Medical Gentlemen have published in the Gazette of Health, that Prince's Russia Oil is superior to any Oil for the Hair, and will do in cases of baldness and weak hair, what can possibly be done in the thickening, strengthening, and restoring it, if there is the least sign of roots. It is no wonder that Ladies and Gentlemen have complained of lots of the Russia Oil and being of service to the hair, as they have found out that unprincipled persons have sold them counterfeits; therefore Ladies and Gentlemen ought to be particular and have it of a respectable person. Ask for Prince's Improved Russia Oil. The ounce bottle five shillings, a large bottle, containing five ounces, one pound, is a saving. Sold by the sole Proprietor, A. Prince, No. 9, Poland-street, Oxford-street, near the Pantheon; and by Mr. Smyth, Perfumer to his Majesty, New Bond-street; Messrs. Hendrie; Timbrell-street; Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Prout, 226, Strand; Davison, 59, Fleet street; Rigge, 65, Cheapside; Johnson, 68, Cornhill; Tutt, Royal Exchange; and by most principal Perfumers and Medicine Venders. Ladies and Gentlemen residing in the country, sending a remittance, it will be forwarded immediately by coach. It is so prepared as to keep in all climates; the older the better.—Merchants and Captains will receive a liberal allowance for exportation.

D. VAN BUTCHELL, Surgeon, Man-Midwife, Son, and Assistant, of the late Martin Van Butchell, recommended by persons of distinction (references are given with permission), continues to cure Fistulæ, Piles, &c. by the improved method so long and successfully practised by his father, without Confinement, Cutting, Caustic, or Risk, for suitable fees.—No. 18, South-street, Berkeley-square, London. At home till one daily. No remuneration required from persons of respectability, until they are satisfied a cure has been performed.

LATEST NEWS.

Paris papers down to Thursday arrived yesterday, bringing the following important intelligence, (which, however, it must be observed, must not be considered official!)

"Telegraphic despatch arrived from Bayonne, dated Aug. 13, in the evening.—The Commandant-General at Bayonne to his Excellency the Minister at War:—A letter from Madrid, dated the 10th inst., announces that they had received there the intelligence that the King is free, that the Cortes have embarked, and that hostilities have ceased before Cadiz. The courier who arrived from Madrid, positively assures me, that according to the same intelligence, rejoicings were taking place in that capital. The Director of Posts at Madrid, announces the same event; however, I have not yet received any official intelligence. A Spanish courier d'Estafette verbally brings the news that the King is free in Cadiz, that the Cortes are dissolved, that the revolutionary troops are all concentrated in the Isle of Leon, that at Cadiz they have closed the gates on the side of the Isle of Leon, and that they only wait the arrival of the Duke d'Angoulême to open those on the sea side, and thus finish the war in Spain.

An aide-de-camp from Madrid, dated Aug. 9 states, that a Spanish courier has arrived at the head-quarters of the Generalissimo from Cadiz, the King and his august family traversed the city in the midst of an immense crowd, who made the air echo with cries of joy. The 2d of this month their Majesties had permission to visit the Church of St. Francis, and what is still more extraordinary, to take a carriage airing beyond the land gates. A detachment of cavalry escorted them. Their residence is still at the Custom-house.

CAMP BEFORE CORUNNA, JULY 27.—A French frigate has arrived, and has already fired upon the town. We can discern here its flag. We obtain our artillery from Ferrol, where we found 1100 pieces. If the city does not surrender to-morrow, Gen. Bourck will bombard it the day after. Our brave soldiers are impatient for the assault; the whole army is indignant at the horrible spectacle presented to it by the ferocity of the contending Constitutionalists of Corunna. Sixty individuals (all ranks have been thrown into the sea, with their hands and feet tied, by the revolutionists of that city; we saw their dead bodies floating; two of them were cast on shore. It was ascertained by their dress that it was a Lieut.-Colonel and an ecclesiastic.

The Custom-house having some of its windows facing the sea, the French sailors, by means of their telescopes, had the gratification several times of beholding the Captive Monarch, who waving his handkerchief, saluted the Fleet of Louis XVIII. his august Defender, and his approaching Liberator.

Letters from Carolina of the 6th of August state that Ballesteros has written to the ministers and members of the Cortes at Cadiz, and that he is answerable that before 15 days the King will be at liberty. Madrid enjoys the greatest tranquility.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Angoulême continues his march towards Seville and enjoys the most perfect health. Lieut.-General Comte de Bourck writes that the French troops before Corunna are only waiting for heavy artillery to commence the bombardment. They are in position before the town. The garrison has not hitherto attempted any sortie. A French frigate and several other vessels of war cruize before the place and blockade it by sea.

The East India Company's outward-bound ship Royal George, was all well on the 4th of January, in lat. 2, 30, N. long. 30, 30, West.

On Friday a Gentoman in the service of Colonel Merrick, of 27, Berkeley square, absconded from his master, taking with him a valuable casket of jewels.

An inquest has been held on James Elliot, aged 11, who in fighting with a boy named Crutchley, received a blow which caused his death. Verdict accordingly, with this addition, that it did not proceed from malice.

GUILDHALL.—Yesterday Webb and Harris, who were remanded the other day upon a charge of felony, the former for stealing and the latter for receiving property from the warehouses of Mr. Fain, appeared to answer the charge this day; but at the instance of the solicitor were again remanded till Monday, Alderman Cox observing it was a case involving great interest in commerce, and most certainly he should commit them on that day.

BOW STREET.—The Office was crowded yesterday to hear the examination of R. Burfleet, who was brought up for the third time upon a charge of stealing some sacks, value 5s. The case excited considerable attention, the tables being turned completely in Burfleet's favour—for from what transpired during the examination, he was discharged, and a witness in the case. Robert Summers was ordered to the bar, and after an investigation of more than two hours, the parties were bound over to prosecute him at the next Sessions.

At Marlborough-street, yesterday, a number of informations filed at the instance of the City of London, against Mr. W. Poole, a coal-merchant, of Honduras Wharf, were heard before Mr. Dyer, the presiding magistrate. The informations charged him with sending out 56 shaldrons of coals to the residence of Col. Burroughs, of Hill-street, Berkeley-square, without the vender's ticket, as required by the Act. Col. B. was induced by advertisements to agree with the defendant, who was to supply him with 25 chaldrons of Russell's Walls End coals, accordingly coals were delivered with a vender's ticket, stating they were Russell's Walls End, when, in fact, they were of an inferior quality, called Wellington's Mains, and the ticket was originally for the latter coals, (worth from 25 to 30s.,) but altered for the Russell's Wall's End, (worth 40 to 45s.,) Several witnesses proved the fact. The Magistrates convicted the defendant in penalties upon each information, amounting in the whole to several hundred pounds.

The LITERARY MUSEUM of yesterday contains, besides several original articles of Interest Reviews and copious Extracts from the following new Works—Memoirs of Cavanova—The Hermit Abroad—Crimes and Horrors of Private Madhouses—An Account of some recent Discoveries in Hieroglyphical Literature and Egyptian Antiquities—The Fire Eater—On the Genius of the late Mrs. Radcliff—The Speculator; Steam Carriages, Steam Horses &c—Original Poetry—Foreign Correspondence—Foreign Literature—The Drama—University Intelligence—Arts and Sciences—Varieties, &c. &c.—Price 8d., or for its immediate transmission by the post, 10d. The Museum may also be had stamped, price 9d. Published by John Warren, No. 7, Brydges-street, Covent-garden; and to be had of all Booksellers and News-venders in the Kingdom.

BIRMINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL.—The arrangements for this great Meeting, to commence on the 7th of October under the gracious Patronage of his Majesty, are in a state of forwardness. The following principal vocal performers are already engaged, viz. Madame Catalani, Mrs. Salmon, Miss Stephens, and Miss Travis, Messrs. Braham, Vaughan, Knyvett, Bellamy, &c. and the names of others of distinguished talent are expected to be added to the list. Messrs. Cramer and Morl will be the Leaders of the Band, and Mr. Greatorex the Conductor; and from so fine a combination of talent, very superior musical effects may be expected. The Committee in their address to the public state that, in order to render the music as perfect as possible, they have engaged their Performers almost exclusively from the most celebrated London Orchestras; and in addition, by the gracious permission of their Royal Patron, they again obtain the aid of his Majesty's Household Band. Thus secure of the number of the first instrumental performers of the Metropolis, whose services can be obtained, they deem it expedient further to increase the numerical strength of the orchestra, as such addition could not be made without endangering that precision and correctness of execution it has ever been their object to attain.—The Committee have opened a public Register of Lodgings at the office of the Birmingham Gazette, and in anticipation of a large assemblage of Visitors from all parts of the united kingdom, the inhabitants are actively preparing for their reception; and from the judicious arrangements made, the most ample accommodation will be found, and upon moderate terms.

The accommodation afforded to travellers in this country was never greater than at present; the public stages generally are such as no other country can boast of, and if any thing were wanting to make them as snug and comfortable as a private carriage, it will certainly be found in the NEW MARLOW and MAIDENHEAD COACH, which started for the first time on Monday last. It leaves the Three Nuns Aldgate at half-past one, and Gloucester Coffee-house at half-past two, daily; and returns from Marlow every morning at seven o'clock, and arrives in London about 12 the same day.

The excessive heat arising from the burning influence of the Dog Star, is peculiarly detrimental to female beauty. It tans the fairest complexion, and frequently produces cutaneous eruptions. As an antidote to those effects, emanate from the causes above stated, ROWLAND'S KALYDOR is especially recommended—its virtues being so admirably calculated to resist the depredations made either by heat or cold on female beauty as to surpass all eulogium, while its properties are so diversified as to render it eminently beneficial in numerous other effects.

WILLIAM JONES, (late Walsh,) Operative Chemist to his Royal Highness the Duke of York. The Original GINGER SEEDS having for nearly 30 years been patronised by the Public and recommended by medical men of the first eminence, their beneficial effects have become fully established; in consequence of which many sorts have been offered for sale of a very inferior quality, which has, in a great measure, brought the above elegant preparation into great disrepute. The public are therefore informed, that they are prepared solely at the original Warehouse, No. 100, Strand, by WM. JONES, successor to the late Mr. Walsh.—Where are also to be had WALSH'S DINNER PILLS—DR. MORELEY'S ANTIBILIOUS PILLS—WALSH'S GOUT COBDIAL—And WELCH'S FEMALE PILLS. The efficacy of these Medicines being universally known, requires no recommendation.

On Wednesday next will be published, both in French and English, in crown 8vo. embellished with Portraits of Madame Pauman and of the Prince of Cobourg,

MEMOIRS of a GREEK YOUNG LADY, or MADAME PAULINE ADELAIDE ALEXANDRE PANAM, versus HIS SERENE HIGHNESS PIE REIGNING PRINCE OF SAXE COBOURG—SERENE HIGHNESS PIE REIGNING PRINCE OF SAXE COBOURG—This Volume presents very curious details of the manners and characters of the Court of Cobourg, and includes Letters from the Grand Duke Constantine, the Court of Cobourg, and includes Letters from the Grand Duke Constantine, the Court of Coburg, and includes Letters from the Grand Duke Constantine, the Court of Cobourg, and includes Letters from the Grand Duke Constantine, the Court of Cobourg, and includes Letters from the Grand Duke Constantine, the Court of Cobour

"FOR GOD, THE KING, AND THE PEOPLE!"

No. 141. SUNDAY, AUGUST 24, 1823. Price 7d.

LAST WEEK OF VAUXHALL.

Under the especial Patronage of His Majesty.

THE Proprietors of the ROYAL GARDENS, VAUXHALL, most respectfully announce that the Repetition of the GRAND NAVAL FETE, in honor of the birth of His Royal Highness the DUKE of CLARENCE, Admiral of the Fleet, will take place TO-MORROW, Monday, being the Last Night but Twelfth Season. The Amusements will commence with a Superior Concert of Vocal and Instrumental Music, in which appropriate Songs will be introduced. The much admired Grand Musical Pageant, Forty Feet in Length, will be produced. On this occasion the new Ballet will be repeated, called the Venetian Ball, composed, arranged, and produced by Monsieur Ballin, with new and splendid Scenery, Dresses, and Decorations. The other Entertainments will consist of the unequalled Fantocchini, by Mr. Grey, who nightly receives unbounded applause for his superior skill. The wonderful young American, Mr. Blackmore, will go through his surprising Performances on the Tight and Slack Rope. The Cosmoramas will be changed, so as to produce Four of the best Views yet exhibited, and a new Piece of Artificial Fire-works will likewise be shown. ISABELLA, a NOVEL. By the Author of "Rhoda, Plain Sense, and Things by Their Right Names."

"This is one of the few really good novels that make their appearance in a series of years, such as Celebs, Rhoda, Plain Sense. We know not how better to laud Isabella, than by saying it is the production of the Author of Rhoda and Plain Sense—each forms the eulogy of each. Isabella evinces the perfect triumph of virtue and good sense over every evil in life: the book is one that may be placed with the greatest advantage in the hands of every young female, married and unmarried.—The interest is powerfully kept up throughout."

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—The rude and unskilful attempts constantly made to supply these substitutes for the masticatory organ, and the discord which deficiency suffers from the imperfect way attending them when permanently fixed, have deterred many from adopting the aid and comfort they are capable of affording, independent of the assistance they may contribute to digestion and consequent health. The ingenious application of mechanical science will enable us to obviate all these inconveniences, and allow the wearer at all times to keep the mouth in a state of perfect cleanliness, and to perform the functions of mastication, articulation, &c. with decided ease and comfort.—Mr. NICHOLLES begs to state, that he is in constant attendance from ten to one, and will be happy to give ocular demonstration of the comforts derived from his efforts under every circumstance of simple and complicated deficiency.—115, Fleet-st.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, AUG. 19.—Yesterday Monsieur, accompanied by Madame the Duchess of Berry, his Royal Highness the Duke of Cumberland, the brother of the King of England, the Prince of Solms, and a brilliant Staff, repaired to the Champ de Mars to witness the review of the troops that were assembled, to the number of 9000 men. The troops defiled before them in great order.

MADRID, AUG. 13.—ARMY OF THE PYRENEES.—Report from Marshal the Duke of Reggio to the Secretary at War.

"MONSEIGNEUR—Lieut.-General Count Bourck reports, that the artillery which he had brought from Ferrol are in battery, and that by the 6th of this month he would be ready to commence firing on Corunna. His plan was to summon the place anew before commencing the cannonade, which would take place immediately after the return of the flag of truce, if the Governor persisted in his refusal to surrender. Gen. Morillo, with Gen. Larochejacquelin, after having dispersed the Constitutional bands of Palarea and Rosello, Governor of Orense, entered Vigo, where they found a good deal of artillery. General Bourck only learnt this news on the 5th; he was informed also that Wilson and Quiroga, who had repaired to that city in the hope of raising the province of Trix, had embarked the same morning.—Not to give the enemy time to re-animate, Generals Morillo and Larochejacquelin marched on Bayonna, a small place on the sea coast, at the extremity of Galicia, which probably will not hold out longer than Vigo. Thence they will move on Tuy. Every march produces great desertion in the ranks of the Constitutionalists. Gen. Bourck proposes to make Gen. Marguerie march with his brigade, so as to arrive by St. Martin de Quiroga and la Puebla de Santa Bria, at Lugo on the 5th, whence he will fall back on Orense. By this means the enemy will be placed between two fires, and cannot reach Castile. General Marguerie will afterwards return to Ferrol with the 35th Regiment, destined to form the garrison of that place. The Captain-General of Old Castile (Charles O'Donnell) reports that 27 Royalist peasants of Villa de Ciervos, attacked, on the 27th July last, in the environs of that town, 42 cavalry of the Regiment of Algarve, commanded by a brother of the Empecinado, and, in spite of the resistance they opposed, took 36 of them prisoners, with their arms and horses. Two were killed, and the Chief, with three others, crossed into Portugal, where they were arrested. They have all been conducted to Valladolid. Marshal Commandant in Chief of the First Corps,

"GUDINOT, Duke of Reggio."

GENERAL ORDER.—His Royal Highness the General-in-Chief has witnessed with the most lively satisfaction the brilliant success that has been obtained in every rencontre with the enemy, and particularly on the 13th July at Lorca, on the 25th at Gundalhuertana, and on the 28th at Campillo de Arenas. The troops of all classes have proved that they know how to unite great valour to the most perfect discipline. His Royal Highness has also witnessed the zeal and the constancy which the Officers and the soldiers have never ceased to display during long and difficult marches; the compatriots, their Generals, and particularly the Commander-in-Chief, Count Molitor, who has so well justified the confidence the King has placed in his talent and his devotion.—Head-quarters Andujar, Aug. 9, 1823.

Major-General Count GUILLEMINOT.

IMPORTANT DECREE.—"We Louis Antoine de Bourbon, Infant of France, Duke d'Angoulême, Commander-in-Chief of the Army of the Pyrenees, considering that the occupation of Spain by the army under our command, places us under the indispensable obligation of watching over the tranquillity of that kingdom, and the security of our troops, have commanded, and do command, as follows:—1. The Spanish Authorities shall not make any prisoners without authority from the French Commanders of our troops.—2. The Commanders-in-Chief of the corps under our command shall demand the release of all persons who may have been imprisoned in an arbitrary manner for political motives, especially soldiers, that they may return to their homes, excepting such who, after liberation, shall give cause of complaint.—3. The Commanders-in-Chief of the corps are authorized to seize all such persons as shall disobey the present orders.—4. All publishers and periodical writings shall be under the direction of the Commanders of our troops.—5. The present Decree shall be printed, and made known all over the world.—Given in Andujar, Aug. 8, 1823.

(Signed) "LOUIS ANTOINE.

"By command "GUILLEMINOT."

AUG. 14.—The Government has received news from Cadiz, dated the 8th inst., at which time the King and his august family enjoyed good health. Dearth and discord daily increase in Cadiz and the Isle of Leon. Advices from Ferrol state, that the Themis, English frigate, and El Vengador, Spanish brig of war, and two gun-boats, have left that port to cruize off Corunna, and thus complete the blockade of that place by sea as effectually as by land. Governor Novella has sent a flag of truce to General Bourck, proposing to him to sign the capitulation which had been offered to him some days previously. This proposal has been rejected. Gen. Novella, fearful of being taken by assault, was then reduced to the necessity of soliciting leave to send a Colonel to General Morillo to ask his advice. The answer of the Count of Carthaxena not being doubtful, the immediate reduction of the fortress may be regarded as certain. Quiroga, previous to his departure, caused 51 prisoners to embark in a vessel from Seville, under pretext of conveying them to a more secure place; but scarcely had these ill-fated persons reached the offing, when they were assassinated and thrown overboard. The first bodies picked up, were those of an Officer, and an Ecclesiastic, who were bound back to back, and had their throats cut with a sabre. The list of these 51 victims is published in the Gasette of this day.

BLOCKADE OF ST. SEBASTIAN, AUG. 12.—On Sunday we learnt the submission of General Balleateros: this news did not surprise us, as we expected it. We, however, view it as an important event towards the pacification of Spain. In rejoicing for this news our artillery fired 21 guns. In an instant the ramparts of the town of St. Sebastian were thronged with the Constitutional garrison. An officer of the 41st regiment was sent in with a flag of truce; he had a long interview with the officer who was appointed to receive him; but nothing has transpired respecting the conference.—To-day two cannon on the ramparts were fired upon the posts of the 20th of the line; no one was hurt.

LISBON, AUG. 9.—General Morillo and the French troops entered Vigo on the 4th of this month; in consequence of which Sir Robert Wilson, who has acquired a mournful notoriety by his adventures and intrigues in Galicia, and who had already been once obliged to quit the city of Oporto, has just arrived at this port, and is detained and strictly watched on board the schooner that brought him. When the French entered Vigo Sir Robert Wilson retired to the Island of Ozmus, at the entrance of Vigo Bay; from this situation, in which he was in much distress for want of provisions, he, with some companions, was relieved from the English brig Nassau, which arrived here on the 7th. The captain of this vessel reported himself for London, after thirty days voyage, having touched at Corunna and Vigo, to be laden with hale goods, and bound to Gibraltar, with passengers—Messrs. Wilson, Erskine, &c. The names of these gentlemen of course shewing who they were, the Government placed a guard over them, that Sir Robert might not have any communication with the shore. It having been signified to Mr. Ward, the British Charge d'Affaires here, that Sir Robert wanted a surgeon to dress his wounds, which had been exposed for some days, he having so hastily left Vigo, that all necessaries were left behind, the surgeon of the Arabella packet was immediately dispatched to him. The same letter mentions a report that Corunna had capitulated, and that three brigs of war had sailed from Cadiz and Seville, that part with stores for the French fleet and army at Cadiz and Seville. Letters from Gibraltar to the 31st ult. confirm the accounts of the recapture of San Roque by the Constitutional General Ordonnez, and that the garison had been made prisoners.

CORFU, July 16.—Sir Graham Moore, the Naval Commander-in-Chief of the Mediterranean, arrived here in the Rochefort, of 80 guns, on the 11th, and sailed again on the 13th, taking with him the Euryalus, the Redpole, and Chanticleer. He is said to have gone to Patras for the purpose of demanding an explanation from the Capitan Pacha; and some go so far as to add, that the Admiral has received instructions to drive the Turkish fleet out of the Ionian sea altogether.

HALIFAX, (N.S.) JULY 29.—The Earl of Dalhousie, Governor General of North America, arrived here in the Nova Scotia Government brig Chebucto, on the 3rd inst. on a visit to his Excellency Sir James Kempt, and the province. His Lordship was attended by Captain Hay and Mr. Maule, Aides-de-Camp. Lieutenant-Colonel Durnford, Royal Engineers; and Captain Packer, 68th Regiment, Assistant Quartermaster General. His Lordship has been received in the most affectionate and enthusiastic manner by all classes of people. His Majesty's ship Salisbury, Rear-Admiral Fahie, the Naval Commander-in-Chief, arrived here on the 20th. The Argus, Capt. Dundas, sailed on the 22d for Bermuda. The head-quarters of the 52d reg. arrived here in the Cato transport on the 15th, from Cork, and was followed on the 16th by a second detachment, under the command of Lieut.-Col. the Rowan, in the Vibelia; both ships sailed again on the 19th for St. John's, New Brunswick. The Brunswick transport, with troops for Halifax and Quebec, came in on the 16th, and sailed for her destination on the 20th. The left wing of the 2d battalion 60th regiment, are under orders to garrison Newfoundland, and to send a Captain's detachment to the island of Cape Breton; the head-quarters of the corps to be at Bermuda. When the several changes shall have taken place, the 52d regiment will occupy new Brunswick, and take all the detachments, as well there as in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward's Island, while the 74th and 81st regiments remain unbroken in the garrison of Halifax. These arrangements will delay the return of a part of the 62d some weeks, by employing the transports destined for their conveyance.

A Montreal paper of the 28th ult. says, "We regret to learn that there has been a very alarming and extensive fire in the Lower part of the province, which has laid waste an extent of five miles. It arose from accident on the grounds of Mr. Stuart, and extended its ravages to Cascapedia. Several settlers have had their houses destroyed, and the crops which lay within the action of the fire. It continued during 15 days."

IRELAND.

KERRY, TRALEE, AUG. 13.—A meeting of the Magistrates of this County took place on Monday last, to consider of the propriety of relieving the County from the operation of the Insurrection Act. After much discussion on the subject, conducted with the utmost harmony, it appeared that the variety of opinion on the prudence of the measure is confined to a division, notwithstanding the unanimous feeling on all sides, that the County at present enjoyed as much tranquillity as any part of the kingdom. The numbers were—For removing the Insurrection Act, 18—Retaining it, 16—Majority, 2.—An Address to the Lord Lieutenant, in accordance with the sentiments of the majority of the Meeting, was in consequence drawn up.

CORK, AUG. 15.—Between the hours of twelve and one o'clock on the night of the 12th instant, a house, inhabited by Ambrose Daly, at Dromdeer, one mile and a half from Doneraile, was set on fire by persons unknown. The family was awakened by the smoke. The house was saved by Daly and his daughter, with little damage. On the same night a horse, the property of Mr. Arthur O'Keefe, of Marble Hill, a short distance from the above place, was stabbed by persons unknown.—On the same night the sentry of Flower Hill was fired at by persons unknown—the ball lodged in the sentry box.

CORK ASSIZES.—On Saturday, the 16th instant Mr. Connell, a pawnbroker, was called on the trial of three noted thieves, to give evidence respecting some stolen articles which had been pledged at his shop. On being put into the witness box, he declined being sworn on the grounds of religious scruples. Baron Pennefather—Are you a Quaker, Sir?—Mr. Connell—No, my Lord, but I have a scruple relative to the taking an oath. Baron Pennefather—The Court will recognize no such scruples—a pawnbroker should be the last person to have scruples for taking an oath, when so much depends on him in his line of life to detect persons. Mr. Connell appealed to the Rev. Dr. Quarry, who was sitting near his Lordship, and that Rev. Gentleman replied that he knew him to have those scruples, and knew him before to make objections. Baron Pennefather said he must commit him for contempt of Court, unless he gave testimony, as he had no idea of having public justice defeated in such a manner. Mr. Connell said he would be sorry to treat the Court with contempt, but would respectfully submit to whatever punishment his Lordship thought proper to inflict. Baron Pennefather—Instead of committing this person, let him be fined 100l.—Cork Constitution.

POLICE.

UNION-HALL.—On Thursday, Joseph Benjamin, and Margaret, his wife, were charged with a fraud. The female, dressed in a very dashing style, used to enter pawnbrokers' shops, with a child in her arms, and pulling a coral off its waist, offer it as a gold one, to pledge from 15s. to 30s. The test of aqua fortis it always withstood, being made of silver, well coated with gold; and she obtained such sums in a great many instances. An assay, however, discovered the trick, which was made known through the trade, and the female was stopped on Tuesday evening, offering to pledge for 1l. one of her "warranted gold" corals, at Robertson's, in the Borough: and her husband, who confesses himself to be the maker, was afterwards secured, on his applying to beg her off. The husband was remanded, and the female committed for trial.

On Friday, James Diggles was charged by Mr. George Drake with having stolen a travelling coat, belonging to himself and his partner, Mr. Woollett. On Wednesday last he had occasion to leave the counting house for a few minutes, and, on his return, met the prisoner, who had, in that short time, gone into the counting-house, taken the coat, and was walking off with it. He was immediately taken into custody, and given into the hands of an officer. The officer, in searching him, found upon him a petition, purporting to be under the auspices of "Mr. William Sykes, banker," which he had been in the habit of carrying about with him, supplicating assistance. The prisoner said he had a wife and two children, and being in great distress did not deny having been tempted to take the coat. He was committed to take his trial at the next Quarter Sessions.

QUEEN-SQUARE.—On Friday, Wm. M'Quin, a private in the guards, was finally examined upon a charge of assaulting Eliza Taylor, a child about seven years of age, with an intent to violate her person. The child was attended by her father and mother; her father is a tradesman in Westminster. The soldier had been farmed out from his quarters on Friday last; he gained access to the house of the child's father; he met her in the yard, and enticed her into the water-closet, and then threatened to put her down the cess-pool if she made any alarm. The child, in a very intelligent manner, gave a detailed account of his brutality towards her. A sergeant from the regiment attended, and gave the prisoner a good character as a soldier; he had served 20 years in the regiment, but they now declined taking any part in his favour, leaving him to the civil power. The prisoner was fully committed.

MARLBONOUGH-STREET.—On Thursday, a person of the name of Phillips was brought to this office by the parish-officers of St. James's, charged with deserting his wife, and leaving her chargeable to that parish. Mrs. Phillips related a statement of her sufferings. She said that some time ago a sister of hers came on a visit to them from the country; and this sister her husband seduced, and was now living with, having turned her (the wife) out of doors, without any means of support. Under these circumstances, she was compelled to apply to the parish for relief. Phillips denied that he was now living with his sister, but could not deny turning his wife out of doors. The Magistrate said that he had no authority to enter into the case as regarded their separation; but Mr. Phillips must either take his wife home, or satisfied with 16s. a week. Phillips said he could not afford more than 14s. and if she did not find it sufficient, her husband should either allow her more, or else be sent to amuse himself for three months at the tread mill, and see how he would like that.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Bath Chronicle says, "His Majesty has been pleased to grant the sum of 50l. to Sir W. Poic, Bart. for the relief of the widow of the late Major Hare, who was barbarously murdered in Ireland."

We understand that the Noblemen who constitute the Committee for conducting the King's Theatre next season, are the Marquis of Hertford, Lord Lowther, Lord Aylesford, Lord Mountcashel, and Count St. Antonio.

The Duke of Wellington departed on Wednesday for the Netherlands, to inspect the line of fortresses. His Grace was accompanied by Colonel Jones, and arrived at Dover about eleven o'clock at night. On Thursday morning, after viewing the works in and about the harbour and basin, his Grace embarked on board the Britannia steam vessel for Calais. When the vessel put off from the quay, the cannon on the heights fired a salute, and the crowds on shore cheered the illustrious hero with enthusiasm.

The ceremony of opening the new docks of Sheerness is now confidently expected to take place on or about the 5th or 6th of September next. Great preparations are making for the accommodation of the public.

The office of Master of the King's Hounds has, in consequence of the death of the Marquis Cornwallis, become vacant.

David Wilkie, Esq. R.A., is to have the appointment of Limner and Painter to his Majesty, for Scotland, vacant by the death of Sir H. Raeburn.—Morning Paper.

THE ARMY.—Major-General Sir Henry Torrens, K.C.B. Adjutant-General, &c. &c. has recently returned from Ireland, where he has been for several months superintending the instruction of the troops in that part of the United Kingdom, in his unproved system of the Formations, Field Exercise, and Movements, of his Majesty's Forces. The rules and regulations for carrying into immediate general practice this uniform system of discipline are now preparing for the press, and will, it is expected, be shortly promulgated by his Majesty's command, to the whole army.—The Lieutenant-Governorship of Plymouth, and the command of the Western District, which includes the counties of Devon, Cornwall, and Somerset, except Bristol and its vicinity, held by the late Major-General Sir Thomas Pack, K.C.B., are still vacant. The Lieutenant-Governorship of Brunswick, which was held by the late Major General G. S. Keppel, remains also vacant.

On Wednesday a Court of Directors was held at the East India House, when the following ships were thus tinted, viz.:—For Bengal and China, Macqueen, Duchess of Athol, and Berwickshire; for Bombay and China, Thomas Coutts, Duke of York, and Castle Huntly; and for St. Helena, Bencoolen, and China, the General Harris, to be afloat on the 18th of November, sail to Gravesend on the 24th of December, stay there 30 days, and be in the Downs on the 8th of January, 1824; for Bengal and China, Sir David Scott, Cushing, and Balcarras; and St. Helena, Bombay, and China, the London, to be afloat on the 17th of December, sail to Gravesend on the 26th, stay there 30 days, and be in the Downs on the 5th of February, 1824; for Bombay and China, Dunira and Marquis Camden; and Madagascar, China, Lady Melville and William Fairlie, to be afloat on the 31st of December, sail to Gravesend on the 15th of January, 1824, stay there 30 days, and be in the Downs on the 20th of February; for China direct, Orwell and Thames, to be afloat on the 20th of February, 1824, sail to Gravesend on the 14th of March, stay there 30 days, and be in the Downs on the 13th of April.

Thursday morning, while the ship Ann, a West Indiaman, lying in the River Thames at Blackwall, was delivering her cargo, she was found of by the Hero, laden with rum and brandy, and thrown on her beam ends; her three masts snapped close to the board, and all her rigging, yards, &c. fell on shore; the ship immediately filled and filled with water.

Saturday se'nnight, as the Hero Birmingham and Bristol coach, when distant about a mile from Cheltenham, was passing a turnpike bay, the hinder seat came in contact with a projecting truss of the binding rope, and instantly separated the seat, whereon were sitting a lady and gentleman, from the coach. They were conveyed in a chaise to the Plough Hotel, where they lie in a very dangerous state.

On Friday se'nnight the Hibernia steam packet left Bristol for Dublin, with about 50 passengers, among whom were the Marquis of Bath and two noble Lords. In the course of the night, the wind blew fresh, one of the cranks of the engine broke, which compelled the Master to put into Tenby, where she remained until Saturday evening. On Sunday morning, parts of both her engines broke, and tore up the planks of the deck. Her situation was then alarming, and signs of distress were fired. Fortunately, the Palmerston War office steam packet hove in sight, and shortly came up to her assistance, took her in tow, and made Milford Haven, to the no small gratification of the passengers and crew.

A sample of new wheat was shown on Thursday in Bristol market; the quality good.

CAMBRIDGE.—The new quadrangle at Trinity college is to be called The King's Court, by his Majesty's gracious permission.—The following gentlemen of this university were ordained on the 10th inst. at Hereford, by the Lord Bishop of that diocese:—Deacons: C. Neild, B.A., S. Bache, B.A., and J. Jones, B.A. of St. John's college; and W. H. Hill, B.A. of Emmanuel college.—Priests: H. Hammond, B.A. King's college; T. Lavie, Magdalen college; R. Batterbi, B.A. and R. Thursfield, B.A. St. John's college.

PORTSMOUTH, AUG. 16.—On Thursday, one hundred and sixty convicts were transhipped from the Hulks at this port for the Guildford Johnson, bound to New South Wales.

The President of the United States has offered for sale his estate in Albemarles County, Virginia, including about 4,000 acres.

Wednesday evening, between five and six o'clock, as servant of Mr. Browne, butcher, in Whitechapel-market, was removing a bullock from thence to a slaughter-house, in Goulstone-street, the animal was rescued from him by a gang of ruffians. The animal proceeded in an infuriated state along the road, towards the London Hospital, chased by a motley group of desperadoes, amounting to several hundreds, and upset every person and thing with which it came in contact. On arriving opposite the gate of the hospital, it attacked a boy aged about five years, and tossed him. On the boy's alighting on the earth, the animal tossed him in a similar manner; on being picked up he was discovered to be lifeless!—In the fields behind the Hospital the old lady also lost her life in a similar manner. The Lambeth-street officers, accompanied by a party of the Bow-street patrole, by this time came up, and after having secured the bullock, captured some of the offenders, and lodged them in Whitechapel watch-house.

On Thursday afternoon a middle-aged woman, decently attired, was observed by a boy to climb over the paling at Colebrook-row, and jump into the New River. The boy gave the alarm, and she was taken out in about five minutes. She was carried to the Ship public-house in Camden-street, where the landlord prepared a bed for her. Surgical assistance was procured, and she was restored to life. She was afterwards removed to Islington workhouse, where she is at present. It was said she was a respectable tradesman's wife.

Tuesday afternoon, as the carriage of John Poyer, Esq. of Russell-place, Fitzroy-square, was passing the end of King-gate-street, Holborn, and the coachman was endeavouring to pass a Bath and Bristol waggon, it came in contact with a hackney-coach on the spot. The carriage was overturned, the coachman was thrown under the wheel of the waggon, and had his leg and thigh broke, and one horse was killed on the spot.

On Thursday morning, about 11 o'clock, the shop front and extensive blature of a glover's shop near Southampton-street, Strand, was blown into the street; an elderly man passing by at the time, was knocked down and his leg broken, and it is feared his thigh also. He was immediately placed in a coach, and conveyed to St. Bartholomew's Hospital.

Two men named Hutchins and Smart, lately took up their quarters at an inn at Kingston: they had been getting up informations against all the coal-merchants and coach-owners of the vicinity, a whole list of whom were summoned before the Magistrates; but most of the informations were quashed for want of evidence and informality. About of at least 2000 persons assembled, however, who seized upon Hutchins, on his coming out of the Sessions House, and pelted him with filth and stones, beat him, tore off his clothes, dragged him through the Thames, &c. till he was nearly dead, when he was rescued by the Magistrates and constables. He now lies in a very dangerous state.

A woman, whose name we understand to be Manning, most respectably connected, residing near Bangor-ferry, charged with the wilful murder of her husband, by cutting his throat with a razor, took her trial on Friday (the 15th), at the Assizes, and we understand that the result of it was—her acquittal.—Chester Courant.

ASSIZES.

LANCASTER.—Andrew Riding, aged 23, was indicted for wilfully and maliciously cutting Samuel Horrocks, Esq. with intent to do him some grievous bodily harm, by wounding him with an iron cleaver, on Sunday the 27th of July, at Preston.—The first witness called was Samuel Horrocks, Esq. M.P.—I was at the Preston parish church on Sunday, the 27th July, and afterwards went to call upon Mr. Miller, my partner. This was near one o'clock in the day. The road I had to go was a gravel coach road; at Mr. Miller's there is a side gate for foot-passengers to go up to the house. I was in the act of opening the gate when I received a blow at the top of my head. Not suspecting any body, I thought something had fallen down from the place upon me; it was immediately followed by a tremendous blow at the back of my head. Finding myself then wounded I turned round to see my left, and saw the prisoner with an uplifted cleaver, ready to strike again; he said, "I'll kill you."

The prisoner.—My Lord, may I be allowed to ask him one question?

The Court—Not yet.

Mr. Horrocks resumed—He struck again with all his force, and I had just time to lift up my left arm; he struck three, if not four times after that, in all six or seven times. The latter blows fell on different parts of my arm, and one inside my left hand. I thought I had knocked the cleaver out of his hand, as it flew about two yards from him. He ran towards it, and attempted to take it up again, but I rushed forward and succeeded in getting it. He then looked round as if for another weapon, as I thought, and finding nothing on the spot, he ran away. I then called out to the people to stop him, and he was stopped before he got out of my sight; he was afterwards taken somewhere. I went in, bleeding very much, to Mr. Miller's house. I had the cleaver with me when he was taken, but I gave it away, to when I do not know, owing to the state of confusion into which the attack threw me.—The following letter was then handed to witness, and he said he received it on the 4th of April; it remained in his custody ever since. He threw it by as it was anonymous. The letter was as follows:—

"Sir,—If you do not advance the wages of cotton-spinning at least 20 per cent. you may expect your life to be taken away by a cotton-spinner, from Manchester. You was the cause of the falling of wages in Preston. Preston spinners are working more than 20 per cent. under Manchester, and I understand that the spinners at Bolton, and their masters, are at difference about dropping the wages there; the masters offer them more than you give; but I hope the will be obliged to give them the same that they had before. There are many cotton-masters who deserve to lose their lives; but you are, it is said, and I believe it is true, the worst of them all; therefore your life must go first, and the rest in rotation."

The post mark upon this letter was Manchester, April 3, 1823, and it was addressed to Samuel Horrocks, M.P., Lark-hill, Preston, Lancashire.

The witness underwent a long cross-examination by Mr. Jones, Counsel for the prisoner, in which he stated that he had no previous knowledge of the prisoner. Witness said, after I had secured the cleaver, he (prisoner) appeared to me to look about for some other weapon. He was taken before he quitted my sight. I did not hear him say, "Take me, take me," after he had run some yards. I thought he attempted to get on, and not stop, when he was about 20 yards from me. I cannot say that the man looked wild, but he was certainly very furious. I could suggest no motive at the instant for such an attack. There had been, two years last spring, what is called a "turn-out" of the spinners; but that had been settled at the time, and I am not aware of any recent quarrel of the same kind between master and man. When that turn-out took place, it was not confined to one class of workmen, but was general against all masters. I cannot say how many masters were affected; perhaps 15 or 16 different houses. The letter alluded to I received in April. I did not know it was written by the prisoner until he acknowledged it, and until I had compared it with the letters he had written to me since. The prisoner, the moment the letter was put into his hand in my bed-room on the day after, said it was his hand-writing.

Prisoner—Did you see the letter put into my hand?

Mr. Jones—Prisoner, stop; don't interrupt my examination.

Mr. Horrocks resumed—He certainly had the letter long enough in his hand to see what the nature of it was. His admission was in these words—"It is my writing, and I put it myself into the Manchester post-office." On the following day the prisoner was brought to my bed-side. I was then in a very distressing situation from my wounds; but I don't know that the prisoner exulted at my situation. My shirt and clothes, in the state in which they were from the effusion of blood, were not exhibited to him in my bed-room. The man was asked if he was not sorry for the condition in which he found me? He replied, "No, I am rather relieved." He was in the bed-room a quarter of an hour, but I don't recollect that he said any thing more; he did not in my presence refer to some passages in Scripture in justification of his attack, nor exhibit any wildness of manner; his appearance looked to me as sensible as that of any other man in the room. I did not see him since until Saturday last, when I accidentally saw him in the Castle. The cleaver was not very sharp, but still it cut; I don't apprehend that it had received any particular sharpening for use at the time.

Cross-examined by the Prisoner—You say, Mr. Horrocks, that immediately after I struck you I said "I would kill you?"—I have answered that already.

After I struck you, did I not look at your head, and then down upon the ground, in this way? (The prisoner accompanied his words with significant gesture.)—When the prisoner rose, after attempting to regain the cleaver, he then looked at me, as well as I can recollect, and turned round, looking about him as I thought for something else to strike me with, as I had possession of the cleaver; he seemed to be searching for some other weapon, and none being there, he ran away.

After I struck at you, and the weapon fell from me, you saw me close, no doubt?—Yes, I did.

Then did I not look at you, first at your head, and then downwards on the ground, three or four times?—I do not recollect.

How long do you suppose the cleaver lay on the ground before you took it up?—A very few seconds.

Was it not 30 seconds?—No, nothing near that from first to last.

You did not see me attempt to take up the cleaver while it lay on the ground before you grasped it?—Yes; I did indeed.

Will you be so good, Mr. Horrocks, as to describe to his Lordship the manner in which you say that I tried to take up the cleaver. Pray do, Mr. Horrocks?—I can only describe it by going to the spot where the cleaver lay on the ground, about two yards where I stood, and then stooping as if to take it up.

Can you positively say that the cleaver lay two yards from you? Can you safely say it was more than one yard off?—I think, as near as possible, it was two yards.

Now, Mr. Horrocks, that is not an answer to my question. Can you safely say that it was more than one yard?—Yes, certainly, I can say it was more than one yard.

Did you attempt to catch the cleaver in your hand as it fell from mine?—I do not think it fell. I think I was more in the act of warding off a blow which you were making at me at the time.

How was you warding it off?—With my left hand, and I think by my action I knocked the cleaver out of your right hand.

You say you think; then you only think you did so?—That is all.

Do you think so now?—Yes; I am inclined to think so now.

Oh, then you are only inclined to think so! I think the cleaver lay there, Mr. Horrocks, for 30 seconds; and why do I think so? Because I saw it lying there for what I suppose to be that time; I looked at it several times; and let me ask you, did you not stand with your legs open at that moment?—I really cannot tell you how I stood exactly at the time.

Did you stand with one leg before, and one leg behind, cannot you tell that?—I really cannot say how I stood with such particularity.

Why, you were in your senses at the time, Mr. Horrocks, were you not?—Yes, I think I was.

How many seconds then passed before you took up the cleaver, can't you say that?—Half a dozen perhaps.

Did you run to take it up?—I made all the haste I could.

Did you run, or walk, or fly? You did not fly, I suppose, so you can say whether you ran or walked?—I went as quick as I could.

Did not your hand tremble as you took up the cleaver?—Yes, it might.

Could I not have rescued it from you if I pleased?—I think you would have had great difficulty in getting it from me after I had got it in my hands.—How did you hold it then in your hands?—I really cannot say; but I held it.

Then you were perhaps out of your mind?—I think not.

And yet you are describing what you say I did? Did I make any attempt whatever to rescue that cleaver from you?—I think you did.

Did I not stand before you some time before you took up the cleaver?—I do not think you did.——Speak positively, Mr. Horrocks, don't say you think?—I don't believe you did stand still.

As you say you were in your senses at the time, can't you speak positively, Mr. Horrocks, yes or no?—I can only say I think you did not.

Did I not stay some time before you, when you took up the cleaver, without attacking you?—Very few seconds.——A dozen seconds?—No.

Half a dozen, Mr. Horrocks?—I cannot say.

Four seconds, Sir?—I cannot say. I do not think it was more than four seconds.

A very short time was not that to look about for another weapon?—It was certainly a very little space of time.

When you say I shifted my position, as if to get at the cleaver when it fell, how did I move, was it this way, or that way? (The prisoner accompanied the interrogation by suitable gestures.)—Your body stooped, as I thought.

Did my feet shift, I have said yours did?—I don't know.

Then you mean to say you saw all my body move, but not my feet?—I have spoken of what I saw.

On your oath did I walk or run off, when I struck you—tell what I did—did I run?—I think you ran.

How far was I from you when you say you saw me run?—Five yards, perhaps.——Perhaps less?—Perhaps so; I cannot speak to a yard.

I walked first, and then I ran?—I think you did not walk more than three yards before you ran.

If I were a man wanting to commit wilful murder, could I not have got away much sooner?—I don't think you could.

Perhaps I could not in four hours sooner have got away?—The remainder of the cross-examination of Mr. Horrocks by the prisoner was immaterial.

The prisoner then referred to the Preston Chronicle of the 2d of August, which described him as having evinced no sign of feeling when he was brought before Mr. Horrocks, in his bed-room, but quite the contrary; and had reiterated his determination when Mr. Horrocks said, he had no ill will to him, and rejoined that he would rather have seen Mr. Horrocks "a corpse;" and he asked Mr. Horrocks, "Did I express any such feeling in your bed-room, or did you towards me?"

Mr. Horrocks—"You did not—nor did I say any thing of the kind."

Prisoner—And yet, my Lord, the Preston Chronicle has said all this, which is false.

Mr. Justice Bayley—We are not trying you for any thing which is said in the Preston Chronicle, and there is no necessity of dwelling upon that.

Prisoner—I only wish to ask Mr. Horrocks whether what is there inserted is true?——Mr. Horrocks—Certainly not.

Some examination then took place respecting the locality of Mr. Miller's gate; but it was immaterial for the purpose of general description.

Ann Johnson, Thomas Heald, and Edward Leyland proved the attack upon Mr. Horrocks, and the apprehension of the prisoner. On the cross examination of the last witness, he stated, that when the prisoner went to the lock-up-house, he complained of the irons being very cold which they were putting upon his legs. I saw him on the Tuesday after, in the House of Correction. Mr. Miller was there; a weight stood near him at his left hand, and the prisoner said—"If I knew that weight was loose, I'd have hit you (Mr. Miller) with it." It was Mr. Miller who ordered the weight to be removed, in consequence of his observing the prisoner's eyes once or twice steadily fixed upon it.

Thomas Walton, a constable, who apprehended the prisoner, said, "The prisoner told me, when I asked him if he was not sorry for what he had done, that he was not sorry at all."

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones—This discourse was in the lock-up-house, and he said he would have done the same to Mr. Miller; and this he volunteered saying of his own accord, in the presence of Mr. Miller, who had done nothing to offend him; the only reason he assigned for his hostility was, because these gentlemen had dropped the spinners, but that happened two years ago.

Dr. St. Clare, the medical attendant upon Mr. Horrocks, said, that he was called to attend that gentleman on the 27th of July, at one o'clock in the day. He found he had a very severe wound at the back of his head. It was a cut about an inch and a half in length, and through the scalp or skin that covers the skull, and an artery had been divided. The outer plate of the bone of the skull had been penetrated by the instrument which had inflicted the wound, and there was a great deal of local swelling. Upon the left arm there were four wounds, two cuts and two bruised wounds, and there was another inside the left hand.

Mr. Richard Palmer, solicitor, said—When the prisoner was shown the letter in Mr. Horrocks' bed-chamber, he was asked by one of the gentlemen present when he sent it; his reply was, "Look at the post mark." At the House of Correction, on the Tuesday, he was asked why he had not sharpened the cleaver: and his answer was, he was afraid that the people might have suspected something if he had done so; and his allusion was understood to apply to his father and mother, with whom he resided. At the conclusion of the examination of one of the witnesses, he was asked if it was correct; and the prisoner answered—"Yes it is true, I tried to split his skull."

In his cross-examination by the prisoner, he said, that he (prisoner) betrayed no symptoms of a "waking conscience" at the examinations; and on one of them, he inquired after Mr. Horrocks's health.

Prisoner remarked, that after he did the deed, and was taken to Mr. Miller's house, Mr. Miller said, when Mrs. Miller refused him a glass of water—"Oh, poor man, give him what he wants, for he has only a short time to live." He was here giving a history of his treatment in the lock-up house, when his Counsel (Mr. Jones) interposed, and begged him to refrain from general observations.

The prisoner begged his Counsel would allow him to choose for himself. He then proceeded to complain, in strong terms, of the treatment he had received in the lock-up house; and said, that when he was introduced into Mr. Horrocks's bed-chamber, he did not know whether Mr. Horrocks was dead or not; for he saw a white quilt on the bed, and a white sheet, which was like the way that the dead were laid out. Mr. Grimshaw asked him to look at Mr. Horrocks lying in his bed, and say, whether he was not sorry for what he had done. He replied, "Not much of that, Sir;" and then somebody, he thought Mr. Horrocks, said, "You villain, you'll soon be made sorry; you shall suffer for what you have done." This vexed him.

The Solicitor, in his further examination by the prisoner, admitted that he (prisoner) had never exulted in what he had done, while in the bed-chamber of Mr. Horrocks; that account as published in the Preston paper was altogether incorrect; he could not exactly say whether the prisoner, when the letter was produced to him, admitted that he had actually sent it, or only that he might have sent it; his impression was, that he had admitted having sent it. After the business of the letter in Mr. Horrocks' bed-room, witness proceeded to take that gentleman's deposition, which was afterwards read over to the prisoner, who admitted its correctness, not in a careless way, but after paying great attention to what was going on.

The prisoner—Did I not complain of not having justice done to me; that my neckcloth was taken away, and my braces?—Yes, you did; and Mr. Travers, the Magistrate, said, "You shall have justice done to you, my man." A chair was then got for you, and you seemed comfortable.

What were the words I used when speaking of Mr. Miller?—That you would shoot him.

Was I not agitated then?—No; you did not appear so; you seemed quite cool and collected.

The case for the prosecution being here closed, the prisoner was asked by Mr. Justice Bayley what he had to say in his defence.

He replied, "My Lord, I have a good deal to say; but I wish to ask when I can begin? Can I begin at the time when the first thought struck me, or can I begin when the act was done."

Mr. Justice Bayley.—You must not advise with me; you have your own counsel, and you can consult with him. Do so, and then you will be better prepared to enter upon your defence.

Prisoner.—My Lord, all I wish to know is this—can I begin my defence at the point of time I like?

The Court.—Certainly you can; consult with your counsel, and take your own time.——Prisoner.—Then gentlemen, I shall tell you the whole thing from the beginning.

The prisoner then entered into a history of grievances, or supposed grievances, which the workmen endured from their employers, and which he imagined was occasioned by Mr. Horrocks; he alluded particularly to three men. He said, "these men were tried at the sessions and punished with two months imprisonment in the House of Correction, where one of them now is; and although they were very poor, they were condemned to pay from 20*l.* to 50*l.* the costs of their prosecution. I determined to attack Mr. Horrocks as the cause of the evil, but how to do it was the question. I first thought of merely striking him with a stick, then I thought I would only hit him a slap with my fist; but then, considered I, for that I shall only be brought before the sessions at Preston, where justice I shall have none, as he is a rich man, and I a poor workman; it was that reflection which induced me to strike him with some weapon, which while it cut him would not risk his life. This treatment of my fellow workmen enraged me very much, and I thought it called for and deserved revenge in some way, for the wrongs it inflicted upon my fellow-creatures. I saw no justice for the poor man, though I had often heard that the law was equal for the poor and the rich. With this feeling strong on my mind, I took out the cleaver, not meaning to kill but to cut. I went to church, thinking I should see there Mr. Miller with the corporation. I did not expect to meet Mr. Horrocks, for I had heard he was confined to his bed, and so bad, indeed, as to have made his will. I felt the cleaver, and found it was not sharp. I said this won't kill, it will merely cut or bruise. It was what I wanted; for I really meant to do him some bodily harm, but not to kill or murder. Finding, on going to church, that Mr. Miller was not there, I came away, and on the church-terrace I met Mr. Horrocks. I was surprised; and to be sure it was him, I pushed a little before him on the terrace; and on satisfying myself that he was the man, I then followed him, but without any certain purpose. It is true, that I know very well what I have done, but I do not know what at the time I meant to have done. When we got nearly together at Mr. Miller's gate, I struck at him behind, not meaning to hit him on the back of the head, but only on the shoulder; however, he was hit on the head, though I did not mean it. You have heard from him what I did. I don't deny it; but after what I have told you, it is for you to say whether I am guilty of murder—whether I meant to sacrifice any man, as I am described to have meant in that indictment. My Lord and gentlemen, I shall trouble you no further, but to thank you, which I sincerely do, for the kind and patient hearing you have given me."

The prisoner in a few seconds said, "I beg pardon, my Lord, but can I see the cleaver? all I want is to see if it is now in the same condition as when I had it?"

The recollection of the violent threats imputed to the prisoner here elicited a murmur against the production of the instrument in the manner the prisoner required, from the closely packed crowd, barristers, and others, who, from the state of the Court, were enclosed within the small space immediately in front of the dock.

Mr. Justice Bayley here held up the cleaver on the bench, and said "Prisoner, can you not see it in my hand? You have certainly a right to be satisfied in your own way of the point you seek to know, and you shall be so satisfied; but the constable says it is exactly in the same state as when he got it."

The prisoner begged his Lordship's pardon, but said he really could not see the edge at that distance.

Mr. Justice Bayley—Then let it be shown to him, he can see it without having it in his hands.

The cleaver was then brought by the attorney for the prosecution close to the prisoner, to the evident uneasiness of the good folks in the front of the dock, more than one of whom held up their hands to catch some part of it, as if the solicitor's grasp was likely to be forced. Others at a more convenient distance evinced more confidence, and called out to let the prisoner see it. He merely looked at the edge, without attempting to put his hands upon the instrument, as he might have done, and said, "Really, my Lord, without meaning to charge any body, I think it looks sharper than when I had it—perhaps I am wrong."

The constable reiterated his declaration that it was exactly the same as when he got it.

Elizabeth Riding, the mother of the prisoner, was called to prove his insanity. She stated that when he was quite a young boy he had always a very bad head ache, and a kind of singing in his head; this showed itself when he was about twelve years old, and continued off and on. She mentioned many instances of his wanderings, in the course of which the prisoner, who had been attentively watching his mother for some time, ex laimed, "What is all this, why do you swear falsely?"

Mr. Justice Bayley—Prisoner, you must not interrupt your mother's testimony. You know she is your own witness.

The prisoner—My witness! my Lord, she is no such thing. I want truth, and she is speaking falsely. I don't say that she is doing it with intent, but still she is doing it.

Mr. Justice Bayley—Prisoner, she is your witness, for she has been called in your behalf, by your counsel, and you must not go on in this manner. Trust to the discretion of your counsel.

The Prisoner—My Lord, if this is the way to go on, my counsel is false. I don't want him.

Mr. Justice Bayley—Stop a moment, prisoner, attend to me.

The prisoner—My Lord, I shall stop, if I am only allowed to cross-examine her.

Mr. Justice Bayley—Prisoner, you cannot be allowed to cross-examine your own witness; but attend to me for one moment. Do you wish your mother to be examined in your behalf? You see your counsel does. Do you wish to object to what his discretion suggests in your favour?

The prisoner—My Lord, I only want truth and justice. I don't care what my counsel suggests, if it is contrary to these.

Mr. Justice Bayley—Your counsel will do nothing but what is proper. If you, however, object to your mother's testimony, it is my duty to inform you, that you have a right to make that objection. Is it now then—and consider it calmly before you answer—your wish that your mother should be stopped here? If it is, I shall have to strike out all she has said (some of which is meant to make in your favour) as if it never was delivered in court?

The Prisoner.—Then, my Lord, I wish it all struck out, because it is false, and I must contradict her. My father will contradict her. She talks of insanity (looking at her with great earnestness,) who is not of herself. My father told me in the gaol that she is not of her own mind.

The mildness and suavity of the Judge, in addressing the prisoner, made an evident impression upon him, and his manner, which was previously excited and impassioned, became more calm, and he replied, "I really beg pardon, my Lord, but she went on at such a rate, that I could not but too her—pray allow me, if you please, my Lord, the cross-examination."

Mr. Justice Bayley.—Indeed I cannot. You had better pause, and consult your counsel; he will advise you for the best. It is not my province, sitting here, to give advice.

The Prisoner.—My counsel is there (pointing to the table;) I cannot go to him, I suppose; will he come to me?

Mr. Jones, who had evinced great zeal for his client, manifested no disposition to get into closer contact with him, but said that any gentleman nearer the dock could communicate between them.

The Judge informed the prisoner, that his solicitor could go near him, and inform his counsel of his wishes.

The prisoner whispered to some gentleman near him, but wished to enter into some irrelevant domestic story.

At length the order of proceeding was resumed and the examination of the mother continued by counsel. She said, that he had put on on Sunday morning two clean shirts, one over the other, and a clean pair of my stockings, in addition to his own; he blacked his shoes twice over; after he had finished and glossed them once, he went over them again. He then ran up and down the house very quick, and I begged him not to go to the church, but to accompany his brother to the chapel, where he would hear better. He then talked a great deal of nonsense to disturb his brother, who was reading a book. I did not see him after until he was taken up. I thought he had drowned himself. We were very uneasy about him on the Saturday, and followed him wherever he went. I kept my eye upon him all that day. My brother George died raving of a fever, and my son (the prisoner) was always like him. He was like him, often low, deaf, nervous, and not right.

The prisoner pressed very hard for permission to cross-examine his own mother. He denied that he had any particular complaint in the back of his head, or in his ears; it was true that he now and then had a noise in his ears, and that was all; the fever alluded to, he got from walking two long journies. Perhaps he might now and then have a head-ache.

Thomas Riding (a disabled seaman with a wooden leg) examined—I am the father of the prisoner.

The Court—Now here is your father, have you any objection to his being examined in your behalf?

Prisoner—No, my Lord, for I really believe that he is in his senses.

The father then confirmed the mother's testimony as to the insanity of the prisoner.

The Jury retired, and after 20 minutes consideration returned with a verdict of Guilty, but that the prisoner at the time was not of sound mind to know what he was about. Mr. Justice Bayley then said, that by a wholesome Act of Parliament, for the safety of the King's subjects, a person in the condition of the prisoner must be detained in custody at the pleasure of his Majesty, to prevent his doing further mischief. The prisoner appeared calm, and returned thanks in a very distinct manner to the Judge and jury, for their patient attention during his trial. The trial lasted from nine o'clock in the morning until about half-past nine o'clock at night, the court being, during the whole time, crowded almost to suffocation.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We are much disappointed in not hearing this week from our excellent correspondent PAUL POTTER.

The Barbadoes Gazette shall be sent according to the address on Monday or Tuesday.

ARCHDEACON GLOVER, and his letter, must stand over till next week.

We differ entirely with our correspondent upon the new Artists' Institution of which he speaks—we think the establishment will be highly serviceable to the arts, and may tend to reduce the affected consequence of certain academicians, whose conduct has in many instances wounded, disgusted, and driven from Somerset House men of character, talents, and consideration.

R. Y. A. under-rates, as we think, the abilities of DR. B. and does not give sufficient credit to the success of his system—as to the merit of invention, we do not stickle for that, but the merit of application is at all events due to him.

There is no need to insert the letter from a TEMPLAR—the uncalled-for personal and vulgar attack upon the venerable and learned DOCTOR RENNELL, made by the Chronicle last week, must excite pity and contempt—the manner in which his Son is made to join in the abuse is shameful and illiberal; but as the paltry scurrility is only provoked by the talents and principles of both, it must give these persons a satisfaction proportionate to the disgust it has caused to those who have read it.

The "Radical's Prophecy" has been received—it will, in all probability, have a place in next Wednesday's MERCURY.

Our remarks in last Wednesday's MERCURY on the Spanish subscription, and the importance of appointing Messrs WOOD, PARKINS, and SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH trustees, to insure the proper distribution of the fund, have produced an enquiry from a friend for the names of the committee of the subscription for the Cenotaph of the late PRINCESS CHARLOTTE—and he further requests to know where the sums subscribed are deposited, and when the subscribers may expect to see the result of the subscription.

FRANK HOMESPUN treats the affair too jestingly—

"Things that are serious he turns to farce"— and we therefore must omit his letter.

We have received a printed article, cut from the morning papers, signed FRANCIS LEE, and dated Albany House, enclosed in a letter with the same date and signature, requesting us to give it insertion. We are sorry that its length, and the fact of its having been previously printed in a newspaper, prevents our complying with the writer's wish.

We are obliged to our friend PINSBURY SQUARE—but by a very curious coincidence the book to which he referred us, and which we had not seen, was on the very day we received his letter transmitted to us by the author.

We have to acknowledge the book, and note enclosed, and if we have not taken full advantage of our correspondent's remarks and information upon the subject, it arises from the difficulty of deciphering that which he evidently had, under the circumstances, great difficulty in writing—we are extremely obliged.

The subject of MR. N.'s letter shall be attended to in our next.

A correspondent suggests that the mode in which the persons employed are paving Piccadilly—for, gentle reader, we have driven the Hanover squarites into that—is ineffectual, and that the street will very shortly be in as bad a state as heretofore. Our correspondent observes, that if the street were laid nearly flat, with the channells close to the trottoir, the pavement would be infinitely better at first, and more durable eventually.—We throw out this hint as it has been given to us, in the hope of being of service.

We are apprehensive that no ultimate advantage would result from the introduction of our " enquiring correspondent*" to the other party.*

We are much obliged by the Ode of Horace, and the translation—but we fear it is hardly sufficiently pointed in its construction or applicable in its bearing to "things as they are."—The letter will be returned by post on Monday.

The critique on the Queen's Trial by PAYNE, and a Song, intended for this day's paper, are unavoidably delayed by a press of other matter.

The Advocate of the Church next week.

R. Y. L. will see that the subject has not escaped us.

Our other friends must remain unanswered.

For prices of Funds see last page.

NEW SURREY THEATRE.—Monday Evening and during the Week, A New Grand Romantic Melo-Drame, called, The Pedlars; or, a Slave's Revenge, with new scenery, dresses, &c. After which, a new Grand, Serious, Grecian Do-Drame called Antigone; or, the Theban Brothers. To conclude with a Farcical Burletta, called the Student; or, Love, War, Physic, and Latin.

THEATRE ROYAL HAYMARKET.—Monday, Sweethearts and Wives, Matrimony, and Killing no Murder.—Tuesday, Young Quakey, and (never acted) Fish out of Water.—Wednesday, Sweethearts and Wives, with other Entertainments.—Thursday, The Highland Reel.—Friday, Sweethearts and Wives.—Saturday The Young Quaker.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, AUGUST 24.

HIS MAJESTY continues to reside at his lodge in Windsor Park. On Wednesday the KING held his first Court in Windsor Castle, to which place he proceeded in state, with the usual formalities. His MAJESTY was loudly cheered in his progress through the streets of Windsor.

To persons unacquainted with the incessant workings of the papists in England, towards the subversion of the established Church, our frequent recurrence to the subject, in times of profound tranquillity, may appear unnecessary, and we may by such persons be accounted as over-zealous and even intolerant.—We are neither; but the toils of the papists are unwearying—not a day, not an hour passes in which some act, overt or covert, is done by these underminers of our religion, tending to the great object they have in view.

Amongst all the publications which they are daily publishing, and which require a constant looking after and refuting, we think we never have seen one of so decided a character, so utterly free from decency or truth, as a book called "A Sure Way to find out the True Religion, in a Conversation between a Father and his Son." This precious work is the production of a MR. BADDELEY, a popish priest, at Manchester. The ignorance it betrays, and the falsehoods with which it abounds, might, our readers would think, prevent it from being mischievous—but no—we know that it has its admirers and advocates, that it is recognized by the papists as orthodox and excellent, and therefore we shall transcribe some part of the dialogues of which it is made up, in order that the public may judge of the estimation in which those who differ with them in religion, are held by the Romanists.

In the first dialogue the father informs his son, that there is no religion except the Roman Catholic Religion—in the second and third, history is mis-quoted, statements are garbled, and falsehoods created, to stigmatize the Protestants, and then the circumstances of England before the Reformation, are contrasted with its state since. Thus, for instance, (p. 37.):—

"Before the Protestant religion began, there were no overseers, no poors-rates, no workhouses." "The parish priests took care of the poor; but when the Protestants got possession of the churches, the lands, and the tythes, the poor were neglected, and thousands died for want of bread."

A list of martyrs is hereabout introduced, who were executed by ELIZABETH in Ireland. Of PATRICK O'KELLY, Bishop of Mayo, and DERMIT O'HURLE, Archbishop of Armagh, he says:—

"They suffered horrible torture previously to their execution—the former had his legs broken with hammers, and needles thrust under his finger nails, the other being obliged to wear for several days jack boots containing a quantity of quick lime and oil. It was not unusual to tear the nails from the fingers of the Catholic prisoners, or to batter the heads of the clergy with sticks and stones till their brains appeared!"

To all this the Son says—

"These are sad fruits of the Protestant religion indeed!"

To which the Father replies—(p. 55)

"Yes: but these are not all: they spoiled the good fruits they found, and they brought in many bad ones. For example, wakes were formerly festivals of the dedication of the parish churches, kept by the Catholics in devotion and penance. But every one knows that the Protestants have turned these times to riot, debauchery, profaneness, drunkenness and every thing that is bad. Moreover, the festivals of Christmas, Easter, Whitsuntide, &c. which the Catholics are taught to keep holy, have been kept up by the protestants, but in a very different manner from what they used to be. They are now nothing but times of idleness, cursing, swearing, fighting, and drunkenness; has so here let me tell you that this detestable vice, drunkenness, has so much increased with the Protestant religion, that J. WARNER says, that in 1688, there were more ale-houses in London alone, than in any ten Catholic towns in Europe, and probably more than served the whole kingdom in Catholic times."

This is a pretty specimen of Popish equivocation and Jesuitical quibbling—as for our fairs, what does MR. BADDELEY think of a carnival? We admit that there are ten times more ale-houses now in London than in Paris or in Rome, because ale is neither sold nor drank on the continent as it is here; but we will give him the full advantage of his juggle, and come to the following matter-of-fact statement:—(p. 56.)

"IT IS A FACT, that every year no less than twenty-five thousand pounds, and the rents of several large estates, are spent by the PROTESTANT GOVERNMENT for the purpose of BUYING UP poor Catholic children, who are transported from their parents, and carried in covered drays, who are transported from their parents, and carried in covered waggons from one end of the kingdom to the other, in order that they may never see their parents any more, and be brought up in the Protestant religion. This abominable practice tends to the violation of the laws of God and of nature: it breaks the ties of affection between parents and their children: and it may often happen, that these unfortunate children may when they are grown up, go back to their own native place and marry their brothers and sisters, or even their own parents without knowing it!!!

To say that this is false, considering that a pure, virtuous, and veracious Popish Priest says it is a fact, would be extremely ungenteel—but as we never happen to have heard of a single occurrence of the sort, we confess it would strengthen MR. BADDELEY'S case if he would mention an instance of any individual whose child has been so abstracted. We remember the case of MISS LOVEDAY at Paris, who was carried off by a Romish Priest and Governess, but we certainly cannot charge our memory with a similar event in England; nor did we ever meet any of the covered waggons in which the poor babes are carried, like calves from Essex, to be made Protestants and sinners.

The old gentleman proceeds to shew the great increase of crime, and of commitments to prison since the year 1805—in that year, he says, the number of commitments were 4605, in 1817, 13,932.

This exposition is somewhat unlucky, for it shews, if it shews anything, that crime has increased with the indulgencies granted to the Catholics, and the increase of power and numbers of Papists—and moreover it forces one to remember that hardly an execution is announced in the papers in which we do not perceive that one or more of the malefactors were Papists, and attended by a priest of their own persuasion—we have no record at hand to refer to, but the frequent recurrence of praises due to MR. DEVEREUX, a Roman Catholic Priest, for his services to the culprits before and at their execution, leads us to believe that a great proportion of our executed countrymen are Papists, which, considering the small proportion they bear to the general population of the country, renders the subject a delicate one, and a reference to it extremely injudicious.

At page 73 he informs us that LUTHER went and lived in adultery with CATHERINE BONE, a fallen nun, and that he was a most excessive drunkard—in so much so that they have this proverb in Germany! "Bibamus Lutheranice."

Now, as everybody knows, this CATHERINE BONE was CATHERINE DE BORE, and so far from living in adultery with her, he married her on the 13th of June, 1525. It is true he was blamed for the marriage, which, however, it is said he entered into, to prove practically his dislike of the Popish tenets, and as a part of his great scheme of opposition to them. ERASMUS certainly traduced LUTHER'S wife in a letter he wrote to his friends, but he retracted what he had advanced, and shortly after declared the report of her having had a child soon after her marriage to be false.

Of CRANMER, the pious Papist says this:—

"Thomas Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury, martyr. This man was a most wicked and perjured wretch; he was guilty of blasphemy, perjury, incontinency, heresy, high-treason, rebellion, and murder!!" and takes the following sweeping review of FOX'S book:—

"Thus, my child, I have gone through only six months of FOX'S martyrs, and I have not mentioned one quarter of his lies: the other six months are quite as bad. You see then what a book this is, which protestants so much brag of. These saints of his were nothing but a set of deluded, rebellious, impious and blasphemous wretches, put to death by the law of the land for their crimes. Many of them were condemned for their lewd lies, conspiracies, rebellion, and murder; some were condemned for witchcraft and conjuring: others for sacrilege and theft, and even for flatly denying Christ himself. In fact, as we read in history, 'to call a man one of FOX'S saints, is become the 'same as to call him a great rogue.' What a pretty set of saints then these are to boast of! I should think every sensible protestant must be ashamed of the saints of his own church. So much then for this famous, or rather for this infamous book of martyrs."

MR. BADDELEY then proceeds to quote every unfortunate accident which has occurred to England since the reformation, as a proof of GOD'S displeasure. Some of the events which he records are new to us, and, independently of their ominous portent, are extremely interesting as matters of fact. We take one or two from pp. 84, 85.

In 1558, says the reverend gentleman, there was a storm at Nottingham, which "beat down all the houses and churches in two towns thereabouts, cast the bells to the outside of the church-yard, and some sheets of lead, 400 feet. The river Trent running between the two towns, the water with the mud at the bottom of the river was carried a quarter of a mile, and dashed against the trees with so great violence, that the trees were torn up by the roots and cast 240 feet. A child was blown out of a man's hand, raised 14 feet into the air, fell about 200 feet from the place and died on the spot. In 1561 the spire of St. Paul's Cathedral, with all the roof, was destroyed by fire from heaven, and this year were many monstrous and hideous births, both of men and cattle. In 1564 a most dreadful pestilence raged through London, and destroyed thousands. In 1571 a dreadful earthquake happened at the east part of Herefordshire, near a little town called Kinaston. On the 17th of February, at six o'clock in the evening, the earth began to open, and a hill with a rock under it, making at first a most hideous bellowing noise, which was heard a long way of, raised itself up a great height into the air, like a balloon, and then began to move forward. It took of sheep feeding there at the same time; the whole field was about 20 acres. Passing along, it overthrew a church standing in the way, removed a yew-tree that was planted in the church-yard from the west unto the east; it likewise drove before it high-ways, hedges, and trees, moved in his way from Sunday, in the evening, till Monday at noon, it then stood still."—(Where it stopped we are not informed.)—"In 1573 something like a ball of fire appeared just above the moon, in the month of November, and continued for 16 months. In 1575, February 24th, being a great frost, after a flood, there came down the river Severn such a swarm of black flies and beetles that the mills were choaked up with them for the space of four days, and then they were only cleansed by digging them out with shovels. The Thames ebbed and flowed twice in one hour; and in November the heavens seemed all on fire," &c. &c. &c.

These are but trifles compared with the other proofs which are adduced of the curse which is entailed upon protestantism—the consequences as they exist at this moment are enumerated with great feeling, in these words:—

"Alas! into what a miserable state has England fallen! An insolvent nation and a PEOPLE OF BANKRUPTS! Do not some of these facts with the Protestant religion? and how much he is offended

We are quite aware of our melancholy state, and of the bitter distress of the country—we are quite conscious of the tyranny of the Government, the barbarity of the King, the folly of his Ministers, and the misery of the times—we were not fully impressed with this conviction, a comparison of the odious oppressions under which we now labour, and the rigorous persecution of our Popish brethren at the present moment, with the mild and gentle reign of that exemplary Catholic and angelic QUEEN MARY, of pious memory, would at once open our eyes to the wretchedness of our condition, which forms a striking contrast indeed to the happiness which the nation, and especially the Protestants, enjoyed under her mild and conciliatory dominion.

At p. 102, the son, even after all these proofs, having still some little doubt upon his mind, puts the following questions, to which his father makes the following answers:—

"Son. Pray has not the Protestant Church the mark of Catholicity few countries, and it is not spread over the whole world.

"Son. But do not the Protestants say that theirs is the Holy Catholic Church, and yours the Roman Catholic Church?

"Father. The persons say this is to blind the ignorant people, but this is not true. That the Protestant religion is not HOLY, I have sufficiently proved in the second mark, Holiness; and that they are not Catholic, I shall prove to you by the following arguments:"

—which, though equally striking with the other parts of the work, we have not room to extract. At p. 112, he observes:—

"The Protestant church has not received her orders from the apostles or their lawful successors; and therefore her persons are not sent, and consequently cannot be true ministers of the church of God."

He further adds, that there are neither BISHOPS nor PRIESTS in the Protestant Church of England. At p. 114, he says:—

"She has no power to administer the Sacrament or preach the word of GOD," —and winds up his remarks upon our Clergy thus:—

"All, who take the priestly office upon themselves, without being by this door, are declared by Christ himself to be thieves and robbers." John 10. v. 1. From this short statement you will see that a man must have a lawful mission or jurisdiction, as well as orders, before he can act as a bishop or priest. Now the Protestant pastors have no lawful mission whatever, and therefore ——" are "thieves and robbers" we suppose; but MR. BADDELEY only leaves us to infer that, and says, "therefore they cannot act as priests in the Church of God."

The Son, at (p. 123.) says—

"I am quite satisfied that the Protestant Church is not the church established by Christ, nor does it seem to me that it could be such a church as God has chosen, for I fear that the Protestant Church, instead of leading men to heaven, will infallibly lead them to hell."

His Father piously replies—

"Ah! my child, these doubts, I fear, are but too well founded," particularly when we consider that Christ has made two things necessary to salvation, viz. true faith and good works, and as we have seen before, that the protestant church has not the true faith, it is impossible that her works can save her."

The following is extremely good:—

"Son. But does not the catholic church forbid the people to read the Bible in English?

"Father. No; the catholic church wishes the people to read the Bible, but then it must be a true copy, and not THE PROTESTANT one WHICH IS FALSE AND CORRUPT, and moreover they must read it with due submission to the catholic church, to whose alone the privilege belongs, to give the true meaning to the Bible."

It is not our intention to do more than call public notice to the author of this pious, tolerant, and amiable work—to observation upon it or its tendency must be needless—of decency we say little, of its veracity nothing; but whenever the reader is staggered by what appears to be a falsehood, let him recur to the fact that our government buy up children and carry them about the country in covered carts, which has so gravely recorded, and judge by that standard the authenticity of the rest of his work. It is the attempt which we notice, it is the spirit which it evinces, and which break out upon every occasion, and at all times and seasons, and which if suffered to obtain the ascendency it seeks, and to which it is gradually and insidiously attaining, would re-visit the land with acts of blood and barbarity at which, while reading the horrors of popish cruelty, the heart sickens, and the blood runs cold.

IT is said that the MARQUESS OF HASTINGS will succeed the late MARQUESS CORNWALLIS as Master of the Stag Hounds.

IT is with feelings of regret we find ourselves called upon to lay before the public a narrative of facts, full of horror and misery, which are daily and hourly occurring under the sanction of the law in the heart of this great metropolis. It is impossible that we should longer remain silent, and we do sincerely hope that the statement we have to make, will introduce MR. PEEL to call forthwith for official information upon the subject. To one whose goodness and amiability in all the relations of life are proverbial, we are convinced the appeal will not be made in vain.

The extraordinary, we will not say rash, patronage which the newly invented machine called the Tread Mill has met with from the highest, wisest, and mildest of those best calculated, one would think, to judge of its effect and advantages, has always startled us; but as our object at the present moment is not to argue as to its moral operation upon prisoners, nor even upon its physical results to them generally, we shall, at least for the present, waive the objection which we think we could effectually make to its introduction into prisons, and speak of that, which, while we are perusing the papers which have been submitted to us on the subject, fills us with horror, grief, and shame!

What the physical effects of this Tread Wheel may be upon men, it is even yet difficult to determine. In answer to the circular letter of MR. PEEL to the magistrates of counties where it has been in use, communications have been made and published, by which, generally speaking, it appears no serious consequences have yet resulted to the males; but our readers, we dare say, are not prepared to hear that this humane improvement of prison discipline is at this moment applied to women in the House of Correction in Cold Bath Fields, after the most decided and incontestible proofs have been afforded by experience of its destructive tendency to their constitutions.

SIR JOHN COX HIPPISLEY, who has very humanely interested himself upon the subject, has published a work on the subject, in which, at p. 95, he inserts a letter from DR. MASON GOODE, dated October 21, 1822, in which (for obvious reasons we do not quote it,) he describes the most dreadful consequences as likely to result from the labour of females on the Tread Mill.

In consequence of the straining and exertion, many of the females in Cold Bath Fields were frequently compelled suddenly to descend from their task, and so dreadful and degrading were the consequences, that they were exempted from the labour until answers had been received to the circular letter of the Secretary of State, when they were again ordered to partake of this repulsive discipline.

It is impossible to describe the state of the unhappy women at this moment—suffice it to say, that their hands are, in first instance, blistered; that they then become hard and horny, and unfit for any of that work which is suited to the sex; that the results of the labour upon the constitutions of these poor sufferers are such as to render it necessary to erect screens, axle high, upon the wheels, and to change the taskmasters for matrons, who are necessitated to superintend this elaborated torture of their own sex, under circumstances of the most galling degradation.

Our information upon this subject is derived from the most authentic source, and we find the statements made to us, fully corroborated by SIR J. C. HIPPISLEY, at p. 33 of his work; and although we intend to-day to confine our observations to female discipline, the account of SIR JOHN'S visit to the House of Correction, as relates to both sexes, is extremely important and interesting; we therefore give it nearly entire.

"To ascertain, however, whether any actual change has in any way been produced in the effects complained of since our visit of last year, I have once more accepted of your invitation, and at the time of writing this, have just returned from the House of Correction at Cold Bath Fields, to which I had the honour of being accompanied both by yourself and Mr. COLE, who took a part in the examination we entered into, and to whom I appeal, as well as to yourself, for the accuracy of the following brief account of it. The wheels were at work on our arrival in all the yards, still idly expending their power, and that of their workers, in the air. The hour was half past eleven in the morning, the thermometer at 60 deg. Fahrenheit, with a cool and easy breeze, which many have complained of as being chilly, veering from north to south-west. We examined the subterranean machinery, which, with the ponderous fly above, was working at a fearfully rapid rate, notwithstanding the slow-paced motion of the principal shaft. The men were on duty on the wheels in their respective yards, and the report is true that the shaft has again broken, forming a fifth instance of failure; and other workers been again thrown upon their backs on the inclined platform, and must in some instances have fallen through to the stone pavement, some ten or twelve feet below, had not the present vigilant Governor, in anticipation of such an accident, prudently ordered the middle hatch-ways to be closed.* We inspected the men as they descended in rotation from the wheel, at the end of the quarter of an hour's task-work, and made room for fresh relays. Every one of them was perspiring, some in a dripping sweat. On asking them separately, and at a distance from each other, where was the chief stress of labour, they stated in succession, and without the least variation, that they suffered great pain in the calf of the leg, and in the ham; while most of them, though not all, complained of distress also in the instep. On examining the bottom of their shoes, it was manifest that the line of tread had not extended farther than from the extremity of the toes to about one-third of the bottom of the foot; for, in several instances the shoes were new, and between this line and the heel, altogether unsoiled: a fact, however, that was as obvious from the position of the foot, while at work, as from the appearance of the shoe at rest. Several of the workers seemed to aim at supporting their weight by bringing the heel into action, the feet being twisted outwards; and on inquiring why this was not oftener accomplished, the reply was, that though they could gain a little in this way, it was with so painful a stress on the knees, that they could only try it at occasionally. The palms of their hands, in consequence of holding tight to the rail, were in every instance hardened, in many horny, in some blistered, and discharging water. The keeper, who accompanied us, admitted the truth of all these statements, and added, that it was the ordinary result of the labour, and that use did not seem to render it less severe; for those who had been confined long appeared to suffer nearly, or altogether as much as those who were new to the work: thus confirming a remark I long since took the liberty of making to you, I mean that, when an organ is directed to any kind of labour, for which it is not naturally intended, no perseverance will ever give it facility of action, or take off the original distress.

"The females we found again at work upon the Wheel; for, with a strange countermanding of indulgence, they were again ordered to brave all the mischievous consequences which had been proved to ensue, and apparently to undergo a new set of experiments: while, as though in full consciousness of what must follow, the Visiting Magistrate had endeavoured to prepare against some of the indecency heretofore complained of, by exchanging males for female keepers, and raising a linen screen a few feet above the platform, so as to hide the ancles. Here also the same effects of perspiration, the same complaints of pain in the instep, calf of the legs and hams, were repeated as in the male side; to which the female keeper added a very horrible pain in the loins, that generally and very greatly distressed them; and which, she candidly told us, was in most cases the fore-runner of carried to an alarming excess, and productive of considerable weakness. The perspiration, however, existing among the females, is often very oppressive; and one of them, not long since, fell down to the platform in a fainting fit; the keeper herself seemed deeply to feel for them; her language was, that they often had not as dry thread belonging to them; and she added, you would be surprised, Sir, at seeing how often the finest of them, after having been a few weeks at work, are worn down and emaciated. I inquired whether even on this account she did not feel it necessary to recommend, at times, a few days relaxation, that they might recover themselves; and she admitted that she was not unfrequently compelled to do so. The palms of their hands here, as in the case of the males, were hardened, or horny, and in far more instances blistered, the leathery skin in some cases peeling off, and exposing a sore surface beneath. For all kinds of needlework, and other delicate descriptions of manual labour, they seem to be completely unfitted, and the keeper allowed that they were almost always rendered useless for such purposes."

* "The hatch-ways are now removed to the end of the galleries. Among other smaller casualties, a woman fell down the hatch-way, having previously fallen in a fit, from the head of the wheel upon the floor."

We think we have said enough to rouse the feelings of those whose influence must have its effect—the subject actually haunts us. A woman, let it be recollected, is liable to the TREAD-MILL for walking in the public streets at night, for sleeping in the open air when she has no roof to shelter her, for the vice of vagrancy, or for the crime of begging—to see a poor creature set to such disproportioned labour, her delicate frame torn and worn down by excess of unnatural exertion, her constitution destroyed, and herself deprived even of the very means of obtaining an honest livelihood after her release, by a systematic, authorised, legalised torture, is indeed in England a sight so full of horror, that we do believe it needs only to be known to the Government to be abolished.

It is true the Tread Mill is the favourite child of modern philanthropy, and that names of the highest respectability are to be found in the list of its advocates. We shall resume the subject next week as relates to the SYSTEM GENERALLY, because of its legality or the moral effects of this terrible work upon prisoners we have no room here to treat; but in the mean time we call in a loud voice upon those who have the power and authority to investigate the facts which we have this day brought forward.

SLAVERY.

IN addition to the numerous letters which have been published—the proclamations which have been issued, and the remonstrances which have been made against the awful effects of the canting debates upon slavery, we have this day received the following from NEVIS:—

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM NEVIS, DATED JULY 5, 1823.

"The late discussions in Parliament on the question so momentous to all who have any concern in the colonies, has caused an agitation in the minds of every individual in this community which cannot easily be described. We are indeed on the brink of a volcano which threatens destruction to us all! Whatever may be the fate which awaits me, I reflect with consolation at this moment on the efforts which I have invariably made to render the situation of the Slaves who have been placed under my care as comfortable and happy as my means permitted. I have endeavoured to impress on my mind that the duties between master and slave were reciprocal, and I hope I can with propriety appeal to the evidence of the parties themselves to bear me out in the assertion of having for upwards of thirty years conducted myself towards them on the principle of a parent towards its child. In this I stand we are ready to meet the wishes of Government to the full extent of the resolutions passed in the House of Commons on the 15th of May last. I fear, however, that nothing short of the sacrifice of every white inhabitant, and thereby rendering these colonies a desolation, will satisfy the enthusiastic feelings of the infatuated and deluded people of England. To us the pillow affords no rest, and the couch gives only a fresh scope to the indulgence of our agonies and sufferings. May our fate be a warning to all those who in future repose any confidence in the sanctity of an Act of Parliament."

CHARGES of the most revolting and abominable nature have been made against a most popular Evangelical preacher. Had such circumstance occurred to involve a clergyman of the established church, the radical and opposition prints would have rung with them long before this. Will it be believed that this Saint, who has quitted his ordinary residence, is advertised to preach two sermons this very day?

WE have received the following letter, which we insert without hesitation. We know nothing of the circumstances further than as they are stated; and with our usual wish to be impartial, our next number will be equally open to any counter-statement or reply from the other parties to the affair.

As the case stands, we must be permitted, however, to observe, that the dismissal of a public servant from an office which he has for more than half a century filled with credit and satisfaction to every body interested, does appear to be a measure of unprecedented hardship, nor does the manner of inflicting so severe a blow at all deteriorate from its severity.

TO JOHN BULL.

At seventeen years many their fortunes seek;
But at four score it is too late a week.

MR. EDITOR,—A matter is coming before the public, and I am anxious that truth should accompany the first impression.

MR. JAMES BRANDON, Boxkeeper at Covent Garden Theatre, since the close of the theatre has had orders from the lessees, MR. C. KEMBLE, MR. WILLETT, and CAPTAIN FORBES, to quit the situation he has held during fifty-five years, and also to leave his house, which is the property of the theatre. BUT, in consideration of his long services he was to be allowed an annuity of 140*l.* a year in addition to his salary, which was 60*l.* But it appears that this annuity was to come out of the pockets of the whole of the proprietors and not the lessees, beyond their own proportion in the property; consequently, MR. HARRIS would have to pay a hundred and twenty pounds, and MR. CONST another portion, leaving a mere trifle for MESSRS. FORBES, KEMBLE, and WILLETT to pay, who were the parties that had discharged him. On this MR. HARRIS remonstrated against the cruelty of turning a man at the age of three-score and ten into the world, who had ever devoted his heart and soul, it might be said, to the interest of the theatre (which is manifest to all who ever had occasion to know BRANDON.) He therefore refused to subscribe to an act to which he was decidedly averse, and begged of them, if he had any influence, to re-consider the matter, and keep the old man on the few years he had to live, which, according to the course of nature, could not be very long. This was refused on the ground that BRANDON had forfeited their confidence, and the place was promised to MR. ROBERTSON, the new treasurer. He was then told he must quit the house, and that without delay, which was written to BRANDON by the said MR. ROBERTSON, which induced BRANDON to go to his friend, MR. G. ROBINS, of Covent-garden, and state his grief's at length, which he had not done before; and the Messrs. KEMBLE, FORBES, and WILLET had any thing to charge against his conduct, to bring him before these gentlemen, and state to his face what he had done, and if he had deserved this treatment let them inflict it; if not, in God's name not to break his heart by thrusting him, at his time of life, into the world like a thief and a vagabond. MR. ROBINS did so; he saw MR. KEMBLE and CAPT. FORBES, who refused to bring any other charge against him, than that it was their wish that he should leave; and upon MR. ROBINS appealing to the hardship of the case, and that as they did not give him wages, at least but 60*l.* a year, that BRANDON was as much the servant of the public as theirs; and that the public might think so, as they had ordered MR. HARRIS to discharge this man on the memorable O. P. business, which was done; and he was also reinstated again by consent of the public; all of which appeared to make such an impression on the new managers as induced them to promise MR. ROBINS that they would re-consider his proposal, which was, that they should allow him 200*l.* out of their own pockets. This, for fifty-five years hard and faithful service, with a wife and three daughters to turn into the world with, was not thought too much, particularly when it was the sum first proposed by themselves, if it had not been to come out of their own pockets. A few days after, the said MR. ROBERTSON came to MR. G. ROBINS, and said they would allow MR. B. 150*l.* out of their own pockets, if he would quit the house within forty-eight hours, and give HIM possession of it. MR. ROBINS naturally asked for his authority for making the offer, and he had no other reply than his word. MR. ROBINS said he must treat with the principals, as was usual with him, and declined a reply till he had the means of doing so. But in the interim, MR. ROBERTSON, eager to possess himself of his new station, on seeing the door open, when BRANDON was from home yesterday, forced himself into the house, with several other men, and turned BRANDON'S servants into the street, holding full possession of the house, with poor JEM BRANDON'S bed, chairs, tables, clothes, and every thing he had in the world; and in this state he hung about the premises he once enjoyed as sole monarch in his way, till his friend, MR. ROBINS, opened his door to him, and finding access from the top of one house to the garret window of the other, (which the besiegers had incautiously left open) marched a party into the house, who came down stairs, turned the new box-keeper, MR. ROBERTSON, and his friends, into the street, and invested BRANDON with his bed, &c. for the night; and in this deplorable state, subject to these attacks, remains the veteran of Covent Garden Theatre, under the new management; and as it will doubtless bring the old man soon to his grave (for he is too old to transplant with MISS STEPHENS, LISTON, &c. to Drury Lane) let me hope that you will judge of him with charity, and if you find, upon investigation, that he deserves it, speak a kind word for him to the public, on whom it appears he must throw himself for support during the remnant, or, rather the fag end of an industrious, but not a fortunate life.—And am, dear Sir, yours faithfully,

AN OLD RENTER OF COVENT GARDEN THEATRE.

Bolton-street, Piccadilly, Thursday, 21st Aug. 1823.

EDINBURGH REVIEW.

WE have long witnessed, as it may be supposed with no small share of self-gratulation, the successful fruits of our exertions in the cause of ENGLISH PRINCIPLES, against the innovating spoilers, who, in their several scarcely distinguishable grades of LIBERAL, WHIG, JACOBIN, and RADICAL, have for some years past been toiling to undermine or root them out. We have truly enjoyed the confusion and consternation into which these men have been thrown, by the return into their own camp of the HAND-GRENADES, of which they considered themselves the patentees, with the exclusive right of hurling them at random against all who dissented from the creed of their faction.

We have gloried in making these exclusionists, whose watch-word was the FREEDOM OF THE PRESS, as long as it was only exercised as a tyranny over the loyal and moral portion of the community, WINCE under the tortures they themselves had wantonly inflicted; and we could not "choose but laugh," when in the bitterness of their agony they began to declaim against the licentiousness of public writers, and to prose and moralise upon the virulence of party journals!!

All this we confess, and feel no shame in avowing—but we are too honest to claim a merit which does not belong to us. We cannot at this time of day be supposed to entertain any very exalted notions of WHIG MORALITY; but we could never have anticipated from a party, boasting individuals of high rank and birth, and of honourable character in their private relations, a dark, atrocious, and premeditated attempt to stigmatise a political opponent, whom they lacked spirit or ability to encounter in the open field, and to insinuate against him crimes at which human nature shudders, in order to disgust or frighten away his partisans and supporters from him! This we confess we could not have believed but from experience—although the boundaries of WHIG hostility and WHIG calumny have never been very nicely or distinctly defined. It affords, however, a delicious commentary upon the sensitive abhorrence which the party now express against "the licentiousness of public writers, and the virulence of the party press!"

But the failure of this "ASSASSINATION PLOT" has led to another exposure of WHIGGERY—which, we repeat, we could not, with all our experience of its charlatanarie—its shifts and expedients, have ventured to anticipate. We thought the rogues had enough of that "mother wit," which, with their conversance in the hacknied tricks of THE PRESS, would have been sufficient to guard them against an official acknowledgment of defeat, and too much savoir vivre to appear as suppliants, exhibiting their scars and wounds before the people in order to excite their commiseration, because they have no longer the power of lashing them into subjugation! All that could be done by their chronicles and ephemeral hirelings to vent their spleen upon finding their schemes frustrated, and their want of principle exposed, was naturally to be expected; and as in such productions all sorts of tools, from senators to shilling paragraphers, are employed, it was easy for the more aristocratic leaders of the party to shake off all apparent connection with their minor agents by a significant shrug of the shoulders, or a whispered disclaimer when the decencies of life were outraged—BUT that the main prop of the party—the official depository of their philosophical and political speculations—even in its state of decadence and aniility, should be made the vehicle of their complaints against the Freedom of the Press, because it has been effectual to their discomfiture—that the unfortunate MR. JEFFREY should be compelled by a Kensington edict to expose the alarms of the party, and pusillanimously disavow the VERY PRINCIPLES upon which his Review was founded in order to transfer the odium due to their original transgression to those whose only crime—if it be made out to its uttermost extent—is having taken out of their hands the weapons they first forged, and at length turned them victoriously against THEMSELVES.

This we are ready to admit was a "consummation most devoutly to be wished"—but which our most sanguine hopes had never ventured to anticipate.

But the mode of doing the thing exceeds even the weakness of doing it at all. It is, indeed, a portentous sign of approaching dissolution, and, if there were a grain of religious sentiment to be found among the fraternity, we might consider it as a sort of confession in articulo mortis, founded like too many graver confessions on the remorseful gnawings of conscience. The article itself, occupying twenty-nine close printed pages, is laboured with all the trickery of the art of reviewing—it has no specific work for critical analysis, its "heading" is as original as its object, and contains merely the titles of certain newspapers, magazines, &c., with "The Periodical Press" for its own running title.

With all this note of preparation, do our readers imagine that the "Periodical Press" is really the object of this article?—Not a whit of it—POOR JOHN BULL, who is studiously unnamed, is the WHOLE, SOLE, and EXCLUSIVE object contemplated from the beginning to the end.—Secrets are not well kept where so many under devils are employed—and the triumphant anticipations of "a review that was to give the death blow to BULL," found their way through Hyde Park Corner long ere the blue and yellow article was concocted by the little Scotch Advocate.

We confess, as we have before done, that we even doubted the truth of the report, though well authenticated—or at least conceived that "second thoughts," or a protest from poor JEFFREY, who was thus called upon to hang himself in terrorem against all future state libellers, would have prevented the final execution of so arrant a piece of folly.—All we can say further on this head is, that the WHIGS are greater fools than we took them for, and must be prepared to be laughed at accordingly.

To blind their readers to the primary, and indeed only object of their lucubrations, a prosy and sophistical essay is elaborated, to prove that because great works in literature, as well as the arts, exist in sufficient numbers to employ the intellect and excite the admiration of the existing generation, it is worse than folly for men in future either to cultivate genius or labour at improvement. They are only born to criticise what has been done before them—that is, they are to read nothing but the EDINBURGH REVIEW, because the editor comes to the notable conclusion that "periodical criticism is favourable to periodical criticism." Prodigious!

The unfortunate editor, drawing his inference from his associates in the Parliament Close, the Wynds of Auld Reekie, or the bas bleu coteries through which he is lionized once a year in the metropolis, represents social life in England as choaked up with metaphysical and didactic disputations, to the utter banishment of wit, and the livelier sallies of the festive board. Poor man, we pity him for the society he has been obliged to keep. If he had not early committed the sin of WHIGGERY, we could give him something happier, by way of specimen, among Tory symposiasts. But this is not all—we have index hunting explorations—and collations of criticisms upon French and English tragedy—all of which has as much to do with the list of newspapers and magazines at the head of the article as they have with original criticism—but, as usual, the reader was to be bothered, and led through a labyrinth terminating in a vista, to be suddenly exhibited, in order to increase its effect!

After ten pages of this abominable trash, from which even playful BLASPHEMY is not excluded, the editor is reminded of the task which yet remains to be performed—and as if by an effort to raise his courage "to the sticking-place," he turns from his solemn prosing with a sort of hop, step, and jump—as if he were at golf on his native links—and exclaiming—"Is not this life too, sweet—would we change it for the former if we could?"—But the great point is, that we cannot—therefore let REVIEWS flourish—(a fair advertisement!)—"let magazines increase and multiply—let the daily and weekly newspapers live for ever!" "WE—(that is, MR. JEFFREY and Co.)—are optimists in literature, and hold, WITH CERTAIN LIMITATIONS, that in this respect, whatever is, is right."

That even an Edinburgh Reviewer should have the effrontery to make his advances against what the WHIGS now call the licentiousness of the press, by the following admission, is sufficiently indicative of that contempt of consistency and principle, which we have so often had occasion to charge upon them:—

"It has been urged as one fatal objection against periodical criticism, that it is too often made the engine of party spirit and party invective."

He infers the necessity of this consequence from the existing state of the press, but he evades the only real points at issue—namely, the causes which have contributed to place the press in that state. We affirm, with proofs and documents ready to produce in evidence, that this distempered state is attributable to this very man, Jeffrey, and his Whig employers, and to them alone, who first originated in this country a system founded on the demoralizing and disorganizing principles of the FRENCH ENCYCLOPEDISTS, and under the form of a review, blending and interweaving their mischievous speculations in religion, government, and morals, with the general topics of the day—poisoned the very sources of literature, in order to penetrate and taint the sacredness and purity of private life!

Genius was blasted in its bud—talent depreciated—merit contemned, and virtue calumniated, if engrafted on a real love of country and our national institutions—what of that!—The novelty of the trick ensured it temporary success, and the prime plunderer of our principles and our purses boasts that "the only authors, who, as a class, are not starving are periodical essayists, as almost the only writers who can keep their reputation (qu. heads) above water, are anonymous critics!"—that is, the art of reviewing, with which he purposes to supersede all the efforts of original genius, is but a hollow cover for political and personal libel—and that its great recommendation is its enabling men who could not otherwise keep their heads—let it be reputation if he please—above water—to revel in all the enjoyments of life by becoming the purchased hirelings of a faction or a sect!

The poor man, however, in spite of this sensation of being safely above water, seems every moment to dread the plunge he is about to make, and enters a sort of caveat against being drawn into a repetition of it. "We consider this article however," (he exclaims) "as an exception to our general rules of criticizing, and protest against its being turned into a precedent! for, if our several contemporaries were to criticize ONE AUTHOR as a constant habit, there would be no end of repeated reflections," &c. This may also be taken as a protest against REVIEWERS being REVIEWED, and a very natural apprehension on the part of the writer may have suggested it:—but it may escape the casual reader, and must therefore be especially noted, that the expression of ONE AUTHOR—when no previous mention has been made of a single individual—when the review of the several editors of journals has not even been entered upon—when no suspicion of any ONE AUTHOR being in the eye of even the writer himself, could have insinuated itself into the mind of a reader, can be referred to nothing but the pre-occupied imagination of Mr. Reviewer, big and running over with the object he was now at last approaching—just like the poor girl who was warned not to mention noses before Mr. Such-a-one, who had been over bountifully supplied by nature with the article in question—and who, in her eagerness to avoid the fault, requested him to make a long nose, instead of a long arm, for something she wanted at table.

The ice is, however, at length broken. "The MORNING CHRONICLE" is described as a sort of luminary over which—on account of some recent purchase—the WHIGS are not quite sure of securing a paramount controul; and therefore an affectation of impartiality is exhibited, whilst ALL ITS PRINCIPLES are advocated. The TIMES, not being a sure card to the WHIGS, and being a more mercenary speculator, is not treated with much respect; and the NEW TIMES is, according to the Edinburgh system, allowed only sufficient merit to entitle it to utter reprobation for its mischievous principles—that is, for its loyalty to the Government and attachment to the Constitution. The COURIER is described as something quite beneath the criticism of this sovereign dispenser of public favour;—it has never blasphemed GOD—nor endeavoured to cover the advances of Jacobinism towards the Throne. Not so, "The EXAMINER." This ungrammatical auxiliary of Cockney liberalism and handmaid to my LORD BYRON, stands next to "COBBETT," whom the writer places at the head of the "weekly journalists," because, as he admits, the host of Edinburgh were not able to write him down, as they attempted to do, when he exposed the tricks of Whiggery, and made them a public laughing-stock in rejecting their alliance; argal—he must be the first of journalists! It is a happy expression, and ought not to be taken from this worthy reviewer. that the EXAMINER,—"next in talent to COBBETT, is much before him in MODERATION and STEADINESS OF PRINCIPLE!!!"

Our readers may now discern what the WHIGS mean by moderation! when it recommends this moderate and steadily principled journal as the "ablest and most respectable of the publications which issue from the weekly press." Why so shy, good Mr. JEFFREY, of the connexion? Why not add, that the contributors to this most respectable and moderate journal, are also contributors to the "EDINBURGH REVIEW," and certainly not the least respectable among them, when their cockneyisms and orthography are corrected under your superintending care!

Some more journals are named, but to be dismissed, but the smothered flame burst forth when the Editor "apprehends these are the chief of the weekly journals"—knowing, as he does, that THE ONE he fears to name, has a more extensive sale and circulation than any one he has enumerated, and three-fold—nay, ten-fold that, of the far greater part of them! But he adds—"there are others that have become notorious for qualities, that ought to have consigned them long ago to the hands of the common hangman."

This is the second advance, and in decent language for a reformer of scurrility, towards POOR BULL—but even here he starts back at the shade he has conjured up, and drugs himself and his readers, with some facetiæ of coarse domestic manufacture about "oysters and whiskey," in order more valiantly to enunciate the awful discovery so recently made, that "the illiberality of the periodical press is the sin that most easily besits it."—The abuse, however, he goes on to say, "has grown to a height that renders it desirable that it should be CRUSHED, if it cannot be corrected!!!"

Now, we do earnestly request our readers to recollect that this is the solemnly and deliberatly recorded sentiment of the WHIGS—in whose hands, for nearly the whole of the last thirty years, have been centered and monopolized the power and influence of the PUBLIC PRESS—who in this VERY REVIEW have laboured not only to smother all the nobler feelings of our nature—all those sacred attachments which have bound us together as a nation of freemen and christian patriots, but by all the combined art of LIBEL, INTIMIDATION, and CALUMNY, have constantly pointed out specifically to public ridicule or execration every individual who has dared to write, or think, or act for himself, in opposition to their new-fangled theories. Let it be remarked, also, that the journals, which in the very article before us are selected, and extolled for their moderation and principle, have been repeatedly convicted for personal libels upon the highest characters in the state, that their columns are one continued register of calumny and vituperation against all who profess themselves the friends of Government, or the supporters of "things as they are"—that in no one instance has this Reviewer or his cabal ever stood forward to protest against, much less to arrest the progress of forward to protest against, much less to arrest the progress of this systematical depreciation of principles and morals UNTIL their own intemperate excesses roused a few honourable men from the general lethargy which despair of success against so well-organized a system had engendered—and returned the "poisoned chalice to their own lips."

Nay, is it not fresh in the recollection of all, that when the Government complained of the daring and outrageous—the blasphemous and disorganizing libels disseminated throughout the country, THESE VERY MEN—these WHIGS, who WINCE under the first retort upon their tyranny, reproached them for their apprehensions, and declared that THE PRESS was as open to one party as another, and that all restraint was unconstitutional, where the means of counteraction were in the hands of those who chose to advocate the cause of Government and Religion! What—let this Mr. JEFFREY answer—what would his employers, in or out of the House, have said, had my LORD LIVERPOOL or MR. CANNING risen in their places and observed, that "the abuse had grown to a height that rendered it desirable that it should be crushed, if it could not be corrected!!!"

But we have still much behind, and too little space before us to admit of finishing all we have to say to-day—the subject must be resumed—for although we can enjoy the laugh raised by the fears, and trimming, and shirking of these "DEPOSED DESPOTS," who absolve us from all feelings of pity by the abjectness of their conduct under a reverse of fortune, the public must be put on its guard against their arts and intrigues, which are daily and hourly at work REALLY TO CRUSH, if they cannot—as they have proved they cannot—WRITE IT DOWN.

THEATRICALS.

THE Haymarket managers at their old tricks again—advertizing pieces and not producing them on the night fixed—this has an air of imposition which we are liberal enough really to believe it is not intended to practise; we certainly know that these postponements are of serious inconvenience to persons in the country at short distances from London, who make their arrangements and take journies to enjoy the pleasures of a "first night;" those who are less considerate than we, imagine that the novelty is advertised to induce people to take places, which places, when taken, the managers presume to imagine they will come and fill whether the novelty is actually brought forward or not.

What we believe to be the truth is, that the manager, anxious to get out what is likely to produce money, hurries on, by every means in his power, the preparation of new pieces, and in order to shew that he is a man of authority, and moreover in earnest, he advertizes his farce for performance on a particular night—before the actors know a word of their parts, and in some instances before the parts are even written out. This is all bad—the premature exhibition of such a farce as "Fish out of Water," which is a translation from the French Cook and Secretary, would be its destruction; where dialogue and language are out of the question, and the fate of the drama hangs upon the expertness and collectedness of the players—if one of the hits hangs fire, or one of the situations gets clubbed, the whole affair falls to the ground.

The plot—as it is called—of "Fish out of Water," is founded upon the single incident of a nobleman's advertizing for a cook and a secretary at the same time; and the incidents arise out of their characters being confounded, and their avocations mistaken. We suppose MR. LUNN, the translator, will, to oblige the English audience, introduce a pair of pining lovers, for the purpose of warbling a couple of songs and a duett, and we have no doubt of its perfect success.

There have been off the stage "wars and rumours of wars" in the theatrical world, in which the monarchs of Drury Lane and the Haymarket have taken arms against the Lyceum republic. The crowned heads to which we allude, are of opinion that the republic in the Strand is outstepping the licence which was granted to it for playing operas and burlettas, by acting a Farce—it being specified, as some great authorities say, that every dramatic piece acted at the Lyceum, shall contain at least four or six (we cannot say which) pieces of music in each act, and it being a fact that the farce called MONSIEUR TONSON, so far from containing any thing like the requisite proportion of music, contains no music at all, and is moreover neither an opera nor a burletta, but a Farce.

Great and rigorous measures were spoken of in the cabinets of the Theatrical alliance, and KING ROBERT, of Drury, and KING DAVID, of the Haymarket, did fulminate threats of constables, Bow-street, and even the watch-house, against every man, woman, or child, who should conspire in the abominable crime of acting MONSIEUR TONSON. MATHEWS, it was supposed, would in lieu of imitating others, be compelled to take himself off, and the morning of Monday was expended in council. Such was the agitation that we expected serious results; but we were agreeably disappointed—MATHEWS appeared securely before a delighted audience, who received him with shouts of applause and welcome.

Since Monday he has repeated his various Monopololugues with the happiest effect, and undisturbed, except by TOM KING. MONSIEUR TONSON has made the sides of many a citizen ache with laughter. MATHEWS himself appears improved in health by his voyage, and certainly his spirits have recovered from the depression they were likely to suffer from the raging of fevers, the burning of towns, the falling of trees, and the blowing of hurricanes; we never saw him more active, more lively, more rapidly versatile, more perfectly joyous: his exertions have been repaid by the most gratifying marks of approbation.

In closing this article, and while upon the subject, in order to shew our readers the implicit reliance to be placed upon the reports and observations of the gentlemen of the press, we will extract two paragraphs which appeared on Friday—one in the TIMES, the other in the POST, not as bearing in the smallest degree upon MR. MATHEWS'S talents, nor upon the manner in which they say those talents are rewarded, but merely for the sake of calling public attention to the manner in which the same fact is stated in two different journals on the same day.

"ENGLISH OPERA HOUSE.—MATHEWS has started with his usual popularity. The houses continue to be crowded, and brilliantly attended. His performance of M. Morbleu is a master-piece.
MORNING POST, Friday, Aug. 22, 1823.

"ENGLISH OPERA HOUSE.—MR. MATHEWS last night appeared as the hero of the monopololugue La Diligence. He performed seven characters with very great spirit; but we are sorry to say that but few spectators of his excellence. If his merit were to be estimated in proportion to the numbers which his performances on the first night have congregated, we should at once declare him the first of mimics, and the least tolerable of actors. We, however, consider him as a man of very considerable comic genius, can only impute his present non-attractibility to one of those changes in the public atmosphere for which we feel it just as difficult to account as the variation of the needle."
TIMES, same day.

These are not bad specimens of that fidelity and impartiality, that independence and truth, which render the liberty of the press in England of such vital importance, and make the names and characters of the "Gentlemen" who conduct the public papers so extremely respectable all over the world.

The BALLOON affair, at White Conduit House, to be sure is not theatrical; but while we are on the subject of the journals, it may not be amiss to quote the account of the examination of that day's sport from the TIMES and CHRONICLE of Tuesday, which, while it will give our readers some idea of the state of things at ISLINGTON, will afford another proof of the undoubted advantages arising from the fashionable institutions of the periodical enlighteners of the national understanding, and the judicious directors of public taste.

"The uproar began with cries of 'Shame,' 'Hoax,' 'Sell,' and repeated vociferations for MR. GRAHAM. MR. GRAHAM appearing, the mob proceeded to take summary vengeance for their loss of time and disappointment. The field in which they stood, particularly that part of it which is opposite to the gardens, and between Penton-street and Richard-street, unhappily abounded with the fragments of old walls and new bricks, being in the immediate neighbourhood of some houses that have been pulled down, and others building. At first the populace contented themselves with throwing bricks and mud at the fence or palings; but their irritation increased, when they discovered how weak was the force of the police in. Tremendous volleys of stones, brickbats, and rubbish were then against the fence, and into the gardens. Glass, tiles, &c. were shivered into fragments; and three or four of the most active among the mob then cross ed a dry ditch that intervened between them and the gardens, and began to tear down with the utmost fury the palings that surrounded the fence. The fence itself began in many parts to the trees, for a long time resisted this assault; ten or twelve men coming to the aid of the first assailant, and grasping it altogether, by dint of continued exertion tore it backwards and forwards, soon brought a considerable portion to the ground. The breach that was now effected discovered a few stables who were placed behind the trees; and once or twice observed them make a sortie; but, to all appearances, very unsuccessfully, the immense numerical superiority of the mob compelled them hastily to retire. Animated by the cheers and other expressions of exultation which proceeded from those who were on the look-out, the boldest among the rioters now renewed their work of destruction under cover of another tremendous volley, which seemed for some time to effect a complete clearance in the gardens. Notwithstanding the assistance of the officers, and some desperate conflicts which took place with them, the mischievous perseverance of the rioters was not to be quelled; and sometimes renewing the attack, and at others desisting, they at length succeeded, we are sorry to state, in leaving the whole of the fence opposite the fields, and some young trees then attached to them. Never was destruction more complete. The path now rushed in, pell-mell," &c. &c. &c.

Thus saith the TIMES, and, strange to say, saith truth—let us observe what the CHRONICLE gives us on the same subject.

"The amazing concourse of persons outside amused themselves throughout the day in the best manner they could. It certainly reflects much credit upon their patience and forbearance, that after a disappointment so unlooked for and so grievous, those assembled thousands separated without any breach of the peace, and without any expression of discontent, but what, under the circumstances, were conjured mild and temperate."

We only ask, is not this quite perfect?—and yet this sort of thing happens every day, if people would only give themselves the trouble to detect it.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR—Through your efficient mediation, I feel confident I shall not plead in vain to the liberality of the Court of Directors of the honourable East India Company, in behalf of a small body of their military servants, whose deserts are too well known to require panegyric here—more instance alone, do they appear to have escaped that notice, which weight and length of service seldom fail to attain from their opulent and generous employers.

I allude to that class of officers, who, through ill health and infirmities consequent on service in India, have been compelled to relinquish their prospects there, and retire to England on the pittance of half-pay. Will it be believed, MR. EDITOR, that this allowance to the Company's officers remains the same as was established for the King's service a century ago? Will it be credited, that the munificent East India Company have not accorded to their prematurely worn out officers the increase that His Majesty so graciously conceded to his, some years since? Captains, after twenty years hard service in India, are still receiving the old half-pay of five shillings per diem, when by the last regulation it is fixed by Government at SEVEN. This difference may perhaps arise from an oversight of the Honourable Court, and which will become apparent, when, in accordance with the late Act of Parliament, they become the paymasters for retired allowances, &c. to the King's officers who have served in India—when it will devolve upon the Court to pay seven shillings to a Captain in that service, (perhaps seven years a soldier), and to their own of equal rank, but under degree of servitude, they will be dispensing FIVE!

Did the act of justice now strenuously, but respectfully solicited from the Honourable Court, (the equalization of the half-pay), cause any seriously increased charge on their well-filled treasury, the directors might consider it their duty to consult the Proprietary at large; but when it is known that the number of their retired officers does not exceed four hundred, (150 Captains, the remainder Field officers and Subalterns), the annual difference of expence will be below the consideration of a General Court, but certainly the highest boon in store for those individuals, whose services to the Company have rendered them prematurely disqualified them for other duties.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your obliged humble servant,

GENUINE STORIES.

Just published in Two Volumes, with Engravings, price 14s. bound, or 16s. elegantly bound.

PICTURES or STORIES, drawn from English, Scottish, and Irish History chiefly from the Ancient Chronicles and other extensive works of detail. By JOHN GALT, Esq. author of the life of West, &c. &c. This Work is designed to furnish Reading for Young Persons, at once rational, instructive, and interesting; serving as a substitute for romance and works of fiction, while it equally stimulates curiosity and furnishes unalloyed entertainment. It contains above two hundred several stories, which are not to be met with in modern Language, or in books of easy access, all of them illustrative of Events and Characters connected with our National History, from the most remote ages to the death of George the Third.—London: printed for Sir Richard Phillips; published by Longman and Co. Paternoster Row, and by all Booksellers. Of whom may also be had, having the same design in view, Geography, Popular Illustrations of Geography, or Interesting Readings in Geography, with Seventy Engravings, price 15s bound.

IN SIX EASY LESSONS OF ONE HOUR EACH.—MR. BRADBURY, Private Tutor at Westminster School, solicits the attention of Ladies and Gentlemen to his unrivalled and infallible system of beautiful PENMANSHIP, whereby he pledges himself to teach persons of all ages to write with ease, elegance, and expedition, (whatever may be the deformity of their present writing) in six progressive Lessons. This system, as it equally promotes the attainment of a bold and masculine hand calculated for business, and of a light and graceful manuscript adapted to Ladies; also secures to the Pupil the certainty of writing straight, without lines, with wonderful dispatch and accuracy, and, moreover, will greatly the hand of the most tremulous writer. Upwards of 200 specimens, and numerous recommendatory letters may be seen, and references given to persons of the first distinction, some of whom are upwards of 50 years of age. Private tuition and Classes attended at their own residences. A new and practical system of Short Hand, taught in a few lessons, so as to enable the writer to decipher what he has written with inconceivable ease.—Apply, (or direct, post paid) at the Academy, 461, Strand, near Charing Cross.

CARPENTER'S VEGETABLE SPECIFIC for the HOOPING-COUGH—the most safe and certain Cure ever yet discovered for that distressing and too frequently fatal disorder. Infants a week old may take it with perfect safety, and it needs no other recommendation than a trial, which will be sufficient to establish its claims on public patronage. A single bottle will seldom fail to perform a perfect cure, and the most violent cases, and the most obstinate, yield to three or four; indeed, when given regularly and persevered in, it may fairly be inferred from the unparalleled success which has hitherto attended its use, that it will be found a quick, safe, and never-failing cure.—Sutton and Co. (late Dicey and Sutton), Bow Church-yard, London, are appointed the sole Wholesale Agents, of whom likewise it may be had retail. Sold also by Sanger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; Ward, Holborn; Newbery, Paternoster-row; Prout, Temple-bar; Stradling, Royal Exchange; Osborne, Bishopsgate-street; Jordan, Whitechapel; and by all the principal Venders of Medicine throughout the kingdom, in bottles at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. each.

CONSOLATION to the TREMULOUS WRITER.—The Public may look to this most singular and unique Invention with confidence as an inestimable source of comfort to those who experience any difficulties in the command of the pen, occasioned by tremour in nervous affection, heat of climate, agitation of spirits, excess of over exertion, weakness from age or otherwise, injury of the thumb or fingers by sprain or otherwise, even to the loss of part. This happy relief exists in a little INSTRUMENT, the appearance of which, when in use, escapes observation, is capable of giving firmness, confidence, and freedom, and cannot fail to assist the declining powers of a good penman, and materially improve the performance of a bad one. It is honoured by the patronage and recommendation of Sir Astley Cooper, and other highly respectable professional Gentlemen. A few minutes practice will prove its efficacy, and it has this advantage over all medicine, its power increases by use, and one prescription will last for life. Made in elastic gold, price 25s. each.—Sold for the Patentee, by T. Pearce and Co. No. 258, facing the front of St. Clement's Church, Strand. Letters from any part of the country, post paid, will be promptly attended to.

D. VAN BUTCHELL, Surgeon, Man-Midwife, Son, and Assistant, of the late Martin Van Butchell, recommended by persons of distinction (references are given with permission), continues to cure Fistulæ, Piles, &c. by the improved method so long and successfully practised by his father, without Confinement, Cutting, Caustic, or Risk; for suitable fees.—No. 49, South-street, Berkeley-square, London. At home till one daily. No remuneration required from persons of respectability, until they have satisfied a cure has been performed.

LATEST NEWS.

Paris papers down to yesterday arrived last night by express. An article from Paris dated Friday says:—"At the moment of the departure of the last courier from Madrid, a proclamation, by the Prince Generalissimo, of high importance, was printing in that capital. It is affirmed, that it contains details relative to all the arrangements with the various Spanish Generals, and, further, a severe reprobation of the principles and conduct of the Regency at Madrid since its election. It is confidently said, that the Generals Counts Molitor, Commandant of the 3d Corps), Guilleminot (Major-General), Bourdesoult, Tirlet, Barack, Bourmont, and Loverdo are about to be elevated to the Peerage."

A private letter from Madrid of the 14th inst. in the Journal des Debats, states, that the official intelligence of the capitulation of Balesteros was known at Cadiz on the 9th. "No mention," it is added, "is made of what effect this event had produced; but hopes are entertained that upon the arrival of the Duke d'Angoulême at Port St. Mary, great events would result."

ARMY OF THE PYRENEES.—SAN CUDAT, Aug. 15.—Milans and Lioberas having united their forces (forming about 6,000 men) at Montblanch, at first appeared to manœuvre with the design of retaking La Seo d'Urgel, but a change of direction made it presumable that their intention was either to succour Figueras or to annoy the troops blockading Barcelona. General Tromelin was following the enemy's track. Having united himself with the troops under Baron d'Eroles, he came up with the Constitutionalists at the bridge of Cambriana on the 14th. Being vigorously attacked the enemy retired, and took a strong position at Caldes, which they obstinately defended against the 16th regiment of the line. 1,200 men of the corps of the Baron d'Eroles, and two squadrons of cavalry, who at first maintained themselves unaided against the entire force of the enemy; but two battalions of the 60th regiment having arrived on the field of battle, vigorously attacked the enemy on both flanks. Their efforts were fully successful, the Constitutional troops gave way, and were encouraged to rally at Moya, from whence they precipitately retired upon Lestang. We are in active pursuit of them.

MADRID, Aug. 15.—The submission of Zayas appears certain. Ciudad Rodrigo has, it is said, surrendered to the summons of Don Carlos O'Donnel. The few troops which remain in Estremadura are about to follow the example of Badajoz. At Ecija, the Duke of Angoulême was received with indescribable enthusiasm. It is affirmed that the Cortes has dissolved itself, and that there exists no other power than a commission nominated extraordinarily. Letters, which are this instant arrived, announce that Carthagena has opened its gates to our troops.

A letter from Mataro, dated August 15, says:—"The negotiations relative to the capitulation of Milans and Lioberas, appear to be suspended. These two Chiefs with the troops under their command, have abandoned their position, and proceeded towards Seo d'Urgel. M. the Marshal, has despatched troops in pursuit of them, and has quitted Villa Franca to remove his head-quarters to Mansera. The Baron d'Eroles manœuvres on the flanks of the enemy. The administrations attached to this corps have arrived at Mataro."

The Third Anniversary of the Suffolk Pitt Club was held on Thursday at Ipswich. T. S. Gooch, Esq. M.P. filled the Chair. The company was numerous.

On Friday night, Mr. Arbuthnot, jun. left town with despatches for Paris, Vienna, Constantinople, &c.

ARMY.—The following is the distribution of the three regiments of Foot Guards, commencing the 25th of August, for the ensuing six months:—1st Regiment—1st Battalion, King's Mews; 2d ditto, Portman Barracks; 3d ditto, Tower of London.—2d Regiment, or Coldstream—1st Battalion, Ireland; 2d ditto, Westminster Quarters.—3d Regiment—1st Battalion, Knightsbridge; 2d ditto, Plymouth.

A few nights since an old man belonging to the Town's Hospital of Paisley, while taking some tripe with a friend, put too great a portion of it into his mouth at once, and the tripe sticking in his throat, he expired.

BOXING.—A match between Johnson, the Black, and Nixon, the Nottingham Butcher, was fought on Thursday, on Marshfield Common, near Aylesbury, for one hundred guineas aside. The seconds were Wheeler, of Birmingham, for the Black, and Carr for the butcher. They fought nine rounds. In the seventh round the butcher came drowsy to the scratch as if awoke from a dream, was floored easy, and in the other two rounds he fell of himself, and the Black kept his hands off. Of the four beads three were sewed up. The Black, although a winner, had but one discernible eye, and his adversary cut up well, but he must not try for the championship.—Morning Paper.

At Guildhall, yesterday, great interest was excited in the examination of a young woman, upon a charge of child-murder; she had been three or four times remanded, and was brought up for a final examination. The case involved the several parties concerned in great mystery, the prisoner having stated to the officer in whose custody she had remained, that she had been delivered of a child in the house of Mr. Hicks, hatter, Cheapside, and that she had thrown the infant down the water closet. The prisoner was found by a watchman of Castle Baynard, wandering the streets at the hour of three o'clock in the morning of Tuesday, she had a bundle, refused to give any account of herself, and was then taken into the watch-house; and upon being searched, amongst a variety of articles found upon her, was a shawl, very bloody. Upon the testimony of Mr. Holmes, a surgeon, who had examined the girl, it appeared that a miscarriage had taken place, which was the more apparent from the place at first mentioned being searched and nothing found to corroborate the story the girl had stated, which story appeared the more strong as she asked the constable whether, if the infant was not found, it would not hang her. A whole mass of evidence was heard in support of the original charge, but the Magistrate relying upon the opinion of Mr. Holmes, and the evidence of the girl's master, who said that the morning she left her place she appeared nearly deranged, discharged her, lamenting the awkward situation she had placed herself in by concealing the state she was in; he also desired a coach might be fetched to convey her to her friends, who are highly respectable. She is above eighteen, and of a very prepossessing appearance.

Yesterday, an inquisition was taken at one o'clock, at the King's Head, Swan-lane, Upper Thames-street, on the body of a young lady unknown, dressed in a white bonnet, a green poplin gown, white silk stockings, and black shoes, with a thin muslin handkerchief about her neck, and she appears to be about 19 years of age; nothing was found upon her person that could in any way lead to a discovery of her name. On the Jury returning to their room, the following evidence was elicited:—William Shepherd, waterman, deposed, that on Friday morning, about 7 o'clock, he was told that a female lay under a barge near Swan Stairs. The water had just left her: she laid on her side, and could not be removed until the tide flowed. A pail of water was got, and thrown over her face, so that her countenance could be clearly distinguished. About 12 o'clock the tide flowed, and witness removed her. She had also a shawl on, and did not appear to have been in the water above four or five hours. Verdict—"Found drowned, but how or by what means she came so this Jury cannot say."

PRICE OF STOCKS AT THE CLOSE, SATURDAY.

The British Money Market throughout the week has not fluctuated very materially, nor in the Foreign Market has any thing of very great moment occurred. Consols for Account, opened at 82¾ 83, and are now 83. Spanish Bonds have been advancing, this day they are about one per cent above yesterday, being done at 38. Chili Bonds have also been advancing, but other Securities are pretty steady.

A NEW SYSTEM OF PRACTICAL DOMESTIC ECONOMY.—We have no hesitation in recommending to general attention the above-mentioned work, a third edition of which has just appeared, comprising ESTIMATES OF HOUSEHOLD EXPENSES, adapted to Families of every description. These Estimates will doubtless be found extremely acceptable to the Public, as the only systematic attempt ever yet made to point out the means by which the various attainments of honourable industry, and of the gifts of fortune, in their several gradations, may be made to administer, with superior advantage, to the amelioration of the necessities of some, to the augmentation of the comforts of others, and to the more refined and more perfect enjoyment of the pleasures and elegancies of those of superior rank in life. They embrace a range of Incomes and Expenditures, from One Guinea per week to 5000l. a year, and upwards; and, though the first of them are adapted to very low Incomes, yet no apology need be offered for their introduction; on the contrary they are peculiarly applicable to the extraordinary circumstances of the present times.

The LITERARY MUSEUM of yesterday contains, besides several original articles of interest, Reviews and copious extracts from the following New Works:—View of the past and present State of Jamaica—Memoirs of the Baron de Roll, relative to his Secret Mission to 1810, for liberating Ferdinand VII. from captivity at Valançay—Christianity and Morals in India, the Abbé J. Dubois, and Wm. Ward, of Serampore—Australasia, Cambridge Prize Poems, by W. M. Praed, and W. C. Wentworth—The Picture Book; Banks of the Thames—Notices of the less known Italian Writers; Parini—Original Poetry—Foreign Correspondence—Foreign Literature—the Drama—University Intelligence—Arts and Sciences—Varieties, &c. &c—Price 8d., or 9d. in its immediate transmission by post, the Museum may be had stamped, price 1s.—Published by John Warren, No. 7, Bridges-street, Covent-garden; and to be had of all booksellers and news-venders in the kingdom.

MILES and EDWARDS'S splendid Stock of London Chintz Furnitures, Spanish Damasks, Cashmere Chintzes, Morreens, &c. is, without exception, the largest, the most select, and the cheapest in the kingdom. This immense assortment having been entirely manufactured since the extraordinary diminution in the value, the proprietors are enabled and determined to sell them full one third below the regular prices of old establishments. M. and E. are aware that by this innovation upon the system of the trade, they have incurred the animosity of other houses, but the unprecedented encouragement experienced from the principal Nobility and Gentry is an ample compensation and a sufficient inducement for them to adhere to their present plan. In fitting up Drawing Room and Dining-Room Curtains, Four post and French Beds, &c. Families may, in many instances, effect a saving of nearly one-half by inspecting this matchless stock.—Miles and Edwards's only establishment is at No. 154, Oxford-street, between Holles-street and Old Cavendish-street.

ELEGANT GLASSES, FURNITURE, &c.—The Nobility and Gentry are invited to inspect the Ware rooms of Cooper and Son, 53, Bishopsgate Within, where is exhibited a large Assortment of new and second-hand Plate Glasses, admirably adapted for the Furniture of drawing or dining-rooms. The prices are first reduced 40 per cent. on plates measuring 190 inches by 72, and upwards; and on those of smaller dimensions the alteration will be found equally important. The extensive preference given to this establishment is thankfully acknowledged by the Proprietors, who, in their endeavours to evince their gratitude, by manufacturing articles in a superior manner, at prices suitable to the times, hope to merit a continuance of public support. In the furniture department is comprised every new and elegant article of upholstery, cabinet, and chair work, regulated upon such a scale of economy as to demand and ensure the patronage of rank and fashion.

TO BE LET, for a term of years, a most desirable RESIDENCE, at Melton, near Woodbridge, Suffolk. The House, consisting of a Dining, drawing, and breakfast room, four bed-rooms on the first floor, and five on the second. Furnished, and replete with every convenience, is beautifully situated in an eminence, commanding extensive views of the river Deben, and the interesting surrounding country; a sloping lawn of 11 acres in front, skirted by seven acres of Plantation in full beauty, and connected with an excellent Garden and Orchard. In a large paved court adjoining the house are a double coach-house, 5-stalled stable, stone pigeon-house, and other requisite out-buildings. Exclusively of the Pleasure Grounds, there are about 60 acres of Arable and Pasture Land, in a high state of cultivation; a good Farm-house at a short distance from the Mansion, with suitable appurtenances; the whole within a few miles, in a delightfully retired situation, and in a highly respectable neighbourhood, where excellent partridge shooting may be obtained.—For particulars, and tickets to view the Estate, application may be made to Mr. Colchester, Woodbridge. Letters to be post-paid.

SIDMOUTH, DEVON.—FREEHOLD and FOUR ACRES of LAND to be DISPOSED OF.—ALTA VILLA, situate from the town of Sidmouth three-quarters of a mile, commanding unrivalled and most extensive views of the surrounding country and the British channel. The house is brick built, and erected since 1817, and, being cemented, has the appearance of stone; it contains seven excellent rooms, two attics, two kitchens, cellars, &c.; convenient out houses, stabling, coach-house, &c. The gardens are laid out with a profusion of choice fruit-trees. Also, the household furniture to be disposed of, which, with the premises, is held exempt from all incumbrances. Possession may be had immediately. There are also four acres, comprised of orchard and pasture land, adjoining, held on lease, at a rental of 20l. per annum, which might be taken at the option of the purchaser, or a greater quantity may be had if required. Every particular may be known on application to W. D. C. 28, Great Winchester-street, London.

CIDER, PERRY, ALE, &c.—THOMAS FIELD and SON beg to acquaint their Friends and the Public, that their genuine Cider and Perry, Burton, Edinburgh, Taunton, and Welsh Ales, Dorcester Beer, Brown Stout &c. are in fine order for use. They have also a very superior Stock of Foreign Wines, Cape Madeira, Brandy, (white and coloured) Rum, Hollands, Geneva, and Orange Shrub; and they have been enabled to make a considerable reduction in their prices generally.—22, Henrietta-street, Covent-Garden.

ARROWSMITH and CO. TROPICAL CLOTHIERS, &c. (late Finch and Arrowsmith.) No. 3, Cornhill, near the Mansion House, beg leave to apprize their Friends and the Public in general that they conduct the Business of that long established House upon the same broad principle which has already obtained for it their distinguished support, viz. combining the interests of the vender and purchaser, by the sale of the best articles upon terms reciprocally advantageous. Cadets, and passengers to India and elsewhere, furnished with every necessary article of equipment, so arranged as to form a supply upon their arrival.—Information respecting East India Ships given as usual.

BURGESS'S ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES.—Warehouse, 170, Strand, corner of the Savoy-steps, London.—John Burgess and Son, being apprized of the numerous endeavours made by many persons to impose a spurious article for their make, feel it incumbent upon them to request the attention of the Public when purchasing what they conceive to be the Original, to observe the Name and Address corresponds with the above; a general appearance of the spurious descriptions will deceive the unguarded, and for their detection, J. B. and Son submit the following cautions,—some are in appearance at first sight, "The Genuine," but without any name or address:—some "Burgess's Essence of Anchovies;"—others—"Burgess's,"—and many more without Address.

John Burgess and Son having been many years honoured with such distinguished approbation, feel every sentiment of respect towards the Public, and earnestly solicit them to inspect the Label on previous to their purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments.

BURGESS'S NEW SAUCE for general purposes, having given such great satisfaction, continues to be prepared by them, and is recommended as a most useful and convenient Sauce: will keep good in all climates.

Warehouse, 167, Strand, corner of the Savoy-steps, London.—(The original Fish-sauce Warehouse.)

CAUTION.—In consequence of the great disappointment many persons have experienced from purchasing inferior Trusses, SALMON, ODY, and CO. most respectfully solicit the attention of Medical Gentlemen and the public to observe, that the true PATENT SELF-ADJUSTING TRUSS has "Salmon, Ody, and Co. 292, Strand, London," marked upon the leather case, without which they are of the spurious kind. Salmon, Ody, and Co. the inventors and patentees, have since upwards of 50,000 of their Patent Trusses, and still continue to have the recommendations of all the most eminent surgeons in town and country.—☞ Persons in the country are requested to send the circumference of the body an inch below the hips. Sold by one or more druggists in every principal town in the united kingdoms.

EASE and COMFORT in SHAVING.—To those Gentlemen who feel experience inconvenience in Shaving from a tender face or strong beard, J. T. RIGGE must particularly recommend his celebrated MAGNETIC RAZOR TABLET, which, with its late improvement, he ensures will produce as keen an edge as to supersede all grinding, honing, &c. and render the operation of shaving as easy and agreeable as it was before unpleasant and painful. Its use is simple, its effect certain; price 7s. 6d. J. T. Rigge's Aromatic Shaving Soap will also be found an invaluable addition. Manufactory, 65 Chery-side and 52, Park-street, Grosvenor-square.

SARSAPARILLA SYRUP, Concentrated.—Two table spoonsfull of this preparation are equal to a pint of the decoction. It is particularly convenient to persons in the country, or travellers, as it will keep good for years. Mr. Fisher introduced this preparation into practice three years since, and it has met with such decided approbation from most of the Physicians and Surgeons of eminence, that persons are now vending an imitation of it.—Observe, that W. H. Fisher and Co. 193, Condit-street, Hanover-square, London, is printed on the label of each bottle.—Sold also by appointment by Mr. Compiln, chemist, 41, Bishopsgate-street-within, London.

BALDNESS or GREY HAIR will now sure not be seen. In short, Ladies and Gentlemen may rely on it, they will not have a hair fall off or turn grey, by using Prince's celebrated Russia Oil, as it is so long proved with an extra valuable ingredient, through which it has made the Russia Oil the greatest nourisher and preserver to the hair in the Universe, will make it grow thick and long, and prevent its falling off or ever turning grey, and is such a nourisher to the roots of the hair, that if it even has begun to turn grey, infancy to old age, and when dressing with it will always keep the Head and Hair clean and beautiful, and in curl. Even Medical Gentlemen have published in the Gazette of Health, that Prince's Russia Oil is superior to any Oil for the use in the thickening, strengthening, and recoring it, if there is the least sign of the Russia Oil not being of service to the hair, as they have found out that unprincipled persons have sold them counterfeits; therefore Ladies and Gentlemen ought to be particular and have it of a respectable person. Ask for Prince's fine quality Russia Oil, as saying. Sold by the sole Proprietor, A. Prince, No. 9, Poland street, Oxford-street, near the Pantheon; and by Mr. Smyth, Perfumer to his Majesty, New Bond-street; Messrs. Hendrie, Dickhorne-street; Sanger, Cheapside; Johnson, 68, Cornhill; Tutt, Royal Exchange; and by most principal Perfumers and Medicine Venders. Ladies and Gentlemen residing in the country, sending a remittance, it will be forwarded immediately by coach. It is so prepared as to keep in all climates; the older the better.—Merchants and Captains will receive a liberal allowance for exportation.

SURREY.—CHARLWOOD PARK ESTATE, with the Mansion Heriots, Quit Rents, &c. to be SOLD by PRIVATE CONTRACT, consisting of an Elegant Sporting Residence, with Manor nearly 50 miles in circumference well stocked with Game, and 471 Acres of Freehold Land; and a Rich Pasture over 900 Acres of Unimclosed Land; with suitable Farm Houses, &c. situate along the Turnpike Road, midway between London and Brighton, and about 5 miles from Reigate. The Villa is placed on an elevated situation, and surrounded by Shrubberies, and Plantations, in a Park of 100 acres, commanding extensive Views, diversified with all the beauties of nature and art. There are also a kitchen garden, farm-house, stables, coach-house, and other requisite offices; a pack of hounds, at a convenient distance from the residence, and kennels for the same; the farm-house have been built within these twenty years. Poor rates and assessed taxes low. The Parish, all other rates low. The unwholesomeness of being near a large World renders the situation peculiarly suited to the lovers of rural retirement. To be viewed by cards only, which, with descriptive particulars, may be had of Mr. Vaux, Land Agent and Surveyor, 59 Great Russel-street, Bloomsbury, who is authorized to treat for the same: a plan of the estate may be seen at his office. Particulars may also be had at the Libraries in Reigate, Cheltenham, White Hart, Bath, and Mitre, Oxford. Letters to be post-paid.

ELIGIBLE INVESTMENT, NORFOLK, on the Borders of Suffolk.—SHOTFORD HALL—To be SOLD by PRIVATE CONTRACT, a very desirable FREEHOLD ESTATE, consisting of about 600 good Arable, Meadow, and Pasture Land, lying within a ring fence, and about only 62 acres are subject to tithe. Also the improprietor's Corn Tithes of 1,100 acres, 1,100 of which are also subject to vicarial tithes, and about 15 acres of Wood, viz. three coppices or allotments, and a rookery, with the advowson of the Rectory, and the perpetual Curacy of Needham, which can be made tenantable. The house is nearly in the centre of the estate, and peculiarly adapted to a person of agricultural pursuits. The out buildings are suitable to the property, and are in good repair, situate within one mile of the market town of Harleston, through which coaches pass every day from London to Yarmouth and Lowestoft. Waverney runs within 100 yards of the house, is well stocked with fish, supplies about 90 acres of the adjoining grazing land with water. Poor rates and other outgoings are very reasonable. Particulars will be ready for delivery about the middle of September, and may be had of Mr. Vaux, land surveyor, 59, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, where Plans may be seen, and of whom printed Particulars may be had as soon as the Surveys can be completed, which notice will be given in future advertisements.

SURREY.—CHARLWOOD PARK ESTATE, with the Manor, Heriots, Quit Rents, &c. to be SOLD by PRIVATE CONTRACT, consisting of an Elegant Sporting Residence, with Manor nearly 50 miles in circumference, well stocked with Game, and 474 Acres of Freehold Land, and a Right of Pasture over 900 Acres of Unenclosed Land; with suitable Farm Houses, &c. lying along the Turnpike Road, midway between London and Brighton, and only six miles from Reigate. The Villa is placed on an elevated situation, surrounded by Shrubberies, and Plantations, in a Park of 100 acres, commanding extensive Views, diversified with all the beauties of nature and art. There is a good kitchen garden, farm-house, stables, coach-house, and kennel proper for a pack of hounds, at a convenient distance from the residence, all of which except the farm-house have been built within twenty years. Poor rates under 2s. 6d. in the pound, all other rates low. The neighbourhood being noted in the Sporting World renders the situation peculiarly suited to the lovers of field sports.—To be viewed by cards only, which, with descriptive particulars, may be had of Mr. Vaux, Land Agent and Surveyor, 58 Great Russel street, Bloomsbury, who is authorized to treat for the same; a plan of the estate may be seen at his office. Particulars may also be had at the Libraries Brighton, Plough, Cheltenham, White Hart, Bath, and Mitre, Oxford. Letters to be post paid.

ELIGIBLE INVESTMENT, NORFOLK, on the Borders of Suffolk — SHOTFORD HALL. To be SOLD by PRIVATE CONTRACT, a very desirable FREEHOLD ESTATE, consisting of 400 acres of good Arable, Meadow and Pasture Land, lying within a ring fence, of which only 62 acres are subject to tithe. Also the impropriate Corn Tithes of 2,345 acres. 1,100 of which are also subject to vicarial tithes, and about 1,806 are arable, with the Profits arising from the Manor, which is well stocked with Game, viz. fines on death or alienation, quit rents, &c., with the advowson or presentation to the perpetual Curacy of Needham, which can be made immediately. The house is nearly in the centre of the estate, and peculiarly adapted to a gentleman of agricultural pursuits. The out buildings are suitable to the extent of land, and are in good repair, situate within one mile of the market town of Harleston, through which coaches pass every day from London to Yarmouth, &c. The river Waverney runs within 100 yards of the house, is well stocked with fish, and supplies about 90 acres of the adjoining grazing land with water. Poor rates, and other outgoings are very reasonable.—Particulars will be ready for delivery about the middle of next month, and may be had of Mr. Vaux, Land surveyor, 58, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, who is authorised to treat for the sale of this estate.—Letters to be post-paid.

Collett, Wimburn, and Collett, Solicitors, 62, Chancery-lane; and Mr. Vaux, Land Agent and Surveyor, 58, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, where Plans may be seen, and of whom printed Particulars may be had as soon as the Surveys can be made, of which notice will be given in future advertisements.

TO BE LET, for a term of years, a most desirable RESIDENCE, at Melton, near Woodbridge, Suffolk. The House, consisting of a dining, drawing, and breakfast room, four bed-rooms on the first floor, and five on the second, Furnished, and replete with every convenience, is beautifully situate on an eminence, commanding extensive views of the river Deben, and the interesting country around; a sloping lawn of 11 acres in front, skirted by seven acres of Plantation in full beauty, and connected with an excellent Garden and Orchard. In a large paved court adjoining the house are a double coach-house, 5-stalled stable, stone pigeon-house, and other requisite out-buildings. Exclusively of the Pleasure Grounds, there are about 60 acres of Arable and Pasture Land, in a high state of cultivation; a good farm-house at a short distance from the Mansion, with suitable appurtenances; the whole within a ring fence, in a delightfully retired situation, and in a highly respectable neighbourhood, where excellent partridge shooting may be obtained.—For particulars, and tickets to view the Estate, application may be made to Mr. Colchester, Woodbridge. Letters to be post-paid.

LEATHER TRADE.—To be DISPOSED OF, on eligible terms, in consequence of the present Proprietor retiring altogether from Business, an excellent concern in the above Line, with the advantage of an old established BOOT MANUFACTORY, in one of the best Houses and principal situations in the Market-place, Nottingham, with Yard and roomy Warehouses, and every requisite convenience for carrying on the Wholesale and Retail Business to any extent. The House contains—on the ground floor, two kitchens, pantry, parlour, shop and counting-house; and on the second floor, a drawing-room, 18 ft. by 14, with store room, lodging-room, and closets: the third floor contains three excellent lodging rooms, with three good attics over the same.—Further particulars may be known by application to Mr. Shepherd, Solicitor, 11, Bartlett's-buildings, Holborn.

VERY SUPERIOR LIBRARY FURNITURE, that must be parted with, and will be sold at half its value; consisting of real Spanish cloth curtains; 12 Spanish wood chairs, with real morocco seats and rosewood couch to match them; a superior bookcase of the same order; a very superior library table, with Brunell's locks, for ditto. To be seen at Nos and Co.'s, Agents, 32, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

CABINET FURNITURE, Chairs, &c.—C. MILLS, (from Messrs. Gillows,) begs to acquaint the public in general, that he has for Inspection at the Manufactory, No. 77, High-street, Mary-le-bone, opposite Devonshire-street, an assortment of goods in the above branch, manufactured in a style and manner peculiar to that house, and from the fall of price in the raw material is enabled to offer every article of the best description and quality at very reduced prices for ready money. C. M. by the desire of many ladies and gentlemen (who have expressed their disappointment at calling at the wrong House,) requests families inspecting the Warerooms to be particular in the number.

STAYS and ELASTIC BELTS.—ROBINSON and VISTRIN submit to Ladies their fashionable CORSETS, warranted to fit in an elegant and superior manner, however difficult the figure.—ELASTIC BELTS, which reduce corpulency, visceral enlargement, umbilical hernia, local dropsy, relieve and strengthen abdominal debility, and give comfortable support before and after accouchement.—Their PATENT STAYS counteract and rectify spinal curvatures, and support and cure persons awry, making the form appear perfectly straight and shapely, without any pernicious steel, padding, or pressure.—Country residents instructed to send measures. Be very correct in the names, and number of the house.—65, New Bond-street, London.

DISEASES OF THE DIGESTIVE VISCERA.

DR. DRUMGOLD (late Army Medical Staff,) may be consulted in Gastric and Hepatic Diseases (to which he limits his Practice) daily, from 9 till 11 in the morning, and from 3 to 5 in the evening, at his house, No. 79, Dean street, Soho.—A residence of several years in tropical climates has afforded Dr. D. extensive experience in the treatment of this class of disorders.

For Canterbury...H. W. Carter, M.D. F.R.S. E.
For Exeter.....Patrick Miller, M.D.
For Plymouth....I. C. Cookworthy, M.D. sen. Physician to Plymouth Dispensary.
For Yarmouth....G. Penrice, M.D.

Great and peculiar advantages are given to young and middle aged persons insuring with this Institution;—for, not being burdened with the heavy charge for agency, and avoiding other unnecessary expences, the Society is enabled to reduce the premiums on such lives, 15 and 20 per Cent. below those usually required; and that persons in the early periods of life may not be deterred from insuring, by a consideration that default in payment of any Premium would subject them to the loss of their Policy and Payments, the Society give a LEGAL CONTRACT to purchase Policies at their TRUE VALUE, or to lend two-thirds of that amount, at the option of the Assured; the scale of value, from year to year, being indorsed on the Policy itself at the time it is granted.

Three-fourths of the savings and profits are given to the Assured, until the Shareholders are paid off, and thenceforth the whole will be added to the Policies; interest is applied in reduction of Premiums in the mean time. The Assured by having the sum secured divided into several Policies, may, after four years, still further reduce their future Premiums by sale of their Interest to the Society or any one Policy, whilst the addition of Profits made to the other Policies will probably increase their amount to nearly the gross sum originally insured.

A precautionary Capital of 200,000l. protects the interests of the Assured until they shall be entitled to the whole Profits; and a permanent surplus Capital of 200,000l. will be maintained in the reserve.

Proposals from the Country to be sent to the Resident Director, who will give all proper information; and the parties, by appearing before one of the Medical Referees, will not be subject to any additional charge for non-appearance before the Board of Directors.

A MADEIRA MERCHANT offers the product of his own estates, excellent MADEIRA WINE, at 42l. per Hogshead, or 42s. per dozen. Having limited connections in England, he resorts to an advertisement, but trusts the prejudices existing against it will be removed, when he assures the public he has satisfactorily supplied royalty and many gentlemen of rank (through the same medium), to whom he can refer, or he will cheerfully grant to a respectable purchaser a reasonable time to satisfy himself before payment that the lot purchased corresponds with the samples. To be tasted at Messrs. Fox and Co.'s, No. 3, Poland-street, Oxford-street. Also some peculiarly fine Sherry and Port, at 42s. 44s. and 50s. per dozen.

ROAD TOOLS upon Mr. M'Adam's IMPROVED SYSTEM, shovels, grafting tools, sieves, mattocks, mud scrapers, and rakes of every description, barrows with iron wheels, &c. The tools are well steeled, and will be found much more durable than the generality of these articles. Surveyors requiring large quantities will be supplied at 25 per cent. under the usual prices. Gunpowder, patent shot, refined cart grease, and paints, oils, and colours of every description. Manufactured and sold by Robinson, Taylor, and Co. (successors to M'Adam and Co.), Willow-wharf, 87, Bankside, Southwark.

DRY ROT.—Messrs. Rodwell and Martin, Booksellers, 46, New Bond street, have the few unsold copies of the Essay on DRY ROT, wherein the causes of the Dry Rot are fully explained, and the means of preventing that evil, or completely removing its destructive effects, are clearly and practically prescribed by ROBERT M'WILLIAM, Architect.

Just published, both in French and English, neatly printed in crown 8vo. price 10s. 6d. in extra boards, embellished with portraits of Madame Panam, and of the Prince of Coburg,

MEMOIRS of a GREEK YOUNG LADY, or Madame Pauline Adelaide Alexandre Panam, versus His Serene Highness the reigning Prince of Saxe Coburg. This volume presents very curious details of the manners and characters of the Court of Coburg, and includes Letters from the Grand Duke Constantine, the Prince de Metternich, the famous Prince de Ligne, the Duke and Duchess of Saxe Coburg, Prince Leopold of Saxe Coburg, and several other distinguished Personages of the Continent. It has already excited great attention both in France and Germany, and has been published, after the failure of a series of negociations for its suppression.—Printed for Sherwood, Jones, and Co. Paternoster-row, and J. Wood, 43, New Bond-street.

FOX'S MARTYRS.—CATHOLIC CLAIMS!!!

To-morrow will be published, price 1s. containing 80 pages of closely printed matter, embellished with five engravings on wood, Part I. of FOX'S BOOK of MARTYRS, with important Additions relative to the late Persecutions of the Protestants in France, communicated expressly for this work by several eminent Protestants, who were eye-witnesses of the horrors which they describe. To be completed in about 12 Parts. Part 2. on Oct. 4. In presenting this new edition of Fox's Book of Martyrs to the public, the proprietors are solely actuated by a sincere desire to afford to all classes of their fellow-christians a cheap defence against the insidious arts of the advocates of what is termed Catholic Emancipation; and to arouse the Protestant consense of his danger, by shewing him that, in complying with their demands, he is granting power to a sect by whom it has invariably been exercised in the persecution of all who dissent from its tenets, or exposed its abuses. They rejoice to find that their efforts for the diffusion of this interesting work have been met on the part of the public with an ardour far beyond their most sanguine expectations. It is already eagerly sought for in every part of the kingdom; and the sale of more than 10,000 copies within a month from the appearance of the first weekly number, affords a sufficient proof that that attachment to the pure faith which inspired our forefathers, yet glows in the breasts of their descendants.—The work is also published in Weekly Numbers, price only Two-pence each, embellished with elegant engravings.—London: Printed for the Proprietors, published at 57, Skinner street, and sold by all booksellers and newsvenders.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, Aug. 26.—A telegraphic despatch was received on Monday, which brought the news of the Pope's death. The deceased Pontiff was named Barnabi Chiaramonti, born at Cesena, in the Romagna, on the 14th of August, 1742, and elected Pope, at Venice, on the 14th March, 1800. He was therefore at the time of his decease in the 82d year of his age, and in the 24th of his Pontificate.—Monday last being the Fete of St. Louis, the Moniteur was the only French paper that was allowed to be printed.

M. Margat, the Aëronaut, took his departure from the Champ de Mars on Sunday (the 17th), at a quarter before nine in the evening. The air was calm, and the coloured lamps (which formed a crown) below the balloon, permitted the spectators to follow it with their eyes for a long time. Arrived in the upper regions, M. Margat experienced an intense cold, the gas in dilating left a humidity which was soon converted into ice, and which gave the Aëronaut much trouble in managing the valve. He succeeded, however, in overcoming this obstacle, and proceeded without accident through a very thick fog to the forest of Villers-Coterets in the Commune of Fleury, 25 leagues from Paris. At midnight he effected his descent, and found himself perched upon a tree, which served as a base for his wandering edifice. There M. Margat passed the night, notwithstanding the rain, which fell in abundance. The astonishment may be conceived of the Sieur Debary, Keeper to the Duke of Orleans, when at four in the morning, on going his round, he perceived on the top of a tree our aërial voyager, and his immense baggage. M. Margat praises the conduct of this Keeper, from whom he received every kind of aid; he was also very well received by the Mayor of Fleury, by the Curé, and by all the inhabitants of the village who flocked to see him.

The Moniteur contains a letter from Madrid, which is but an echo of Marshal Oudinot's despatch, relative to the attack on Corunna, and of several reports, which had previously appeared in another form. One of the French brigs is said to have captured a vessel, on board of which were thirty nine French Refugees, who were flying from Corunna. They have been landed and placed in the prison of Tuy, where they await their sentence.

ARMY OF THE PYRENEES.—Report from Marshal Duke de Reggio to the Minister of War, dated Madrid, Aug. 20:—"Lieut.-Gen. Count Bourck renders me an account of the 13th, of his operations on Corunna; by a letter to the following purport:—In the night of the 10th and 11th the garrison of Corunna fired briskly on our troops; but fortunately did not do us much harm; several houses were damaged about our head quarters, the magazine of tobacco caught fire, but was soon extinguished. About eight in the morning a white flag was seen hoisted on the covered way, and a flag of truce came to us breathing peace, though at the same time exhibiting high pretensions; but I must confess they have done their duty and submitted to Ferdinand VII. They wished to put themselves under the protection of the Duc d'Angoulême, but they would not hear a word about the Regency of Madrid; they wished to remain until the issue of the affair of Cadiz and the orders of the King of Spain were known. The whole of the day of yesterday was taken up in parleying.—(Pour parler.)—I sent them my ultimatum, that I would enter Corunna, either as friend or enemy. A person invested with power has this moment arrived, after having had a conference in this town, and I am persuaded that the garrison of Corunna will put themselves under the orders of General Morillo. Two officers of the garrison have been sent to that General to inform him of what has been agreed upon; until their return there will be suspension of hostilities, which may last four or five days, owing to the distance of Count de Carthagena. The Captain-General of Old Castile, Charles O'Donnel, also sends accounts from Salamanca, of the 16th of this month, that two squadrons of the regiment of the Queen's arrived on the 13th in the environs of Zamora, and joined his troops, and recognized the Regency. This reinforcement of cavalry will be of great service in Estremadura.

(Signed) "Marshal Duke REGGIO.

"P.S. I hope the moment I am writing to your Excellency, that the capitulation of Corunna is settled. I have given orders to General Bourck that the moment he takes possession of Corunna he will leave a regiment there and proceed with his main force to Astorga, and send the brigade of Laroche Jaquelin to Estremadura, where the Constitutionalists have shown themselves in some force."

Letters from Cadiz of the 8th, mention that a great quantity of wheat and flour had arrived, and they expected not to feel any want of all kinds of provisions.

ST. PETERSBURGH, Aug. 9.—Count Bulgari is again appointed Charge d'Affaires from his Majesty the Emperor to his Catholic Majesty. So long as this Monarch shall continue a prisoner, he will be accredited to the Regency of Spain. The Conservateur Impartial has an article, dated Frankfort on the Maine, 21st of last month, to the following effect:—"English, French, and German Journals have repeated, on the credit of the Bremen Gazette, an article dated from St. Petersburgh, June 12, which is relative to the affairs of Spain, and to the manner in which the Russian Cabinet considers its influence on the rest of Europe. As none of the St. Petersburgh Journals have published this article, we have reason to believe that, far from having any official character, as the Journal des Debats, of the 17th of July, affirms, it is a fabrication from beginning to end." The Emperor is expected at Moscow on the 2d of next month. According to an opinion confirmed by his Majesty, all Monks are, at their request, allowed to leave their convents; they return to their former temporal situations, but lose the rank, property, and honorary distinctions, which they had before they took the vows. Prince Radziville, Viceroy for the King of Prussia, in the Grand Duchy of Posen, is arrived here. Lord Douglas, who is attached to the British Embassy, has left this city.

NAPLES, Aug. 6.—His Majesty our Sovereign arrived yesterday in this port, after a prosperous voyage, at half past ten in the morning, in company with his Royal Highness the Duke of Calabria, who went to meet him, and landed at Monosiglio with the Duchess of Florida. The sea was covered with boats, and the numerous spectators loudly welcomed our beloved Sovereign, while repeated salutes of artillery and the ringing of the bells announced to the capital the happy news. The city was finely illuminated in the evening, and the public enthusiasm was without bounds on the appearance of his Majesty at the theatre of San Carlos.

GHENT, Aug. 23.—The Duke of Wellington arrived here at five o'clock in the afternoon, coming from Oudenarde. Before his Grace entered the city he examined the works of the new citadel out of the Courtray gate. The Duke, when he left Ghent, proceeded to Termonde, to inspect the fortifications, and thence to Antwerp, where he arrived yesterday at noon. After having examined the fortifications his Grace set out for Brussels, where he arrived at six o'clock in the afternoon.

His Majesty has issued a decree, dated 20th August, in consequence of repeated representations, addressed to him by the Chamber of Commerce, and provisional assemblies, requesting him to make use of the prerogative reserved to him to impose higher duties, or wholly to prohibit certain articles, the produce of France. Various ordinances, successively issued in France, having imposed great restraints on the commercial relations with this kingdom, though they are favoured by the Laws of the Netherlands, being charged with excessive duties, or the Laws of the Netherlands, being charged with excessive duties, or wholly prohibited in France, and all his Majesty's endeavours to make an arrangement equitable to both parties having failed, his Majesty orders:—

Art. I.—The following articles, so far as they are of French origin, or imported from France into our kingdom, shall be liable to the following import duties:—Porcelain, white or painted, per 100lbs. 20 fr.; fayence of all kinds, 20 fr.; earthenware, 15 per cent.; stockings, caps, mittens, and other articles of wearing apparel of cotton, wool, or thread, either knit or wool, 20 per cent.; slates, per 1,000, 3 fr.

Art. II.—The following articles, of French origin, or imported from France, are prohibited:—glasses and glass ware of all kinds, except looking glasses; cloths and kerseymeres; muriatic acid; nitric acid; vitriolic acid; brandy distilled from grain.

Art. III.—The following articles coming from France shall not be imported, except by sea. The distilled liquors:—vinegar (of wine, beer, and artificial vinegar), and wine.

STOCKHOLM, Aug. 1.—It is understood that the Diet would break up in the course of this month. It had been agreed on to increase the revenue of the King and Prince considerably, and 2,000l. had been granted yearly to the wife of Prince Oscar, as pin money. The Queen lives in a very retired manner, and holds no Court. The King and Family have removed to the country Palace of Drottingholm. The English are treated with particular respect in this country.

IRELAND.

CORK COUNTY COURT.—John Sullivan and Charles Sullivan were indicted for administering an unlawful oath to Cornelius Shine.—Cornelius Shine identified the prisoners, and recollects a night in November, was returning to Ballyheen from Kilbrin, by a short cut through a field near the prisoners' house, when he heard a whistle, and went up, where he saw five men: and among them were the prisoners and a man named Cotter. They then introduced the United business, and they swore the witness—it was the man named Cotter who swore him, and the prisoner John Sullivan was present at the time; three of the party went off at a short distance. The prisoner Charles came up before he had finished the oath—the oath was, to be loyal and true to the society, and to be always ready to attend when called on; after witness was sworn, he went home.—For the defence, John Roche was called—is a carpenter by trade, and knows the witness Shine, and also the prisoners; he and his brothers bought a horse, for which they passed their note, but they were not able to pay the amount; on going to give some excuse about it, he met with Shine, whom he told of the circumstance, and Shine said if he would join him in informations, as the Sullivans refused to do so, and that if they succeeded, he would easily pay his rent after; he also said he would either hang or transport the Sullivans.—Dennis Driman knows the witness Shine, who is related to him by his wife; had a conversation with him in the Ball-alley; the witness was coming out, and Shine followed him, and said he was ashamed about his conduct, and he (witness said, "So you ought, for bringing in such respectable gentlemen as the Messrs. Nash;" to which he replied, that he had nothing against them, but that Sullivan came for a gun to him in the day time in their names; he said that he never would proceed, only Sullivan informed against his (Shine's) father, for having a gun in his possession; the witness further said, that there was a report that he got 50l. and was forgiven six years' rent by his landlord for prosecuting; to which he replied, that he might be sure he would not do so unless he was paid.—The defence here closed, and his Lordship said he would leave it to the Jury to decide on the evidence, for he believed they had made their minds up before that stage of the trial.—Foreman—We have, indeed, my Lord.—A verdict of Not Guilty was then returned.

James Nash and Michael Nash, respectable young gentlemen, were then charged with being found in arms, with divers other persons unlawfully assembled, at Ballyheen, in this county.—Mr. Bellew, Wexford was called for the prosecution, upon which Mr. Freeman inquired if he had any evidence to give of his personal knowledge; to which he replied that he had not, only what he was told by Sullivan. There being only the first witness on the previous trial (Shine) to sustain the indictment, his Lordship directed the issue to be handed to the jury, who instantly found a verdict of Not Guilty.

BELFAST, Aug. 22.—On Wednesday, the 20th inst. five cows and two horses, the property of John Kyle, a tenant on the estate of Hugh Kennedy, Esq. in the townland of Corroreagh, on the mail coach road from Belfast to Newtownards, were maliciously houghed.

KILKENNY, Aug. 23.—Before day-break on the morning of Saturday last, the 17th inst. nine persons went to the house of James Brenan, farmer, at Sart, in this county, and rapped at his door. He inquired what they wanted, on which they demanded to know why he took the farm of Balyntarsnah, telling him that his stock was driven off it, and that if he drove them back again, he would not get them so easily another time. Brenan refused to open the door, on which they broke a pane of glass, and put in at the window a threatening notice, of which the following is a copy:—"James Brenan.—You shall immediately resign the farm Ballyntarsnah Or it will be the mains of Burning Your House and place unto ashes and you deceiver of man Kind will be shot without mercy So Now loose no time or Blame Yourselfe."

CHARGE OF HIS GRACE THE ARCHBISHOP OF CASHEL.—On Thursday (21st inst.) his Grace the Lord Archbishop of Cashel held his Triennial Visitation for this diocese at St. Mary's Church, Clonmel. The attendance of Clergymen was very numerous. In addressing the Bishop, and Clergy of the Diocese, his Grace the Archbishop, in the commencement of his Charge, took occasion to pay a high, and well-merited eulogium to his predecessor, for his activity and zeal in the discharge of every duty imposed on his situation, and for the other virtues which adorned his course through life. For himself, he said, that although, from the course of nature, the recurrence of many triennial occasions not likely to occur—yet he would feel it, at all times, one of his most pleasing duties to attend to the interests and communications of his Clerical Brethren. His Grace next adverted to the several theoretical arguments extant for the suppression or abolition of tithes and the alienation of Church property; but these he censured as mere popular experiments, which, if acted upon, while they would sink the tithes in the pockets of the land proprietor, mostly an absentee, would not relieve that class upon whom they fall with the heaviest weight, and who should pay a full equivalent for every thing they received from the landlord; besides, while many of the lords of the soil were squandering the money drawn from Ireland among other nations, the beneficed Clergy, residing, with few exceptions, among the communities from whom they derived their support, spent there the produce of their tithes to the advantage of these communities; and, by their example and advice, it was to be hoped, contributed to the welfare of the country. He considered Church property a right as inalienably inherent in the Clergy for their support as that of any other property which could possibly be possessed by any individual whatever; it was not only guarded by the law, and sanctioned by what was termed immemorial usage—but was a right which invaded no other right; for it was chargeable on the lands of their possessors. He next adverted to the Bill lately he went through, and which he seemed to approve, as calculated to alleviate the burdens of those who complain, while it equally regarded what was due to the interests and support of the clerical profession; and his Grace recommended it to the adoption of his Clergy accordingly. He alluded to the Dissenters and Roman Catholics in terms not only of kindness and conciliation, but of genuine liberality—indicating to his Clergy the propriety of, at all times, duly considering and making allowance for the circumstances under which they were placed. He spoke at such considerable length, that we cannot enter here into any of his Grace's charge;—but this is of the less consequence, as we understand it is to be published after his circuit in the Archdiocese shall have been completed.—Clonmel Advertiser.

ASSIZES.

CHESTER.—Joseph Dale, who attained the age of 18 years on the 4th of July, was charged with the wilful murder of William Wood, cotton-factor, on the 16th of July, at Whaley, by means of stones thrown at the back part of his head, by which a mortal wound was inflicted of the size of half an inch in length, and one inch in breadth. John Mellor, of Whaley, farming servant—was coming from Bullock-Smithy with his cart on the 16th of July, the old road; on his return from Disbley to Whaley (by the new roads), between 7 and 8 o'clock P. M., found a man near the bottom of a wall, dead, twelve or sixteen yards from the wall—Disbley to Whaley is three miles—he came one mile from Disbley alone—stopped at Edmund Potts and John Mellor, his uncle, came up—the name of Wood—on the back of his head was a wound, on the forehead two wounds—appeared inflicted with stones—many stones were near the body, which were brickstone stones—a vast quantity of blood under his head—did not observe the pockets, the body was not cold—put it into Edmund Potts's cart—there were three carters and three drivers present—grass and wall was sprinkled with blood, but much blood about. Edmund Potts was on the road on the 16th of July last, between 7 and eight P. M.; saw J. Mellor; knows Joseph Hatfield lives; Mellor stood by Wood on the Disbley side; passed Hatfield-house on the Whaley side; distance from a quarter half a mile; examined the body, which was warm; corroborates former witness with regard to stones and blood; took the body in cart to the Cock in Whaley; was present before the Coroner when inquiry took place; examined pockets of the deceased; inspected breeches pockets, in which were an old penny, pocket handkerchief and top of an umbrella. Mary Bradshaw knows late Mr. Wood—saw him at Manchester on the 15th of July, between six and seven o'clock A.M. going to Manchester, at Holly-green; saw the body the day after at the Cock. William Howarth, of Disbley, examined on the 17th of July, near Hatfield-house; found stones left-hand side of the road, 26 yards from boundary, between Hatfield's and Mosley's house. Four stones were here produced clotted with blood and hair, both extremely visible and appalling, and the stones large—the stones were what they make walls with. Jonathan Cheatham, stone-mason, at Stockport. Saw Wood at Stockport between two and three o'clock on the 16th of July (Wednesday)—paid him 48l. and some silver—8l. in 1l. country bank notes, two 5l. Derby notes, the rest Bank of England notes of 5l. each, except one 10l. Knew the exact number of several—one a 5l. Bank of England, No. 72, 2d October, 1822, which he copied; recognized the tear in it. Stockport was about six miles from the murder. In answer to a question from Sergeant Marshall—Recollects the note produced is what he received on Monday, and put it into the tin box, out of which he took no note but to Wood. John Johnson, of Disbley, stone-mason, saw on the evening, two young men pass on the road by him, in colours dress one young man, and one middle-aged followed, 20 yards distance—light coloured coats and drab gaiters—the middle-aged man in a light coloured—saw deceased at the Cock, who had dark drab coat and gaiters—the young man was dressed in a pair of trowsers and jacket, light drab. The last man of the three, taller than the other, was going towards Whaley—saw them near the foundry, going towards Joseph Hatfield's—Joseph Hatfield lives between Disbley and Whaley, on the old road, between a quarter and half a mile from the boundary—saw at seven o'clock a man pass, and directly afterwards three men followed him. The first had gaiters rather black—the three men followed him a few minutes afterwards. The first had an umbrella in his hand, a basket or bundle in his left, going towards Whaley. Question by the Court—Saw the dead body, had on leggings the same as the man who passed his door.—Thomas Etchings, of Stone-edge, between Whaley and Disbley, remembers being on the road on the 16th of July—between 7 and 8 o'clock, on the evening of Wednesday—observed two young men on the road, between two and three yards distance—ran with him about 40 yards; walked up to him—one of them asked his way to Chapel-le-Frith—told them four miles—they thanked him, and ran again soon out of sight—two dressed with coats, and the third a dark coloured jacket, trowsers of the same—observed marks on the person with light coloured jacket, four or five inches broad, between his left shoulder and his elbow. This was half a mile distant from the boundary of Disbley and Whaley—saw three young men running as fast as they could at the top of the hill—came into Whaley, stopped before they reached the toll-bar, they passed it not, walked sharply over the bridge—one turned at the public-house door, but could not tell whether he went in—two turned to the Rising-sun. Wm. Beard, of Whaley, was on the turnpike-road 16th July, about eight. These men were turning towards the toll-gate leading to Buxton, which they went through. Verdict—Guilty, but (very unusual in cases of murder) Chief Justice Warren would not pass sentence till Wednesday, in consequence of the arguments in arrest of judgment by Messrs. Law and Jones, the prisoner's counsel.

POLICE.

GUILDHALL.—On Thursday, J. Smith, a lad of 19, apprentice with Mr. Arding, of Dorset-street, was charged with robbing his master. The nurse observed him go out early on Sunday morning with a few of old squares of glass, his master on the next evening charged him with the robbery, but the prisoner denied it; on hearing, however, afterwards, that his master had sent for an officer, he became frightened, and said he would tell all; if Mr. A. would forgive him. His master agreed any such terms, and the prisoner confessed to the officer the stealing, but refused to say to whom he had sold the property. A letter, the prisoner sent from the Compter was intercepted, however, which gave the latter information; but the person who had bought it having given a fair price, he was now made a witness, and the prisoner was committed.

J. Nowlan, who had been but four days in the employ of Mr. Sanders, bookseller, Bartholomew-close, was charged with stealing 15 numbers of a periodical work. Being observed to go out with a bag in the morning he was watched, and seen to load his pockets with the numbers in question. He would not tell what the bag contained. He was committed.

QUEEN-SQUARE.—On Thursday, —— Hawker, a private in the 1st Guards, was brought to this office, charged with attempting to ravish the person of a little girl, named Holmes, only five years of age. The child lives at No. 3, Delap-court, Westminster, the prisoner lodges in the same house, and is a married man. On Wednesday he enticed her into his room, and in a short time afterwards, the child came crying to witness, and described to her the nature of the outrage which the prisoner had committed. The prisoner was committed for trial.

HATTON-GARDEN.—The activity of the officers intrusted with warrants for searching the premises of the bakers within this district, has led to another detection. A baker of the name of Robert James was convicted of having alum in his possession, and fined 4l. and costs.

MARY-LE-BONE-OFFICE.—FATAL PUGILISTIC RENCONTRE.—A number of dustmen were drinking before the Red Lion public-house, Bryanstone, on Thursday evening, and three soldiers of the Foot Guards passing by, the dustmen challenged them to play at skittles, and also to pitch and toss, but the soldiers declined. The dustmen called them cowards, and the youngest soldier, about 21 years of age, challenged to fight either of the dustmen. Considerable altercation ensued, and one of the dustmen, named John Norman, used abusive epithets towards them, and they returned, and the youngest soldier shook his fist at Norman's face, and this led to a fight. They fought three rounds; but there was merely an exchange of blows, when the dustman missed and fell. There were cries of "foul," and it was observed that the soldier gave his opponent an abdominal blow, which is contrary to the pugilistic tactics. After the dustman received this blow, he never spoke or breathed. A surgeon was instantly sent for, and he said that life was quite extinct. The soldier was taken into custody, examined at this office, and remanded.

MANSION-HOUSE.—On Wednesday, a man named Sherman and his wife were charged, the former with having stolen three diamond rings, the latter with having pawned them, knowing them to be stolen property. Mr. Williams, of the Auction Mart, stated, that the male prisoner was employed as a porter at the Mart. The different articles of jewellery were arranged by the male prisoner, a small parcel, containing three diamond rings, estimated at about 20l. was missing. Sherman he stated at first, but at length he confessed that he had pawned the rings at Sadler's, in Bishopsgate-street. It turned out upon further enquiry, that his wife had sold the rings to the pawnbroker, at a price not the fortieth part of their value. Mr. Sadler's shopman stated, that the woman brought the rings to him for sale as base articles. Mrs. Sherman agreed to take 10s. for them, provided the party for whom she sold them would be satisfied at such a price, but they were to be returned if the price was considered inadequate.

The Lord Mayor—Do you know the difference between a diamond ring and paste ring.

Shopman—I am not at all a good judge, but if they were offered to me as diamond rings, I should have had the woman taken up—

He said he positively believed them to be nothing but paste. The rings were the property of a Mr. Isaacs.

On Tuesday the case had been ordered to stand over for Mr. Sadler to attend, who accordingly made his appearance, when he stated that when the rings were purchased he was from home; on his return he asked from whom his shopman had bought them, when he received for answer, that they were purchased of Mr. Isaacs. He considered there was no imputation against him-self, but he wished to exculpate his young man, who, if he bought a paste, but he wished to exculpate his young man, who, if he bought a diamond for 10s. worth 10,000l. would not be a gainer, as he was no partner. Mr. Sadler then produced some very handsome rings, and said, "Mr. Isaacs, you say you are a judge of diamonds, point out those in that parcel which are diamonds." Mr. Isaacs immediately took two rings from the parcel, and said they were diamonds. Mr. Sadler said here was a proof that even good judges might be deceived. All those beautiful diamonds were paste.—Mr. Isaacs said he was not a professed judge, and complained of being taken by surprise.—Some pawnbrokers who were present said, that a species of quartz was made up by the French so closely to resemble diamonds that the first judges in the trade had been defrauded by them.—The only direct evidence against the male prisoner was his own confession. The depositions were taken for his commitment, and that of his wife, when, upon the examination of Mr. Isaacs, that gentleman stated, that he had told the male prisoner that he would save a great deal of trouble if he would confess. The prisoner then confessed.—The Lord Mayor considered, under these circumstances, that the confession could not be evidence. His Lordship then discharged both prisoners with an admonition.

Union Hall.—On Tuesday, a man named Beeman, who has been for some time in the employment of Messrs. Bensley, printers, in Bolt-court, and a bookseller named Cahuac, who resides in the Borough, were charged, the former with having committed a robbery, and the latter with having knowingly purchased the stolen property. Messrs. Bensley have been engaged in printing Dr. Lingard's History of England, and were to strike off 1000 copies. It reached the ears of Mr. B. Bensley, that copies were to be had at Cahuac's shop at 21. 10s., each, whereas the trade price was no less than 3l. 15s. Mr. Bensley caused an examination to be made in his premises with respect to that particular book, and soon learned that ten copies were missing—he followed that they must have been stolen by some person who had constant employment in the establishment. Beeman was taken into custody. He denied that he knew any thing about the plundered copies. Mr. Cooper, bookseller, at Whitefriars, stated, that some days ago he purchased at Cahuac's shop, in Blackman-street, six copies of Lingard's History of England, at 21. 10s. a copy, and gave to Cahuac a bill at four months for the whole of the sum, upon his promise that the six sets should be delivered in due time. Six copies were accordingly received by witness, but three of them were very imperfect, and of course no more than three sets of them were kept. Cahuac took back the rest with a list of the deficiencies in witness's hand-writing, but the deficiencies were never supplied. Mr. Mawman's clerk stated, that he and Mr. Bensley went to Cahuac's shop, and mentioned to him that they understood he had been selling Lingard's History of England considerably under the trade price. Cahuac replied, that he had sold two copies, but upon being told that his dealing with Mr. Cooper about the six copies was no secret, he admitted that he had sold that number of copies to Mr. Cooper, at the sum specified. Witness recollected that Cahuac had been present at Mr. Mawman's trade sale; that he had made no purchase of Lingard's History of England there, and that he was acquainted with the trade price. Mr. Bensley caused the lodgings of Beeman to be searched by an officer, who in a short time put his hands upon the identical list of deficiencies of the History of England, which list Mr. Cooper had delivered to Cahuac, and which it was presumed Cahuac had transmitted to Beeman, for the purpose of having them corrected. The Counsel who attended for Cahuac, asked Mr. Mawman's clerk, whether he could swear that those copies which Mr. Cooper had purchased of Cahuac had not been purchased at Mr. Mawman's shop, out of the 400 copies which had been delivered by Mr. Bensley. The reply was in the negative. The counsel then contended, that the evidence did not bring home the robbery to Beeman, and of course Cahuac was not chargeable with any offence. Besides there had been no proof of dealing between Cahuac and Beeman.

The prisoners were brought up again on Wednesday, when, in addition to the former evidence, a dictionary, called "Walker's Abridgement," was produced, which was found in Cahuac's shop. Mr. Bensley stated that, to the best of his belief, the copy of the dictionary was his property, and had been stolen from his premises. Clapperton, the warehouseman to Mr. Bensley, said, that about 14 months since, several copies of the above work were missed; on that occasion he (witness) deposited two of the remaining copies in a particular place on the premises; however, on examining that place yesterday, he found that one of the copies had been taken away, and he had no doubt the copy now produced was the same that had disappeared. The Magistrate fully committed them both for trial.

Bow-street.—On Tuesday, Silas Stephens, the driver of a waggon, was charged with wantonly and cruelly ill treating a horse. Mr. R. Martin, M.P. was driving through Covent Garden, and saw the defendant, who had the charge of a team of horses, whipping one of them as he conceived in a cruel and unnecessary manner; and the whipping was so violent that Mr. Martin heard the lashes before he came in sight of the offender. Mr. Martin's groom corroborated his master's statement as to the cruel and unnecessary severity with which the horse was beaten. The defence set up was, that the horse was wrung in the withers, and would not stand still. The defendant, who was refunding the cart, had got out twice to steady the horse, and, on its being restive a third time, got out and gave it several cuts with a whip, but in no respect answering the description of Mr. Martin. They were inflicted with a view to make the horse stand still; and with moderation suitable to that purpose. Mr. Minshull said that he thought the present case did not come within the act, as the words expressed therein were, "Whoever shall wantonly and cruelly beat," &c. He said, if the words were "wantonly or cruelly," he should have no difficulty in deciding; but a thing might be done cruelly without being done wantonly.

Sir R. Birnie—But was this beating necessary? I think not, and if a horse is beaten with such severity as in the present instance, unnecessarily, I think it is cruel and wanton.

Mr. Minshull—If there be no apparent wantonness, I think a man must be permitted to exercise his own judgment as to the extent of chastisement he may inflict on his horse.

Mr. Martin—O, by G—, if a man is to be the judge in his own case, there's an end of everything.

Sir R. Birnie—I must fine you 5s. for swearing.

Mr. Martin—I am sworn already.

Mr. Minshull—Yes, but you have sworn an unnecessary oath.

Mr. Martin—Well, I'll pay.

Sir R. Birnie—No, I will not enforce it this time. I was joking only.

Mr. Martin, at considerable length, contended for a conviction, but Mr. Minshull said he was not authorised to convict under the circumstances.

Mr. Martin seemed to lose all forbearance at this decision, and passionately exclaimed, "Time has been, that when the brains were out the man would die."

Mr. Minshull replied, "Never mind about my brains, Mr. Martin, I shall not lose my temper because you do so."

Mr. Martin—"I really think that you should be relieved from the honour of your situation."

Mr. Minshull—I dismiss the case.

Mr. Martin, with warmth, said, I shall certainly move that all persons who have been convicted for offences under this act be pardoned.

The Army.—The detachments belonging to the 2d Battalion of the 60th, 76th, and 81st Foot, which embarked at Cowes on the 3d of April, have disembarked at Halifax. The detachments of the 49th and 66th Regiments of Infantry, which embarked at Cowes the 27th of January, have disembarked at the Cape of Good Hope. Lieut.-General Viscount Beresford, G.C.B. and G.C.H. who succeeded the late Lieutenant-General Sir Hildebrand Oakes, Bart. as Lieutenant-General of Ordnance, has also been appointed a Commissioner of the Royal Military College, and a Commissioner of the Royal Military Asylum. The appointment held by the late Lieut.-General Sir Hildebrand Oakes, Bart. at the Consolidated Board of General Officers, for the Inspection and Regulation of the Clothing of the Army, for the investigation of Claims for Losses, and for all Duties heretofore exercised by the Clothing Board, Board of Claims, and other Boards of General Officers, has not been filled up.

Widows Pensions.—The Widows Pensions due the 24th inst. will be in course of payment on the 10th of next month.

On Tuesday night Mr. Ruff, the King's Messenger, left town with despatches for Paris.

The Duke of York will leave Brighton in a day or two for Belvoir Castle.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Duke of Wellington arrived at Ghent on Saturday evening last. Before entering the town, the Noble Duke visited the works of the new citadel without the Courtray gate.

His Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief is expected to return to town on the 4th of next month.

Despatches have been received by Government from Sir C. Stuart, at Paris, which are thought to be of importance, as they were sent over from Boulogne, when they arrived there, in a galley by the British Consul.

On Thursday a respectable meeting of the most distinguished commercial men in the City was held at the London Tavern, to consider the state of the law between Principal and Factor. Mr. J. Smith having taken the Chair, proceeded to state the course which had been taken with regard to the Bill, by the Committee appointed by the last Meeting, and by himself and those who actively supported it in Parliament. They were all acquainted with the grievances which arose out of the operation of the existing law between Merchant and Factor. He was desirous that the Committee should stand well with the Meeting, and lamented that they had met with an opposition so formidable from some of the most distinguished individuals in the profession of the law, as to be obliged to give up a great portion of what they asked, in order to secure something. It had been objected to this, that by accepting the smaller part they had given up the greater; but he was of a decidedly different opinion. Having the grand principle conceded to them, he knew not upon what ground their opponents would stand when they came to refuse the rest. After acknowledging the zealous and able attention which had been paid to the subject by Lord Liverpool, Mr. Huskisson, and Mr. Wallace, the Hon. Gentleman said he would call the attention of the Meeting to another subject not wholly disconnected with the especial object for which they had assembled. The commercial interest was certainly most important, he liked not to say the most important, to the welfare of the country. Its prosperity was undoubtedly bound up with the general prosperity of the empire. He would therefore suggest, whether it would not be worthy of consideration that some permanent body should be established for attending to the interests and remedying the grievances of commerce in general. All other countries possessed such institutions, and had derived benefit from them: was it therefore proper that this, the greatest commercial state upon the earth, should remain without them? The Hon. Gentleman concluded by moving, "That the Report be read," and entreated that strict attention might be paid to it. The Report was then read to the Meeting. Mr. Hall and Mr. Sheriff Thompson briefly expressed their concurrence with the report of the Committee, and it was moved and seconded by them, "That the said Report be printed and distributed amongst those Gentlemen who signed the Petition to Parliament." The resolution was unanimously agreed to.—It was moved and carried that copies of the Report be presented to Lord Liverpool, Mr. Huskisson, and Mr. Wallace, as the best means of showing the respect and gratitude of the meeting.

Many of the landholders in Wilts, Dorset, and adjacent counties, have determined not to shoot until the 15th of September.

The East India Company's ship Thames is reported to have arrived at Penang on the 3d April.

The Woodmen of the Forest of Arden held their Grand Annual Wardmote lately. The Master Forester's Gold Medal was won by the Rev. T. C. Adams, and the Senior Verderer's Silver Medal by the Rev. C. Palmer; the Rev. T. C. Adams being Lieutenant of the Target. The Silver Arrow was won by Sir Francis Shuckburgh, Bart. The Silver Bugle was shot for, at 10½ score yards, and won by the Earl of Aylesford. The Digbean Gold Medal was adjudged to the Earl of Aylesford as Captain, and the Silver Digbean Medal to the Rev. T. C. Adams, as Lieutenant of Numbers.—The fortunate Ladies in the Lottery were Lady Emily Fielding and Miss Crawford; the former having drawn the Silver Arrow, and the latter the Gold Bugle.—The Earl of Aylesford, as winner of the bugle, was decorated with a beautiful silver medal, presented to the Woodmen of Arden by Sir F. Shuckburgh, Bart.; design, a bugle, in relief—motto, "Win me and wear me;" on the reverse, Fabunæ qui wernit ferat. And Sir Francis Shuckburgh, Bart. wore a very elegant silver shield, given in like manner by the Rev. T. C. Adams; design, an arrow, in relief—motto, Nec temere nec timide; on the reverse, Pudor est noscire sagittas.—The Lord Warden, the Earl of Aylesford, presented a very handsome chased silver cup to the best shot at the target, on Wednesday, which was won by the Rev. H. W. Sitwell, and a similar one to the best shot at the target, on Friday, which was won by the Rev. C. Palmer. The balls on Wednesday and Friday evenings, in the Forest Hall, were very brilliantly attended; there being assembled much of the beauty and fashion of this and the adjoining counties.

A most warmly contested election for the vicarage of St. Stephen, Coleman-street, was decided on Wednesday by a majority of 2, in favour of the Rev. Josiah Pratt, B. D. and Secretary to the Church Missionary Society; the numbers being—Rev. Josiah Pratt, 97—Rev. Richard Fayle, 95—Rev. James Hearn, 71.

H. Cavendish's c. by Orville, (3 years old, 7st.), for 500 guineas, h. ft.—Same day, the Marquis of Exeter's Athenian, (6 years old, 8st. 11lb.) is matched against Mr. W. Powlett's Whig, (4 years old, 9st.), for 100 sovereigns.—Lord Dunwich's horse Swap (4 years old), is matched against Mr. Tyrwhitt Jones's c. by Prossdy (5 years old), 8st. 4lb. each, at the next Houghton Newmarket Meeting, for 100 guineas, h. ft.

Egham.—In consequence of the Cup and Sweepstakes not having filled, the Meeting will not take place this year.—The Meeting for Egham Races, 1824, is fixed for the 25th of August.

Bridgewater.—On Tuesday, the Sweepstakes of 5gs. each, with 25gs added from the fund, two miles, was won by Mr. Fellowes's b. m. Escape, 5 yrs old.—The County Members' Plate of 50l. for all ages, was won by Mr. West's br. f. by Pioneer, 3 yrs old.—On Wednesday the Borough Members' Plate of 50l. was won by Mr. Fellowes's b. m. Escape, 5 yrs old.—Town Plate of 50l. was won by Col. Tynte's gr. g. Grimace, 6 yrs old.

Kendal.—On Wednesday the gold cup, value 100gs., three miles, was won by Mr. Ferguson's b. c. Wanton, 4 yrs old, beating Mr. Wardrop's ch. m. Eliza Leeds.—The Town Plate of 70l. for all ages, two mile heats, was won by Mr. Hudson's b. g. Sir Henry, 4 yrs.

Hop Intelligence—Maidstone.—Not the least improvement whatever has taken place in the plantations in this neighbourhood during the last week. What effects the present warm, sunshiny weather will have upon the plant it is impossible to say; but a few days will determine. It is the general opinion that the clear grounds will be much benefitted by a continuance of the present weather, while it will have a contrary effect on those that are foul and diseased. There are a few grounds in the parish of Loose that look very well, and are likely to produce from three to four bags per acre.

Canterbury.—Some few of the grounds about here look very good for the year, and are expected to yield from three to four bags an acre; but the far greater proportion will not pay for picking, unless some extraordinary change takes place, of which there is but little prospect.

Beckley.—The grounds in this neighbourhood that have escaped the vermin, of which there are a few, are certainly improving and fast coming into hop. All those that have been diseased are evidently getting worse; upon the whole, it is expected that this parish may average two bags per acre.

Essex.—The plantations in this country were not ameliorated during the past week. The accounts are, if possible, more unfavourable. The best grounds, it is thought, will fall short of the low expectations which were given about a fortnight ago.

Worcester.—It is now pretty generally believed that the plantations in this district are in such a wretched state as not to admit of recovery. The duty for the Worcester collection is laid at 200l., last year it exceeded 20,000l.

At the distribution of academical prizes, Monday se'nnight, by the University of France, at the Sorborne, Paris, singular to say, the first prize for French composition was adjudged to a Charles Neate, an English student, second son of the Rev. Thos. Neate, of Alvescot, Oxfordshire.

On Monday, at dusk, two well dressed men took a coach off the stand at Charing Cross, and desired to be driven to South Lambeth. On their arrival at the road on the right, half a mile on the London side of Brixton, they directed the coachman up it. They had not gone above three hundred yards, when the string was pulled, and Calcot the coachman, was asked his fare, and at the same moment one of them stole his watch from his pocket, and 18s. in silver. With a pistol at his head, the coachman was put into the coach, when the thieves cut the traces and made off. Information was given yesterday that the men answering the description of the robbers were taken near Kingston turnpike on the same night, for another robbery.

BRITISH and FOREIGN PUBLIC LIBRARY, Conduit-street Hanover-square.—Subscribers to this Library have the right of choosing from a most extensive and valuable Collection of the best Books in the various Languages whatever works they may desire, which are regularly forwarded to all parts of England or the Continent; they also participate in the advantages arising from an immediate and abundant supply of New Publications, and may direct the purchase of any work of general interest not previously added to the Library, arrangements which render its accommodations superior to those of any private Collection, however large, and at a far less expense. ISABELLA, a NOVEL. By the Author of "Rhoda, Plain Sense, and Things by Their Right Names."

"This is one of the few really good novels that make their appearance in a series of years, such as Cœlebs, Rhoda, Plain Sense. We know not how better to laud Isabella, than by saying it is the production of the Author of Rhoda and Plain Sense—each forms the eulogy of each. Isabella evinces the perfect triumph of virtue and good sense, over every evil in life; the book is one that may be placed with the greatest advantage in the hands of every young female, married and unmarried—the interest is powerfully kept up throughout."

HISTORICAL VIEW of the LITERATURE of the SOUTH of EUROPE. By M. DE SISMONDI. Translated from the Original, with Notes. By Thomas Roscoe, Esq.

"This is a valuable and interesting Work. It presents a broad and general view of the rise and progress of modern Literature, which will be read by those who are uninformed on the subject with equal gratification and improvement. The work, indeed, of some sketch of the History of European Literature has been felt by all who desired information, but we were unwilling to wade through the voluminous productions from which alone that information could be gained."—New Times.

PINNOCK'S CATECHISMS.

Just published, corrected up to the present year (price 9d.) a new edition of PINNOCK'S CATECHISM of BRITISH GEOGRAPHY, Part I. containing an easy and familiar Description of all the Cities and Chief Towns of ENGLAND and WALES; with their Population, according to the last Returns; their Productions, Natural Curiosities, &c. &c.—Ditto, Part II. containing SCOTLAND, and the FOREIGN POSSESSIONS of BRITAIN in all Parts of the World.—N.B. So complete and useful a Publication as the Catechism of British Geography never before appeared, and its extraordinary cheapness places it easily within the reach of every person who wishes to become acquainted with its valuable contents.—Of the same size and price may also be had the CATECHISMS of Arithmetic, Ancient History, Astronomy, Architecture, Agriculture, Algebra—two Parts, Bible and Gospel, Botany, British Biography, British Law, Classical Biography, Chronology, Chronology, Drawing, Duty to Parents, Electricity, Entomology, English Grammar, French Grammar, First Catechism, General Knowledge, Geography, Geometry, Greek Grammar, Hebrew Grammar, Heraldry, History of England, History of Scotland, History of Ireland, History of France, History of Rome, History of Greece, History of America—two Parts, History of the Jews, Ichnology, Italian Grammar, Land Surveying, Latin Grammar, Logic, Mineralogy, Mechanics, Medicine, or Art of Preserving Health, Modern History, Morality of Music, Mythology, Natural History, Navigation, Ornithology, Perspective, Painting in Oil, Poetry, Religion, Religious Denominations, Rhetoric, Sacred Geography, Scripture History, Trade and Commerce, Universal History, Use of the Globes.—The decided superiority of these excellent Juvenile Works over all others has ensured to them a most extensive and universal sale, which has enabled the Publishers to ornament the new editions with beautiful Portraits, by which they trust they have in some measure augmented their value without increasing the price.

"Being led to look into these works, we have been pleasingly surprised at the variety and accuracy of the information they contain, within so small a compass, and in so excellent a form; and we must say, that more convenient, accurate, well arranged, and proper publications, were never submitted to general observation."—Literary Gazette.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

In answer to the numerous calls of our friends for the promised review of Mr. Irving's Orations, we beg to say, that upon a consideration of the subject it appeared to us difficult to treat his book with adequate severity, without in some degree injuring the sacred cause of religion itself. We can, however, safely recommend our readers to an article on the subject in Blackwood's Magazine for the present month (No. 79,) where they will also find a communication from Mr. Tickler on the Edinburgh Review, equally worthy their notice.

We return our best acknowledgments for the packet from our respected correspondent at the Isle of Wight: it shall be attended to.

Our continuation of observations upon the Tread Mill are unavoidably delayed, in compliance with the numerous applications we have received to read some voluminous documents on the subject which have been transmitted to us.

We have received many letters upon the subject of Dr. Collyer—his explanation appears to our numerous correspondents most unsatisfactory—he tells the public that his time is occupied in giving medical advice, and yet he of all men alive dares not to go into a warm bath without a medical adviser. If Doctor Collyer Will Name the medical man who was his companion in the bath, he will do more service to himself than by any other measure he can take. The examination of the porter previous to recommendation, and the porter's statement of that circumstance, we shall delay, in hopes that the Doctor will simply do the easiest possible thing for him to do—answer the question we have just put.

We are much obliged for the communication from Prince's-st. Bank.

We beg to assure N. that we never felt the least offended with him.

We cannot lay our hands at the moment on the Barbadoe. Gazette—the instant it is found it will be transmitted.

For want of room, we have been obliged to transfer several original articles to our last page.

A Monday's Edition, containing the Latest News, the Stock List, the London Markets, and the State of the Country Markets by that Morning's Post, is published at Three o'Clock.

NEW SURREY THEATRE.—To-morrow Evening will be presented an entirely new and original Melo-Drame, entitled, "DR. FRANKENSTEIN,"—in which Miss Tunstall will make her first appearance. After which the popular Melo Drama of ANTIGONE; or, The Theban Brothers.—And to conclude with the favourite piece called "The POULAHRS; or, A Slave's Revenge."—Places for the Boxes may be taken of Mr. Rosauer, at the new Box-office in the Theatre, of whom may be had private boxes nightly.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, August 31.

As perhaps all our readers do not see our Wednesday's paper, the British Mercury, it may be worthy of remark, as illustrative of the indolence of Spanish affairs, that the following observations, which we made upon the state of things in the middle of last week, are equally applicable to day:—

"The country is still left in a state of blessed uncertainty as to Spanish affairs—the Opposition papers tell us that the cause "looks up," forgetting that in every proof they attempt to bring of the prosperity of the patriots, they are furnishing fresh matter of accusation against Quiroga and Wilson, who, if what they now tell us be true, ran away long before there was any necessity for flight.

"In the absence of positive information, the illuminati of the Strand and Blackfriars exert their whole force of ingenuity to invent facts, and thence draw conclusions; but the real truth is, that they know nothing, and that in guessing or reasoning, they may be outdone by any of those venerable priestesses of Pomona, who dispense her bounties from barrows and stalls along the line of their own territories.

"It is quite clear, whatever difficulties the Duke d'Angoulême may have to encounter with the Regency, that the Constitutionalists are perfectly in despair. The officers in the army of Ballesteros, even those most warmly attached to the Constitutional cause, are daily and hourly following his example, not from having abandoned their principles, but from the absolute hopelessness of the cause altogether—to this utter hopelessness alone can be attributed the premature retreat of Quiroga and Wilson—the simple apprehension of the fall of Corunna—the mere risque of personal danger to themselves we are quite sure would not have forced these rival heroes to take to their heels, one to England and the other to a desert island—it must have been a perfect knowledge of the certain result alone which could have induced such extraordinary and precipitate movements.—We anxiously expect an arrival."

It is not because the Pope is dead—for infallibility will fail in its own person—that we venture to call the attention of our readers to the contemptible Humbug of Prince Hohenhlohe and Mrs. Stuart. The history of this mountebank priest and this new pretender, is, as we anticipated in our Mercury of last Wednesday, laid open to public contempt by one holding their own faith.

Mrs. Stuart, it appears, was frightened one night with an alarm of fire in the Convent to which she belonged, and some new Machilligut, more gallantly than his predecessor, rescued her from her danger and her warm bed, and without any thing to cover her, popped her down upon some wet grass, by which, as the pious body herself tells us, she got cold and consequent rheumatism.

We are not quite prepared to state whether this is the identical lady who told Mr. James Smith, the jocose lawyer, (who, before we knew who he was, disowned us! in the cockney Times,) that she was troubled with the rheumatiz, and to whom he replied, "Why not try the essence of Mustardism, Madam?"—but whether it were she or whether it were not, this Stuart and pretender vowed and swore, first to the Reverend Prince Hohenhlohe (or as he is called by the Irish Papists in St. Giles's, Prince High and Low,) and afterwards of him, that she was cured by his prayers in a manner more wonderful than St. Martin Van Butchell, with his beard and his hat, or Doctor Eady with his blacking and his whitening, ever cured anybody upon the face of the earth.

"Sir," said Mrs. Stuart (as we have been told) to Sam Rogers, whom she met accidentally, "by the powers, I "lost the use of my limbs by the dew of the grass."—"Ma'am," says the wag, "then now you have recovered them by the grace de Dieu"—which, though smattering of levity, our facetious friend Sam could not resist under the absurdity of the stories which had been told of her restoration, and which in fact tend more powerfully to the depreciation of true religion than anything in the world. Nevertheless every body who believed in miracles believed in Prince High and Low and the whole affair, and the monks, and the padres, and the confessors, got a set of popish doctors and apothecaries to put their names as witnesses to the miraculous recovery of our old friend, till, as we said in the Mercury, the market was overstocked with miracles, and the papists themselves became alarmed at the glut.

Now, only let us look at what Doctor Cheyne, one of the subscribing witnesses to the miracle, says, when pressed a little upon the subject—he knows Pope Pius is dead, and out comes truth, or else he has sufficient good sense to throw priestcraft overboard—Let us hear him—remembering that his name is to the miracle in the first instance, and never forgetting that he is a Papist at this present moment, and moreover an eminent physician, and too shrewd to be deceived by artful contrivances. A letter was addressed to him requesting his opinion on two points—namely, whether there was anything miraculous in the change which took place in Mrs. Stuart's health, and whether it could be explained on natural principles? It was certainly taking much liberty with Dr. Cheyne's character to put such questions to him, because none could suppose that he would ascribe the partial recovery of this lady's health to a miraculous cause, and such is the imperfection of medical science, that he might not be able to account for the change on natural principles; but, it seems, he felt no difficulty in answering the queries, and the following is the reply to the letter which was addressed to him; and it must satisfy any man but a superstitious bigot, that the pretended miracle is a shameful deception:

"Dublin, Aug. 22, 1823.

"Dear Sir—I felt it necessary to see Dr. Mills and Mr. Macnamara before I could answer your letter of the 20th. Considering that the friends of Mrs. Stuart, of Ranelagh Convent, might not think it expedient to publish our certificates relative to the state of her health, we resolved not to give an opinion on the subject, and not in any way to commit ourselves individually.

"These certificates having been published, I have, in consequence of your letter, waited upon Dr. Mills and Mr. Macnamara; and as they leave me to the exercise of my own discretion, I am have no hesitation in answering your questions. To the first I reply, that there was not, in my opinion, any thing miraculous in the change which took place in Mrs. Stuart's health; to the second, that her case can to my entire satisfaction, be accounted for on natural principles.—I am, dear Sir, yours. "J. CHEYNE.

"Rev. Robert Daly, &c."

We think this exposition, to which we alluded in the Mercury of Wednesday, coming from a Papist, will be sufficient to put the miracles of the mountebank priest, Prince Hohenhlohe, exactly in their proper place.

The Morning Chronicle has changed masters—the Perry people have very judiciously got rid of it. As a specimen of its improved wit and good taste, gentlemanly allusion and elegant satire, our readers will permit us to quote the following incomparable jeu d'esprit, which appeared in its columns on Monday last:—

"'Naturam expelles furcâ, tamen atque recurret.'

"Thursday, when Mr. Alderman Scholey alighted from his horse, near the house of Lord Bexley, with whom he had been taking a ride, he found the inside-facing of the lappet of his coat and the pocket had been incised (query excised), and a parcel of inconsiderable value extracted, together with a bunch of keys. On further investigation he discovered that the pockets of his breeches had been turned inside out, and his loose money taken away. Fortunately for the Worthy Alderman his pocket-book, containing valuable property, was in his side pocket, which the thieves did not attempt to rifle.

"Ah! Van, Van, at thy old tricks again! 'What's bred in the bone'—the proverb's rather musty. This adventure reminds us of the story of the cat in the fairy tale, who was turned into a beautiful Princess, and married to a very grand and amiable young Prince. The day, however, when sitting at table, feasting, a mouse ran across the apartment, when the Princess, to the amazement of the whole Court, commenced an active pursuit; and, to the infinite scandal of the Grandees, captured, and dined on the little quadruped."

It has been hinted to us, that this "right merrie jest" was contributed to the leading Whig journal by Sir James Mackintosh, but we have reason to know that the report is entirely false.

Some nautical wag has succeeded in hoaxing the Master of the Lord Exmouth merchant ship, who picked up at sea, in a bottle covered with barnacles, a paper, of which the following is a copy:—

"North Polar Expedition, January 7, 1822.—This bottle was sent adrift in the North Polar Sea by the Officers of the North Polar Expedition, being then frozen up, five degrees West of Melville Island.—All well."

Human credulity is unbounded; but that a hoax so palpable as that of sending a bottle adrift on a day when they were frozen up, should have humbugged a sailor, is really hard to be believed.—How the marines will chuckle!

MR. ARCHDEACON GLOVER.

This gentleman, who has recently been promoted to an archdeaconry by the Bishop of Norwich, through the coquetting of Mr. Coke, of Holkham, and of whom we have occasionally taken notice, has addressed to us the following letter:

Sir,—As Editor of the newspaper called John Bull, you thought proper some time ago to devote a portion of its columns to remarks upon my character and conduct. Every sentence of those remarks contained a distinct falsehood; I forebore, however, at that period to take any notice of the libel, but as the greatest forbearance has still its limits, and as the remarks you have again published upon my appointment to the Archdeconry of Sudbury, are of the same malignant character, and evidently intended to create unfavourable impressions towards me amongst a body of my clerical brethren to whom I have been hitherto a stranger; I now feel myself compelled to call upon you for an immediate retractation of both these libels, and to give to their contradiction the same publicity you have given to their circulation. I am neither a "political farmer," nor any farmer at all beyond the cultivation of a very few acres of my own glebe for the uses of a large family. The petition rejected by the House of Commons, of which you asserted me to be the author, I never saw or even heard of till it had been presented. The archdeaconry was conferred upon me by the Bishop of Norwich, not "in preference to his own son," but in fulfilment of a promise made some years before that son was in orders. To the principles, whether of Radicals in politics or Ranters in religion, I have never been less opposed than yourself. GEO. GLOVER.

P.S. As my chance of seeing your paper is purely accidental, I hope I am not asking too much in requesting you to send me a copy of the number in which your retractation is made, should you think it expedient to make any. If no such number reaches me in the course of the next three weeks you will not blame me for want of due notice of such ulterior proceedings as I may deem it necessary to adopt. As a part of any retractation I shall expect the insertion of this letter.

Norfolk, Aug. 7, 1823.

It appears by this letter that we have been guilty of two libels, for which Mr. Archdeacon Glover, now that he has gotten rank, is to punish us in the most exemplary manner. Now, what are they?

Why, first we called him a farmer—we certainly plead guilty to an error of the press in some of the early-printed copies of the number to which the Reverend Gentleman alludes. We should be surprised, however, if he thought the appellation libellous, considering the tendency of his patron, Mr. Coke, that way; indeed, in disowning the charge of farming, he gives as a reason why he is not a farmer, the fact that he has no land to cultivate—poor Glover!—we are mightily sorry for him; but not so much upon this account as because he did not take the trouble to enquire a little more about this libellous aspersion before he blustered. We are ready to call him farmer instead of reformer now, if he like, and we do not think he will suffer by the mistake; that it was a mistake, (which we know he would not give us credit for, if we could not prove it) he may assure himself by referring to the Monday edition of the same number, indeed, after seven or eight thousand papers had been worked off, the error of "Farmer" for "Reformer" was discovered and corrected, as he may see if he takes the trouble to look—and this is a libel—

"Oh! give Jane Glover,
"And tell her I love her!"

But do not come upon us, Archdeacon George, and talk about libels—we have stood heavy batteries—we are not to be frightened by minor canons—No;—nor by Sudbury Archdeacons (made by the Bishop of Norwich!)—neither!

The second libel consists in our having said that the venerable Archdeacon of Sudbury, drew up the petition from Norfolk, which was rejected by the House of Commons on account of the intemperance of its language!—at this charge the venerable Archdeacon is irate—denies that he framed the petition—and shudders at the idea of intemperate language.

Our readers should be told that this mealy-mouthed spirit was the person—being a clergyman, and exempt from consequences—who in the most violent, and in the simplest, singsong manner, unadorned and undecorated, gave Mr. Wodehouse the lie upon the public hustings at the last general election—that this is any indication of "opposition to the principles of Radicals in politics" we do not certainly presume to say, but we state a fact, which since the venerable Archdeacon sent a report of his speech at that meeting to the Norwich Mercury, we are inclined to imagine he will not "contradict."

Upon that occasion we published a letter addressed to Mr. Glover by Mr. Atkinson, a Lawyer of Norwich, in which is the following paragraph.

"And was it for a man of God, a preacher of peace and good will, a skulk under the safeguard of his holy profession, and utter insinuations that no layman, nor beneath Mr. Wodehouse's notice, either did or dared to utter? As long, Sir, as you confined yourself to your arguments (if arguments they might be called) we only laughed. The ridiculous light in which you exhibited your new patron, while you were clearly proving that a party man cannot be independent, afforded us infinite amusement. Nor, Sir, did we fail to duly appreciate the good sense and the good taste of the ci-devant Chaplain, who only to other day vilified his old patron, or of the Reverend Manager of the Cromer Meeting that censured Mr. Wodehouse in his absence, while this holy vituperator was abusing the same Mr. W. for daring to reply to charges that had been brought against him in his absence by a gentleman who, perchance, might not be present at this meeting. But Sir, when you gave Mr. Wodehouse the lie, as you repeatedly did, in an ungentlemanly manner, and opposed your own veracity to his, you excited very different feelings, and threw your dice upon a fearful venture, we could not but call to mind who the accused is. He is one of the brightest ornaments of an honourable family, that, from the days of Agincourt, has, in no instance, by word or deed, tarnished the brilliant laurels it gathered on that glorious field. Nor could we help asking who the accuser is? The writer of letters signed Verax, when Quæstion first detected—the identical Verax whom the Rev. R. Forby caught culling simples, and exposed in an iron cage—the "egregious" Verax whom the Rev. G. Burges lashed till he labored with rage and vexation; the same Verax whom a worthy Alderman of this City drove from the field only by shewing him a copy of his own tenance in the mirror of truth; the very Verax (mirabile dictu) who at our last County Meeting detected himself through Mr. E. Wodehouse's instrumentality.—Hinc Ira—hæ Lacrymæ!—I am, Rev. Sir, your very obedient humble servant, "J. F. G. ATKINSON.

Norwich, May 6, 1822."

We merely re-publish this, to shew what the general opinion of Mr. Glover's political principles are, and to shew that when a, real adversary stands forward in propriâ personâ, Mr. Glover is by no means so high and mighty in his conduct as he is towards us poor printers; he knows that if he replied to Mr. Atkinson's "pop-gun," (as that gentleman calls it), he would have a four-and-twenty pounder opened upon him forthwith!

It should not be forgotten, that with Mr. Atkinson's letter before him, the Reverend Gentleman made a similar attack upon the Norfolk Chronicle, from which he got nothing more than we mean to give him, which is a "civil answer."

Mr. Archdeacon Glover says, that as to the "petition rejected by the House of Commons of which you asserted me to be the author, I never saw or ever heard of it 'till it had been presented."—We would ask Mr. Glover whether he did not say himself upon one occasion—"I never saw the petition which was not laid before the public," and in asking this question, however ready we may be to take the Reverend Gentleman's word that he did not write the petition, we must be permitted to observe, not in the language the Reverend Gentleman himself used to Mr. Wodehouse, but in gentle terms, that since he now disavows to us having seen the petition which he once said he saw, (at least so we believe,) he may have forgotten that he wrote it.

We, however, are extremely glad to find that the Archdeacon—now he is Archdeacon—so directly and pointedly disavows and disclaims radical principles—it is indeed a great satisfaction to find that he perceives his error even thus late, and previously to visiting his clergy makes an avowal, by which we give every due publicity, of his reformation.

But still we are malevolent—because we say the Bishop of Norwich has made him Archdeacon of Sudbury in preference to his own son. Where is the malevolence or malignity in this?—It is true—if his son were not in orders several years ago—he is in orders now, and eligible for the Archdeaconry. We know that Mr. Robert Bathurst is universally esteemed and respected—we know that he is more over a Tory, and we know that Coke did—as the Archdeacon truly says—get a promise of the Archdeaconry from the Bishop for him (Glover)—that we know all this we have proved by stating it months and years since—and where the malignity or the falsehood is we are at a loss to discover.

We believe that the great cause of the Archdeacon's pre-great displeasure against us, is our having bought and annihilated the favourite paper of the party, the "NORWICH COURIER," in which the wits and wags of Holkham used to circulate their political jeux d'esprits. We publish his letter, nevertheless, with the greatest pleasure; but as for sending him a copy of BULL—poor man! why should we? Now that he has gotten preferment, he can afford, even with his large family and small glebe, to pay sevenpence for the gratification of reading—if not our remarks—his own epistle. We repeat, that we are extremely glad to have induced his recantation, which we have no doubt, will do him more effectual service with his clerical brethren, than any thing we could say or do for HIM, or he could say or do against US.

It is whispered that MRS. SERRES is likely to put in her claim to the vacant Papal Chair; rumour adds that she has in her possession a letter from the late POPE, mentioning it as the last wish of his life that she should be his successor. Two waiters at a Coffee-house in St. George's-fields are ready to swear to the hand-writing of his late Eminence.

DIURNALIA.

We are requested to say that the announcement of gaieties at TIXALL to celebrate the coming of age of MR. HAYNE is wholly without foundation.

We are requested to say that the statement of the case of MR. FARMER, at Clapham, as given in the MORNING CHRONICLE of Thursday, is full of mistakes and misrepresentations. We do not pretend to say that the CHRONICLE, in waging war against the Church, intentionally mistakes facts relating even to a Dissenter, but from the large space the account of the affair occupied in that paper, and the size of the type employed in printing it, we should be inclined to suspect a desire to degrade the cloth, which suspicion the official detection of the inaccuracies in the detail does by no means tend to weaken.

We are requested to say, that SHERMAN, the porter examined on a charge of stealing diamond rings, stated by the TIMES of Friday to be the porter of the Auction Mart, neither is, nor ever was in that situation.

MR. THOMAS EVANS, late clerk to Messrs. BOND, SONS, and PATTISALL, begs to inform the Editor of the TIMES, that the history of his suicide, detailed at length in that ingenious journal, is untrue. Better authority for such a refutation cannot be found.

THE DISPERSION.

A NEW SONG.

Tune—"Away with this pouting and sadness."

Away with this spouting and madness,
Of speaking and moving—no more,
For this is the season of gladness—
The Parliament Session is o'er!
The lawyers, the soldiers, the sailors,
The Whigs—those who vote for the Crown—
The bankers, Jews, saints, army tailors—
In short the whole WORLD'S out of town.
Then away, &c.

Pale BROUGHAM on the Circuit is fagging,
With SCARLETT, and DENMAN, and RAINE;
Wise WOOD in his buggy's gone bagging,
While CONGREVE goes dancing for SPAIN;
BURDETT is at home, growing older,
CAM HOBHOUSE is murdering Greek;
And HEBER, in private, grown bolder,
On Popery ventures to speak.
Then away, &c.

MANNERS SUTTON, promoter of knowledge,
Abandons the bath and the beach,
To lay the first stone of a college,
And make a "right national" speech;
WILL LAMB has come posting from Brocket,
To speak in behalf of his dear;
LORD JOHN has run down by the "Rocket,"
To sniff the fresh air on Ryde Pier.
Then away, &c.

SIR GERARD, a great friend of BILLY'S,
Has set up DAME SERRES again;
LORD NUGENT has set off from LILLIES,
To set down the LILIES in Spain.
LORD DEERHURST has gone out a yachting;
SIR RONALD to Durham's run down;
MICHAEL ANGELO'S pickling and potting
For next winter's dinners in town.
Then away, &c.

There's TWISS turned a hitter and stopper,
There's PEEL getting ready his gun,
Old PASCOE is counting his copper,
And PALMERSTON counting on fun;
Bomb GORDON is just come from Paris,
BOB WILSON is gone to the war,
NED ELLICE still fetches and carries,
And MAR's at the King-street BAZAAR.
Then away &c.

Grim LAMBTON is bleaching the yellow,
Of which very much has been sung;
WRIXON BEECHER is visiting Mallow;
GABY BENNET is holding his tongue.
While HUME finds his pleasure in labours,
And still at his "estimates" fags,
TOM CREEVEY'S abusing his neighbours,
And SEFTON is grooming his nags.
Then away, &c.

Fat MAULE sends his heir half a guinea;
DICK MARTIN stays rescuing dogs;
MACDONALD still looks like a ninny;
SPRING RICE has set off for the bogs.
PETER MOORE is gone steaming from Dover,
To visit his favourite son:
DUNCANNON gives dinners in clover,
Rejoiced that his labours are done.
Then away, &c.

Where TIERNEY is, seeme quite a mystery,
Where DAVIES is, nobody cares;
SIR JAMIE projecting his hist'ry,
Lists of subscribers prepares;
But why waste the time to count noses,
To find them all out would be vain,
Just wait till the present year closes,
They'll be ready for working again.
Then away with their spouting and madness,
Of speaking and moving no more,
For this is the season of gladness—
The Parliament Session is o'er!

EDINBURGH REVIEW.

WE ought to apologise to our readers for occupying so much of their attention with a worn-out weapon of WHIGGERY, such as MR. JEFFREY'S "blue and yellow" CATAMARAN—but in proportion as it descends to decrepitude, the symptoms of decadence and anility are more peculiarly exhibited in garrulity; and the confessions of so old an offender cannot fail to benefit the cause of morality, by exposing the means which have been so long too successfully employed in undermining it.

Who would have supposed, after the importation and successful establishment in this country of the FRENCH SYSTEM of attacking social and political establishments, through the medium of a work professing to be exclusively devoted to literary criticism, these men should in their dotage even be weak enough to confess that the mind, thus drawn from higher pursuits, can obtain through its means only "a smattering of every "thing and a mastery of none," or that they should now avow that "half the cant of criticism is envy of the moderns, rather "than admiration of the ancients." This is all true, and has been repeatedly affirmed by their opponents—but why should they be fools enough to acknowledge it?

The fact is, the unfortunate editor was bewildered; and we have already shewn the awkwardness of the predicament in which the "Kensington decree" of writing us down had placed him. HE certainly ought not in fairness to have been made the "LION'S MOUTH" for depositions against libellers and defamers!—He could not eat his own words, which had fed and clothed him for so many years—they were recorded and stitched, and in some instances half-bound, in the ante-libraries of his subscribers!

It was equally out of the question that, even in the "tearful and remorseful mood," he should kneel down and express contrition, or promise amendment—for "OTHELLO'S occupation" then would indeed "be gone!" Nothing was left to the poor man but to take up, in obedience to his masters, a more than ordinary complement of the "true Corinthian brass"—to forget, in the hope his readers would also forget, all his own transgressions in that line—and to dash boldly into "a wilderness of speculation," which, whilst it confounded right and wrong—foreign literature—dramatic criticism—arts—sciences—hypercriticism—local ribaldry and uncouth playfulness should leave the unwary or confounded reader to infer generally, that a WHIG libel is meritorious, by long prescriptive right—whilst a TORY libel, being a mere usurpation, ought to be "CRUSHED" by "a vigour beyond the law!"

"It has been urged," this unhappy personage is made to say, "as one fatal objection against periodical criticism, that "it is too often made the engine of party spirit and party invec-"tive! This is AN ABUSE OF IT GREATLY TO BE LAMENTED!" Ingenuous MR. JEFFREY—what an effort it must have cost the poor gentleman to make the required admission, even en passant—but the lamentation over the abuse, was by a turn of the pen easily converted into a defence of it, leaving the general expression for future use and the qualification of it for the present purpose of justifying the exclusive practice among THE WHIGS. For, "in fact," he goes on to say "it only shews the extent and importance of this branch of "literature." He had previously indeed told us its importance in keeping the heads of the writers "above water," whilst it imbues the public mind with a "smattering of every "thing and a mastery in none!" "It has become the "organ," he adds, "of every thing else, HOWEVER ALIEN TO "IT;" or, in other terms, this festering POISON, which has been insidiously made to penetrate into every department of social and private life, which has loosened the bonds of society, impaired the sanctity of moral obligation, detached the feelings of the people from those affections which bound them to the institutions of their fathers, and sacrificed religion itself to the objects of political expediency or party interests, is WHOLLY and SOLELY to be attributed to the system adopted by the adventurers in the Edinburgh Review as the imitators and compurgators of the French PHILOSOPHISTS and REVOLUTIONISTS!!

But let us hear their plea of necessity—the natural consequence of political LIBEL, resulting from their system—"The "current of political and individual obloquy," says the Reviewer, "has run into this channel, BECAUSE it has absorbed "every topic"—that is, these flippant philosophists have, by the adoption of an unprincipled, anti-social scheme, not only rendered personal and political libel necessary—but indigenous in the system itself. "It is necessary," he says, "to in-"sert politics in a sort of sandwich of literature, in order to "make them at all palatable to the ordinary taste."—Why not at once say, it is necessary to corrupt the public miad in order to bend it to the purposes of faction!—"A WHIG or a "TORY tirade"—(mark the liberal conjunction!)—"on a po-"litical question—THE ABUSE OF A PUBLIC CHARACTER—"now stands side by side in a FASHIONABLE REVIEW with "a disquisition on ancient coins, or is introduced in the mid-"dle of an analysis of the principles of taste."

To be sure it does—and it is this unnatural association—this subtle means of propagating political poison—this subversion of principle, and these false pretences for insidious attack upon public and private character, which we charge upon the WHIGS—and this Frenchified scheme of demoralization, which corrupting literature at its sources, has enabled them to circulate, through every channel, INFIDEL and UNENGLISH principles, concurrently with their abuse and defamation of GREAT and ELEVATED individuals!

"It is found necessary," he goes on stumbling in his confession, "to POISON or SOUR the public mind, by going to the "well head of polite literature and periodical criticism, which "shews plainly how many drink at that fountain, and will drink "at no other!"—Oh Balaam, Balaam!—That MR. JEFFREY and the WHIGS have found it necessary to "poison or sour "the public mind," in order to give currency to their tenets, we are fully prepared to admit, from the repellent qualities of those tenets in their native form—but that they should in a hapless moment have "let out" that this lamentable state of literary degradation is the work of their own hands, is, we repeat, more than we could expect, or rationally hope—there is an impudence and boldness in the avowal which, considering their crest-fallen state, is worthy our admiration, could we forget that had not the course of this systematic corruption been impeded, and its triumphant march arrested in its mid career, by a rival review on a similar plan, but on diametrically opposite principles, the mischief which has partially extended itself over certain classes of society would have prevailed universally—and what France is, would have been a fate "most devoutly to be wished for," rather than what WE should have been.

Such are, by this man's own confession, the inevitable consequences of the system originated and acted upon for a long series of years by the WHIGS. Why then, we are entitled to ask, is it not a consequence as natural and allowable to the irritated and galled feelings of the long suffering Tory, as to those of the domineering WHIGS?—We are ready to grant them the full credit of the invention or the importation, and all the advantages of their patent for a course of years—but such general declaimers against monopolies and exclusive rights, can hardly have supposed that they were never to encounter competition, or that they were to be left in undisturbed possession of a privilege, capable of overthrowing every other privilege worth securing in life!—as we have always, and THEY only NOW, admit!

The Quarterly Review met them on their own ground, and with their own weapons—and has fairly beaten them out of their strong holds; but in proportion as they were compelled to retreat they became less choice in their means of carrying on the war. As their quarterly efforts became fainter and weaker, the daily and weekly press were called in as auxiliaries, who could "poison and sour the public mind" infinitely more adroitly, in proportion to the rapid succession of its supplies from the "well head." The CHRONICLE quoted the REVIEW—and the REVIEW tickled the CHRONICLE. The Sunday press, venting its libels upon all who were not the enemies of church and state, is even now represented as "moderate, and of consistent principles," and the weekly libellers are admitted ad eundem to the privilege of writing articles for the REVIEW, because MR. BROUGHAM and his original coadjutors can "keep their heads above water" more swimmingly in a circuit than in the stagnating pool—the "well-head" destined to "poison or sour the public mind!"

Be that as it may—the system is acknowledged—its consequences detailed, and offending TORIES—that is, all who prefer the monarchy of England, its old-fashioned morality, its old-fashioned attachments, and its grateful acknowledgements for benefits bestowed, and happiness secured, to the constitutional speculations of the ABBE SIEYES, down to RIEGO, ARGUELLES, and QUIROGA—are directly pointed out as the only legitimate objects of SYSTEMATIC SCURRILITY and WHIG OBLOQUY!

In working the system, let it never be forgotten, no bounds were set to the licentiousness of their attacks, whilst the press flowed in one channel, and was able to overbear all impediments to its full current. The TORIES were held up to additional contempt for their unresisting submission to WHIG talent and superiority!—"Why don't you write again—why "run away from your arms—why whimper and whine about "the licentiousness of the popular press? Have you not pens—"have you not wits—have you not money?" These were some of the many taunts returned to men smarting under the lash of mental persecution—to sons who would have resented the opprobrium cast upon a parent's name—upon husbands who would avert the calumnious insinuations against their wives—to the public officer, who, conscious in integrity, beheld himself pilloried in the face of the people as an abettor or leader of CORRUPTION!!

CORBETT was the first man who frightened them, by turning upon them the coarsest weapons their new vocabulary had supplied him with; and finding they could not cope with him, they end by praising him! LORD BYRON was the first who exposed their criticisms to contempt, and the persons to ridicule—and him they laud as the master-spirit of the age. And it is only in the immediate agony of suffering that their senseless and harmless execrations against OURSELF have been indiscreetly uttered! They have repented it ere this, we suspect—and we should not be surprised hereafter to find them bestowing a panegyric, or at least an acknowledgement of "the fellow having some fun and point about him."—Hey, MR. JEFFREY! For the present, anger and indignation are the order of the day.

After the candid exposure of their scheme, it is rather extraordinary that the WHIGS should only now have discovered that "illiberality is the sin which most easily besets the periodical press!" Words are of importance in the discussion of things—and there is a very valid reason on the part of the Reviewer for substituting "illiberality" for "licentiousness" on the present occasion. Liberality we too well know is the generic term among the initiated for all the essential doctrines of WHIGGERY and RADICALISM upon questions of Government, religion, and public morals—illiberality, therefore, may be considered the extreme point of difference, and consequently the extreme point of OUR delinquency. But hear the gentleman out: "The abuse, however, has grown to a height "that renders it desirable that it should be CRUSHED if it can-"not be corrected—for it threatens to overlay not only criticism "and letters (the Edinburgh system!) but to root out all com-"mon honesty and common sense from works of the greatest "excellence, upon large classes of society!"

Wonderful it is, we repeat, that the discovery had not been sooner made, and still more that it should so late be acknowledged! "All character, all decency—the plainest matters "of fact or deductions of reason are made the sport of a nick-"name, an innenda, or a bold and direct falsehood." What say the worthies of the MORNING CHRONICLE and the old TIMES to this? What must the witty phalanx of Holland House feel at this encroachment upon the "merry doings" of nick-namery, and the facetiæ of TOMMY MOORE and his Bacchanalian chorus? A sly fellow this, Mr. Editor, to give a back hand stroke at his task masters!

But the poor man could not sustain this tone without turning the whole thing into such palpable ridicule that he is obliged to make a new start, and admit that "both the extreme "parties in the state, the ULTRA WHIGS as well as the ULTRA "ROYALISTS, have occasionally trespassed on the borders of "this ENORMITY!—BUT," and now comes the grand attack—"it is only the worst part of the Ministerial press that has had "the temptation, the hardihood, or the COWARDICE to make "literature the mere tool and creature of party spirit—and in "the sacredness of the cause in which it was embarked, to dis-"regard entirely the profligacy of the means."

Mighty well, this, for an Edinburgh Reviewer as far as the theatrical rant of mock indignation goes; but may we be permitted to ask what is meant by making "literature the mere tool and creature of party spirit"—or what are the Reviewer's modes of distinction between this and going to "the well head of polite literature" to seek for "POISON" to sour the public mind? It appears, as far as we can judge, to consist only in the difference of the waters which supply it, and that the only question really at issue, is, whether it be lawful to convey an antidote through the same channel which is acknowledged to have been hitherto saturated only with POISON?

The Reviewer, by a lapse, has admitted the "sacredness of OUR cause," and if there be any profligacy in the means of supporting it, he and his coadjutors and abettors are alone entitled to the STIGMA of having supplied them!—Why, the man, lost in the halo of his hallucination, runs into a defence of our zeal, at the very moment he professes to stigmatise it—and Balaam-like again praises where he meant to curse! One might be led to suppose the veteran professer were instructing a Tyro in the mysteries of his profession, when he says, "The cry of no Popery," or "the Constitution in danger," was an answer to all cavils—he should have said to all "traitors." "Who would hesitate" (he asks) "about the weapons he used to repel an attack on ALL THAT WAS DEAR and VALUABLE IN CIVIL INSTITUTIONS." Bravo, Sir! We answer, no true lover of his country—and further, that so far from "no Popery" or "the Constitution in danger" being cries without meaning—the WHIGS, if suffered to remain the monopolists of the press, and thus enabled to force their way into power, stand committed to questions so vitally hostile to both the PROTESTANT INTEREST, and the CONSTITUTION of KING, LORDS, and COMMONS, that they must either put the axe to the root of both, or acknowledge themselves the most unprincipled and dishonourable hypocrites that ever laboured to "POISON or SOUR" the public mind!!

We cannot quote more at large upon the subject, but the Book is in circulation, and we may now safely recommend it to the perusal of our readers, where they will find at page 372, all the means—literally and identically adopted by the WHIG journals for the last twenty or thirty years—advocated by the worthy Editor himself. They will see the most active among the traders in sedition and calumny lauded for their "moderate principles and consistent politics"—whilst he has the effrontery to impute as enormous and inexpiable crimes to the loyal press of the country what he treats as virtuous and patriotic in THEM!—Then follows what the writer must have known to be false, from the notorious neglect of which Ministers and the friends of the Crown have been guilty towards literary men, and public writers. One of the first acts of a WHIG MINISTRY was, indeed, to raise MR. PERRY, the official editor of their own journal, to Government office, and to reward their laureat, TOMMY MOORE, with a place;—but let the WHIGS point out a single instance of such selection among the writers on the loyal side of the question, so that the empty declamation about only "one royal road to reputation!"—"the manner of court favour"—is mere gratuitous vapouring, to poison and sour the public mind by a known and insidious falsehood, in the face of facts staring them in the face.

The WHIGS do pay, as MR. JEFFREY knows, and pay well—they have their hireling—their sycophants—their dinners—their coteries—they have their subscriptions too, and whilst an impudent and too successful attack was made upon some men of rank in Scotland for contributing funds to support the cause of loyalty and sound principles, the WHIG ARISTOCRACY are not only in the regular habit of supporting by their funds or credit (heaven save the mark!) the most violent Opposition journals, but of contributing to the establishment of new ones! All this is according to the regular creed and practice of WHIGGERY, and it is natural that men who supposed themselves in possession of an exclusive right by long usage, should fret and fume at finding themselves not only dispossessed of it, but in danger of sinking under the effects of a system which debars them from all appeal to a merciful exercise of the retribution which has dismayed them;—but that they should have the impudence—a more qualified term we would have used could we have found one sufficiently applicable to the purpose—to accumulate a list of crimes, peculiarly and properly their own, and endeavour to invest their successful opponents with them, is as truly ludicrous as it is essentially base!

Still we might really be brought to commiserate the wailings and whimperings of these WOUNDED WHIGS, if we could forget their former exultations when they stood in the market places, and brandished their whips in triumph over their unresisting opponents—We might feel something like pity even for this organ of WHIGGERY, with a white pocket-handkerchief displayed before his eyes, when he tells the public, that "WE"—that is, the upper party now—"assume a natural superiority over them (the WHIGS), as if being of a different party, they were of an inferior species, and justly liable "to be tortured, worried and hunted, to death like any OTHER "vermin!"—Poor things!—But then, before we can yield to these appeals to our sensibility, up starts a new instance of their jesuitical dealing, and betrays in disgusting colours the cant and hypocrisy of the old system:—"You are an enthusiast in the cause of liberty," the Reviewer says, "does it "not follow you must be a bad poet? You are against Ministers—is it to be supposed that you can write a line of prose "without repeated offences against sense and grammar!"—Now, the man has already confessed, that this is the very necessity which arises out of the WHIG SYSTEM, upon which this very Review was first established—and our readers have nothing to do but to turn to its pages, from the very commencement of its career, to ascertain the fact that every writer in PROSE or POETRY, who has come under the ordeal of this literary band of critical despots, has been judged invariably, and we may say without exception, according to his POLITICAL PRINCIPLES, instead of his intellectual merits or attainments.—QED!

In following the wailings and Jeremiads of this poor man, one might really be led to suppose that the laws of the land had been subverted, and that the Government had graduated through the various successions of Jacobinical improvement, and at length arrived at the natural summit of a MILITARY DESPOTISM. "This system," he says, "is intended to "amount, and, in fact, does amount to a PROHIBITION to authors to write, and the public to read, any works that have not "the Government mark upon them. Their professed object is to "gag the one and hoodwink the others, and to persuade the "world that all taste, elegance, science, liberality, and virtue are confined to a few hack writers and their employers. "One would think the public would resent this gross attempt to "impose on their understandings, and encroach on their liberty "of private judgment—when a gentleman is reading a new "work, of which he is beginning to form a favourable opinion, "is it to be borne that he should have it snatched out of his "hands, and tossed in the dirt by a retainer of the LITERARY "POLICE!"

Why, my masters, a foreigner—nay, any matter-of-fact country gentleman, would suppose that Government had really established public offices for the apprehension and punishment of WHIG writers, and that MESSRS. TOWNSEND and LAVENDER were invested with new powers to arrest MR. JEFFREY, or MR. HUNT, or MR. MOORE, whenever they attempted to bribe an unfortunate publisher into printing their works! Could it be supposed—could it have been anticipated that such language should ever be extorted, even in the last agony, from the EDINBURGH REVIEW and the WHIGS, as applying to the "LIBERTY OF THE PRESS?" Could the bitterest of their opponents have ever suggested so galling, so terest of their opponents have ever suggested so galling, so biting a libel as that published to the world by their own whining, whimpering, and doleful lamentations over their lost power—their more than feminine weakness in deprecating the penalty of their crimes through the very instrument they have constantly and contemptuously pointed out to their opponents as the only legitimate means of retort upon them?

Would not any man who remembers the state of the press only three years ago, suppose that it could only be some loyal subject labouring under the obloquy of the WHIG and RADICAL libellers who thus expressed himself—

"It used to be the boast of English gentlemen, that their political contentions were conducted in a spirit, not merely of personal fairness, but of mutual courtesy and urbanity," &c. &c. "We trust that this spirit is not yet extinguished amongst us, and that it will speedily assert itself by trampling under foot that base system of MEAN and MALIGNANT defamation by which our periodical press has recently been polluted and disgraced!"

Such a man—a loyalist we mean—in such circumstances, would have produced, in proof of the just grounds of this exclamation, the ransacking of the KING'S or REGENT'S private closet, for the means of propagating treasonable, infamous, and calumnious misrepresentations!—the servants of public men bribed to betray the secrets of their masters—to give an air of truth to imputations, destined to arm the ignorant rabble against their houses or persons! He would have pointed to the assassination of one MINISTER, and the projected murder of A WHOLE CABINET, travestied and made the food of WHIG MERRIMENT and RADICAL RIBALDRY. He would have put his finger upon THE MOST DIRECT LIE ever propagated in a civilized country—known to be such on the recorded judgment of those who pledged their HONOUR and REPUTATION in support of it—lighted up as a beacon to "poison and sour" and irritate the public mind, and to summon the people to the overthrow of the throne and constitution! He would have opened to view the exulting pages of the EDINBURGH REVIEW—the shameless profligacy of the MORNING CHRONICLE—the WHIG contributions towards the defamation of female honour!—and the "Twopenny Post Bags," and "all the Fudges" of Holland House; and the justice of his complaint that the days of chivalry were past, would have been as clear as the sun at noon-day—but that such a canting demi-Palinodea—such a pretext to bewail an evil, wholly and exclusively derived from the more than barbarian tyranny of a prostituted press, should come from the lips or the pen of this CORYPHÆUS of the band, is so offensive, so revolting, so insulting to the best feelings of our nature, that we are compelled to draw off from the subject, lest we should speak in stronger terms than, for our own sakes, we are willing to do, of the rank and degrading HYPOCRISY of which this man is made to be the representative and butt, by his employers and paymasters! We have said, that the whole and sole object of this impolitic article, was to write down JOHN BULL. Poor MR JEFFREY!

We rest not upon the notoriety of the attempt—but even at the risk of tiring our readers, we will prove the fact by internal evidence from the article itself—"WE would avoid naming "works that desire nothing so much as notoriety," &c. says the editor. Does the good man really suppose that the public—who, by the bye, are lectured with little less severity than ourselves, for reading what we write—does he, in sober truth, imagine that his annunciation or silence upon the name of a work like BULL, can produce the most remote effect upon it?—or, if he do, can he really be weak enough to calculate that any man of common sense could read the article without at once perceiving the drift of it, without having a written finger-post for his information?—Has none of the inflation of WHIG VANITY dispersed during the mortifying process of its degradation?—No—it is a melancholy fact—some people will never learn, or this person might have known, that there could be "no desire to be known" which had not amply been gratified in OUR case—and that if we had not ten times the circulation of the Review itself, in its fallen state, we never should have been selected as a mark against which to fire his literary popgun!—But enough of this.

His specific charges against us are unluckily selected—because in the case of FYSHE PALMER no action whatever was brought against us. In the case of WAITHMAN, we were excluded from justifying by a rule of practice, contrary to the opinion given by our able Counsel, MR. SERJEANT VAUGHAN and MR. PULLER. In the case of LADY CAROLINE WROTTESLEY, whatever might have been its merits, we were also precluded from justifying by the form of process which was chosen by the plaintiff. As for the QUEEN, if what we said of HER MAJESTY were libels, why libels let them be—they were not the less true for that.

We shall conclude this long—and we fear, from the subject of it—tedious article, in the words which the Reviewer admits to have "put him out of breath in concocting," an effect, at which we are by no means astonished, when a man is forced on the attempt to eat his own words, and to deny the efficacy of the panacea to which he owes life and subsistence—"a cold-blooded, mercenary calculation of the profits "which idle curiosity and the vulgar appetite for SLANDER" have enabled him to derive from it!

"For ourselves at least, we do not hesitate to acknowledge, that, when we find an author SAVAGELY and PERSEVERINGLY attacked by this gang of literary retainers, we immediately feel assured not only that he is a good writer, but an honest man; and if a Statesman is once selected as the butt of outrageous abuse, in the same quarter, WE consider it as a satisfactory proof that he has lately rendered some signal service to his country, or aimed some deadly blow at CORRUPTION!"

This is really and literally an extract from the EDINBURGH REVIEW!

The public will decide at once in whose mouth such a sentence is to be most appropriately placed—and adopt it for their own. The attacks, even in the number of the EDINBURGH REVIEW before us, upon such a man as LORD ELDON, as a lawyer, by the pigmy advocates of EDINBURGH, and upon SIR WILLIAM GELL'S knowledge of Greece, by men who have never migrated from the smoky wynds of Edinburgh—will afford a very decent illustration of the justice with which we have borrowed the tripping and flippant language of the Scotch critic, in taking our leave of him.

One word to the public—our pages are open to the world—we desire only a comparison between what we have written in DEFENCE of all that is legitimately praise-worthy in PRINCIPLE—moral, political and religious—and the OFFENSIVE warfare against ALL THESE, with which the country had been overrun before we entered the field—through the united efforts of the WHIGS and RADICALS—where systematic CLOSES and jesuitical INSINUATION have been employed by the one undermine and BLAST the character and reputation of MEN AND women wherever they appeared to choak up any avenue to their ambition, or were too highly distinguished for their virtue or probity—WE have generally preferred to submit to pretensions of artful or silly pretenders, to the test of RIDICULE—and in no instance have we ever gravely impeached criminality to individuals, who have not courted and justified the charge by glaring and audacious trespasses upon social order or the institutions of the country.

These men cannot conceive the possibility of public writers acting upon PRINCIPLE, and being in effect "hireling" themselves, and well paid hirelings—charge upon us the selfish and narrow views which they conceive to be the only motives to action, when a man possesses any talent worth purchasing. We can only pity them for their slavish and mercenary prejudices—but we cannot withhold our contempt from their employers, who, failing to meet us in the open field, sicken from fair and open competition, and galled by the exposure of their principles, and the detection of their machiavelian policy—first endeavour to "poison and sour the public mind against us, by imputing their own motives and schemes to us—then seek by the basest and most atrocious instruments that ever degraded the heart of man, to alarm our readers, and finally charge us with adopting a system, which, in a single moment, and in their vapouring vanity, they acknowledge to be THEIR OWN.

We are ready to admit, that it was impossible to adopt their system without compromising some of those principles which we should be the last men in the world to defend abstractedly —but the VICE was inherent in the ORIGINAL SCHEME, as they NOW acknowledge; and in turning their weapons against themselves, it was impossible for us to extract the sting, for the mere purpose of rendering it inefficacious in the work of retribution. But when they avow that their scheme embraced the perversion of all principle—that they drew from the "well-head" of literature a supply for the express purpose of POISONING and SOURING the public mind, we may fairly boast, in the face of our countrymen, of our successful efforts in raising at once the angry passions of such men, and hurling effectually contributed to supply an antidote to their "poisons" and a sweetener to their BITTERNESS!

THEATRICALS.

THE postponed farce, called "FISH OUT OF WATER," was really produced at the Haymarket on Tuesday, and met, as we anticipated, perfect success—the natural humour of the piece, which the CHRONICLE is "inclined to believe to be a translation from the French," and which has not only excited infinite mirth in Paris, but even in London, (having been before this translated and adapted to the English stage at one of the minor theatres,) is admirably heightened by the present translator; and LISTON gives to the whole a comic interest seldom equalled in modern pieces of a similar nature.

We have hardly ever seen a thing act better, and while it does great credit to its father-in-law, (whose name is LUNN) it affords LISTON an opportunity of adding another to the list of characters so peculiarly and entirely his own.

It appears just and right that in this department of our paper we should publish the letters which have been written by the parties concerned in the affair of MR. BRANDON'S dismissal, we therefore insert the communications from both sides."

"SIR—In consequence of an erroneous statement which has appeared in the police reports, relative to the dismissal of MR. JAMES HARRIS from Covent-garden Theatre, I am directed by the Managers to acquaint you with the exact circumstances and to request your insertion of them.

"The misconduct of MR. BRANDON rendered it quite imperative upon them, both with regard to the security of their property and the accommodation of the public, to remove him from his situation; but, in consideration of his age, and the length of time he had been in the Theatre, they were unwilling to make public the particular circumstances which led to their determination, and are still anxious, on his account, to withhold the same, unless they should find it necessary to detail them. It was proposed to give him a retired allowance of 30*l.* per annum, if MR. HARRIS and MR. CONST, the other proprietors, consented to it; and it was considered that MR. HARRIS, though not at present concerned in the management of the Theatre, would speak to his proportion of the annuity, as MR. BRANDON'S claims, if any, were on those under whom he had served. MR. HARRIS absolutely declined, alleging as his reason, that he thought highly of MR. BRANDON'S services, and totally disapproved of dismissing him. MR. CONST, upon hearing the grounds upon which the present Managers determined on that measure, altogether refused to bear any part of the expence, considering MR. BRANDON as not entitled to any allowance whatever. Notwithstanding these circumstances, they felt unwilling to discharge a person of his age without some allowance, and therefore of themselves, although he had no claims whatever upon them, offered him an annuity for life of 150*l.* per annum out of their own private purses, on condition that he quietly quitted their premises; but this he declined altogether.

"The subsequent proceedings it is unnecessary to repeat, they have already been detailed in the police reports.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your very obedient servant, "HENRY ROBERTSON.

"Theatre Royal Covent-garden, Aug. 28, 1823."

To which MR. BRANDON thus replies:—

"SIR,—I am very reluctant to trespass on your columns, or intrude myself upon the public; but from the kindness I have already experienced, I persuade myself you will not deny me the opportunity of refuting the assertions, or rather the insinuations of MR. ROBERTSON, contained in his letter to you of the 23d inst.; for, upon this will depend whether or not I am to continue in the enjoyment of the good opinion of my friends. As the whole proceeding will of necessity hereafter come before the public, I shall, for the present, confine myself to correct the mis-statement of MR. ROBERTSON: first, he states that he is 'directed by the managers' to publish the letter to which I allude. Now it so happens, that MR. KEMBLE is at Birmingham, and MR. WILLETT and CAPTAIN FORBES are both out of town. So much for his venturing to assert that he has their authority. If, however, any thing else were wanting to convince me he has acted upon his own counsel, it is the manner in which he has introduced the name of MR. ROBINS, as connected with Drury-lane. The Covent-garden Management, in their capacity of gentlemen, could not have lent their sanction to any thing so little minded, as to suppose MR. ROBINS' kind interference to obtain a knowledge of the nature of the charge which might be urged against me, could by possibility have any connexion with his situation as a member of the sub-committee of Drury-lane. I therefore treat the whole as originating in this gentleman, who it is now currently reported has purchased my situation of the new Board of Management. But to the point: he has the temerity to assert, that 'my misconduct rendered it quite imperative with regard to the security of their property, and the accommodation of the public, that I should be removed from my situation.' It is easy to make assertions, but the public will, however, do me the justice to suspend their opinion until they have something more solid than MR. ROBERTSON'S bare assertions. When it was hinted to MR. KEMBLE, some three weeks since, by MR. ROBINS, that he had heard reports injurious to my character, and upon which (without giving me the opportunity of defending myself) they had thought it right to dismiss me, MR. ROBINS did, after much importunity, prevail on MR. KEMBLE to allow me the opportunity of facing my accusers. I went to the committee with Mr. Romaxs, and the first salute I received was a request that I would leave the room, as they preferred communicating alone with Mr. Romaxs. The result I learnt through the latter, viz. that though they had several things to complain of, they did not choose to explain the nature or extent of them, unless a public appeal became necessary. Upon which Mr. Robins said, if they could prefer a charge of dishonesty or misconduct, and substantiate it, that he would no longer lend me the advantage of his friendly assistance, and therefore he challenged them to the proof: that was again declined, and upon the meeting broke up. I now call upon those gentlemen forthwith to make the public acquainted with the nature of their complaint; and I only entreat of them, out of kindness to a very old servant, not to keep their opinion upon it until I make my reply. The next and only point in Mr. Romaxsoy's letter is, his declaration that 'Mr. Cosser, upon hearing the grounds on which I was dismissed, refused to bear any part of the expense, considering I was not entitled to any allowance whatever.' A report of this nature reached me some three weeks since, and I immediately went to Mr. Cosser. I stated the injury I must sustain if he had been induced to join in the oppressive act of the new management, and required of him to sanction or disavow it. I will give you the very words of Mr. Cosser's reply:—'These men,' (meaning Mr. Kendle, Captain Ferdes, and Mr. Willett,) 'will do or say any thing to answer their purpose.'—'Have they not sworn in their affidavit, in answer to my application to the Court of Chancery, that I recommended the dismissal of your brother, and the appointment of Mr. Dees in his place? Which is as great a falsehood as ever was uttered.' Mr. Cosser added, 'that if I had been guilty of the charge made against me, instead of an annuity they ought to have commenced a prosecution.' After this, it is not too much to expect the public will at least do me the justice to receive with caution any report unfavourable to myself, and originating from such a quarter. In conclusion, I have much pleasure in stating that Mr. Harris, who has for the last 13 years presided over the management, will give the strongest testimonials in my favour, if any mis-statement of the present committee should render this appeal necessary. Entreating your pardon for intruding so much on your time and patience, I am your's and the public's most obliged and devoted servant, "J. W. BRANDON.

"Box-office, Hart-street, Covent-garden, Aug. 26."

MR. HONE, THE BARRISTER.

The following letter has been transmitted to us with a request to give it publicity, with which we most willingly comply; it is, as our readers will perceive, a "Circular," addressed to the gentlemen of the law, but as it appears to our correspondent, the application it contains need not to be confined to that profession exclusively.

Sir—We take the liberty of transmitting to you the following statement, which we have already laid before several gentlemen at the Bar.

Mr. Hone, is (as you are probably aware) a Barrister, of ten years standing, who pursued his profession at first on the Midland Circuit, and more lately in the Court of Chancery. For several years he obtained by this means such an income as was sufficient for the support of his family in comfort and independence. He is the brother of Mr. William Hone, the bookseller, who became known to the public by the parodies on the Liturgy, for which he was prosecuted by the Attorney-General. As soon as the relationship between Mr. Hone and the Author of these publications became generally known, it produced the most calamitous effects upon the professional prospects of the former. The disapprobation which had been generally excited by the publication of the parodies was, by a natural, though a most unjust prejudice, transferred to the innocent brother of the publisher. It was taken for granted, that the two brothers held the same religious and political opinions, and Mr. Hone was gradually deserted by his clients, until he found himself deprived of his whole professional income. In the hope of diverting this prejudice against his character, he applied to the Lord Chancellor, the Master of the Rolls, the Vice Chancellor, and the twelve Judges, to subscribe to a book on Conveyancing which he proposed to publish, and he received from them the most kind and condescending attention, with their permission to place their names at the head of his list of subscribers. He obtained a similar permission from the greater part of the gentlemen within the Bar at the Court of Chancery, from some of the leaders of his own Circuit, and many other members of his profession. Distress and poverty, however, have prevented the completion of this design. It is painful to state that Mr. Hone, and his wife and children, have frequently been reduced to the actual want of the common necessaries of life, and he has with difficulty preserved a sufficiency of raiment to appear in the situation of a gentleman.

All this weight of misfortune has been as unmerited as distressing. So far is Mr. Hone from adopting his brother's religious or political opinions, that he actually abandoned his society, after having repeatedly made the most affectionate and earnest, though unavailing protests against his proceedings.—They are the children of a religious and virtuous father, to whose principles and maxims of conduct is to be ascribed the resignation and fortitude with which Mr. Hone has borne the heavy calamity under which he has been suffering.

An opportunity has been found for enabling Mr. Hone to emigrate to one of the colonies, with a fair prospect of maintaining himself and family by his profession. The difficulty of his availing himself of this escape from want, consists in his inability to purchase the necessary outfit for himself and family, and to defray the expences of the voyage. On the most moderate estimate seven or eight hundred pounds will be required for this purpose. In the hope of raising this sum, several gentlemen at the bar have opened a subscription: and Messrs. Hoares, in Fleet-street, will receive any money which may be collected. If you should feel disposed to assist in this object, you will perhaps have the goodness to contribute as expeditiously as possible, as it is of the utmost importance that Mr. Hone should not lose the opportunity of sailing in the present autumn.—We have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient, humble servants,

JOHN RAITHBY,
Lincoln's-Inn, JAMES STEPHEN, Jun.
5th August, 1823. J. H. KOE.

This measure is sanctioned by the Lord Chancellor; and the Lord Chief Justice Abbott, Mr. Justice Bayley, Mr. Justice Best, Mr. Attorney-General, &c. &c. have subscribed.

It is impossible to read this letter without feeling, beyond the interest and compassion which it is well calculated to excite, a proud sentiment of satisfaction and of respect for our countrymen.

When it is thus ascertained and publicly proclaimed that the very family connexion of a respectable man with an avowed apostate of Radicalism and blasphemy has the effect of blighting his prospects, ruining his hopes, and destroying his fortunes, the real value at which such principles as those of Mr. Hone, the publisher, are held in society may be pretty fairly estimated.

TO JOHN BULL.

Dear John,—A few days ago I went into the Cathedral of St. Paul, during divine service, my attention was attracted by a board at the entrance of the choir, on which was painted—"Ordered by the Dean and Chapter, that for the more decent solemnity during the performance of divine service, the gates of the choir will be shut immediately before the Psalms, and not opened before the conclusion of the service." Now, all this is extremely proper, as the church, as well as the entrance of the choir, had become a fashionable promenade. It is extremely amusing to see how these Reverend sticklers for decency and humanity can perceive the mote which is in the eye of the public, and not discern the beam which is in their own. I allude to the disgraceful practice of showing the Church, and thronging the doors of the Whispering Gallery during the service. Surely the sale of taking money at the doors should be abolished. Nothing can equal the disgust which every honest man feels on entering the Church, by the insolent conduct of the door-keepers, who surround him eagerly enquire if you would wish to see the Whispering Gallery, the New Ball, the Vaults, &c., for each of which you pay two-pence: and if you see all the curiosities it will cost about 2s. 6d. each. I could compare the conduct of these men to nothing but the teasing annoyance of the Jew orange boys about the Exchange, who scarcely take a denial. When I think of the liberal manner in which public buildings are shown abroad, I feel heartily ashamed of this exhibition, and trust that some public-spirited individual will bring it before Parliament at the next session. Pray excuse my tedious letter.

I am, Dear John, Aug. 25, 1823. J. R.

REMOVAL of SUPERFLUOUS HAIR.—Ladies are respectfully informed TRENT'S DEPILATORY, in a few minutes, actually removes Superfluous Hair from face, neck, arms, &c. and leaves the skin soft and fair.—Stores for cash prices, 9d. pair; sold by Mr. Perrin, 44, Dean-street, Soho, London, (a private house opposite Little Dean-street,) where Ladies may have ocular evidence of its efficacy and innocence. Sold also, by Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Hendrie, 19, Tichbourne-street; Front, 226, and Low, 330, Strand; Jones, 59, Fleet-street; Barclays, 95, Fleet-market; Butlers, 4, and Rigge, 65, Cheapside; Evans, 42, Long-lane, Smithfield; Dawson, 24, High Holborn; Scarlett, 32, Red Lion-street, Holborn; and every proprietary Medicine Vender and Perfumer in the United Kingdom.

CARPENTER'S VEGETABLE SPECIFIC for the HOOPING-COUGH—the most safe and certain Cure ever yet discovered for that distressing and too frequently fatal disorder. Infants a week old may take it with perfect safety, and it needs no other recommendation than a trial, which will be sufficient to establish its character on public patronage. A single bottle will seldom fail to produce considerable relief, and the most inveterate cases will be found to yield to three or four; indeed, when given regularly and persevered in, it may fairly be inferred from the unparalleled success which has hitherto attended its use, that it will be found a quick, safe, and never-falling cure.—Sutton and Co. (late Dicey and Sutton), Bow Church-yard, London, are appointed the sole Wholesale Agents, of whom likewise it may be had retail. Sold also by Sanger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; Ward, Holborn; Smith, Haymarket; Prout, Temple-bar; Stradling, Royal Exchange; Butler, Piccadilly; Pepgate-street; Jordan, Whitechapel; and by all the principal Venders of Medicine throughout the kingdom, in bottles at 1s. 1 1/2d. and 2s. 9d. each.

EASE and COMFORT in SHAVING.—To those Gentlemen who experience inconvenience in Shaving from a tender face or strong beard, J. T. RIGGE most particularly recommends his celebrated MAGNETIC RAZOR TABLET, which, with its late improvement, he engages will produce so keen an edge as to supersede all grinding, honing, &c. and render the operation of shaving as easy and agreeable as it has been severe unpleasant and painful. Its use is simple, its effect certain; price 7s. 6d. J. T. Rigge's Aymetic Shaving Soap will also be found an invaluable addition. Manufactory, 85 Cheapside and 52, Park-street, Grosvenor-square.

BALDNESS or GREY HAIR will now sure not be seen. In short, Ladies and Gentlemen may rely on it, they will not have a hair fall off or turn grey, by using Prince's celebrated Russia Oil, as it is to be improved with an extra valuable ingredient, through which it has made the Russia Oil the greatest nourisher and preserver to the hair in the Universe, will make it grow thick and long, and prevent its falling off or ever turning grey, and in such a manner as to restore the roots of the hair, that if it even has begun to turn grey, will restore it again to its natural colour, and be sure to clear the scurf, from Hair clean and beautiful, and in curl. Every Medical Gentleman will see mention in the Gazette of Health, that Prince's Russia Oil is superior to any Oil for the Hair and will do in cases of baldness and weak hair, what can possibly be done by its thickening, strengthening, and restoring it, if there is the least sign of roots. It is no wonder that Ladies and Gentlemen have complained of late of the Russia Oil not being of service to the hair, as there have found out that unprincipled persons have sold them counterfeits; therefore Ladies and Gentlemen ought to be particular and have it of a respectable person. Ask for Prince's Improved Russia Oil. The ounce bottle five shillings, a large bottle, containing five ounces, two pound, is a saving. Sold by the sole Proprietor, A. Prince, No. 6, Pelham's-walk, Oxford-street, near the Pantheon; and by Mr. Smyth, Perfumer to his Majesty, New Bond-street; Messrs. Hendrie, Tichbourne-street; Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Prout, 228, Strand; Davison, 59, Fleet street; Rigge, 85, Cheapside; Johnson, 68, Cornhill; Tutt, Royal Exchange; and by most principal Perfumers and Medicine Venders. Ladies and Gentlemen residing in the country, sending a remittance, it will be forwarded immediately by coach. It is so prepared as to keep in all climates; the older the better.—Merchants and Captains will receive a liberal allowance for exportation.

If men, when they take it into their heads to review works, select certain passages for animadversion, their enemies may charge them with partiality, and allege that they have chosen to pick out the "only bad bits" in the book, in order to justify their attack and prejudice the public. Far be it from us to give a handle to such adversaries.

Lord Byron has done—we cannot say written—three more cantos of Don Juan; and from those three cantos his friends in the Morning Chronicle have selected the following stanzas, as a specimen of the performance in general. His friends, gentle reader, have done this. For once, we will give our aid to their amicable intentions, and copy from the "leading" Whig Journal the extract it has so judiciously given to the world.—

"DON JUAN'S ENTRY INTO LONDON.

["FROM THE CANTOS ABOUT TO BE PUBLISHED.]

"Don Juan had got out on Shooter's-hill,
"Sun-set the time, the place the same decliviy
"Which looks along that vale of good and ill
"Where London streets ferment in full activity;
"While every thing around was calm and still,
"Except the creak of wheels, which on their pivot he "Heard—and that bee-like, bubbling, busy hum
"Of cities, that boil over with their scum.

"I say, Don Juan, wrapt in contemplation,
"Walked on behind his carriage, o'er the summit,
"And lost in wonder of so great a nation,
"Gave way to't, since he could not overcome it.
"'And here,' he cried, 'is Freedom's chosen station;
"'Here peals the people's voice, nor can entomb it
"'Racks, prisons, inquisitions; resurrection
"'Awaits it, each new meeting or election.

"'Here are chaste wives, pure lives; here people pay
"'But what they please; and if that things be dear,
"''Tis only that they love to throw away
"'Their cash, to show how much they have a-year.
"'Here laws are all inviolate; none lay
"'Traps for the traveller; every highway's clear,
"'Here'—he was interrupted by a knife,
"With, 'D—n your eyes! your money or your life!'

"These freeborn sounds proceeded from four pads
"In ambush laid, who had perceived him loiter
"Behind his carriage; and like handy lads,
"Had seized the lucky hour to reconnoitre,
"In which the heedless gentleman who gads
"Upon the road, unless he prove a fighter,
"May find himself within that isle of riches
"Exposed to lose his life as well as breeches.

"Juan, who did not understand a word
"Of English, save their shibboleth, 'God d—n!'
"And even that he had so rarely heard,
"He sometimes thought 'twas only their 'Salam,'
"Or 'God be with you!'—and 'tis not absurd
"To think so; for half English as I am!!!
"(To my misfortune) never can I say
"I heard them wish 'God with you,' save that way;—

"Juan yet quickly understood their gesture,
"And being somewhat choleric and sudden,
"Drew forth a pocket pistol from his vesture,
"And fired it into one assailant's pudding—
"Who fell, as rolls an ox o'er in his pasture,
"And roared out, as he writhed his native mud in,
"Unto his nearest follower or henchman,
"'Oh, Jack! I'm floored by that 'ere b——y Frenchman!'
" • • • • •

"But ere they could perform this pious duty,
"The dying man cried, 'Hold! I've got my gruel!
"'Oh! for a glass of max! We've missed our booty—
"'Let me die here—once I am!'" And as the fuel
Of life shrunk in his heart, and thick and sooty
"The drops fell from his death-wound, and he drew ill
"His breath—he from his swelling throat untied
"A kerchief, crying, 'Give Sal that!' and died."

What this once popular Poet can mean by degrading and debasing himself in this manner, we cannot understand. That he is, to "his misfortune," "half-English," we are nearly as sorry as he can be; but that this extract has been made by his quondam friends, the Hunts, we must attribute to the change which has taken place in their affections for each other.

Byron has discarded Hunt, who exclaims bitterly against his Lordship. He says he has disappointed his hopes—broken promises which he made—and, in short, "used him ungenteely." The knot, in short, is dissolved. The widow of the wretched Shelley is compassionated by her father-in-law, who, it is said, relieves Byron of the charge of keeping a whole family, and Hunt has withdrawn himself (at least, so the Chronicle, which knows the movements of such people, tells us) to Genoa, where, that paper says, "The Poet"—THE POET!!!—"intends for the future to reside." One thing is certain, that Byron will write no more for the Liberal Magazine.

The feeling with respect to the mischief accruing from the laudable exertions of the saints in parliament appears to be general in all the West India Islands; in addition to the extract of a letter which we published last week from Nevis, we lay before our readers an extract from a letter arrived from St. Kitts:—it is really melancholy to see these theorists still busying themselves in every part of the kingdom in efforts to subvert and undermine the Government and property of our colonies. In Wilberforce it arises from the senile love of doing—in Buxton, from perfect ignorance of his subject—in Zachary Macauley, who acts with his eyes open, who was himself an overseer, it is a hope of popularity and notoriety. But to the extract.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM ST. KITTS, DATED 8TH JUNE, 1823.

"The measures taken by Messrs. Buxton, Wilberforce, &c. on the subject of emancipating the Negroes in these islands, have excited much alarm. Neglected as we are by the Government; maligned by the canters about humanity in the House of Commons, and drained not only of our last guinea, but to the last point of our credit, our total extinction from society appears to be near at hand.

"Surely such an example of injustice, as well as impolicy, as is at this moment exhibiting to the world, against West Indians, never before was displayed on the part of an enlightened Government!

"One cannot help suspecting the motives of that man who arrogates to himself a superior degree of philanthropic feeling to the rest of the world, and who, in his mad and ignorant career, cries 'Ruat cœlum,' and overturns all discretion and every principle of justice! It will soon, probably, be too late to lament the consequences of the present measures—when the fire is once kindled, its extinction will be impracticable, and the objects of these Gentlemen's wild, and wholly impracticable, humanity will, themselves, be amongst the first victims of its progress. And will Great Britain wilfully sacrifice a revenue of many millions of money, lose no small portion of her commerce; and, what is still more important than all, dry up the source of half her maritime strength? This is no exaggeration; and every man who thinks dispassionately, will, in a moment, see that it is not.

"The condition of the slaves in our colonies may be ameliorated by instilling into their minds the principles of morality and religion, but not by making their present condition and their masters equally hateful to them. You, who have been in this country, and have been for yourself, will fully concur in these sentiments and convictions; and I heartily wish that we and our poor Negroes could legislate for Messrs. Buxton, Wilberforce, &c. and compel them to come hither for a few months, and see how totally ignorant they are of the deep and difficult subject of Negro Slavery and Freedom."

LATEST NEWS.

Paris papers down to Friday arrived yesterday by express. The Moniteur contains the following report from the Duke of Reggio to the Moniteur contains the following report from the Duke of Reggio to the Minister of War, which is of considerable importance. It is dated Madrid, Aug. 21.

"M. the Marshal—Gen. Bourck informs me, under date the 17th inst. that the Count de Carthagena has sent one of his officers to the Regency, to announce to them that the garrison of Corunna has re-inst. that the Count de Carthagena has sent one of his officers to the Regency, to announce to them that the garrison of Corunna has resolved to capitulate, and confides to them the care of placed itself under their command, and confides to them the care of placed itself under their command, and the conditions upon stipulating for its interests with Gen. Bourck, and the conditions upon which they ought to open the gates to our troops. I have received the which they ought to open the gates to our troops. I have received the same advice from Gen. Morillo, who adds, that since he has long been same advice from Gen. Morillo, who adds, that since he has long been in accordance with us, the discussions will be promptly terminated.—in accordance with us, the discussions will be promptly terminated.—It is probable that at the moment that I am writing to your Excellency, It is probable that at the moment that I am writing to your Excellency our troops occupy Corunna. I shall hasten to inform your Excellency our troops occupy Corunna. I shall hasten to inform your Excellency of the end of this affair as soon as Gen. Bourck has communicated to of the end of this affair as soon as Gen. Bourck has communicated to the conditions of the reduction of this important fortress.—Receive, M. the Marshal, the assurances of my high consideration. The Mar-me the conditions of the reduction of this important fortress.—Receive, me the Marshal, the assurances of my high consideration. The Marshal Commandant in Chief of the 1st Corps.

(Signed) "The Marshal Duke de REGGIO."

The Moniteur also contains a Report, dated the 18th inst. addressed to the Minister of Marine by Admiral Hamelin, including another Report from Capt. Lemarant, commanding the ship of the line La Guerriere, in which he details his operations for the reduction of Aigesiras, which, after a simultaneous attack and bombardment by the combined land and sea forces, capitulated on the 14th inst. It was M. de Lauriston, son of the Marshal, who commanded the former.

General Morillo writes, under date of the 15th inst. that the garrison of Corunna having recognised his authority, he sends his second Adjutant to Madrid to carry the submission of that city to the Regency. By a letter of the 17th, General Bourck informs us that he was about to make his entry into Corunna; that he intended to leave there four battalions, and that the maritime force was ordered to proceed to Cadiz. Mina was trying to escape. M. the Duke de l'Infantado, and the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Znes, set off on the 19th inst. for Port St. Mary. The portefeuille of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs is ad interim confided to the Minister of Marine.

It is understood that the Pilote of Friday has reached town, and that it contains 27 Articles, proposed by the Duke d'Angouleme, for the consideration of the King and Cortes, as well as the names of the Commissioners appointed to treat with the French Commander-in-Chief. The Cortes, it is said, adopted 20 of the articles, but rejected the remainder.

A letter from Port St. Mary, dated Aug. 18, says, "Every one at Cadiz is expecting the conclusion of affairs. The King does not seem to doubt that his liberation is approaching. A letter of the 15th states that the Count de la Puebla has received orders from the King to proceed to San Lucar, to prepare the means for his Majesty's own entry into that town. In a few hours after his deliverance, his Majesty will embark. From San Lucar, the King will go it is said to Seville by water; and then without any delay set forth on his return to Madrid by regular journies. An Aid-de-Camp of the Duke d' Angouleme, who was sent into Cadiz, to carry a letter from the Prince Generalissimo to the King of Spain, returned this morning after having fulfilled his mission. He was received at Cadiz with enthusiasm.

Capt. O'Donnell's troop of the 15th Hussars marched into Ipswich Barracks on Thursday, the 28th inst. from Norwich, to which place the head-quarters of the 8th Hussars are now removed.

On Friday Sir Herbert Taylor held a levee, as Secretary of the Commander-in-Chief, at his office in the Horse Guards.

A most useful volume, the New Mercantile Assistant, has just appeared, and cannot fail of proving highly acceptable to those who have calculations to make, either of interest, wages, or any other mercantile transaction. It is doubly valuable on account of the facility of reference, and as a general cheque book.

At Bow-street yesterday, two hackney coach cases occupied the Magistrate's attention. The first was a charge preferred against two carmen, for breaking a pane of glass. It appeared that they had hired the coach from the Adelphi, Strand, to St. Paul's Church-yard; during the drive one of the front panes of glass was broken, but they positively denied having broken it, and the coachman declining to swear that they had really broken it, the case was dismissed.—The second was a summons against a gentleman for refusing to pay 12s. the regular charge for waiting four hours and twenty minutes outside of the Lyceum. The particulars are uninteresting, and of no moment to the public, further than if they hire a coach, and do not pay the instant they quit that coach, they are liable to pay for such time until they settle finally, which the gentleman was obliged to do, with the additional costs.

At Guildhall, yesterday, Rebecca Watson, John Smith, and Charles Silvester, appeared at the bar, to answer the following charge. From the statement of a watchman upon duty on Friday night in Shoe-lane, it appeared that a coach stopped opposite to Merlin's-court, from which a quantity of property was taken out, and carried into a house in the court, consisting of a bed, blankets, several pieces of Irish sheeting, and a roll of silk. Suspecting all was not right, he obtained the assistance of a constable, and searched the house, which is in the occupation of Peter Rigg, a well-known character, when he discovered the property, which the prisoner Watson said she had bought of a Jew in Rosemary-lane to furnish her apartments with. The other prisoner, Smith, was seen by two women to go backwards and forwards into the house with bundles from the coach. Nothing appearing upon evidence to implicate Silvester, he was discharged—but the other two were remanded till Saturday next.

The LITERARY MUSEUM of yesterday contains, besides several original articles of interest, Reviews, and copious Extracts from the following New Works—the Seventh and Eighth Parts of Las Cases' Journal—Mémoires of Mde. Pauline A. A. Panam, versus, His Most Serene Highness the reigning Prince of Saxe Cobourg—the Mise en Lumieres, on the Celebration of Magna Charta—Sylva, Poems by Chandos Leigh, Esq.—Christianity and Morals in India—French Miseries—Country Lodgings versus St. Swithin—Biographical Memoir of Robert Bloomfield—Original Poetry—Foreign Correspondence—the Drama—Arts and Sciences—Varieties, &c. &c. &c.—Price 8d. or for its immediate transmission by post, the Museum may be had stamped, price 1s. Published by John Warren, No. 7, Brydges street, Covent Garden; and to be had of all Booksellers and Newsvenders in the Kingdom.

GROUSE SHOOTING.—The Annals of Sporting for September is embellished with a beautiful Plate, engraved by Landseer in his best manner, of Pointers hunting for Game on the Moors of Yorkshire. The Plate is from a Painting by Reinagle, formerly part of the Thornton collection, and the Dog making the point is a faithful portrait of a favourite of the late Colonel's, well known in the North of England. This interesting and entertaining Magazine continues to be conducted in the very superior style, in point of being enriched with communications from all parts of the kingdom, and the subjects treated of extending throughout the whole range of Field Sports. Another division of the Work records all the Sporting Occurrences of the Month, with such Notices of Varieties in Natural History as pertain to the Chase, the Turf, the Stud, and the Ring, and such other intelligence as may interest the lover of Athletic Sports generally; the whole forming a very gratifying miscellany, and furnishing the reader, for half-a-crown a month, with the collective information of as many experienced Sportsmen in all quarters of the kingdom. This elegant work, in fact, has created nothing of the spirit with which it set out in January, 1822, since which time Three Half-yearly Volumes have been published, forming a complete Register of Sporting Subjects, and embellished with Thirty-six Cabinet Engravings, besides numerous illustrative Cuts.

MISS LINWOOD'S GALLERIES of PICTURES, in Leicester-square, are now OPEN, and will continue open every day, (Sundays excepted) from nine in the morning until dusk. Admittance, 2s. Children, 1s.

COSMORAMA.—A CHANGE having taken place on Monday, the 1st inst. in the Gallery of Asia and Africa, it now contains Views of Jerusalem; the Colossal Statues on the Plain of Thebes; Ruins of the Tomb of Osymandias, commonly called the Memnonium; the City of Antioch, and some others. The other Gallery contains Mont Blanc; the Gardens of Versailles; Westminster Abbey during the Coronation, and three others. The admission of day-light on the View considerably improves the illusion, and obviates the heat and obscurity so much complained of at St James's street.—Admittance to each Gallery One Shilling.—209, Regent-street, Oxford street.

CHURCH PREFERMENT.—To be SOLD by PRIVATE TREATY, the next Presentation to a Rectory in Yorkshire; Income about 900l a year; age of the Incumbent 77 years.—Further particulars may be known by applying (post-paid) to Mr Nixon, at the Post office, Leek, Staffordshire.

A GRADUATE of the UNIVERSITY of CAMBRIDGE, in full orders, in desirous of undertaking the Curacy of a large and populous Parish.—For particulars apply (by letter only) post-paid to R. B., Ilbery's British and Foreign Library, Great Titchfield-street, Cavendish-square.

PRIVATE TUITION.—A Married Clergyman, graduated at Oxford, resident in an excellent Parsonage within easy distance from Town, receives SIX PUPILS, to prepare for either of the universities. Most satisfactory references to parents of pupils and others in town or country may be had on application to Mr Souter, 73, St. Paul's Church-yard.

A MARRIED CLERGYMAN, A.M., resident on his Benefice, in a beautiful and healthy country, receives Four Pupils into his house, whom he prepares for the Universities and Learned Professions. The most respectable references can be given to Gentlemen who have entrusted their sons to his care.—Apply to the Rev. B. Cole, Warbleton Parsonage, near Uckfield, Sussex.

PRIVATE EDUCATION; particularly recommended to the attention of Guardians and the Friends of young Ladies from the East and West Indies. The Lady of a Clergyman of the Established Church, having two daughters to Educate, proposes taking a small select number of young Ladies, who will participate in every advantage and attention bestowed upon her own children, and who, if required, may find a comfortable and permanent home. The establishment will be conducted upon the entire plan of private education. The situation is both healthy and pleasant; and from its vicinity to a large city, derives the advantage of the very best masters of every description. The most earnest attention will be paid to health, morals, and manners; and the most respectable references given. For further particulars, address by letter, (post paid) to A.B. No. 8, Regent street, London.

EDUCATION.—A Member of the University of Cambridge, highly Graduated, who has long educated young gentlemen, will have VACANCIES for THREE PUPILS at Michaelmas. Terms, including Latin, Greek, Versions, Composition, Mathematics, French, German, Italian, Books, Stationery, &c. 100 Guineas, and five guineas entrance. Pupils received into this school from Harrow, Charterhouse, &c. to finish their education have, in every instance, been two or three years behind pupils received early. But as references will be given that will satisfy the most intelligent and anxious enquirers, it is only necessary to say this school is conducted on a plan that supplies pupils with the means of obtaining a classical, mathematical, and scientific education but little inferior to our Universities, and with domestic comforts equal to home. Letters only post paid, will meet attention, if addressed to D. D. Andrews, Library, 167, New Bond-street.

DR. GOLDING, Physician Accoucheur to the Royal West London Infirmary, and to the Western Dispensary, will commence an Autumnal Course of Lectures upon the Principles and Practice of MIDWIFERY, at the Theatre of the former Institution, 28, Villiers-street, Charing cross, where particulars may be had, or at the residence of Dr. Golding, 77, St. Martin's-lane.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, SEPT. 2.—The Duke of Angoulême, in virtue of the powers with which he is invested, has appointed Count Molitor a Commander of the Royal Military Order of St. Louis.—By a sentence passed last month, the Chamber of Correctional Police of the Tribunal of Bourdeaux has condemned the Sieur Scolan, a Captain of long standing in the Navy, to be deprived of his rank, and prohibited from exercising his profession, for being engaged in the Slave Trade.

Extract of a letter from Paris, dated Monday evening:—"The reply of Ferdinand to the communication of the Duke d'Angoulême, has been looked for here with great anxiety. It appears that this answer destroys all hope of arrangement. It was given on the 23d, the last day of the term granted by his Royal Highness, and, it is said, is couched in very strong language. The King, who wrote it with his own hand, declares, if we are accurately informed—1. That he had never ceased to enjoy personal liberty until the period of the entrance of the French troops into Spain.—2. That the blood which has been shed in this unjust war, will recoil upon the head of Louis XVIII. and his Frenchmen.—3. That they are responsible before God for all the evils that may happen either to Ferdinand or his family.—4. That the King relies, confidently, upon the intervention of England.—This answer was to be communicated to all the Ambassadors."—Courier.

FORT ST. MARY, AUG. 23.—The works before the Trocadero are carried on with great vigour. To-morrow morning the French will be sufficiently advanced to enable us to open our fire. The enemy attempted the day before yesterday, in the morning, to land 350 men at the head of the trench. A company of voltigeurs rushed upon the breast-work, and forced them shamefully to retire, leaving 15 or 20 dead or wounded upon the place. They now avenge themselves for the failure by keeping up a continual fire, which has killed one man and wounded four or five.

There is nothing new to-day. They have been trying night and day at Trocadero, to arrest the progress of our engineers; we have, accordingly, had some men wounded; but the works themselves have not been interrupted. Both the batteries, now called d'Angoulême and de Carrigan, are finished. It appears that the general attack will be delayed till the 28th.

BAYONNE, AUG. 28.—We understand, from a person from Andalusia, and as may be inferred from the 29th Bulletin, that affairs do not seem likely to turn out as had been hoped, an accommodation being much diminished by the obstinacy of the Cortes; preparations continue to be made for the attack of Cadiz. Four companies of artillery are going to be embarked here by sea. It is certain if Cadiz is defended, and so well supplied with provisions, &c. as reported, that the attack will not be an easy matter, and the troops we have there at present should seem scarcely adequate to so great an operation. Pampeluna, the siege of which will be carried on with such an immense display of force, will fall in a short time. For the better accommodation of the work in the army, it has been determined to send part of them to France, and 122 arrived here yesterday. It is said that detachments will arrive here every other day till further orders.

MADRID, AUG. 25.—My Lord—Gen. Bourck reports to me that the troops of the 2d division of the 1st Corps of the army entered on the 21st in the morning into Corunna, where there was still about 4000 in garrison, a great quantity of warlike stores and provisions of all kinds. Among the officers of distinction in the garrison are Gen. Novella, the Governor, Campillo, Commander of the Militia of Bilboa, and the Pastor, a Partisan Chief.—Accept, &c.

The Marshal Duke of REGGIO.

The General Constituent Legislative Assembly of the Brazils commenced its first Session towards the latter end of April, and all the preliminary forms having been gone through, his Majesty the Emperor, who was present, in person, on the 3d of May, addressed a long speech to the Assembly, in which he took a detailed view of the political, financial, commercial, and civil state of the Brazils. The language of the Emperor was frank and energetic, and it is quite clear that whatever may be the nature of the future intercourse with Portugal, the independence of Brazil is irrevocably secured. The Monarch and the people are cordially united upon this point, and the small party of Portuguese who may attempt to foment discord by revising useless pretensions, will soon discover their own weakness.

The Regency has published a circular, which is addressed to all the Ambassadors and Diplomatic agents, on the departure of the Duke of Infantado and the foreign Minister. It is as follows:—

"EXCELLENT SIR—The Regency of the kingdom, desiring that at the happy moment of the deliverance of the King our august Sovereign, there may be near his Majesty a person of high character, to congratulate him, and pay him homage in the name of his Royal Highness, his Serene Highness has resolved that for this purpose, the Duke of Infantado shall repair to Andalusia, accompanied by M. Saez, the Chief Minister. In consequence of this determination, their Excellencies have set out this morning according to the orders of his Serene Highness, of which I have the honour to inform your Excellency.

"The Palace, Aug. 19, 1823."

MADRID GAZETTE EXTRAORDINARY, AUG. 25.—The following convention has been concluded between Lieut.-General Count Bourck, Commander-in-Chief of the French troops in Galicia, and Lieut.-General Don Francisco Novella, Governor of the fortress of Corunna:—"Art. 1. The garrison of Corunna shall pass entire under the command of his Excellency the Conde de Carthagena, Captain-General and Commander-in-Chief of the Spanish army in Galicia, under the same conditions agreed to in Lugo between Generals Bourck and Murillo.—Art. 2. The Governor of Corunna will immediately send two Spanish officers, accompanied by two French officers, to the Conde de Carthagena, to make known the submission, and to receive his orders.—Art. 3. The Conde de Carthagena shall stipulate with Lieut.-General Count Bourck for the interests of the corps and individuals who compose the garrison and population of Corunna.—Art. 4. Until the return of the above-mentioned officers, and from the date of the present convention, hostilities shall cease by land and by sea, between the army and the French squadron, and between the French squadron and the garrison of Corunna.—Art. 5. For the reciprocal guarantee of the above stipulations, there shall be exchanged on each side two officers of the rank of Captain, to be held as hostages.—This convention, concluded between the French and Spanish Commissioners empowered for that purpose, is signed by them respectively, in duplicate, subject to the ratification of the two Generals-in-Chief.

"Head-quarters, Menelos, Aug. 13.

"AUGUSTIN RODRIGUEZ Y FERNANDEZ,
"Intendant, ad interim, of the 4th Army, charged with powers by Don Francisco Novella. "BARON DE ALMAGAN,
"Camp-Marshal, charged with powers by Lieut.-Gen. Bourck.
"ANTONIO VAN-HALEN,
"Chief of the Staff, charged with powers by the General-in-Chief of this Army. "THE COLONEL OF THE STAFF,
"Charged with powers by Lieut.-General Count Bourck.

"I ratify this convention in Corunna, Aug. 13,
"FRANCISCO NOVELLA, General-in-Chief, and Governor of this fortress.

"I ratify this convention in the camp before Corunna, Aug. 13,
"J. BOURCK, Lieut.-General."

The following capitulation was afterwards concluded between Gen. Count Bourck and the Conde de Carthagena:—"The first article of the convention concluded between Lieut.-General Count Bourck and General Novella, places the garrison of Corunna under the orders of General Novella, and the third article provides that the said the Conde de Carthagena; and article three provides that the said Conde shall stipulate for the interests of the garrison and population of Corunna with Count Bourck."

"In pursuance whereof, the Conde de Carthagena, having heard the Commissioners for the Governor and garrison of Corunna, proposes to General Bourck the following articles:—1. The city of Corunna and the garrison of that fortress recognize the authority of the Regency of Spain and the Indies, installed in Madrid during the absence of the King. 2. No householder or present inhabitant of Corunna shall be molested or prosecuted for the opinions he may have held, or shall be molested or prosecuted for the conduct which he may have hitherto observed. Persons of the political conduct which he may have hitherto observed. Persons and property shall be scrupulously respected. 3. Corunna shall be garrisoned by such French troops as Count Bourck may think proper, and there shall also be in the same fortress such troops as the Count and there shall also be in the same fortress such troops as the Count Conde de Carthagena may destine for it. 4. The National Militia, who do not belong to Corunna, shall have passports for their homes, or other places convenient for them, the necessary assistance being afforded them: and in no manner shall they be molested or prosecuted for the opinions which they have manifested, nor for the political conduct which they have observed either as individuals or as National Militia. which they have observed either as individuals or as National Militia. The National Militia of Corunna are included in article 3, and in such part of the present article as may be applicable to them. 5. The garrison of Corunna, which has been in a time detached from the army, will be again incorporated with it, and shall be held in the same consideration as the rest of the troops which compose it. The generals, chiefs, and officers, who may not wish to be incorporated in the army, shall be furnished with passports, or shall remain prisoners of war, according as they may think proper.

(Signed) "El Conde De CARTHAGENA.

"Head-quarters, Vigo, Aug. 17.

"The Lieutenant-General commanding the troops of his Majesty the King of France, before the fortress of Corunna, accedes to all the above expressed conditions. (Signed) "Count BOURCK.

"Camp before Corunna, Aug. 20."

In virtue of the above capitulation the Conde de Carthagena took possession of the important fortress of Corunna, at nine in the morning of the 21st: and at ten o'clock on the same day it was entered by the French troops.

Commercial advices received in the City from Cadiz, mention that a correspondence had taken place between Mr. Egan, the British Consul at that port, and Admiral Hamelin, commanding the French squadron, respecting the detention of the British trading vessel Susannah and Maria, Capt. W. R. Airey. By the proclamation of the French Commander, no ship was to leave Cadiz subsequently to the 15th July; but permission had been given, under peculiar circumstances, that the Susannah and Maria might be allowed up to the very end of the month for clearing out of Cadiz. It would seem it was detained in consequence of some fresh order.

Letters have been received from Buenos Ayres, dated on the 25th May, which state that two Envoys had arrived there on the preceding day from the Spanish Government at Madrid, and that it had been instantly communicated to them that no intercourse of any description could be held with them, unless they were prepared unequivocally to acknowledge the Sovereignty and Independence of the Republic of Buenos Ayres.

ROME, AUG. 20.—On the 15th the Pope experienced some relief in his painful situation; he owed it to his Most Christian Majesty. The mechanical bed that had been sent by him (the King of France) had been very useful. After having been raised to a sitting posture, he took his chocolate and fell asleep. His Holiness was affected with the liveliest gratitude for the attention of the King of France. On the 16th, however, the weakness of the august invalid went on still increasing: it was discovered by different alarming symptoms. He had a sort of delirium, and fancied himself at Savona, and at Fontainbleau. On the 17th, the malady assumed a still more alarming character. His Holiness requested the communion, remarking, that it was proper for a Pope to communicate during the octave of the Assumption. On the 18th, at five in the morning, Cardinal Bertozzoli administered the sacrament of the Eucharist, as the Viaticum. His Holiness was aware of his danger. Some cordials were offered to support him: he replied, "I have now no other care to take than to prepare my soul to render an account to God of my long life." The 19th, at half past one in the morning, the Holy Father received the extreme unction; he soon after lost his speech; only it was perceived by the inarticulate sounds of his voice, that he was internally in prayer. Immediately on this news being spread the churches were filled, and a universal feeling of regret and grief reigned in Rome. At last this Pontiff, full of virtue and courage, expired this morning at half-past six.—Journal des Debats.

A young man, named Walter Clark, has just committed suicide upon the ramparts of Boulogne. The evening before, he had been at the tavern of M. Dupuis, to whom he gave two pieces of gold for two glasses of brandy, which he had called for. M. Dupuis not being able to induce this young Englishman to take back his two pieces of gold, repeated next morning to the Commissary of Police, to give them up, and observed, that the owner must be out of his mind. Three hours after, the unfortunate W. Clark confirmed the justice of this remark, by putting an end to his life.—Journal des Debats.

Accounts from Constantinople of the 25th ult. state, that a treaty of peace with Persia was considered as all but concluded, intelligence having been received by the Porte that all the main points of a pacification were arranged.

A series of Calcutta Papers from the 11th to the 25th of March have been received. A shock of an earthquake was felt at Madras on the 2d of March, extending through the Nilgherry and the country in that direction, as well as generally along the coast. The shock was also perceived in Travancore, but 20 minutes later than at Madras, and also in the Island of Ceylon. The sum subscribed for erecting an equestrian statue in honour of the Marquis of Hastings, amounted at Calcutta on the 11th of March, to 13,450 rupees, above 1,300l. sterling. The new rule of the late Governor-General for regulating the press in India, was published at Calcutta on the 15th of March. It ordains, that after 14 days from the registry of the rule, no newspaper or book containing intelligence or strictures on the Government shall be published without a licence from the Governor-General.

Letters from Antioch to the 30th of June communicate intelligence from Syria, that up to that date earthquakes continued almost daily to be felt, and many of the shocks were most alarming and calamitous in their consequences.

The following is an extract from a letter from Port Louis (Mauritius) dated April 27, 1823.—"As the Orpheus sails for England to-day, I will avail myself of saying by her, that the Slave Trade is totally crushed and abolished in this quarter, by the exertions of Captain Moresby, of the Menai, and who will quit this island on the 18th of May, for the Cape of Good Hope and England, with his Excellency Governor Sir Robert Farquhar and family. Sir Robert's health is much impaired by 30 years' residence in a tropical climate."

A New York paper of the 7th ult. contains the following paragraph:—"We have seen some specimens of the ore taken from the gold mine lately discovered in North Carolina, and brought to this city by a gentleman from Cherew (South Carolina,) about 30 miles from the mine. The metal, as taken from the bed, is almost in a pure state, there being not more than ten per cent. of alloy. The mine is supposed to be very rich and extensive, and the precious metal is contained in a sand-bed. It is obtained by sifting the sand. Sometimes large and valuable masses are found. A poor man, we are told, lately found a piece by accident which is worth 1,700 dollars."

A Court of Vice-Admiralty sessions was held in Bridgetown, Barbadoes, on the 9th of July, for the trial of a seaman of the name of Johnson, for murder on the high seas. It appeared in evidence, that the Colombian privateer Aguila captured the Spanish brig Maria Dolores early in May last, about one day's sail from Gibraltar, on her passage, with a cargo of soap, oil, olives, fruit, &c. from Malaga to the Havannah. James Martin was put on board as prize-master, with Johnson, Murray, Hutchinson, Antonio Martinez, William Cumpsty, and a mulatto, of the privateer's crew, and the captain of the captured vessel, and were ordered to proceed to La Guayra. Ten days after Murray got drunk, and was put in irons, kept two days, and then liberated; the next day he was again intoxicated, and, at the mid-watch, he and Johnson quarrelled about who should take his turn at the helm. (the witness, Cumpsty, being at the time at the helm), when Johnson went below, brought up a pistol, and shot Murray dead on the spot; the prize master, Martin, standing by at the time. The body of Murray was immediately thrown overboard. Two nights after the Spanish captain was shot and thrown into the sea. Hutchinson was thrown overboard alive by Johnson and the prize-master. Antonio Martinez, in terror of Johnson, avoided his fury, and preferred drowning—he jumped over. The next victim was the guilty prize-master himself, who was chained down by the ferocious Johnson, his hands so ironed that he could not feed himself: the poor wretch expired in two days. Cumpsty (the witness) was chained one day by the side of Martin, and was in continual expectation of losing his life, too, at the pleasure of the merciless Johnson; the ruffian, however, a squall coming on, and finding it impossible to navigate the vessel without Cumpsty's aid, saved his life and that of the mulatto, the only two remaining of the crew. On the 7th of June they spoke the brig Dart (which had sailed from Barbadoes a day or two before for Demerara), of whose captain Johnson inquired whereabouts he was. The captain informed him that Barbadoes bore about 50 miles N.W. by W.; he then steered for Bridgetown (where Providence had destined him to meet his fate), and arrived the next day, the 8th of June. It is most extraordinary that while he was relating his situation to the captain of the port, Richard Cock, Esq. and describing the loss of the crew, he should, without seeming to apprehend any danger from the confession, say at once, without hesitation, when Captain Cock asked "What became of the Spanish captain?"—"We shot him;" and when asked "What became of Murray?"—"I shot him." The finger of God was evident in the all-seeing eye of Providence has been manifest in the discovery and punishment of this horrible massacre.—The Jury brought in a verdict of Guilty.

IRELAND.

CORK, AUG. 29.—On Thursday last four gentlemen, crossing on a mountain near Bantry, were attacked by a party of the peasantry, and one of them disarmed. The gentlemen had separated in search of game, and one of them, who had a double barrelled gun, was suddenly surrounded and deprived of his fowling-piece. The gentleman remonstrated upon the nature of the outrage, and stated that he was a Magistrate of the County, upon which the ruffian who had got possession of the gun, turned it against its owner, and fired at him: the shot passed between his arm and his side, without doing him any serious injury. His fellow sportsmen coming up, the assailants desisted from any further violence, and went off with what they had obtained.

Thursday se'nnight his Majesty's Letters Patent passed the Great Seal of Ireland, appointing Thomas Goold, Esq. K.C. to be distinguished orditic of Serjeant at Law.

Extract of a letter from Ballyroan, Queen's County:—"I am sorry to inform you that a fever of a very malignant nature has broken out here; the poor people call it the Black Fever. It was brought to this part of the country by a servant girl from Dublin, who came to see her friends. She and several of the poor to whom she communicated the infection, have died of it.

COUNTY KILDARE (NAAS.)—The Special Sessions, under the Insurrection Act, for the County of Kildare, took place in this town last week. Four persons were convicted—the first one, Kelly, a tailor, nearly 80 years old, who, being at some distance from home, slept at a customer's house—it was said that he had a bad character even since 1798, and he was sent off from the dock in a post chaise, with a escort.—The second was a Mr. Kenny, a wealthy farmer, who was found in a public-house after nine o'clock on Saturday, the 9th of August there were two others with him, one of them to receive his wages, the other, a man to whom he gave a pint of beer, after his day's work.—They were all found guilty, though excellent characters were given of them. There were many others in the dock who were acquitted, being taken on the high road, with their drays and horses returning from market.

CORK, AUG. 29.—This day, at half past 12, the two unfortunate culprits, Richard Nagle and Denis Barrett, who were convicted of attacking the house of Thomas Heffernan, Esq. of Killarney, and robbing it of arms; and also tendering an unlawful oath to Mrs. Heffernan, were escorted from the County gaol by a party of Lancers to Mallow, preparatory to their execution on to-morrow at Buttevant. They were attended by three Roman Catholic Clergymen.

On last evening a respite until further orders was received by the High Sheriff of the County for John Ringand Pat. Sweeny, the former of whom was found guilty under Lord Ellenborough's Act, for issuing Timothy Donovan with a sword, near Castlemary gate; and the latter for the attack on Mr. James Barry's house at Inchegeela, at the adjourned Assizes.—Cork Paper.

CLONMEL, AUG. 30.—Between twelve and one on Thursday, as three men were valuing tithes belonging to Dean Palmer, between New Inn and Cashel, they were attacked by nine or ten men barefooted, with their faces blackened, and otherwise disguised—and cut and beaten most severely with slanes, sticks, &c.

On Saturday night last, a comfortable dwelling, situate in the suburbs of Rossmore, was set fire to and totally consumed; by some incendiaries. And on Sunday morning, at an early hour, a notice of an alarming nature was posted at the above place, threatening a friendly visit to any person taking the adjoining lands or meadow from Mr. Stewart, Lord Hawarden's agent, which were lately surrendered and reset to Mr. James Scott, of Rossmore. We are informed that scarce a night passes but shots are fired in the neighbourhood of Dundrum.

A man of the name of Campion, of Moonabrogue, near Freshford, in this county, was so dreadfully beaten on Sunday night, by two ruffians, that he died on Tuesday. An inquest was taken on the body, and a verdict of "Wilful Murder" returned. A person of the name of James Hoyne has been committed, charged with being concerned in the murder.—Kilkenny Moderator.

On Sunday night se'nnight, a party of armed men attacked the dwelling house of Denis Condon, of Deelas, near Rathkeale, and flogged a servant-boy of his, named Harry, whom they put on his oath to quit his master's employment, which he accordingly did the next morning. They also swore Condon's wife to give milk to whoever asked it last, having her more liberal for the future.—On Friday night last a party of Whiteboys attacked the house of John Carroll, on the lands of Glensharold, near Ardagh, in this county, and swore him to give up the herding of a farm belonging to a man named Frawley, and gave him a written notice for his employer, signed "General Hock," directing him to give up the land which he had lately taken, and to drive home his cattle, else he and they would be destroyed by fire and sword.—On Sunday se'nnight, in the day time, a party of armed men, dressed in white shirts, attacked the house of Patrick Shea cheesey, of Carana, in the neighbourhood of Shanagolden.—The herdsman of a farmer named Hurly was lately beaten on the lands of Duncahad, near Shanagolden. His mother was also beaten, and both were ordered to quit by Capt. Rock.—Limerick Chronicle.

SURREY SESSIONS.

TUESDAY.—John Wharton was indicted for stealing a 20l. note from Mr. Clifford Elisha at Vauxhall Gardens. Mr. Elisha stated that he went to Vauxhall Gardens at about ten o'clock on the evening of Wednesday last, having at the time, in a pocket-book in his pocket, two 20l. Bank notes, a check for 300l., another for 5l. and a Cambridge note for 5l. Witness was not exactly sober when he went to the gardens, and he drank some punch there. He asked the prisoner, who waited upon him, to shew him the water-closet. Upon his coming out, the prisoner handed him his pocket-book, which he (witness) had not before missed, but then supposed he had dropped. Upon examining his pocket-book he missed a 20l. note.—Robert Hall, the chief constable of Union-hall, stated, that he saw Mr. Elisha receive a pocket-book from the prisoner. A gentleman (Mr. Graffham) came forward, and said Mr. Elisha was a neighbour, and he would take care of the notes, and he accordingly took them. The prisoner at once snatched them from his hands, said that the prosecutor was an old master of his, and nobody but he (the prisoner) should handle the notes. The prisoner then folded up the notes, and put them in Mr. Elisha's pocket-book. Witness went to inform Mr. Hughes, and on his return the prisoner said all was right, the gentleman had got all his money back, had got 20l. Mr. Hughes took out of the prisoner's hand a written paper, which he held concealed. The prisoner made no resistance, and witness struck him. Mr. Elisha desired him not to ill use the man, and that the prisoner had not robbed him. The prisoner put his hand to his mouth, and made a great effort to swallow, after which he said "its gone." Witness forced open the mouth with his staff, but there was nothing in it. The prisoner kept rubbing his feet on the ground, which was wet, all the time they were near him. The prisoner was then taken to the watch-house, where Mr. Elisha examined his pocket-book, and said he had lost a 20l. note, and who would have thought this man was such a rogue.—Mr. Hughes stated that he was manager of Vauxhall Gardens, and on the night in question he took the paper produced from the prisoner's hand, and on the following Friday he found the 20l. note, produced in that part of the gardens where the prisoner had been standing.—Mr. Graffham confirmed this account, and added that the prisoner told him he and Mr. Elisha would be in box No. 38. When the prisoner returned the pocket-book to Mr. Elisha he said to witness, "Now, Sir, you see witness this gentleman has all his money."—The principal waiter at the gardens proved that the prisoner was not a waiter in the gardens on the night in question, but was there waiting to be employed.—Mr. Elisha proved that the 20l. note was his. It was much torn.—The prisoner made a long speech in his defence, in which he asserted his innocence, and called three waiters of the gardens to prove that Mr. Elvins invited him to drink in his box, and had his notes on the table, which witness several times reminded him to put up.—The Jury, after deliberating two hours, returned a verdict—Not Guilty.

Maria Murray, Eleanor Hartnell, and Ann Hawes, were indicted for stealing, at Christchurch, a bronze scent ornament, of the value of 4l., the property of Henry Perring.—John Goodicar sworn.—I am a clerk to the property of Henry Perring, in the 15th of August, about one o'clock in the middle of the day, the three prisoners came into my master's shop, and asked to look at some rings. I then shewed them several, all of which the prisoner Hawes said would not do; at that time I began to be rather suspicious of them, and said if they would go to the shop a little higher up, they would probably meet with some that would suit; they went out accordingly, when I immediately looked towards a pianoforte, where a bronze ornament had been placed, and which I observed was gone. I followed the prisoners, and got up with them on Blackfriars bridge, they were then going towards London, and I accused them of taking the ornament, when the prisoner Hawes said to her companions, "Why don't you give it to the boy? Give it to the boy!" And at that instant Murray gave me the ornament. Two of the Union Hall officers happened to be passing at the time, who took the prisoners into custody. —— Locky, a police officer, produced the ornament, and corroborated the last witness's statement as to having taken them into custody. The Chairman said, if they all went into the shop with an intent to steal they were all equally guilty, though Murray was the only person who actually took the article, and it would be for the Jury to say whether they were all, or which of them were guilty.—The Jury returned a verdict of Guilty against all the prisoners, none of whom appeared to be more than 14 years old, unfortunate girls, as they stated, without any friends.—The Chairman sentenced them to be imprisoned six months at Brixton-hill, there to be kept to hard labour.

POLICE.

Lone-hall.—On Wednesday morning, when Hall, the chief constable, laid his report book for inspection before the Magistrate, he complained that Daniel Harris, sen. one of the officers of this establishment, was nearly murdered the previous day by a man named Evans, who is in the employment of Mr. Callaghan, a mill-wright, residing in New-prison-gateway. Harris went to the premises of Mr. Callaghan, where Evans was at work, on Tuesday about 4 o'clock, for the purpose of executing an assault warrant on him. Harris did not know the individual's person against whom the warrant was issued, but from the description he had received, he concluded that Evans, who was at work in the factory with a pick-axe, was the man he wanted. He then exhibited the warrant, and asked Evans whether he was not the man. Evans replied that he was not the person, and was about to walk away from the premises. Harris, whose suspicions were rather increased than diminished, opposed his departure, telling him that a person would soon appear who would prove the necessary fact. Evans then recommenced his work, but seeing Harris turn round his head, aimed a desperate blow at the unfortunate officer's skull with the pick-axe, and wounded him deeply over the eye. Harris fell, almost deprived of his senses, to the ground. Upon attempting to rise, he was again knocked down by Evans, who beat out several of his teeth with the same dreadful instrument. The poor fellow was left lying on the ground covered with blood. Hall added, that on Tuesday evening Harris was considered in danger, but the surgeon pronounced him better this morning. Evans absconded. The Magistrate sent three officers in pursuit of him.

On Thursday, Michael Kelly was charged with having committed a most brutal assault on his wife and daughter. Cecilia Hall stated that she was the daughter of the prisoner, whom she described as a person of the most violent and ungovernable temper, and that in the afternoon of the preceding day her father missed a few pence, and charged his youngest daughter, a girl about 15 years of age, with having taken it from his pocket. The poor girl denied the truth of the accusation, and he swore that he would murder her if the halfpence were not instantly restored to him. The girl, to prevent bad consequences, went into witness's room, and her father followed her with a large stick, with which he aimed a blow at her head. Witness held up her hand to protect the girl, and received a desperate blow. The poor mother hearing the cries of her children, ran up stairs and endeavoured to prevent further violence, but the defendant immediately knocked her down, and broke three of her ribs, and she was now unable to attend, in consequence of the dreadful injuries she received.—The Magistrate expressed his surprise and disgust at such brutal conduct, and said he would not accept of bail for the prisoner until his wife should be recovered sufficiently to appear at the office.

On Friday Evans, for whom the officers have been searching these two or three days past, was apprehended in the Bow-road. Harris, the younger, stated, that he had been to see his father, and the doctor who was in attendance upon him said, that it was impossible he could be taken out at present. One of the unfortunate man's eyes, which the doctor supposes must have been struck most violently with a fist, discharges a great deal, the other eye has an extremely unfavourable appearance, and appears to have been wounded by a blunt instrument. He was remanded.

Henry Trickle, alias Harry Hicks, was apprehended on Thursday by Joseph Cooper, one of the Surrey constables, who, in consequence of some information he received, took him into custody on suspicion of having been concerned in the robbery at Lambeth Palace on the seventh of August. He formerly had been a waiter at some respectable houses, is apparently about 22 years of age, and a well known character at Union-Hall. He was remanded till next Wednesday.

Queen-square.—Wednesday, a gentleman at this office mentioned that in the course of one month he had been robbed by pickpockets of no less than nine valuable silk handkerchiefs. Mr. Markland jocosely observed, "You are a slow waller, Colonel, I believe?" Colonel—"Very much so, your Worship." Mr. Markland—"I thought so, and this is the cause of your losing so many handkerchiefs; thieves always attack the slow walkers. I," said the Magistrate, "never walk slowly in the street, and never had my pocket picked."

On Thursday the driver of a hackney coach summoned a gentleman of Fitzroy-terrace, Portland-place, for refusing to pay him his legal fare. The servant of the defendant attended for his master. The complainant stated that he was called off the stand on the evening stated in the summons; he was ordered to drive to the little theatre, where he set down his fare, and the servant told him to wait till the play was over to bring them home. He waited accordingly from seven o'clock till past eleven, but he could not find them, and he charged according to law, which amounted to 14s.—The Magistrate decided in favour of the coachman, and the defendant had to pay his demand with costs.

Bow-street.—Tuesday, a curious charge was made against a person named Turner, who had opened a watchmaker's shop in that respectable part of Holywell-street, Strand. There were no less than four complainants, and the accusation against Mr. Turner was, that he, not being the fear of the Old Bailey before his eyes, was about to go with the complainants' watches, or in other words, that he had received the watches for the purpose of making them go, and was caught in the act of making them go with a vengeance, by carrying them off and disposing of them.—The complainants stated, that Mr Turner had had their watches to repair for a considerable length of time, and not being able to get them returned, done or undone, they suspected that he had improperly disposed of them, and, unfortunately for Mr. Turner 7 or 8 persons, having similar causes of complaint against him, met together at the police office on Monday morning at Mr. Turner's shop, and they openly charged him with improperly disposing of their watches. He declared that if they would wait till two o'clock (as he was then going to a funeral) they should have their watches. They met again at two, but no Mr. Turner was to be found, and having suspicion all was not right, they set a watch upon the shop, and in the evening a broker arrived, and took possession of all the watches in the shop. The complainants followed the broker to the house where it was conveyed to, where they found him, and they promptly called on the watchman and gave him in charge. At Bow-street he produced seven watches, and said they were all the watches he had. The Magistrate said, feel in your pockets again? He then produced another; they were ordered to be produced, to be delivered to the right owners. He was asked if he had any duplicates about him; but he denied it, as it was strongly suspected that he had pawned watches sent to him to be repaired. He was remanded, promising to appear again, if sent for, he was set at liberty. On Wednesday, Samuel John Chaffin appeared at the bar to answer the charge of stealing a horse, value 12l. the property of George Gotts, keeper of a livery-stable in the City-road. The prisoner, it appeared, had hired the horse from the prosecutor, and, under pretence of fetching home his wife, took the animal to a general repository for the sale of horses in Gray's Inn-lane, and there gave orders to sell it for 20l. at the same time asking 3l. as a loan upon it. On being told on a second application that the horse was not worth that sum, he said he would take 15l. in want of money, and would call again; in the meanwhile the theft was discovered, and the prisoner taken into custody. He was fully committed for trial.

On Thursday, John M'Carthy, charged with stealing 160l. in Bank notes, the property of Mr. Herschel, his master, was put to the bar. It was proved that one of the stolen notes had been paid away at the shop of Mr. Nixey, of Oxford-street, in purchase of several pair of stockings, by a man resembling the prisoner, but the shopman was unable to swear positively to him. The same person inquired at the time, if the shopman could recommend him to any place, where he could purchase a shawl; and he was in consequence referred to bought a shawl for 35s. and in payment gave another of the stolen 5l. notes. The same shawl was afterwards found at the lodgings of the prisoner's wife, who he had quitted, without mentioning his intention of proceeding to Ireland. She had been detained for the last five days at Covent Garden watch-house. The prisoner still refused to tell in what manner he disposed of the money he took with him to Ireland, but persists in asserting that he lost his portmanteau, containing every thing belonging to him, soon after he landed.—He was again remanded.

William Darby, Butler to Lady Ann Dashwood, and Daniel M'Carthy, a green-grocer, charged with being concerned in plundering Lady Anne Dashwood of plate to a large amount, were finally examined. It was submitted that no case had been made out against M'Carthy. He received the plate from Darby, who stated that he had the authority of her Ladyship to raise money upon it; and Lady Anne had admitted that upon one occasion she had actually authorized Darby to pawn some spoons. It was to be observed also that M'Carthy received the proceeds of the plate that he pledged, in payment of a just demand for fruit, &c. sold, and not in the way of reward for his share in the transactions.—Sir R. Birnie asked Lady Dashwood if she knew of her own knowledge that M'Carthy served her with fruit. Lady Dashwood said she did; but believed she never exchanged a word with him.—Sir R. Birnie said he was constrained to agree in opinion with the Learned Counsel, that a case of felony could not be made out against M'Carthy, and he must therefore be admitted to bail on his own recognizance for the Crown.—M'Carthy was then called from the bar, and stated upon oath, that he first became acquainted with Darby about eighteen months ago; but having obtained leave to serve her Ladyship with fruit, he went to the house generally every day, and uniformly dealt with Darby, whom he considered as the authorized agent of her Ladyship; and when the account had amounted to a considerable sum, he (witness) became pressing for his money, and Darby gave him plate to pawn. Upon every occasion he expressed great reluctance to engaging in such transactions, but Darby always assured him that every thing was done with the entire consent of her Ladyship.—General Maitland asked the witness why he did not make his demand, if he had any, upon Lady Dashwood, and not rely upon the mere assertion of a servant. The witness said he considered Darby as having full authority to act as he did.—General Maitland said, Lady Dashwood wished to have it explained that no debt was ever contracted with the witness, or any other) small dealer, with her knowledge. It was her custom to have the charges put down upon a slate, and she gave money every morning to one or other of her servants to discharge the account of the preceding day. It was owing to her extreme punctuality that she had on one occasion ordered Darby to pledge some of her plate, though he (General Maitland) could not help wishing that she had applied to him rather than take such a step.—Darby was fully committed.

Marlborough-street.—John Parsons, who had formerly been a publican, was charged by the officers of the Mendicity Society with having, for a length of time, practised the most gross impositions on the public, by means of advertisements for subscriptions for an distressed family. He had the address to prevail on several respectable tradespeople to receive subscriptions at their houses. He has been carrying on this system of imposition since the month of November, 1821, and was only now detected by his effrontery in having lately stated in one of his appeals, that although he has repeatedly advertised at the expence of his friends, yet that he had never had a single shilling subscribed for his relief. Mr. Tribe, a tradesman in Margaret-street, who had received subscriptions for the prisoner, and paid them over to him, seeing the glaring falsehood of this assertion, suspected the whole to be an imposition, and laid the case before the Mendicity Society, who apprehended the prisoner living with his family, not in a state of destitution, as he represented, but in very well furnished comfortable apartments, and provided with every thing they could require. The prisoner also stated in his last advertisement, that in addition to the other afflictions of his family, one of his children was labouring under water on the brain, and another was entirely deprived of sight. —Mr. Pope, a surgeon, stated, that by the desire of the Mendicity Society, he had examined all the prisoner's children, and not one of them was in the least affected with water on the brain, loss of sight, or any other complaint.—Mr. Hagon, of Oxford-street, stated, that in the course of a few months he paid to the prisoner and his wife near 60l. subscriptions received for them at his house. A Mr. Allen said he had paid them about 20l. Mr. Tribe upwards of 11l. before he detected the imposition, and several other persons different considerable sums received at their houses.—The Magistrate said this was the most shameful case of imposition on the charitable feeling and the credulity of the public he had ever known, and ordered the prisoner, who is a strong, healthy, robust fellow, to be committed to hard labour at the House of Correction for three months.

On Thursday, the driver of a hackney coach was committed to the House of Correction for three weeks, in default of payment of 15s. overcharge.

Guildhall.—On Tuesday, Mr. Martin charged an ass-driver with cruel treatment to his animal. The accused declared he had ever treated his ass with the greatest attention to his food and comfort, and beat him only because he was apt to take fright at stage-coaches. He expressed his sorrow for having, in any instance, beat so favourite an animal; in consequence of which he was fined only in the mitigated penalty of 10s.; one-half of which Mr. Martin paid.

On Wednesday, Solomon Britton (porter), and Thurlow, a lad in the employ of Messrs. Dallimore, of Doctors' Commons, carriers, were charged with robberies of packages, and two females, Weston, wife of the West end carrier (who has absconded), and Gibbs, were charged with disposing of the articles stolen. Additional evidence was tendered, as to other property stolen out of the packages, duplicates relating to which had been found at Weston's lodgings; and Gibbs, who appears to have been the general disposer of the booty, again identified as the pawner. All this, however, only affected the Westons, and furnished nothing to implicate Britton, and it was contended that he must be discharged. The Alderman felt himself obliged to discharge Britton, for want of evidence. Thurlow and the two females were again remanded.

The case of Beeman, the journeyman printer, for the robbery committed upon Mr. Beasley, is, it is to be feared, likely, from similar want of caution at first, to terminate nearly in the same way. No proof can be adduced (except the evidence of Cahuac, the alleged receiver, who is himself in custody) that the property found in Surrey was stolen by Beeman, or had ever been in his possession. No bill, therefore, can be preferred against him there. The Court, on application, refused to respite the recognizances until the next Sessions, for want of sufficient ground shewn; and the prisoners, it was feared, would in consequence be discharged on the Proclamation Day. In this dilemma application was made to the Alderman, to allow a detainer to be lodged against Beeman in London; some one or two printed sheets being found in his possession when he was first taken into custody in the City; but after a long consultation with the City Solicitor, the application was refused.—At the close of the Surrey Sessions, he would, therefore, have been entitled to his discharge; but, fortunately for the ends of justice, Mr. Adolphus made another application at the Surrey Sessions, and the Court agreed to respite the recognizances of the prosecutors till the next Sessions, on Mr. A. promising that the principal receiver should, in the interim, be tried in London.

On Friday, Joshua Gardener, was put to the bar, charged with felony.

Mr. Brewer deposed, that last night he was amidst the crowd in Smithfield—observed the prisoner following him, and soon after felt a hand in his pocket—he instantly grasped it and the prisoner, who broke from him—he, however, was again secured by the populace and given into custody. Witness had about 5s. in his pocket, which was gone, the pocket was turned out and a little torn. A letter was here produced from the prisoner's employer, which Mr. Alderman Cox read, and the delinquent's mother, a very respectable looking woman, in tears bewailed his predicament. The prosecutor was positive in his identity, and the prisoner was remanded.

Surrey Houses of Correction.—The Committee of Magistrates, to whom was entrusted the erection of the new houses of correction at Guildford and Brixton, and fitting up and furnishing the same with treadmills, and also the enlargement of the House of Correction at Kingston, reported to the last General Quarter Sessions of the county, that the whole had at length been completed under their superintendence.

DR. HILL'S ANCIENT GREECE.—Second Edition.

Just published in 12mo. price 7s. with a copious Index,

ESSAY on the Institutions, Government, and Manners of the States of Ancient Greece; by HENRY DAVID HILL, D.D. Professor of Greek in the University of St Andrew's.

"To young persons who are just entering upon the higher classics, and are studious men who are desirous of repairing, by their own industry, the accidental defects of an imperfect education, such a useful assistant, we think, cannot well be furnished. In the first six Essays, the author treats of the heroic age, and those institutions which concerned the Greeks generally; in the subsequent ones he confines himself to the manners and customs of those two leading states in Greece. An Essay on the Government, Manners, and Religion of the Persians, a people so long the unprofitable but brilliant history of the Greeks has been suffered to throw too much into obscurity, very properly concludes the work. The style throughout is neat, easy, and perspicuous: the text (as we always wish to see it in elementary works,) is unobstructed by notes; but at the end of every essay is subjoined a list of authorities, confirming the opinion which the author has advanced in it, and affording references to works in which the subject of each Essay may be still further prosecuted."—Quarterly Review, No. 43.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Our further observations on the TREAD MILL, as applicable to females, are delayed till next week, to afford us opportunities of hearing all sides. We are extremely obliged to SIR J. C. HIPPESLEY for his communications from the Isle of Wight, and the various testimonials we have received from our Medical friends. The facts they have been elicited from the consideration of the papers forwarded to us, are indeed striking; but as we are requested, nay, implored to pause before we bring forward all which we are in possession of, and as there is a chance that the women may be released from the toil, we wish to give six days more to the subject, in hours that the necessity of perusing it, as far as it is our present intention to pursue it, may be obviated.

Several Indian Officers have written to us, convinced that if our correspondent upon the subject of the half-pay of the East India Company's army would commence any measure which might be generally taken up, much might be done. We know that JOHN COMPANY is a most liberal master, and it really does appear strange, that, notwithstanding the increase of the KING'S half-pay, his should still remain at the amount which was settled some sixty or seventy years since,—namely, two shillings and sixpence per diem for a Subaltern. Only imagine a QUI-HI subsisting upon a rupee a day. We put it to all the reasoned nabobs now in the Direction, whether the thing is possible?

We are requested to state that DR. CHEVNE is a protestant.

We cannot give MR. L. F. any advice. We should think he must know if he has any just ground for suspicion; at all events we are not the people to consult.

We are requested to state that the Medical Gentleman who attended DR. COLLYER, on the occasion of his lathiing, is MR. COX, of ST. THOMAS'S HOSPITAL; and we are only surprised that this information should have been so long delayed, considering how important it is, under the circumstances, to the character of the person most interested.

We have no room for the letters to MR. CONEY; nor can we give an opinion upon his silence. Of one thing we are pretty certain—that, however much MR. CONEY may have been deceived or misrepresented, in regard to the present Theatrical proceedings, in the end he will prove himself as he ever has done—a man of talent, probity, and honour.

The letter from a correspondent, vindicating MISS PATON, the singer, from what is called "the libellous advertisement in the Haymarket play-bill of to-day," is sheer nonsense. We know no more of the concerns of the Haymarket than our correspondents—we always feel an interest in it's welfare, and that is all. That MISS PATON has broken her engagement is true—gone she is. Now the fact is, (as we can pick up) that her father is a very great fool, and fancies that he and his daughter can do as they like. This is a mistake; and though KING DAVID, of the Haymarket, is sometimes hasty and testy, and, like other great men, does things off-hand in a passion, for which he is afterwards perhaps sorry, we believe, from all we can hear, that he is, in this instance, perfectly right, and that MISS PATON or her papa will have to explain her apparently contemptuous conduct to an indulgent and generous public, before she is allowed to favour them again.

We have read GLOVER'S letter to the BISHOP OF PETERBOROUGH. Our other friends must stand over.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 7.

OUR readers will observe in another part of the paper an account of the magnificent spectacle of opening the Sheerness Docks on Friday—the sight was indeed a splendid one—amongst the company who came to dinner was LORD ERSKINE, a pleasure to the party not the less from its being wholly unexpected. His Lordship volunteered his society, and after having been excluded from the yard for want of even a common ticket, this unassuming WHIG received an invitation as much out of date as WILSON'S rejection of the Tower and Sword, for the one did not resign till he was turned out, nor was the other asked to dine till he had poked himself in.

THE real Humbug of the Spanish cause is now found out. At NOTTINGHAM, of all places in the world, an attempt to juggle honest men out of their money has entirely failed, and at MANCHESTER, after ten days coquetting, a similar assault upon the pockets of the patriots fell to the ground. In the Commongers' Company a proposition for contributions was rejected with shouts, and the consequence is, that the CHRONICLE belabours Mr. STABLES, a member of that corporation, with all manner of abuse. This STABLES is a most respectable and loyal man, forward in all contributions likely to advance the honour of his country or the welfare of his fellow-creatures, but nevertheless no friend to revolution, and certainly not to be humbugged into supporting a cause, from which the Spanish patriots have themselves seceded and the English patriots have run away.

WE have received innumerable letters from the West Indies, on the effect produced by the debates in Parliament upon Slave Abolition. We will give the subject every attention, but we think amongst the number the following demands immediate notice.

St. Lucia, July 20, 1823.

What I feared has taken place—the Colonial Minister has transmitted to our Governor by a last packet, such orders concerning the slave population as to subvert completely the colonial system, if acted upon in the peremptory manner designated. The council will assemble to-morrow on this important subject, God knows what will be the result; in the mean time the slave population are perfectly aware of every thing that is now agitated concerning them, which they exaggerate much in their incendiary songs. All confidence is lost: property has fallen 50 per cent; the best disposed persons will not pay any debts, keeping what little money they have for a case of emergency, which they dread. I must for the present abstain from reflection, and let drop the curtain on this horrid prospect!!

Not being aware what the orders transmitted to SAN LUCIE may be, we publish this extract for the information of those who are. We shall resume this subject next week.

TWO WAYS OF TELLING THE SAME STORY.

THE KING OF PORTUGAL, in consequence of the conduct of the English General WILSON, has ordered his name to be struck out of the list of Commanders of the Order of the Tower and Sword—the following order upon the subject has been published under his Majesty's Sign Manual:—

"SIR ROBERT WILSON having, by the medium of printed letters and proclamations, some of them addressed to the Portuguese, endeavoured to give the greatest publicity to his zeal in the defence of the cause of the Revolutionists of all countries, placing himself, by such notorious facts, in the class of the disturbers of the public tranquillity, I THINK FIT TO DEPRIVE HIM of the rank of Commander of the order of the Tower and Sword, which I had conferred upon him.

"JOAQUIN PEDRO GOMES DE OLIVEIRA, of my Council of State for the Affairs of the Kingdom, will take care to execute this Decree.—Palace of Bemposta, Aug. 11, 1823."

This seems natural and rational enough—that the document is authentic we know—our readers will be amused to read the following extract from the CHRONICLE of Friday:—

"We are happy to present our readers with an authentic copy of a letter, written by our gallant countryman SIR ROBERT WILSON, to the Portuguese Government, renouncing the title, and returning the insignia of the Knight Commander of the Tower and Sword. The letter speaks for itself, and pourtrays the honourable feelings of a Briton, indignant at the unjust and illiberal treatment he had received from a people who owe to him so many days of glory, and into whose port he had steered to seek shelter in the moment of danger; it shews him are it under misfortune, disdaining to wear a distinction he had in common with his barbarous and tyrannical oppressors.

"'British schooner Nassau, off Belem Castle, Aug. 13.

"'SIR—It is with pain that I take a step which may in some degree appear to be personally offensive to his Majesty the King of Portugal, when I have no such intention, being too well aware of his Majesty's present situation; but after the ungenerous, vindictive, as well as lawless treatment I have experienced, under circumstances that would have secured me protection and hospitality from the Governments of the most barbarous nations, it is impossible for me to wear the insignia of a country whose Government has so outrageously violated these duties.

"'The very possession of these insignia implies obligations on my part which it is not for my honour should any longer exist, and therefore I have to request that you will take proper measures to have my name erased from the Commander's roll of the Portuguese Order of the Tower and Sword.

"'Having formerly refused all pay and pecuniary remuneration from the Government of Portugal during the time I was employed in its service, I have the satisfaction now to feel that I am released from every act of acknowledgment, and that the service which I rendered Portugal in an extreme moment of her peril, and crisis of her fate,—services which cannot be denied, have thus been gratuitously given.

"'I have the honour to be,

"'Your Excellency's most obedient humble servant, R. W.

"'To his Excellency the Count Palmella, Minister for Foreign Affairs.'"

"In making public this example of independent principles, we feel we are but pourtraying the character of its author in its true colours. For the honour of our country, we trust there are few Englishmen who would not wish Him spurned to wear the badge of such contemptible oppressors. How different is this from the gratified tales we have found in the Lisbon prints, the offspring of servility and terror!—The first is the language of freedom and honour, which is never to be found without freedom, the latter that of the deceit which superstition engenders."

Stuff!—the FREEDOM here meant as accompanying honour is REVOLUTION—the SUPERSTITION which engenders deceit is RELIGION—But beautiful as is the writing of this puff, and authentic as the copy of WILSON'S letter may be, no end is gained by the grace of the one or the elegance of the other, for by one of those blunders which are sure to detect whiggery and sedition, the authentic copy of the letter from WILSON, resigning the order of the Tower and Sword, is unfortunately dated two days after he had been publicly deprived of it.

On the 11th of August, gentle reader, the KING of PORTUGAL turns WILSON out of his dignity—on the 13th he is seized with an indignant feeling, and throws it up. As the CHRONICLE or WILSON'S friends were coining, they might as well have dated the letter so as to have given an air of probability to the story.

We cannot conclude this article, without feeling an inquisitiveness which always assails us when we hear of the great deeds of WILSON. It appears that the person who writes in the MORNING CHRONICLE thinks that the Portuguese have used him illiberally, because they are "a people who owe to him so many days of glory!"—What that intelligent person, whoever he may be, wishes us to understand by this allusion, we are unable at the present moment to guess; but when HAZLITT, or HUNT, or MACKINTOSH, or HONE, or GALE JONES, or DOCTOR WATSON, or BYRON, or any of the party shall write, as doubtless they will, a history of the life and campaigns of the immortal hero now under discussion, we shall we dare say be fully informed of all his exploits, from the affair of Banos to the defence of Coruna. That he is "under misfortune" we should be sorry to hear, if we did not recollect, that from the day he turned patriot (because he was not, contrary to all regulation, made a K.C.B.) he has involved himself in a series of mortifying mishaps, disgraces, and degradations, out of which an observance of the common decencies of society would have kept him.

Even as it is, when one recollects what WILSON was—what he might have been—and what he is, it really makes one melancholy. Only let us remember BANOS—the indulgence he enjoyed, after he was sent home, of lounging about the streets of London on full pay for six years, from 1809 till 1815, those six years which will for ever be accounted the most glorious in the annals of our country—his ridicule and abuse of the DUKE of WELLINGTON—his being made AID-DE-CAMP to the KING—his being permitted to call himself SIR ROBERT—his vindication of BUONAPARTE, after having established the fact of his being a wholesale murderer—his rescue of that murderer's minister, LAVALETTE—his inveigling the nephew of his patron and protector LORD HUTCHINSON into the scheme—his cheating SIR CHARLES STEWART, the representative of his Sovereign at a foreign Court, out of a passport for this convicted felon, this enemy of his country—his dressing him up in a British General's uniform—his letters to his brother—his trial and imprisonment—the lenity with which he was treated by his own Monarch subsequently—his conduct on the day of the QUEEN'S funeral—his subscription (which all went to pay an honest man his due,) his support of the Popery Bills against the wishes of his Constituents, to whom he pledged himself to resign his seat if his views and theirs differed on the Catholic Question—his contemptuous abandonment and transfer of those constituents to LAMBTON (who still more contemptuously "shammed sick," and would not even dine with them)—his absurd interference in the affairs of SPAIN, after having been rejected by the NEAPOLITANS, in whose cause he had previously volunteered—his erroneous estimation of himself, and the reception he should meet with on the continent—his miscalculations of success, and the result of all his manœuvres, and one is really moved to pity.

There he is, at this moment, in concealment and disgrace, —beaten at all points—removed from the English army; degraded from his foreign honours—wounded for the first time while fighting in defiance of an Act of Parliament passed in his own presence—having saved himself from the penalty of an ignominious death, which doubtless awaited him, by a premature flight from the scene of all his promised glory; for be it never forgotten, such was the force of circumstances, that this HERO, who has given PORTUGAL days and weeks of glory, and who fought at BANOS, made his escape from CORUNNA some fortnight or more before the place surrendered; add to all these the severe domestic calamity, accelerated, it is said, by the wretched state to which he had reduced himself, and little will be wanting to complete the store of sorrow and mortification which he suffers, who, despising the restraints which the best and wisest institutions have imposed upon our passions and feelings, adopts the wild and visionary doctrines of MODERN LIBERALISM and, like the man in the MORNING CHRONICLE, stigmatizes RELIGION as SUPERSTITION, and miscalls REVOLUTION by the sacred name of LIBERTY.

WE last week copied from the MORNING CHRONICLE newspaper, an extract from the last division of LORD BYRON'S DON JUAN, and in so doing, we observed upon the injustice done to the author by making such a selection as that paper had chosen to make. Little did we imagine that the profaneness, vulgarity, and grossness contained in those stanzas were light and little, in proportion to the length of the quotation, when compared with any other part of the work.

Really, really, it is mortifying to see "what a noble mind "is here o'erthrown;" it is miraculous, moreover, that BYRON—the once high minded, high-spirited BYRON—should have sunk into what these last cantos proclaim him to be. We may be said to add to the mischief he attempts, by giving increased circulation to his writings in noticing them—but we doubt the truth of this supposition. We think, when our readers have "tasted of the cup," in the little extracts we shall make, they will feel no desire to "mend their draughts."

We will classify the stanzas we extract—and shall begin with specimens of

ENGLISH FEELING.

The following are addressed to the illustrious WELLINGTON—the saviour of his country—the hero of the world:—

"You are 'the best of cut-throats!'—do not start,
"The phrase is SHAKESPEARE'S, and not misapplied:—
"War's a brain-spattering, windpipe-slitting art,
"Unless her cause by Right be sanctified.
"If you have acted once in a generous part,
"The World, not the World's masters, will decide,
"And I shall be delighted to learn who,
"Save you and yours, have gained by Waterloo?"

To this is added the following, which we extract as an instance of miserable versification in his own style:—

"I don't mean to reflect—a man so great as "You, my Lord Duke! is far above reflection.
"The high Roman fashion too of Cincinnatus,
"With modern history has less connection:
"Though as an Irishman you love potatoes,
"You need not take them under your direction;
"And half a million for your Sabine farm
"Is rather dear!—I'm sure I mean no harm!"

—When as jingles with toes, or us with as, we will admit this to be rhyme. Till then, we can only admire it for its spirit and principle.

The noble author adds, speaking of, and to the DUKE,

"But though your years as man tend fast to zero,
"In fact, your Grace is still but a young hero."

EGOTISM AND CONCEIT.

"But I, the mildest, meekest of mankind,
"Like Moses, or MELANCTHON, who have ne'er
"Done any thing exceedingly unkind,—
"And (though I could not now and then forbear
"Following the bent of body or of mind)
"Have always had a tendency to spare,—
"Why do they call me misanthrope? Because "They hate me, not I them:—and here we'll pause.
"In twice five years the "greatest living poet,"
"Like to the champion in the fisty ring,
"Is called on to support his claim, or show it,
"Although 'tis an imaginary thing.
"Even I—albeit I'm sure I did not know it,
"Nor sought of foolscap subjects to be king,—
"Was reckoned, a considerable time,
"The GRAND NAPOLEON of the realms of rhyme.
"But JUAN was my Memnon, and FALIERO
"My Leipsic, and my Mont Saint Jean seems CAIN:
"'La Belle Alliance' of dunces down at zero,
"Now that the Lion's fall'n, may rise again:
"But I will fall at least as fell my hero;
"Nor reign at all, or as a monarch reign;
"Or to some lonely isle of Jailors go,
"With truncoat SOUTHEY—for my turnkey LOWE.

CONSISTENCY.

Speaking of SOUTHEY, BYRON says,—

"This were the worst assertion:—renegadoes,
"Even a shuffling SOUTHEY, that incarnate lie,
"Would scarcely join again the 'reformadoes,'
"Whom he forsook to fill the Laureate's sty:
"And honest men from Iceland to Barbadoes,
"Whether in Caledon or Italy,
"Should not were round with every breath, nor seize
"To pain, the moment when you cease to please."

Immediately after which of JEFFREY he says this,—

"And all our little feuds, at least all mine,
"Dear JEFFREY, once my most redoubted foe,
"(As far as rhyme and criticism combine
To make such puppets of us things below)
"Are over:—Here's a health to 'Auld Lang Syne!'
"I do not know you, and may never know
"Your face—but you have acted on the whole
"Most nobly, and I own it from my soul."

In order to put my LORD BYRON for above SOUTHEY we will here quote from his Lordship's pen some lines relative to this very JEFFREY, which cannot fail to be particularly interesting at the moment:—

"Health to immortal JEFFREY! once, in name,
"England could boast a Judge almost the same;
"In soul so like, so merciful, yet just,
"Some think that Satan has resigned his trust,
"And given the Spirit to the world again,
"To sentence letters as he sentenced men,
"With hand less mighty, but with heart as black!
"With voice as willing to decree the rack:
"Bred in the Courts betimes, tho' all that law
"As yet hath taught him is to find a flaw,
"Since well instructed in the patriot school
"To rail at party, though a party tool.
"Who knows? if chance his patrons should restore
"Back to the sway they forfeited before,
"His scribbling toils some recompense may meet,
"And raise this DANIEL to the Judgment seat.
"Let JEFFREY'S shade indulge the pious hope,
"And greeting thus: present him with a rope:
"'Heir to my virtues! man of equal mind!
"'Skilled to condemn as to traduce mankind;
"'This cord receive! for thee reserved with care,'"
"To YIELD IN JUDGMENT, and at long'st to wear."

These lines are written by the same LORD BYRON, who accuses MR. SOUTHEY of shuffling, and worse things—but we have not done yet with this consistent Liberal. Hear this:—

"And when I use the phrase of 'Auld Lang Syne'
"'Tis not addressed to you—the more's the pity
"For me, for I would rather take my wine
"With you, than aught (save Scott) in your proud city.
"But somehow—it may seem a school-boy's whine,
"And yet I seek not to be grand nor witty,
"But I am half a Scot by birth, and bred
"A WHOLE ONE, AND MY HEART FLIES TO MY HEAD.—
"As 'Auld Lang Syne' brings Scotland one and all,
"Scotch plaids, Scotch anoods, the blue hills, and clear streams,
"The Dee, the Don, Balgounie's Brig's black wall,
"All my boy feelings, all my gentler dreams
"Of what I then dreamt, clothed in their own pall,
"Like Banquo's offspring;—floating past me seems
"My childhood in this chilnishness of mine:
"I care not—'tis a glimpse of 'Auld Lang Syne.'"

Let these lines be carefully read, let it be observed, that LORD BYRON refers, in them, to his "boy feelings," remember too, that he "is half a Scot by birth," and "a whole one," and then let us read the following passage from his own pen, written now nearly ten years since:—

"——" from fair Phyle's towers,
"Survey Bœotia—CALEDONIA'S ours;
"And well I know, within that bastard land
"Hath Wisdom's goddess never held command;
"A barren soil, where Nature's germs confined
"To stern sterility, can stint the mind;
"Whose thistle well betrays the niggard earth,
"Emblem of all to whom the land gives birth,
"Each genial influence nurtur'd to resist
"A land of meanness, sophistry, and mist!
"Each breeze, from foggy mountand marshy plain,
"Dilutes with drivel, every drizzling brain!
"Till burst at length, each watt'ry head o'erflows,
"Foul as their soil, and frigid as their snows.
"Ten thousand schemes of petulance and pride,
"Despatch her scheming children far and wide;
"Some east, some west, some—every where but forth,
"In quest of lucubrious gain, they issue forth;
"And thus accurs'd," &c. &c. &c.

"Auld Lang Syne" indeed!—these are the words of BYRON—of that BYRON who talks of his "boyish feelings" rewards Scotland—boasts of being two-thirds a Scotsman, and directs SOUTHEY for a turncoat!—but to proceed.

It is said that Republicans and Liberals are the proudest and most tyrannical race in the world. The EARL KING is a splendid specimen—but in the following we have a spice of the aristocrat feeling, bursting through the desire to debase and overturn every thing aristocratic, and gleaming through the blasphemy which pervades the stanzas:—

"She was no hypocrite at least, poor soul,
"And went to heaven in as sincere a way
"As any lady on the Elected Roll,
"Which portions out upon the judgment day
"Heaven's freeholds, in a sort of doomsday scroll,
"Such as the Conqueror William did repay
"His knights with, letting others properties
"Into some sixty thousand new knights' fees.
"I can't complain, whose ancestors are there,
"Knights, Radulphus—eight-and-forty manors
"(If that my memory doth not greatly err)
"Were their reward for following Billy's banners;
"How their reward for following Billy's like tanners;
"And though I can't help thinking 'twas scarce fair
"To strip the Saxons of their hydes like tanners;
"Yet as they founded churches with the produce,
"Yours deem, no doubt, they put it to a good use."

Here the old leaven of pride worketh—would we had nothing worse or more abominable to notice. We apologise to our readers for quoting the following—but we consider it our duty; a steel trap is a frightful instrument, but when suspended on a pole during the day may have the effect of deterring trespassers at night.

"At every jolt—and they were many—still
"He turned his eyes upon his little charge,
"As if he wished that she should fare less ill
"Than he, in these sad highways left at large
"To ruts, and flints, and lovely Nature's skill,
"Who is no paviour, nor admits a barge
"On her canals, where GOD takes sea and land,
"Fishery and furze, both into his hand.
"At least he pays no rent, and has best right "To be the first of what we used to call
"Gentlemen Farmers'—a race worn out quite,
"Since lately there have been no rents at all,
"And 'Gentlemen' are in a piteous plight,
"And 'farmers' can't raise CERES from her fall:
"She fell with BUONAPARTE—What strange thoughts
"Arise, when we see Emperors fall with cats!"

A single comment upon these verses would be insulting as well as unnecessary. For classicality of language and elegance of thought, perhaps the admirers of the "Corsair," the "Bride of Abydos," and similar works, will like to refer to the following:—

"He from the world had cut off a great man,
"Who in his time had made heroic bustle.
"Who in a row like TOM could lead the van,
"Booze in the ken, or at the spelliken hustle?
"Who queer a flat? Who (spite of Bow-street's ban)
"On the high toby-spice so flash the muzzle?
"Who on a lark, with black-eyed SAL (his blowing)
"So prime, so swell, so nutty, and so knowing?"

We might add to these proofs of good taste and propriety the subjoined stanza, which relates to JOHNNY KEATS, one of those who were deluded to ITALY:—

"JOHN KEATS, who was killed off by one critique,
"Just as he really promised something great,
"If not intelligible,—without Greek
"Contrived to talk about the Gods of late,
"Much as they might have been supposed to speak.
"Poor fellow! He was an unlucky fate;
"'Tis strange the mind, that very fiery particle,
"Should let itself be snuffed out by an Article."

There is a degree of kind feeling in this, upon which we need not dilate.

For gentleness and humanity let us quote the following—speaking of BUONAPARTE, he says—

"Let this not seem an anti-climax:—Oh!
"'My Guard! my old guard!' exclaimed that God of Clay,
Think of the Thunderer's falling down below
"Carotid-artery cutting CASTLEREAGH!"

This cold-blooded barbarity has not even the merit of novelty. The following from a married Christian is, perhaps, more characteristic still:—

"And CATHERINE (we must say thus much for CATHERINE)
"Though bold and bloody, was the kind of thing
"Whose temporary Passion was quite flattering,
"Because each lover looked a sort of King,
"Made up upon an amatory pattern,
"A royal husband in all save the ring—
"Which, being the damn'dest part of matrimony,
"Seemed taking out the sting to leave the honey."

For loyalty, decency, or good-feeling, we might extract the personal allusions to the KING, their folly indeed mars their real purpose; even SIR WILLIAM CURTIS, a man universally esteemed in his own circle, a staunch lover of his country, and supporter of its constitution, merely because he is loyal, and has been honoured by that notice which libertine atheists and unprincipled radicals have failed to attract, is vilified and abused now by LORD BYRON, nearly as much as the ruffianly crew of that wholesale magazine of revolutionary bombast and irreligious jargon, the EDINBURGH REVIEW, were by the same lordling at a former period, when they wounded his personal vanity by daring to ridicule his poetry.

It will be remembered upon the same occasion how the Lordling bullied BROUGHAM—called him a "blunderer," and dragged forward that unoffending, peaceable lady, my LADY HOLLAND, while cutting up the Edinburgh people—he has not quite given up her late MAJESTY'S Attorney-General, for though his Lordship mis-spells the word no one can fail to understand the waggery.

"A legal BROOM'S a moral chimney-sweeper,
"And that's the reason he himself's so dirty;
"The endless soot bestows a tint far deeper "Than can be hid by altering his shirt; he
"Retains the sable stains of the dark creeper,
"At least some twenty nine do out of thirty,
"In all their habits:—not so you, I own;
"As CÆSAR wore his robe you wear your gown."

What makes the meaning of this stanza more evident is the fact, that it is addressed to JEFFREY, who is jealous of BROUGHAM or BROOM.

Indeed, we have to apologize for the extent of our quotations, but they appeared inevitable; our readers will give us credit, when we say, that bad, horrible, and disgusting as those are which we have made, the work abounds with language and illustrations which we cannot extract, even for the purpose of exposing their turpitude and their folly. It is, we repeat, galling and mortifying, to see a man who "has it in him" to do great and noble things, thus degrading himself, and debasing his muse, for the lucre of gain, and the praises of the WHIGS.

REVIEW OF THE LATE SESSION OF PARLIAMENT.

MATTER of local and more immediate interest has, for the last two weeks, prevented my pursuing the course of observations which the conduct of the Whigs, during the late Session, has rendered not only necessary, but imperative, upon every man who has the interests of his country at heart.

In resuming the subject, it will be recollected that my last paper was, for the greater part, devoted to a fair and constitutional analysis of the "ROMAN CATHOLIC QUESTION," as opposed to the opinions entertained, or ACTED upon, by the WHIGS, in their estimate of it. When I make this distinction between their professions and their conduct, I am guilty of no gratuitous insinuation against these gentlemen. If, from the difficulty of ascertaining the motives of men, a calm observer of the times were disposed to give the WHIGS credit for the sincerity of the it profe-sions, their mode of proceeding upon this question in the late session—a question which they maintain to be of vital importance to the welfare of the country—is amply sufficient to shew, beyond the power of cavil or controversy, that they are INSINCERE, and UNWORTHY the confidence of their countrymen.

It is not my purpose, nor is it necessary, in referring to events of such recent occurrence, to enter into any details upon the transaction; but the great leading intrigue, of which the disgraceful scenes exhibited within the walls of Parliament were only the petty details, cannot be passed over without notice—and, as a corollary, without condemnation. The ROMAN CATHOLICS, encouraged by the promise of active support on the part of their Parliamentary advocates, had taken all their measures, and prepared to bring forward the question under advantages never before enjoyed, owing to the influence and prudent counsels of a high official character, who had prevented, as far as possible, the ebullition of Roman Catholic zeal, which is apt to break forth and discover its purpose of disposing of the SKIN before the BEAR has fallen into their toils. It is true that this disposition was sufficiently apparent through all the manœuvres of the leaders, to satisfy sober-minded men of the real object and tendency of Roman "Catholic emancipation." But MR. PLUNKETT, and their more cautious auxiliaries had so managed the affair, that having "counted noses," the success of the question, in the Commons at least, was considered CERTAIN—"NO"—say THE WHIGS—after they had pledged their SUPPORT to a GREAT CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTION—"NO; here is a man "against whom we have a grudge for having deserted our "ranks—here is MR. ATTORNEY-GENERAL PLUNKETT, who "though steady and uniform upon THIS QUESTION, has ac- "cepted office under our opponents—shall we support him?— "Forbid it, SPIRIT OF WHIGGERY!—Forbid it, the galling "sense of WHIG INJURIES!—Perish the 'CATHOLIC QUES- "TION,' rather than the vengeance of WHIGGERY should be "unappeased!"—What was the consequence?—They converted the floor of the House of Commons into a bear-garden; and, by a TRICK—which has no parallel but in the instance of the HEADS of the WHIGS moving for a DIVORCE against a woman whom he declared to be WITHOUT SPOT!—surrendered this "GREAT CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTION" into the hands of its opponents—and to an overwhelming majority against it!—After this, shall we be considered uncharitable, unfair, or illiberal, if we repeat the charge re-echoed through every province of the country, that the WHIGS are HYPOCRITES in profession, and blind to every thing but the INTERESTS OF A FACTION, to which they are ready to sacrifice all that THEY THEMSELVES EVEN proclaim to be essential to the prosperity of the country!

Upon the same principle—but with diminished means of carrying on the HUMBUG—began the enquiry into the conduct of the Dublin Magistrates; baffled, defeated, and exposed at every turn, they found themselves, after degrading the Commons House of the Empire to a level with the court at the Old Bailey, further and further from their objects—and were compelled to listen to the compassionate advice of a King's Minister, who opened a door of retreat from impending ignominy and disgrace!

MR. CANNING'S consideration was charitable—but they contrived as usual to incur all the consequences of exposure and defeat. But are there any bounds, we may well ask, to WHIG AMBITION or WHIG EXCESS?—or can we reason, as we do, upon the ordinary course of policy pursued by men in other times or in other places? Failing as these men had done to carry destruction to the throne by sacrificing their own recorded judgment and conviction—their REGISTERED VERDICT against the late unhappy QUEEN, in order to inflame and direct the passions of the people against it, and publishing thereby to the world their abandonment of ALL PRINCIPLE—their desperation has from that period hurried them forward, regardless of character as of consequences, to the adoption of any measure which promised to involve the country in confusion. Of the use made of "Agricultural Distress" we have already spoken—but civil commotion was not of itself sufficient to satisfy the yearnings of accumulated disappointment or to raise their hopes of being called to the councils of their country. Desperate indeed must be our state when the aid of the WHIGS shall be considered, even by the ignorant rabble, necessary to our redemption.

This, even in their wildest phrensy, they saw and admitted; BUT, if to discontent and clamour at home, the government could have been induced to add the cost, the burthen, the taxes, the blood of thousands—the injustice and folly of a foreign war, THEN, indeed, the people, despairing of men in whom they had hitherto reposed their confidence, might have turned in the bitterness of despair to the WHIGS, and have been content to escape utter destruction by resorting as "a forlorn hope" to a system of expediency and intrigue, when the traces of an obvious and upright policy should be lost and obliterated from the councils of the land!

Let any man look fairly and dispassionately at the case.—Here is a political faction, who, during a long and expensive war, clamoured for peace on any terms—who depreciated our resources, and vilified our efforts, when the genius of the country was advancing towards her proud ascendant over the nations of Europe, which she finally consummated at Waterloo!—who preached prudence and parsimony when the POINT OF HONOUR was urged—and opposed the doctrine of expediency to the faith of treaties—who beheld the invasion of half Europe, and the subjugation of whole kingdoms to the yoke of BONAPARTE, not with silent acquiescence in the schemes of the spoiler, but with the enthusiasm of PARTISANS and DEPENDANTS; and who, even in the instance of SPAIN, upon which the fate of this man hung as by a thread, and when every principle of genuine WHIGGISM urged a vigorous effort to snap it, reproached Ministers for the noble efforts made in the cause of a suffering people, under the despotism of a military usurper, charged them with Quixotism in principle, and with folly and presumption in their attempts to resist a man, who would "before the end of a single campaign drive every British sol- dier into the sea!"—Here are these men I say, who have all this plainly and historically recorded against them, not only disclaiming the imputation of inconsistency, but glorying in despising the arguments of their opponents, adopting and adapting the arguments of their opponents, in favor of a "just and necessary war"—to urge a WANTON and UNJUST aggression against FRANCE, no longer the object of idolatry since it lost an usurper and found a King, and by forced inferences, minute criticisms, a perverted construction of official manifestoes, and even verbal subtilties drawn from private correspondence, to infer the justice of hurrying a country, ruined, as they say, by WAR, into a NEW WAR, upon points which, if proved to the utmost of their own inferences, could amount to no admitted or legitimate cause of hostility, and the protext of which, in the WHOLESALE, and as an ORGANISED SYSTEM, THEY upheld and extolled as the triumphant progress of liberal opinions under their IDOL BONAPARTE.

Can we believe them to be more sincere in THIS, than in their professions respecting the CATHOLIC QUESTION?—I answer, Yes;—they are so far sincere, that had their intrigues been successful—had they possessed as much influence, as they certainly had good will to stir up the people of this country to clamour for war, they looked to the overthrow of all the economical arrangements of Ministers—all the retrenchments, which the honesty and good faith of Government had effected, and a speedy return of those happy days, which, amid the casualties and reverses of warfare, afford such glorious matter for diatribes against Government, and such specious arguments for inflaming the passions of the people. They had no character for consistency to maintain, and even should Ministers retort that the WHIGS were the advocates and promoters of war—such men would have no difficulty in converting the very concession to their wishes into an act of criminality—not in point of fact only, for that would be obvious to all; but because Ministers having "better means of information ought to have resisted measures they knew to be prejudicial to the interests of their country, or to have RESIGNED!"

Does the shoe pinch here, Gentlemen—are your own words more pungent by being retorted upon you—or do you imagine the country so besotted and enslaved by the sophistries of your journalists and reviewers as not to be able to unravel the maze of your political labyrinth? Ministers stood manfully at their post—they neither involved the country in a wanton and unnecessary war, nor resigned their offices to those who would have compromised the dignity of the country by acting first as "BULLIES" in involving her in a quarrel, and then as "COWARDS," retreating from a contest which they would have found themselves unequal to conduct. This is in fact a corollary from the opinions expressed by them in Parliament!

Ministers on the contrary saved the country, without descending from the elevation her councils and her arms had attained, from the double penalty of WAR and WHIGGERY—when we look at the Peninsula—when we view the CAUSE and the PERSONS in whose favour the WHIGS would have roused Europe—raised loans, subscriptions, balls, suppers, shoes, and blankets; the farce carried on during the late Session, is infinitely more laughable—if we could dispense with the moral, and forget the malignity of it—than any of the petites pieces translated for the amusement of the cockneys at the minor theatres, or even the patent purveyors of theatrical food for laughter and merriment. WILSON as Quixote; CREEVEY as Sancho; my LORD NUGENT as ——; but, we must not indulge the vein—alas! almost irresistible, to laugh at men, who, under the assumed characters of Statesmen, are really more fitted for the meridian of tea-table gossip—than their usurped position on benches once filled by a FOX, a BURKE, a WINDHAM, and a SHERIDAN. From such men we might dissent—towards such men we might feel political animosity; but they could never be objects of contempt, or be taxed with losing sight of the interests of their country in the gratification of their own petty and paltry schemes of aggrandizement or ambition.

It is not necessary, nor is it consistent with the object of these observations, to enter into the minor episodes and melodrames exhibited by the WHIGS during the late session, but I may venture to appeal to my countrymen upon their general result. Never was there a session in which more was promised and less performed—never were the WHIGS so utterly baffled by circumstances and events, as well as by their own unprincipled and rash mode of proceeding—never did they so utterly fail in every appeal even to the rabble. Compelled, as we have seen, to take side against the great mass of the people, by the overweening pride and appetency for the good things of life among their aristocratic leaders, they denounce the cheapness of provisions as a CURSE, and were only zealous in finding expedients to remedy the evils of PLENTY.

Blinded by party rage, they deserted the "GREAT CAUSE" by which for thirty years they had sworn to abide, in good or evil fortune, and in order to wreak their vengeance on an individual whom they chose to call an apostate—although his recent acts had shewn him sufficiently imbued with the spirit of WHIG PERSECUTION—they abandoned the cause over which they had shed crocodile tears session after session, and thus surrendered so many millions (the blanks to be filled up according to the state of the question) of "persecuted ROMAN CATHOLIC fellow subjects" bound hand and foot at the will of their cruel task masters!!

Advocates of peace—deprecators of hostile aggression—philanthropists, and "friends of the human race"—they found Ministers resolved to act upon the principles which they, it is clear, ONLY PROFESSED—and as the advocacy of poor MR. PLUNKETT, the EX-WHIG, was sufficient to bring down condemnation upon the Roman Catholic cause, the pacific disposition of MINISTERS was more than sufficient to make these men forswear every principle by which they had professed to abide during the whole of the war, and in the face of the country to reproach the GOVERNMENT, and its supporters—THE PEOPLE, for not doing that which had been made the grounds of their previous condemnation, and for declining to enter into war without an object—to the utter confusion of those schemes of prudent retrenchment and economy, which in the same breath almost they had declared to be necessary to our salvation and existence as a nation!

Peace to the shade of departed WHIGGERY!—Should its ghost ever walk—should its spirit ever be again evoked from the shades, it can only be when the waters of oblivion have shed their influence over the senses of the people—or when some emergency shall have arisen to sweep away the good and virtuous portion of our public men, as sacrifices to the Moloch of Jacobinism!—While Britain retains her ascendancy—her moral feeling—her love of justice—her patriotism—her sense of common good, such men can never be the objects of her election as patriots or statesmen. Strong opinions—even violent principles—may be sobered down by official duties—as we well know from experience—but opinions that vary with our interests, and principles that have no fixed point, beyond our personal feelings, although they may carry a few proselytes in each change of position, can never—as the WHIGS have at length found to their cost—inspire confidence, or bring a nation of free men under their influence or control.

PAUL POTTER.

THEATRICALS.

In compliance with our established rule of conduct generally, and with our promise in this case particularly, we submit to our readers in this department of our paper, the charges made by the proprietors of Covent Garden against MR. BRANDON, and his answers thereunto.

"In consequence of the reports which have been circulated relative to the discontinuance of MR. BRANDON as Box and Housekeeper at Covent Garden Theatre, the lessees of that theatre feel it due to themselves to submit to the public the reasons which have induced them to dispense with MR. BRANDON'S services, a disclosure they would willingly have avoided, had not the necessity of it been forced upon them by MR. BRANDON himself.

"When the present lessees took upon themselves the lease and management of the theatre, for the purpose of endeavouring to clear it from the unpleasant situation in which its pecuniary affairs were then involved, they expressly declined to bind themselves to retain any of the servants then employed in the theatre, more particularly the MR. BRANDONS. On examination of the books and accounts of the theatre, as kept by the treasurer, MR. JOHN BRANDON, they were found to be in such an irregular and unsatisfactory state, as to render it absolutely necessary that another treasurer should be immediately appointed, which was the cause of his dismissal.

"The principal causes which have led to the discontinuance of MR. JAMES BRANDON'S services are as follows:

"At the commencement of the present Management, the former custom of paying to MR. BRANDON the weekly wages of various servants of the Theatre was continued, and it was of course supposed that the payments were as regularly made by him. Early, however, in the last season, many of these servants complained that for several weeks their pay had been withheld from them by MR. BRANDON, who, when called upon, denied the fact, but they persisting in the charge, MR. BRANDON ultimately paid them by instalments. It appears that there are still owing to many of the servants of the Theatre, various small sums, which have remained for years unsettled, and which the present Lessees have been anxious to liquidate for the credit of the theatre as well as on account of the distressed circumstances of the parties, but have been unable to procure from MR. BRANDON any account whatever of them, he having at times promised such an account, and at others denied having the means of furnishing it, although he was the person by whom the servants were then paid, and therefore the only one who could give any information on the subject.

"Another ground which rendered the change necessary, was the total neglect of his duty as housekeeper, no controul whatever was exercised over the servants, and in consequence a system of depredation prevailed to the serious injury of the concern.

"A further ground of complaint against MR. BRANDON was the sale by him of a Free Admission to the theatre, in the name of a gentleman who had never authorised him to do so—the produce of which he retained for his own use, and which was proved by the gentleman himself in the presence of MR. BRANDON.

"The Proprietors also accidentally discovered that admissions to the Boxes of the Theatre were selling clandestinely at 5s. each, and they directed one to be purchased, which proved to be a card transferable nightly, but it was of a description the possessor had no title to, and came to him through the medium of MR. BRANDON.

"No information on subjects connected with the Theatre could be obtained by the present Lessees from MR. BRANDON, but on the contrary, there appeared such a constant system of deception, that it entirely destroyed the possibility of confidence in him.

"Innumerable complaints from the most respectable quarters have been made to the Managers, of the difficulty and even impossibility of obtaining boxes, while it was well known that they were not occupied. In fact, it appears to the Managers that without an annual fee to the Boxkeeper, there was very little chance to the Public in general, of obtaining places. To remedy this, the Managers have decided upon a thorough change in the Box-Office, which they trust will prove an effectual accommodation to the public, and it is now arranged that no presents shall in future be received there, conceiving that it ought to be opened to the public, without any partiality whatever.

"It is scarcely necessary to contradict the assertion of MR. BRANDON, that their present Treasurer has purchased the situation of Boxkeeper, further than to avoid the possibility of misconception.

"The above are the principal reasons which have actuated the Managers; but in consideration of MR. BRANDON'S long service, and of his time of life, the present lessees offered to him an annual allowance to be paid solely at their charge, of 150l. during the period of their lease, although in their capacity of lessees he had only been since the 11th of March, 1822, in their service, leaving it at the expiration of that term to the general Proprietary of the Theatre to take his case into consideration, and to act as might then be thought proper.

"Every accommodation was offered to MR. BRANDON, with regard to his removal; he, however, ultimately rejected their offers, and refused to quit their premises, repossessing himself of them by force, and maintaining them by means of a party consisting principally of discharged servants of the Theatre.

"This course of proceeding was adopted by the advice of MR. GEO. ROBINS, a Proprietor and one of the Committee of Drury-lane Theatre, who has publicly stated that 'he acted for MR. BRANDON—that every thing was done by his advice—that he was his friend—that he would support him—that he should not be in want of money—and that he would listen to no treaty about MR. BRANDON, but with the house over his head.'

"The Lessees therefore submit, whether under all these circumstances, they could, with a due regard to the accommodation of the public, and to the security of immense property under their controul, continue MR. BRANDON in a situation so important, and affecting so deeply their interests, and those of every person connected with the Theatre.

"The Lessees feel that no stronger proof of the correctness of their conclusion respecting MR. BRANDON can be adduced, than his letter dated the 26th, published in the Morning Papers of the 27th inst.

"The managers cannot conclude this statement without expressing their sincere regret that it has been forced upon them, but they rely confidently on the justice of the public, that it cannot be expected they should sacrifice to the decision of MR. ROBINS, one of the Committee of the rival theatre, that controul over their own servants, which is the undoubted right of every person; nor that they should be forced to continue in their employ, at the command of one without the slightest title to interfere in their concerns, a man whom they consider to have entirely forfeited their confidence.

"Theatre Royal, Covent Garden, Aug. 31."

To this statement, the following is MR. BRANDON'S reply:

"ANSWER TO THE FIRST CHARGE.

"1st PART.—To this MR. BRANDON replies they were paid by him most regularly.

"2d PART.—The whole of this statement is false—for the beginning of the last season, every servant was paid by the Treasurer. MR. BRANDON'S duty extended no further than to verify the accuracy of the accounts.

"3d PART.—In reply to this charge, I state that every one of these accounts were delivered to the Proprietors when they took possession of the books and other papers. They have subsequently destroyed many papers and probably these amongst the number.

"4TH PART.—In consequence of MR. ROBERTSON'S having stated that he would pay all those servants who were in arrear after I had examined the accounts, I did on the 14th of July certify to the correctness of the same, and they were then delivered to the Treasurer.

"Why these persons have not been paid since the 14th July remains with the Proprietors to account for.

"I also beg to state, that from the commencement of the Lessees' career, in the middle of the season before last, until the close of that season, I paid the servants of the Theatre as I had been accustomed to do, and as I received the money from the Treasury: agreeably to my list delivered in, to I paid it, and I will challenge and defy any man living to say to the contrary. If they can, let them accuse me before a Magistrate, or confirm the degradation which the Lessees have endeavoured to put upon me by a public manifestation (in the newspapers, as that is the method by which they prefer attacking me) of the names of the persons whom I have so defrauded. I repeat that I challenge them to do so if they can; and next, let me state that at their commencement a list of all debts owing by the Theatre was delivered to the Lessees, among which was one sum of 397l. 13s. 4d. for servants' and the band—arrears of wages, which I should have paid had I ever received the money from the Treasury; but as I never had received it, the servants and band had so much due to them, as, no doubt, the Solicitor of the Theatre can certify, since it was to that Gentleman that the list of debts was delivered: and if MR. ROBERTSON will presume to say that any servant, or any person whatever, can assert the money is due to them which is not included in that sum of 397l. 13s. 4d. and that I have charged it to the Treasury, I shall then deserve the distinction awaiting a most public exposure, and demand the punishment I deserve if due to the offence; and much rather do I think I should deserve it than the annuity they pretend to have offered me. Last season, Sir, all payments were made from the Treasury direct to the servants and band; consequently, I presume that it exonerates me from any imputation during that period; and although I believe many servants are still unpaid by Capt. FORBES, MR. WILLETT, and MR. CHARLES KEMBLE, the money so due to them will be found included in the sum of 397l. 13s. 4d. above stated. And this is my reply to this foul charge, as far as the limits of a Newspaper will allow me.

"ANSWER TO THE SECOND CHARGE.

"In reply to this charge, I have to state that I always performed my duty with zeal, and to the best of my ability, and to the perfect satisfaction of the former management; but, during the whole of last season, the new managers took all authority from me, and placed it in the hands of MR. ROBERTSON, for whenever I had any cause to complain of the servants of the theatre, the reply was "MR. ROBERTSON has given me orders." One proof I will adduce, which is in the case of a lamp man of the name of "Gwilt," who was in a state of intoxication, two nights following, during the performance of the VISION OF THE SUN. MR. FARLEY complained to me of the circumstance, and in consequence I discharged him. MR. ROBERTSON applied to MR. FARLEY, and "Gwilt" was reinstated, and I verily believe it was done merely out of opposition to me.

"ANSWER TO THE THIRD CHARGE.

"The charge of having sold a free admission to the theatre without any authority from the lady whose property it was, arose entirely from a misunderstanding between the lady's brother and myself, upon which an explanation took place some months ago in the treasury, when it was settled that the nomination of the above gentleman should be confirmed for the season, and the money for which I had sold the admission should be paid into the treasury.

"ANSWER TO THE FOURTH CHARGE.

"To this I reply—That a Gentleman made an arrangement in the year 1784, with the late MR. HARRIS, by cancelling two Annual Admissions for one nightly one, which of course entitles him to the use and privilege of a transferrable admission. This privilege has descended to his son, a Proctor of the first respectability in Doctors' Commons; in the just exercise of his authority this admission was sold nightly, and on the evening in question the Lessees thought fit to stop it.

"ANSWER TO THE FIFTH CHARGE.

"In answer to this charge—Whenever Capt. FORBES and MR. C. KEMBLE applied to me for any information, I unhesitatingly gave it them to the best of my ability. And as to the allegation that there was 'a constant deception apparent to them,' I answer I never used any, and I cannot divine or conceive how that which never existed can be apparent to them, or to any one else.

"THE SIXTH CHARGE.

"The next charge is that of general injustice and partiality to the public.

"I can only say that any person living, holding my situation, will be liable to this charge from all that part of the public who do not get places to their mind. As the house contains but 12 side boxes, which are to be divided nightly among the numerous frequenters of the theatre against 80 boxes much inferior, I humbly submit to the impartial part of the community, whether I have not a nice line to draw, as to who should have those places on crowded nights, which, however, I lament to say, has not been the case during the present management, for the great difficulty has generally been as to whom I could get to fill them. But I solemnly declare that I never did receive a bribe in the discharge of my public duty, or ever knew what it was to distribute the property committed to my care in any other way than was consistent with the convenience of the public, and with the advantage of my employers. This charge is evidently intended to excite the ill will of the public against me, in case all other calumnies should fail; and like the Quaker, who cried out his dog was mad, because he could not get the animal a name bad enough to hang, they have calculated on getting me knocked on the head unheard and unpitied.

"With more thanks than I can ever repay, for trespassing so long upon your patience, I commit myself to the kindness of that public, to whose generosity alone I have to look, at my advanced period of life, for a good name and my future support. "J. W. B."

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Duke of York arrived in town on Thursday, and transacted business at his Office in the Horse-Guards.

The Duke of Brunswick and suite arrived at Dover from Calais on Wednesday last. His Highness remained at Wright's hotel that night, and arrived in town late on Thursday night.

The Duke of Wellington and suite landed at Dover from Calais, on Tuesday last. His Grace, after taking dinner at Wright's Hotel, left at six o'clock for London, under a salute from the guns at the Heights.

On Tuesday despatches, transmitted by an estafette, by way of Dover, were received at the Foreign Office, Downing-street.

The Gazette of Tuesday night does not contain a single bankruptcy.

THE ARMY.—General Order, Horse Guards, Aug. 28.—With reference to the General Order of the 8th of November, 1821, the Commander in Chief has been pleased to direct, that, in future, the establishment of each Regimental Band throughout the Service shall be a Serjeant (Master) and fourteen Musicians; but, in granting this indulgence, it is his Royal Highness's express command, that the strong prohibition contained in that Order, against any excess of the prescribed numbers, shall be strictly applied to the establishment now authorised. By command of his Royal Highness the Commander in Chief.

H. TORRENS, Adjutant-General.

Horse Guards, Aug. 30.—When Regimental Officers wear their great coats, they are, for the sake of convenience, permitted to wear their swords, slung outside the great coat, with a black leather waist belt.—It is, however, to be distinctly understood, that this indulgence is not to be resorted to on any other occasion—that the waist belt shall be perfectly uniform, of the plainest and most economical pattern; and having no ornaments, beyond the usual rings and buckles, with a clasp in front bearing the number of the Regiment. By command of his Royal Highness the Commander in Chief.

H. TORRENS, Adjutant-General.

On Friday the New Docks, at Sheerness, were opened in presence of the Duke of Clarence, the Earl of Liverpool, Lord Viscount Melville, Mr. Croker, Sir Byam Martin, and Sir George Cockburn. The Howe, pierced for 130 guns, was selected as the most fit to put the works to the test. The arrangement of the whole ceremony was under the care of Sir Byam Martin and Mr. Croker. Captain Jackson, the Officer commanding the ships in ordinary, made the most judicious arrangements to maintain order among the numerous small boats which crowded the bay. At half-past ten the Caisson, which guards the entrance to the docks, was removed, and the Howe commenced moving in, the band playing the National Anthem, whilst the flow of the tide, taking the ship in stern, carried her gallantly into the basin. By half-past 11 the ship was moored alongside the south bank of the basin. The Hercules, a 74, was then sent into the basin, and thence to one of the three docks which branch from it. The party returned on board, where they dined. Lord Melville sat at the head of the table, with the Duke of Clarence on his right and the Earl of Liverpool on his left. At half-past three his Royal Highness left the Howe and went on board the Regent, where he remained for some time. On leaving that ship a royal salute was fired. A vast concourse of visitors thronged Sheerness, to witness the inviting spectacle.

On Wednesday a Court of Directors was held at the East India House, when the following ships were taken up, viz., Princess Amelia, Marquis of Huntly, and Astell. The outward-bound ship Kellie Castle, was all well at sea on the 29th March.

It is understood that by a new regulation the Masters of ships of war are in future to have the charge of the Warrant Officers' stores, with an increase to their pay for such additional responsibility.

It is stated that a check was paid by Messrs. Fuller and Co. a few days ago, under the following circumstances:—It had been originally drawn for 3l., which sum, by means of some chemical process, was discharged, and 200l. inserted instead. A question has arisen whether the loss should fall upon the bankers or the drawers of the check. Some bankers have adopted an effectual mode of preventing such frauds, and which should be brought into general use. The check containing the names, &c. of the firm, is printed on coloured paper, so that any attempt to take out the ink by a chemical process would remove the colour also.

The following circumstance is a remarkable instance of the contagion of the yellow fever:—A young Englishman, who came to St. Thomas's with a young and beautiful countrywoman, whom he had secretly married, was attacked by the yellow fever. When the disease was at its height, and the symptoms of inevitable death become apparent, the young woman, in despair, and determined not to survive the object of her affections, undressed herself entirely, and placed herself by the side of her dying husband in bed, embracing his body. She remained for ten hours in this situation, and was with difficulty removed after he had breathed his last. She did not experience the slightest symptom of the disease.—Courier.

On Thursday an investigation took place before the Magistrates at Greenwich, respecting the murder of Mr. Smith, at Lewisham, for which Coleman was executed. Thomas Timothy had been examined on Tuesday last, charged with being one of the murderers. After Timothy's examination a warrant was granted for the apprehension of Webster, one of the men, amongst others, named by Coleman in his confession in Maidstone Gaol. This Webster, soon after the murder was perpetrated, was arrested on suspicion of being one of the murderers, but for want of sufficient evidence he was set at liberty, and has been at large ever since. It being well known that Webster and the Noah's Ark, Deptford, Bowditch the constable kept watch for him all night, and about seven o'clock on Wednesday morning he went to enter the house, and thereupon seized him upon the charge altered in the warrant. When taken he appeared to be undaunted, and exclaimed "What, am I wanted again." When brought before the Magistrate the evidence of Conlay and his wife, Whittle, foreman in the Patent Ship-builders at Deptford, Anne White (alias Swedish Hannah), and Ann Steele (who lived with Coleman,) was adduced, after which Timothy, the prisoner, was interrogated for nearly two hours, in private, and it is said he made a full confession against Webster and several others.—The prisoner, Webster, was then brought into the presence of the Magistrate, and the testimony of the various witnesses were read over to him, and he was asked what he had to say in his defence, the Magistrate cautioning him to beware, lest he should criminate himself.—Webster protested his innocence of the crime, and was ready to meet any consequences that might befal him.—He was then fully committed to take his trial for the murder; and Timothy was again remanded.

The French ship Gustave, Capt. Moree, of 200 tons burden, when about two leagues from Alderney, was captured by the Tartar privateer, mounting 10 guns, and having a crew of 30 men. The privateer hoisted the English flag, and when Capt. Moree was thus deceived within a short distance, the Spanish flag was substituted; two shots were then fired, but fortunately without effect, when the Gustave struck. The crew consisted of nine men, a boy, and three passengers, five of whom, and the boy remained on board the prize, and the others were put on board a Norway vessel bound to Jersey, where Captain landed them there on his way. The cargo consists of cotton, Campeachy wood, &c which, with the ship, is estimated at 30,000 francs (upwards of 20,000l.) The Gustave sailed from Calais to St. Domingo, on the 13th of July last, and was bound to Havre de Grace. The privateer proceeded for Teneriffe.

On Thursday evening last, about seven o'clock, as the Rev. C. W. Ethelston, one of the fellows of the collegiate church in Manchester, was passing through Old Millgate in a gig towards his residence at Cheetham-hill, the stretcher that supports the chains of a double horse-cart, came in contact with one of the wheels, which pitched him out with such violence as to break his right arm in two places, and fractured severely the outer plate of the skull. The Rev. gentleman was taken to the house of Mr. White, in the Old Shambles, and medical relief was immediately resorted to. Though the reverend gentleman passed a very restless night on Sunday last, we are happy to learn that he is altogether in as favourable a state as can possibly be expected from the severity of the accident which he has sustained.

Monday morning last, between the hour of six and seven, near Battle, it appears that the sitting-house, near the powder-mills, between Crowhurst and Battle, belonging to Mr. Lawrence, blew up with a tremendous explosion, whereby two men were killed; their bodies were found some considerable distance from where the unfortunate accident took place. One man, named Heachin, had six children in the mill upwards of 40 years. The other man's name is Bores.

The Ship public-house at Barking, Essex, belonging to Mr. W. Crook, was broken open late on Tuesday night or early on Wednesday morning, by some fellows who broke the window-shutters, and having got into the tap-room, forced the bar-door off its hinges, and then broke open the bureau in the bar, from which they took a family watch, and a great quantity of crowns, shillings, sixpences, and twopences of the late king's reign; also a bag of farthings, and a quantity of bad coin which had been placed there.

A few days since W. Hargrave, about 23 years of age, of diminutive stature, was committed to the gaol of Canterbury, for an attempt to strangle his own mother. And as Mr. Henry Thomas, late collector of taxes, was standing on the quay at Dover, in conversation with others, he was suddenly seized with a fit, and fell on board a vessel from the height of 20 feet. Medical assistance was immediately procured: he was brought on shore in an apparently lifeless state, conveyed home, and died.

At Pooley, near Penrith, Cumberland, as Christopher Wilson, Esq. of Fenchurch-street, was sailing on Thursday evening with a party of ladies on Ullswater Lake, in the act of drawing the charge from one of the barrels of his gun, with which he had been shooting, the contents of the other barrel were lodged in his left side. On being taken to the ice, medical assistance was procured, but he died in a few minutes.

On Monday evening as Mr. Vining, of Hampstead Marsh, was returning home from a shooting party at Mediscot, Herts, in his gig, the horse became restive a short distance from Bushey, ran the gig up a bank, and overturned it with great force, and Mr. Vining was killed.

The Protestant Episcopal Church at East Shefford, Upper Canada, was destroyed by fire on the evening of the 15th of July. It was discovered about 11 o'clock, and so rapid was the progress of the flames, that in about a quarter of an hour after being first observed the tower fell outwards, followed in a short time afterwards by the roof and walls of the building.

LATEST NEWS.

Paris papers down to Thursday have arrived, but they do not bring any further intelligence respecting Cadiz. Every attempt at negociation, hitherto with the Cortes, has failed. The letter of the Duke d'Angoulême to Ferdinand was transmitted by his Royal Highness's Aide-de-Camp on the 21st ult.; and the result might have been known at Paris by telegraph, long before Wednesday last. The Aide-de-Camp was received in Cadiz with every mark of civility, and, we are assured, upon good authority, was admitted to the presence of the King. His Royal Highness limited the period for returning an answer to his letter, to five days. This communication reached Ferdinand on the 21st, and from the total silence upon the subject in all the Paris papers, as well as from other causes, we have every reason to believe that no favourable reply has been given. The siege of Pampeluna will commence ere the 5th of this month. The blockade of Santona becomes daily more rigorous.

PORT ST. MARY, Aug. 25.—Our forces in the vicinity of Cadiz, both by land and sea, increase every moment. The moderate party has made Riego sensible that his presence at the Isle de Leon was not of the slightest utility to the revolutionary cause, and that danger might result to himself: Riego has quitted Cadiz.

A letter was received by a gentleman in the City late last night, from Paris by express, dated on Thursday evening, which says:—"Many reports are afloat, among others, that an attack had been made upon the fort of Trocadero, which proved unsuccessful, and was attended with great loss of lives. No recent accounts had been received from Port St. Mary's."—In a postscript, the writer states, "The life of Admiral Ballare Cadiz is changed—that the foregoing news gained ground, and that the loss on each side was great, and this had occasioned much gloom."

THE ARMY.—The Adjutant-General transacted business with the Commander-in-Chief, Friday and yesterday, at York-House. It is supposed that Major-General Sir George Murray, K.C.B. and G.C.H. will succeed to the Colonelcy of the 42d Regiment, vice General Earl of Hopetoun, G.C.B., deceased.

An immense quantity of corn has been reaped during the last three days, and if the weather continue fine, there will be little impediment to the sportsmen in the course of the ensuing week, as there will be little corn standing.

Messrs. Graham and Harris (the former failed at White Conduit House in ascending with his balloon) ascended on Friday night in a balloon, iron a timber-yard in Berwick-street, Soho, taking the direction of Kent; they descended in a turnip-field between Stroud and Rochester, in safety; from thence they arrived in town yesterday morning at an early hour.

Yesterday, as one of the female performers in Pike's show, at Bartholomew Fair, was dressing, her clothes caught a candle which was burning; she jumped among the crowd, which extinguished the flames, but she was dreadfully burnt, and was conveyed to St. Bartholomew's Hospital.

Yesterday morning about three o'clock, a fire broke out at a trunk maker's in Chancery-lane, which consumed the premises, and a law-stationer's adjoining shared the same fate.

At Guildhall, yesterday, William Thomas Taywood was charged, under Mr. Martin's Act, with cruelly ill-using a sheep. The fact was proved, and he was fined 20s.

At Bow-street, yesterday, William Bottom was placed at the bar under the following suspicious circumstances:—The driver of the Independent stage coach, from Southampton, arrived in town on the evening of the 13th of August, and gave Edward Carter, a man employed at the Bear, Piccadilly, three letters to put in the twopenny post, one of which he had received at Staines from a horse-dealer, containing 50l. in five pound notes; the map, Carter, gave the three letters to the prisoner, whom he desired to run with them to the letter box, the corner of Albemarle-street, the prisoner went, was gone about three minutes, returned, and said he had put them in; however, in the course of a few days it turned out the one containing the 50l. never reached its destination, consequently an inquiry was instituted, which led to the taking of Bottom and Carter into custody. No evidence being produced sufficient to criminate Edward Carter, he was dismissed from the bar, and his statement received to establish the fact against Bottom.—In his defence Bottom called heaven to witness that he had placed the letters in the box at the corner of Albemarle-street; but from the testimony of the several witnesses the Magistrate could not do otherwise than send him to trial; he was therefore fully committed for trial.

Since the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced officially in the House of Commons that Government had determined to abolish Lotteries, the demand for Tickets and Shares at Fidding and Cock's Office has been greater than was ever experienced before; this, however, is partly attributable to the cheap prices at which they are selling, though it is not to be wondered at, that, now it is known there is a limitation of opportunities, every one is anxious to have a "Farewell Venture," and as the time is so near at hand, (25th of This Month,) when the First-drawn Prize is to have £10,000 extra, it is perfectly natural that the recollection of PIDDING'S Success should guide the Purchasers to the Lucky Corner, No. 1, Cornhill.

PRICE OF STOCKS AT THE CLOSE, SATURDAY.

During the past week but little has occurred in the British Securities to notice. The arrival of intelligence that the negociations between the Duke d'Angouleme and the Cortes had been broken off, has had the effect of depressing Consols for Account having been as low as 82¼.—Colombian Bonds have been down to 42, but have risen 10 per cent. Chili Bonds have also been on the rise; but the Poyais bubble may be considered as destroyed. Consols for Account closed at 82¾.

The Seventh Edition of MR. M'ADAM ON ROADS, is in the press, and will contain, besides much original matter, the Report of the Committee of last Session on Mr. M'Adam's claims, &c.—The benefit which the country will derive from the facts elicited by the Committee in the course of their labours, are of the highest importance, as tending to shew that the system cannot be used to advantage unless every part be adopted —The very unostentatious manner in which this discovery was made known to the public, the apparent simplicity of the mechanical part of the system, and its unfailing success, offered inducements to a host of imitators. In most cases these attempts have failed, in some essential point; particularly the most important, namely, economy; while the imperfections of the present Road Laws, render every exertion for their improvement liable to be wrested to the purposes of private interest. The evidence produced before the Committee has placed these facts in the strongest light.—An additional chapter will be found in the seventh edition, containing remarks on the plan which the Committee mention with approbation for converting the pavements of towns into stoned roads, and also some farther attempts at explaining the original system.

HEATHER on the PRESENT STATE of PIANO FORTE STUDY.—Just published, by H. Falkner, 3, Old Bond-street, a new edition of the above Work, price 10s. 6d.

"Mr Heather sets out with a preface, which, we confess, strongly biassed us in his favour; it is modestly written, and sensibly written, but it also shows that the author thinks and feels rightly on the subject of which he treats. We regret that our Bulls prevent us from giving an extract of his judicious observations on practice, expression, &c.; they are eminently worthy of the serious attention of every Pupil that wishes to be a proficient in the art. In the work itself we met with many occasional remarks, which equally shewed the author's good sense, the justness of his views, and, we may add, considerable experience in the art of instruction."—Vide Musical Review.

A MARRIED CLERGYMAN, A.M., resident on his Benefice, in a beautiful and healthy country, receives Four Pupils into his house whom he prepares for the Universities and Learned Professions. The most respectable references can be given to Gentlemen who have entrusted their sons to his care.—Apply to the Rev. B. Cole, Warbleton Parsonage, near Uckfield, Sussex.

EDUCATION.—A Member of the University of Cambridge, highly graduated, who has long educated young gentlemen, will have VACANCIES for THREE PUPILS at Michaelmas next. Terms, 120l. Latin, Greek, Verse Education, Composition, Mathematics, French, German, Italian, Books, Stationery, &c. 100 Guineas, and five guineas entrance. Pupils received into this school from Harrow, Charterhouse, &c. to finish their education, have, in every instance, been two or three years behind pupils received early. But as references will be given that will satisfy the most intelligent and anxious enquiries, it is only necessary to say this school is conducted on a plan that supplies pupils with the means of obtaining a classical, mathematical, and scientific education but little inferior to our Universities, and with domestic comforts equal to home. Letters, post paid, to D. D. Andrews' Library, 167, New Bond-street, where Prospectuses may be had gratis.

THE Advertiser is desirous of placing his Son with a Gentleman who undertakes the Education of Youth, he must on no account be an Author, or have any other engagement, unless he is a Clergyman of the Established Church; his number of pupils must be limited to four. The Advertiser is thus particular, from having unfortunately placed two sons with gentlemen who were frequently occupied, the one as an author and translator, and the other in partnership in other public business, which rendered it impossible for them to pay the necessary attention to their professions, he therefore requests no one will apply who leaves any part of the management to ushers, or who cannot give his own personal attention.—Letters (post paid) directed for A. B. Post Office, Gerrard street, Soho, shall be attended to, unless the Advertiser has previously made an engagement.

PRIVATE EDUCATION; particularly recommended to the attention of Guardians and the Friends of young Ladies from the East and West Indies. The Lady of a Clergyman of the Established Church, having two daughters to Educate, proposes taking a small select number of young Ladies, who will participate in every advantage and attention bestowed upon her own children, and who, if required, may find a comfortable and permanent home. The establishment will be conducted upon the entire plan of private education. The situation is both healthy and pleasant; and from its vicinity to a large city, derives the advantage of the very best masters of every description. The most careful attention will be paid to health, morals, and manners; and the most respectable references given. For further particulars, address by letter, (post paid) to A.B. No. 8, Regent-street, London.

EDUCATION.—At a Finishing Establishment, near the Regent's Park, the most advantageous plan is pursued for the attainment of a liberal and Polite Education; and to Parents who are desirous that their Children should acquire a competent knowledge of the French language, without the inconveniencies inseparable from a foreign education, an opportunity presents for placing them where there is a Parisian Lady residing of great talents and respectability. Professional Gentlemen, of the highest celebrity, give Lessons in Italian, Drawing, Dancing, the Harp, &c.; and the Studies are under the superintendence of a Lady who has been finishing Governess in several families of distinction. Terms, 40 Guineas per Annum, and 60 Guineas including accomplishments. No extras, and a month's vacation only at Midsummer and Christmas. References will be given and required.—Letters to be addressed, post paid, E. H. Calf's Library, Edgeware-road; or Mr. Chappell's, music seller, New Bond-street.

A DAY SCHOOL.—An Old Established School in the City to be DISPOSED OF immediately, with 6 years' lease unexpired. Satisfactory reasons for leaving will be given. For particulars apply at 75, Newgate-street.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, SEPT. 8.—We announced that an English vessel, coming from Gibraltar, had presented itself to the French fleet blockading Cadiz, after having saluted his Majesty's flag. The Captain of this ship and a Secretary immediately landed on the coast, and requested to be conducted to the head-quarters to pay their respects to the Prince Generalissimo. The Secretary was Sir W. A'Court, he came to offer a capitulation under the mediation of England. The Prince answered, that the delay which he had allowed for negociations having expired, he should trust for the issue to the valour of the French arms and the justice of the cause which the King had sent him to defend. The bombarding of Pampeluna began on the 2d September.

The Moniteur of the 9th instant contains an Official Bulletin from Marshal Lauriston of a successful attack on two of the suburbs of Pampeluna. It is dated Orcoyone, Sept. 4.—"Yesterday, the 3d of Sept. the 7th Division, provisionally commanded by General Janien, and composed of the three light regiments, the 6th, 9th, and 14th of the line, was placed before the suburbs of Rochecappea and La Madeleine. It was charged with this attack, which was supported by the fire and the attacks of the 20th Light Regiment, of the 33d and 40th of the division Picheux, and by a part of the Spanish troops, as well as by some batteries. The attack began at half-past five, and at half-past seven the two suburbs were occupied by our troops, who carried, by storm, houses that were crenated and entrenched, with a courage truly extraordinary; and, notwithstanding a shower of grape shot, they had to mount, exposed, up to those houses; and as this side of the town is very thick, I could not have this attack supported except by some batteries of mortars and howitzers placed at a distance of four or five hundred toises. Two houses, which are the Convent of St. Peter on one side, and the White House on the road to Tolosa, being crenated and entrenched, he attempted to defend them obstinately; some breaches which were made by two pieces, one 8-pounder and a 16-pounder, sufficed to make him evacuate them promptly. I could not hope so speedy a result from an attack which was rendered very difficult by the situation of the batteries of the place, on the side of Rochecappea. Our troops were obliged to cut down the doors of all these houses with hatchets, so strongly were they barricadoed. They entrenched themselves in them. The fire of the musquetry continued till half-past nine. The enemy kept up a continual fire of grape upon our troops, and threw many bombs and rockets against our columns; the division of Picheux on its side carried the redoubt and the prison, which was taken possession of by General Fernig, with the 40th Regiment and the grenadier companies of the Regiment of the Infant Don Carlos. This redoubt was formerly an iron-work, it is at present only a lunette, 200 toises from the fortress. General Pecheur has driven the enemy from all the posts that he occupied without, so that the engineers can make their reconnoissances quite at their ease. Measures have been immediately taken to entrench several posts, that the enemy might not be able to send out any soldier in the night nor disturb our engineer officers. The object of the attack has been completely attained, though our troops were obliged to attack, being continually exposed, an enemy protected by the fire of the musquetry of the town, and by his batteries loaded with grape. But nothing is impossible to such troops. The attack of the two suburbs was conducted with extraordinary vigour by Viscount Janini, provisionally commanding the division. It was General Quinsonas who attacked and carried the suburb of La Madeleine. General Daurinc ut, with a battalion of the 20th Regiment, supported by an attack in flank, that which was directed against the White House, by the 3d Light Regiment of the 7th Division, led by General de Tressan, and its Colonel, M. de St. Gillen, who was wounded there."

HEAD-QUARTERS, SAINT MARIE, AUG. 31.—Telegraphic Despatch, transmitted from Bayonne:—The Major-General to the Minister of War:—At three-quarters past two o'clock, the Trocadero was carried with the greatest vigour, in sight of the Duke d'Angoulême. The enemy had about 150 men killed, and 250 wounded; we made 900 prisoners, and took more than 50 pieces of cannon in the batteries.—Moniteur.

ARMY OF THE PYRENEES.—Report of the Major-General to the Minister at War, dated Puerto Santa Maria, Aug. 28. By the conclusion of the convention with Gen Ballesteros, Gen. Andreso Quaglene, Constitutional Commander of the fort of Penas de Sampredo, situated near the Great communication of Madrid with Murcia and Valencia, and the provinces of Chincella, Cuenca, Guadalaxara, and Ciudad Real, has given in his submission, as well as the troops under his command. The orders of Gen. Ballesteros have not had the same result. At Carthagena and at Alicant it was impossible for the officers with the flag of truce to gain admission.

General Molitor has ordered General Bonnemains, who was at Roza, to set off for Malaga, and on his route by Almeira to scour the coast; at the same time he is going to push General Lowerdo from Grenada on Malaga, where the remainder of the corps of Zayas still is, and it is said he has embarked and has been replaced by Riego, who is animating the public spirit, but as yet produced little effect. Not one of the officers of the Etat-Major of Zayas would serve under his orders, and have demanded of Gen. Molitor their submission to Gen. Vinfort, who is still at Murcia, On the 16th of this month he set off in pursuit of Torrijos, who left Carthagena with 500 men for Tolana, on the line of operations between Murcia and Lorca. The inhabitants of Tolana, at the approach of our troops, took up arms and drove away Torrijos, causing him a considerable loss. They continue, with great activity, the preparations against Cadiz. All means are employed to augment the flotilla to 42 boats, during which time they are occupied in making the necessary reconnoissances for the future operations.

Count Admiral Hamelin, owing to his bad state of health, which no longer permitted him to command the squadron, has been succeeded by Count Admiral Rosamel.

(Signed) Count GUILLEMINOT.

There is also a report from the Duke Conegliano to the Minister of War, dated Torredembarra, August 30th, of an affair at Altafulla; he states our loss was 17 killed and 86 wounded. It is certain that the enemy's loss, on the 27th and 28th, was 100 men, and more than 300 wounded.

MADRID, Sept. 2.—The movement of General Bourck to cut off the retreat of the Constitutional troops coming from Orense, has been attended with great success. The enemy has sent a flag of truce with propositions. Government has received news from Cadiz of the 27th of August. The King and Royal Family were in good health. The King took an airing, a vast number of persons went out to see him, and the acclamations were general, with "Vive le Roi," without the epithete of "Constitution."—General Valdes, alarmed at these transports of joy, advanced his troops against the multitude; but no other accident happened except the death of a boy. General Bonnemains has marched to Malaga, to drive away Riego; and it is reported that this famous revolutionist has saved himself by going to Africa.—St. Sebastian has provisions for the month of September only; Santona is better supplied.—Pampeluna, which is furiously bombarded, defends itself well. There are 7,000 men before that place. The sick and wounded are sent to Tolosa and Ernani, to be forwarded to France. The three provinces and Navarre have protested against any arrangement with the Cortes which overthrow their privileges.—General Molitor had not quitted his positions in the kingdom of Grenada on the 26th, though his presence before Cadiz would be so desirable; and this, perhaps, has given rise to a report that the submission of Ballesteros was only a suspension of arms, and that it is possible he may recommence hostilities. Zayas still occupied Malaga, and the positions of Ronda and Marbella; his guerillas sometimes shew themselves near Ecija. The right of the Guadalquiver is infested by Constitutional Guerillas, whose point d'appui is Badajoz.—That place also sends out parties into the province of Madrid, and keeps up a communication with Ciudad Rodrigo. The uneasiness excited by these circumstances is heightened by reports that Lopez Banos is at Talavera with 6000 men, and threatens the capital, while Castel dos Rios and Amor have shewn themselves at Aranjuez and the Pardo. Those alarms have been relieved by the junction of Morillo with the French, and the taking of Corunna. The Duke of Reggio has sent orders to General Bourck to detach immediately 3000 men to Estremadura, by way of Almarez.—The Regency has given orders narrowly to watch all foreigners residing in this capital, especially the English.—The total amount of the French army in Spain, including the fourth corps on the 15th inst:—Infantry, 69,160—Cavalry, 9200—Total, 75,360. The sick and wounded are rated to be 9140.

SEPT. 3.—On arriving at Malaga, Riego issued a proclamation, in which he announced that he came to make the French, and the slaves of the French, bite the dust. Soon after he caused Generals Zayas, Aradia, Zarco del Valle, the Governor Aguilar, as well as several other officers, to be arrested. The prisoners were taken on board the frigate Commuera, where they had as companions in misfortune the Archdeacons Asenjo, Ximenes, Peres, and Calvo. The convents of St. Dominic, St. Francis, St. Peter d'Alicantara, and the Capuchins, were surrounded, and the monks who could not escape were sent on board the frigate. Even the nuns were not secure from the fury of this bandit, for we can give him no better name. He had all who could not pay a sum of 1000 reals (10L.) dragged out of their convents. The town of Malaga was fixed with a contribution of two millions (reals.) On the 21st this man of blood published a second proclamation, in which he threatened death to all who should talk of negociations, two Chambers, &c. A few fugitives of the corps of Palarea, Rosello, and others, after the capture of their Chiefs, attempted to make a commotion at Amusco, in the district of Palencia. The Corregidor marched against them with the Royalist volunteers. The mutineers fled; the greater number were massacred by the peasantry, the others are taken, and are to be tried by military law.

FRANKFORT, SEPT. 4.—We learn from Copenhagen that a Special Committee has just been appointed, for the purpose of drawing up a Constitution for both the German and Danish Provinces that compose the Kingdom of Denmark. A Publication on this subject, emanating from the Royal authority, is expected, which is the best answer that can be made to the Nobility and Protestant Clergy of Holstein, who lately made an application directly to the German Diet, without the consent of their Sovereign, to obtain by the interposition of that Assembly, not a representative organization, such as the Act of the Congress at Vienna had promised, but the restoration of the ancient estates of Holstein, with all the exclusive privileges drawn from it.

BRUSSELS, SEPT. 7.—The Duke of Wellington, after having inspected the new fortresses which are erecting on the southern frontiers of our kingdom, as well as the immense works of the Prussian fortress of Coblentz on the Rhine, embarked on the 2d inst. at Calais, to return to England.

SEMLIN, AUG. 22.—According to accounts from Belgrade, dated yesterday, three Tartars have brought to the Pacha the information that the Seraskier, Mehomet Pacha, has entered Livadia with his army, and is advancing toward Corinth. The last letters from Bitoglia, of the 5th Aug. confirm the accounts lately received of the defeat of the division of the army of the Pacha of Scutari, near Agrapha. In the late fire at Constantinople, the magazines near the arsenal were destroyed, and many Turks perished in them. The number of houses burnt is stated to amount to 3,000. Other letters say that the Pacha of Scutari is endeavouring to gain the Greeks by negociations, before he attempts his expedition against the Morea.

ANCONA, AUG. 18.—Some days after the battle between Thebes and Zeitouny, in which the Turks lost 4000 killed or wounded, there was another engagement at Marathon, near Volo, in which the Turks had 400 killed, and lost 200 prisoners; in the first of these battles there were 15,000 Turks against 7000 Greeks. Captains Tornari and Caraniscos, who were ordered to pursue the enemy, drove them back into Thessaly, and forced them to seek refuge in Larissa.

IRELAND.

SESSIONS-HOUSE, DUBLIN, SEPT. 6.—The King v. Constantine Maguire, Esq.—Constantine Maguire, Esq. was indicted for an assault on Lord Glentworth. Lord Glentworth stated that he was in Four Courts Marshalsea on the 30th of May last; he was confined there for debt; he (Lord Glentworth) was standing in one of the open squares of the Marshalsea, in company with Mr. Boardman, who said to witness—"Here is Mr. Maguire coming into the yard." Witness replied, "Well, what if he is? I am bound in honour not to notice him." Witness did not look in the direction in which Mr. Maguire was coming; he heard some offensive expressions uttered by Mr. Maguire, but he did not turn round, and still continued speaking to Mr. Boardman; he (witness) received a severe blow of a stick; the blow came from behind; it struck him on the shoulder; it was repeated; after he was struck the second time, he saw Mr. Maguire brandishing a stick; he made another blow at witness, which was parried by Mr. Boardman; the traverser was behind witness's back when he (the traverser) struck him; witness did not see him until he was struck twice; witness said "it was a cowardly and ruffianly attack," and that he (the traverser) knew he was bound in honour not to quarrel with him; Mr. Maguire was then conveyed away to that part of the building in which he resided. The Jury found him Guilty, and he was sentenced to be imprisoned for three months.

On Tuesday night, a farm-house at Ballyegna, the property of Mr. N. Meade, of Newcastle, was attacked and forcibly entered by a party of legislators, who committed considerable damage, by destroying a quantity of milk, cream, vessels, &c. and swore the milk-woman and her family to quit, on pain of destruction. A few days previous to this outrage, Mr. Meade had taken possession of a house on the lands of Ballyegna, which he had thrown down, and which before then had been occupied and resided in by Mary Walsh, alias Fitzgerald, the mother of the schoolmaster (Edward Fitzgerald), who was hanged for attacking and taking arms from Mr. Morgan's house during the late disturbances. The taking possession and throwing down of this house was the cause of this outrage on Mr. Mead's property.—The men were apprehended under the insurrection Act, by the Rev. George Vincent, near Shanagolden, on Thursday night.

On Thursday se'nnight Mr. Blackburn held a Special Sessions under the Insurrection Act at Six-Mile-Bridge, where fifteen persons were tried and acquitted.

On Wednesday night, a cow, the property of David Cronan, was maliciously killed on the lands of Ballycasey, near Court Bridge, in this county, and a notice posted, that unless the lands were surrendered, which had been taken last May, the owner should be served in a similar manner. On the same night a quantity of hay, the property of a man at Kilcurley, who had given evidence at the Special Sessions, was thrown into the river Mague, and destroyed. An attack was made on the house of William Power, of Eragard, near Shanagolden, but the fellows could not get in; they, however, attempted to burn the house, but without effect.

OLD BAILEY.

THURSDAY—When the prisoners were placed at the bar to plead to the several indictments, John Smith, a decent looking young man, charged on five separate indictments for uttering 5l. Bank of England notes, pleaded guilty.

Recorder—I hope you will not persist in your present determination, because if you do sentence of death must be passed upon you, and in all probability the only public atonement you can make will be by that sentence being carried into effect; therefore, let me advise you to pursue a different course.

Prisoner—I am aware of my awful situation—and that I stand on the brink of an awful eternity, therefore I fear to utter a falsehood. If mercy cannot be extended here I hope to receive it from my Creator.

Recorder—Let it stand till to-morrow, that you may have time to consider.

Prisoner—My Lord, it is of no use—my mind is fully made up to plead in the manner I have.

The Recorder then ordered the prisoner to be removed from the bar until the arrival of the Judges. The unhappy young man retired with reluctant step.—Their Lordships (Mr. Baron Graham and Mr. Justice Best) entered the Court at eleven o'clock, when John Smith was again placed at the bar, on the charge of uttering five forged notes. The indictments were again read, and the prisoner pleaded guilty.—Mr. Baron Graham addressed the prisoner in a feeling manner, and urged him to retract his plea.

The prisoner said—"My Lord, I am guilty; the only atonement I can make is to plead so. I have given every information to the Bank of England; if I cannot be saved, God's will be done."

A plea of Guilty—Death was recorded.

FRIDAY.—William Briton Dyson was indicted for the wilful murder of Eliza Anthony.

Abr. Radford, a coal-heaver, deposed that he found the body of the deceased on a Thursday morning, at ten o'clock, and brought it on shore.

Elizabeth Bell knows the prisoner, and also knew the deceased, Eliza Anthony, they lived together as man and wife. On the 29th of July, they were both at witness's house—they seemed very dejected—said they were going to the play—did not speak to the deceased—he stopped about five minutes, when they went away—saw the prisoner again about one o'clock in the middle of the night—he came to her apartment very wet. Witness said to him, "where is Eliza?" He said, "Poor thing! she is no more—she is drowned." Witness then went up stairs and got a light—when she came down prisoner said deceased had drowned herself, and he could not save her. The prisoner told witness that he meant to make away with himself—that he was in much distress—he used language somewhat incoherent, which witness could not comprehend—witness could not persuade him to pull off his clothes for several hours—he had been in distressed circumstances for some time.

Cross-examined—The distress appeared great—witness had been on intimate terms with prisoner, with whom she had words on account of his extraordinary affection for the deceased—it had been agreed that the deceased should sleep with witness the night Eliza was drowned—witness sat up for that purpose—it was quite clear he had been completely immersed in water—he wished witness to give information to every body, and particularly to the mother of deceased—witness went to the mother, who lives in Boswell-court, Carey-street—the mother came and brought an officer—he never went away, but sat waiting for the arrival of an officer—he was of a most humane disposition, and would not hurt a worm.

By Mr. Justice Best—Had quarrelled with the deceased two or three times, and frequently with the prisoner about her—he desired I would treat her well, as she was deserving of every kindness—understood that he had proposed to marry deceased.

William Williams lived at No. 13, Sherrard-street—prisoner and deceased lived at his house as man and wife for three months—deceased left his house about seven o'clock in the evening in good spirits—they had been in distress latterly.

Cross-examined—Never knew a better pair of people in his life—her affection was extraordinary, and he gave them extra indulgence on account of his strict regularity.

Frances Hopkins lives in the same house with Mrs. Bell; saw the prisoner the morning he came home wet; gave him her place in her bed, which he reluctantly accepted; he was wet all over.

By the Court—His hat was as wet as his clothes; it was near two o'clock when he came in; at first she was asleep; heard him say Eliza was drowned before she had well opened her eyes; he went out of the room while she dressed herself.

Robert Ramsey is a watchman stationed in Jermyn-street. On the morning of the 26th he saw the prisoner, about half-past one; heard him exclaim, "What have I done! oh, dear, oh, dear!" Witness said, "You have done something I am sure;" he rang at the bell of Mrs. Bell's house, and said it was all right; a person came up at the time, named Holliday, who said the prisoner's name was Dyson; Holliday said to him, "That is your wife, I believe, who lives above me;" Mrs. Bell came down and let him in; the upper part of his clothes were not wet; not above his waist; witness stood by him two minutes; did not notice the lower part of his raiment.

John Holliday, a Bow-street patrol, deposed to having seen the prisoner on the night in question, about the time stated by last witness. Stood at Mrs. Bell's door—witness said to the watchman, this man is here for no good at this unseasonable hour. Saw him go into the house—witness followed; heard him say to Mrs. Bell, "Eliza is drowned." Mrs. Bell knew that witness was an officer, does not think the prisoner did. Does not know whether his clothes were wet or dry.

John Rayne, watchman to the Speaker of the House of Commons, stated that on the night of the 25th and morning of the 26th of July he was on duty. Witness heard on the night in question a cry of murder from a female voice—saw a man among the boats at this time—could not see whether it was the outside boat—heard the man cry out "Eliza, Eliza, my dear!" The intervening space was 150 yards—heard him cry for help several times. Could not go to his assistance, because he was locked in the garden.

George Salloway, a waterman, deposed that he moored his boat under the arch of Westminster Bridge, at ebb tide—found the boat the next morning near the Old Palace Yard, in deep water—it was 100 yards from where he left her. On his way to Vauxhall next morning he found a bonnet under the seat; the boat was very dirty—it appeared as though there had been a scuffle between two persons. There are piles near the Speaker's wall, where a person might get a bruise. The bonnet now produced was that he found in the boat.

By the Court—A person going from the stairs to the boat might get mud on their shoes—mud appeared to have been scraped off the shoes on the back-board—in plunging into the river the feet might go against that part of the boat.

Samuel Wilson, a waterman, stated that, from his knowledge of the River, the boat of last witness would scarcely have been afloat. It would at half-past one, but at that time there would not be sufficient water to drown a person. If a body had fallen into the water, it would have floated upwards with the tide.

Joseph Wood, of the Union Tavern, Air-street—Prisoner lived there as waiter, and deceased as bar-maid—the bonnet produced was once her's. Knew of a quarrel between deceased and Mrs. Bell.

Mr. Jeffries, a surgeon—Saw the body of the deceased on the morning of the 1st of August—understood the body had been six days in the water—it was in a putrid state in some parts—it exhibited the appearances of bruises—the head was much swollen, which he considered arose from extravasated blood, occasioned from external violence—witness opened the body—the lungs were full of black blood, which proved that the deceased died by suffocation by drowning—did not open the head, it had the appearance of having sustained external injury—did not think a blow on the face after death would have occasioned such appearances.

By the Court—Witness has had no experience relative to drowned persons.

John Harding, also a surgeon—Examined the deceased in company with last witness—the face exhibited marks of violence under the left eye—never before saw a body after it had been drowned six days.

By the Court—Had some experience relative to drowned persons—the face of the deceased was more swollen than he had ever observed any—could not say what occasioned the marks under the eyes—death from suffocation would not produce a dark mark under the eye—that would a colouration of a livid green, and not to that extent as to size.

Thomas Corbyn, a surgeon, saw the body, but did not dissect it—observed a discolouration under the eye, which could not have happened after death—it appeared like a blow received from a hand.

In his cross-examination, the witness stated that his experience of drowned persons was very contrasted.

By the Court—Did not dissect the body, because he was not called on professionally to do so. It was proper that the part should have been examined.

Mr. Jeffries re-called—The deceased was five months gone with child.

Thomas Gaskell examined the body before the Coroner's Jury—his opinion was, that external violence had not been used—found no extravasated blood—nothing could induce him to believe that external violence had been used before death.

By the Court—Had often examined the bodies of persons who lost their lives by drowning. Had frequently observed a darkness under the eyes.

(The witness here asked his Lordship for his expenses, as he had had a deal of trouble.)

Mr. Justice Best—We will see about that by and by.

John Reeve apprehended the prisoner, who was very melancholy, and made no resistance.

Mr. Stirling, the Coroner, produced the notes of the prisoner's confession at the Coroner's Inquest.

Mary Johnson Anthony stated that she was the mother of the deceased, with whom the prisoner wished to contract marriage, but she (witness) refused.

The prisoner made no defence.

The following witnesses to character were called.

William Frederick Duncan, proprietor of the St. Alban's Coffee-house,

Thomas Pugh, and William Wyatt, a publican, and Thomas Wait, a servant, gave the prisoner a good character.

Mr. Wood, who had been examined for the prosecution, gave the prisoner an excellent character.

Mr. Justice Best proceeded to sum up the evidence. The first question was—By what means did the deceased come by her death? Then another question arose—Did the prisoner force her into the water? If so, the prisoner was guilty of murder. Again, if they had mutually agreed to drown themselves, and when the prisoner came into the water took care to save himself, he would advise the jury to find him guilty, and he would take care that execution should be stayed, in order that the opinion of the twelve judges might be taken on the point. He should reserve, provided they found him guilty on that circumstance alone. There was still another point. Supposing the deceased and the prisoner went there for the purpose of destroying themselves, and the prisoner threw herself in on her own accord, that would not constitute the crime of murder.

The Jury, after consulting for some time, retired, and in about 25 minutes, returned a verdict of Guilty—Death, but subject to the opinion of the twelve judges.

POLICE.

MARY LA-BONNE.—On Thursday, an information was exhibited by the Vestry of the parish of St. Marylebone, against Mr. Griffiths, agent to the Imperial Gas Light and Coke Company, for having taken up the pavement in Oxford-street, now called Hyde Park-place, for the purpose of laying down gas-pipes, without giving notice, pursuant to the Act of 57th of the late King, chap. 29, sec. 11, to the Surveyor of Pavements of the complaining parish, whereby the Company had incurred a penalty of 40l. for every square foot of pavement so disturbed. After a long discussion, the Magistrates were of opinion that Oxford-street was considered by all the Acts of Parliament, which had never been repealed, a turnpike-road; and, certainly, if it was not, the Trustees could not pay such an exorbitant sum of money for lighting and watching; they had no jurisdiction over the same, they therefore should dismiss the information altogether.

On Wednesday morning Mr. Turner's house was broken open at Loughton, in Essex, and property of some value stolen. A constable having traced four men to have set off by the London coach, he procured a horse and rode after it, but never came in sight till he reached Aldgate, at which moment his horse fell. He, however, got to Bunnet, the Woodford coachman, to keep up the pursuit, who obtained assistance, and seized two of the party as they were alighting at the Royal Exchange. They underwent an examination before a Magistrate, where they gave their names George Williams and Edward Edwards. A gold watch was dropped from one of them on being apprehended, and there was found on the latter prisoner a purse with four sovereigns, and on the other a phosphorus box and matches, a small key, and a silk handkerchief. The purse and the key were identified. The prisoners were remanded.

THAMES POLICE.—On Thursday, John Timothy, apprehended on Sunday last, in Chapel-street, East Smithfield, was examined before the Magistrates of Greenwich. Similar evidence to that already adduced against his brother and others, was brought forward against him. About noon Mr. Simmons, the chief clerk of this office, received a note from the officer, giving information that he was going on to Middleton gaol with the prisoner, who must consequently be fully committed for trial at the next assizes. At the time the prisoner was taken into custody, the officer said, "I want you;" he replied, "For what?" The officer said, "Again on a charge of murder." Prisoner—"Oh, is that all?" His coat and waistcoat was then called for, which he had on, and was then taken away. On Monday, when placed at the bar of this office, the Magistrate, after hearing Mitchell's statement, asked the prisoner what he had to say for himself—observing at the same time, that he would caution him as to what he did say, lest it should tend to his future injury. The prisoner audaciously observed, "I need no caution: I know nothing of the matter!" This pertinacity of conduct and to any further observation, and the prisoner was taken away from the bar, and consigned to the discretion of the Greenwich Magistrates.

MANSION-HOUSE.—On Thursday, George Edwards, the driver of the hackney-coach No. 1,074, was summoned, for having driven with such velocity and carelessness as to endanger the life of a gentleman named Paidden, in the public street, and to tear the wheel off his chaise. Mr. Paidden stated, that at nine o'clock on Sunday morning, as he was driving along Queen-street, Cheapside, he saw the defendant approach with his coach, at the rate of eight miles an hour. Witness instantly stopped his horse as close to the curbstone on his side of the street as he could; but the defendant, although the passage was narrow, continued to drive with unabated fury, and wholly disregarded the danger in which the former was placed. The consequence was, a very great injury to the chaise, which lost one of its wheels. The defendant then drove on without stopping to inquire whether any one had suffered.—William Street, a person who was passing, said, he really believed the conduct of the defendant to have been wilful; and that he had plenty of room to pass.—The driver said he had been driving a gentleman, who was in a hurry, at the proper hackney-coach rate, and that the accident had been caused by the want of skill in the complainant, who kept in the middle of a narrow street, and, as might be expected, sustained some injury. He could not produce one witness to prove that he had either driven unintentionally against the complainant, or that his speed was not impetuous.—The Lord Mayor observed, that this was a case which called for the full penalty (20 shillings) which the 30th of George II. inflicted upon a person who drove wilfully or carelessly, and ordered the defendant to pay that sum.—The driver said he had no right to pay it, and refused.—The Lord Mayor then ordered a warrant of distress to be put in execution against the fellow's goods—a proceeding at which he was evidently alarmed, but still he produced no money. The next stage of proceeding should there not be sufficient goods to cover the amount of the penalty, is a warrant against the person of the driver, whom the act then adjudges to one month's imprisonment in Bridewell, and hard labour.—The complainant, upon being informed by the Lord Mayor that an action at law would fix the proprietor of the coach with the expense of the injury, declared that he did not think that ample justice would be done to himself or the public without an appeal to a court of law for the full amount of the damage.

QUEEN-SQUARE.—On Wednesday, J. Bowles, who had worked for some years at Vidler's mail-coach manufactory, Milbank, and who, after twice attempting to drown himself on Monday night, and twice to hang himself on Tuesday night, confessed that a murder he had been concerned in preyed on his mind, was brought up. He stated before Sir Mr. Magistrate, that he left his apprenticeship, and entered on board His Majesty's ship President, from which, in 1814, he was drafted into the Duchess sloop of war, Capt. Holt, who went with a roving commission to cruize on the Western Ocean; that the ship touched at Cadiz, and the Steward were sent ashore with 20l. to buy provisions; but the Steward left him at a public-house with 12l. and never returned; that he (prisoner) fell in with one Godfrey, a deserter from the London (Coldstream), who a day or two afterwards took him and some other British sailors to the house of a rich lady, about 12 miles up the country, when Godfrey cut her throat before their eyes; he, however, took no share of the booty. The Magistrate, who had been at Cadiz, was not satisfied with the prisoner's description of that city, thought he was labouring under mental delusion, and ordered him to be taken care of at the workhouse.

On Thursday, Mr. Jullion, an accountant, in Chancery-lane, was ordered to find bail for assaulting Colonel James. The gentlemen were both going the same way in gigs, on the Knightsbridge-road, when their vehicles got entangled, and the defendant bestowed a liberal horse-whipping on the Colonel and his horse. The Colonel now wished to lay an information for the whipping of his horse, under Mr. Martin's Act; but it was found he had delayed his complaint too long. Ann Asketh, a prepossessing young woman, about 19 years of age, in the most abject distress, was brought to this office by Clarke, one of the constables in St. James's Park, charged by him under the Vagrant Act, having found her asleep on one of the forms in the Park at 4 o'clock in the forenoon. The prisoner scarcely had any clothes to cover her person, and was nearly barefooted. Clarke stated, that he found the prisoner sleeping at full length on one of the forms, and on telling her to rise and quit the place, she refused to do so, saying that she had as much right as witness to remain there. Having received orders to take every person in custody who thus offended and refused to leave the Park, he brought the prisoner before their worships. The Magistrate asked the prisoner for her defence, on which she burst into a flood of tears, which for a few moments stifled her utterance, but recovering her speech, she complained that Clarke pulled her off the seat with violence; which he positively denied. The poor creature then delivered the following distressing narrative of her miseries:—That during the last month, or upwards, she had not slept one night in a bed, and for the want of the common necessaries of life, her nature was completely exhausted: and on Wednesday morning, while she was passing through the park, being very much in want of sleep, and forms, when she was awoke by the officer.

Magistrate—Have you any friends?

Prisoner (convulsed with grief)—Not a friend in the world to assist me. I have a father and mother; but they are poor, and distant from me, and little know the dreadful state of misery I am in at present.

Magistrate—Where are they?

The prisoner replied, "At her parish, Satwell, in Berkshire." It appeared that some time ago she quitted her friends to come up to London for a situation, and procured one with a Mr. Adair, whom she left, and entered another, where she only remained three months. Having received her wages, 8l. she took a lodging in Mount-street, where she expended the whole of her money, and likewise pledged every article she had in her possession to support herself before she could get a situation, which she used every effort to obtain. At length she became indebted at her lodgings, which she was obliged to quit, leaving her box and duplicates as a security for the money owing. Ever since she had been walking about in a state of starvation, without any clothes but a gown and chemise, which she now had on; was ashamed to beg, and desirous to preserve her character from shame. She would willingly walk down to Satwell, 50 miles, but it would be impossible for her to do it without support on the road.—During the above statement she was frequently interrupted by the most incessant grief. Her story was delivered with that artless simplicity which would remove every suspicion of its being a fabrication. The Magistrate asked her if she would immediately quit London for Satwell if she was supplied with the means of doing so, and procuring her box, &c. She seemed to exult in the expectation of being thus supplied, and her countenance, which was before covered by a melancholy gloom, now became vivid and cheerful. The Magistrate then ordered Pace, the officer, to give her every instruction how to act, and supplied her with cash to help her in her pilgrimage to her distant place of nativity, and also ordered him to redeem the box and duplicates at her late lodgings. The poor girl, evidently lame through exhaustion, then hobbled out of the office, smiling thanks to her benefactor, who eulogized Clarke, the officer, for being the instrument of her good fortune.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Duke of York arrived in town on Monday night from the Lodge in Windsor Park, where his Royal Highness dined with the King.

On Tuesday his Royal Highness held a Levee as Commander-in-Chief, at his Office in the Horse Guards, which was attended by Gen. Sir George Murray, Major-Gen. Paterson, and between twenty and thirty other military officers.

The Marquis of Hastings has left London in the steam-packet for Calais, on his way to Italy.

The Right Hon. Thomas Wallace, M.P. has just been appointed Master of the Mint, instead of Lord Maryborough, who gets the buck hounds, vice the late Lord Cornwallis.

We understand it is at length determined, that the vacant seat in the Cabinet, occasioned by Lord Maryborough's removal, and the struggle for which was supposed to lie between Lord Grenville and Mr. Huskisson, will not be filled up at all. The Cabinet will now, therefore, consist of only thirteen Members, instead of fifteen, which was the number before the retirement of the Right Hon. Charles Bathurst and Lord Maryborough.—Courier.

Her Majesty the Queen Dowager of Wirtemberg was expected at Frankfort on the 21st ult. Her Majesty travels as the Countess of Groningen.

A lovely and fascinating young lady, of high connections, eloped from her friends, who reside a short distance from this city, a few days since, with a married man, late a Captain in a regiment of Dragoons.—Exeter Gazette.

THE ARMY.—The 57th Regiment, now at Kinsale, have received orders countermanding their embarkation to the Mauritius till the spring. The detachments of the above regiment are to be called in the latter end of October. Present quarters, Kinsale, Bandon, Macromp, Clonakilty, Bantry, Skibbereen, Dunmanway, Inchigella, and Ballyvourne.—The detachment of the 79th Highlanders, stationed at Athy, have been ordered to Naas, and are replaced by a party of the 78th Highlanders from Wicklow.

At Lichfield Races, on Tuesday, the King's Plate of 100 guineas was won by the Marquis of Exeter's b. h. Holbein, 4 yrs old; Holbein walked over the course. Lord Grosvenor's br. c. Hymettus won the Sweepstakes of 60 guineas.

At Northampton Races, Mr. Heathcote's brother to Antelope, 5 yrs old, won the County Cup, value 100 gs.; and Major Wilson's r. c. Haphazard, 3 yrs old, won the County Plate, value 50 gs.

The Duke of Richmond's c. by Octavius, is matched against Mr. Poyntz's c. by Octavius, (8st. 4lb. each), at Goodwood races, 1826, one mile for 100 sovs. h. f.

THE SHEERNESS DOCKS.—The new works at Sheerness, already finished, consist of a basin, 520 feet long by 300 feet wide, with three dry docks for first-rate ships of the line, the gates, which are of cast iron, weighing 163 tons each pair. The river wall is hollow, and stands upon inverted arches, supported by piles. There is also a mast pond, 250 feet by 150, with extensive mast locks and tunnel. The works now in hand consist of a smaller basin, 250 feet by 200 feet wide; two frigate docks and a boat basin, 100 feet long and 70 feet wide; with a depth of 27 feet at low water of spring tides. When complete the dockyard will contain about 60 acres, with a river wall about 3000 feet long. The sum expended upon these works amount to about 1,300,000l. The first stone was laid by the present Lord Melville, in August, 1814.

The Russian Government has abandoned the pretensions it put forth respecting the boundaries upon the shores of the Pacific, and by which it was proposed to turn that ocean into a lake subject to the power of the Russian autocrat.

The Americans have declared by law, the Slave Trade to be Piracy, and consequently any of the citizens of the United States who engage in that traffic are subject to the penalties for that offence.

Accounts from Iceland of the 16th of August, say that the volcano at Kollergean, in that island, which had been quiet for sixty-eight years, made a terrible eruption on the 26th of July last, accompanied by an earthquake; enormous blocks of ice were detached from the summit of the mountain; a great extent of country was laid waste, but fortunately no lives were lost; ships which were 20 leagues distant in the open sea, were covered with volcanic ashes. There were three distinct eruptions, each very violent.

On Sunday a gang of gipsies, who had been offering several horses for sale in Bath on Saturday, were apprehended at the Bear Inn, Holloway, with two horses in their possession, which have been detained. These fellows are supposed to be the persons who stole two bay mares and a black pony from the vicinity of London about ten days ago; since which they have been at Chichester and Salisbury, and also at Corsham and Bristol fairs. T. Stanley, one of the gang, was on Monday committed to Shepton-Mallet House of Correction for one month to hard labour, as a rogue and vagabond. All the rest were discharged.

A fight took place on Thursday, at the Maize Green, on Epping Forest, between George Flowers and B. Harris, for twenty sovereigns. H. Ford seconded Flowers, and Joel Jacobs assisted Harris. They fought nine rounds. Harris was subdued by strength; he placed a good hit on his adversary's right loin in the seventh round, but this was his last chance. In the eighth round he was hit out of time, and in the ninth he received a finishing hit upon the head, which made him deaf to "time."

As the youngest daughter of Mr. Belton, fruiterer, Bryanstone-street, Portman-square, was taking down the shutters on Tuesday morning, her foot caught between the railing, and as she fell the shutter struck her on the chest; she was taken in doors, and Mr. Lightfoot, surgeon, sent for; but the only words she said were, "O my mother! my dear mother!" and immediately expired.

Tuesday evening between 8 and 9 o'clock, Mr. Barnett, of Bow-street, was attacked in his gig by two foot pads, between Croydon and Streatham. The first ruffian dragged him from his gig, and with the assistance of the other threw him upon the ground, and rifled his pockets, they beat and kicked him until he was exhausted. They robbed him of 107 sovereigns, seven 10l. and three 5l. notes, a metal watch, and gold chain and seals. They then smashed the gig-seat to pieces, and took out some wearing apparel. He was taken up by one of the horse patrole; and it appeared, that while he was lying insensible the villains cut the harness in pieces, and let the horse go. The horse strayed beyond Croydon, where he was stopped. The gig was thrown up at the side of the road.

Between eleven and twelve o'clock on Monday night, the inhabitants of St. Mary Redcliff parish were suddenly alarmed by a fire at the house of Mr. Wilmot, grocer, Redcliff Hill. Mr. Wilmot and his family had retired to rest not more than half an hour, and escaped the destruction that befell the whole house, stock, and furniture, with barely apparel sufficient to cover them. The interior of the building was old, consisting chiefly of wood.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 14.

HIS MAJESTY has not yet gone to reside at his Castle at Windsor—the inhabitants of that town are in anxious expectation of his arrival there, and great preparations are making to give HIS MAJESTY a dutiful and warm reception.

We are gratified to find that the plan which has long been in agitation is immediately to be put into execution—we mean the removal of the Upper Lodge, and the continuation of the long walk either across or under the high road near the entrance of Windsor, directly up to the Castle gate—by this improvement the real intention with which this magnificent avenue was made will be fulfilled, and the approach to the palace rendered one of the most imposing and beautiful in Europe.

THE TIMES of yesterday has the following :—

"Our readers may recollect that some years ago at Paris, a Popish priest refused the rites of Christian burial to the remains of Mademoiselle RAUCOUR, a celebrated actress of that capital. The priest alleged some old intolerant law for his justification; but the consequence was, that there arose a frightful tumult, that the Court itself became alarmed, and that immediate orders were given to administer the last offices to the dead. We perceive with sorrow, not unmixed with shame, that the spirit by which the Popish zealot was possessed, appears to have transferred itself into those members of our own church from whom better things are expected. A MR. D'ARCY, a Roman Catholic, was buried a few days ago in the parish of St. Kevin, Dublin. A Catholic Clergyman attended the funeral, but was prevented from reading the service of that communion over the grave, by an interdict from the ARCHBISHOP OF DUBLIN! This Archbishop is DR. MAGEE, who did so much injury last year to the public spirit of Ireland by his charge against both Roman Catholics and Dissenters. Let him, however, beware of the consequences of such acts, and forbear to persecute Papists in the spirit of Popery: let him tear the sort of effects which were produced upon the people of Paris by the unchristian outrage offered to their feelings at the funeral of Mademoiselle RAUCOUR. Such officious zeal in a prelate of high rank may, in one year, do more mischief to the Establishment than a host of infidels in a century."

This is all mighty fine—but we would merely ask the man who writes in the TIMES, whether the popish priest who does duty at the popish chapel in Moorfields, where there is a burying-ground—(much to our surprise)—would suffer a Protestant Clergyman to read the funeral service of the Church of England over a grave in that place. As we are aware that the editor of the TIMES is not a likely person to know anything about it, we will answer for him decidedly No—and, moreover, we would recommend the person who speaks of DR. MAGEE, the present Archbishop of Dublin, disrespectfully, in such a paper as the OLD TIMES, to ask some of his employers to tell him the name of the work upon which DR. MAGEE'S fame will rest for ever, and which, to the honour and credit of our Government be it said, obtained for him the Archbishoprick which he adorns by filling.

What the wretched writer means by "officious zeal," we are as much at a loss to comprehend as he would be to explain—if Bishops are not zealous, they are called drones and idlers; if they are, they provoke the abuse of such men as write in the TIMES newspaper! who talk to the enlightened, pious, and learned author of one of the most powerful and beautiful works in the language, to "beware" of doing his duty. The zeal of an English Archbishop is best shewn in watching over the rights and interests of Protestanism, and in guarding them from the diabolical principles and doctrines of POPERY struggling for the ASCENDANCY.

WE have received several letters of remonstrance upon the injustice of confounding and identifying the WHIGS with the RADICALS—some written in the true liberal tone, which betray the partisan; others upon a more public principle, and deprecating the association, inasmuch as the respectability of the OPPOSITION ought to be upheld, as one of the strong bulwarks against Ministerial encroachment. We might return one general answer to both descriptions of correspondents, namely—that we cordially concur in the principle, that in a free Constitution an Opposition is necessary—and that to be effective, it should not only be respectable but powerful—and there leave our WHIG Constitutional correspondents to ascertain and settle the question, WHY this is not the case at present. But we will afford to each a separate answer, which may be soon despatched, as far as the WHIG REMONSTRANTS are concerned. If they will persevere in advocating the principles, and whenever it suits the purposes of their party, court the alliance and support of the RADICALS—if they will abandon the sound and Constitutional means of Opposition in Parliament for the pantomimickry of HUNT, GALE JONES, and WOLSELEY, on waggons and stages—if they will eke out their WHIGGERY when they find it too scanty to cover the nakedness of their designs with the sanguinary ensigns of JACOBINISM—if they will follow the lead of men in Parliament, who, without superior talent, or well-earned reputation, have found means as adventurers to force themselves from among the very dregs of the people into the Senate—it is not for us, as public writers, or public censors, to weigh every claim—or measure out, by way of subtraction, each scruple of respectability, which must necessarily be found in so large and Aristocratic a party, in order to grace the credit side of the great black public ledger, as a per contra—or set off against A SYSTEM, which has done more, by its advocacy of false principles, to injure LIBERTY, than all the Despots of Europe combined could have effected against it.

This is no vapouring, or declamation—it is a fact which comes home to every man's bosom!—That this is the case we shall endeavour to shew, in answer to those who consider with ourselves, a Constitutional Opposition necessary to the conservation of our rights. There are at this hour thousands of the middle and respectable classes of society, who would be ready to oppose many measures brought forward by Ministers, who are withheld from so doing by the double consideration of giving strength to a party whose principles alarm them—and of throwing their influence into a scale, which may tend to break the equilibrium necessary to the safety and support of a mixed Government.

There are thousands among every class of men in the country, who, as WHIGS of the Old School, have seceded and dropped off from the ranks or support of Opposition—and who prefer to trust their rights and property to the safeguard of Ministers, towards whom they feel neither affection nor attachment—rather than risk both or either to the ephemeral expedients of a time-serving FACTION, which has neither FIXED PRINCIPLES, nor RESPONSIBLE LEADERS.

We speak to facts known to every man at all conversant with the existing state of opinions and parties in the country—but we have a very simple test, whereby to prove the deterioration of what are called WHIG OPINIONS, in the lapse even of a very few years.

SIR FRANCIS BURDETT, who, whatever may be our opinion of his political creed, has never shrunk from the expression of his sentiments, was long considered as the representative in Parliament of that class of men who are essentially democratic, and who at different periods have progressively adopted, or been assigned, the titles of REFORMERS and RADICALS—that is, RADICAL REFORMERS, as contra-distinguished from the WHIGS, who THEN professed to be MODERATE REFORMERS. SIR FRANCIS'S party in Parliament was of the smallest possible calibre—and instances, we believe, are upon record, of his being left in a minority of ONE!—The WHIGS carefully avoided all contact with the patriotic Baronet. He was denied the honour of the sitting—that is, on the WHIG imperial benches; he was shunned, as if his principles were infectious—and RADICALISM "catching."

These are FACTS within the recollection, and notorious to every man who was then a member or in the habit of attending Parliament—What is the case now? Let any one of those who recollect this order of things, compare it with the state of parties in the House of Commons at the present moment—opinions upon the highest topics of domestic government and national interest are every day handled by the HUMES, the BROUGHAMS, the MACKINTOSHES, and the DENMANS, in a manner which so far exceeds any thing attempted by SIR FRANCIS BURDETT in the vigour of his zeal, that he not only smiles at the ravings of his new proselytes, but, in his own speeches—distinguished for talent as well as strength—appears rather as a moderator, than a leader of a sect eager to pay homage where they formerly dreaded to acknowledge even a connexion. The truth is—that BURDETT is not only less violent—less offensive in his diatribes against "things as they are"—but acts, and has consistently acted, upon a tangible and decided principle.—He, without bestowing sufficient attention to the gradual but great change which has taken place in the preponderating influence of the democratic branch of the Constitution, is jealous of the power which he considers Ministers to possess over the House of Commons—and, consistently with this opinion, has constantly and steadily laboured to undermine the "Borough influence"—AS IF IT PREVAILED ONLY ON ONE SIDE. We think him wrong; but we believe him to be among the few of that class of men called PATRIOTS, who—making due allowance for that strange fascination which the love of mob plaudits operates upon the minds of public men—sincerely acts upon what he believes to be constitutional and patriotic grounds — nor must it ever be forgotten, that, independently of the personal respect which he has ever paid to his Sovereign, this man has never made the Throne the butt of his scurrility—nor either sanctioned nor given vent to insinuations against the supreme head of the state.

In short, we appeal to the eyes and to the observation of the public at large, whether, in taking up the Debates of Parliament, we look, as we certainly formerly did look, for the extreme principle of the mob orators, in the speeches of the Honourable Baronet—or whether we do not, on the contrary, read them rather as a refreshing laxative after the hard, cold, and withering denunciations of the WHIGS against our KING & our NATIONAL ESTABLISHMENTS in CHURCH and STATE!

Shall we then stand condemned for taking the only line which a love and veneration for these establishments has left open to their supporters—shall we patiently endure the progress of a SYSTEM, which once so successfully demoralized a whole people, in FRANCE, for the purpose of leading them willing victims to the parricidal altar of JACOBINISM—shall we—because we have successfully snatched the firebrand from the hands of men who were about to lay it at the foot of the throne—it matters not whether the attempt was or was not experimental—in order to enable them more securely to renew their threats or their machinations?—No—neither letter writters, nor reviewers, nor threats, nor wheedling, nor imputations against us, for turning their own arms against them, shall make us waver in our purpose, or cease from our labours. It is not easy to deceive the PEOPLE OF ENGLAND, in the long run—as the WHIGS have found to their cost.

Our Journal would never have met with the encouragement it has to boast, if it had been a mere libellous publication, like the disgraceful things which the WHIGS and RADICALS vomited forth in all quarters to crush it in its origin. It has indeed been so far libellous, that it has spoken not only the truth, but the whole truth. This, in too many instances, and in too many quarters, we are perfectly aware, is productive of all the consequences of a libel—but where the "KNIFE and CAUTERY" can alone save the patient, we must steel our minds against the whining affectation of sympathy, which would risk a life rather than lose a limb.

We have said, and we think we have proved, that the TORIES of the present day are to the Constitution what the WHIGS formerly were—and that the WHIGS of the nineteenth century, having in their appetency for office, and their zeal for themselves, lost sight of every principle by which the bond of WHIG UNION was originally held together, have so committed themselves and their followers to the more modern heresy of JACOBINISM—and so disgusted and alienated the WHIGS of the old school—that the latter are more generally to be found in the ranks of the TORIES, whilst the former can only be distinguished—since they still will be WHIGS—as WHIG RADICALS or RADICAL WHIGS.

ACCOUNTS were received on Friday morning of the death of MR. RICARDO, the Member for Portarlington: he had latterly distinguished himself as a frequent speaker in Parliament, and upon questions of political economy was thought extremely well of by his friends.

WE copy the following from the Waterford newspaper of the 6th instant:—

"NEWSPAPERS.

"The following has been communicated to us as a circumstance unexampled in the History of that part of our periodical press which relates to Newspapers.

"The writer mentions that a few days ago he gave 14s. for seven of the early Numbers of the JOHN BULL. On enquiring of a Newsman a short time after for one or two other Numbers, he was asked nine shillings for a single paper; and the Newsman assured him solemnly that he had received as high as 15s. for some of the early impressions!

"The early Numbers have got, what a Newspaper never had before —a trade price—which is as high as eighteen-pence a piece, which he has been asked at the John Bull office for impressions of only a few weeks standing.

"Our correspondent adds that his own Newsman has offered him a guinea for his purchase."

Were the case not our own we should mention it as a curiosity only—as it is we quote it with a certain degree of satisfaction.

IT is amusing enough to perceive the TIMES so violently angry with the EMPEROR of RUSSIA, for prohibiting Freemasonry, and all other "secret societies." Its love of liberty is proverbial, and this imperial interference with mysteries and secrets, and words and signs, galls the leading journal sadly. If his Imperial Majesty stood in need of any arguments in defence of the conduct he has thought proper to adopt, he might find abundance which would suit his purpose, written in the cockney's best style, against the existence of Orange Lodges in this land of freedom.

MR. COKE AND LADY ANNE COKE.

A PAMPHLET has been forwarded to us from Norwich containing the case of MARY HUMPHREY: the following is a transcript of its title, and it becomes our duty, as the matter has thus been laid before the public, to notice the work—if it intituled—

"A Letter to THOS. WM. COKE, ESQ. M.P. shewing the distress and misery which have been brought upon JAMES HUMPHREY, MARY his wife, and their five children, by the unjust treatment they have experienced from THOMAS WILLIAM COKE, Esq. and LADY ANNE COKE of Holkham, in the County of Norfolk; by which JAMES HUMPHREY is incarcerated in prison, and his wife and children are brought to a state of ruin. By MARY HUMPHREY.—Norwich: printed by R. WALKER, near the Duke's Palace, and may be had of all the Booksellers in the County of Norfolk."

The history is simply this—when LADY ANNE was at "Ladies wish to be who love their Lords," it became necessary that she should have a nurse to attend her. MRS. HUMPHREY applied for the situation, and referred her ladyship to MRS. STEELE, of Stoke, with whom she had formerly lived, for a character, this character LADY ANNE received, and was "perfectly satisfied." In order to do justice to MRS. HUMPHREY, we will give her account of the consequent interview with her ladyship:—

"Some time afterwards LADY ANNE sent for me to go to Holkham, and I went accordingly, but on my arrival, I found her Ladyship could not be spoken with, and I was ordered to go down again the following morning, which order I attended to, though I was prevented being there so early as was appointed, by necessary attention to my infant: on seeing MRS. TURNER, she observed that LADY ANNE had enquired for me several times; after a short space, I was ordered up stairs to LADY ANNE'S apartments, who inquired if I had weaned my child. I said, I had began to wean it; she also inquired if I had ever been at service, I said I had not. After some unimportant observations, LADY ANNE desired I would hold myself in readiness by the 10th of December, to come at any hour she should think proper to send for me. On retiring, I enquired of MRS. TURNER what dresses I should procure to wear during the time, she said silk, & white; occasionally I might wear a coloured gown, but that I could not dress too smart for LADY ANNE."

As it will save time to state the case with more brevity than MRS. HUMPHREY chooses to use upon the occasion, it may be only necessary to add that after a consultation with her friends, LADY ANNE resolved not to employ MRS. HUMPHREY, and having informed her of the change in her intentions, gave her three one pound notes. MRS. HUMPHREY having expressed her discontent at this, the steward gave her eighteen sovereigns in addition, and, as we should have thought, MRS. HUMPHREY ought to have been extremely well satisfied therewith—instead of which, she sends the following account to LADY ANNE, which as a curiosity in itself, and one of the most splendid instances of impudence and attempted imposition we ever happened to meet with, we give entire.—

MRS. HUMPHREY'S ACCOUNT.

"Wells, 14th January, 1823.

"MRS. "Total	£283	0	0"

Having dispatched this insolent and outrageous demand, the woman, having received no favourable answer, sends a letter to MR. COKE, threatening to publish the affair to the world, which she has done, and the book has been forwarded to us from various quarters, in order that we may attract public notice to it, which we readily do—but with very different feelings or motives from those which our friends imagined would actuate us upon the occasion.

MR. COKE is a Whig, and as a Whig we hate him; we detest his politics, and have no great respect for his intellect; but we must be allowed to discriminate—and when the private conduct of MR. COKE and his Lady are dragged before the public by a threatening virago, it becomes our duty to take the side to which justice and candour attach us—and we have no hesitation in declaring the attack of this woman upon MR. COKE and his family, to be most outrageous and unwarrantable; her language intemperate and insolent, and her pretended charges absurd, extravagant, and ridiculous beyond belief.

One part of the subject assumes a more serious aspect, for MR. COKE is charged, in the title-page, with "incarcerating "MR. HUMPHREY in prison"—upon seeing which we imagined that the overbearing landlord had consigned a suffering tenant to jail in his anger, or that he had foreclosed a mortgage, or seized his goods, or ejected him, or oppressed him, or some such thing; instead of which, MR. HUMPHREY was arrested for a debt incurred by MRS. HUMPHREY, for articles of dress to enable her to hold the office of nurse to the Lady ANNE. Before this oppression and barbarity are admitted, let it be recollected that MRS. HUMPHREY received nearly twenty

...ds from Lady ANNE, and that if she exceeded this sum ...the purchases she tells us she made, she must have the ...ey she bought, which she may sell again, and so relieve ...husband from the distress which she, and not either COKE ...Lady ANNE brought upon herself.

...The passage with which this excellent dame concludes her ...ter might teach the Patriarch of Holkham a good political ...son. It refers to the advantages likely to arise to the ...PLE by the distribution of his large property amongst his ...riors. But we will not mingle public with private matters ...: in this discussion the COKES are decidedly right; and ...w so seldom we are able to admit such a fact, that we are ...willing to spoil its effect by the recollection of any thing ...traneous.

THE EXCESS OF LIBERALITY.

A remarkably smart and well-done bit of "foolery," called ...e Trial of the REV. EDWARD IRVING," has been recently ...blished, and is, we believe, in very general circulation—it ...in fact, a collection of all the criticisms which have ap... in the various London periodical publications put into ...wd in the mouths of their respective editors, and delivered before ...e bar and jury; the idea is evidently borrowed from that ...imitable jeu d'esprit "The Trial of HENRY BROUGHAM," ...the "New Whig Guide." We will extract part of the ...ross-examination of the editor of the TIMES, by MR. C. ...PHILLIPS, as a fair specimen.

"MR. PHILLIPS—MR. CORBETT, you are perhaps aware, has done ...e the honour of agreeing with you in opinion as to the present case?

"Honour, Sir! I know nothing about it; I am no reader of his trash.

"Did not you quote him at times?

"Yes, the blustering blockhead will start across our path now and ...en, when we like to stir him up with our long pole a little, for the ...ertainment of the public. But he is so nauseous a dog, that when we have ...casion to quote from him, we never defile our pens with the task, ...t condition to the compositors, that they may print from his own de...rable pages.

"Admirable delicacy indeed! Now, Sir, let me ask you, who have so ...ely condemned MR. IRVING as a man of mean understanding, whe...r you have not at the same time condemned SIR WALTER SCOTT as ...der of no imagination"—Yes, I have.

"And LORD BYRON, as destitute of all poetical talent?—Yes.

"Enough, Sir, you may go down.

"I am going down, Sir.!!!"

This is extremely smart upon the OLD TIMES, who, with ...e ing exceeding the usual bonds of modern liberality, pub...sh on Thursday the following account of the work.

"A very clever and amusing jeu d'esprit has just been published, ...der the title of Trial of the Rev. ED. IRVING, M.A. The witnesses ...the prosecution and the defence are the various writers in daily and ...ekly publications, who have expressed opinions against or for the ...verend orator. Great ingenuity is shown in the cross-examination ...f these supposed witnesses, whose depositions are made to tally ...most revelation with their actually written criticisms. This piece of ...humbug it at once so smart and so free from all malignity, that it de...erves general circulation. There is a frontispiece, representing the ...ame in five different positions, which is an additional proof of CRUIK...HANK'S humorous conception and executive dexterity."

We here perceive that there is "no malignity" in saying ...at the OLD TIMES is "going down," and the exposition of ...s vulgarity and scurrility," we are told by its editor, is ...merely a "piece of pleasantry"—"vastly agreeable, no ...oubt," and mighty candid in the Cockney, some would say; ...ot others, more wise in these matters, would look upon it as ...glaring exposition of the humbug of writers who can be hired ...praise a book which it is clear they never have read, or (we ...ould say) even seen—for the "frontispiece" to the work to ...hich the skilful TIMES refers as an additional proof of ...UIKSHANK'S "humorous conception and executive dexterity," ...not by GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, the clever artist they allude ...bout is a performance, neither humourous nor dexterous, ...a namesake of his.

THE TREAD MILL.

No subject which we have treated since the commence...ent of our career, has excited a stronger interest, or pro...uced more numerous communications to BULL, than that of ...e Tread Mill; indeed, the letters we have received are not ...ore remarkable for their number than the variety of opinions ...hich they contain, and we have delayed till now resuming ...e consideration of a question, certainly of very great im...portance, in order to give them every attention.

...a particular class of our correspondents who accuse us, ...ersecution it may be called), of having fallen into the ...ake of a party headed by SIR JOHN COX HIPPISLEY in ...pposition to the Tread Mill, we must reply by distinctly ...claring that we took up the subject before we had seen SIR ...HN'S book, and that our observations were made upon in...rmation actually received from the House of Correction in ...ld Bath Fields; that we spoke after a careful examination ...the cases to which we alluded, and that we did not know ...e nature or contents of SIR JOHN'S book till subsequently, ...en he was kind enough to forward it to us—when finding ...e strongest proofs contained in it of similar conduct at a ...rmer period, we made use of it as corroborative of the ...timony we felt it our duty to lay before the public.

The letters which we have received from Magistrates upon ...e question we put out of discussion at present, because, as ...e terrible engine in the hands of the Police, we do not mean ...question the efficacy of the Tread Mill; we neither wish ...dispute its legality, because, upon the principle of "doing a ...ong right to do a little wrong," we conclude the Justices of ...e Peace are fully authorized to send a Lady and Gentleman ...the Treadmill for a month, who have been detected by ...e watchman in a flirtation after sun-set upon Wa...rloo Bridge—all this we desire studiously to throw over...board at present, because, we hope and trust, such parts of ...e question will be shortly set at rest by the higher powers ...the country.

...hat we go against, and all that we have yet strenuously ...ged, is the application of this laborious toil to females, ...d we have carefully read over all the papers and documents ...ating to the discipline so directed; but as our object is to ...ake the matter fairly discussed, and by no means to "raise a ...ry" against a system highly approved by some of the best ...ds, and most excellent amongst our countrymen, we will content our...lves by laying before our readers one or two documents, ...hich may aid the consideration of the subject.

...e first is a letter addressed to a work called the "Lon...n Medical and Physical Repository," by SIR JOHN COX ...IPPISLEY; but which SIR JOHN has transmitted to us, ...nceive that the lateness of its date would prevent its ...ppearing in that publication—it is a reply to a letter which ...e have not seen, and indeed bears more upon the general ...ntages of the Tread Mill than its particular injurious...ss to women. The accompanying communication from ...ich corroborates, however, the distressing accounts of ...ffect upon females, and the horror which has been excited ...n the goal of NEWPORT, a town in the Isle of Wight. ...submit it without any observation.

THE EDITOR OF THE LONDON MEDICAL AND PHYSICAL REPOSITORY.

...ing allusion to the 'visiting Justices of the Notting...hamshire House of Correction,' under the signature of MR. HUTCHIN...SON, surgeon of the establishment, having appeared in your last jour...nal, with some observations on a communication which I thought it ...my duty to make. GENERALLY, to the magistracy, in the course of last ...year, I cannot but notice that when MR. HUTCHINSON speaks of 'the ...wheel (in the House of Correction in Cold Bath Fields,) had been ...accident on the machinery by which the boys at work on another ...miserably crushed,' he merely observes, 'I can only assert that acci...dents of this description have not happened in the Nottinghamshire ...rence, excepting by the extreme carelessness of those on the wheel.'

If MR. HUTCHINSON had considered the incident deserving his notice ...at all, I should have expected from his candour that he would not have ...withheld the facts stated in the first page of the circular communica...tion upon which he has commented. He must have observed that, with ...reference to the 'official returns of the visiting magistrates, printed ...by order of the House of Commons,' the question was put, 'Why, may ...it not be asked, are the various accidents of the most serious complexion ...passed over without the slightest notice whatever, that, in different ...prisons, have followed the use of the tread machinery, particularly ...those that have occurred from the breaking the shaft, or continuation of ...the axis, four times in the prison of Cold Bath Fields? Nor has the ...shaft at Brixton escaped a similar lot, and without the influence of ...such a bias (as has been noticed,) it would be inconceivable that a re...port, which correctly states that the Tread Mill discipline was applied ...to females in the former prison, should be silent as to the chief motives ...for its discontinuance.'*

I will not trespass, Sir, upon your pages with the repetition of de...tails which are now pretty generally before the public. Having my...self made an unsuccessful attempt to resist the introduction of this no...vel and, as I conceive, injurious discipline, in a considerable provin...cial establishment, where for many years I had acted as a visiting ma...gistrate, it is under the present circumstances most consistent with ...my feelings to request the discontinuance of my appointment to that ...highly responsible office. I have also thought it no less my duty to ...submit to the public the communications which have become sub...jects of much discussion—I can accuse myself for withholding two let...ters only, from professional gentlemen, whose opinions differ from ...those which constitute the greater part of the correspondence which ...has extended to so great a length.

I will only further observe, that I conceive all the material obser...vations of MR. HUTCHINSON are fully answered by anticipation in DR. ...GOOD'S letter of the 7th of June last: that letter, with some addi...tional notes, has been sent to the press for a reprint, and should any ...advantage result from the sale, or of that of the more extended corre...spondence, it will be applied to the general benevolent purposes of the ...Society for the Improvement in Prison Discipline. Of DR. GOOD'S ...professional merits, MR. HUTCHINSON has spoken very handsomely. ...I think it not less my duty on the present occasion to introduce a foot ...note which appeared in the publication adverted to.†

I have availed myself of a visit of MR. COLE to his family, resid...ing in this county, to request his attestation of the several facts which ...occurred in his repeated visits with DR. GOOD and myself to the prison ...in Cold Bath Fields. Since which other casualties of the same de...scription have occurred, though MR. HUTCHINSON sees no probability ...of their recurrence, except by the extreme carelessness of those on the ...wheel. My own opinion, nevertheless, is so much at variance with ...that of MR. HUTCHINSON, that I am fully persuaded that it is not ...within the means of all MR. CUBITT'S efforts to effect any adequate ...guard against their recurrence.—I am, Sir, very obediently yours,

West Cowes, Isle of Wight, J. C. HIPPISLEY.
August 29, 1823.

P.S. As it is of some importance that the professional character of DR. GOOD should be well understood on the present occasion, I have added a foot note from the correspondence addressed to the Home Department, p. 122.

LETTER OF MR. COLE, SURGEON TO THE NORTHERN DISPENSARY, TO SIR J. C. HIPPISLEY, BART.

West Cowes, Aug. 28, 1823.

DEAR SIR,—I have no hesitation in answering your question as to "the accuracy of DR. GOOD'S statement of the facts and observations on those occasions when I visited with him the House of Correction, in Cold Bath Fields"—nor have I any difficulty in avowing my opinions on the subject as a professional man, being in entire concurrence with those of DR. GOOD.

During my visit to my family connexions in this place, I have taken an opportunity of viewing the Tread Wheel in the Prison, at Newport, where it is admitted that casualties similar to those which, in a greater extent, have taken place in the Prison at Cold Bath Fields (as described by yourself and DR. GOOD) have also occurred—both men and women have here frequently fallen from the wheel, and one man recently received a fall, with much injury, which confined him near two months under the care of the medical attendant. The remonstrances of the women against the discipline have been so powerfully urged, even against the strongest menaces of the keeper, that he has been obliged to forego the practice of putting them on the wheel.

The keeper observed, that the discipline was so severe, that it deterred many who otherwise would have submitted to the imprisonment rather than pay the fines which exempted them from it;—if such be the fact, I need make no comment to you, Sir, who have so perseveringly investigated this subject, on the inconsistency of such inflictions as well as the inequality of punishment which is made dependant, in a certain degree, on the pocket rather than on the delinquency of the offender.—I have the honour to remain, dear Sir, your's, &c.

ROBERT COLE.

Having laid before the public these letters, which embrace at once the consideration of the moral as well as physical effects of the new discipline, it becomes our duty also in fairness to publish the following communication from MR. JACKSON, the surgeon to the House of Correction in GUILDFORD, which most assuredly gives a complete contradiction to every statement heretofore made as to the injury done to female health by the Mill, as well as to those which have been made with respect to the "waste of flesh," so minutely described by the Matrons of Cold Bath Fields, and the mischiefs accruing to the hands of the labourers.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR,—I read (with no small degree of surprise) in your paper of the 24th of August, some observations relative to the use of the Tread Mill, together with copious extracts from SIR JOHN COX HIPPISLEY'S work, in which a truly horrible account is given of the sufferings of the prisoners in the House of Correction at Cold Bath Fields.

These observations and extracts are so completely at variance with the state of things as they exist in the House of Correction at this place, more especially with regard to the effects of the wheel on the female prisoners, that I am induced to trouble you with an account of the weight of all the women who have been admitted into this prison between the 1st of May and the 1st of September, by which statement I trust I shall be able to show that (if increase of weight be a proof of improved health), the WOMEN ARE IN better case than when they were admitted.

By this statement you will perceive, that, with very few exceptions, the women have gained considerably in weight, and of those who have lost weight, two, viz. HILTON and HARRIS, were labouring under disease at the time of admission, on which account they were seldom put upon the wheel. I beg leave to add, that I have witnessed none of the bad effects of the wheel on the hands of the female prisoners, as mentioned in SIR JOHN COX HIPPISLEY'S work; and with regard to the dreadful consequences described by DR. MASON GOOD as likely to result from the labour of females on the Tread Wheel, I most positively declare, that no such consequences have existed here. The prisoners, and more especially the women, are in good health—the few cases of sickness which have come under my care have generally been chronic diseases of long standing, and were so at the time of admission into this place; and I do most solemnly declare that I have as yet witnessed no bad effects on the legs, arms, or bodies of the prisoners from the use of the Tread Mill.

My object in troubling you with this is to elicit truth, and to do away what appears to me, judging from its effects in this place, a groundless objection to a humane, useful, and harmless instrument of punishment.

If the above be deemed worthy a place in your Paper, you will oblige me by inserting it.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

EDWARD JACKSON,
Sept. 2, 1823. Surgeon to the House of Correction, Guildford.

P.S. On visiting the Prison this day I found that the Mill was not at work, on account of the want of corn,—the men were in their different airing yards, and the women all employed at needle-work, at which they appeared to be very expert, not one of them complaining of horny or blistered hands.

We admit that we were beyond measure surprised at this striking variation from everything we had previously heard upon the subject of the practical results of the Mill labour, and from the opinions of many experienced medical men.

As we are, upon all other subjects, so are we upon this, perfectly independent and unbiassed; having published certainly a most staggering communication against our own doctrine, we think we may fairly request the indulgence of our readers for not pursuing the "Tread Mill" any farther till we get some satisfactory reply to the apparently unanswerable testimony of MR. JACKSON.

One "Magistrate of Berkshire" begs to know what we mean by "disproportionate labour," and "the inaptitude of women to work," we mean simply this, that we would have as there is at Cambridge—spinning-houses, or needle-work houses, (a sedulous application to which might be compelled,) for females—we mean that each woman should toil at that, which was difficult and disagreeable to her, but not injurious to her health. The Tread Wheel seems too much like a quack medicine, when it is applied indiscriminately to both sexes and all constitutions—make labour irksome, but do not make it prejudicial, because Magistrates have no right, whatever they may think, to do that than ensure the performance of healthful toil.

Suppose, for instance, several of the Members of the present Whig Opposition were brought up, some for gambling in St. James's-street—some for flirting at the French play—some for breaches of the peace—some for frequenting a disorderly house, and so on—no Magistrate will pretend to say that it would be an equalization of punishment to put HUME and GREY BENNET upon the same wheel to fag, or that it would be a fair thing to set them and their associates to the toil which the law decrees to a gang of vulgar full-sized coal-heavers? Certainly not. Then how, upon our principle, should a judicious Magistrate act? Set them to do that which, without injuring their bodily health, would worry and annoy them beyond measure.

We would not attempt to direct the course of justice; but we think her end would be fully attained if HUME were sentenced to multiply seven figures into seven three times a day for a month without a blunder—CREEVEY to be decent and well behaved in society for a fortnight—SIR ROBERT WILSON to get returned for Southwark at the next election—LORD ERSKINE not to talk of himself—COLONEL DAVIES to put a regiment through DUNDAS'S manœuvres without clubbing it—the DUKE OF GLOUCESTER to point out his right hand from his left six times running—BROUGHAM to be sincere, and keep his nose still for four and twenty hours together—LORD GREY to be master of his own temper, and LORD HOLLAND master of his own house, for a month each. All this might be done without any swelling of hams or breaking of bones, and in a similar manner work might surely be apportioned to the weaker class of criminals at Brixton or in Cold Bath Fields.

DR. COLLYER.

WE have been requested to insert the following testimonials respecting DR, COLLYER :—

"I have waited with some anxiety (because the public have called for a distinct avowal on this point,) for DR. COLLYER'S permission to state, that I am the individual who attended him at the bath. Three weeks ago I offered an affidavit, if it could be judged necessary, on this subject When DR. COLLYER, perhaps from an over delicacy of feeling, observed, that 'as unblemished reputation of more than 20 years had failed to secure him from malignant representations, arising out of a circumstance of such ordinary occurrence, he could not make up his mind to subject any other person to imputations, the bitterness of which he himself so dearly abided.' I could feel, individually, no difficulty in this case; and should be unworthy my profession if I were not prepared both to discharge its duties, and to meet their consequences. It is only necessary to appeal to the medical world for instances of the dangerous effects of a protracted continuance in the warm bath; fatal syncope has been produced by it. Such an occurrence nearly befel DR. COLLYER at Margate, some years ago, from inattention on the part of the attendant of the bath, and his particular malady, at the time of my professional attendance, required special medical treatment. (Signed) THOMAS COX, M.D.

"St. Thomas-street, Sept. 6."

(COPY.)

"From the frequent opportunities which I have had of witnessing the kindness and benevolence which DR. COLLYER has evinced towards diseased and distressed objects, of both sexes, applying to him for relief, both pecuniary and in procuring them such attention as their diseases might require, I beg leave to offer my humble testimony to the belief of the uprightness of his motives, as well as the purity of his conduct. This opinion is corroborated by the evidence most unequivocally given him by each of the persons sent to me by DR. COLLYER for my professional opinion, expressive of their grateful recollection of his great kindness to them, and the propriety of his conduct on all occasions. (Signed) "J. CALLAWAY,

"Sept. 5. "Surgeon, High-street, Borough.

"I am eager to afford my testimony of the attention paid by the REV. DR. COLLYER, to anatomical, surgical, and medical studies, of which I have for several years been a witness. DR. COLLYER was in the habit of attending my lectures on anatomy and physiology, and has devoted many hours with me to the examination of anatomical preparations. As an evidence of the Doctor's attention to subjects of this nature, I may mention that I have in my possession a manuscript of the Doctor's, containing the passages in the works of Cicero, "de Natura Deorum," describing the several senses; and a literal translation from the Latin, made by the Doctor to point out the deviations from the original in the description given in 'Hervey's Meditations.'

"I have had opportunities, from my former connexion with the Royal Humane Society, of witnessing DR. COLLYER'S great anxiety to understand the various methods recommended for the recovering of the apparently dead or drowned, and I have had the pleasure to give him instruction and explanations on this subject. I know that he has been instrumental in the preservation of human life, and the records of the Society to which I have alluded would confirm this assertion. I have been also witness to DR. COLLYER'S unwearied zeal in the formation and promotion of many institutions for the relief of the poor and diseased, and he has never failed to exert his utmost ability and influence to obtain for them the most illustrious and distinguished patronage. "THOMAS JOSEPH PETTIGREW."

"I hereby certify, that between three and four years since, I was called to a boy who, while bathing in the Surrey Canal, was seized with cramp, and went to the bottom, where he remained until taken up by some person, to all appearance dead; the means usually resorted to under such circumstances were employed, and to the active co-operation DR. COLLYER at that time afforded me, we succeeded in restoring him; and on several subsequent occasions, when we were not so successful, have I found DR. COLLYER exceedingly kind and active in those attentions such melancholy cases require.

MR. HONE THE BARRISTER.

WE have received a communication from the gentlemen who signed the "circular" respecting the case of MR. HONE, in which they request us to state, that we did not receive the "circular" which we published in our last Number but one, either from MR. HONE himself, or from any of those whose names are subscribed to it.

It is most true we did not, and we are most ready to relieve MR. HONE from the suspicion that he did any act likely to attract public attention, either to his own circumstances, or the faults of a brother, for whom, as our present correspondents say, "he cannot cease to feel a deep affection and anxious interest."

The letter was forwarded to us by a person zealously anxious for MR. HONE'S success, and we, with the best intentions, (for which we are pleased to see the gentlemen who have since addressed us give us credit) added our influence to its circulation. It is by no means unsatisfactory to hear from the same source, that "the subscription has materially increased in consequence of our publication;" but our correspondent adds, "that MR. HONE having suffered much in his health and spirits, was painfully affected by seeing his name in a public newspaper, and feels still more distressed at being supposed accessary to the publication of a letter which seems to make him the author of a public censure upon the conduct of so near a relation."

We are extremely sorry to have wounded MR. HONE'S feelings, or to have given to the world that which it appears was intended exclusively for the profession; we most willingly here bear testimony to the fact, that the letter was not sent to us by MR. HONE nor with his knowledge. We must be allowed to add, however, that considering the vast number of gentlemen now engaged in the law, (supposing the letter originally to have been written under the sanction of MR. HONE) the communication of his sentiments and opinions upon his brother's public conduct to so large a body of persons seems to us to differ very little—at least in spirit—to a general publication of them to the world at large.

THEATRICALS.

A wretched piece, called the Great Unknown, was produced at the Haymarket last week, distinguishable by nothing but its unequalled dulness and vulgarity. As it was decidedly condemned, after a patient hearing, we shall say no more about it, but merely express our surprise that, with a theatrical stage manager, such a thing could have been brought forward.

The folly and impudence of the persons, whoever they may be, who have inserted an advertisement in the morning papers, begging the public to suspend their judgment upon the conduct of MR. PATON, who has carried off his daughter from the Haymarket in violation of her engagement, are pretty nearly equal; for they seriously beg the town to understand that the Manager of the Haymarket Theatre is in possession of DR. MATON'S certificate of the young lady's ill health. We suppose the Haymarket Manager is also in possession of the Manchester newspapers, and the Exeter newspapers, by which he (as well as the public) will see that this invalid, who quitted the theatre where she first gained the favour of a London dramatic audience, in the middle of the season, on account of her ill health, actually sang at a concert in Manchester two or three nights after, and went from Manchester to Exeter, a distance of upwards of two hundred miles, to fulfil a laborious week's engagement in that city.

A silly body, who is very angry with us because we have not inserted some stuff which he has sent us, tells us we have no right to call MR. PATON a fool—for he is not a public "character." We beg to observe, that a man controlling (to her evident disadvantage, we admit) a public performer, is perfectly amenable to public censure; and as for calling MR. PATON a fool, we can only say, if it should turn out that he has not been moved to his present conduct by folly, we have no objection to substitute another term, which would certainly, in that case, be infinitely more applicable.

MR. ROBINS has forwarded us the following letter, to which we give a place :—

"Piazza, Covent Garden, Sept. 6, 1823.

"SIR—I am reluctantly compelled to make a few observations by reason of a letter (without a signature,) which I found in the public prints, on my return to town, on the subject of MR. BRANDON'S dismissal. This document I take it for granted is genuine, although it would be better if it were sanctioned by the signature of the lessees. In this statement they have introduced my name, and, as I think, with as little good taste as marks their progress throughout this dispute. The lessees have ventured to assert, 'that the whole course of proceeding was adopted by my advice; that I acted for him; that every thing was done by my advice: that I would support him; that I was his friend, and that he should not want money,' &c. &c. The lessees are certainly entitled to the faculty of guessing tolerably well; for, although these sentiments are generally in unison with my intentions, yet all that I ventured to state to their newly elected treasurer, when he deigned to allow twenty-four hours to remove himself, his wife, and five children, with their furniture, wearing apparel, &c. I did say, 'that he should find he had a friend who would see that justice was done to him; that it might be expensive to dispute their right to turn him into the streets, which I would cheerfully sustain; and that I would be his friend so long as I was persuaded of his entire innocence.' Thus far and no further I plead guilty; but by way of rendering my interference somewhat questionable, I am represented as a proprietor and member of the sub-committee of Drury-lane Theatre. Now, in the name of common sense, I would ask, what has this to do with my humble attempt at defending him from persecution, as unprovoked as it is without parallel, towards a valuable servant? These gentlemen appear to have a great predelection to publish all letters that have passed on this subject—perhaps they will indulge the public with the correspondence that took place with myself, in which it will appear (in answer to an insinuation that in good set terms means, I have no right to defend the weak against the powerful,) that I admitted their right, but questioned the policy of exercising it by such arbitrary means as would discharge a man unheard.—There may be a small portion of the public who will inquire and be desirous to know why I have become a party to this dispute. I will state it without hesitation.—On learning three or four weeks since that MR. BRANDON was dismissed, and without any pretext, at a moment's notice, I wrote to MR. KEMBLE, with whom I have been intimately acquainted for more than 20 years: he immediately came to me, and after some pause admitted the fact of his dismissal. I intreated him to give me some reason for this unexpected measure, assuring him that if it arose out of dishonesty or disaffection to the Lessees, I had not one word to offer in his favour; but that if it was merely the effect of caprice arising out of a desire to get rid of all the servants who had been so long attached to MR. HARRIS, then in such a case I intreated of him to pause before he became a party to an act of cruelty, in which I assured him the public would take a lively interest. This meeting ended by a promise that he would use his best efforts to procure an interview, at which CAPT. FORBES, as well as MR. BRANDON, would be present; he did so, and, with the old veteran, we presented ourselves to them in Committee. The first observation was not of a very encouraging nature: it was to desire BRANDON to retire, as they preferred seeing me alone. Now this entirely defeated the purpose I had in view, as from a slight knowledge of LAVATER, I could have more readily discovered UNANDON'S guilt or innocence by the off-hand manner in which he would have been required to defend himself against the prepared list of charges the Lessees had to bring forward (for it must always be remembered he was kept in the dark as to the nature or extent of them, until he boldly challenged them to the proof;) nor could I get a private communication of the nature or extent of them. Upon which I said to CAPT. FORBES—let me conjure you to give to this invaluable servant the 200l. a year for his life, for if it is refused, be assured you will find it more difficult to treat with the public when their minds may be irritated, than myself. He promised to think of it, and after the conference, I was to hear from them. CAPT. FORBES having previously observed that MR. BRANDON must quit his house, I told him that could only be accomplished by his giving him the 200l. a year; for if the Lessees declared war I would take especial care the old veteran should fight with a house over his head. Here ended our conference. In a very few days a step was taken to dispossess him of his house and home, which I trust for the sake of humanity, the Lessees can shew they took no part in; for to thrust a man at seventy, after 55 years hard and faithful services, out of his house, and to possess themselves of his few chairs, and tables, which, like himself had grown old in service, betrays so much cruelty and oppression, that I am bound to suppose them innocent of this outrage, and conclude it to be the act of their servant, ROBERTSON, who took the lead, and headed the gang who entered his dwelling. It is suggested by the Committee, and in somewhat equivocal terms, that I have undertaken a great deal for MR. BRANDON. I am not aware that I owe to them any explanation on this point; but as it has become matter of public discussion, I will most willingly state my motives, and I trust that on a fair comparison with those which have induced the Committee to thrust from them in his latter days, a faithful and attached servant—my motives will be very much at variance with theirs. It is within the knowledge of many persons who move in the theatrical hemisphere, that for the last twenty-five years I was honoured by the regard and friendship of the late proprietor of the theatre, and subsequently with the late director of this property (MR. HENRY HARRIS) I have been in the closest terms of intimacy; from each of them I had learned, that during a progress of fifty-five years, the attachment and integrity—the complete devotedness of the veteran BRANDON were without parallel. I have had, during that period, opportunities most frequent to corroborate this favourable report; and, going back to the days of SHERIDAN, I can well remember his assuring me that half the advantage, and much of the ascendancy that Covent Garden Theatre then possessed, might be traced to the uncommon activity and solicitude of BRANDON. At the rival theatre his exertions have been always duly felt and appreciated. I ask then, if such a man, with a character unsullied for fifty-five long years, and the highest testimonials of regard and esteem of his employers during the whole of that period, does not entitle him, when on the verge of the grave, to the sympathy of those who have felt, and are now willing to acknowledge his services? And if a stronger proof could be required by those who may be sceptical overmuch, I would urge his poverty—'proof as strong as Holy Writ'—this honest fellow, with a salary quite inadequate to support himself and family (60l. a year,) could not have lived, or even vegetated, without the aid of those friends who knew how to appreciate his proverbial civility and attention. But remaining honest to the back bone, he finds himself, at the age of seventy, without a guinea, dismissed without the least pretence, and turned into the streets to seek a new mode of procuring for his few remaining years the bare means of subsistence. I ask again, could I refuse my humble means to assist in such a dilemma a man so cruelly treated; and I leave the propriety of my conduct to the decision of those who can feel for distress and poverty, brought on without a stain being able to be fixed on his character. It has been MR. BRANDON'S duty to correct the mis-statement of the lessees in respect to the confining his civility to those only who paid him for it. I am sure he has accomplished this to the satisfaction of every one, and to the complete discomfiture of his enemies; and this brings me to a subject I had not intended to touch upon, viz. that MR. BRANDON always has been the servant of the public much more than his more immediate employer. And if I prove solicitude which marks the public feeling in this dispute. MR. B.'s salary of 60l. a year, with a small house to reside in for the convenience of being constantly on the spot, will appear to every one a remuneration equal to the full expectations of a ticket porter, but not at all adequate to the situation of box-book and house-keeper for one of the patent theatres; in the former capacity he has to attend from 11 to 4; in the latter his occupation never ceases—for so great has been his anxiety that seldom or ever did he retire to his pillow till one or two o'clock, in order that he might ascertain the safety of the property from all apprehension arising from fire; but this is not all—it an actor or actress was ill (a case of every day occurrence) [illegible] substitute for the performer who was ill, has a thousand and one times been effected by his earnestness and activity: this, admitted, is a servitude of no common order, and yet he receives 60l. a year. The public, however, it has been urged, always pay his benefit—be it so; but did the proprietors assist him on that occasion? No; they charged 200 guineas for his night, at so advanced a period that they could not hope for half this sum on a subscription; this is precisely as much as MR. KEMBLE pays for a benefit, in the part of the season; it is, therefore, ridiculous to suppose that in gratitude to the lessees on this score. To his late employers, in the acknowledgement of a thousand acts of kindness, and constant expression of their high opinion of his integrity and [illegible] services; but the lessees have said, "What have we to do with it?" Having made an arrangement for managing this property for a period of eight years, they unhesitatingly proclaim that twenty years of servitude, and with health and capacity that rendered his peculiar line of duty far above any competitor that could be procured, end without a fault, unless it be of attachment to a thing even to the very walls of the Theatre, is to be turned off with an insincere offer of two hundred pounds a year (for they themselves intended to pay only sixty pounds) and to accept whatever proposed for any part of it; trust and verily believe the bare recital of these facts will be quite sufficient to enlist the [illegible] his active service. Such disinterested and faithful attachment more than half a century is no where else to be found on record, worthy of being held out as an incitement to others, who on [illegible] of the grave may not be so unfortunate as to fall into the hands of [illegible] getful masters; and if I am not greatly mistaken, the echo [illegible] a newly decorated house was intended to usher in the [illegible] "Committee Management" will be sadly frustrated, unless [illegible] should in the interim prevail, and either restore him to [illegible] place, or give him this paltry annuity, for the few short years [illegible] yet be spared to him. The poor fellow is all but broken-hearted, I doubt much, if he is not encouraged by the public, he will [illegible] with his grey hairs in a few short months to a premature grave. trust, however, I have appreciated their feelings better, and [illegible] (whose servant he always has been) will not desert him in this [illegible] need.

"To conclude—The defence of BRANDON will be admitted by [illegible] one as most satisfactory; it is a triumphant refutation of every [illegible] —a plain unvarnished tale, that needs not the foreign aid of [illegible] ment."—It illustrates most forcibly the opinion of his innocence [illegible] I ventured to give to the Lessees, and leaves them, as I think, [illegible] out a pretext for an unparalleled act of cruelty. It may prove a [illegible] some lesson to future directors of a public theatre, that in [illegible] every man is accounted innocent until his guilt is proved, [illegible] where good sense presides, it will for the future be thought essential [illegible] enquire before they pronounce; for, had this necessary [illegible] been adopted, the public would have been spared this detail, and the lessees continue in the enjoyment of public favour. As the [illegible] stands, the public, who seldom interfere unless a very strong case is made out, will make this their own, and with a lively recollection of his innocence (now proved to demonstration) will lend their powerful aid to see that even-handed justice be dealt out to the poor and [illegible] tute, as well as the rich and powerful.—I regret exceedingly that I have trespassed so long on your patience.

"I remain, Sir, your very obedient servant,

"G. H. ROBINS."

We have received also a very sharp and pertinent answer to MR. ROBINS'S letter, the chief points of which turn upon the right, which, the writer observes, MR. ROBINS himself admits, of every master to remove his servant, without reference to the public. If MR. MEUX or MR. BUXTON [illegible] for the advantage of their breweries to remove a foreman, is it to be made a matter of appeal to all their customers—or is it to be supposed that they would necessarily sell one barrel of porter the less for such conduct?

Our reason for not inserting our correspondent's communication entire, is, that in offering fairly and impartially columns to both sides of this question, we meant both [illegible] officially. We have adhered to our resolution, and have inserted all signed and authorised papers; but we believe [illegible] would be considered more than impartiality if we were to publish attacks and fresh matters of charge against one party without real signatures, admitting only authenticated documents from the other.

MR. JOHN BRANDON has requested us to insert a letter his on the subject. We do not recollect to have seen it; but if he will forward it to the office, we shall most certainly add it to the mass of papers already accumulated in this literally important matter.

NEGRO SLAVERY.

IN laying before our readers the following extracts we wish most anxiously to call their attention to the interesting pamphlet, "A Voice from Jamaica," being a Reply to MR. WILBERFORCE'S Appeal in behalf of the Negro Slaves in the West Indies, by the REV. GEORGE WILSON BRIDGES, B.A. of Trinity College, Oxford, and Rector of the parish of Manchester, Jamaica, from which they are taken. After a impartial perusal of its pages we trust that henceforth some degree of Christian charity will be exercised towards our West Indian brethren, and that the calumnies and falsehoods of their enemies will not be received as "truths of Holy Writ."

"Your success in the cause you now prematurely urge must undoubtedly be purchased by the ruin of many thousands of your countrymen; by a deluge of blood, and by the certain misery of the very objects whom you professedly labour to relieve. You possibly imagine that your life may be closed ere such consequences would follow to [illegible] its philanthropic character; that it would obtain an expiring [illegible] from the immediate accomplishment of your cherished project. Is [illegible] on St. Domingo, that fostered child of your disordered fancy; [illegible] are your boasted results of emancipation to be traced, but in the [illegible] palling features of a barbarous revolt? Its population is virtually [illegible] free, less civilized, and less happy, than that of Jamaica; and [illegible] only, because it was immaturely plucked from the parent-stem, [illegible] had it remained the fullness of its time, it would have obtained strength sufficient to enable it to strike deep root, and bear the [illegible] fruits of freedom, harmony, and peace."

"You, Sir, have never been in the West Indies; you have never viewed the habits of negro life in its indigenous state; nor ever communication with that people, other than what you may have [illegible] tained from some casual intercourse with a few individuals in London who have visited you as their avowed protector, and the ready [illegible] to their tales of woe: yet you conceive your knowledge of their character to be perfect. As perfect, Sir, as is that you would form of an English peasant, from the artful tale of a wandering street-beggar at your door."

"You state that 'no attempts have been made to introduce among them,' the negro slaves, 'the Christian institution of marriage.' Now, Sir, this I positively contradict by stating, that I have myself married one hundred and eighty-seven couples of negro slaves, in my own parish, within the last two years, all of whom were encouraged by their owners to marry; and that the anxious wish at present expressed by them to bind themselves by this sacred institution, we ascribe as one of the first-fruits of the dispensation of Christian principles."

"LAS CASAS, the great philanthroplst, whose labours were for years, exclusively directed to the melioration of slavery in the Indies, before he ventured to charge his fellow-countrymen with cruelty, made repeated voyages across the Atlantic, to inform himself correctly on the subject of their actual condition; unwilling to bear say evidence only, to cast imputations upon men who perhaps might not deserve them; and thinking it not too much to sacrifice a little of ease and opulence to effect strict justice in the cause he undertook."

"Instead of endeavouring to gain the most satisfactory information you sit calmly in your library, compose speeches, and write books on countries you have never visited; on the imaginary condition of a race of people four thousand miles from you; and in defamation of many thousand of your countrymen, who are actually labouring with [illegible] the same cause of humanity, though, from experience, with more circumspection; content, it should seem, to gather the little informa-

Mr. for the conviction—That is as good an offence as the other.

Clarkson—That is not the offence on this conviction.

Adolphus, for the Appellant—God bless the makers of such Pe-cases! Happy subjects of this happy land of freedom, and the who watch over them! We have no occasion to talk of coun-
Bastiles and secret inquisitions.

Parke cross-examined by Mr. Adolphus—Her sister is a woman: they had been at work till 12 o'clock, and wanted re-
She went in with no watchman, nor was she in company
Mr. Adolphus contended that the first offence had not been and therefore the conviction must be quashed. The Chair-said in that opinion, and that they were bound to have proof allegations in the conviction before the Magistrates. The sentence ordered the conviction to be quashed. Mr. Adolphus might to be taken by his client with some caution, as the next would be for a penalty of 100*l.* and the third a forfeiture of which, he understood, was aimed at by some persons.

Millar appealed against a conviction before Matthew Wyatt, whom he had been sentenced to three months hard labour as a husband.—Mr. Law, in support of the conviction, stated, founded on the Act of the 3d of Geo. IV. generally known the New Vagrant Act, which declared that any person be found in any dwelling-house, coach-house, stable, out-or enclosed place, who could not "give a good account should be deemed a rogue and vagabond, and might be any one Magistrate to hard labour for three months.
Millar was found in the enclosed burying-ground of the Isaac, in company with another person, at one o'clock on of the 23d August, having with them a shovel and a sack.
was what is vulgarly called a body-snatcher, who was to have extortion, and convicted under the Vagrant Act.

Clarkson, Counsel for the appellant, admitted that his client burying-ground, which was an enclosed place; but unless decided to do away with the trial by Jury, it could not be to the present case. The Act did not say that a person

Adolphus called two witnesses, one of whom proved, lived in a house in Gregory's Rents, for the interest of 15*l.* and the other proved that his house was rated parish books.—The Chairman, after some consul-Bench, which was unusually full, said it was their that the conviction should be confirmed.—The ap-

LATEST NEWS.

Paris papers of Thursday, and the Pilote of Friday, arrived yesterday by express. They contain a report of the capture of the Trocadero, which report is from Count Bourdesoult, addressed to the Duke D'Angoulême. The Count, after describing two attacks made upon the place, under the command of Count Obert, concludes thus:—"The result of these two attacks are, the taking possession of the Trocadero and of Fort St. Louis; the line of entrenchment, and all the batteries, where we found 53 pieces of artillery, from 1000 to 1100 prisoners, and 40 officers, among which are the superior Commander of the Trocadero, named Garces; 120 killed, from 250 to 300 wounded, and a great quantity of powder. A great number of men jumped into the marshes, where they were drowned; 2 or 300, at most, were saved in the boats. The 1700 men which composed the garrison of Trocadero have been almost destroyed in this affair."

An article in the Pilote dated Madrid, Sept. 3, says:—"On the 21st, 22d, 24th, and 25th of August, there were several attacks from Cadiz; the Constitutionalists lost but few men, and they have reinforced the Cortadura. An important correspondence has been discovered and stopped by an English agent. Amongst the papers there are autograph letters of Ferdinand VII. to a Sovereign of the North; and there is an idea of the cession to France of the provinces on the other side of the Ebro, and the Isle of Baleares to Russia. The Constitutional Government will not listen to any propositions to accommodate matters, as long as the French are in the Spanish territory. The troops of Lopez Banos, O'Daly, and Actor, have retired, and Tage Queseda is gone in pursuit of them."

Letters from Constantinople of the 15th says that the Porte had received official information that peace with Persia was concluded on the 16th of July. The new French legation is expected in the month of October: great preparations are making at the Palace for its reception. Another fire had broken out, which destroyed several hundred houses.

It is with sincere regret we state that the Lord Chancellor is at present indisposed at his seat in Dorsetshire, but his Lordship's state is not of an alarming or dangerous description.

On Friday morning Mr. Walters, the King's Messenger, arrived at the Foreign Office, Downing-street, from Paris.

On Friday Sir Herbert Taylor held a Levee as Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief, at his office in the Horse Guards.

Mr. Graham ascended in his balloon from White Conduit Fields on Friday, about five o'clock. The balloon, previous to ascending, came in contact with a pole, which the crowd broke to allow the balloon to ascend; the broken part of the pole penetrated the balloon, and made a rent of about three feet, which caused the gas to escape. Notwithstanding which, Mr. Graham ascended, and after traversing about a quarter of a mile, the gas escaped so rapidly that the balloon descended in some adjoining field. Mr. Graham escaped with little injury.

William Davies, one of the collectors of the land and assessed taxes for Lewisham has absconded. The deficiencies amount to 1800l.

A few days since a serious accident occurred to Mr. Freemantle; while he was seated on his horse reading a letter, the animal took fright, threw the Right Hon. Gent., and broke his collar bone. He is in a fair way of recovery.

At the Old Bailey Sessions, yesterday, John Wright, formerly a Bow-street Officer, and Wm. Young, were indicted for breaking into the house of Samuel Chamberlain, with intent to steal. They were found Guilty—Death. Samuel Thomas Fielding, aged 21, was found Guilty—Death, of stealing a gold watch, &c. from Thomas Lane. Wm. Norton, aged 17, George King, aged 14, and Edward Rawley, aged 19, were indicted for a burglary in the house of Charles Rugg, and stealing a shawl, a veil, and other articles. Norton and King were found Guilty, and Rawley was acquitted.

Among the various interesting Memoirs lately published, those of Count Rapp excite considerable attention. General Rapp was one of Buonaparte's most distinguished officers, and in his quality of Aide-de-Camp, accompanied his master through all those brilliant but desolating campaigns, which at length terminated in the ill-judged and fatal expedition to Russia, of which he gives a most animated account.

We are requested to state that the Third Edition of the New System of Practical Economy is now on Sale at the various Booksellers, and that the Practical Estimates of Household Expences, adapted to families of every description, which are added to this new edition, are sold separately, price 2s. From the exertions made to collect facts, and to obtain correct information and corroborating proofs from persons of experience in the various walks of domestic life, these Estimates will, it is hoped, be found deserving of confidence, and, on account of their general utility, recommend themselves, not only to the more opulent readers, but to young beginners of every class—to those of limited fortunes—to such as may deem it prudent to retrench, and particularly, to that numerous and valuable class of society, who depend on their own industrious and economical efforts alone, for the comfort, advancement, independence, and respectability of themselves and their families.

Since the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced officially in the House of Commons that Government had determined to abolish Lotteries, the demand for Tickets and Shares at PIDDING and Co.'s office has been greater than was ever experienced before; this, however, is partly attributable to the cheap prices at which they are selling, though it is not to be wondered at, that, now it is known there is a limitation of opportunities, every one is anxious to have a "farewell venture," and as the time is so near at hand, (25th of this month,) when the first drawn Prize is to have £10,000 extra, it is perfectly natural that the recollection of Pidding's success should guide the purchasers to the Lucky Corner, No. 1, Cornhill.

The Hebe, Margate Steam Yacht, and unquestionably the best steam vessel for accommodation and power in the trade, made her passage (upwards of ninety miles,) last Monday in the short space of six hours and ten minutes.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, SEPT. 15.—Various reports are stirring. The most accredited are, first, that the King of Spain assumed the Duke de Guiche that he would not alter a title of the Constitution; the second, that at the moment when the fleet was acting against Cadiz, a storm came on and destroyed several vessels. Some say Mina has left Barcelona, and is in the field with a large Army; others, that the Spaniards have retaken the Trocadero. It is said that a Journal of the South even announces the plague at St. Sebastian's. It seems certain that the yellow fever has shewn itself at Port St. Mary. A cordon has been established to prevent communication with the other troops. I give this as I have it, without vouching for it, but it is from very high authority.

SEPT. 17.—We learn this moment that on the 15th the fever that had shown itself at Passages, has not made any progress, and it has not appeared any where out of the town. The cordon, which has been drawn, is very strict, and has prevented the inhabitants from forcing it.

Letters of the 5th inst. had arrived from the head-quarters of the French army at Port St. Mary's, stating that General Alava had handed there on the 3d from Cadiz, with propositions to the Duke d'Angouleme for a cessation of hostilities, with a view to a capitulation. In reply to this communication, the Duke de Guiche was sent off by the French Generalissimo with a flag of truce into Cadiz, to deliver a verbal notification to the Governor and the garrison, that no propositions whatever could be listened to by the French, unless, as a preliminary step, the King was set at liberty. The Duke de Guiche returned with a peremptory refusal of this demand, and the attempt at negociation was consequently broken off. General Alava going back to Cadiz. It is said that on the 4th, when the refusal of the French to treat became known, a serious tumult took place in the streets of Cadiz. The bombardment of the city commenced on the 5th from the fort of Matagorda. The French officers and soldiers were buoyed up with sanguine expectations of the result of the general attack, which it was supposed could not be delayed many days.

We are on the eve of great events. Last night our troops began to throw bombs into Cadiz; they were thrown from the extreme point of the Trocadero. In a short time we succeeded in setting fire to the vast magazines of wood and brandy which were near Fort Puntales. The conflagration continued during the whole of the night. The flames were so great that we could read by their light. The troops have been exercised, and every thing is now ready for their debarkation. Gen. Bourmont has set off; it is by him that the attack is to be directed, and there is no doubt that we shall be successful. All our soldiers are full of ardour and enthusiasm. Since the taking of the Trocadero we have been continually occupied in establishing batteries, to obstruct the navigation, and to injure the shipping of the enemy, as well as their works near the Trocadero.

PORT ST. MARY, SEPT. 6.—Hostilities have ceased during the two last days. No more firing is heard, but our preparations for attack are unremitting. The Duke de Guiche has returned here. A new division of our ships has come into the roads, we believe from Corunna. The Prince Generalissimo has sent in his Ultimatum. If it is not immediately accepted, hostilities will recommence without delay. Another Spanish Flag of Truce arrived this morning; but his Royal Highness would not receive any more. The presence of the King in the French camp, and the entry of our troops into Cadiz, are the necessary preliminaries to any treaty.

SEPT. 8.—General Alava returned yesterday evening, and did not go back again until this morning. He passed the night with Gen. Bourdesoult. Dissensions prevail in Cadiz; the inhabitants of the suburb of Lavina have risen and declared for the King; the Regiment of the Princess and that of the Cadiz Volunteers, have refused to obey the orders of Riego, who has returned to Cadiz, after having abandoned the troops who embarked with him at Malaga, and who were forced by our cruizers to regain the shore, where they will encounter forces that will fight with them. It is asserted this morning there were fresh conflicts in the streets of Cadiz. It is fully expected that every thing is drawing to a close. An order was given to the fleet this morning not to fire upon Cadiz until fresh instructions are issued. There is a report that the Cortes have offered to place in our hands, immediately, the King and Royal Family, but that they demand power to keep possession of Cadiz and the Isle of Leon for several months, as a security for the Members composing this factious Assembly.

ANDUJAR, SEPT. 5.—A Spanish Messenger has just arrived from Malaga, into which place the French troops entered yesterday. Riego, after having committed every kind of atrocity, embarked with eleven or twelve hundred men, taking with him Zayas, who had commanded before his arrival. He threw him into the hold of the ship, threatening to shoot him if he attempted to go on shore.

Under a false interpretation of the Decree of Andujar, the Revolutionists detained at Antequera and Lucena had been set at liberty, which caused a strong agitation in all the country. But since the explanation of that Decree given by the Prince Generalissimo himself, the individuals really guilty have been re-incarcerated, and justice will be done.—(Restaurateur.)

MATARO, SEPT. 11.—During the night of the 9th of September, a swell having obliged the French ships of war to stand off to sea, the enemy, to the number of eleven or twelve hundred men, came out from Barcelona in fishing boats, and made a descent on the point called Castillo de Mougat, between Mataro and Barcelona. These troops, commanded by the Constitutional Ex-Governor of Cordova, were composed of nine hundred Spaniards and three hundred French and Piedmontese exiles. Immediately, on their landing being known, the tocsin was sounded in all the villages, the peasants armed, and at Mataro, which contains considerable magazines, the wisest means were taken to defend the town in case of attack, but the enemy's corps, informed of our good arrangements, and finding themselves pressed in their rear, threw themselves into the mountains and on the road to Hostalrich. If they make a movement to throw themselves into that place, they will find there a force ready to oppose their designs, fourteen or fifteen hundred French and Spaniards. They are pursued and closely pressed by the General of Brigade Baron Nicolas, having under his orders the 3d Horse Chasseurs, and two battalions of light infantry. While these things were passing, the garrison of Barcelona, wishing to occupy the blockading corps, and to make a diversion, effected, on different points, sorties, which were without success. The Constitutionalists were every where beaten. Our howitzers have set fire to Barcelona three different times, and the troops of the King have acquired new rights to the admiration of the French and foreigners.

MADRID, SEPT. 7.—The Duke del Infantado arrived at Port St. Mary on the 4th inst. He immediately had an interview with the Prince.—A plot has been discovered at Palma, the object of which was to deliver the Balearic Islands from the revolutionary yoke, and to deliver Port Mahon to the French squadron in the Mediterranean.—A Russian officer has been arrested there, who gives himself out for a German, travelling for a mercantile house in the North.—Tranquillity begins to be established at Madrid, except the Inquisition everything is returning to its former footing.

SEPT. 10.—The Government has received news direct from Cadiz, dated September 6.—The King and his august family were in good health. The same letters, written by persons worthy of faith, relate that since the taking of the Trocadero, a violent misunderstanding had broken out between the garrison of Cadiz and the troops of the line. The latter have set fire to magazines situated outside the landline. The latter have set fire to magazines situated outside the landgate; they have also burned the faschines, and sandsacks with which the batteries of fort Puntales was provided.—These circumstances, the batteries of fort Puntales was provided.—These circumstances, joined to some others, have given rise to the mission with which Alava joined to some others, have given rise to the mission with which Alava was charged. It is added that this emissary had a long conference with Major-General Count Guilleminot. The object of his mission, was charged. It is added that this emissary had a long conference with Major-General Count Guilleminot. The object of his mission, it is asserted, was to make proposals to give up the place, and set their it is asserted, was to make proposals to give up the place, and set their Majesties and the Princes at liberty, after having subjected themselves Majesties and the Princes at liberty, after having subjected themselves beforehand to a Constitution formed on certain bases. His Royal beforehand to a Constitution formed on certain bases. His Royal Highness the Duke of Angouleme replied, that until the King was Highness the Duke of Angouleme replied, that until the King was free, nothing could be determined on.—Gazette Extraordinary of Madrid.

From the Madrid Gazette of Sept. 11:—The Governor of Cadiz, Valdes, having convoked the authorities of that city, it was resolved rather to make the ruins of the city their sepulchre than to enter into any compromise with the Duke of Angouleme. They also hope that the equinoctial gales will drive away the blockading squadron, and enable them to escape with impunity.

SEPT. 12.—Gazette Extraordinary of this Evening.—Extract of a letter from Lieut.-General Juan Caro, from Malaga, to the Minister of War:—"Your Highness—The Captain General of Grenada ordered me, with the French General Loverdo, to execute the military movements prescribed by Gen. Molitor. At four o'clock in the evening I received orders to march alone on Malaga.—(It ends with the capitulation of Malaga and the articles.)—The important place of Santona capitulated on the 11th."

Telegraphic despatch transmitted from Bayonne, dated Hebuzier-Mayor, Sept. 11—Marshal Lauriston to his Excellency the Minister at War:—"Yesterday, at eight o'clock in the evening, the trenches were opened before the Citadel of Pampeluna, along a line of 2,000 toises in extent, and at a distance of 200 toises from the Citadel. Notwithstanding the fire from the enemy, successive storms, and a continued rain, which fell in torrents during two hours, our soldiers braved every thing. The whole parallel was covered with balls and grape shot, and we had only a small number wounded."

LISBON Aug. 25.—It is certain that in the Island of Madeira some ill-disposed persons, connected with secret societies, formed a plot for the purpose of separating that island (unknown to its inhabitants) from the Portuguese dominions. The number of these disturbers of public tranquillity, however, was not sufficient to excite the fears of the Government.

Letters from Rome of the 4th inst. state, that the Conclave was opened on the 3d, and that a ballot had taken place, which was not productive of any result.

BRUSSELS, SEPT. 12.—Letters from Rheims, in Champagne, say, "The Decree of the King of the Netherlands, prohibiting the importation of our wines into Belgium by land, is a fatal blow to this principal branch of our commerce."

CASSEL, Sept. 7.—The author of the threatening letter to the Elector not having been yet discovered, a new proclamation has been issued, offering a free pardon and a reward of 5000 dollars to any person who has knowledge of the crime, and will make a confession of it, disclosing the real author; his own name shall be concealed; and any person who gives information calculated to discover the author shall be suitably recompensed.

BERLIN, Sept. 6.—The Provincial Assemblies are beginning to be called into existence. His Majesty has appointed the Chief President Heydebreck to be Commissioner for the first Assembly of the Estates of the Mlarch of Brandenburg and the Margravate of Lower Lusatia, and commanded him to convoke the Estates.

FRANKFORT, Sept. 8.—The Allgemeine Zeitung has an article from Copenhagen, dated Aug. 26, which states, that "on the Report of M. Von Morgenstern, Danish Chargé d'Affaires in Spain, respecting the republican revolution at Seville, his Danish Majesty had sent orders to M. Morgenstern to go to Madrid, considering the Regency of Spain as the only legitimate Government of that kingdom, till his Majesty's deliverance."

MUNICH, Sept. 7.—The Government has lately issued severe Ordinances against secret societies and other prohibited associations. All candidates for civil or ecclesiastical offices are bound, before they are admitted to examination, to produce certificates from the police, testifying that they have taken no part in any of those associations, and the strictest attention shall be paid to the performance of this condition when persons are to be appointed to offices, especially in the public schools.

SEMLIN, Aug. 28.—The Janissaries and the Jamaks continue to make the capital of the Ottoman Empire the theatre of their excesses. A Turkish courier brought letters to the Pacha, the day before yesterday, from Constantinople, and it is generally reported that on the 19th of August these Jamaks and Janissaries set fire to the quarter of Tatavolo, situate near the quarter of Kassem Pacha, which was lately burnt, to the north east of the Hill of Fera, which is almost wholly inhabited by workmen in the arsenal and the cannon foundery. It is added, that nearly 7000 houses were reduced to ashes in this new conflagration.

RIO DE JANEIRO, July 1.—Proclamation.—"INHABITANTS OF BRAZIL!—The Constitutional Government, which does not guide itself by public opinion, or which is ignorant of it, becomes the scourge of humanity. The Monarch, who does not know this truth, precipitates himself into an abyss, and his kingdom or empire into an ocean of misfortune. Providence granted me the knowledge of this truth, upon it I founded my system, to which I shall always be faithful. Despotism and arbitrary acts are detested by me. I lately gave you a proof, among many which I have given you. We may all be deceived, but Monarchs seldom hear the truth, and if they do not seek it it never appears to them. When they know it they ought to follow it; I recognized it, and did so. Hence though at present we have not a Constitution by which we are governed, yet we have bases, established by reason, which must be inviolable; these are, the sacred rights of personal safety, of property, and the immunity of the house of a citizen. If they have been attacked or violated hitherto it is because your Emperor was ignorant of the exercise of such arbitrary and despotic acts, which are at all times improper, and contrary to the system we have embraced. Be assured they will, from this day forward, be religiously maintained. You will live happy, secure in the bosom of your families, in the arms of your tender spouses, surrounded by your dear children. Regardless of the incautious persons who seek to call in question my constitutional disposition, it will always appear triumphant, as the Sun dispels the thickest clouds. Depend on me as I depend on you, and you will see democracy and despotism repressed by a just liberty. "THE EMPEROR."

His Majesty, our beloved Emperor, had a severe fall from his horse on the 30th of June, by which some of his ribs were fractured. His Majesty was for several days in a very weak state, which caused great alarm. We have the satisfaction, however, of saying that his health has been in a progressive state of amendment, and he was able, on the 17th, for the first time, to walk a little in his chamber.

Letters from Alexandria mention, that the Pacha of that place was about forming an army of Egyptians and Africans, but the destination of this force was not known.

QUEBEC, Aug. 20.—His Excellency the Governor in Chief and suite left town on Saturday for Sorel. It is with deep regret we state, that a serious accident occurred on Saturday evening to the Rev. Archdeacon and Mrs. Mountain. They had gone a short distance in their gig, accompanied by an infant daughter, and a returning by the St. Lewis road, owing to some circumstance, came in contact with another vehicle, and were all thrown out. Mrs. Mountain was considerably hurt, but the injury received by the Archdeacon is the most serious. The child escaped without injury.

On the 15th Aug. in lat. about 49, N. and long. 20, W. the brig George the Fourth, of and from Waterford, in ballast, bound to Quebec, with 115 passengers from Ireland, going to settle in Canada, and a crew of 14 hands, including the master, was run down in a ramichi, bound to London with timber, and sunk immediately; of the 129 persons on board 123 sunk with her. The mate and five of the seamen got on board the Hannah, whose condition was almost as hopeless as that of the vessel they had escaped from, for the violence of the concussion had carried away her masts, stove in her bows, and the brig Mary, South Shields, from Prince Edward's Island, for London with the whole of the Hannah's crew, 14 in number, from a watery grave. The Mary being short of provisions, the bark Henry, Surf, of South Shields, from Moscow Island to London, took five of the Hannah's crew on the 17th; and on the same day Captain Harding, of the American brig Osprey, generously relieved the Mary, by taking out six survivors of the George the Fourth, whom he has treated with the most humane attention.

IRELAND.

HORRID MURDERS.

At about eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, a party of Whiteboys attacked the house of Mr. Thomas Franks, of Lisnagoran, near Rockmills, within five miles of Fermoy, and murdered that gentleman, his wife and his son, Mr. Henry Maunsell Franks. Our correspondent states that the miscreants "murdered the old man by cleaving a thunderbrass through his side—and the wife and son, by beating out their brains with a bar of iron."—Cork Paper, Sept. 11.

An inquest was held on the family of Mr. Franks, which lasted 11 o'clock on Wednesday, the 10th, till six o'clock in the evening. Five witnesses were examined, and after a very solemn investigation a verdict of "Wilful Murder against some persons unknown" was returned.——The following is the substance of the evidence:—Franks's house had been burned some time ago, and was undergoing repair. Not a door had been yet put up; the family principal lived in one small room, not 12 feet square, the window to which were not put up, and the wind was excluded only by a curtain. On the day of the murder, Mrs. Franks and her son had been at Kildorrery, and returned to a late dinner, which had been scarcely over, when a noise was heard in the passage. Mr. Franks rose and said, "Here are my friends paying me another visit;" and proceeding to his wife and son to remain quiet, he went outside the door; here he was met by a fellow of large stature, between whom a contest commenced. The man was not armed, and they struggled with their hands, Mr. F. retreating to the parlour; on his reaching which, the insurgents rushed in and soon filled the room. At this time a servant girl about 14 years of age, of the name of Mary Meagher, a most intelligent creature, slipped under a table, and concealed herself there, witnessed the horrid scene which followed. The leader of the insurgents, a ruffian dressed in woman's clothes, demanded of Mr. Franks his arms; Mr. Franks said he had none in the house, but that he would, if they chose, accompany the party to the Block-ditch to get them from Mr. Smith, who had them. The leader then said "Boys, do your duty," and he himself upset a table on which a lighted candle was placed, which being extinguished, he again laid it down at a fire in the room. Mr. Franks, his wife, and son were on their knees to beg for mercy, assuring the leader of the party that they had no arms, but here no mercy was found. The savage, at the first moment's delay, snatched a short gun from one of his followers, and placing the feet of the unhappy father, fired and lodged two bullets in his body. They then proceeded to dispatch the son, and here a dreadful struggle ensued; the mother, only anxious to preserve her son, and regardless of her own safety, clung to the wretched young man, as if to screen him from the vengeance of the assassins. They repeatedly attempted to force her from him, and told her to retire to another room, but she would not leave her son; they then struck her with a heavy weapon in the left temple, and literally shattered the head to atoms, from which they beat the son's brains out, and mutilated all the body of the deceased. At the commencement of the horrid work accomplished, a female servant had been shut up by the ruffians in a small room, and they had murdered the young man they thought they heard a groan or sound as if life was not entirely extinct, and the candle having been extinguished, they took the servant from her place of confinement, and one of them holding her by the hand with one hand upon her head down with the other, made her proceed to a cupboard in the parlour, and take out a candle and light it; they then drove two large iron bars, weighing 30 or 40 pounds each, through the dead body, and each man, in succession, took a long three-pronged fork, and repeatedly drove it also into the bodies. It also appeared that one of the ruffians, second in command, was dressed in female apparel, and commanded outside the house, and seeing a woman appear at the door of an out-house, with a child in her arms, he called out to her to go to bed," and placed a centinel on the door. When the above tragedy inside this fellow danced a regular hornpipe, as if delighting in the dreadful scene going forward. The woman of this house is named Glaveen, and gave testimony as above; her son, immediately after the party marching off, mounted a horse, and rode to Kildorrery, where a military party arrived in half an hour at the scene of carnage. It would appear that the insurgents separated and proceeded in different directions, as blood was traced on the roads to Doneraile and Kilcrery.

On Sunday evening last, as Mr. James Donovan, of Trinity [illegible] and Mr. John Quill, both of Tralee, were on a boating excursion in the bay of that town, they landed at Castle Gregory. Almost immediately, while walking together on the road, they were attacked and beaten with pikes in the most cruel manner, by a party of ruffians, and, after considerable difficulty, escaped to the house of the Rev. Edward Day, where they received the protection their distressed situation required. This barbarous attack is supposed to have been made upon these young gentlemen in consequence of having had a row with Mr. Twiss, who gallantly dispersed a party of Whiteboys in a neighbourhood more than a year back, and in so doing killed one of the party on the spot.—Cork Chronicle.

The Westmeath Journal says:—"On Friday evening, the 6th, at about eight o'clock, a number of the 93d Highlanders, now quartered here, amounting to from about 60 to 80 men, rushed forth from their barracks into the town, in the most outrageous and terrific manner, armed with swords, bayonets, bludgeons, and stones, and uttering the most hideous yells as they passed through the streets, attacked indiscriminately every person they met, and severely wounded several of the inhabitants, at the same time breaking many of their windows. The alledged motive for their conduct was, a bearing that one of the men received from some ruffians on Thursday evening.

On Wednesday (10th inst.) about noon, as two volunteers were reaping the crops on some corn fields near the chapel of Ardnaglass, they were pursued by more than twenty men, some of whom had their faces blackened. Two police constables being on patrol, came up and attacked the assailant party, pursued them a considerable distance, obliged them to cross the Sair, and, it is thought, wounded some of them.—Clonmel Paper.

The Limerick Chronicle says—"We are sorry to say that a [illegible] servant lost his life in this county on Wednesday night. He was found dead by his master in mistake for an assassin, through the darkness of the night. To those acquainted with the mild and amiable character of J. C. Heffernan, Esq. it will be sufficient to say, that the error of melancholy mistake has been keenly felt by none more than the gentleman himself.

Yesterday, at two o'clock in the afternoon, about 150 men, dressed in white shirts, a few of whom were armed with muskets and the remainder with bayonets screwed on timber handles, and pikes, attacked Mr. Henry Sheehy, of Ardbohill, near Rathkeale, agent to the Countess of Ormond, on the lands of Ciouralvard, where he was valuing tithes with proctors of his. They were accompanied by a policemen. The ruffians fired three shots on the police before they returned the fire. Mr. Sheehy's party and police, who were commanded by Serjeant Hanna, behaved with great gallantry; the police fired from 40 to 50 shots, two of which took effect, and brought down two men, who were carried away by the whiteboys; they also took one man prisoner named Maurice Joy, and he is now in custody. The insurgents were within about 150 yards of the police before they fired the three shots at them, else there would have been many more shot by the police, who, in consequence of their near approach, and dreading they would close on them, fixed their bayonets on their carbines, and therefore were prevented from taking good aim. A number of women accompanied the insurgents, and were urging them to revenge the attack of the police. The police escaped unhurt.

The following was left, by a party of Whiteboys, in the neighbourhood of Creagh:—

"According to the form of the Canonical sanction I do hereby [illegible] or order to be sint this notice to James M'Donnell, alias Dwyer, Schoolmaster in Creagh, who has fairly Robbed the Publick insisting to survey turf on different Bogs of the Country, for which he is [illegible] I desire him not to attempt to survey or measure [illegible] whatsoever after Reading this notice, or I will send a Scouring [illegible] to visit him that will sweep him off the face of the Earth without [illegible] their notice, let him mind his school and shun Turf measuring on the bog in this Country, so let him be particular and look sharp or [illegible] dont, &c. &c.—No more your friend, "HUFFY.

"Dublin, 5th August, 1823.

"(Burn this the moment you read it.)"—Limerick Paper.

Saturday se'nnight, A. M'Mahon, 50 years of age, was in the act of advance on a flax mill near Armagh, when the forefinger of the left hand was drawn in with a portion of the flax, and dreadfully mangled. The wrist and arm followed: each portion as it passed through being fractured, and mangled in such a shocking manner that the arm required amputation, which was done at the shoulder.

We have much pleasure in stating, that by a letter we received from Athlone, the fever with which the town was afflicted, is now considerably abated, and hopes are entertained of its speedy disappearance.

OLD BAILEY.

WEDNESDAY.—Henry Bardon and John Elder were indicted for stealing on the 13th Sept. feloniously stolen from the person of Wm. Jones sundry pieces of silver coin to the value of 13s. 6d. in the Weaver-road, and near the Hop-poles public-house. The prosecutor detailed the nature of the attack, which was of the most violent description; Elder knocked him down by a violent blow over the right eye, and when on the ground the other prisoner knelt on his stomach and held his head tightly down; Elder then proposed throwing witness into the Canal, that he might not appear against them; Bardon objected to this, saying that they had given him enough of it; prevailed on to this Elder had rifled the pockets of witness, from one of which he took a purse at about 11 o'clock at night; as prisoners left the robbery took place at about 11 o'clock at night; as prisoners left witness, Elder threatened if he gave any alarm to come back and do for him; he was unable to get up for some time afterwards; when he was informed a watchman of the robbery, and then went home and told the following morning (Sunday,) as he was passing the Three Crowns public-house, saw prisoners in the tap-room through an open window; recognised them, and fetched a watchman, who took them into custody; had not drank more than a pint of ale on the night in question; was quite positive of the identity of both the prisoners. The prisoners denied the robbery, and called several witnesses to shew that at the time of the robbery they were at the Devonshire Arms, Lisson Green, but the Jury desired to withdraw, and after an absence of about half an hour, returned a verdict of Guilty against both the prisoners, but recommending Bardon to mercy on account of his humanity in opposing the proposed murder of the prosecutor by Elder.—Mr. Justice Best—Your recommendation is equally merciful and politic—it were well if robbers learned from such recommendation that it was their interest to protect their victims from bodily injury.

James Powell was indicted for stealing five sovereigns, the property of Messrs. Mills, wine-merchants, in Mark-lane. The prisoner was in the prosecutors' service, and received the sum in question for dock charges on wine. These dues only amounted to 5s. 6d. and the prisoner kept the rest of the money. The prisoner gave the four sovereigns to a cabman's wife to keep for him. When the prisoner was afterwards apprehended, he expressed great contrition for his conduct. The prisoner read a written defence, and declared that he became intoxicated with the clerks, and knew not what he did. He had no intention to take his master's money.—The Jury found a verdict of Guilty.

Robert Selby Hele, Charles Knatchbull, and John Watson, were brought up by virtue of a writ of Habeas Corpus from the Fleet Prison, wherein they had been long confined on mesne process, at the suit of an indictment preferred against them by the Warden of the said prison, for riotous and disorderly conduct therein, and obstructing the officers thereof in the prompt execution of their office. The Court ordered them all to be committed to Newgate, in default of bail, and to give 24 hours notice.

James Smith and Rebecca Watson were indicted for stealing a quantity of linen and calico, in value 26l. the property of Mr. Alderman Thorpe. On the 28th of August the servants of the prosecutor made up a parcel of goods, which were, according to order, to be sent to Southampton. Mr. Thorpe's porter carried it to the office of the Southampton waggon, in Friday-street, Cheapside, and the parcel was put into the waggon on the evening of the 28th of August. The property was missed from the waggon on the same night, and was found the next day in the lodgings of the prisoner, upon whom suspicion had fallen. The Jury found Smith Guilty, and acquitted Watson.

TUESDAY.—Richard Chandler was indicted for stealing, on the 21st of August, a silver spoon, the property of her Grace the Duchess Dowager of Rutland. Mary Ann Stevenson was in the service of the Dowager Duchess of Rutland, who resided No. 38, Sackville-street. On the night previous to missing the property, witness left a silver spoon in the scullery, and on her going into it on the next morning, about a quarter before eight, she saw it still there; but in about two hours afterwards it was brought to her by a constable. John Needham, a constable, said, he was in a silversmith's shop in Piccadilly, when the prisoner came in, and offered a silver spoon for sale. Witness asked him where he got it? He said where he had been at work. Witness asked where that was? He said at the Duke of York's, and showed the spoon in the dust hole. The Recorder was of opinion the prosecutrix was not properly described in the indictment; her name as well as title should have been set forth, for there might have been many Dowagers Duchesses Dowagers of Rutland. He therefore directed the Jury to acquit the prisoner.

John Hogan was indicted for assaulting Wm. Henry Wotton, on the 6th inst. and stabbing him in the neck with intent to kill him. The prosecutor and prisoner were in the employ of a baker named Burnett, in Paul's Wharf; the prisoner had some words with his master, but in the night of the attempt the prosecutor asked him to assist in working the dough: he refused, on which the prosecutor observed, that he, the prisoner, did not seem fond of work; they afterwards ate supper, and the prosecutor, with another journeyman, lay down to sleep. He was awakened by the prisoner cutting at his throat, he jumped up and called out "murder." At length the prosecutor threw the prisoner down, and seized a razor which he had in his hand—the prisoner then attempted to tear the wound open, and ran away.—Price Robins, the other journeyman, was awakened by the cries of the prosecutor. He confirmed the particulars stated by the prosecutor. Sheldon, a patrol, stated that he was near the house on the morning in question, and heard Mr. Burnett say that some one's throat was cut. Witness ordered the watchman not to let any one out. He went in and saw Wotton bleeding. He searched for the prisoner and found him in the yard. Prisoner said he had not done it. He said he found the razor in the cakehouse; that he was putting it on a shelf after he had strop; and that it fell on the prosecutor. The blade was then covered. The prisoner's hands and clothes were stained with blood.—Lewis Fouche, watch-house keeper, stated, that when the prisoner was brought to the watch-house he was stained with blood.—Mr. Burnett stated, that he was called up by cries of murder on the morning of the 10th inst. He found Wotton at the bottom of the stairs covered with blood. He told him his throat was cut by Hogan while asleep. Hogan was behind Wotton. Witness asked Hogan why he had not made no answer. Witness pushed him down stairs to the watch-house. He called a watchman, and directed him to the watch-house.—John Herlock, a surgeon, was called to attend Wotton. He found a wound in the neck; it was superficial. It extended to about a third of the whole neck. There were other wounds on the throat. It was impossible that any of the wounds could be the result of accidental fall of a razor.—The prisoner, in his defence, said that in reaching the razor from a shelf, and it fell by accident.—The Jury found the prisoner Guilty.

Susan Thomas Potter, 25 years of age, and genteel deportment, was indicted for stealing a gold watch, the property of Sarah Ann Hall. The prosecutrix is a Cyprian, frequenting professionally the New Cut, New Roads; prisoner was for years her foolish associate, and some years since he became possessed of her watch, as she alleged, for the purpose of having it repaired; this he neglected to return; she did not see him for a twelvemonth afterwards, when he promised to return it; another year elapsed without seeing him, when, meeting him in the City, she had him apprehended.—On being examined—Was intimately connected with the prisoner for two years; when she missed her watch, did not apply to prisoner's friends; had some company; does not recollect meeting the prisoner at the Bank shortly after the robbery; cannot remember having received information of his subsequently to the loss; when she saw prisoner about a year after, he told her he had bought her two seals, and she should not prosecute.—Several respectable witnesses gave the prisoner an excellent character, and the Jury found him Not Guilty.

MIDDLESEX SESSIONS.

WEDNESDAY.—Joseph Wilson, cabinet-maker, an elderly man with a family, stood indicted for an assault upon Sarah his daughter, an interesting girl about 19 years of age, and of genteel appearance, in the parish of Clerkenwell. The case against the wretched man was completely proved by the testimony of the daughter Sarah, and Rebecca, a younger sister, aged 14. Mrs. Smith, in whose house the family lodge, No. 11, Northampton-row, corroborated the facts stated by the witness to have taken place on the 17th of December. She heard the girl was in fits from hearing her, in a violent passion, speaking against her father—"You villain (said the girl), you good for nothing, you want to be my ruin and destruction, but you never shall have breath in my body!" Heard the father say, "For God's sake don't disturb the people down stairs." She answered, "I don't care, you deserve to be exposed."

Knight a shoemaker, lives adjoining to the room in question—heard a noise of "Don't father—leave me alone." Witness looked through a partition—she was struggling and beseeching him to let her go—she made her escape down stairs—this was the 21st of June, on a Saturday night. The prisoner being called on for his defence, went on in a cool, collected, but very incoherent manner with his statement. That the whole was a fabrication and conspiracy. That his daughters kept bad company with young boys, and that he had in consequence threatened to turn them out of doors. His daughter Sarah was in the habit of robbing him and lending the money to Knight: on one occasion she stole a sovereign, and that she hoarded up money that was wanted for the family's support. Gentlemen, I have worked for good education, as you may perceive, and brought them up with a high sense of modesty and moral duty, but they are base enough to conspire against me, at the instigation of Smith and Knight, who is a starving drunken shoemaker, who does not work above half a day in the week. My late wife was a very extravagant and imprudent woman—she ran me 9l. in debt. This girl, Sarah, from nine years of age was a base girl, whom I never could keep from running away from home. I bound her apprentice to a dress-maker, to learn the business, and to run errands. She was turned away from the service of Mr. Barrow for being both a w—e and a thief, as Mr. Barrow will prove.

Mr. Scott, the church-warden, here stood forward to state that the prisoner being questioned by him as to these assaults upon Sarah, did not deny the fact; but said she was not his daughter, but his wife's.

Prisoner—It is true, she is not my child, for she was born before wedlock.

Alfred, the son, an interesting youth, about 15 or 16, was then called as a witness for his father.

The boy wept bitterly, with his eyes fixed on his father.—Deposed that when his sister Sarah last left her father's house, she went up to her father voluntarily and kissed him in an affectionate manner. Never saw any improprieties used towards her on the part of his father.

Prisoner—I will prove that Sarah is a bad girl, and has invented the basest lies against me. One was, that I had starved both her and her sister.

—— Mathews worked with the prisoner—has seen him and his daughters together night after night—never saw any impropriety in his conduct towards them. The night that Sarah took leave of her father, she was laughing, dancing, and singing. Had heard reports to the contrary, and was desired by Knight to watch the prisoner's conduct.

Chairman—This evidence, by comparison, amounts only to this: a person has committed murder, and here is a witness who saw him when no murder was committed.

Knight re-examined.—The prisoner had lent witness three shillings, which he sent down stairs by the hand of Sarah, his daughter.

Sarah—And that has been repaid.

Prisoner—What is the reason my daughter Sarah used to lie in bed after her brother and sister got up?

Sarah—Because I was ashamed to dress before you.

Prisoner—That is false, for she had always dressed herself before me.

The Chairman having commenced his charge to the Jury, he was interrupted by the prisoner, who said, Mr. Barrow was in Court—let him be examined as to his daughter being turned away for being a w—e and a thief, from his service.

Mr. Barrow—She was engaged in the care of my children—she conducted herself much to the satisfaction of myself and Mrs. Barrow—we had a great affection for her, and so far from being dismissed for being a w—e or a thief, the only thing she displeased us in was going away of her own accord.

The Jury, without hesitation, found the prisoner Guilty.

The boy stood in front of the Bar bathed in tears, and with his hand clasped in that of his father, whilst the sentence of the Court was pronounced; namely, 12 months imprisonment in the House of Correction. The boy, on hearing the sentence, exclaimed to his father in blubbering accents:—"Never mind, you shan't want, if I starve, father!"

Prisoner (to the Chair)—"I am basely sacrificed, your Honour, you may rely on it."

The Court and avenues were crowded to excess.

FRIDAY.—Thomas Cato and Joseph Lees were found Guilty of assaulting Thomas Brundley and John Francis, two of the Bow-street patrol, when in the execution of their duty, and were sentenced to be imprisoned three months in the House of Correction.

POLICE.

GUILDHALL.—On Friday Margaret Stewart was re-examined, charged with various frauds, and in one instance with stealing a shawl from a Mrs. Penny, who swore her shawl was on the bed when the prisoner was there, that she missed it immediately she was gone, and that no other person had access to the room. She contrived to furnish herself with some family particulars respecting the person to whom she addressed herself, which would afford a plausible reason for their having been recommended to the great ladies in whose service she represented herself to be. The names she has principally used have been those of Lady Erskine and Lady Dundas, to the latter of whom she stated herself to be housekeeper. In every instance detailed, the lure she held out was the making mourning for 12 servants; but her methods of getting the coast clear to commit her depredations varied according as occasion presented. She was committed for trial for stealing the shawl. The persons having other charges to prefer were informed they might, if they thought proper, lodge detainers against her.

BOW-STREET.—Thursday, William Giles, one of the dismounted patrole, was charged with grossly assaulting —— Smith, the wife of George Smith, in St. Martin's-lane. The prosecutrix stated, that the prisoner pulled her about, and upon resistance being offered, he pulled out his staff, asserted he was a Bow-street officer, and dragged her to the watch-house. The prisoner, in his defence, pleaded drunkenness, and said he was on duty in Hyde Park.—He was held to bail, to answer the charge of assault at the Sessions.

——Dennis was charged with having picked the pocket of Mr. Scanlan, of 48, Mount-street, on his departure from the Haymarket Theatre. The prosecutor said, he saw the prisoner come from behind a coach, and take his handkerchief from his pocket; he grasped his hand, and the thief then gave the handkerchief to another of the gang, who made off with it. He held him until an officer came, and he was taken to St. Martin's watch-house.—M'Donald, the officer, deposed, that at night when the audience are leaving the theatre, the pickpockets are numerous. He had secured five, who were all discharged, the prosecutors not appearing; and almost nightly felonies are committed.—He was fully committed.

A person from Mr. Morris immediately afterwards applied to Sir R. Birnie for his advice, stating, that the parties of the theatre was nightly infested by a gang of the most depraved characters, whose depredations rendered it extremely dangerous to escort gentlemen and their families into their carriages. Sir Richard observed, that there was no other remedy than that of employing a few active officers, who would soon rid the theatre of the nuisance.

QUEEN-SQUARE.—On Thursday a young lady came to the office in a flood of tears, and blood streaming profusely from her. She said she was passing through Old Pye-street, when a fellow, who stood at the door of a house, called out his dog and set it at her; the dog bit her in the thigh, and would have torn the part away, only for some persons who came to her assistance. The Magistrate inquired whether she gave the man any provocation, or whether she was sure he set the dog at her wantonly and maliciously? The young lady said she had not even spoken to him until the dog bit her thigh and tore her severely. The Magistrate ordered her to go to some surgeon and have the part dressed in the first instance; and then, if she pleased, a warrant would be granted against the offender; but her best mode of proceeding would be by an indictment against him, or by an action, when no doubt she would obtain damages.

MARY-LA-BONNE.—On Wednesday, J. Aldred, an elegantly-dressed young man, was charged with stealing a casket, containing trinkets, value 50l. the property of Mesdames Brown. The prisoner, who represented himself to be an Officer of Marines, just returned from the West Indies, had formed an intimacy with the young ladies, who moved in a very genteel sphere, and lately called on them, pretending to be much fatigued, and was suffered to lounge on the sofa; when, being supposed to be asleep, he was left alone; but in about an hour, on the ladies returning to the room, they were surprised to find the bird had flown, and the property was missed. At first it was supposed he had taken it in a frolic; but not hearing any thing from him, application was made to the Police Office, and he was apprehended, when information was made to the Police Office, and he was apprehended, when duplicates for part of the property were found upon him.—Fully committed.

Wednesday being appointed for the final examination of Scott, on the charge of having made a horrible attack upon his wife in the Regent's Park, with intent to murder her, the office was crowded. Regent's Park, with intent to murder her, the office was crowded. He was genteely dressed, and his demeanour composed. The witnesses, five in number, being re-sworn, deposed to the following effect:—On Monday evening, between seven and eight o'clock, the attention of two women was attracted by seeing the prisoner and his wife apparently quarrelling in St. John's Wood-road, Regent's-park, and eventually they perceived him catch her round the neck with his left hand, and strike her with the right repeatedly. They did not interpose, being some distance from him; they did not then discover he had struck her with any instrument; she screamed violently and incessantly, and at length fell apparently senseless beneath his blows. Mr. Oliver, the coach proprietor, then rushed with one of his men from his yard to her assistance, just in time to save her life, as he had commenced an attempt to plunge a small sharp scissors into her left side, with a view, as they thought, of stabbing her to the heart. She being rescued from his grasp, was removed, covered with wounds, the blood flowing in torrents from her temples, neck, and arms, and the prisoner, after making an effort to escape, was lodged in custody. The woman was carried to Mr. Lucas, surgeon, of Laventon-place, who dressed her wounds, and she was taken home in a state of stupor. It was then ascertained that the prisoner had previously been there, and not finding her within, had commenced a regular attack upon china, glass, &c. and even destroyed the door and windows, until he was obliged to make a hasty retreat from a constable, and unfortunately in his way, labouring under the utmost irritation, produced by his own bad temper, met his wife in the Regent's Park, and there attacked her as described. He had frequently been in custody for his ill-treatment of her, and only on Monday was liberated on his own recognizance to keep the peace, his wife having exhibited articles of the peace against him. Mr. Lucas, a surgeon, proved having examined Mrs. Scott, and finding 11 wounds or stabs on her arms, breasts, temples, wrists, hands, and head, produced by a blunt instrument; some of the wounds were most extensive, and he could not announce her out of danger. Mrs. Scott was then supported into the office; her head was bound up, her left arm was in a sling, and she was so weak from loss of blood as to be almost unable to speak. Being allowed to sit down, she said, that on Monday morning last she attended at the Sessions House, Clerkenwell, to prefer, in consequence of the prisoner's excessive brutality, articles of the peace against him. Having done so, and he being, as a matter of indulgence, only held in his own recognizance, she quitted the Court, and proceeded to one or two places she had to call at, and in the evening was on her return to her cousin's, in Portland-lawn, when, as she was crossing the Regent's Park, she met her husband (the prisoner). He seized her by the throat, and nearly choaked her; she called to him to go away, as she did not want to see or speak to him; and being apprehensive he was going to cut her throat, she caught hold of his hand, when he said, with an oath, "I have not got a knife now, but I will murder you on this spot." He then struck her on the temple, she thought with a key, and he repeated the blows; she felt the blood trickling down her face, and she screamed for assistance and fell down: he still continued to stab her, and she being no longer able to resist, lost her senses.—The prisoner raised his eyes with a cat-like slyness at her during the recital, and as she proceeded his features became fixed in a sullen grin of savage anger. He made no attempt to speak, except once, when he muttered, "The —— has sealed my fate; I wish I had killed her!" The prisoner then, in a very agitated tone, and seemingly trembling with rage, said there was a gentleman dressed in black, who saw the whole; I wish he was called; my wife lives with him.—The prisoner was fully committed to Newgate for trial at the next sessions, under Lord Ellenborough's Act.

LAMBETH-STREET.—On Wednesday, an information, brought by the parish officers of St. Botolph, Aldgate, came on to be heard against J. Harse, for refusing to support his father. The information was laid under a clause in the 43d Elizabeth; the son, who was a single man, held a situation of 100l. a year in a public office, and his perquisites amounted to about half that sum. The father had been an inmate of the workhouse two years, had formerly been a free waterman, and had brought up a large family, but who had forsaken him in his old age, and even in the various indispositions which he had experienced since being in the workhouse, had never condescended to pay him a visit.—The sight of the poor old man, who stood by bathed in tears, seemed to have no effect on the feelings of his son, who complained of the hardship of imposing the task on him, observing that he was 30l. in debt; he, at length, offered to allow his father 1s.! a week. This, the magistrate observed, would not do, and ordered him to pay three; but on his requesting the time not to commence till Christmas, they fixed the sum at 2s. 6d. per week till that period, and 3s. afterwards.

APPRENTICES.—An appeal having been made to the Commissioners for the Borough of Taunton, against an assessment for an apprentice, with whom a premium of 150l. was received, and who boarded and lodged in the house of the appellant. The Commissioners upon hearing the case, considered that it came within the exemption contained in the 59th Geo. III. cap. 118, as the premium was considered as received for instructing the apprentice in the knowledge of his trade, and not for his maintenance, and in consequence relieved him from the assessment. The surveyor of the district being dissatisfied with their determination, the Commissioners, at his request, stated the case for the opinion of his Majesty's Judges—by whom it was decided that the determination of the Commissioners was correct, and allowed accordingly.

Several children have recently fallen victims to small-pox in that city, and the disorder continues prevalent.—Bath Paper.

A few days since, John Mills, treasurer to a Building Society at Tunstall, in the Potteries, absconded with the funds of the Institution. He had placed the cash, with which he was entrusted from time to time, in Messrs. Kinnersley's bank, in his own name; and on the 4th inst. he drew the whole out, (which, with the money he had in hand belonging to the Club, amounted to upwards of 500l.) and went to Liverpool. The constables were on board a vessel bound to America, which was to have sailed about Thursday last.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We are sickened to death with the unnecessary shouts of paragraphs with which some of the Morning Papers are crowded, and of which Mr. Beckford, of Foothill, is the subject. We have no objection to the puffs of the auctioneers, nor of any persons interested in the sale of the property—we have no wish to rake up obsolete stories, nor recur to past occurrences, but we must be permitted to say, that the fulsome repetitions, day after day, of Mr. Beckford's name, the columns appropriated to anecdotes of him, and the minute details of his mode of living in his retirement, are proofs of bad taste and bad morality, from which Englishmen must turn with disgust. The only thing which can give an interest to these adulatory advertisements is the novelty of the matter they contain, for till they undertook to call public attention to Mr. Beckford, it was not the fashion even to mention his name.

We can certainly recommend the Outlines of Canova, by Mr. Mosns, to public attention: they are specimens of that style not equalled by any English artist whose works we have yet met with.

The Intrigues of Lord Darnley and the Corporation of Gravesend, or four, would hardly be of sufficient interest for the public eye.

We agree with A. N., *and shall certainly devote some part of our time and some portion of our paper to the consideration of the "*Vagrant Act." We differ toto cœlo with the Courier upon the subject, and are really of opinion that the present state of the Metropolitan Police and the Magistracies require considerable attention. The case of commitment by Mr. Swabey is only one of many. We will enquire into facts before we say more.

J.P.'s letter and communication are only delayed till next week, from want of room.—The rest of our correspondents must stand over, as must Mr. Cole's letter.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 21.

The King held a Court on Friday at Windsor, at which Parliament was prorogued to the 25th of November, and a proclamation was signed for the issuing of double sovereigns.

GRAND DINNER TO MESSRS. DENMAN AND BROUGHAM.

We are sorry to say, that during the last week there has been a good deal of rioting in and about Glasgow, "as if," the Glasgow Chronicle says, "by a preconcerted plan of operation," in which after the ineffectual interference of the police, the military were called out, and some lives lost—"a patrol paraded the streets all night, and a number of suspicious persons were lodged in the Gorbals Police Office."

On Thursday a dinner was given in Glasgow—not by the inhabitants of that place particularly—to Messrs. Denman and Brougham, of which we have received various accounts—the fourpenny report of proceedings, published by Mr. Malcolm in the Trongate, opens with the following sublime paragraph:—

"This delightful meeting has just concluded. Six hours of more intense intellectual pleasure we never before enjoyed. Patriotism, most enlightened, and most elevated—eloquence, most rich, varied, warm, and vigorous—liberality, boundless as the mind that conceived it, and spotless as the cause that inspired it, shone through the whole proceedings. The halo that was shed was not merely mental, but moral; while to the brightness of its lustre was added a sort of kindredness of feeling which made you lose the distance which rank and reputation placed between you and your illustrious guests in the cordiality and conviviality of the occasion. Mr. Brougham and the excellent members of the house of Hamilton were received, not so much as the distinguished leaders of the opposition in Parliament, but as old friends—old school fellows, awakening old associations; whose kindness of manner levelled all distinctions, and made you regard them with a far stronger sensation of love than of homage. Their several styles of speaking formed a rich and rare treat. The classical ease, the chaste fluency, and the felicitous choice of language of Lord Archibald Hamilton—the vigorous grasping, the comprehensive generalizing, and the terrible anathematizing of Mr. Brougham—the manly strength, the fine deep voice, and the exquisite euphony of Mr. Denman—the playful wit, polished yet powerful, of Lord Kinnaird—were each, though essentially different in the characteristics of one another, complete and perfect in themselves; leaving the judgment nought to condemn, nor the imagination aught to supply. But our readers will not thank us for detaining them from the proceedings."

—Certainly not, and therefore let us to business and dinner with "what appetite we may."

The interest was intense—at twenty-five minutes past five Mr. Denman, accompanied by Lord A. Hamilton, his illustrious brother, Mr. Brougham, Mr. Dixon, Mr. Tod, Mr. Cabbell, Mr. Mills, Mr. Watson, Mr. Campbell, and Admiral Fleming entered the room amid deafening plaudits—Professor Mylne said grace, and the dinner, of course, was excellent—perfect decorum was maintained, and immediately after dinner the cloth was removed, and the following toasts drank, to which the band played appropriate tunes:—

The King—three times three - "God save the King."
The Duke of York and the Army, Duke of York's March.
Duke of Clarence and the Navy, Rule Britannia.

Lord Archibald Hamilton rose and proposed a toast, which he was certain the company would drink with a more than ordinary degree of enthusiasm, being one which harmonized with the liberal sentiments and British feelings which characterise the meeting—the health of a Prince who was dear to us all—very dear—from his love of freedom!

The Duke of Sussex - Tune—we believe—Carillons d'Orleans.

The cause of Liberty all over the World—Tune, we are told, Ca Ira.

Lord Archibald rose to propose the health of Mr Brougham, and certainly appears to have been extremely candid—"It has been my fate," said his Lordship, "not to "have had the good fortune to obtain the character of being a "friend to my country."—"Mr. Brougham," said his Lordship, "is before you—the country—nay, more, before all Europe." This is a figure of speech closely resembling that used by Her Royal Highness Mrs. Serres (one of the best and dearest hopes of the party) to Mr. Pope's young man—"Young man," said Her Royal Highness, "make haste and "untie your articles, because I am particularly engaged in the "next room."—Now, unless my Lord Archibald Hamilton intended to infer that the dinner party at the Glasgow Assembly Rooms were the representatives of all Europe, Mr. Brougham—who was shut up there to hear himself flattered—could not be said to be before all Europe; and if Lord Archibald seriously meant to talk of Mr. Brougham the Barrister, who pleaded for Queen Caroline on her trial because he was hired to do so, and who would have pleaded against her if he could have got his price, as an object of interest in Europe, generally speaking, we must take leave to tell Lord Archibald, that he did a serious injury to his own reputation for intellect, and a still greater one to the credulity of Mr. Henry Brougham.

Lord Archibald observed of Mr. Brougham—

1st. "As a statesman and politician he ranks with the "greatest names, ancient and modern!"

"What question has he declined?" says his Lordship.—Let us ask what question he has ever carried, except his jesuitical Education bill?—He brags of his success with the Queen's case. Now, in fact, she was found guilty, but judgment was not pressed against her—if that be success, Heaven help us from such friends!

2d. Lord Archibald said (having hauled in his sister's mistress, which was but fair.) "Mr. Brougham stands as he ought to do before the world"—"his country hearing, and Europe judging him, all pronouncing him unrivalled!!!"—In what?—might we ask.

3d. "He masters all subjects—whatever he does, he does it in such a manner as if he were born for that specific purpose."—The learned gentleman had just eaten a hearty dinner, to which the Noble Lord probably alluded, meaning thereby that nature had intended him for a beef-eater—"He made im- "mense exertions," said Lord Archibald, "against the "orders in Council."—(Cheers.)

Now mark this:—

4th. "When agriculture was distressed and at its lowest "ebb, who stood the first and foremost to examine into and "alleviate the causes of its miseries?"—"who but Mr. "Brougham?"

—Who but Mr. Brougham, my dear Lord Archibald?—Might one just enquire what Mr. Brougham did upon this occasion?—We are innocent, and unless we are indebted to him for fine seasons and plentiful crops, and that gradual return to plenty and content, which, according to the doctrines and principles of his party, this country not only never could expect, but is not even now enjoying, we really cannot consent to admit our obligation to this most extraordinary barrister.

Mr. Brougham's health was then drank, and, we must say, that if what Lord Archibald said with respect to the learned gentleman was absurd, what the learned gentleman said of himself greatly surpassed it in absurdity.

We will take the learned Gentleman's oration, paragraph by paragraph, and make annotations as we go:—

"Mr. Brougham was overcome," &c.—"happiest moment of his life," &c.—all this allowable humbug we pass over, and proceed to greater matters.

Of the Hamiltons—he said—their's was a house loaded with "honours, and vast as was its wealth, it regarded itself," (the family) "and its illustrious members regarded themselves as enjoying the most precious possession in being considered, truly considered, friends to their country and advocates of the people."

Now, all this is somewhat ticklish, as we should have thought the lawyer must have known, particularly as, if we mistake not, he has been consulted recently on the probability that the "vast honours and prodigious wealth of the Hamiltons may, at no very distant period, be shifted from their shoulders and placed upon those of another family—this makes the braggadocia of illustrious rank and dignity, so aptly quoted upon the radicals present, (for fear they should forget themselves) somewhat perilous.

The exertions of the present Duke, in defence of the rights of his fellow-subjects, have not been sufficiently evident to be thus publicly recurred to, for, we believe the greatest sacrifice his Grace ever made for his country, was, that of his nobbed tail, which he lost somewhere on the continent; as for the Hamiltons being advocates of the people, that says nothing, as Mr. Brougham surely can tell, for advocates in our acceptation of the word are merely hirelings, paid to make the worse the better cause.

"They follow the track of Mr. Fox, and cherish with his memory the principles he supported; his was, indeed, a name of eternal duration; he was a man who never lifted his voice without making his fame imperishable among the lovers of liberty."

Now, as to the eternal duration of his name, we have no doubt he will long be remembered, but for what? First, for having, when quite a boy, been appointed to the useless post—of lay Lord of the Admiralty—for having sold the sinecure place of the Clerk of the Pells in Ireland, worth 3000l. per annum—for having coalesced with Lord North, after having denounced him as the destroyer of the country, and worthy of the block—for trying to stop the Mutiny Bill and the supplies in combination with this same Lord North, that the perils of the country, foreign and domestic, might compel the admission into power of himself and his coadjutor—for his East India Bill be will ever be remembered, and his love of liberty cannot fail to remain deeply imprinted in the heart of every man who has read his speeches in Parliament, wherein he declared in the House of Commons, that the "People have no voice." "Who are the People?" asks this son of Freedom.

Mr. Brougham knows—for if he is not a miracle, as his creatures would make him, he is no fool—Mr. Brougham knows, and knew at the moment he was puffing off Fox as a patriot and a friend of freedom, that in the speech to which we allude, he said,

"The point to be discussed is, whether the people or this House are the best judges of the public welfare? For my part, I shall not hesitate to declare positively in favour of the House. What acquaintance have the people with the arcana of political rectitude? I pay no attention to the voice of the people!"

"The minority within doors," (said Mr. Fox) "have only to assault us with their myrmidons from without, to carry every point. I suspect the capacity of the People to judge of their own happiness."

By such speeches will Mr. Fox's firm adherence to the cause which the Whigs admire, be long remembered, as Mr. Brougham said; his private moderation and regularity will always make him admired by the moralist, as will, indeed, his pensioning off his mistress; which was one of his first acts when in place, and which is likely to make his character estimable on the score of dignity and purity; and for his principles—his real political principles—it never can cease to be notorious that he—this gentleman with the short name of long duration—swore solemnly that he lived in the esteem and confidence of Arthur O'Connor, the Irish traitor and rebel —that he frequently conversed with him on political subjects—that he, O'Connor, was without any reserve, a man of the openest carriage he ever knew. To this—as Mr. Brougham knows—Charles James Fox solemnly swore in a court of justice, a short time before this O'Connor, his confidential friend, who had no reserve, stood before the nation a confessed rebel to his king, and a traitor to his country!

And does Mr. Brougham suppose that he is to be allowed to drive down the throats of a handful of Scotch lairds stuff and ribaldry like this, without stirring up the gall of every man who has the feelings of an Englishman? We can understand the sympathy between Fox and Brougham.—Mr. Fox was eloquent—so is Brougham—Mr. Fox was a Whig—so is Brougham—Mr. Fox was a turn-coat—Brougham is not—because he could not get his price!

Mr. Brougham proceeded to observe, that there had been within the last twenty years a revolution in Scotland, of sentiment—he spoke of Henry Erskine and Gibson, and growing bold in his cups, said he should like to see who would talk of visiting them with penalties, or exposing to any feelings any of the present company for expressing their opinions of the wretched rulers at home "or the detestable conduct of tyrants abroad."

What abject trash is this, as if anybody were going to interfere with the nonsense they were talking, or the Tomfoolery they were enacting—and how injudicious it was of a barrister to sneer at "lawyers, and lawyers creatures"—equally absurd was the eulogium upon Lord Kinnaird—very gentlemanly lord he is, but how he should be able to answer Brougham's questions about "liberty, and light, and intelligence, and independence" we really are at a loss to guess—the last thing he said, however, was, as it should be, the very best.

"He thought it was necessary for every man to shew his sincerity by his moderation—calmness united to firmness was the true secret of ensuring success."

When Brougham, whose insolence could not be curbed, whose intemperance could not be moderated by a recollection of the place in which he stood when he threatened the House of Lords, from whose tongue the grossest and most virulent language flows, whose passions are ungovernable, and whose conduct, even on this present occasion, was marked with spleen, bitterness, spite, and malice—whose speech teemed with libel and abuse, and whose action was suited to the word—when this Brougham advocates calmness and moderation it is time to look about one, and see whether one really hears and sees things as they are.

Mr. Brougham, later in the evening, made another speech about the liberty of the press, and as we, and he knows it, are always uppermost in his thoughts when the wine is in, he had a sly slap at us, canting over the trash of "personality" and slander.

That the principal writer in the most scurrilous of all scurrilous magazines, the "Edinburgh Review," should be so extremely delicate upon this point is amusing enough, but particularly so when the fact is, that that work and its able contributors, the Chronicle, and similar papers, set the example of private slander, and that we never followed it.

We know that Brougham's observations upon the impropriety into private life all "hark back" upon himself—and we therefore will confine ourselves to what we have done with respect to him and his; we certainly noticed Mrs. Brougham's visit to the Queen, because she was published in the Radical papers as giving her Majesty the support of her personal respectability —we certainly published Mr. M'Kerrell's correspondence with Brougham—we admit having said he offered to give Queen Caroline for a silk gown—we admit having charged him with calling himself a Scotchman in Scotland—a native of Westmoreland when in Westmoreland, and a native of Carlisle when at Carlisle—we admit having laughed, that a pure advocate of Parliamentary Reform, and one so extremely popular into the bargain, should sit for a rotten borough—in short, we admit that we have amused ourselves and our readers very often at his expense, as a public man; but we think Mr. Brougham should know enough to know that if we had chosen to indulge in private scandal about him we might indeed have served up such a dish as the epicures of that gross food seldom have partaken of—his perpetual hammering at us (ninny hammerings they are) are therefore injudicious and ungrateful, and nearly as silly as the voluntary attack which Sir Ronald Fergusson once made upon us in Parliament, to whom we behaved in a manner equally kind and considerate.

We cannot go over all the stuff that was talked, except indeed, that Mr. Denman made a speech, in which before Members who represent three or four voters, and before half a dozen voters who return three or four members, he laid about him most manfully in attacking the shocking state of the representation. "Representation," says the Common Serjeant, "in England is bad enough, but God knows the representation in Scotland was a great deal worse." This was tolerably impudent we admit, and not less saucy to the company than disagreeable to his party, when it is recollected, that of all the mighty, great, high-flying patriots in Parliament, the leaders, the very captains of the confederacy, sit for rotten boroughs, and if they were not put in by private patronage would not be in Parliament at all, we think such pointed allusions to the representation might have been seasonably avoided.

The Editor of an Irish Radical newspaper, appropriately called "Lawless," praised the Duke of Leinster—Lord Kinnaird spoke in praise of Spain, and gave the following extremely droll reason for touching on the subject, which was literally this,—in the list of toasts had been inserted "The Cause of Spain," and some one of themselves—of this very party of patriots, had written against this toast, "What is it?" this phœnix of Whiggery, therefore, and for no other reason, undertook to tell the company what it was—he sat down, says the fourpenny report, "amidst tremendous cheers."

Lord Kinnaird has shewn his attachment to his country like many other Whigs, by a constant residence on the Continent for several years past.

But the very best part of the joke is yet to come—these Whig Radicals are such inveterate fools in the midst of their knavery. At a certain time, Lord Archibald, who had heard little of the proceedings except the cheerings, wished the company good night, and bid them go away; in which Mr. Brougham joined—in fact, they were getting somewhat refractory, and another bottle a piece would have brought out their real sentiments, and many disagreeable truths; but will it be believed, that having thus abruptly put an end to the affair, these directors were foolish enough to allow the following list of toasts—which were all set down to be given, but which they did not, for certain reasons of various sorts, drink—to be published, which it was, in this very account printed by Malcolm.

We give the list to our readers, that the persons who have been thus omitted may learn properly to know themselves, and the estimation in which they are held in the north.

These were selected—to be omitted.

We had written thus far, when we received the following letter from Glasgow, from a correspondent of the highest respectability, and who really speaks the sentiments of the unerring body of that city. Some of his observations on Fox are necessarily similar to our own, but we do not hesitate to insert his communication, which, coming from the spot and from a native, will convey a more just and satisfactory idea of the estimation in which this treat to two travelling barristers is held by the majority of the people.

TO JOHN BULL.

Sir,—You will have heard before this reaches you, of the dinner which was given here on Thursday last, to Mr. Brougham; and, as I have no doubt that the editors of the Whig publications in London and elsewhere, will endeavour to give a false colouring to the whole affair, I think it right to mention that, however respectable the company were generally, yet that, a very small slip of paper indeed, would have held the names of all of that description belonging to Glasgow. Having said this much, for the honour and consistency of this great and loyal city, I shall proceed to notice some little matters connected with the day.

The first toast given by the Chairman was "The King," which, we were told, "was drunk with much enthusiasm, tune—King's Anthem." Now, Sir, we all remember the time, when that toast was received by certain gentlemen, either in solemn silence, or accompanied by a tune which was any thing but complimentary to his Majesty; and to let Glasgow was to be propitiated, no doubt, and the toast was "drunk with much enthusiasm." This was, so far, well—but still the Whigs could not avoid shewing the cloven foot. Only look, Sir, at the cool manner in which the "Duke of York and the Army," and "The Duke of Clarence and the Navy," were received; and then contrast it with the "great applause" which followed the announcement of the health to "The Duke of Sussex;" and after this we need be at no loss what to think of "the enthusiasm" with which His Majesty's health was greeted.

But by far the most amusing part of the business was, the anxiety of the Whigs to curry favour with Glasgow. My Lord Archibald Hamilton, you will observe, expressed himself in very friendly terms towards us, and Mr. Brougham was pleased to give as his toast—"Prosperity to this great city, the second in the British Empire."

Now, Sir, I rather suspect that there are not very many of the inhabitants of Glasgow who can boast of having received much notice from the haughty house of Hamilton—unless indeed a call perhaps previous to a general election; and as to the learned Gentleman's good wishes for our prosperity, it came with a singularly bad grace from the lips of one, who had just been straining his every nerve to plunge us into a war, of which no man could foresee either the extent or duration, and that too, in the face of the declarations lately made by the party themselves, that this country was so impoverished by the late war, that we were absolutely unable to pay the interest of our debt; and we were therefore advised (with shame I speak it) "to break faith with the public creditor."

And for what object was it that we were to go to war? Not, certainly, for British honour or British interests—but merely to enable a minority of the Spaniards, forsooth, to cram a constitution down the throats of the majority! And for such a purpose the Whigs would have had us, in our present crippled state, to rush into a contest, (the whole burthen of which would have been thrown upon us) not only with France, but with all the great Continental Powers who support her. We cannot, my Lords and Gentlemen, do less than make you our very best bow for the interest which you are pleased to take in the prosperity of the "second city in the British empire," humbly assuring you, at the same time, however, that your good wishes for our welfare, is all that we can possibly think of accepting at your hands.

The Whigs, Sir, are calculating, no doubt, on cajoling us by fair words; but in this they will find themselves mistaken, for the inhabitants of this loyal city have weighed them in the balance, and found them wanting. We allow that, as far as speeches go, they are very excellent patriots; but we know from experience, that their professions are one thing and their actions another; that they are, in fact, "men of words but not of deeds;" and, in short, that a Whig in opposition is a very different animal from a Whig in place. Let us take, for example, the bell-wether of the flock, the god of their idolatry, Charles James Fox, and what do we find?

We find him at one time complaining of Ministers having too much power, and at another introducing his famous India Bill, which, if it had passed, would have enabled him and his colleagues, to have set Parliament on the necks of both King and people.

At one time we find him advocating the right of the King to choose his own Ministers, and then we see him (by means of an infamous coalition with a man, who had been publicly stigmatized by him as a villain, who ought to be brought to the block) attempting to deprive his Sovereign of that right, and to force himself and friends into his Councils.

We then find him anxious to be considered as a patriot: and (as a matter of course) we see him, at the time of the dreadful mutiny at the Nore, preferring the society of his —— at Strawberry Hill, to attending publicly in Parliament, and endeavouring, like Sheridan, to ward off imminent danger.

Next we find him addressing a furious mob in Palace Yard, to the following effect:—"If you were to ask my opinion whether you ought to submit to these laws, (the Bills for the better preservation of his Majesty's person, and for preventing seditious meetings) I would answer, that it is a question of prudence depending on your strength." This is patriotism with a vengeance.

We then find him so far lost to true British feeling, as to pronounce in Parliament a panegyric on Buonaparte, (who had sworn to make this country unfit for man to live in) and to counsel us to make peace with him on any terms; and we find he himself afterwards carrying on the war against this much admired friend.

We find him characterizing the Income Tax (which undoubtedly came from Buonaparte's grasp) as infamous, and as unfit for Englishmen to bear; and we see him afterwards raise this very tax from 6 to 10 per cent. accompanying it no with these remarkable expressions, "that the tax was so excellent in its nature that it ought to keep pace with the necessities of the state till the people were reduced to the necessaries of life." Where then, O ye Whigs, were all your keener and pens? But hush, the great man was then dividing the spoils and fishes, and it would have been ill bred to have disturbed him.

We next find him and his myrmidons impressing forcibly on the people that the pressure on them was in a great measure owing to the enormous number of useless places and employments under government; and we find that when he himself came into power in 1806, that not one single place or employment was abolished, all being filled by his hungry friends and retainers (whom he himself jocularly described as buying "like herrings in a barrel.") And what was most extraordinary, the first Lord of the Treasury was appointed his own auditor, with a salary for each office, as if in very ridicule of those distresses which the Whigs themselves had painted in such glowing colours!

Let what followed, teach the Whigs (however greedy of office) to have recourse of using misrepresentations and exaggerations, to effect their purposes. Above all, let them beware, of promising when out, what, they are perfectly aware, they cannot perform when in. Had this been properly attended to, the people would not have thrown themselves into the arms of a set of demagogues; neither would the Whigs have been exposed to the disgrace of being booted and pelted out of Westminster; nor would Hamilton Palace have become rather hot for his Grace. I do not say that the Duke was absolutely frightened at the then aspect of affairs; but his Grace was certainly absent from the county of Lanark at a period when the presence of its Lord Lieutenant seemed imperiously required—a very striking instance of the regard which the illustrious house of Hamilton entertains for the welfare of their good city of Glasgow!

You will observe, Sir, that the Whigs dwell at considerable length on the change which they tell us has taken place amongst the people of Scotland, and which they affect to consider as favourable to them. Poor baubles!—The simple fact is, that the people of Scotland have as little about a Whig as I do about a turnip; or, if they do think of the bread out of their mouths, by plunging us, without either rhyme or reason, into a new war with all the great continental Powers. The statesman like conduct has lowered them in the opinion of even their early, towards retrieving their last false step. But the Queen being demented and happy, there seemed no other chance of disturbing the tranquillity of old Scotland but by once more raising the cry of Reform; pretty good authority to be reckless of consequence, they calculate on success. Thanks, however, to John Bull, and other loyal publications, the Scotch have been taught to distinguish between the self-styled friends and the real friends of the people; so that all that the Hon. and Learned Gentleman will probably get by his tour will be a few Whig dinners, and plenty of Whig speeches, neither of which he is likely to carry with him over the Border.

One word more, and I have done. When people at a distance shall read what is said of the change which has taken place amongst the Scotch, and couple it with the compliments paid to Glasgow, they will naturally conclude that the Whigs had chosen to hold their meeting in our good town, in consequence of the inhabitants having come round to their way of thinking. But, give us only a proper opportunity, (and God grant that it may be soon) and we will prove in the face of the whole country, that we have not degenerated.

Had the Whigs held their meeting in any place decently attached to Whig principles, well and good; but to choose the City of Glasgow, for ostentatiously displaying their strength and their numbers, can only be viewed as throwing down the gauntlet to its loyal inhabitants; and, if the mutual animosity which formerly existed between the parties, should again be revived, we know whom we may thank for it.—I remain, Sir, your friend and servitor.

X.

It is not by the accusation of being ALARMISTS—it is not by the charge of INTOLERANCE, that we are to be deterred from doing our duty fearlessly towards the Established Religion of our country; and it is impossible to consider the subject with even ordinary attention, without perceiving that the present moment has been chosen by the Irish Papists to make the struggle for that which alone they are seeking, and with which they alone will be satisfied—ASCENDANCY.

It would appear needless to make any allusion to their having called to their aid in this attempt the revival of miracles, which, after a lapse of two centuries, they have again brought forward—or seriously to agitate the question or discuss its merits; but when our readers are told that thousands are actually labouring under a belief of the supernatural agency of PRINCE HOHENHLOHE—when it is known that two of their titular prelates have published, the one, DR. DOYLE, a pastoral letter on the cure of MRS. STUART—the other, DR. MURRAY, an announciation of the recovery of MISS LALOR—that these official documents are thrust down the throats of the half-enlightened half-savage Irish Papists, who are taught by them implicitly to believe the facts contained in them as "Manifestations of GOD's particular favour!"—Proofs, as DR. DOYLE calls them "that the Almighty GOD has visited "his people, re-animating their faith and relieving their hope." When we know that they are instructed "that it is meet in our "times for signs and wonders in some degree to revive—be- "cause error has prevailed,"—and hence "it is but just that "the LORD should arise to guide his own cause."—When we know that all this is written, printed, and published, by their titular Bishops to the Irish population; and that while the whole force of the priesthood is directed to the agitation of feeling, as far as relates to spiritual affairs, the political agents of popery are labouring in their vocation to furnish their quota of falsehood, scurrility, and malevolence, in order to connect them with temporal matters, and thus bring about that which is sought by different parties with different views, but which must have ultimately the same result—we mean POPISH ASCENDANCY, and consequent IRISH REBELLION! we must speak.

For the public declaration that such a conspiracy exists, we and the world at large are indebted to MR. PLUNKETT, the advocate of all the Irish Papists, who, as we have already stated in this paper, has announced the fact which had come to his knowledge in his official capacity of Protestant ATTORNEY GENERAL—to doubt such an authority would be absurd—it remains only to point out, wherever we see them, the movements of these hidden conspirators against the Church and State.

We are led to the immediate consideration of the subject by an attack of the grossest and most shameful nature which has been made upon the admirable and amiable ARCHBISHOP of DUBLIN. The Irish papers commenced the assault, and the London TIMES, ever ready to assail honour, virtue, and respectability by the bitterest and blackest falsehoods, seizes with avidity upon the libellous invectives of the Irish Rockites and Papists disseminated through the Irish Radical press, to vituperate and calumniate the pious DR. MAGEE for having interposed his authority to prevent the celebration of a Popish mass by a Popish Priest in a Protestant church-yard.

In the DUBLIN EVENING POST of the 9th inst. a letter to the editor, headed "RIGHTS OF BURIAL," states that,

"A circumstance occurred that morning at the interment of as worthy a man as ever lived, MR. D'ARCY, which, if repeated, is likely to produce serious effects!"

"The Sexton," says the co. respondent, of St. Revin, "where his remains were deposited, intimated that he had orders from the ARCHBISHOP of DUBLIN, DR. MAGEE, to prevent a Catholic Clergyman reading the Office of the Dead at the grave. This functionary was also pleased to say that it was contrary to Act of Parliament."—"I know not," continues the writer, "how this may be Sir, but as I know that the dead are tured to support the Establishment, I should think it judicious at least for the ARCHBISHOP of DUBLIN to allow the Office, (if there be one), as heretofore, to be evaded; it is really hard that the Catholics, who will not be allowed a church-yard of their own, like the Quakers, should be debarred from paying the last sacred honour to their relatives and friends, merely—but indeed my feelings will not allow me to go further. I state the fact. I have no doubt if Government do not interfere, this desperate Experiment upon the feelings of the Catholics of Ireland may be tried again.—I am, I assure you, Sir, A PROTESTANT WHO WAS PRESENT."

In this letter we have the statement of the fact—in order to bring the subject more fully before the public we shall give place to the reasonings of the editor of the paper in which that letter appeared, two days subsequent to its insertion—the article in which they are contained follows:—

RIGHTS OF CHRISTIAN BURIAL.

"Whatever be the consequences of the present singular state of religious effervescence, by which not only the surface of society is agitated, but even the frame of its social system disturbed, it must be acknowledged that the "Establishment," as it is called, par excellence, is resolved not to sleep upon its post. If, as many fear, the present state of feeling may eventuate in still stronger manifestations than any we witness now, it must be confessed that the clergymen, many of them, at least, of the Establishment, will have contributed in no small degree to the exacerbation of the public, and to the consequences the reof.

"Waiving, however, all debatable topics—putting a side, for the present, the gross insults which have been offered through the press to the Catholic Hierarchy—the literary outrages with which the Catholic Clergy have been assailed—and the mad recklessness with which the Catholic religion has been branded, as a code of idolatry, and the Catholic people denounced as a nation of imposters and fools—putting these matters out of consideration, we would enquire with all humility, what possible motive could there be for reviving an obsolete Penal Act, by which, as it should appear, Catholic Priests are prevented from saying the office of the dead over the remains of deceased Catholics, in a church-yard which, at one time, belonged to themselves? What possible motive could there be for reviving, at this time, this part of the Popery code? It was superstitious, they may say, as it was therefore wrong to permit this Statute, this monument of the "wisdom of our ancestors," to lapse into desuetude. Superstitious! who is to be the judge? DR. DOYLE is at least as able a man as DR. MAGEE, and he is ready to maintain that the rite, so far from being superstitious, is a part and parcel of Christianity itself. But does not the ARCHBISHOP of DUBLIN, or rather the labourers in the vineyard, the working curates, perform similar offices every day? Well; but grant, for the sake of argument, that it is superstitious; what then? will a sulky and angry insult offered to the Catholic clergy and the Catholic people contribute to remove the superstition, or to Protestantize the country? The history of Ireland shows how utterly absurd the system has been. There were, we firmly believe, more Protestants in Ireland at the time of the revolution, when the population was not above two millions, (if so much) than there are now, when the population is notoriously above seven. It is not, therefore, we take it, for the purpose of convertina the Catholics that the experiment of refusing what they consider Christian burial has been tried at this particular juncture.

"For what, then? it cannot be for dues to the Sexton or Bell-ringers, or Clerk or Incumbent, that this act is revived at this time. The dead are taxed for this purpose already. There is no Catholic, whose relatives can afford him a place of decent interment, who does not contribute to the support of the Established Church. The Parson is paid, the Clerk is paid, the ground is paid for, the pall is taxed—in short, the Catholic is taxed in his grave for the support of an establishment which, living, he thoroughly, and had good reason thoroughly to dislike, even as a temporal institution. There could be no more money therefore made by preventing the celebration of a Catholic rite, and on an occasion, too, in which the feelings of the surviving relatives and friends may naturally be supposed to be deeply engaged in the melancholy solemnity. If, indeed, a few shillings could be obtained by insulting the dead and outraging the living, we could not be at a moment's loss to divine the motive. Is the object then to exasperate the Catholics of Ireland? We should be very loath to believe this. It would be not only foolish, but wicked in the very worst sense of the epithet. We do hope and trust, that if such an order has been issued to the Archdiocese of Dublin, in a moment of spleen or thoughtlessness, it will be immediately recalled. Really the Protestant Church of Ireland should be content with the goods the gods provide them. Their spiritual lords live in gorgeous palaces, and their wives and daughters drive about in splendid equipages—their quiet possession and enjoyment of these good things of their little Zion is what common sense and ordinary policy would recommend. But never did they assume a front more haughty and defying. Never did they, with the exception of Jebb, French, and Laurence, express so loudly their contempt and abhorrence of the nation whose lands they possess, and from whose labour they are enriched. For God's sake, for the sake of our common happiness, for the sake of peace and good will, for their own sake, let them be quiet, and allow the Catholics the privilege at least of interring their relatives and friends without insulting the remains of the one, or outraging the feelings of the other."

Having thus impartially laid this essay before our readers, it becomes us to look at the subject in two points of view.

First, then, as to the conduct of an Archbishop of Dublin upon such an occasion.

It will be observed that the saying of masses or services of the Popish church in Protestant church yards, is prohibited by law—in so far would this archbishop be fully justified in putting a veto upon such performance. It will be observed, moreover, not only that if the service for the dead had been performed at the house of the deceased, nobody would or could have interfered; but this was not the aim, not the object, and therefore a violation of an act of parliament, of the existence of which the mourners were aware, was attempted in order that it might be represented to the world that the ARCHBISHOP of DUBLIN had deprived "a Catholic" of the rights of christian burial.

That this representation is false, no one who knows the character of DR. MAGEE will for a moment doubt—no insult has been offered to the papists, no ceremony formerly allowed has been interrupted—the fact is, that the priests appeared at the grave of the late MR. D'ARCY in St. Revin's church-yard dressed in pontifi al-bus, whereupon MR. DUNN, the sexton, informed the party so appearing that he had orders to prevent any clergyman whatever from so officiating, unless he belonged to the established church.

Can any thing be more rational, any thing more just—has any Dissenter the right of performing the duty in the churches or churchyards of the Establishment—has such right or privilege ever been claimed—if it were, what should hinder the Dissenting Minister from taking possession of the reading desk or pulpit?

We would ask, in support of the conduct of an Archbishop of Dublin, who had prohibited the performance of the service in question, What Popish Priest in all Christendom would allow a Protestant Clergyman to perform the service of the Church of England in his church or churchyard, or allow him the use of his pulpit to preach from?—nay, we will go still farther, and state, as far as the question of exclusion goes, that without having previously obtained the permission of the actual Incumbent, no Clergyman of the Church of England itself, would be allowed to do that incumbent's duty in his church or churchyard.

We contend, then, that upon their own shewing, any ARCHBISHOP of DUBLIN would have been fully justified in giving the order for the prohibition of the ceremony, to perform which no attempt had been made—as is the case in the present instance—for one hundred years previously!—but as we promised to look at this matter in two points of view, we shall now proceed to consider the conduct of this particular ARCHBISHOP of DUBLIN, DR. MAGEE, upon this particular occasion.

We can positively assure the public, that the ARCHBISHOP of DUBLIN, so far from having given the order attributed to him by these radicals and Papists, never heard of the fact till he read it in the newspapers. The very circumstances of the case prove that the Archbishop could not have given such an order; for how was it possible for his Grace to anticipate an attempt which has not been made for upwards of a century by a Popish Priest, to officiate in a Protestant churchyard, in Pontificalibus, in defiance of the existing laws. What had the ARCHBISHOP of DUBLIN to do with it—the law was made before his Grace was born, and the only reason why the law appeared obsolete was, that nobody has for an hundred years attempted to violate its provisions, and therefore it has never been necessary to name or quote it.

From this specimen the public should learn to appreciate the fabrications and calumnies of the Papists, by the aid of which, and miracles, they hope to bring about the fulfilment of PASTORINI's PROPHECIES, and carry the great points which MR. PLUNKETT, the advocate of Catholic Emancipation, has informed us, they have in view—the EXTIRPATION of the PROTESTANTS, and the establishment of POPISH ASCENDANCY.

To those who have had the kindness to doubt the state of mind of that illustrious personage her Royal Highness Princess OLIVE of SERRES CUMBERLAND PONIATOWSKY WILMOT, the following letter to the Magistrates of UNION HALL will be somewhat satisfactory.

The story lies in a nutshell—A linen-draper of the name of POPE sent his "young man" to MRS. SERRES's lodgings, in St. George's-fields, with some goods, at which Her Royal Highness MRS. SERRES looked—shortly after which, a great long piece of Urling's lace (marked, no doubt "C. F. URLING," to establish its genuineness), and something else, were missing. Nobody knew where to cast suspicion—nobody it seems is suspected—and the droll part of Her Royal Highness's letter is, the evidence it contains, that she believes that she shall be suspected of smugging the property.

The letter—when it is considered that it comes from the pen of the heiress presumptive to the Thrones of ENGLAND and POLAND, the niece of the undoubted JUNIUS, the widow of MR. SERRES, and the intimate friend of the late witty MR. ASKEW—forms a pleasing specimen of style and language—but we waste time—let us hasten to the perusal:—

"TO THE SITTING MAGISTRATES OF UNION-HALL.

"GENTLEMEN—A very singular affair has occurred in my residence this day. While I was sitting conversing with an esteemed friend of my guardian's, the late EARL of WARWICK, a person called from a MR. POPE's, linen-draper, of Holborn, and left a parcel in the care of one of my servants, saying he would, as I was engaged, call again in a quarter of an hour. The servant came up to the drawing-room, and gave the young man's message, when I said that he need not have gone away, for I would have seen him in five minutes. In a short time I was informed that the young man had returned, when I met him on the top of the stairs, and walked with him into the next room, where he begun untying his articles. As I was engaged in the next drawing-room, I said, "You must, Sir, be quick if you please, as I have a gentleman in the next room on very important business." Then I stepped into the next room, and in a few minutes went to the young man, to see some clothes, &c. that he had to sell me.—Having chosen the clothes, I asked him for some URLING's lace, and he said, "I put some into my bag, surely it is not lost." I replied "I hope not;" when he said that the gloves and patent lace had been taken out of the bag. I said it was impossible; for I considered my servants to be very honest, and that one had lived with me for some time. I asked him who he gave the bag to; he said, the youngest female. I had her up stairs, and insisted upon every drawer and box in the room being searched. He said there was no occasion; but I said, that the matter should be cleared up directly, before the young man departed. The gentleman (MR. VANCOUVER) said I was perfectly right: so a complete search was made: for I compelled all my places to be looked into and examined, and requested the two servants to show their boxes down stairs, which they did, in the presence of the young man, MR. VANCOUVER, and a tradesman I sent for to come over, yet nothing was found. The young man I reprimanded for riding away and leaving his goods before I saw them. We asked him if the bag was a safe one, or if it had any hole; he said that the bag, he believed, had a slit in it, but the small parcel of lace could not come out, as it had been tied by two strings, to prevent any thing from falling out as he rode from Holborn to my residence.

"Now, Gentlemen, he should be examined as to the fact of having the articles in the said bag as delivered to my servant—it rests between these two; and I wish you to have their oaths, as it is a very unpleasant matter to happen in my residence, and as the patent lace is worth the master and man say, 14l., wrong must exist somewhere; and on the other hand, if he lost the articles whilst riding over, he should own it, as I cannot consent that the matter should be passed over; as, Gentlemen, it is either a falsehood or an act of the grossest wickedness. As it is, I am in the rules of the King's Bench, and you'll confer a favour by letting your clerk see me. My servants should be cleared if innocent, which I really hope and finally believe. I have seen one of your officers, and he considered that the articles could not have been put into the bag, in which was a lace veil, shawls, &c.; yet none of these were lost, but this lace parcel was small. MR. POPE lives in Holborn, and is a linen-draper; the young man's name is MR. COOPER, he said. My cook is called SARAH NICHOL, and the servant who received these articles in the said bag is SOPHIA HOLMES. It may elicit truth if the said articles were really lost; and I have the honour to be, Gentlemen, your obedient, humble servant,

"OLIVE, Princess of Cumberland.

"Hatfield-house, Westminster-road."

That this is an uncommonly gay specimen of composition, nobody we think can deny—in short, thanks to Her Royal Highness and her quondam crony MR. X. X. SHERIFF PARKINS, the town is amply favoured with examples of "finished letter-writing!"

THEATRICALS.

THAT outrage upon decency and good-taste, the BEGGARS' OPERA, has been committed at the Haymarket during the last week; we have not witnessed the performance, and are, therefore, unable to reconcile the clashing testimonies of the daily newspapers to its merits.

We are always vexed when we see a pretty and accomplished actress dressed up in men's clothes, and thus made to disgust and annoy our sex and her own; it is the height of indelicacy, the very acmé of absurdity, and when that pretty actress is intended, with her light, graceful and elegant figure, to represent the husband of two wives, and those wives of the size of MRS. GARRICK and MRS. JONES—the exhibition becomes monstrous, the effect ridiculous, and the general character of the entertainment (so miscalled) perfectly nauseous.

That MRS. GARRICK played the heroine is no fault of the manager, because MISS PATON is singing at Manchester and Exeter for the benefit of her health—and, to say truth, we see no reason why MRS. GARRICK should not play the part and sing the songs extremely well—she is, perhaps, not quite juvenile enough in her appearance, but this objection might have been obviated by announcing her in the bills as MRS. MACHEATH, instead of Miss POLLY PEACHUM. MRS. JONES is, by the way, the very best Lucy we remember to have seen, if we except MRS. CHARLES KEMBLE, whose performance of the part (although extremely unpleasant and objectionable to herself,) was certainly as fine a piece of acting as we ever witnessed.

Sweethearts and Wives maintains its ground, and is powerfully attractive; we mean no disparagement to its author when we say that a worse piece, in such hands, would have been just as popular. LISTON has been most inimitably written to this year—in this piece, and in Fish out of Water, the BARON STULZ himself could not have fitted him better. We think, in the latter farce, his "making chocolate" is the perfection of humorous pantomime.

MATHEWS is busily employed at the Lyceum, to which, we are told, he attracts crowded audiences. The public have no time to lose, if they wish to see him, for he is off next week for Ireland, where he remains a month, and then returns to prepare for his next campaign, in which his American adventures, they say, are to be submitted to the town.

Perhaps the play-going public will be pleased to hear, if they have not, that hostilities between MR. BRANDON and the Covent Garden Proprietors have ceased, and they have finally agreed to give the "old veteran," as MR. ROBINS calls him, an annuity for life. We must be permitted now to make one remark, and which we think quite due to MR. BRANDON—it is simply this—surely, if the proprietors could have substantiated any charges against MR. BRANDON which would have authorized their ejection of him from the theatre without an annuity—they would, after what has passed, marched him off sans ceremonie—nobody, we think, will deny this—that they had the right to eject him every body will admit—and therefore we must avow our opinion, that the gift of the annuity marks MR. BRANDON'S innocence in the strongest colours, and sends him into retirement without the smallest imputation upon his character or conduct.

MR. JOHN BRANDON has sent us the following, which, according to our promise, we insert.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR—I most sincerely regret that the unnecessary, and therefore improper mention of my name, in a statement of the present Managers of Covent Garden Theatre, contained in your paper of the 7th inst. forces me for the first (and I hope the last) time in my life, (and that not a very short one, forty-eight years of it being spent in the service of such theatre), to intrude myself either on the public, or the columns of a newspaper. The passage to which I allude is, that "on examination of the books and accounts of the theatre, as kept by me, the treasurer, they were found to be in such an irregular and unsatisfactory state, as to render it absolutely necessary that another treasurer should be immediately appointed, which was the cause of my dismissal;" and I now only notice it to state, that it is an unjust and malicious assertion, and no more founded in truth than their statement, "that MR. CONST recommended my dismissal, and the substitution of MR. DUNN in my place;" the books and accounts of the theatre having been kept by me, whilst I held my office, precisely in the same manner as they had been kept by former treasurers for the last 70 years (and from which plan I had no right to deviate), by sending every morning to each individual proprietor an account in writing, containing the receipts and payments of the preceding day, and at the end of each season the accounts and vouchers were examined, and approved by the present MR. HARRIS, on the part of himself and his late father, and by the late MR. MARTINDALE during his life, on the part of himself and wife, and the late MR. WHITE, of the House of Commons, under whom MR. WILLETT and CAPTAIN FORBES derive their interest in the Theatre, having married his two daughters, and who, therefore, do not stand in the light of purchasers or new proprietors, as their statement would imply. The only motive I can attribute to these parties for bringing my name forward in the way they have so improperly done, is a wish to prejudge, if possible, an appeal I have been compelled to make to a Court of Law against them, standing for trial in the next Term (and which had they not made a Special Jury Cause of it, solely for the purpose of delay, would have been tried in July last), and I therefore request the public will suspend their opinion until the verdict of a Jury shall have decided the justice or injustice of my cause. I entreat your and the public's pardon for this intrusion on your notice, and take leave of the subject in the words of our immortal Bard—

"What judgment shall I dread—doing no wrong."

I am, Sir, your obliged humble servant,

42, Upper Marylebone-street, Sept. 10, 1823. JOHN BRANDON.

MISCELLANEOUS.

WINDSOR, SEPT. 19.—This afternoon, at two o'clock, the King held a Court, which was attended by the First Lord of the Treasury, the Secretaries of State for the Foreign and Home Departments, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Lord Steward of the Household, the Comptroller of the Household, the Master of the Horse, Sir C. Long, &c. His Majesty also held a Privy Council, at which Parliament was further prorogued to the 10th of November. His Majesty signed a Proclamation to give currency to double sovereigns. The Earl of Liverpool, Mr. Secretary Canning, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer had audiences of his Majesty. The Council broke up at half-past three o'clock, when the King left the Castle for the Lodge.

The Duke of York, and a sporting party, are with the Marquis of Hertford, at his residence at Sudbourne, in Suffolk.

It is understood that the Office of Equerry to his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief, which, in consequence of the death of Sir Charles Asgill, Bart. became vacant, will not be filled up.

It is at length finally determined that the vacant seat in the Cabinet is to be given to Mr. Huskisson.

On Wednesday night, Mr. Hunter, the King's Messenger, left town with despatches for Lord Strangford at Constantinople.

Prince Leiningen, only son of the Duchess of Kent, arrived at Ramsgate, in the Union steam packet, on Thursday.

The Duke of Brunswick took leave of the King on Thursday, to return home.

The Duke of Saxe Weimar arrived in town on Monday evening, and left town next day on a visit to the Duke and Duchess of Clarence at Bushey.

The Gazette of Tuesday night contains a notice that application is intended to be made to Parliament in the next Session, for an act to authorize the Corporation of London to levy tolls upon all horses, carriages, and cattle passing over Blackfriars-bridge; and to borrow money upon the credit of the said tolls, for the repairing and maintaining the said bridge, or to empower the corporation to borrow a certain sum for these purposes, upon the credit of the Orphans' Fund.

THE ARMY.—The Governorship of Pendennis Castle has, in consequence of the death of General Felix Buckley, which took place on the 14th inst. become vacant.

It is understood that the great object of the Improved Rules and Regulations for the Army, is to establish one uniform system of field exercise and movement, which is to be rigidly conformed to, and practised by every regiment in his Majesty's service. In order to attain this most important purpose, the improved system will illustrate how necessary it is to reconcile celerity with order; to prevent hurry, which must always produce confusion, loss of time, unsteadiness, irresolution, and inattention to command; to insure precision and correctness, by which alone great bodies of troops will be able to arrive at their object in good order, and in the shortest space of time: to inculcate and enforce the necessity of military despondence, and of mutual support in action, which are the great ends of discipline; to simplify the execution, and to abridge the variety of movements, as much as possible, by adopting such only as are necessary for combining exertions in corps, and that can be required or applied in service; to ascertain to all ranks the part each will have to act in every change of situation that can happen, so that explanation may not retard at the moment when execution should take place; and to enable the commander of any body of troops to retain them, at every instant, in his manœuvre, so as to be capable of restraining the bad effects of such ideas of independent and individual exertion, as are visionary and hurtful, and of directing them to their true and proper objects, those of order, of combined effort, and of regulated obedience, by the united force of all which, a well disciplined enemy can only be defeated.

WIDOWS' PENSIONS.—All widows who receive pensions from the charity for the relief of the widows of Commission and Warrant Officers of the Royal Navy, must send to the Admiralty Office, between the 20th and 30th of this month, the affidavit required by the rules of the charity, in order to their being inserted on the Pension List, which will be prepared next month, and paid on the 10th November next.

On Wednesday (10th instant) a General Court Martial was held at Piershill barracks, to try John Murray, a private of the King's Dragoons, upon a charge of desertion; also of stealing his horse, and selling it to a farmer in the neighbourhood of Lanark for 6l. The evidence was concluded that day; and next day the Court Martial again met to deliberate upon their sentence, which will not be made known until after it has been submitted to the Commander-in-Chief.—Caledonian Mercury.

On Thursday se'nnight a public dinner was given to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, at the Royal Hotel, Birmingham, by a number of the most respectable inhabitants of that town and its vicinity. The chair was taken by Theodore Price, Esq. having the Right Hon. Gentleman on his right, and on his left Mr. Cumberland and Colonel Gooch, friends of Mr. Robinson.

Tuesday, a meeting of the Colombian Bond Holders was held at the City of London Tavern, at which a number of Resolutions were proposed, setting forth that the Government of Colombia and the Congress of that country considered the loan by the late Mr. Zea as null and void; expressing astonishment that the Contractors should have given out statements contrary to the decree of the Colombian Congress, of the 9th of June, 1822; declaring that the meeting had no confidence in the Contractors, and suggesting the appointment of Trustees to be in possession of the money, supplies, and bonds for the benefit of the Bond Holders. After some discussion on these resolutions, it was agreed to adjourn without coming to any determination, but Mr. Horsfall said, that there was a good 25l. per cent. of the amount of the loan lying in perfect security in this country.

Thursday, a Court of Proprietors of Bank Stock was held, for the purpose of considering of a dividend for the half year ensuing. In consequence of a rumour that a further reduction in the interest of Bank Stock would be proposed, the court was crowded to excess. The Court of Directors entered at twelve o'clock, when the chairman stated that they had resolved upon proposing to the proprietors a dividend of Four per Cent. as interest and profit of the Stock for the half year ensuing. Mr. Gundry renewed his demand, that the accounts of the Company should be submitted to the proprietors. A long and severe debate took place on the motion, which was seconded by Mr. Server. Mr. Gundry, as an amendment to the resolution submitted by the Court of Directors, that the interest should be four per cent. moved that it should be five per cent. for the half year ensuing. This amendment was put and negatived, by a large majority, and the original motion for four per cent. carried. Mr. Gundry then, we understand, demanded a ballot.

To-morrow, according to annual custom, the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, Sheriffs, and Governors of the several Royal Hospitals, will attend Divine Service at Christ Church. After a sermon by the Rev. Wm. Granger Cautley, M.A., they will repair to the Great Hall in Christ Hospital, where two orations will be delivered: in Latin, by Authur Willis; in English, by Charles Coton; the two senior scholars of the Grammar School.

Wednesday, a Court of Directors was held at the East India House, when the following ships, taken up on the 3d inst. were this stationed, viz.—Princess Amelia, Marquis of Huntly, and Astell, for China direct.

The Court of Directors of the East India Company have requested the proposition for an increased grant of money to the Marquis of Hastings.

EAST INDIA SHIPPING.—The East India Company's outward bound ship Inglis, was all well on the 16th of April, in lat. 25, 11 S. long. 51. 51 E. The General Kyd, also outward bound, was in company with the Inglis several days, and parted from her in lat. 3 S. long. 19 W. all well. The Princess Charlotte, Lamb, from India, has arrived at Portsmouth—sailed from Rangoon the 16th of April, from Madras the 8th of May, and St. Helena the 27th of July. Arrived at Madras, the Woodford, Chapman; the Ogle Castle, Pearson, from London; and the Caledonia, Cairns, from New South Wales. The Zephyr and Granger, from the South Seas, were left at St. Helena, bound to England. The Bridgwater, Mitchell, from London to Bombay, was spoke with on the 13th of June—all well.—The Eliza, Brown, from London to the Cape, was in lat. 1 north, long. 22. west, on the 3d of August.

Information was received at Lloyd's on Thursday of the capture of the following Portuguese vessels, which left Bahia on July 2, by Lord Cochrane's squadron, they having arrived at Bahia previous to the 4th ult.; viz.—Prompetidas, Bizarrio, Leal Portuguesez, Conde de Peniche, and a Russian ship. It is supposed the above are some of the valuable ships that have the church property on board.

It is understood that the Lessees of Covent Garden Theatre have secured to MR. Brandon, the late box-keeper, for the period of their lease, an annuity of 150l.

The following Officers are promoted from the Royal Yachts:—Lieutenants—C. R. Milbourne, Royal George; R. Fair, Royal Sovereign; and R. Wilcox, Prince Regent, to the rank of Commander. Messrs. A. Barclay, John M'Donnell, W. C. Gerrard, of the Royal George; R. Crozier, Royal Sovereign; W. Dickey, Prince Regent, to the rank of Lieutenant. Lieut. George Pierce (First Lieutenant of Sir B. Hallowell's flag-ship), and Lieut. Richard Douglas, of the Ramillies (son of the Master Attendant at Sheerness), were promoted to the rank of Commander, in commemoration of the opening of the new Basin and Docks at Sheerness. Capt. T. Curtis (nephew of Sir William Curtis), is appointed to the Sphynx, 18, at Chatham; Lieut. Philip Justice to be First Lieutenant of the Royal George Yacht, vice Milbourne; Lieut. W. Cuppage, to the Isis. Mr. J. H. Acheson to be Surgeon of the Thetis, vice Young.

A patent has been lately completed by Mr. Richard Badnall, of Leek, in the county of Stafford, for very considerable improvements in the throwing of Organzine, sewing silk, tram, &c. which have been seen and highly approved of by men of the first talent and respectability. The saving effected by these improvements, is of such importance, as to be well worthy the notice of every one interested in the silk trade. Mr. Badnall has also, we understand, obtained another patent for improvements in dyeing, and the specification, we understand, embraces advantages which will apply to all colours and materials.

A canal, about which upwards of 150 men are now employed, has been commenced from the River Thames to Pimlico, terminating with a basin at the wooden bridge, Little Chelsea, for the reception of barges, craft, &c. The old bridge is to be removed, and a handsome iron one to be erected in its stead.

The attractions at the Surrey Theatre continue unabated. The Manager has brought out a new piece called Pisoli, or the Bride of Corsica, which possesses considerable interest; this, with Reeve's imitations, and the splendid decorations of the house, continues to fill it nightly.

An application was last week handed to the Surrey Magistrates by several prisoners confined in the King's Bench Prison, stating that they could prove the Marshal, Mr. Jones, was in the habit of selling the porter at an extravagant price, praying that they might be heard by Counsel to the point, and that the licence to sell beer might be withheld from Mr. Jones. The petition was signed by eight or ten persons, five or six of whom attended to make good their charge, when it appeared that the man who had the care of the tap had taken a halfpenny a pot more than the neighbouring ale-houses, up to a late period: but the same appeared to the Magistrates to have been done without the knowledge of the Marshal, who turned the man away when he was informed of the fact. Since that time, the porter, it brought away in a pot belonging to the prisoner, was charged fourpence; or, if drank in the Brace, or coffee-room, where there were fire and candle, or if sent out in a pot belonging to the tap, was fivepence. The quality was admitted to be good. The Magistrates dismissed the complaints, and renewed the licence. One of the prisoners, by name Jacobs, stated, that with his family and three servants, he was in the daily habit of consuming eight pots of porter, and that the alteration in the price made a serious difference to him. The Chairman observed, that had he known any prisoner was in the habit of drinking eight pots of porter per day (or 45l. per year) while his creditors were unpaid, he should have been very little disposed to pay attention to his complaints.

Sir Wm. Curtis has purchased a fine schooner, the Joseph of Sierra Leone, which he is fitting out with all expedition for a cruize in the Mediterranean, where he is ordered by his physicians, for the benefit of his health.

In consequence of a misunderstanding, in the morning, Sir Henry Lippincott, Bart. and R. B. Ward, Esq. had a meeting near Dunham Down, on Monday evening (15th inst.) It being settled by lot that Sir Henry should fire first, he did so, without effect; when his antagonist discharged his pistol in the air, and of course the affair terminated.—Bristol Gazette.

On Tuesday, a well-contested boxing match took place on Wimbledon Common, between Philip Page, the Woolwich baker, and Harry Maurice, a Clerkenweller. The stakes, which was won by Page, was 50 sovereigns.

The King's printers in Scotland have applied to the Court of Session for an interdict against the members of Bible Societies importing Bibles into Scotland, and have issued summonses accordingly to all the individual members.

At the subdivision meeting of the Essex Magistrates for the hundreds of Uttlesford and Clavering, holden at the Town Hall in Saffron Walden, lately, 37 persons of various callings—viz. millers, bakers, butchers, and shopkeepers—were summoned for having in their possession false weights; 35 were convicted and fined accordingly. On Monday morning the weights were brought into the market-place and destroyed.

A correspondent tells us that there is a set of ruffians who prowl about the streets of an evening, throwing vitriol on the dresses of men and women.

On Tuesday morning, about seven o'clock, a fire broke out in the premises of Mr. Kitchener, confectioner, in the Edgware-road; such was the rapidity of the flames, that the whole premises were burnt to the ground in an hour.

SEVENTY-SIX. By the Author of "LOGAN." "Our Country! Right or Wrong."

However successful an Author may be, he will be a hypocrite or a fool if he pretend to feel any gratitude to the Public for their favour. He ought to remember that the obligation is as much theirs as his; and that they would see him and his family perish inch by inch, in starvation and wretchedness, before they would buy his book, unless they had their money's worth."—Vide Author's Preface.

A CELESTIAL ATLAS: comprising a Systematic Display of the Heavens, in a Series of Thirty Maps, beautifully engraved by Neele and Son; illustrated by scientific Descriptions of their Contents, and accompanied by Catalogues of the Stars and Astronomical Exercises. By ALEXANDER JAMIESON, A.M. Author of a Grammar of Logic, Grammar of Rhetoric, &c.—Published by G. and W. B. Whittaker, Ave-Maria-lane.

"We can conscientiously recommend this Atlas to Schools and Students, as well as practical Astronomers; and its publication cannot fail to add to the esteem of those who so successfully cultivate the most popular and sublime of all the Sciences."—Monthly Magazine, May, 1822.

"Mr. Jamieson has supplied a great desideratum in our system of instruction, by furnishing a book which ought to be in the hands of every young person; it is peculiarly valuable for the manner than the compilation of such a great variety of curious information, drawn from such various and remote sources, most of them sealed even to all but, and the luminous order in which he has developed the results of his extensive reading, is highly creditable to his judgment and taste."—Monthly Censor, July, 1822.

AN ESSAY on the HISTORY and THEORY of MUSIC; and on the Qualities, Capabilities, and Management of the Human Voice. By J. NATHAN, Author of the Hebrew Melodies, &c.—Printed for G. and W. B. Whittaker, Ave Maria-lane, London.

The Reviewers of Musical Publications in "La Belle Assemblee" for the present month, speaking of Mr. Nathan's Work, says—"While he has rendered his fellow-labourers valuable assistant to the professor, the general interspersion of anecdote is so judicious, that it is no less calculated for the perusal of juvenile students, and must be read even by those unacquainted with the science with interest and delight."—July, 1823.

NEW NOVEL.—Just published, in 3 vols. 12mo. price 21s. in boards,

OSMOND, a Tale. By the Author of "The Favourite of Nature." —Printed for G. and W. B. Whittaker, Ave Maria-lane.

"The characters are drawn with natural ease and correctness; the incidents are probable, and also striking; the language is chaste and nervous, and the sentiments of the tale well suggested from the beginning to the denouement. With such claims there can be no doubt of Osmond becoming a great favourite with the reading portion of society, the novel-reading public."—Lit. Chron. Oct. 26, 1822.

"Caroline's death is truly affecting; and of the after-meeting between Osmond and his angelic wife, and their parting interview, we cannot speak in terms of too great praise. We yield the amiable author our unqualified eulogy for the refined tendency of the book; and as a parting word, we consider Osmond one of the most successful novels of that class which undertake to wean us from our propensities, and teach us the philosophy of virtue."—Lit. Reg. Nov. 9, 1822.

CHARACTER.—The utility of Works of this kind is best exhibited negatively, by imagining the misery and mischief which may be consequent upon the want of them. No man can say, that, unassisted, he can act prudently and promptly in Mercantile Transactions, if he is to ransack Libraries and consult Lawyers upon every multifarious occasion which occurs in the course of business. He may mistake or be cheated; and if he chooses to avoid either or both ness. He may mistake or be cheated; and if he chooses to avoid either or both ness. He may mistake or be cheated; and if he chooses to avoid either or both of these, he loses time which may be profitably employed."—Gent. Mag. May, 1823.

BURGESS'S ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES.—Warehouse, 170, Strand, corner of the Savoy-steps, London.—John Burgess and Son, being apprized of the endeavours used by unworthy persons to impose a spurious article for their make, feel it incumbent upon them to request the attention of the Public, in purchasing what they conceive to be the Original, to observe the Name and Address corresponds with the above: the general appearance of the spurious descriptions will deceive the unguarded, and for their detection, J. B. and Son submit the following cautions,—some are in appearance at first sight, "The Genuine," but without any name or address;—some "Burgess's Essence of Anchovies;"—others "Burgess's,"—and many more without Address.

John Burgess and Son having been many years honoured with such distinguished approbation, feel every sentiment of respect towards the Public, and earnestly solicit them to inspect the Labels previous to their purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments.

BURGESS'S NEW SAUCE for general purposes, having given such great satisfaction, continues to be prepared by them, and is recommended as a most useful and convenient Sauce: will keep good in all climates.

Warehouse, 107, Strand, corner of the Savoy-steps, London.—(The original Fish sauce Warehouse.)

CAUTION.—In consequence of the great disappointment many persons have experienced from purchasing inferior Trusses, SALMON, ODY, and CO. most respectfully solicit the attention of Medical Gentlemen and the public to observe, that the true PATENT SELF-ADJUSTING TRUSS has "Salmon, Ody, and Co. 232, Strand, London," marked upon the leather case, without which none are genuine, as many of the spurious kind. Salmon, Ody, and Co. the inventors and patentees, have made upwards of 50,000 of their Patent Trusses, and still continue to have the recommendations of all the most eminent surgeons in town and country.—(☞ Persons in the country are requested to send the circumference of the body an inch below the hips. Sold by one or more druggists in every principal town in the united kingdom.

THE ROYAL FAMILY, and LADIES and GENTLEMEN may rely on it, they will not have a hair fall off or turn grey, by now using Prince's celebrated Russia Oil, is so improved with an extra valuable ingredient, through which it has made the Russia Oil the greatest nourisher and preserver to the hair in the universe, will make it grow thick and long, and prevent its falling off or turning grey; and is used as a nourisher to the roots of the hair, that if it even has begun to turn grey, will restore it again to its natural colour, and, if used often, it will never turn grey again, and is sure to clear the scurf, from infancy to old age, and will always keep the head and hair clean and beautiful. Gentlemen who have lost their hair, and have the least sign of roots of hair remaining, by using regularly, for a few months, Prince's Improved Russia Oil, will have a most valuable ingredient to be used to restore it, and produce a fine head of hair, which hundreds have experienced. Every Royal Gentlemen have published, in the Gazette of Health, that Prince's Russia Oil is superior to any Oil for the hair, and will do, in cases of baldness and weak hair, what can possibly be done.

Ask for Prince's Improved Russia Oil, with the extra ingredient. The Ounce bottle 5s., or a large bottle, containing five ounces, 11., which is a saving, or six large bottles for 5l. which is a yet greater saving. Sold, wholesale, retail, and for exportation, by the sole Proprietor, A. Prince, removed to No. 9, Poland street, Oxford-street, near the Pantheon; and by Mr. Smyth, Perfumer to his Majesty, New Bond-street; and by most principal Perfumers and Medicine Venders.—It is no wonder that Ladies and Gentlemen have complained of late of the Russia Oil not being of service to the hair, as they have found out that unprincipled persons have sold them counterfeits.

EASE and COMFORT in SHAVING.—To those Gentlemen who experience inconvenience in Shaving from a tender face or strong beard, J. T. RIGGE most particularly recommends his celebrated MAGNETIC RAZOR TABLET, which, with its late improvement, he engages will produce so keen an edge as to supersede all grinding, honing, &c. and render the operation of shaving as easy and agreeable as it was before unpleasant and painful, its use is simple, its effect certain; price 7s. 6d. J. T. Rigge's Aromatic Shaving Soap will also be found a valuable addition. Manufactory, 65 Chesnut-street, and 52, Park-street, Grosvenor-square.

TO THE FASHIONABLE WORLD.—J. ATKINSON, Perfumer, 44, Gerrard-street, Soho-square, respectfully informs the Fashionable World that he continues to sell, wholesale and retail, the following articles, they are also to be procured at most Perfumers and Hair Dressers in town and country; but as they have been very generally counterfeited, the genuine has his signature and address on the Label:—ATKINSON'S DOUBLE REFINED WINDSOR SOAP, divested of all caustic properties, is peculiarly calculated to Ladies or Gentlemen whose skin is tender, and to the nursery. It will keep till very old, and only requires to be used occasionally to be perfumed, and where the skin has got hard, rough, or uneven, it gradually corrects such imperfections, and makes it soft, white, and even; price, half pounds, 1s. 2d.; pounds, 2s.; by taking a dozen pounds, 1s. 9d.; also, the Old Brown Windsor Soap, possessing the same properties, but still older, and higher perfumed, price 2s. 3d. a pound.—ATKINSON'S CURLING FLUID, or VEGETATIVE HAIR OIL, is allowed to be the most elegant article ever introduced for giving the hair a beautiful gloss in dressing, and for keeping it in curl, in exercise, or in damp weather, and for regenerating the growth where it has fallen off, from illness, perspiration, change of climate, or any cause occasioning premature decay, price 3s. 6d.—ATKINSON'S VEGETABLE DYE changes grey or red hair on the Head or whiskers to a permanent brown or black, price 5s.—Agent for HUDSON'S BOTANIC TOOTH POWDER, and Tincture, which have been so generally adopted; they not merely cleanse and beautify the teeth, but preserve from decay to the latest period of life, they eradicate the scurvy and tartar from the gums, fasten such teeth as are loose, and sweeten the breath, and so indevitating are their effects, that there never was an instance of any one who regularly used them ever having the tooth ache or a tooth decay, pr. 2s. 9d. each

PRICE OF STOCKS AT THE CLOSE, SATURDAY.

There has been some little fluctuation in the British Money market this week, Consols having fluctuated from 83 to 83¾, and have this morning been steady at 83¾ ¼ for account. In the Foreign market Columbian Bonds have been fluctuating much; the meeting on Tuesday did not affect them so much as was anticipated by many speculators; they have been doing as high as 59¼, and as low as 55. In Spanish the variation has been very trifling. Consols for Account closed at 83¾.

LATEST NEWS.

Paris papers down to Thursday have arrived; they contain the Speech of the King of Spain to the Cortes, in which he complains that England has not rendered that assistance which was expected by the Spanish nation. An article from Port St. Mary's, dated the 7th inst. says:—"Negociations seem to be broken off in consequence of the Duke of Angoulême having declared that he would hear of no arrangement unless the King and Royal Family should first be set at liberty. The Leaders, though much cast down, could not make up their mind to resign their prey. We must strike a second blow to compel them to yield. It is said that the attack will take place between the 8th and the 12th inst.—Our fleet has been reinforced by the arrival of vessels from Corunna. We have received artillery and ammunition from all quarters, and nothing can give an idea of the ardour of our soldiers. We have just been informed that a division of Gen. Molitor's army has entered Malaga. Ballesteros has expelled the Exaltados from his troops, has caused them to be shut up in the citadel of Lorca, and has sent the rest of his army to the cantonments indicated by General Molitor."

BAYONNE, SEPT. 12.—We have received by the army courier the following information from Madrid, of the 4th instant:—From the public and private conversations of the partisans of the Regency it may be inferred, that they are incensed that the Cabinet of St. James's has not thought fit to recognise their Government, and that they are not now so apprehensive as they were a month ago of the English influence in the present contest. Mr. Calderon, a Member of the Regency, gave his opinion on this subject very explicitly in a Privy Council, held a few days since in the Royal Palace. In the course of his speech he says:—What then does England seek? To stop our triumphant march? To re-plunge us into anarchy by a false arrangement? No mediation—no compromise with those wretches? Such ought to be the principal point which should be the basis of our despatch to the French Prince.

It is affirmed that this despatch was thus forwarded to the Duke, on the 25th or 28th of last month; that is, as soon as news was received of the taking of Corunna. The moderate French, who in general do not participate in the confidence of the Regency with respect to the success, if not of the cause, of the pacification of the country, would not be averse to the intervention of England; but the Ultras, who daily become more numerous in the army, exalted by the advantages hitherto gained, and especially by the taking of the Trocadero, openly blame that power for desiring to interfere in their quarrel with the Constitutionalists. They boast that they can subdue and surmount everything, even Gibraltar, which would not be a morsel too hard of digestion for them. We have nothing new from our frontiers, unless it be the disorder at Passages, which is talked of but which party spirit exaggerates. It does not seem likely that Pampeluna can hold out long, unless the Constitutionalists will see it reduced to ashes.

PARIS, SEPT. 17.—Rear-Admiral Hamelin has arrived at Brest, in La Bretonne. The last letters from Bayonne announce that Marshal Lauriston has arrested Guanito, and disarmed some soldiers of the Faith, this Royalist Chief having refused to march on the Ebro, to Tudela and Lodosa.

PORT ST. MARY'S, SEPT. 6.—Yesterday morning the Deputy of the Cortes, Alava, arrived at this port, accompanied by a Colonel of Artillery. They came to propose a negociation to the Duke of Angoulême. The same day they returned to Cadiz with the Duke de Guiche, who came back at nine o'clock at night. This day at half-past ten, a second flag of truce was sent to Cadiz. It carried M. Chasile, Aid-de-Camp of Gen. Bourdesoulle. The French fleet has been increased this day by the arrival of three ships of the line and five frigates. The [illegible] has also been considerably augmented. It is asserted that one now [illegible] visions of the liberation of the King proposed by Alava of the cons[illegible]yal Highness should authorize and that his Majesty should sign a new Constitution. This proposal was rejected. The Governor of Cadiz, Valdez, convoked the Constituted Authorities of that city. It appears that they agreed on two things:—First, to revoke the determination which they had announced of burying themselves under the ruins of Cadiz, rather than to consent to any arrangement. Secondly, to endeavour to gain as much time as possible, in the hope that some favourable event, or the Equinox compelling the naval blockade to be raised, should enable them to escape impunely. With that view they replied, that the propositi ns made to them must be submitted to the Cortes, who should be assembled for the purpose of discussing them. The Duke of Angoulême, who penetrated their perfidious intentions, caused it to be signified to them by a flag of truce, which went off at half-past ten this morning, that his Majesty must be set at liberty before nine o'clock this evening, or else that military operations should be continued.—(Extracted from the Madrid Gazette of Thursday, Sept. 11.)

PROTEST OF THE REGENCY OF SPAIN against the execution of the Decree of Andujar.—To his Excellency the Duke of Reggio.—"YOUR EXCELLENCY—The Regency of the Kingdom has been officially informed, that last night three French Officers presented themselves at the city prison, with several gendarmes, and that they have set at liberty 22 Spaniards detained under the authority of the laws. The Regency has learned with surprise an event which attacks the sovereignty of the King, in whose name it governs, and not being able to endure this encroachment upon its dignity, it protests, in the face of Europe, whose assistance it implores, against the violence of this act.

"Upon hearing of this proceeding, the Regency of the Kingdom would have been glad if it had had the power to abandon the reins of Government, but reflecting on the situation of the Sovereign, the necessity of preserving union between the two nations, and of maintaining public order in the interior, it felt the duty of continuing its functions in spite of the outrage offered to the authority with which it is invested.

"The Regency of the Kingdom orders me to address this Protest to your Excellency in reply to the official communication which it has received.—I have the honour to be, &c.

"August 15, 1823."

ODESSA, Aug. 21.—We have positive information from Constantinople that the moderate party in the Divan, which, during the negociations with Lord Strangford, always advised concession, has again acquired some influence by the circumstance that Sadik Effendi (the deposed Kuja Bey) has been again taken into favour by the Sultan, and appointed Intendant of the Artillery. The diplomatic body are not a little rejoiced at it, and it appears that Lord Strangford has had great influence on this occasion. It was chiefly by his Lordship's powerful intervention that peace was concluded with Persia, at Erzerum, on the 16th of July.

FRANKFORT, Sept. 10.—The Bavarian frontier town of Hof was nearly destroyed by fire on the 4th. The number of houses burnt is stated to be 400.—The little town of Neubrunn, four leagues from Wurtzburgh, was visited by a similar calamity the evening before. Above 100 buildings, with the harvest that was just housed, and a considerable quantity of cattle, were destroyed.

THE ARMY.—A part of the 62d regiment arrived at Portsmouth on the 18th inst. on board the Vibelia transport, from Halifax. Brevet Major Hull, Captain Walter, Lieutenant Donald, Ensign Lane, and Ensign Power, have arrived on board the same vessel. The remainder of the 62d is expected to arrive in a few days on board the Cato and Loyal Briton transports, from Halifax. Several invalids are coming home from Halifax on board the Fanny transport.

Owing to some circumstances, at present unexplained, the negociation between MADAME CATALANI and the York Committee has abruptly terminated, and in consequence SHE DOES NOT SING at the ensuing meeting.

On Friday night, about 10 o'clock, the body of an unfortunate female, of the name of Charlotte Stevens, was taken out of the river Thames, at Waterloo Wharf. She lived at 29, Exeter-street, Strand, where she had taken her supper about an hour previous to her committing the rash act.

At the Old Bailey, yesterday, Samuel Harriit was indicted for stealing from the person of Richard Lamb, on the first of January, a watch value 20s. and a seal, value 10s. his property. Prosecutor was going through Hammersmith church-yard on his way home to Kensington, at about half-past eight o'clock, on the evening in question—joined company with a woman—whilst in conversation with her, prisoner came up, and saying something which witness did not hear, drew his watch forcibly out of his fob. A struggle ensued, in which prisoner got the better of witness—the woman and prisoner then walked away. In the course of the prosecutor's examination, he admitted that he had taken up a man named Walker, and charged him with the robbery, which induced the Jury to acquit the prisoner.

At Guildhall, yesterday, Capt. John Knatchbull was ordered to find bail for an assault commited upon the person of Mr. Brown, warden of the Fleet Prison. A Mr. Chilby offered himself as one of the bail, but was refused by the Alderman upon the ground of his having taken the benefit of the Insolvent Act.—John Markus preferred a charge against the Captain for stealing a great coat from Craven-street, City-road, the property of witness. The Magistrate said he could not investigate the particulars of the charge, it not being within his jurisdiction.

WITTON, 21, Fleet-street.

The MANUSCRIPT of 1814.—Among the various and important historical Works of the present season, we must confess, that the Volume lately published under the above title, by BARON PAIN, first Cabinet Secretary to Napoleon, appears entitled to particular attention, forming as it does a complete history of the events which led to the abdication of Napoleon, "an era of matchless consequence in the destinies of Europe." Las Cases, alluding to it in his Journal, says:—"This Work presents a most animated and interesting detail of the important but imperfectly known events of the period, and in particular of the short but immortal Campaign of 1814. It is an episode of miracles, in which Napoleon throughout appears supernatural in the resources of genius, the energy of mind, the celerity of motion, the steadiness of views, and the sublimity of courage, which he there evinced."

The LITERARY MUSEUM of yesterday contains, besides several original articles of interest, Reviews and copious Extracts from the following New Works—Oliver's Antiquity of Free-Masonry—Watts' Stanzas for Music, &c.—Quin's Visit to Sain—Combe's Letters to Marianne—Miss Holford's Translation of Italian Stories—Brain's Tales of Love, &c.—Irving—Original Articles on the Drama—Spanish Political Characters: Count d'Abisbal—Original Poetry—Varieties, &c. Price 8d., or for its immediate transmission by post, the Museum may be had stamped, price 1s. Published by John Warren, No. 7, Brydges-street, Covent-garden; and to be had of all Booksellers and Newsvenders in the Kingdom.

"THE LATE DUCHESS OF NEWCASTLE.—We are always glad when we find that the Fine Arts are employed in works which will hand down to posterity the amiable, the good, and the virtuous. At this time Mr Reynolds (engraver to his Majesty) has in hand a full length mezzotinto Engraving of the late Duchess of Newcastle, from a Painting by Sir Thomas Lawrence, which is expected shortly to appear.—Literary Museum. Orders for early Impressions received by Mr. Witton, 21, Fleet-street or 65, Paternoster-row, London. Proofs, 21. 2s.; Prints, 1l. 1s.; may be had framed, if wished.

Next Thursday is the day appointed for drawing the present popular Lottery. The Tickets and Shares are selling at prices much lower than for many years past, at the old and fortunate Offices of SWIFT and Co. No. 11, Poultry; 12, Charing-cross; and 31, Aldgate High-street.

Next Thursday the drawing commences, and those who wish to become partakers of the capitals will do well to recollect Carroll's wonderful luck; he sold 4 of £20,000, 1 of £10,000, besides 34 other capitals, in the last four months. The present scheme contains 3 of £20,000, 2 of £10,000, and 34 of £2,000, £1,000, £500, &c. All money, and more prizes than blanks. Tickets and Shares are now cheaper than they have been for 25 years. Carroll has opened a new Office, 7, Charing-cross, in addition to his old ones, 19, Cornhill, and 26, Oxford-street.

HAZARD and Co. have not for thirty years past experienced so great a demand for Tickets and Shares as in the present Lottery, which begins NEXT THURSDAY.—HAZARD and Co. attribute their great sales to the present very low price; the chance not being more than two-thirds of what it has been for many years past, and the novelty of the Scheme, which contains More Prizes than Blanks, and Three of £20,000, Two of £10,000, &c. &c. The first drawn Prize, NEXT THURSDAY, will be £10,000; and HAZARD and Co. respectfully remind the Public that in a former Lottery ALL the first-drawn Capitals were sold by them at their old-established Offices, Royal Exchange Gate; 26, Cornhill; and 324, Oxford street, end of Regent-street. HAZARD and Co. have Agents in all the principal country towns.

PIDDING and Co. have had an extraordinary demand for Tickets and Shares since the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced officially in the House of Commons that Government had determined to abolish Lotteries; this, however, is partly attributable to the cheap prices at which they are now selling, though it is not to be wondered at, that, now it is known there is a limitation of opportunities, every one is anxious to have a "Farewell Venture, and as the time is so near at hand, (next Thursday, 25th of this Month,) when the First Drawn Prize is to have £10,000 extra, it is perfectly natural that the recollection of PIDDING'S success should guide the Purchasers to the Lucky Corner, No. 1, Cornhill.

ELEGANT GRASSES, FURNITURE, &c.—The Nobility and Gentry are invited to inspect the Warerooms of Cooper and Son, 63, Bishopsgate Within, where is exhibited a large Assortment of new and second-hand Pier Glasses, admirably suited to every description of drawing or dining-rooms. The prices are just reduced 40 per cent. on plates measuring 100 inches by 72, and upwards; and on those of smaller dimensions the alteration will be found equally important. The extensive preference given to this Establishment is thankfully acknowledged by the Proprietors, who, in their endeavours to evince their gratitude, by manufacturing articles in a superior manner, at prices suitable to the times, hope to merit a continuance of public support. The Show-rooms of the Apartments are comprised every new and elegant article of upholstery, cabinet, and chair work, regulated upon such a scale of economy as to demand and ensure the patronage of rank and fashion.

BANKRUPTS.

T. GREETHAM, Liverpool, ship chandler.—J. WOOD, Cardiff, banker.—J. BOULTING, Halsted, Essex, linen-draper.—J. and G. STEEL, Rotherhithe, timber merchants.—R. WATERS, Union-court, merchant.—J. GASKELL, Windle, Lancaster, miller.—J. N. BAILEY, Chancery lane, Bookseller.—R. GOODWIN, Lamb's Conduit-street, silk-mercer.

COURT of CHANCERY.—The CAUSE of the ORPHAN DAUGHTER at the Reverend M. WOODWARD, Rector of Woolaston, Bucks, comes on in November next, but unless the Benevolent and Humane come forward and assist her, before then she must perish, having for the last three weeks been a wanderer in the streets, and her only home a sixpenny lodging-nightly: her clothes and every article gone but those she has on, which are all rags. After situation with her late dear mother, in Aylesbury Gaol and the Fleet Prison, for seven years, was not half so deplorable as her present one. She is indebted to the humanity of the Proprietors of this Paper for inserting this. The smallest relief will be thankfully received at Mr. Beresford's, 56, Fleet-street, and gratefully acknowledged by the distressed S. F. H. Woodward.

DENIS JACOB, Dealer in Diamonds and Pearls, begs leave to inform the Public he has REMOVED to 213, REGENT STREET, where he gives Ready Money for the above Articles.

G. PRIS, Grower of CHAMPAGNE, of Avize, near Epernay, France, most respectfully informs the Nobility, the Trade, his Friends, and the Public, that he has entered into a contract with Mr. CHARLES WRIGHT, Wine Merchant, of the OPERA COLONNADE, HAYMARKET, by which Mr. WRIGHT will in future have the entire and exclusive sale of his CHAMPAGNE WINES. G. PRIS takes this opportunity of returning his grateful thanks for the liberal and distinguished support he has met with since the year 1814, and he pledges himself that the same description of WINES, and if possible better, as it is his intention to superintend his vineyards personally, will be always on sale at Mr. CHARLES WRIGHT'S, Opera Colonnade, and at no other place in England or elsewhere, at the unexampled low price of 41. 4s. per dozen.

A SUITE of DRAWING-ROOM or DINING-ROOM CURTAINS, either of splendid Swiss Chintz, Spanish Damasks, Tabbinets, or Morocos, can be completed by MILES and EDWARDS at little more than half the prices regularly charged by other establishments. The extraordinary advantageous powers, with which they command every variety, convey to general notice the amazing reduction in the prices, can only be credited by a comparison with the terms of other houses. For Four-post, French and Tendrel Furniture, M. and E. have just received from their 1st Dug Grounds an additional quantity of Twelve Hundred Pieces of Chintzes, all warranted fast colours, and on their usual low terms.

CAUTION.—Miles and Edwards beg particularly to state, that their only Establishment is at No. 131, Oxford-street (between Holles-street and Old Cavendish-street.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

Private letters from Paris communicate the following particulars respecting the capture of Riego:—Having arrived with four companions of his flight, two of whom are said to be English officers, he stopped on the 14th at a village called Arguillos, consisting only of 15 houses, inhabited by the descendants of the German colony with which Charles III. attempted to people the Sierra Morena. He had announced himself as belonging to the army of Ballesteros, but having been betrayed by the appellation of General, with which one of his comrades addressed him, he was recognised by one of the peasantry, and conducted to Carolina. From Carolina he will be conveyed to Madrid by the French troops, to be placed at the disposal of the Regency.

The Moniteur of the 22d of September, contains a long Bulletin, signed Guilleminot, giving an account from Molitor, Commander-in-Chief of the second corps, of the affair of Malaga, and his different dispositions to destroy the enemy, while General Loverdo marched on Riego. Then follows the articles of the Capitulation of Pampeluna, 13 in number.

CAPITULATION OF THE PLACE AND CITADEL OF PAMPELUNA, agreed upon between Camp-Marshal Baron St. Cyr-Nogues, Chief of the Staff, invested with Powers by Marshal Lauriston, and Don Raimond Sanchez Salvador, Brigadier of the National Armies, General Commandant of the Province, and Governor of Pampeluna:—

Art. 1. The place and citadel of Pampeluna shall be delivered to the French army.

2. The garrison, that is to say, the Governor, the staff of the fortress, and the division, the chiefs, officers, and soldiers, including the military reserve, both infantry and cavalry, shall be prisoners of war, and shall be conveyed to France under a French escort. The garrison will march out on the 18th of September, and will proceed by short marches to St. Jean Pied de Port. The means of transport for themselves and families will be afforded to them during the march.

3. The arms of the garrison shall, before marching out, be deposited in the arsenal of the Citadel. The officers shall retain their swords, horses, and equipage; and the soldiers their haversacks.

4. The Militiamen, Chasseurs, and Volunteers who have borne arms shall also be conducted to France as prisoners of war. They may return to Spain on obtaining the permission of the French Government.

5. The clerks of the military administration, the physicians, surgeons, and apothecaries, shall be all treated as the officers of corresponding rank.

6. The sick of the garrison shall be taken care of by the French army, and the Spanish physicians and surgeons shall continue to attend them until they are cured.

7. The chiefs of corps shall have power to leave, in deposit, their regimental accounts.

8. Two covered waggons shall be allowed on leaving the garrison, and shall not be examined.

9. Every doubtful article shall be interpreted in favour of the garrison.

10. The Marshal of France, commanding in chief the fifth corps of the army of the Pyrenees, will employ his influence with the Spanish authorities, to prevent political re-actions and vengeance.

11. Artillery and engineer officers shall be appointed on each side, to verify the state of the arsenals and magazines.

12. Commissaries of war shall also be nominated to draw up an inventory of the chests and magazines of every kind belonging to the State.

13. As soon as the present capitulation shall be signed, the gate of the citadel called Seguros, and the gate called La Tacenere, shall be occupied by the French troops.

ARMY OF THE PYRENEES.—Letter from the Marshal Duke of Reggio to his Excellency the Marshal Minister of War, dated Madrid, September 17.—"SIR,—I have the honour to inform your Excellency that I have this instant learnt from an Officer, who is come from the grand head quarters, that Riego has been taken prisoner with three of his officers, by some peasants of a village, three leagues from La Carolina, after having been beaten and put to the rout by our troops.—Accept, &c.

"The Marshal Commander in Chief of the first Corps, (Signed) "Marshal Duke of REGGIO.

"P.S. The Minister of War of the Regency communicates to me the same news."

MADRID, SEPT. 17.—The following is from Cabra, in the kingdom of Grenada, of the 11th of September:—"Since the 24th of August, the troops under Ballesteros are cantoned here, and at Montilla, Lucena, and Priego. Riego, hoping to gain them over to the Revolutionary cause, after having abandoned Malaga to the French, marched on these cantonments with from three to four thousand foot, and from seven to eight hundred horse. Yesterday, about nine o'clock in the morning, he appeared at Priego, in front of Ballesteros, who was in a defensive position on the road to Grenada; while the division of General Ignace Balanzat occupied the right of Caivaire Priego. Immediately the fire of the tirailleurs commenced, and Riego demanded a suspension of arms. Ballesteros accepted an interview, and it was agreed that both parties should keep their positions. All appeared as if arranged, when the escort of Riego fell, unperceived, on that of Ballesteros, and disarmed them, and held the General as prisoner in the house at which he was at Priego with Riego. General Balanzat, informed of the treason, harangued his troops, and immediately made dispositions to act against Riego, and the corps which are here are marching on the same point; we expect to hear of a battle.—P.S. At the critical moment, the French, commanded by General Bourmont, appeared and attacked the corps of Riego, and put them completely to the rout."

Quiroga, it is said, who landed at Gibraltar, has succeeded in getting into Cadiz. The Empecinado, whose band has been reduced to 200 men, dared to summon Placentia on the 10th, and demanded a contribution of 60 milreas. If not complied with, he threatened that he would reduce the town to ashes.

Extract of a Report of Lieut.-Gen Rottenbourg to the Minister of War, dated Perpignan, Sept. 17.—"By my last report, I informed your Excellency of the dispositions I had made to succour the troops of the ninth division of the fourth corps. Having learned for certain that the enemy, who made a feint to march on Urgel, had gone for Figueras, I immediately gave orders to General Arnauld to join Gen. Damas, to reinforce the blockade of Figueras. After a sharp action on the 15th, at Llin do, which terminated on the 16th, at Llers all the remains of the enemy's columns, of nearly 2000 men, which disembarked in the night of the 9th and 10th, between Mason and Monjat, coming from Barcelona, surrendered to Gen. Damas. This brilliant affair does honour to General Damas, whose troops were inferior to those of the enemy."

BAYONNE, SEPT. 18.—The reason of the sudden departure of the troops from Madrid, which we mentioned before, is now said to be that the troops of the Faith, in Estremadura, had met with a repulse in an action with Lopez Banos. The Garde-de-corps, it is said, will immediately march for Port St. Mary's. Santona, we find, has capitulated conditionally; that is, the French troops are to be received into it on the 27th, if it does not previously receive a supply of provisions and ammunition. The malady at Passage is said to be very serious. The day before yesterday seven persons died, who were in perfect health the day before. Several soldiers of the 19th regiment, which forms the first Cordon, have fallen sick within these few days; happily the second Cordon, formed by the 52d, will hinder any communication between those troops and the rest of the army. It is reported that the commander of the 52d is ill, but it is supposed to be from over-exertion. Some inhabitants of Santander have sent petitions to the Regency and to the Duke d'Angoulême, stating, that they had been violently deprived of national property, formerly belonging to the monastery of Monte Corban, which they had purchased at public auction under the sanction of the Constitutional Government. The Governor has re-instated the Prelate in the possession of the estates, without any notice to the petitioners, or due intimation of the orders which he said he had received from the Regency.

Letters from Valencia, dated 9th instant, mention that the Constitutional privateer Vinas went into Alicant roads during the night of the 30th ult. and took possession of the Spanish ship LORA Almas, which had just anchored there from Gibraltar, laden with iron, which was English property, and had carried her up to Alicant.

GIBRALTAR, Sept. 4.—The Tribune frigate sailed from hence for Malaga on Sunday, to enquire into the particulars of the imprisonment of several English merchants by Riego, for non-payment of the forced loan. The American Commodore here refused to go, although the American Consul and several merchants of that Republic are in the same predicament. He alleged that he had no authority for interference in such a case. Two English merchants have been released.

Accounts from Bourdeaux of the 18th inst. state that the Lewis, from Martinique, in proceeding from the Isle de Rhe to Havre, was taken by a Spanish privateer within a few leagues from the land.

Charleston Papers to the 23 ult. contain accounts from Havannah, which indicate the unsettled state of the island. The following is an extract from a Manifesto addressed to the National Militia of Havannah, but which had been suppressed by order of General Vives, soon after its publication:—

"MANIFESTO!—To you National Volunteers, to you who have ever manifested the warmest love of liberty, an aged man, and one of your companions, now addresses himself, knowing that you are resolved to avoid the slavery which awaits you, or to perish in the attempt. It is no longer to be doubted—there is undoubtedly a criminal conspiracy in Havannah, equal in every respect to that which is cutting down and burning the fields of Spain—there is a conspiracy, and the conspirators live among us, and deceive us by their pretended moderation. If despotism triumphs in Spain (and what shall prevent it?) they intend to bind us to the chariot of victory. It becomes us to unite in time and prepare for resistance. What a wretch must he be, who, beat down by cowardice, shall yield his neck to despotism while any means for obtaining his liberty are left unattempted."

IRELAND.

CORK, SEPT. 19.—On Wednesday night an attempt was made to set on fire White Church, a place of Protestant worship, situate on the old Mallow road, within four miles of this city. Disdaining the effects of the horrible massacre of Kilderrery, which must naturally be supposed to make vigilance doubly watchful, some of the affiliated villains of the truculent regiments that are organized for all manner of outrage in this part of the kingdom, forced open one of the windows of this church, through which they entered, of course unresisted, having provided themselves with gunpowder, pitch, and tow. The pulpit, which is situate high in the Church, was chosen as the point of conflagration; for the sacrilegious miscreants employed in this work of insult to religion, and of menace to the loyal inhabitants of the country, imagined that a flame raised in that place would immediately communicate with the roof. In this, however, they mis-reckoned; the pulpit took fire, and soon fell, and the incendiary materials descended with it. The pews near it were found smeared over with pitch; some of them were partially burned, and considerable damage has been done. Gunpowder and tow were found strewed about in sufficient quantity to explain beyond any doubt the means taken for accomplishing the object in view. Can any doubt?—but why insult the understandings of readers with interrogatories?—the blind alone, the wilfully blind only, can plead ignorance of the main impulse and excitement to the terrible projects that are on foot.—Cork Constitution.

APPREHENSION OF THE MURDERERS OF MR. FRANKS AND FAMILY.—On the authority of a letter which we have seen, from a respectable gentleman near Mallow, we have much gratification in communica ing the intelligence that all the barbarians engaged in that most diabolical murder, have been apprehended, and that one of them has turned approver. We trust that retributive justice will not be slow, that neither the approver nor the miscreants, his companions in blood, will be permitted the long interval between this and next assizes to retract his evidence, and to terrify and deter further witnesses. A Special Commission should issue forthwith, if the fact be confirmed—it is due to the memory of the sufferers.—Cork Mercury.

A Court was held under the Insurrection Act at Mallow, county of Cork, on Thursday se'nnight. Mr. Blacker, the Assistant Barrister, and 21 Magistrates, were present.—John Sheehan was charged with having certain ammunition in his possession, after being called upon by an authorized person to deliver them up; and also with being absent from his dwelling-place. John Dornan, police-man, stated that he was on duty on the night of the 15th Sept. at Killavullen, where he met the prisoner at about half past nine o'clock; witness asked him where he was going, but he gave no satisfactory answer. Witness carried him to the guard-house. John Clark stated that he had been ordered to search the prisoner's person; and before he did so, he demanded whether he had ammunition or arms concealed? the witness replied that he had neither; witness then proceeded to search his person, and found a small box of slugs and a piece of lead concealed in his waistcoat pocket. His coat at the back was stained with blood, which appeared fresh. Prisoner said that his nose had been bleeding. The prisoner could give no satisfactory account of himself; he was interrogated by Mr. Lowe, and it appeared that he had slept at Wall-town (near Mr. Franks's house) on the night after Mr. Franks and his family were murdered. He is a young lad, and seemed to be shrewd and intelligent, although sullen and reserved. The Magistrates, without hesitation, convicted the prisoner, who was sentenced by Mr. Blacker to be transported for seven years.

OLD BAILEY.

WEDNESDAY.—John White was indicted for stealing six table cloths, and other articles, the property of Thomas Harrison, the proprietor of the Tavistock Hotel, Covent-garden. The prosecutor stated that the prisoner had been in his service nine months, and left him about six months ago. Witness missed great quantities of linen whilst the prisoner was in his family. A gentleman, who was at the Hotel, lost a considerable quantity of property, and the witness went to the prisoner's house to search. Prisoner then kept a chandler's shop, and his name was on the door. Prisoner was not at home, but his wife and daughter were. On searching an up-stairs room, witness found six table cloths and three towels, which witness, by the marks upon them, knew to be his property. John Purdon, a Bow street officer, proved searching the prisoner's house on the 8th of August, and finding the articles now produced. When the prisoner was told of the charge against him, he said he was in great trouble, and was very sorry for what he had done. Mr. Beauchamp's shopman produced a table-cloth which was pledged at his master's shop, in Holborn.

The Recorder—Did the prisoner pledge that cloth?

Witness—I don't know, my Lord.

Recorder—Was it a man or woman who pledged it?

Witness I can't say, my Lord.

Recorder—Why? is it not specified on the ticket?

Witness—No, my Lord; there is nothing but Collins on the ticket.

The Recorder—The more is the shame, Sir. Do you not know that, by Act of Parliament, you are bound to put the full name of the person pledging, as well as the residence. On this ticket there is nothing but the name Collins; neither christian name nor residence.

Witness—There is Holborn at the top of the ticket.

The Recorder—It would puzzle a cunning man to find it out; but, even supposing the word Holborn to be there, is that a sufficient description, without either street or number being named. This is a property way of relieving a pawnbroker from the necessity of identifying a thief! I know of nothing which exempts pawnbrokers, any more than other class of society, from obeying the laws. You have shamefully neglected to obey the law in this respect, and your master to dismiss you. You certainly shall not have your expences.

The Jury found the prisoner guilty.

The Recorder—Mr. Harrison, what did your loss amount to at the time the prisoner was with you?

Mr. Harrison—At least 150l. my Lord.

The Recorder—What wages did you give him? Answer—month, my Lord.

The Court sentenced the prisoner to be transported for seven

The Recorder—The prosecutor will keep the duplicate, and der whether he will not make it a subject of information against pawnbroker, for having given one so defective.

THOMAS THOMSON, scarcely ten years old, was indicted for gentleman's pocket of a handkerchief. The gentleman state he was walking through Bedford-square on the evening of the August, when he felt somebody pull at his pocket. He turned and found the boy now at the bar reaching at the handkerchief coat-pocket, and had succeeded in getting it half out of the The gentleman took hold of him, and gave him to the next The boy said nothing in his defence, and called no witnesses. Jury found him Guilty. The Keeper of Newgate said, the been once before tried at the bar for a similar offence.

THURSDAY.—David Levy and John Hanichel, (a Prussian) indicted for having stolen a silver watch, the property of J. Hanichel went into the shop of the prosecutor, who is a watch on the evening of the 19th inst. under pretence of looking at beads; shortly after his leaving the shop prosecutor missed and pursued and took him into custody, when he acknowledged sold it directly to Levy for 8s.; Levy was apprehended, and nized by the prosecutor's servant as having stood at the door the time Hanichel was in the shop. Levy eventually gave watch, and confessed having received it from Hanichel. A preter attended for Hanichel, who stated that the officer was apprehended grossly beat and ill-treated him, until he him to say he had given it to Levy. He then put in a ment, reiterating his complaints against the officer, and able detail of shipwreck, and subsequent distress, which countered. Brandt, the officer, (also a Prussian,) was denied having beat Hanichel until he had been licked by denied all felonious knowledge.—The Recorder observed, chel had been tutored by somebody to draw up a defence vated the case, and whose only object was to screen the —The Jury retired, and after 26 minutes absence, returned of Guilty against both the prisoners, but recommended Levy—transportation for 14 years. Hanichel—Death—which is an exercise of power vested in the Judge to punishment to transportation for life.

Joseph Woods and John Fearby were indicted for stealing reigns, one 5l. note, and two 10l. notes, the property of rington. The prosecutor was bailiff to Earl Cowper, and Lordship's seat in Hertfordshire. On the 13th instant he town on business, and the prisoner Woods came up to him field, and entered into conversation with him. They went two or three public-houses, and drank beer. At length they public-house which the prosecutor supposed to be in the because the Paddington stages were passing and repassing. the prosecutor and Woods were in this house, Fearby and whose name the prosecutor did not recollect, entered, seeming to know Woods, entered into conversation with prosecutor. Fearby mentioned, as if incidentally, that had dislocated his ancle, and observed, that it was an event. Woods said there was no such word as "infirmary" English language, and offered to back his opinion by a of beer; the prosecutor also offered to bet a pot of beer—reeness of Fearby's notions of orthography. Fearby wagers, and Johnson's Dictionary being produced, Fearby enough, that it contained the word "infirmary." Fearby said, that all three looked like poor men who could ten pounds each; witness said he had not so much, but could produce that sum in a very short time, if some money up by the post; Fearby laid Woods and others that they could not produce 10l. each by ten o'clock—Woods walked with witness to Tottenham-court-road, expected the parcel, but it had not arrived—returned to public-house, where he generously gave witness and o'clock to get their 10l.—all four proceeded to Tottenham—the three (Woods, Fearby, and a third who had joined mained at a public-house, whilst witness went to his (whom (the expected parcel not having arrived,) he borrowed joined the prisoners and their friend at the public-house 10l.—was allowed to have won his wager. Fearby then the same wager, that he could not produce 20l. more wager, showed, and won it; Fearby gave Woods what note, and out of which he was to pay witness, when changed. Woods proposed going to see the ballowing desirous of seeing it, and offered to accompany them; a coach; at Woods' suggestion they stopped at a public-way, under the plea of procuring refreshment, but where cards, and he and Fearby played at "all fours." had won four points out of five, Fearby only one, and been dealt for the decision of the game, when Fearby left a few minutes, desiring that nobody would look at his cards sence. Whilst Fearby was away, Woods looked at his and said that he was sure to win the game; the made the same assertion. Fearby, when he returned, that he would play against Woods' "hand" for sixty pounds, mediately placed, as the prosecutor supposed, 60l. in the the prosecutor deposited his 20l. and Woods and the tended to place the like sum each, as it was agreed they shares in the wager. The prosecutor was induced to play hand, for he was told that a "child must win with it;" theless lost the game. Fearby immediately took the stakes hat, and Woods leaving the room, beckoned witness to where he detained him in conversation for a short time, him, saying he was going down the street and should immediately. Witness went back to the parlour and found that his unknown friend had also made their exit; did not find the room.

Cross-examined—Was main glad to bet when he knew win—knows nothing of the game at "all fours"—is certain of "high, low, jack, and game"—does not know trump cards—could not refuse to play the "hand"—he was so and so frequently told that he could not lose the game—nobody looked at Fearby's cards during his absence—said to win or lose; if he had won should have thought himself to 20l. out of the 60l. betted by Fearby—is sure he bet the winner took the money—prisoners departed most ceremoniously neither said "good bye," nor "thank you."

By the Court—Did you think you had lost the game?—Yes.

The Court then stated to the Jury that the conduct of the although extremely wicked, did not amount to a felony. peared to have had a fool to deal with in the person of the he had swallowed the bait greedily, and afterwards acquiesced loss. The prisoners might be made to answer for their conduct another tribunal; if not, it was probable that some other would cause them to be again brought before that Court, present business would not be forgotten.

Fearby said, "I'll take care you won't see me again, my Juror—We are very sorry, my Lord, that the case ceeded in.

Another Juror—It is to be regretted the prisoners should to escape unpunished.

A third Juror—We much wish there had been a prosecution.

His Lordship—Gentlemen, I regret equally with turn this case has taken; if there had been a learned gaged for the prosecution, it could not have altered the construction can this be made a felony, and however the escape of two notorious swindlers, through the duplicity of the prosecutor, you must acquit the prisoners.

The Jury then returned a verdict of—Not Guilty.

His Lordship—Let the prisoners be detained until the next FRIDAY.—Lawrence Cleary stood indicted for feloniously the parish of St. Paul, Covent-garden, 39 sovereigns, the Thomas Fahy.

Prosecutor rents a house in Bedfordbury—prisoner was the time—received in the city 39 sovereigns and some other companied into the city by a female cousin named Kearney—her drank part of a pot of ale and three glasses of spirits—in Fleet-street—knew the money was then safe in his breeches—went straight home—did not stop on the way—was rather home at about three o'clock—laid down on prisoner's bed, pulled off his clothes—when he awoke told his wife to take of his pocket—it was gone—saw prisoner that night—he showed [illegible] sovereigns, which he said had been given him by a gentleman about, and went to find the girl described by prisoner.

Cross-examined—Did not have prisoner and the girl apprehended for robbing the poor foreigner—suspected it was his property—never saw Knavin with the robbery—she was up before the Magistrate—Knavin and state that he knew his money was safe in Fleet-street after he had parted with her—did not recollect that circumstance until afterwards—went to the house of Knavin after he had received the money—carried her child home for her—cannot say how long he was there—was very tipsy—recollects falling down the stairs—a person in the passage at the time—he was close to witness—did not see the prisoner with the robbery for three weeks—prisoner did not proceed, but continued his lodger—has a female professing more skill than other people living in his house—never had his fortune told by her—did not authorise his wife to consult her—has heard that she did so—remembers having a curious dream—dreamed the prisoner had the money—always had the same dream.

Re-examined—On the morning after the robbery went to Knavin, because he knew any thing about the money—she was apprehended by order of the sitting Magistrate at Guildhall, and discharged on witness saying he could not swear she had robbed him.

Mary Knavin is the wife of John Knavin, who is first cousin to the prosecutor—went to the Bank with him on the day in question—saw prosecutor receive several sovereigns—he was sober—he was tipsy afterwards—went back with him as far as St. Paul's, not to Fleet-street—at parting asked him if his money was safe—he put his hand outside of his breeches pocket—witness heard the money chink.

Thos. Fahy recalled and cross-examined—Went to bed at three o'clock—got up at five—did not see the prisoner in the room—saw him at seven o'clock that night in the house.

Mrs. Knavin—cross-examination continued—When at the Mansion-house, prosecutor said he thought witness had robbed him—Fahy said, that to make his wife easy, he had told her he was in the company of some hackney coachmen, who had ill used him—prosecutor was very much grieved when he fell down in witness's house—helped him to get up—prosecutor came to the house of witness on the night of the robbery, and said she had robbed him.

Margaret Fahy—Is the wife of the prosecutor—remembers the day in question—on the morning of that day prisoner asked witness to lend him 2s. 6d. to go to a raffle—did not lend it to him. but sent her little boy with a pair of her husband's breeches to pledge for that sum, which he did the prisoner—pledged the breeches at the suggestion of prisoner, who returned her the 2s. 6d. between nine and ten o'clock in the morning—saw Cleary in the house whilst her husband was absent—witness went out—the woman with whom prisoner associated was in the house—either prisoner or the female might have gone into the room where prosecutor was asleep during the absence of witness—the woman was also in the house during prisoner's absence, and whilst prosecutor was asleep—prisoner owed witness 11. 15s. for rent, which he paid her the next morning—he said he had received it from a woman who had robbed a foreigner of it—that was not the woman spoken of before—he told witness he had married the latter woman, and received 20l. fortune with her.

Recorder—Did this woman go into prisoner's room whilst your husband was asleep?

Witness—Yes, I saw her.

Cross-examination resumed—Prisoner's room was on the second floor—witness was in her room on the first floor—when she left the house, the prisoner and the woman were in her room—left the street-door open—was not very long out—perhaps ten minutes or a quarter of an hour—prisoner did not make it a secret that he was in possession of a larger sum of money than usual. This witness repeatedly contradicted herself—her evidence was so inconsistent that Mr. Walford (who, be it remembered, was the Counsel for the prosecution) exclaimed, "this woman has a most unhappy confusion of memory."

Recorder—Witness, were you drunk?

Witness—Not a drop had I drank, your honour.

Recorder—You don't seem to know any thing about it—did prisoner tell you of the infamous manner in which he had become possessed of the money?

Witness—He did, and he told every body else of that same thing.

Recorder—Did you give him warning to quit your house?

Witness—Indeed and I did not.

Recorder—Then you should have done so—stand down.

Several other witnesses were called, who confirmed the principal points in the former testimony.

The prisoner, in his defence, stated, that he did not get home until half-past five o'clock, and that then Mrs. Fahy told him her husband was drunk, and could not go to his beat—she asked him to go and watch for him, which he did, when he came back, prosecutor and his wife were gone to Mrs. Knavin's.

Thos. Boyle recalled—Knew prisoner went to watch for Fahy, because he was drunk on the night in question.

Prisoner was about resuming his defence, when the Recorder observed that he had made one defence, and the Court could only then hear his witnesses.

Several witnesses to character were then called—one of whom stated that Mrs. Fahy told him prosecutor had not been robbed of the money, but had given it to his foreman.

Michael Neery re-called at prisoner's suggestion—has seen prisoner with fifty sovereigns—is sure there were 47—counted them—it was at a raffle—prisoner said he had found the money—did not say he had found it that day—asked prisoner how much he had—told him—asked him to count it.

Witness cross-examined by Mr. Walford—Is sure this was on the night of the raffle.

Re-examined by Mr. Prendergast—Could hardly believe he had so much money when he told him, therefore asked him to count it—counted it with him.—Another witness deposed to his having forty-eight sovereigns.

The Recorder summed up, and the prisoner was found guilty, and sentenced to be transported for life.

POLICE.

MARLBOROUGH-STREET.—On Tuesday, two women, named Catherine Fitzgerald and Isabella Sullivan, were brought before Mr. Conant, the Magistrate, on a charge preferred against them for throwing a lodger, named James Barnes, out of the window of No. 9, Maynard-street, St. Giles's. The charge was supported by Bartlett, the beadle, and Charles Read, a Bow-street patrole. Read was accidentally passing at the time, and hearing a noise he went to the spot, when he found the unfortunate man lying in the street, he was unable to give any account of the transaction, and was taken to the hospital. Read then commenced enquiring after the persons who had maltreated Barnes, and subsequently apprehended the prisoners: they were instantly conveyed to this office, and remanded until the fate of Barnes should be known. On Wednesday morning, however, six more, who gave their names as Margaret Welsh, Jane Allerson, Mary Viner, Mary Hubland, Eliz. Coday, and Susan Perry, were brought up by Bartlett and Read, charged with being concerned with the before-mentioned prisoners. Coday is the mistress of the house. Bartlett informed the Magistrate Perry could give evidence; she stated that she resided in the first floor of No. 9, Maynard-street; she heard Sullivan take Barnes up stairs about two o'clock, and soon afterwards heard Fitzgerald go up: a noise then commenced respecting money, and she distinctly heard Barnes say he had paid enough, and would pay no more; she then heard Barnes go to the window and throw it up. he then said if they would not let him go he would get out, the moment after she heard him fall with a dreadful crash into the street.—The Magistrate inquired if the surgeon of the hospital was in attendance.—Bartlett replied the surgeon was not in attendance, but Barnes was at present in such a dreadful state that no opinion could be given of his recovery, at all events he could not move for a week. The Magistrate then remanded Sullivan and Fitzgerald for a week, and directed that the others should be kept in the watch-house.

On Thursday, Elizabeth Coday was apprehended on a warrant granted against her on the application of Mr. Turner, the solicitor, who is very actively engaged on the part of the parish, in bringing to justice the perpetrators of this outrage. The warrant was grounded on the deposition of Barnes, taken the day before at the hospital by the Magistrate, and which charged the prisoner Coday with aiding and assisting in an attempt to extort money from him by force and violence. The prisoner applied to be admitted to bail, but Mr. Turner submitted that the Magistrate had no power to grant such indulgence, inasmuch as the prisoner stands charged with a felonious act, under the 7th of Geo. II. c. 21, which says, "that any person who shall by threat or menace, extort, or attempt to extort any money, &c. shall be deemed guilty of felony." The prisoner was remanded for further examination on Wednesday next, with the other two prisoners.

The present age may certainly be considered as the most musical period that ever existed, if we regard the immense number of both instrumental and vocal compositions that are daily published—some good, many indifferent, but the far greater number absolutely bad. In order to enable persons whose slight knowledge of Foreign and English composers does not enable them to make choice of their best compositions, Messrs. Cocks and Co. of Hanover-street, have just published a selected list of all the best and most approved Instrumental and Vocal Music ever published. The want of such a catalogue has long been felt, and the musical world are greatly indebted to Messrs. On Wednesday, a Quarterly General Court of Proprietors was held at the India House, at which the Chairman (W. Wigram, Esq.) presented a variety of papers; he also submitted to the Court sundry documents relative to Haileybury College.—Mr. Hume asked whether any Report had been drawn up by the last College Committee? It would be satisfactory to know how the College had been conducted during the last half year; whether it had been quiet and peaceable, and free from disturbance.—The Chairman had the satisfaction to state to the Court, that at the last visitation, which occurred in June, the situation of the College was, in every respect, entitled to praise.—Mr. Hume wished to know whether any alteration had been made in the statutes? They had been told by the late Chairman (Mr. Pattison) that the recent disturbances in the College were under the consideration of the College Committee, who would be prepared, at an early period, to lay the result of their inquiry before the Court.—The Chairman answered, that the College Committee had made a Report on this subject. It was now before the Court of Directors, but they had not thought it necessary to alter any of the College Statutes.—The Chairman was then about to put the question of adjournment, when Mr. Hume rose and entered into a defence of the course he had pursued with respect to the grant which had been proposed to Mr. J. H. Pelly, and contended that every statement he had made was borne out by documents. He expressed his conviction, that if the Court of Proprietors had been in possession of the documents which were now accessible to them, more especially the penalty bond, when the case was formerly before them, the question never would have gone to a ballot. He would have been negatived at once.—After a few words from the Chairman and Mr. Grant, the Court adjourned.

On Thursday a Court of Common Council was held at Guildhall, at which a petition was presented from the New River Company, for leave to erect a steam-engine for more effectually supplying the metropolis with water. In answer to a question put to the Solicitor for the Company by Alderman Venables, he said the supply of water for the suppression of fires, at all times of the night, would be more ample, regular, and certain than it had hitherto been.—A Report was presented from the Committee of City Lands, recommending the repairing of the roofing of Fleet-market. On the motion for agreeing to it, Mr. Slade moved as an amendment, "That the consideration of this question be adjourned, and that it be referred to the Committee of City Lands to consider and award upon the necessity and practicability of removing Fleet-market to a more convenient spot." Mr. Dixon appealed to the gallantry of the Court to afford the ladies frequenting Fleet-market due accommodation, by voting the required sum of 500l. for the necessary roofing of the fruit and green markets. Alderman Wood had no objection to the ladies frequenting Fleet-market being protected from the rain, but he wished London to have such a market as was to be seen at Liverpool, and he took that improvement to be of far greater importance than the temporary repair proposed. Mr. Slade ultimately withdrew his amendment, and on the question for referring the Report back to the Committee, directing them to make the necessary repairs, there were 37 for it—against it, 34—majority, 3.

Berkeley's g. by Grimaldi, (4 years old, 8st. 3lb.) at the Goodwood Races 1824, for 50 guineas, h. ft.

On Friday a match for 50 sovereigns was run for, which was won by Mr. Trewhitt Jones's c. g. Agent, 8st. 7lb. In a match for 100 sovereigns Mr. Mellish's b. f. Mum, 3yrs old, 8st. paid half forfeit to Mr. T. Jones's b. h. Inferior, aged, 8st. 7lb.—Mr. H. Perry's Sir Hildebrand won the handicap.

On Wednesday Mr. Graham ascended from the gardens of the Royal Oak Tavern, Cheltenham. At three o'clock the balloon was considered sufficiently buoyant, and the gas was instantly turned off; and at four o'clock Mr. Graham jumped into the car, and was instantly followed by a Mr. Webb. By 20 minutes past four, every thing being in readiness, the signal was given to loose the ropes, and the balloon instantly ascended in a slow majestic manner. Either the gas was too dense, or the weight of the gentlemen too much—but so it was, the balloon ascended to the height of a house, having cleared the gardens, and then instantly descended in the street. It was immediately surrounded, and Mr. Webb got out of the car. It was again loosed, and Mr. Graham then re-ascended in a gradual and majestic manner. He stood up in the car waving his flags, the multitude cheering him. He was for a length of time visible, but at length entered a thick misty cloud, apparently about a mile from the earth, and was then lost sight of. He descended about five miles from Oxford.

Mr. Sadler ascended from Toft Green, near Micklegate Bar, York, in his balloon, about a quarter past four on Monday. The weather was stormy, and he had nearly been dashed out of the car, against the Bar walls, but he dexterously suspended himself in the basket, by the cords, and thus escaped. A most numerous concourse of people were assembled, and upon the whole the ascent was a very good one.

Thursday morning a battalion of the 3d Regiment of Foot Guards furnished out upon the parade at the Horse Guards, in order to furnish the guard for St. James's Palace and Board of Green Cloth. NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

The communications of our friends pour in upon us so rapidly, as to render it impossible always to give attention to them in detail; next week we hope to be able to pay off old scores—but we must impress upon the minds of our friends the necessity of sending all matters of importance to the Office before Friday evening.

We ought to reply to J.F. who asks what MR. ROGERS would say to the event he alludes to—we think he would merely observe, that the pro notion being stopped is perfectly natural—the person would always have remained a Rear Admiral, because nobody could have recommended him for Vice.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 28.

HIS MAJESTY, it appears, takes possession of his Royal Castle on Wednesday; all the rejoicings and festivities, which are upon the grandest scale, will take place that day. Vast numbers of persons are going down to enjoy the loyal and gratifying celebration, indeed several families have taken houses at Windsor upon the strength of its becoming the actual residence of our Sovereign.

PUBLIC DINNERS—(No. 11.)

IN recording (which we mean regularly to do) the proceedings of all patriotic public dinners and meetings, we have seldom had the pleasure to fall in with a more jocose and entertaining affair than the party given by the electors of Nottingham to MESSRS. BIRCH and DENMAN, their able and enlightened Representatives.

A Common Hall, previously to dinner, had been held, for the purpose of enrolling, as Burgesses of Nottingham, MESSRS. WAITHMAN, BURDETT, and BROUGHAM—but a disappointment occurred, which we could have foretold—WAITHMAN was in time, and was made a Burgess, but neither BROUGHAM nor BURDETT came—it did not suit, nor, we must say, could it be expected that it would—the Aristocratic feelings of SIR FRANCIS, or the pretensions of MR. BROUGHAM, to make two of three in a party upon a public record, with a retail linen-draper in Fleet-street. BURDETT came to dinner, but so fearful was he of being caught and made a Burgess, that he did not arrive till the feast was nearly half over—a mark of neglect which, though pointed enough, never struck the assembled sages.

LORD RANCLIFFE was in the chair; and after having gone through the formality of drinking the KING and the Royal Family, his Lordship proposed—"the People,"—"a toast," said he, "which we must drink with three times three."—MR. BIRCH was then drunk, who made just such a speech as one would expect, and which was admirably suited to the audience and the occasion—he praised himself, and was extremely well received.

MR. DENMAN'S health was then given, preceded by the usual flummery; to which the Common Sergeant replied, by stating, that MR. BIRCH "was a reverend, grave, and potent signior," which bit of irony and ill-nature might have been spared at the moment: however, MR. BIRCH, like the rest of the party, did not mind being made a butt of, and MR. DENMAN proceeded to observe, that the sense of Parliament was a very different sense from the sense of the people; and then this City Magistrate—this little Judge, who ought, at the very moment he was speaking, to have been at the Old Bailey, trying prisoners—whose bounden duty it is to maintain order and preserve the peace—this exemplary gentleman had the good taste, in Nottingham, to ask, "whether the people of England had sanctioned thanks to Magistrates and soldiers, of whom they knew nothing, except their last violent act of cutting the throats of numbers in a crowded assembly."

To hear a most upright Judge, the opponent of an ELDON, arraigning the conduct of Magistrates for preserving the county from insurrection, was indeed gratifying to those who wished MR. DENMAN to appear in his real colours; but his friends were infinitely more surprised at his bad taste than pleased with his intemperance.

The amiability of this allusion is perhaps equalled by the sagacity and truth of an observation he made, that London was about to manifest its political feeling, shortly, by electing WAITHMAN Lord Mayor. How MR. DENMAN, a City officer (however inferior), could deliberately utter such trash, is to us perfectly astounding, when he must know, or at least ought to know, that these Lord Mayors are elected in rotation, and that if there really were a choice in the election, that little creature of the Corporation would have found it difficult to account for the elevation of ALDERMAN HEYGATE, a gentleman of sound principles and proper politics, and, at all events, the very reverse of the man he alluded to, upon the principle he himself laid down.

After buttering all the party in the ordinary manner, MR. Common Serjeant DENMAN proposed the health of

"GEORGE AUGUSTUS HENRY ANNE PARKYNS, LORD RANCLIFFE." His Lordship, in returning thanks, alluded to his Honourable Friend, SIR FRANCIS BURDETT, and said, "to talk of WELLINGTON and Waterloo was glory it was "true, but inferior to the glory of that man who fought the "bloodless battles of his country in the assertion and promo- "tion of their dearest civil rights."

This allusion, however wise, was somewhat unfortunate.—BURDETT'S battles have been any thing but bloodless, and we cannot help thinking that, as a man is decidedly answerable for all the mischief arising from a pertinacious insubordination, in opposition to principles admitted by himself eight and forty hours before, the allusion to the disturbances, of which he was the sole cause, and the consequent death of many people, must have been any thing but agreeable to a man whose heart is avowedly tender, and whose feelings, as MR. SCOTT knows, are easily worked upon. It is to be presumed, that as MR. DENMAN was ignorant of the nature of elections for Lord Mayor in London, LORD RANCLIFFE was not aware of the casualties which occurred in Westminster and elsewhere, during the continuance of those tumults which will go down to posterity as the "BURDETT RIOTS."

The extraordinary christian name of ANNE, given by his godfather and godmothers to LORD RANCLIFFE, afforded a happy opportunity to an amateur (we believe MR. OLD NOSE, the Mayor,) to sing the following apposite parody upon DIBDIN'S popular song, called "ANNA, ANNE, NAN, NANCE, and NANCY," which was received with shouts of applause.

PARODY.

My Lord's a Baron blithe and bland,
And meekly wears his ancient honour,
And grateful is his native land
That he bestows his thoughts upon her.
Form'd every wond'ring heart to please,
Dame Nature's drollest freak of fancy;
He drinks with grace and speaks with ease,
And at his birth they call'd him NANCY!

When walking up our Market-place,
(On market-day no trifling trouble),
I call him ANNA to his face,
His mien's so grand, his air so noble.
When o'er the flowing glass he eyes
The guests, and curious facts advances,
Well said, my NAN, I loudly cries,
And my grey eyes with pleasure dances.

In Parliament when pleas'd to please,
He sometimes made a modest motion,
I call'd him ANNE (he mev'd with ease,
And of the QUEEN had such a notion;)
But on a Sunday when he strays
About the church-yard, where can man see
A Lord so mild in all his ways,
I then delight to call HIM NANCY.

But when exalted in that seat,
His praises flowing just like honey,
He pushes round the bottles fleet,
I call him NANCE, the pride of BUNNY *.
Thus is he precious to us all,
By whate'er name comes o'er the fancy,
Graceful or gay, grand, short, or tall—
AUGUSTUS, ANN, NAN, NANCE, or NANCY.

* Bunny is the name of his Lordship's family seat.

After the shouting had ceased—SIR FRANCIS BURDETT was drunk, with continued cheerings. In replying, the Hon. Baronet abused the House of Commons, which, although he has done it before, and has been sent to jail for it—and tried for libels, and convicted by Juries of his own countrymen, over and over again—we think somewhat silly. Surely the people are to blame—it is the electors who are corrupt, not the Representatives, even by his own shewing—men can return what men they choose, and if the present Members do not please their constituents, in GOD'S name let them return others. That they can do so—(at all events in counties) must be quite clear to SIR FRANCIS BURDETT—for Middlesex has rejected him.

SIR FRANCIS then related the story of SIR MANASSEH LOPEZ, which every body knows—and talked of his own courage, which nobody doubts—and then drank to the health of a person of no small importance—the Mayor of Nottingham (whose name, as we said before, we believe to be OLD NOSE) and the Corporation: for which MR. OLD NOSE returned thanks, and in a speech, evidently meant for praise, but which sounded sarcastic—reminded the company that all they had just heard was "nothing new."

LORD HOLLAND was drunk, and LORD RANCLIFFE bepraised his Lordship as it became him to do. MR. BROUGHAM'S health was then given—he had promised to come, but, as MOORE says "did not;" perhaps he had some professional business in London; for although a City Judge, who is paid by the job, can afford to leave the shop, the stuff-gown barrister, who works by the piece, is obliged to be on the qui-vive, and let nothing slip through his fingers.

MR. DENMAN was called upon for a song, and gave the following parody on "Begone dull Care," with great feeling.

KEEP off, pale BROUGHAM,
I prithee keep off from me,
Keep off, pale BROUGHAM,
You and I can never agree.
Some time I've been your carrying groom,
And help'd your train to fill;
But I'faith, pale BROUGHAM,
It was vastly against my will.

Too much of pale BROUGHAM
Would make a sound man sick;
Too much of pale BROUGHAM
Would drive a man to Old Nick.
His nose may twitch, his tongue may ring,
For he has his game to play,
But I'm sure for me 'tis the wisest thing
To keep pale BROUGHAM away.
(CHORUS—by the whole company.)

The things he says are mighty right,
The truth is plain and clear—
For what would DENMAN be to-night,
If HARRY BROUGHAM were here.

This volunteer addition was not so well received by DENMAN as was expected, who rallied, as lawyers do—after which the Chairman, LORD RANCLIFFE, gave the following toast:

"The health of SIR ROBERT HERON, and may he shortly "be the representative of the county of Lincoln."

The patriotism of this toast nobody can doubt, because those who know SIR ROBERT, will know that he is the fittest man in all the world to represent a county; but its delicacy and good taste will appear in their proper colours, when we observe, that the chance of a vacancy in the county of Lincoln depended upon the death of LORD YARBOROUGH, who was at the moment dangerously ill.—That men should so far abandon themselves to a thirst of power as to drink the speedy consummation of an event which could only be brought about by the death of a fellow-creature, would hardly be believed if it did not stand recorded in the detail of their saturnalia. We fault we believe is in his head—observe, that he seemed ashamed of his friends, and pronounced an eulogium upon the dying nobleman to whom LORD RANCLIFFE had so unfeelingly alluded.

MR. WAITHMAN'S health was drunk, and he returned thanks. COL. JOHNSON, of BOSTON, announced that the WHIGS had—shaken off the GRENVILLES. A pretty shake off, indeed; and he further observed, that unless some very great change took place, the Whigs would never get office—there, we think, the Colonel was quite correct.

TOM WILDMAN, of Newstead, talked of the Upas tree of Java, and JOSEPH STRUTT, of Derby, talked of liberty—and of the COMMON SERJEANT, as became him, proposed the health of Corporal WILSON; after which a gentleman began a song—we believe—"The soldier tired of war's alarms;" but will it be believed the audience called out for "a speech," "speech," from DENMAN—"let him speak about Spain!"

"MR. DENMAN, in compliance with this wish, said, that Spain," naturally enough occupied their attention, for were conquered by such means as were now used, there was an end berty. They had, however, the gratification to know, that if tell, Spain was still unconquered; they had also the gratificati know that the first blood shed in the cause of liberty in Spain was British; and he hoped that the last musket fired in defence of the liberties of Spain would be recorded as having been fired in defence of the cause of sympathy.—(Applause.)

This is excellent—as a proof of the independent spirit the high-minded Spaniards, we are told that the first blo shed, is, that of Englishmen—this from the enemies of foreign interference is pretty well: but the hope that the last musket fired in defence of liberty would be furnished by British sympathy is likely enough to be realized—that is, if any of those musquets for which the gulls of radicalism have subscribed get there in time for any fighting at all.

MR. DENMAN proceeded to drink a "reform to the abuses in the Court of Chancery,"—of what a share of impudence and conviviality, could arrange the practice of a LORD CHANCELLOR like LORD ELDON, when it was in the power of every man present to contrast the indefatigable and incessant attention and labour of his lordship with the conduct of a city judge—the servant of the corporation of London—who having, in return for his salary and perquisites, to sit not more than four hundred hours in three hundred and sixty-five days, cannot contrive to perform this arduous duty, but leaves the respectable London Jury to deliver their verdicts to a barrister, while he is intoxicating himself with the black strap of Nottingham, and the fulsome adulation of a nest of radicals.

When the party was near breaking up, some truths seemed to break out in the following song, sung in a voice which certainly resembled WAITHMAN'S: this was the finale to the precious meeting.

SONG.

To a very Old Tune—"Ho noy—hey boy,"

Ho boy, hey boy,
Come, come away, boy;
And bring me a Whig by the ear,
A thorough-paced Whig, with an eye like a pig,
And a voice like the Jack-ass clear.

In scull be he thick,
As MICHAEL the "Chick,"
In ears let him rival HUME;
Let him twitch without fail, like the Devil's tail,
His nose, in the manner of BROUGHAM.

Like JEFFREY the Great,
Let the creature prate
Three hours, and not say a word;
Let him disembogue his wit in the brogue
Of the Knight of WATERFORD.

With FERGUSSON'S grace
Give him LAMBTON'S face,
And the virtue of TANKERVILLE'S breed,
With CREEVEY'S good taste, NORTH'S figure and wit,
And the talents of MATTHEW WOOD.

Let him charm the House
Like JULIET'S spouse,
Or, like BEDFORD'S mighty JOHN;
And mouth, without teeth, with the vigour and pith
Of Herring-faced HUTCHINSON.

Let him be as chaste,
And select in taste,
As that Chancellor grey and gay,
Who speech'd for the QUEEN, and to GRETNA GREEN
In petticoats ran away.

Let him be as pure
As ABRAHAM MOORE,
And as GERALD'S Treasurer fair;
Give him smiles as gay, as those of EARL GREY,
And JARVY SEPTON'S air.

Let him limp and beg,
With a wound in his leg;
Like the Vigo Corporal BOB,
Let him rail against those, to whom he owes
His dinner; like CANDY HOB.

Let him scowl with his eye,
Like TIERNEY sly,
Let him spout like ERSKINGTON,
And for STATE and CHURCH—Let him damn Bacon
And DENMAN, our Members have done.

Ho boy, hey boy,
Take them away boy,
And hire a booth at the fair;
For a half-penny ho—two Whigs we can shew,
All alive, all alive, I declare!

CÆTERA DESUNT—ROGERS would say INDECENT.

WE have to announce the death of DOCTOR BAILLIE, physician of great eminence—he was brother to MISS JOANNA BAILLIE, the exemplary authoress, and married, if we mistake not, a sister of DOCTOR DENMAN, the father of the present Common Serjeant.

THOSE who may feel disposed to laugh at our alarm about Popery in IRELAND—those who so liberally advocate the admission of Papists to all the privileges of protestantism—those who affect to separate the houghings, and murderings and burnings, and thievings of the lower Irish, from the effects of Popish influence and priestcraft—those who fear yet would conciliate, will do well to read and digest the following statement of the conduct observed by these pure suffering bigots, upon the occasion to which we last week alluded, of a sexton's refusal to allow a Popish Priest to perform the Popish service for the dead in a Protestant churchyard.

We say the sexton's refusal, because, we repeat, the ARCHBISHOP MAGEE never heard of the refusal till he read of it in the newspapers. Not only do the Papists who circulate the inflammatory attacks upon that venerable Prelate, know that his Grace never gave such an order, but they know that it is out of the nature of things that he could have given an order to prevent that, of which he could not have anticipated the occurrence—we mean the mischievous and wanton, and illegal attempt of a Popish Priest to perform the Popish service in a Protestant church-yard—such attempt has not been made for upwards of a century, and we have no hesitation in saying, that such attempts must be resisted. If the Irish Government try to conciliate by the admission of this custom, soon indeed will the interior of the church be claimed by the Priest; and while the Tythe Commutation Bill takes from the Protestant Clergyman his property and his respectability, the Papists will take possession of his house and his altar.

We say what we know—the struggle for ALL the Papists want will be made sooner than it seems to be expected—the Government, the nation, have been publicly warned by the Attorney-General, MR. PLUNKETT—their danger announced in a public court. This attempt upon the Church at KEVIN is a trial—a pilot balloon sent up to try the current of air—to shew which way the wind sits—and whether other regions are sufficiently calm and temperate to permit the launching of the larger machine.

We are told that LORD WELLESLEY has represented his apprehensions—although not founded upon any movements with respect to religion we believe—and has stated his dread of the long winter's nights which are fast approaching. We dread too—but we trust something decisive will be done, to mark the feeling of the Government towards the established religion of the country, and towards its able and exemplary clergy—in a short time it will be too late—we only hope that it may not be proposed to raise another subscription, by way of putting things to rights.

We beg attention now to the proceedings of these Papists.—"DUBLIN, SEPT. 22.—Yesterday while all the streets were crowded with the most dissolute and bigoted crowds, a publication was distributed gratuitously among them, as they burst in thousands from the chapel gates, headed as follows:—

"The Rev. DOCTOR BLAKE'S Letter to the Public, on the barbarous effect of BISHOP MAGEE, in preventing prayers being read in KENIN'S church yard over the late MR. D'ARCY.

"To this letter, which bore the signature of the REV. MICHAEL BLAKE, the Rector of St. John's, Dublin, and which was dated from the Chapel House, was appended the following motto:—

'Stay you that bear the corse, and set it down.

'What black magician conjures up this FIEND,
'To stop devoted charitable deeds?'—RICHARD III.

"One of its passages ran thus:—

"'Gracious Heavens! Is there a country in the universe so degraded as Ireland? I cannot pour forth a prayer over the grave of a brother, because DR. MAGEE, the Protestant Archbishop of Dublin, will not allow it! Is this Christianity? Is this the law of the land? Are the Catholics of Ireland obliged to submit to such debasing, such demoralizing fanaticism?'

"Another passage was in these words:—

'I did not consider myself bound by DR. MAGEE'S interdict; but I owed it to the memory of an excellent Christian and invaluable citizen, not to suffer his grave to be made the arena for anti-religious disputation. I owed it to the countless multitude which then filled the church-yard, and the avenue leading to it, not to excite a FLAME amongst THEM, which, in its progress, might involve the sexton, the church, and the COUNTRY IN RUINS; I owed it, finally, to the charity I should feel for the Archbishop himself, not to notice, on that occasion, the OUTRAGE of which I had reason to complain.'

"We have only to say, that such is now the language, even of the most respectable and intelligent pastors of the Romish communion. They are beginning to speak out fearlessly; THEY BROKEN UPON COUNTENANCE, OUT RESTRAINT. They feel that now they can frame language, and employ terms altogether new to our Protestant Laws and Constitution."—Dublin Evening Mail.

We grieve that we are obliged to assent to all the dicta of this Irish newspaper—we trust some change will speedily be made—we mean before it be too late.

In concluding this article we must take leave to reply to a correspondent, who appears to doubt the fact, that there is a burying-ground adjoining the great Popish Church in Moorfields. We can assure him that there is, and moreover that we ourselves saw a corpse interred in the vaults beneath the church, of which ceremony we also perceived a most exemplary and respectable Clergyman of the Church of England a witness at the same time with ourselves.

The following letter has been transmitted to us, as written by a cockney gentleman late in the train of LORD BYRON, but now discarded—we are not sufficiently acquainted with the style of the writer to vouch for its genuineness, but we give it as we have received it.

THE COCKNEY'S LETTER.

MY DEAR ——,—I am astonished at what you write me. So then, notwithstanding all the strong articles in our last Liberal Magazine, neither Government nor people has made a stir; England is still a monarchy, England is still a monarchy, and not even a single change in the ministry has been effected! JEFFREY, (BYRON'S new friend,) who is always sanguine, thinks the next Number must do it, but I begin to despair; and the worry-one's soul-out, as it were, effect of the disappointment on my heath is very visible. I pine, and grow thinner and paler every day. My appearance, by the way, is very interesting and Vasse-like, and I think an engraving of me would sell well in England, where a "how-does-he-look" sort of enquiry must be in every body's mouth just now. But let that pass for the present, I have matter of still greater moment for you.

The only subject of conversation now in England, and indeed in all those parts of Europe where tyrannis are not as yet allowed to send in fellows with bayonets to stop people's mouths whenever they mention my name, must be the coolness between me and BYRON, and it is proper the rights of it should be known, which is better than folks going about with a he-said-this—and then-he-said-t'other sort of report of it. The fact is, that BYRON is the aggressor, for he began first, as the children say, and all about a piece of patrician pride, very unbecoming among radicals. Some time ago, seeing him in conversation with the EARL of ——, at the end of the Strada di ——, I hopped down the street, and, just to shew the intimacy which subsisted between us, clapped him on the back with a "Ha! BYRON my boy!" He darted at me one of his look you through sort of glances, and turned from me without speaking; and it was not till after a decided cut of eight or ten days that, wanting something done, he sent for me. I went, he began by a tread-you-to-airdish, as it were asking of me frank, said something about the coarse familiarity of your radicals;" and then told me that I might stop and dine with him that day, which I did. You will gather from this that these Lords are not to be depended upon, they are but a half and half sort of Radicals—the cloven foot of nobility is perpetually peeping out, they wont give altogether into that half-fellow-well-metishness, which we expect from them. Again: at dinner that day, happening to say to him "I send you BYRON, who are called the Satanic School;" he cut me short unceremoniously, and said, "Who the h—ll ever called you Satanic? —Cockney, if you please;" and reminded me of the fable of the apes and swimming. Now, putting radicalism out of the question, this was very ungentecl from one great poet to another—then he is jealous of me. We have had a disagreement about which of us should have the most room to write in the Liberal Magazine. He wanted all; which (though I never contradict him or he'd have cut me long ago,) I almost remonstrated against, so he allowed me a corner here and there as it were. Thus he flatly attributes our slow sale to my poetry—then to my prose—and in short, he was lately so insulting that I had "ever such a mind" (as we used to say at school) to tell him the fault was all his own; for between ourselves he has grown as stupid and as vulgar as the best of us. But worst of all, I find he has been making a mere fool of me, and he quizzes me to my very face. Some weeks ago I told him I had thoughts of writing his life, to which he replied, with a smile "Do;" but when I added that he ought in return to write mine, he exclaimed with a sneer "Pooh," and went away in a turn-up-the-heel sort of fashion. But this is of a piece with his refusing to call me Tasso and Ariosto in exchange for my calling him Dante in our next poems.

Doubtless you have heard of the verses I addressed to him; I suppose there is an I-wish-I-could-get-'em sort of anxiety about them in England, so I send you a copy.

LINES TO MY FRIEND BYRON.

Dear BYRON, while you're out walking, I'll just say Something about ourselves in my off hand way,
Easy and CHAUCER-like; in that free rhyme
They used to warble in the olden time,
And which you so chuckingly listen to when I
Pour out a strain of it, as 'twere, chirpingly;
Full of all sorts of lovely, graceful things,
Smacking of fancy, pretty imaginings,
Which I trick out with a TITIAN-like sort of air,
And a touch of MICHAEL ANGELO here and there;
For though the graceful's wheein I excel,
I dash off the sublime, too, pretty well.

Now, let me see—I have it—I'll suppose,
(Though you're there in the garden plucking a rose,)
That, after travelling many and many a day,
You are wandering in some country far away,
When, being tired, you stretch beneath a tree,
And take from your pocket my Rimini,
And read it through and through, and think of me;
And then you take some other work of mine,
Pausing 'tween whiles, as one does drinking port,
And, when it has grown too dark for you to see,
You close the book and wish for your dear LEIGH:
And perchee, fairy like, on the tip of your ear;
Then up you jump and would bunch it away,
But, spite of all, the little bird will stay,
And then——(But what I'm writing all this while
Is a fancy in my wild Ariosto style)—
And thus this little bird turns into me,
And you rush forward to me in extasy,
And grasp my hand, as it were, clutchingly,
And call me your "dear LEIGH;" while I, e'en bolder,
Cry, "Ah, my dear BYRON!" clapping you on the shoulder,
E'en just as I might be supposed to do,
If this were not a Poet's dream, but true.

Now, I expected this would have procured me a sonnet at least in return, but he did not even deign ever once to notice it, spite of all my attempts to draw him out about it. You, who know what an excessively sensitive creature I am, will easily conceive the heart-in-one's-mouthishness of my sensations, when I found out his real opinion of me. It happened one day that he left me alone in his study. He had no sooner turned his back than I began to fumble among his books and papers. What I most earnestly sought was the copy I gave him of my "Story of Rimini," thinking to find it full of notes in his own hand-writing. It was not even half cut open! A proof he had not half read it. Against "my dear BYRON," in the dedication (for you know I dedicated it to him) I found written "Familiar Cockney," and in the last leaf cut—that is as far as I presume he had read, was written the following critique:—

O! Crimini, Crimini!
What a mimini, pimini,
Story of Rimini!

This you will say was sufficiently cut-one-to-the-heartish, but this was little compared with what follows. Among other things, I found the MS. of the Twelfth Canto of DON JUAN, which will shortly appear. By the way, it is rather unfair in him, to say no less of it, to throw cockney in my teeth at every turn, considering that I have now quite given up talking of Highgate and Primrose-hill, ever since I have seen the Apennines—and to a friend, too! But it is my friend Byron's way: he calls and uncalls all his friends round, once in every four or five years, or so. But to my extract from his next canto:—

Filthy scum!
These HUNTS, HONES, DESPARDS, THISTLEWOODS, and INGS!
These worms with which we politicians angle,
We leave at last on KETCH'S line to dangle.
Poor drivelling dupes! and can they think that we
By birth ennobled, and no little proud
Of our nobility, would stoop to be
Companion'd with the base, plebeian crowd;
Or that the crack brained BYRNE, or cockney LEIGH,
Or gentle JOHNNY* e'er had been allow'd
To sicken us with their familarity,
Forgetful of their distance and disparity.
But that we turn'd them to our dirty uses?
My tool I've lately plac'd upon the shelf,
So patronize my cockney now who chooses;
I've ta'en to do my dirty work myself.
I find, to a, that in fashion my abuse is,
And brings—not that I value it—the pelf;
But, let me hint, there's need of cash to victual ye
E'en in this cheapest of all countries—Italy.
I've turn'd him off! He's gone! I've made the ninny stir
His stumps! For on my stomach his pathetic,
His cockney rurals, drivellings, phrases sinister
And affectations act as an emetic.
Besides, he thinks he's fit to be prime minister!
The whimpering, simpering, Horse-monger ascetic!†
And there he's grown so horribly familiar,
And paws and "dears" one so—I vow 'twould kill you.

There, my dear friend—and this is from one radical to another!—the root of all this is, that I did once hint to him that I thought myself a better poet than he; more antique and to-the-heartish, giving my verses an Italian twang, and so forth. As to his allusion to my thinking myself fit to be prime minister, I merely threw out an idea that way, once when we were re-modelling. No. V. of our Liberal Magazine shortly. Let tyrants tremble!—Yours ever.

* KEATES.

† It will be remembered how this patriot, who bullied himself into Horse-monger Gaol, swivelled to get himself out again—but to no purpose. Yet he has perpetually HAMPDEN and SYDNEY in his mouth.—DON JUAN.

THE TREAD MILL.

IN agitating this question, we perceive on every side the interest which we have excited, and although our opinion with respect to the application of the labour to females still remains unshaken, we are anxious to give every fair opportunity to its advocates, because we believe the discussion likely to be serviceable, and forward the best interests of humanity.

We have received communications from MR. COLE, from MR. DENT, and MR. HEADLAM, to all of which we are desirous to afford room; but being unable, from the nature of our publication, to devote to any one subject so much space as they would require, we have selected for this day's insertion MR. COLE'S letter, observing upon the statement made in the letter of MR. JACKSON, surgeon of the Guilford House of Correction, and an extract from MR. DENT'S letter to SIR JOHN COX HIPPISLEY, containing all that relates to the subject under discussion—with these statements and counter statements before them the public will be prepared to come to the question well armed, for we cannot conceal the fact that the complaints against the discipline are by no means decreasing, and that it is probable the matter will be brought before the country in a more official and important manner when Parliament meets.

For the present we refer our readers to the following documents:—

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR—It does not appear from any thing MR. JACKSON has stated in his letter of last week, concerning the effects of the Tread-wheel on the prisoners employed on it in the House of Correction at Guildford, that these effects are in any degree at variance with those which have taken place in any other prison; for it has already been stated, over and over again, that the wear and tear of the frame, as well as the inand over again, that the wear and tear of the frame, as well as the inand jury to the hands, depends upon the measure of the infliction and the jury to the hands, depends upon the measure of the infliction and the prisoners can stand seven hours for the day's task-work, or walk on the mill a mile and a half for the day, not only without falling away, but even with some increase of flesh. This may be the measure of infliction in use at Guildford, for any thing that at present appears upon the subject; and if so, the facts are strictly accordant, instead of being at variance, and the only conclusion we can draw is, that here also, as at Lancaster, and in other prisons, the prisoners will waste away upon a severer application of the same labour. But to state isolated facts without their collateral data, is to give no information whatever, and to weary instead of instructing the public.

The same remark must apply to the effect produced on the hands, or in any other part of the body; and which must very much depend upon the extent of the labour, and not a little upon the relative upon the extent of the labour, and not a little upon the relative upon the extent of the labour, and not a little upon the relative the legs;—no one instance of the sort, or any disposition to such a complaint, has ever shewn itself since the introduction of the labour.

"With regard to another formidable complaint, viz.—rupture, which, we are told, is particularly threatened, it should be recollected that this, generally speaking, is the effect of some sudden shock—some violent extension of the abdominal muscles,—lifting heavy weights—raising water,—and even I should say by the spirited action of the arms, in the crank-hand mill, in a much greater degree, than the action of the foot upon the tread-wheel; for in the latter case, the power applied, is only equal to the weight of the body, and the resistance can be no more, or in other words, no greater force can be exerted, than is necessary for walking.

"But, Sir, the same answer that applies to all the former predictions, is the answer to this—neither rupture has ever occurred, or any disposition to the complaint has supervened.—We have had no instance of 'Typhus fever' since the introduction of the Tread Mill; in short, instead of 'disordering all the important functions of the body,' as one of your correspondents apprehends, it seems to promote that uniform and due secretion of the various organs, which is essential to, and productive of health.

"To another objection, founded on accidents, that are said to have occurred where the Tread-Wheel has been introduced,—it may be answered generally,—that occasional accidents are inseparable from the use of any kind of machinery; but in order to give force to the argument, as an objection to a particular machinery, it is not enough, that such and such accidents have occurred once or twice, (or even four times, as at Coldbath Fields) it must be shewn, that they must necessarily be of recurrence again; that they are connected with, and arising from, the very construction of the machinery:—It does not appear to me, that the mechanism of the tread-wheel is more liable, either to derangement, or sudden fracture, than must necessarily be the case in any machinery, where the resistance, and consequently the power is so great:—so far as experience goes,—nothing of the sort has occurred at Northallerton;—and viewed abstractedly, it would seem that the uniform equability of its motion, would rather be an argument against the liability to accidents or fractures, which are generally caused by a violent jerk, or some excessive application of the moving power. Neither is it at all evident to me how, when applied to the purpose of grinding corn, it can be exposed either to the same, or any similar accident as that, according to your description of the cause, which occurred at Coldbath-fields.

"If, however, it were on no other account, than to avoid the possibility of a recurrence of such accidents, I think the adoption of some other checking power, for which the Fly is merely a substitution, is desirable.

"The application of the labour, to some useful manufacture, suited to local circumstances, independent of the immediate benefit, both to the persons employed, and those within the sphere of its operation, is desirable in another point of view, as affording means, (distinct from those expected to result from the 'terrors of the tread-'wheel') for the reformation of prisoners. Without intermeddling with the distinction between a prison, and a penitentiary, the object of each is, in substance, the same—the reformation of the morals of society in general; and whatever has a tendency to promote individual reformation, and to prevent the repetition of crime, is auxiliary to this leading principle. I am not discussing the means by which this reformation is most likely to be effected; but the object should never be lost sight of, as involving the true principles of prison discipline. To apply this to the matter of discussion, it will hardly be denied, that to whatever variety of causes the repetition of crime is to be ascribed, none is more likely to produce it than the utterly destitute condition in which prisoners are often placed, immediately on their discharge. Now it is not to be expected, that in any jail, the first and immediate object of which is punishment, provision can be made, (I mean upon an extensive scale, as in the General Penitentiary at Millbank) for enabling the prisoners to provide for themselves in future life, by instructing them in some trade or employment;—and it is therefore highly important that some plan should be adopted, at the critical moment of liberation, to preclude absolute necessity from being urged, as the plea for dishonesty. Accordingly, this description of machinery, whilst, on the one hand, it presents a ready and efficient mode of employment, so on the other, it unites with the certainty of employment, the certainty of enabling the prisoner to provide a fund, which is paid on his liberation, and which will operate as a corrective of the danger I have alluded to. A comparative estimate of the advantages, in this view of the question, which have resulted at Northallerton, from the application of the tread-wheel to grinding corn, may be perceived from the following statement.—From Michaelmas, 1818, to Michaelmas, 1820, the whole amount of earnings by the prisoners, was 481. 8s. 4d. (the tread-mill not then having been erected.)—From Michaelmas, 1820, (at which time the tread-wheel was brought into use) to Michaelmas, 1822, the earnings amounted to [illegible] 7d.

"I have been led into this digression, not for the purpose of objecting to the Tread Wheel, used merely as labour, without any concurrent pecuniary advantage, for anything is preferable to idleness; but merely to shew the superior advantage it is capable of, where the labour can be applied, (and this may always be done) to some useful purposes, profitable both to the prisoner and the public, rather than being exerted merely as unproductive labour.

"Again, the last sentence in extract, November 25, 1822, page 7, runs thus:—' The Tread Mill opposes equally all the principles of 'animal motion, and all the laws of animal health we are acquainted 'with; it subverts the beautiful and established order of nature, makes 'the hands change place with the feet, and the arms with the legs;—'and whilst every human being without the walls of a prison rests up-'on the latter, and works with the former, compels the vagabond and 'convict to work with the former and rest upon the latter.'—There is some difficulty, from the wording of this sentence, in ascertaining the precise meaning of the writer; it not only assumes the unfounded position of 'hanging by the hands' and 'treading by the toe,' but it would seem almost to imply, that the use of the feet, for any purposes except support, is malum prohibitum by the laws of nature.—Another of your correspondents compares this mode of working to that of 'turnspits and squirrels,' and seems alarmed at the moral consequences of thus degrading 'human beings' into mere 'automata.'

"The only thing, which such reasoning as this proves, is the power of prejudice.—An assertion that the labour of no human being is performed by his legs and feet, carries its contradiction in every day's observation.—And so far as severity is an ingredient in the charge,—with respect to this, surely a Committee of intelligent Magistrates, are as competent to form an opinion, as a Board of Medical Practitioners.—Then, to whom the discipline of Jails is primarily intrusted, are not to be assumed as devoid of common humanity or feeling;—they can derive no exclusive pleasure, from the infliction of excessive labour upon the prisoners. They can have no private interest in misrepresenting that labour; and therefore to the imputation of severity, I beg to quote the following answer; being a resolution of the Justices of the Peace for the North-Riding, at their Midsummer Sessions, 1822; (made after personal inspection of the machinery, and the fullest examination of its effects) and which, referring to the Tread-wheel, is as follows:—' Resolved—That it is the opinion of this Court, that the 'labour is found to be beneficial to the health of the prisoners, and conducive to the good order and tranquility of the jail; neither is it 'such as can be considered severe.'—A Resolution like this, deliberately entered into, by men in their public capacity, is certainly entitled to some attention, particularly when put as a fact, in opposition to mere problematical opinions. And suppose it were more severe, where would be the harm? The voluntary efforts of honest industry, are surely not too high a measure, for the standard of compulsory labour: and where is the labourer, whose daily task does not exceed a walk of two miles, even admitting it to be up hill, yet this is as great a length of distance as can be performed by the revolution of our tread-wheel in six hours, the average time of each man's labour at it per day.

"And with regard to the disgrace—assuming (what I by no means admit to the extent contemplated) that the labour is degrading.—The situation of a convict, in a prison, is surely not a post of honour! Is the converse of every moral principle applicable alone to prison discipline? and is the offender more likely to be reformed by experiencing that the unavoidable consequence of dishonesty is not disgrace;—and that a violation of the law does not entail either sorrow or discomfort.—But, Sir, it is not a new proposition in criminal legislation, which recognizes disgrace as a punishment; and if the quantum of that disgrace were material to this enquiry, I should require some better arguments than mere assertion to prove that the tread-wheel is more degrading either than the crank-hand-mill, or any other mechanical labour of the same description, either in or out of prison;—certainly it is much less so than many employments at which the innocent members of society are obliged to work to earn their daily bread.

"How far, indeed, it may be inferior to the 'crank-hand mill,' in its favourable effects upon the 'brain and intellect,' which the same medical correspondent observes, are produced by the latter, I do not presume to decide: to the discernment of the physician or physiologist, such results may be clear, but a man of plain understanding will be puzzled, by what physical associations, between the brain and the extremities, 'hand labour at the crank-mill' becomes conducive 'to an 'alteration of evil disposition; thus answering the great ends of punish-'ment;' whilst in applying the other extremities, viz:—the feet to the 'tread-wheel,' 'despair may be the consequence, and the unhappy crea-'ture be compelled even to the most shocking acts.'

"There is also another hypothetical mischief, which claims our notice, in Extract, dated October 31, 1822, it seems to be apprehended that a 'comparatively enfeebled race, springing from the injured health 'and wasted limbs of many of those unfortunate beings, who may be ex-'posed to this impolitic discipline,' will ensue. This is a prediction which I hardly know how to meet; if true, it involves the best interests of the state, and removes the matter in dispute, from a mere difference of opinion, about 'employing vagabonds and convicts,' to a great question of political economy. For what with its moral deterioration on the one hand, and its physical debilities on the other, the 'tread-wheel' bids fair to annihilate, a by no means inconsiderable part of our national resources;—adding also this, to all its other inconveniences, that we are all in the dark, as to its insidious movements:—to the discerning eye of the physician and physiologist, alone they are visible. By far the greater number of the evils predicted, (according to the opinion of your correspondent of Dec. 3, 1822,) are such as could not have taken place from the shortness of the time the machinery has been at work, in any prison; i.e. all these effects, viz. 'severe and chronic 'lumbago, totally incapacitating from future labour;' 'various nephritic 'affections;' 'disorders of the chest, accompanied with difficulty of 'breathing;' 'rupture;' 'rheumatism;' 'fevers of various kinds;' 'constipation of the bowels;' 'bursting arteries and veins;' 'various 'swellings in the legs;' 'cramp;' 'breaking the achilles tendon;' not to mention 'various complaints peculiar to females;' all these (I presume) 'require years before they develope themselves.' The same writer compares its operation to the 'poison of lead, which is often ope-'rating for years upon painters, before their limbs and bowels are ren-'dered paralytic,'—to 'the husbandman worn out with years of toil;' as if the prisoners, when once in jail, were in for life; or that instead of three months (which is the average of each person's imprisonment, in our jail, during the last four years) they were bound to the tread-wheel, for a seven years apprenticeship, at least.

"With respect to the latter part of this position, I confess myself unable to see any parallel between it, and the system it impugns;—is it meant to compare the duration of a temporary imprisonment, with a long life of toil? or application to any particular business? or will the toils, and privations, and fatigues of the husbandman and labourer, find any parallel in our modern jails? will the labour of the latter bear a comparison with that of the former? The offspring of the one is not more in danger of being enfeebled than that of the other—and it is not found that the children of the laborious classes in the continuity are at all less fitted for fatigue or labour, because their parents were laborious before them.

"Again, will it be asserted, that the bodily evils predicted ALL require length of time to develope themselves? or is this only partially true? I am content to take it either way—Rheumatism, affection of the chest, constipation of the bowels, ruptures, various swellings, &c. together with a long catalogue of female complaints, would surely have given some intimation of their existence, or approach, during the experience of two years and a half; yet no disposition to any thing of the sort has appeared. Others again, such as bursting the arteries and veins, snapping of the tendon achilles, are generally instantaneous, yet nothing of the sort has happened since the erection of the tread-mill at Northallerton. In short, to all the objections advanced against it, whether as descriptive of the mode of its operation, or the hypothetical reasoning founded thereon, or the accidents to which it is liable—the same answer is at hand (so far as our experience goes) the strong negative of fact.

"I have endeavoured fairly and distinctly to lay these facts before you,—and although I must be allowed to express my deep regret, that statements so materially affecting the good order and discipline of prisons, and so calculated, from the personal consideration, the professional attainments, and the decisive tone of their advocates, to agitate the public mind, and excite impressions unfavourable to the humanity, and even justice, of those who preside over this department; representing (as it were) Justices of the Peace, and Jailers, indeed all who support the tread-mill system, as exercising an unwarrantable and injurious tyranny over the unfortunate objects of their custody,—although it must be a matter of deep regret, I repeat, that such alarming statements should have been made without extreme caution;—it is far from my intention to cast the slightest imputation on the motives by which they have been actuated. Perhaps on the general principles of prison discipline there may be no difference of opinion between us.—A prison, in my acceptation of the term, should be a place where every discomfort is studiously introduced, and every comfort excluded, except so far as is compatible with health;—and that the tread-wheel is eminently calculated to effect this, I have endeavoured to prove, by a plain exposition of facts;—and the only additional observation that remains to be offered, is the testimony of the Surgeon at Northallerton, who, being interrogated, as to the effects of the tread-wheel, concludes his observations in these words: 'There 'has been less sickness in the jail since its introduction;' and after an 'experience of two years, I repeat, without the fear of contradiction, 'that the health of the individuals has been benefitted, and in no one 'instance has it been injured.'

"It is my intention to give the same circulation to this letter, as is obviously required by the statements that have given rise to it, and as the Magistrates for the North-Riding are more immediately interested in an explanation of the charges which bear against their jail, in particular, a copy will be forwarded to each of them.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your very obedient humble servant,

"Crosby-Cote, March 13, 1823. "WILLIAM DENT."

THEATRICALS.

IN the simplest and most unintentional way in the world, we have created a disturbance in this department of our paper, the effects of which are visible from St. James's to St. Giles's, from Manchester to Exeter, and from the Little Theatre in the Haymarket to the Concert Room of "MR. LEE and his Son" at Lancaster. We have received letters from friends of the parties aggrieved—we have received a despatch from the father of our victim—and about whom will it be supposed has all this fuss been made?—MISS PATON—a young lady who has always received from us the notice she deserves and the praise we could afford her. Our perfect indifference to the private appeals of actors and actresses—our total and careless independence of every player or manager in the world, and our determination fairly and honestly to speak our feelings upon the art and mystery of Tom-foolery, as well as upon all questions of real importance, are pretty well known—we have heretofore warned proprietors of playhouses of their stupidity in giving admissions to any body connected with this paper, lest the persons receiving them should be supposed capable of influencing our judgment, and as we are above their price, so are we above their virulence, and above an imputation upon our fairness in decisions.

MR. MORRIS, who it seems is the proprietor of the Haymarket Theatre, inserted in his play-bills a notice, that MISS PATON had broken her engagement with him, and left London. That this was true nobody doubted, for away she went—we confess the importance of her departure or her stay never struck us as great, but we saw upon the statement of the fact a shameful indifference to that part of the public which frequents play-houses, and putting faith in a public document, we certainly believed the young woman had violated her engagement—but we attributed no blame to her—we put all the responsibility upon her father, of whom we said (in our old manner of calling a spade a spade) we had heard that he was a "fool."

As for the poor girl, we know the rapacity of parents who have curiosities to exhibit, too well to blame her in the first instance—with respect to the old gentleman upon whom we bestowed the epithet which appears to have wounded this amour propre so deeply, we will leave it to our readers to judge whether he is a wise man or not by his own letter, which we readily insert, first begging the attention of our readers to a letter which appeared in the HERALD newspaper of Wednesday.

"MISS PATON AND THE RIGHT HON. GEORGE CANNING!!!

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE MORNING HERALD.

"SIR—At the Lancaster Concert and Ball, given by Mr. Lee, his son, E. HUGHES, Esq. on Saturday, he thus addressed the company:—'After having made my best bow to each of you [illegible] our concert and ball with your presence, I wished to remark a few words appear proper before introducing our performers and instrumental siren. According to MR. MORRIS, 'Miss Paton has broken a professional engagement with him, by which the [illegible] have been disappointed, and his establishment seriously [illegible] The public, to which that proprietor has appealed, shall [illegible] answer. It happens that Miss Paton, though she has attained eminence, which, in most professions, may not be acquired [illegible] or fifty, is not quite of age. She is subject to the control of her [illegible] is under no engagement, and, consequently, could break none. The advertisement is therefore false. I have known Miss Paton from infancy; when under patronage of the DUKES of GORDON, [illegible] and others, she was introduced into London as a musical prodigy twelve or fourteen years ago, and was one of the playmates of my [illegible] From her uniform moral and honourable principles, I know she is as incapable of any breach of engagement, as she is of singing out of tune. Yet the JOHN BULL of September 15th says, 'That Miss Paton has broken her engagement is true.' Gone she is.' Though come here, she has broke no engagement, for she has none. He adds, 'that though the proprietor is [illegible] testy, and does things in a hurry, for which he is often sorry, we believe that Miss Paton, or her papa, will have to explain her apparently contemptuous conduct to the public before she is allowed a favour them again.' 'Allowed to favour them!' Leaving that [illegible] I must be knight-errant enough, in defence of a damsel so persecuted by JOHN BULL, to enter the lists with him. We agree on many points, but spurred game-cocks, though all on one side, will fight each other. JOHN BULL, unfortunately for his position, records that Miss Paton afterwards 'actually sang at a Concert at Manchester, and at Exeter.' While on visits with friends, she sang (without any engagement [illegible] or her papa,) to most crowded audiences. And, during her [illegible] career, she each night retired amid the applauses of hundreds [illegible] thousands to her peaceful and innocent repose; endeared to her [illegible] sional friends, from Madame Catalani to Miss Stephens, and beloved by all the world. Her moral, virtuous, and unblemished [illegible] never yet been impeached, nor experienced a dissatisfied [illegible] should not envy the situation of MR. MORRIS, or any [illegible] person or proxy, disturbing her course in a crowded audience. JOHN BULL has been misled, I trust he will make the amende honorable. If MR. MORRIS thinks he has any dispute to settle, let it be not with Miss Paton, but her father; and let the Welch and Scotchman fight it out. I think I know which has the thickest head, notwithstanding my friend BULL'S appellation. He is a logical mathematician, as well as a good Greek and Latin scholar! and his Latin maxim is, 'Nemo me impune lacessit.' Yet though Miss Paton sang at several concerts, and favoured with a friendly visit, to fascinate us here, her great [illegible] anxiety, and almost daily excitability from crowds and hot room [illegible] don, had been too much for her delicate frame. Her physicians [illegible] occasional rest requisite; and would you believe it under these circumstances, payments were deducted from her father by MR. MORRIS; who yet asserts her breaking her engagement. My friend BULL after stating that 'the manager is in possession of DR. MAYER'S [illegible] ficate of the young lady's ill health,' adds that 'this would [illegible] quitted the house where she first gained the favour of a London audience, in the middle of the season, on account of ill health, and sang at Manchester and Exeter.' In contradiction, Miss Paton, six years before, had gained the favour of a London audience; and established her high fame, and her health became so exhausted, that she had been without the use of carriages and horses, from one of her particular friends, for daily air and exercise during many weeks. I am convinced her tender frame must have sunk under the great exertion of her powerful mind, so gratefully exercised for those amiable parents who had matured and cultivated her wonderful natural talents to perfection. Those very circumstances enabled her, under her father's controul, to exercise her vocal powers for his service. Harassed with hosts of noble! and ignoble suitors, and like Penelope, 'forced by day, racked by lovers,' she was ordered change of air and the country. Wonderful as many of you know this creature is in the fascinating charms of the dance and the song, as the enchanting muses Thalia, Euterpe, and with the piano-forte, harp, and other instrumental music, accompanied by her voice, while her sister ISABELLA is becoming the MRS. JORDAN of our day, with the addition of great musical requirements, yet I can assure you of what is not known, that, as the muse Melpomene, MISS PATON is most wonderful. I have lately seen her exhibit the deepest tragic scenes at the house of her parents in Leicester-square, in presence of her most early patrons, at the houses of the DUKES of Northumberland and Athol, who loaded her early years with rich presents, and, in the opinion of most scientific and experienced dramatists, she rises beyond all her other accomplishments, pre-eminent as the Tragic Muse. Among the noble visitors, there were sometimes present the President of the Ionian Isles, our enlightened friend, PRINCE THEOTAKY—who showed among the Greeks great kindness to English visitors, and particularly while with my son in the Seven Islands, passing and repassing between Italy, Sicily, and Greece, Rome, Athens, and other parts, 'Mores multorum hominum vidit et urbes,'—and though the Prince understands little of our language, he was astonished at MISS PATON'S magical effect. A meteor shone so dazzling, the rapid progress of its vivid light, but, alas, soon the body rises, vanishes from our ardent eyes. Let us enjoy the transient bliss, and I am sure the silent gratulations will be felt by none more ingeniously than our unrivalled Lancashire witches. I regret the absence of our greatest vocal gentleman musical performer." The metaphor will be pardoned by him. Had not public business required the flight of MR. CANNING'S return to London, whence he has just announced the circumstance to me by letter, we might have been favoured with a company. His voice and words would have had Orpheus melodious. In addition to the sentiment in every syllable, his flow of language, like the orations of DEMOSTHENES, has so perfect an arrangement, that changing any clause, or sentence, or word, would weaken the style, and disturb its harmony. He is the peculiar tuelary patron of our county, and from this day will protect, undisturbed, our ancient franchises, and the old establishments of our native constituent body, which every time he espouses he surveys with increased admiration. Esto perpetua. I will introduce my sirens, to whom may be applied the Homeric expression of our Greek Sicilian motto, 'Strains of the sirens we have heard,' and have been captivated with. And these you who have, and those who have not heard them, will require the magic of Circe's restricting wand under the enchantment."

We have not the advantage of knowing "our friend" HUGHES who made this speech, which, though extremely well adapted for an "after dinner" affair at a concert-room, is somewhat, we think, injudiciously published; yet, as we are the "leading subject," we think it right merely to notice a few passages, in doing which, if we should be severe, we request our readers to understand that the severity is provoked by the most absurd, intemperate, and extravagantly fulsome praise ever yet pronounced in a public assembly.

With respect to the infancy of MISS PATON, we think it as a matter of conversation, not of the smallest importance: but we are inclined to doubt her minority, merely, because we think—we may be wrong—that we remember her full twenty years since—"a musical prodigy." We do not, however, assert this, as it is likely the young lady's playmates are better informed upon this point than we; but we must take leave to say, that the fact stated by MR. HUGHES, of which we were at all events aware, that of her being under the controul of her father, clears us of the slightest wish to wound the daughter's feelings as to her age; it seems hard to decide upon a minority in the family, since it is evident her father has not yet reached the years of discretion.

The relative talents of MR. MORRIS and MR. PATON, we do not intend to discuss; but we think it quite fair, in answer to a very virulent letter against the former, which we have received, to say, that the malicious insinuations, levelled by him for misconduct to MR. COLMAN, are grossly libellous. MR. COLMAN was compelled to sell his property—and MR. MORRIS bought it; but MR. MORRIS would be as little [illegible]

...ntitled as MR. COLMAN would be complimented by the charge of having "turned his poor brother-in-law out" of the concern, which our correspondent, with the Patonic affection, would have us bring forward. MR. COLMAN'S talents and genius are too well known, too highly appreciated in this country, to render the epithet poor, as compassionately applied, at all apposite; while on the other hand, MR. MORRIS, not gifted with a share of intellect or erudition equal to that of his brother-in-law, has, as far as the strictest integrity in matters of business, and the punctual fulfilment of his public engagements, established a character not to be injured by the attacks of injured vanity, or disappointed pride.

But to return—MR. HUGHES says, that we said MISS PATON first gained the favour of a London audience at the Haymarket. We never said any such thing—we said it was there she first gained the favour of a dramatic audience, which, unless her Melpomonizing in Leicester-square, before the President of the Ionian Isles (our enlightened Greek friend, PRINCE THEOTAKY,) might have preceded her debût at the Little Theatre, we still believe to be the fact.

We cannot quite give up the subject without recurring to the impudence of lugging in the name of MR. CANNING in the head of the paragraph, and in the body of it, under the appellation of "our greatest vocal gentleman musical performer." What has MR. CANNING to do with MISS PATON? We know enough of that Right Honourable Gentleman's morality to be assured that no sly hit at him can be meant, when "the noble and ignoble lovers" are spoken of who have driven the perverted young lady out of town.

We must say the allusions to these Green-room flirtations are not quite so wise as one might have hoped; the system of allowing the Green-room and behind the scenes of the Haymarket to be a flirting mart, whatever favour it may obtain for MR. MORRIS with men of fashion, is a very injudicious one; and the danglings of dandies and dotards after the actresses every night, neither gives respectability to the profession nor effect to the performance. We should think "our friend" HUGHES is mistaken in the quotation he uses as applied to PENELOPE—is a line in a song in ARNE's translation of "Artaxerxes." This confusion may have arisen from the circumstance of PENELOPE'S having been, as it is thought, originally called ARNEA—at all events we will not quarrel with "our friend" HUGHES, whose good intentions nobody can doubt.

"Racked by duty, forced by love,"

We now give MR. PATON'S letter to us, premising, from the speech of our friend "HUGHES," that "he is a logical "mathematician, as well as a good Greek and Latin scholar—"and his Latin maxim is 'Nemo me impune lacessit.'"—Keeping this in mind—knowing the power and the intentions of our antagonist, we insert his epistle without altering one word, or the spelling of a word!

TO JOHN BULL.

Sir,—I have only now received copies of several paragraphs in your paper, concerning my daughter, where you refer to certain answers of which I have no knowledge. As I will not call you fool or knave, whatever I may have picked up on that subject, I consider myself entitled to your insertion of the following reply from myself. My first TRANSACTION with MR. MORRIS was A LETTER, consenting, or permitting, that my daughter should perform for one season, and also that she should enter into an engagement by signing articles of OTHER THREE, she was then required to perform regularly five or six times weekly, in consequence of which her health began to fail, and when I expostulated with MR. MORRIS, concerning the matter, he told me sincerely that he had not engaged two persons, and that he would not hear a word on that subject—her health therefore gradually declined until on the second evening of her performance at Covent Garden Theatre, she was taken dangerously ill, and lost her salary for the greatest part of the season—about that time she was pressed by MR. MORRIS to sign his articles, which she refused to do, on the ground that those articles thro presented as mere forms became the means of unqualified oppression, such as she had severely felt. At the commencement of the present season however, she wrote MR. MORRIS that although she did not consider herself as under any engagements, yet as he seemed to place some dependence on her, she certainly would come forward with her best efforts for the greater part of the season. I had previously informed him, that she believed to go out of town for some time, and he himself advised me to have a physicians certificate, which was most readily granted, by a gentleman of the highest professional eminance, purporting that my daughter must have a change of air, at least for 2 months. I then apprised MR. MORRIS that unless he paid her expences in the country she would accept of such engagements as she could accomplish if her health were improving. She remained two weeks longer than the time appointed, during which, at the particular desire of MR. MORRIS, she made some unprecedent exertions—Her health is unquestionably now improving, and while that is the case she will continue the same course, not only to defray her expences, but to meet casualties such as the persecution under which she now suffers, and the prosecution which MR. MORRIS Lawyer, has announced. It is not meant that she should make money by her performances if MR. MORRIS will pay her expences and satisfy those to whom she is engaged through his neglect, she will now desist from labours, which cannot be desirable to her at present, but much otherwise.

To maintain that she may as well perform in town as in the country is as contrary to universal experience as that any one may live in town as well as in the country—On what principle, or by what law MR. MORRIS can withold from her an income, and at the same time prevent her from procuring one I am so foolish as not to comprehend—Finally, by your forbearance, in this instance from calling names for the public good—and by fully and fairly inserting this hasty reply—you will make some reparation for the unprovoked aggressions which you have committed against your humble servant, GEORGE PATON.

We must say we have committed no aggressions—we do not know MR. PATON from the KING of TOMBOCTOO—we saw a statement, we enquired into it, we expressed our feelings upon it, and we do again say that we cannot yet find out why the manager of the Haymarket is to pay MISS PATON'S expences when she has left his theatre—we admit MR. PATON'S letter, but we will also admit any letter, (not in answer to it, for it seems to us to require none) to explain it, and we are really very much pleased that MR. PATON has given us the opportunity of judging the case his own way, in his own words, which will, we hope, set him right with the public, and rescue him from the imputation of folly with which we had libelled him before we had received so excellent a specimen of his "Mathematical Logic," the modesty of his demands, and the clearness of his intellect.

MATHEWS concluded his engagement at the Lyceum on Tuesday with the most unequivocal marks of popular favour. His delineation of TONSON and the slang of CYPHER would have ensured him twenty overflowing houses, such as he drew on his finishing night.

We have never seen this extraordinary actor to so much advantage on the stage as during this last short run. The confidence which he formerly wanted—his great and deserved success in his entertainments has given him a mellowed richness of colouring which before was wanting—he is gone to Ireland, not, as we believe to act under the "Banners of his friend HARRY HARRIS," but to occupy the theatre during that gentleman's absence.

CONSOLATION to the TREMULOUS WRITER.—The Public may look to this most singular and unique invention with confidence as an inestimable source of comfort to those who experience any difficulties in the command of the pen, occasioned by tremour in nervous affection, heat of climate, agitation of spirits, excess or over exertion, weakness from age or otherwise injury of the thumb or fingers by sprain or otherwise, even to the loss of part The happy relief exists in a little INSTRUMENT, the appearance of which, when in use, escapes observation, is capable of giving firmness, confidence, and freedom, and cannot fail to assist the declining powers of a good penman, and materially improve the performance of a bad one. It is honoured by the patronage and recommendation of Sir Astley Cooper, and other highly respectable professional Gentlemen. A few minutes practice will prove its efficacy, and it has this advantage over all medicine, its power increases by use, and one prescription will last for life. Made in elastic gold, price 25s. each.—Sold for the Patentee, by T. Pearce and Co. No. 268, facing the front of St. Clement's Church Strand. Letters from any part of the country, post paid, will be promptly attended to.

EVER ANXIOUS TO PREVENT IMPOSITION.

DAY and MARTIN respectfully inform the Public they have, after much labour and at very considerable expence, brought to perfection a Label of such singular construction and extreme difficulty of execution, that they trust will effectually prevent the many frauds that are daily practised on the Public. An attention to the following description of the Label will ensure the genuine Blacking prepared by them. A pattern of the Label like lace of a pink dress, 97, High Holborn, is also white letters edged with pink and black, but on white ground, the preamble and directions for use are printed as before, black letters, ground white.

ADVANTAGES BELONGING TO THIS INSTITUTION.

A temporary precautionary Capital of £200,000, which will be paid off as soon as an adequate surplus Capital shall have been accumulated from the Premiums. The Shareholders thus bear any risk attendant on the infancy of the Institution, without being a permanent charge on the Society.

Three fourths of the savings and profits are divided amongst the assured, until the shareholders are paid off, and thenceforth the entire profits divided amongst the assured, by additions to their policies, with interest thereon in reduction of the premium.

The Society give a legal contract to purchase policies at their true value, or to lend two-thirds of that amount, at the option of the assured; and the scale of value, from year to year, is indorsed on the policy itself at the time it is granted.

Premiums for young and middle aged lives lower than any office in England, payable annually, half-yearly, or quarterly, or for a number of years only.

Proposals from the Country to be sent to the Resident Director, who will give all proper information; and the parties by appearing before one of the Medical Referees, will not be subject to any additional charge for non-appearance before the Board of Directors.

CIDER, PERRY, ALE, &c.—THOMAS FIELD and SON beg to acquaint their Friends and the Public, that their genuine Cider and Perry, Burton, Edinburgh, Taunton, and Welsh Ales, Dorchester Beer, Brown Stout &c. are in fine order for use. They have also a very superior Stock of Foreign Wines, Cape Madeira, Brandy, (white and coloured) Rum, Hollands Geneva, and Orange Shrub; and they have been enabled to make a considerable reduction in their prices generally.—22, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

ESSENCE OF CUBEBS, OR JAVA PEPPER.

DALE and MARSDEN beg to inform the Advocates and Takers of this highly recommended Drug, that they are the sole preparers of the above Essence, and that it cannot be procured at any other house in England.—The above Preparation being freed from all the gross and inactive part of the Cubebs, renders it a far more efficacious and convenient medicine than the powdered Cubebs or any other preparation known. To show its high state of concentration, the medicinal part of one pound of Cubebs is contained in a half-pint bottle of the Essence.—Sold only by DALE & MARSDEN, 23, Holborn hill, London, in bottles, 5s. 6d., 10s. 6d., and 1l. each.

LATEST NEWS.

Paris papers down to Friday arrived yesterday. An article from the Madrid Gazette, dated Sept. 20, says, "The Government has received news direct from Cadiz, dated the 14th inst.:—their Majesties and the members of the Royal Family were in good health.—The inhabitants of Madrid complain loudly that Riego still exists in the dungeon of La Carolina. The traitor has been ordered to Madrid under a strong escort; in his flight he passed rapidly through the town of Jaen, which had been the theatre of this rebel's bloody career and rapine —the town was to have been fired at four equi-distant places, if there had been any deficiency in the sum exacted. When this bandit fled at the approach of the French, he had already pocketed 40,000 reals in gold. We expect every day news of the arrest event which will take place under the walls of Cadiz. To-day, the Guard du Corps of his Majesty, who were at Madrid, have received orders to hold themselves in readiness to march to Andalusia."

PORT ST. MARY, Sept. 16.—The Duke d'Angoulême continues here. We expect Rear-Admiral Duperry the day after to-morrow. Our troops continue firing bombs against Santi-Petri. The taking of Puntales will decide the question.

These papers also contain a despatch from General Guilleminot to the Minister at War, dated Port St. Mary, Sept. 15, containing some additional details respecting the affair of General Molitor with Riego. He says:—"General Ballesteros, in person, in the midst of the Tirailleurs, commenced the firing which caused the death of an Aide-de-Camp of General Riego, as well as of several soldiers. —At Priego, when the question of conditions arose, Riego offered to serve as a simple Aid-de-Camp to General Ballesteros, if the latter would take the chief command, and march against us. Upon this being refused, Riego, who, during the conference had caused the habitations of General Ballesteros to be invested by his troops, declared him a prisoner, with all his staff. Gen. Balanzat, who contrived to escape, rejoined his division, when he summoned Riego to set General Ballesteros at liberty, and to retire himself. Riego, perceiving that his scheme had failed, put himself in march with his troops for Alcaudete."

General Guilleminot says—"According to the report of General Ballesteros, Riego had not with him more than about 2,500 men, in a state of disorder and insurrection, whose numbers are constantly diminished by desertion, and who are unable to escape from the active pursuit."

STOCKHOLM, Sept. 9.—As something quite new in a Court of Justice, we have to mention, that the Swedish academy, which has the privilege of publishing the State Gazette, is indicted for a libel.

G. PRIS, Grower of CHAMPAGNE, of Avize, near Epernay, France, most respectfully informs the Nobility, the Trade, his Friends, and the Public, that he has entered into a contract with Mr. CHARLES WRIGHT, Wine Merchant, of the OPERA COLONNADE, HAYMARKET, by which Mr. WRIGHT will in future have the entire and exclusive sale of his CHAMPAGNE WINES. G. PRIS takes this opportunity of returning his grateful thanks for the liberal and distinguished support he has received since the year 1814, and he pledges himself that the same description of WINES, and if possible better, as it is his intention to superintend his vineyards personally, will be always on sale at Mr. CHARLES WRIGHT'S, Opera Colonnade, and at no other place in England or elsewhere, at the unexampled low price of 4l. 4s. per dozen.

ONE HUNDRED POUNDS REWARD.—THEVENOT, Perfumer, No. 7, New Bond street London, aware that Perfumery Goods are sold under his Name, and with his Labels, at the different leading Towns in the United Kingdom, it becomes an imperious duty for him, to declare, that he does not supply wholesale any Dealer whatever, either in London or the country, that goods so sold are without his authority, and counterfeits. Entreating the Public, and the Gentry in particular, to be on their guard against such impositions, he leaves to a liberal Public to appreciate the injury he is sustaining by these base artifices, and concludes by offering the above Reward on the conviction of any one so illegally trading.

A SUITE of DRAWING-ROOM or DINING-ROOM CURTAINS, either of splendid Swiss Chintz, Spanish Damasks, Tabborets, or Moreens, can be completed by MILES and EDWARDS at little more than half the prices regularly charged by other establishments. The extraordinary advantages they possess, with their immense variety, entirely manufactured since the amazing reduction in the prices, can only be credited by a comparison with the terms of other houses. For Four-post, French, and Pencilled Furniture, M. and E. have just received from their print ing Grounds an additional quantity of Twelve Hundred Pieces of Chintzes, all warranted fast colours, and on their usual low terms.

CAUTION.—Miles and Edwards beg particularly to state, that their only Establishment is at No. 134, Oxford-street (between Holles-street and Old Cavendish-street.

ALE, STOUT, CIDER, &c.—THOMAS FIELD and SON beg to acquaint their Friends and the Public that their genuine Burton, Kinsbro', Taunton, and Welsh Ales, Dorchester Beer, Brown Stout, Cider, Perry, &c. are in fine order for use: their Foreign Wines, Cape Madeira, Brandy, Rum, Hollands, Geneva, and Orange Shrub, of their usual fine qualities, and their prices the lowest at which the first class of such goods can be sold.—22, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden.

DUBLIN and BRISTOL.—The Public are respectfully informed that the ST. PATRICK Steam Packet continues to sail from Bristol to Dublin every Tuesday, and from Dublin to Bristol every Friday.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—MR. W. BEACALL, SURGEON-DENTIST, 13, Newman street, Oxford-street, having with unremitting diligence, long made the Science of artificial Teeth, where mechanical contrivance is requisite, his peculiar study, continues to supply the Loss of Teeth, with Natural or Artificial, in a superior manner, without the least pain, from a single Tooth to a complete Set, at little more than one-half the usual charges. Teeth cleaned if ever so discoloured, and rendered white and beautiful, without pain or injury to the enamel. Extracting, Stopping, and every Operation on the Teeth and Gums.—Attends at home from 10 till 4.

DIGESTIVE SEGARS.—The high degree of celebrity to which these Segars have attained for their undoubted efficacy in all cases of indigestion having excited the cupidity of certain individuals, and induced them to offer for sale a spurious article under the foregoing denomination, the Publishers respectfully informed that the Genuine Digestive Segar is only to be had of GLIDDON'S, 42, King-street, Covent garden, in Government stamped packets, price 3s. 6d., and signed on the wrapper A. GLIDDON. All others are counterfeit.—An allowance to country dealers.—All letters must be post paid.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, OCT. 1.—The following particulars of the capture of Riego, are by an eye-witness of that event. They are interesting:—

"After having been completely defeated by the French, Riego wandered in the mountains, with about twenty followers, on horseback, fifteen of whom were superior officers. Exhausted with fatigue and hunger, he met the hermit of La Torre de Pedrogil, and an inhabitant of Vilches, named Lopez Lara. He took them aside, and said, 'My friends, you have now an opportunity of making your own and families' fortunes; you have only to conduct me, unobserved by any one whatever, to Carolina, Carboneras, and Navas de Tolosa, where I have good friends, who will procure me a guide to Estremadura, whither I am desirous of proceeding. The hermit and his companion refused his offers; but Riego caused them to be seized and mounted upon two mules, declaring to them at the same time, that whether willing or not they should serve as guides to the troop. At night-fall they proceeded onward. Riego spoke to his companions of his journey from Madrid into Andalusia, of the places where he found acquaintance, &c. The guides concluded from this unguarded conversation, that he was the famous Riego. From that moment the brave Lopez Lara was only occupied in devising means for delivering this notorious criminal into the hands of justice. At day-break they found themselves near the farm Baquevizones. Riego said they would demand an asylum there; on which Lara knocked at the door, and it so happened that it was one of his own brothers, named Mateo, who came and opened it. Riego, fearing that too numerous an escort would betray him, would only permit three of his faithful followers to enter with him. One of these was an English Colonel, who, impressed with mistrust, hastily closed the door, locked it, and pocketed the key. They led their horses and reposed themselves in the stable with their drawn swords by their sides. Riego, on awaking, peremptorily said to Lopez Lara that he must get his horse shod. 'Well,' replied the latter, 'who felt all the importance of the occasion, 'I will go and get it done at Arquillos.' Riego refused, and expressed a desire that his brother Mateo should undertake the commission, not by leading the horse to Arquillos, but by fetching a farrier. Lopez had only time to whisper his brother: 'This man is Riego; give information to the magistrates, and say that we are compelled to do our duty.' Possessed of the same intelligence as his brother, Mateo agreed upon the way in which he would act, and he promised so to manage that Riego should be at breakfast when the armed force should surround the house. Riego, in fact, sat down to breakfast immediately on learning from Mateo that the farrier was coming forthwith: but the Englishman, constantly impressed with his fears, did not quit the window, from which, with a telescope, he kept a look-out all round. Suddenly he exclaimed, 'Commandant, we are lost!—here are armed persons advancing.' 'Arm!' cried Riego—but that instant Lopez and Mateo seized the carbines, and cocked and levelled them at the traitors, saying, 'The first who moves is a dead man!' They had already grasped their swords, but the resolution of Riego all at once forsook him; he let them tie his hands behind his back. He even said politely to Lopez, (calling him mustra merced)—'Have the goodness to tell the men who are coming, not to hurt us, since we are your prisoners.' The Alcade entered, followed by an armed force. Riego supplicated him in a similar manner not to do him any harm, and as a pledge to embrace him. The Alcade felt much repugnance to embrace a man who had brought so many evils upon his country; but the indulgent Lopez urged him to do so in the name of Christian charity. Riego then offered the Alcade's men all the money he had about him, to be treated with humanity; which the Alcade forbade any of them accepting, and addressing the prisoners, said, 'Justice will decide your fate.' The Civil Commandant of Arquillos soon after arrived with a mounted guard, and took away the prisoners. The herdsman and the two countrymen showed throughout this affair a devotion and intelligence which insure to them the gratitude of all loyal Spaniards."

PORT ST. MARY, Sept. 22.—All the preparations are terminated, and every thing has been anticipated, by M. de Bourmont. The Prince and the Major-General are gone to inspect the arrangements for the landing. The order for embarkation is daily expected. The wind is favourable, and the nights superb. Thirty men of the principal post have passed over to the French. They state, that the discontent of the troops of the line was at its height, and that their comrades ardently desire to follow their example. On the day of the attack of Santi Petri, alarm was general in the isle, and every body fled towards Cadiz. In the night from the 21st to the 22d, three small mortars were mounted at the salt works, which threw bombs into Caracca. Naval officers have gone in very close to Cadiz, and took soundings in spite of the fire of the place. The King is now treated with the utmost regard.—M. de Bourmont will personally attend at the head-quarters this evening. It is thought that he is to receive final orders from his Royal Highness for the landing.

PERPIGNAN, SEPT. 27.—The important fortress of Figueras has capitulated; 3,000 men are prisoners of war.—The submission of Lopez-Banos and Badajoz is announced. It appears that Badajoz has surrendered upon the same conditions as Ballesteros.

MADRID, SEPT. 26.—Riego has succeeded in escaping from a French officer, who had seized his horse's bridle. Providence, who wills the punishment of this guilty man, seems to have withdrawn him from the hands of this officer in order to deliver him up to the Spaniards.

A Santa Martha Gazette of the 5th of August, contains the following:—"MARACAIBO.—The Governor of this garrison has received advices from the head-quarters of Rio de la Hache, under date of the 3d inst., which contain propositions for an honourable and advantageous capitulation, made by the Colonel D. N. Lopes, second in command of the Spanish army, and the Lieut.-Colonel D. L. L. Quintana, as Commissioners for General D. F. T. Morales, to General Manuel Maurrique, and the answer given to the same by the letter."—Many of the proposed terms of capitulation were negatived on the part of the Colombian General; and it was the general opinion at Santa Martha, founded upon advices from Rio de la Hache, that Gen. Morales would, within a day or two of the date of the above-mentioned (Aug. 3), surrender at discretion.

FROM THE MONITEUR OF TUESDAY—OFFICIAL PART.

ARMY OF THE PYRENEES.—Report made by Rear-Admiral Baron Duperre, Commander in Chief of his Majesty's Naval force before Cadiz, by Rear-Admiral Baron des Rotours, commanding the division before the Petres:—

"This morning at day-break, the wind being east, a fresh breeze and a fine sea, I ordered the Centaur and Trident of the line, and the Guerriere frigate, to sail, designing to attack Fort St. Petri; at seven the division was under sail, the Centaur leading, followed by the Trident and the Guerriere. It was my intention to pass close by the bank of rocks called Juan Bella. I therefore ordered the Iris corvette, Capt. Bonifacy, which you had sent me in the night, and which I had retained to take places of the line, and to sound at such a distance as to be able to bear in view, the depths and to tack whenever it was less than ten fathoms. This order was well executed: the division thus approached St. Petri. At noon I was joined by the Santo Christo schooner, Lieut. Fraser, whom I ordered to sound to the windward as near as possible to the reef along the coast, and to let me know the depth. At a quarter past one, I hoisted the signal on which I had agreed with the division, that they might begin their fire, which was done with extreme vigour. When I had got to the distance I desired, (Fort St. Petri bearing S. E.) I ordered M. Jonquieres, commanding the Centaur, to take his position at this point, which was done with great ability, though the wind was strong, and the current unfavourable. The sails being taken in with as much order as celerity, I gave the signal to begin the fire, which the fort returned with the few pieces that it had on that side; meantime the Trident advanced; it was to anchor half a cable behind the Centaur, but the wind varying from E.S.E. to S.E. it could not anchor nearer than a cable's length, and began the fire as soon as it was moored, receiving with the Centaur that of a battery in the Isle of St. Leon, and of a battery of St. Petri which also fired on the Santo Christo, which was within a quarter of a gunshot. The Guerriere was to moor behind the Trident, but I made a signal to it to take the head of the line; and whether it was that the wind failed, or the currents hindered it, it could not reach its post, and removed a cable and a half to windward of the Centaur. In this position it began its fire; but perceiving that it did not reach the fort, and that that of the Trident did not sufficiently pass it, I sent M. Lieut. Thiebaut, my aid-de-camp, to order these two vessels to resume their posts, the Trident astern of the Centaur and the Guerriere before it. It was three o'clock, the Captain had been engaged since a quarter past one; Fort St. Petri returned the fire only at long intervals. I thought the time was come to attempt to storm it. I made a signal to the division to embark its troops in the boats, and to send them towards the Centaur, which was executed with all possible celerity, and I waited only for the moment when the Trident and the Guerriere should have taken their position, and commenced the fire, to order the landing, when at half-past three the fort hoisted a white flag, which was immediately saluted by a thousand cries of "Vive le Roi!" I immediately sent the boats, having on board 420 of the 12th and 14th of the line, and a detachment of grenadiers of the Marine Artillery. When they reached the foot of the rock on which the fort is situated, Captain Tetiot, who commanded the landing, sent me a Spanish Officer with a flag of truce, who proposed that the garrison should retire to the Isle of Leon, under its respective colours, and continue to serve against the French army. I insisted that they should engage not to bear arms against France during the war.—This was acceded to, and was going to be executed, when the Spaniards, fearing to return to the Isle of Leon, preferred being prisoners, and our troops immediately took possession of the fort, where the Spaniards had 27 24-pounders, brass, a garrison of 180 men, abundance of ammunition, and provisions for two months.—I was too well aware of the importance of St. Petri not to take advantage immediately of the success I had obtained. I armed one boat from each vessel to intercept the barks which, notwithstanding the vigilance of our cruisers, brought provisions to Cadiz, entering by the river of this name; I already bear the cannon of the fort fire on these barks. Its fire, with that of the battery which we have in front, entirely deprives Cadiz of this way of receiving supplies, which was almost the only one it had. The Spaniards had 13 men killed or wounded. The Centaur did not lose a man.—[The remainder of the Report is filled up with commendations of the officers and men employed.]

PROCLAMATION BY GEN. BALLESTEROS.

Don Antonio Salinas, the General commanding the province of Cordova, has transmitted, under date of the 15th, to the Inspector-General of Cavalry, the following document:—

"Spaniards!—With the army under my command, I was tranquilly awaiting the happy results of the convention concluded with his Excellency Count Molitor, and approved by his Royal Highness the Duke of Angoulême, and employing myself solely in conciliating the minds of Spaniards, as the most efficacious means of remedying the evils of afflicted Spain, when General Riego presented himself at my cantonments, putting forth pretensions which the nation disclaims, and to which I could not accede; and provoking me to a contest which my heart resisted, but which military duty and honour commanded me to accept. I therefore proceeded to make the necessary disposition of the troops under my command, for receiving the enemy, and resisting his attempts; but considering that the soldiers would be reluctant to engage in such a combat, I advanced in front of the cacadores, to overcome their repugnance, and to remind them of their duty. My fears and hopes began to be realized, and my troops, following my example, rushed forwards against such enemies as presented themselves; but Riego did not seek the success of his designs by the honourable conflict of arms, but endeavoured to obtain it by dark machinations. His object was to make the army mutiny, and by means of the disorder and confusion to augment the number of his partizans, and thereby to prolong the sufferings of the country.

"In effect, and doubtless in consequence of previous preparations, his soldiers, affecting horror at the idea of the combat which themselves provoked, threw away their arms, and rushed forward to embrace my troops, exclaiming 'Union,' and shouting repeated vivas to Riego, to the constitution of the year 12, and to Ballesteros. Riego, at the same time, made offers to me of the command of his troops, and of all the troops of Andalusia and Estremadura, supposing, perhaps, in his heated imagination, that these proposals would implicate me in his views, or rather making them with the deliberate intention of seducing my soldiers for the purpose of afterwards converting them into the instruments for promoting his designs. Inconsiderate man! Riego knew not Ballesteros when he so presumed respecting me; nor was he capable of appreciating the military virtues of this army. If the sincere pleasure experienced by many of my troops at the amicable conclusion of a scene which at first promised to be so sanguinary, was capable of throwing them off their guard, and making them forget for some moments the discipline to which they are accustomed, thus depriving me of the power of destroying so criminal a project in its origin, they promptly recovered from their first surprise, and being made aware of the designs of Riego, returned to their duty. None of them would incorporate themselves in the ranks of that chief. Solely attentive to saving my army, without any consideration for my own person, I then ordered my troops to encamp, for the purpose of separating them from those of Riego, and I remained with a small guard in my lodgings.

"The plans of the actors in this plot being thus disappointed, and the hopes which Riego had entertained of making this army join in his enterprises having vanished, he conceived the idea of making himself master of my person; and disarming my guard, arrested me in my lodgings, with the chief of my staff, and other superior officers who were in my company.

"What was the object of this arrest, and why it was not further acted upon, Riego and his accomplices can alone explain, and men of honour may conceive the degree of treachery and perfidy which this attempt involved. I limit myself to stating the event such as it occurred, in order that malignity may not disfigure it, or indolence afford opportunity for sinister representations. I have also the satisfaction of announcing, that this army not only maintains its discipline in full vigour, but that its indignation against the conduct of General Riego has extended to the ranks of his own troops, and that many of his officers and soldiers have recognised his misconduct, and have placed themselves under my command. Among these are to be reckoned the brilliant and worthy Spaniards of the regiments of Numantia and Espana. Riego marches in disorder, and is pursued on every side, for which reason the point to which he directs his course cannot be stated with precision, but it is known that he has passed through Martos.

"Spaniards!—Steady in my principle of contributing, as far as in my power, to the felicity of my country, and convinced that its welfare requires the reconciliation of all its sons, each of whom ought to deposit on the sacred altars of his country his individual pretensions, I shall adopt all the means in my power to avoid events such as that which has occurred, and shall exert every effort to put down these, deaf to the voice of humanity, and forgetful of the sentiments I have stated, may attempt to feed for a time the flame of civil discord which devours us, by destroying the salutary effects of the convention concluded with Count Molitor, which I am resolved to maintain at every risk, as the basis of the wished-for pacification.

"FRANCISCO BALLESTEROS.

"Head-quarters, Priego, Sept. 13."

IRELAND.

Yesterday morning a young lady named Loggrove, residing in apartments at the house of Mr. Miller, a baker, in Henry-street, Ormond's-hill, retired to her bed-chamber, and in a few minutes afterwards her servant heard a violent scream. She hastened to the apartment, and on entering her mistress was extended upon the floor in a state of blood. The inmates found she had cut her throat with the knife which she used at breakfast. A medical gentleman was sent for, who dressed the wound, which he described to be of a most dangerous nature. She could not speak, but when asked questions, made signs to the table, sealed up, and it was instantly forwarded.—Dublin paper, September 28.

Late on the evening of Friday se'nnight, an attempt was made to burn the lands of Croughill, near Ardagh, in this county, to burn a large quantity of turf, the property of Jacob Miller, (a Palatine,) by setting fire in four places; fortunately, an acquaintance of his who was returning home, perceived the fire and extinguished it. This is the second attempt which was lately made to destroy turf, the property of these people, who are always marked as objects of vengeance for no other cause but being remarkably industrious.

Friday se'nnight, Mr. N. P. Nunan, a gentleman from near Glenville, went to the neighbourhood of Ballyhahill and Whitehall, in this county, for the purpose of having Custodium notices served; about the hour of twelve o'clock, at noon, a riotous and tumultuous mob assembled, attacked and beat him in a most cruel and inhuman manner, they took from his person his watch, a gold pin, and a knife, with which they cut his saddle to pieces, and then left the whole and knife on the field; they took a quantity of papers, &c. which he had in his pockets. He being a powerful strong man escaped with difficulty into Shanagolden, where he got protection from the Rev. George Vincent, who sent him under an escort in his own carriage to Rathkeale, where he received medical aid—less than fifteen distinct wounds were inflicted upon him. The Rev. Mr. Vincent and Capt. Cox, of the Rifle Brigade, accompanied by Mr. Smith and Mr. Keily, and strong parties of military and police, proceeded to Ballahahill, on Monday night last, and succeeded in apprehending thirty-one suspicious persons, who they brought into Shanagolden the following morning, at seven o'clock. Mr. Nunan was sent on to Rathkeale, who was so far recovered as to be able to travel in a gig, and examining the prisoners fully identified eleven of them, who are committed for trial, either under the Insurrection Act or for a capital felony. Mr. Nunan identified those people in the public street of Shanagolden, in the most determined and spirited manner, before an immense concourse of their associates.

POLICE.

BOW-STREET—Thursday, Wm. Jennings, a boy about 13 years of age, was charged with stealing a gold pin, the property of B. Bury, and out of this arose a charge against a Mr. Bury, a tradesman, of Sloane-street, for receiving the pin, knowing it to have been stolen. The prisoner had been about four months in the service (as errand boy) of Mr. Doyle, a glass-man, where the young prosecutor Bury is an apprentice. One morning last week, the latter missed a gold pin from a table in his bed-room, and suspicion falling on the prisoner, he was charged with the theft. He acknowledged having taken the pin, and said he sold it to Mr. Bury, a perfumer, in Sloane-street for 9d. Ann Holmes, the girl to whom he made this confession, went with him to Mr. Bury's shop, and asked his daughter, who was in the shop, if she had purchased a gold pin from the boy. She said her father had. The girl asked if she might have it. Miss Bury replied that she might, if they still had it; but she believed it was gone, as it was to be polished and altered, or melted down. On a subsequent evening, Allen, a dismounted patrol, called and saw Mr. Bury, who, on being questioned, said he did purchase the pin from a boy for 9d. and he produced and shewed it to the Officer. The latter told Mr. Bury what he was, and requested to have the pin; but this Mr. B. refused until Allen offered to leave his watch, as a security for it, and then gave it up.

The Magistrate called upon Mr. Bury to account for his conduct in purchasing such an article from a boy of the prisoner's age and appearance.—He stated that he felt so well satisfied with the account the boy gave, that he was quite convinced he was doing no wrong in exchasing the pin.

The Magistrate—And pray what was that account?—Mr. Bury said he found it in the street; and the dirty state of the pin convinced me he told the truth.

The Magistrate—Did you ask him where he found it?—Mr. Bury I did not.

The Magistrate—Did you ask him where he lived, or any other questions?—Mr. Bury replied in the negative.

The Magistrate—And you gave the sum of 9d. for this pin, which you must have known to be pure gold?—Mr. Bury—It was very dirty when I bought it; and I thought it might turn out indifferent gold. It has been cleaned and altered since I have had it.

The Magistrate asked the value of the pin; and Mr. Doyle said, cost 10s. It was curiously chased.

The Magistrate—The increase of crime in the junior classes of society, is the every-day subject of complaint with the public; and would not be half so much so, but for such conduct as yours, Mr. Bury! If tradesmen wish to maintain a character for respectability in the world, they should act in such a manner as to deserve it; and if they do not, the consequences be upon their heads. We are every day called upon to punish boys like this, for offences which probably they never would have committed, but for the facility with which stolen goods are to be got rid of; and I certainly shall not send him for trial, without also submitting your conduct to a Jury.

Mr. Bury hoped this would not be done—he had acted quite innocently.

The Magistrate—I cannot alter my determination; I should be acting with gross injustice if I committed this boy without also sending his seducer before a Jury.

The boy was committed for stealing the pin, and Mr. Bury was also committed to Newgate for trial, for feloniously receiving it, knowing it to have been stolen. The witnesses were all bound over to prosecute.

MANSION-HOUSE.—On Thursday Mr. Dando, of the House of Dando and Co. of Cheapside, was summoned to attend before the Lord Mayor, to answer the complaint of a Mr. Wood. A gentleman who is now at Southampton, owed Messrs. Dando 3*l.* or 4*l.* pounds, and Mr. Wood a smaller sum, and transmitted from Southampton to Messrs. Dando the sum of 15*l.* in part payment of his debt to them. Under the cover in which the letter to Messrs. Dando was enclosed, he transmitted a letter to Mr. Wood, enclosing 1*l.* in part payment of his debt to that gentleman. Mr. W. never received either the letter or the enclosure, and as he expected both, he wrote to his correspondent at Southampton, complaining of the want of punctuality in a money transaction. The answer he received put him in possession of the fact, that Messrs. Dando had in their possession what they were bound to give up to him, and stated that the writer had sent the letter directed to Mr. Wood open. Mr. Wood called at Messrs. Dando's house and demanded his letter, but their reply was, that they had received a parcel from the correspondent alluded to, on their own account, and intended to appropriate it. Under these circumstances Mr. Wood had no alternative but an application to the Lord Mayor.

Mr. Wood produced the letter referred to, in explanation of the delay in remitting the 1*l.* The Lord Mayor read it, and found the contents exactly corresponded with the account given of the transaction by the complainant.

His Lordship asked Mr. Dando what answer he had to make to the extraordinary charge?

Mr. Dando said, that the correspondent at Southampton, alluded to, was indebted to his house in the sum of 3*l.* or 4*l.*, and that he had transmitted to them 26*l.* in a parcel in part payment; upon receiving which they wrote to him acknowledging the receipt of the 26*l.* and informing him that if he did not forthwith discharge the rest of the debt, legal proceedings should be taken against him.

The Lord Mayor—Did you receive a letter from that gentleman, Mr. Wood, with an enclosure? Mr. Dando—We acknowledged the receipt of 26*l.*, the whole amount of the enclosure, and we are not liable to any charge for improper conduct.

The Lord Mayor—Is not this a most gross breach of trust? The letter just received from Southampton clearly states that part payment was sent to each of you, and you, Mr. Dando, have taken the whole.

Mr. Dando—I conceive, my Lord, this case is not within your jurisdiction.

The Lord Mayor—I am convinced that it is, Sir.

Hunting intelligence.—It is expected the Earl of Derby's Stag-hounds will begin regular hunting in about a fortnight or three weeks. H. Jolliffe, Esq.'s Fox-hounds will begin regular hunting on Monday, the 13th instant. The Surrey Fox-hounds meet Monday, at Worms Heath; Thursday, at Pratt's Bottom; Saturday, at Godstone. The Sanderstead Harriers meet every day at kennel, three miles from Croydon.

The thermometer, in the shade in a northern aspect, on Wednesday morning, at 11 o'clock, stood at 62 degrees: at half-past one o'clock, same day, it was at 46 degrees. Depression in two hours and a half, 16 degrees.

The following is the amount of the French maritime force before Cadiz:—three ships of the line of 80 guns; seven frigates, 44 to 60 guns; three corvettes, 20 to 24 guns; one galiote, 8 guns; five brigs, 6 to 12 guns; 26 gun boats, 1 to 6; 8 bomb-galliots, having on board, in all, 4505 men.

Outrage in the King's Bench Prison.—An examination, which occupied three days in its progress, has been taken before Mr. Allen, the magistrate, in the Marshal's Office. Mr. Wm. Roubel, solicitor, of Montague-street, charged R. Bennet, John Jacobs, Alex. Campbell, and others, with a felony and desperate assault, in pumping upon him, and robbing him of his pocket-book, containing six ten pound notes of the Bank of England, and some memorandums. On Monday Mr. Roubel stated, that in consequence of a letter from Jacobs, he went to the King's Bench Prison to consult with him professionally. Jacobs related to him a transaction he had when a minor, and on which he represented he was then detained. To insure the attendance of complainant, he used the name of a Mrs. Piggott, to whom Roubel was known. In consequence of this letter, he waited on Jacobs at the time appointed, namely at half-past seven in the evening of Wednesday, the 24th of September. Some conversation occurred relative to the prisoner Jacobs's affairs, and he agreed to see him on the following day. On leaving him, he went to Mrs. Piggott's apartments, and remained there some time, till the officer of the prison gave notice to strangers to depart. About five minutes after this, Jacobs knocked at the door, and asked if he meant to call on him in his way out? He replied, he should not, as it was late. On coming down the staircase he observed a bustle below, as if there had been some difference; he had then a sword stick in his hand; the moment he was out and turning towards the gate he was seized by several persons and conveyed to the right to the back of the prison; he then heard a voice, which he believed to be that of Jacobs, say, "Pull up, pull up," and immediately he was caught round the middle by a person, whom he believed to be Richard Bennet; at that moment he missed his pocket-book, containing the notes above-mentioned; he contrived to regain his legs, and called out murder, but was immediately knocked down by a blow on the back of his head, and then dragged along and carried through No. 5 stair-case to the pump, put into the trough and pumped upon for some time; believed Jacobs worked the pump, and encouraged others—made his escape and ran towards the prison doors, but was again seized, knocked down, and ultimately reconveyed to the pump, where he was again deposited in the trough, and plentifully drenched with water; he called out murder, but no one came, and at last, wet, dirty, and ragged, he made his escape, dreadfully abused in person, and with the loss of his pocket-book and notes. He made his loss known at the gate as he went out.—Mrs. Piggott, a prisoner, was called, and proved his being there, and her hearing of the outrage. She stated that she did not authorise Jacobs to use her name.—On Wednesday the examination was resumed. John Pettit (a prisoner) saw Campbell, Heyton, and Jacobs ill-use the complainant; saw Campbell hit him on the back of his head; saw him carried through No. 5 staircase and pumped upon; believes Campbell worked the pump; it was said he was an informer against those who had gain; heard him say he had lost his pocket-book, but could not say who took it.—Henry Thompson saw the transaction, and heard the cry of "pull up," but could not recognize any one, it was so dark, and the crowd great; saw Mr. Bennet, and is quite sure he was not near the crowd, he stood on the parade in front of the prison; the mob was 70 or 80 yards from them. William Waring Perry, Wm. Maxwell, Mary Neville, John Gustavus Forster, and Lewis James, gave similar testimony. Roubel was examined relative to the last notes, and he admitted he had advertised the wrong numbers, but that he had received eight, and then contrived his statement by giving in the list of those he said he had lost.—Mr. Allen immediately discharged Bennet, both from the felony and assault, but held Messrs. Campbell, Pitman, Jacobs, Wright, Elverstone and Heyton to bail for the outrage, and warrants were lodged at the gate against them.

A half-pay officer residing near Leeds has been committed by the Mayor of that town to take his trial at the sessions, for publishing newspapers from the public news-room there, on very clear evidence.

Tuesday, near the Park-wall of the Duke of Northumberland, at Sion House, one of the Western coaches, was on its passage to town, when the fore leader suddenly became restive. A loaded coal wagon was passing, and got entangled with the coach, which upset, when the coachman, guard, and outside passengers were thrown a considerable distance. A woman, with an infant in her arms, fell against the waggon. The child was killed, one arm of the mother broken, and the other dislocated at the shoulder. Another woman had her leg broken. The sound leg of a sailor (with a wooden one) was dreadfully fractured, and he was also bruised about the head and shoulders. Of four inside passengers three were dreadfully cut by the glasses.

A shocking accident happened on Saturday se'nnight, at Bognor, to Mr. Walkden, the proprietor of the Family Hotel, at that place. He was returning from Chichester, and riding rather fast, when his horse fell, and rolled over him; Mr. Walkden was so much injured internally, that he died the next morning whilst in a warm bath.

The Salisbury coach to Fonthill, was upset on Monday, by coming in contact with a tree in the grand avenue. Seven outside passengers were injured—two or three very severely.

On Thursday morning, a very alarming fire broke out at Mr. Austin's, a basket maker, in High Holborn, about a quarter before two o'clock, which consumed the house and stock in trade, as also the premises of Mr. Bennison, ironmonger, and Mr. Manning, carpenter.—misses of Mr. Bennison, ironmonger, and Mr. Manning, carpenter.—mises of Mr. Bennison, ironmonger, and Mr. Manning, carpenter.—Several other premises were damaged, but no lives were lost.

Tuesday morning a fire broke out in a skin and feather store near the New Prison, Clerkenwell, which raged for some minutes with considerable fury, and threatened destruction to the adjacent buildings; however, by the incessant application of water served by two engines, the fire was got under without any material damage. The stock and concerns were both insured to a large amount.

On Thursday morning a poor woman, living on Saffron-hill, and mother of four children, one of them not more than four months old, cut her throat. After remaining in the greatest agony for two hours, she expired. It is supposed the rash act was committed through distress. The children were conveyed to the workhouse.

On Thursday morning four young men, named Moody, Doud, Hanson, and Hitchman, hired a boat at Westminster, to proceed to the sea, and Hitchman, hired a boat at Westminster, to proceed to the sea, and Hitchman, hired a boat at Westminster, to proceed to the sea

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ZADIG will oblige us by continuing his correspondence.

We are told that a letter has appeared in the HERALD, which taxes us with unfairness in giving the letter from PATON, the father of MISS PATON, mis-spelt—whereas the person bringing it "gave it to MR. SHACKELL, who promised to correct it." MR. SHACKELL never saw the person, and MR. COOPER, the Editor of this Paper, who did see him, promised to do no such thing as the person says he did—he promised to correct some WORD which occurred in the letter, but that was all. Does the writer in the HERALD *suppose that we would take upon ourselves to alter one syllable of the communication of a "logical mathematician," whose motto is "*Nemo me impune lacessit?"

Talking of the HERALD—it gave an account one day last week of the DUKE OF YORK'S missing a brace of pheasants at Sudburn, which COL. B. shot immediately after. There was no COL. B. at the MARQUESS OF HERTFORD'S at the time, but there might have been, and in so far the HERALD might have been accidentally right—but to set sportsmen shooting pheasants in September was the blunder of a downright bungler, and is more Cockney than the HERALD ordinarily is.

The Piccadilly pavement is done, and we take some credit to ourselves for urging it—how long it will last is another question. We wish we could get Regent-street paved—it is now one of the finest streets in the world; but it is like a splendid saloon with a rough floor—it would be moreover desirable that some authentic account of this street should be published, because amongst the buildings here and there we perceive some abominable caricatures of houses, which are allowed to spoil the general effect, the blame of which should rest upon their particular architects, and not upon the original projector of the vast improvement.

ROGERS, on being told that the Old King's Mews was immediately to be pulled down, and a building on the plan of the Pantheon erected on the site—observed (we believe unintentionally) "And a very fine sight, too;" but a laugh being raised, the wag, in order really to say a good thing, jocosely added—"I am glad of it—a great deal has been sacrificed in this part of the town to the Mewses—it is quite time the Graces should have their share."

MR. GALLOWAY, the man who said in Guildhall, on Monday, that he had to live to see the day when the STATUTE of PITT would be pulled down in Guildhall—was a very active person in the days of the Corresponding Society. A friend, who was present at the ceremony of investing WAITHMAN, and at the Sheriffs' dinner, notices to us his satisfaction that the Linen Draper's politics seem moderated as he approaches his high office—it is very true—and no thanks to the Linen Draper; in order to be tolerated in decent society, the first thing such a man must do is to disavow his principles.

Our friend from Nottingham attacks us wrongfully—we cannot hinder people from calling LORD RANCLIFFE NANCY PARKYNS—we are glad his Lordship has given a proof of his morality equal to those he has heretofore afforded of his loyalty.

ST. PETER is wrong—his Royal Highness gave five pounds—four for himself and one for his royal nephew.

The anecdotes of DENMAN while acting SANCHO to the DON QUIXOTE BROUGHAM on the tour, are too good to be lost; but as far as Nottingham goes we have received a remonstrance and declaration that the election being in the Corporation, and the trick (to which BURDETT would not lend himself,) of making strangers Burgesses, always securing the Radical interest, we are desired not to believe what was said at the absurd meeting we noticed, as a declaration of the principles of the people—and as for Glasgow, we are also requested to observe, that the Glasgow PEOPLE *had nothing to do with the feast—that no Glasgow man's health was drunk, and that no Glasgow man spoke, with the exception of two attornies—writers they are there called—writers to the signet, each of whom is termed in the Scotch dialect a "*W. ASS,' being the northern pronunciation of W. S.

LONDON, OCTOBER 5.

THE MORNING CHRONICLE has fallen so low in the scale of journalism that we ought, perhaps, to apologize for noticing seriously any of the trash with which its columns teem; but although it has changed proprietors, we can trace the same grovelling animals in its columns, and therefore conclude it is still in the same trammels as ever.

The malignity and vulgarity of this paper, which, in the first place, it is our intention to remark upon, displays itself in an attack upon the rejoicings at Windsor on the arrival of HIS MAJESTY at the Castle. It is true, a certain portion of its invective is directed against the weather, over which it seems to infer, a diligent Government and a Whig Administration would indubitably have a perfect controul. The tone and spirit of the account it gives, are low and little, and its intention is the baser and meaner, because, having no possible plea for abusing his MAJESTY (in whose honour, and as a mark of loyalty and affection for whom, the people spontaneously gave the fête) the writer turns upon the PEOPLE, and ridicules the expressions of their love and duty.

The CHRONICLE then seizes hold of a false punctuation to mis-read and mis-quote;—a quibble below contempt—and seems dissatisfied that the PEOPLE were not feasted in St. George's Hall—he does not forget—but in his misrepresentation he appears to forget that the KING had nothing to do with this feast—that of the two his MAJESTY stood more in the place of "guest invited" than of "HOST." If, therefore, the exquisite joke of a "cold shoulder" is meant to be severe, it can only apply to the managers of the feast, who were so silly as not to be able to find a room in Windsor capable of holding three thousand visitors at dinner.

In describing the joy, the enthusiasm, and the perfect loyalty which characterized every part of the proceedings, we could at once set at rest the calumnious falsehoods and dirty insinuations of this most grovelling Whig paper, but we will take another course with it, and instead of repeating here the details of the "Welcome to Windsor," we shall allow the CHRONICLE its full latitude——let it be read—let it be believed—let it be admitted into every gentleman's house—into the house of every Englishman—into the house of every CHRISTIAN, who, after having perused the following paragraph which appeared in it, has the courage to allow it to be seen within his circle:—

"The Quarterly Review quotes the following remarks of CHARLES the Second, on the Penal Laws against the Catholics:—'He (CHARLES) 'did not doubt, he said, but that some very extraordinary reason had 'existed for making such laws, but evidently it did not exist now. He 'knew well that he had not the power to repeal any law without the 'consent of Parliament; but he knew no reason why he might not 'profess that he did not like those laws which caused men to be put to 'death for their religion, and if ever God restored him to his kingdom, 'he would do his best that those bloody laws might be repealed. And 'if there were no other reason of State that he could yet comprehend 'against the taking away of the other penalties, he should be glad that 'all those distinctions between his subjects might be removed, and 'that whilst they were all equally good subjects, they might equally 'enjoy his protection.' These un-Stuart-like sentiments are wormwood to the children of intolerance, sworn like the ancient Jews—

"Non monstrare vias, eadem nisi sacra colenti;
"Quesitum ad fontem solos deducere verpos.

The Quarterly Reviewer, therefore, cannot approve of a principle so alarmingly levelling; and argues that intolerance is essential to the preservation of the Established Church; and that the Established Church is the greatest of all our blessings. We wonder that this writer did not advance that the prosecution of the heterodox was an excellent religious exercise. It was an ancient and approved tenet, that religion gives its professors a right to enslave those who dissent from it, in order to render its propagation more easy. 'This,' observes MONTESQUIEU, 'was the notion 'that encouraged the ravagers of America in their iniquity. Under 'the influence of this idea, they founded their right of enslaving so many nations: for these robbers (a sort of army of the Faith,) who would absolutely be both robbers and Christians, were superlatively devout. Louis XIII. was extremely uneasy at a law, by which all the negroes of his colonies were to be made slaves; but it being strongly urged to him as the readiest means for their conversion, he acquiesced without further scruple.' The reviewer might have used some argument of this nature, but what he does say, is as droll a quiz on his readers as we ever recollect to have read; we only can call to mind one thing like it, and that is 'SQUIRE WESTON in "Tom Jones," pronouncing the country gentlemen to be the chief ornaments and honours of the land. 'In abolishing the penal laws against the Catholics CHARLES would have acted justly and wisely, in pursuance of his father's feelings and intentions; but as for removing all distinctions between his subjects upon the score of their religious persuasions, against that measure there were reasons which will always be unanswerable as we desire to support that church establishment which is THE GREATEST OF ALL OUR BLESSINGS!!!"—Ti-di-ti-diddy-dum, twiddle-twaddle-twee.!!!"

We should think it would be difficult to find Englishmen and Christians ready to support a writer who makes such comments upon the Established CHURCH of their country. When we add to this open declaration of contempt for RELIGION, his avowed disloyalty, and the constant and perpetual insertion of the most filthy and disgusting details of trials and examinations,—we have to apologize for having admitted sundry advertisements from the MORNING CHRONICLE, whence we quote this article, which, in hopes of getting noticed in decent society, the people conducting it, have sent to our office.

ALL London is in the country.—There is grass growing in Cumberland-place, and in one corner of Grosvenor-square—not a man to be seen in the window at WHITE'S—not a carriage to be found in the Park. Our readers therefore must be ruralising, and will naturally like to hear how the dear "village" is going on. We will endeavour to give them all the information we can.

In the first place, there is a double-refined taste coming fast into fashion; the public nerves are in a terrible state, and the "world" cannot endure the grossnesses and barbarisms with which it formerly abounded.—Under the auspices of MR. RICHARD MARTIN, of Galway, the abominable practices of horse-driving and beef eating are likely soon to be abolished. Under the care of the magistrates, the public morals are in such a rapid course of improvement, that, although the laws of our Church prohibit a man's marriage with his grandmother, that restraint upon the passions is not considered by their Worships sufficiently strong, and it is as much as one's liberty is worth to speak to that revered relative in the public street after dark.

This great stress is laid upon the period of the day in which these improprieties are committed, in order to refute the evidently immoral proverb about "daylight making sin;" and not only are these indelicacies promptly checked, but other less graceful and intellectual indulgencies, formerly common in London, and still inevitably so in Paris and in parts of Edinburgh, are most summarily punished.

Here, by the way, we may give our readers, whether in town or out of town, a bit of information not unacceptable to those who like to get at truth, and are above the Whig trickery of uttering falsehoods to carry points—BATTLEBEE, the man who was said to have been sent to the tread-mill by MR. SWABEY for an interesting flirtation near Waterloo-bridge with MISS HASHWOOD—(what a subject for JAMES SMITH their loves would make!) was never sent to the Tread-mill at all, but bailed in the office—what became of his frail companion our informant upon the subject knows not—but his account of the Tread-mill itself is not unamusing, and though he takes a different tone in the consideration of its application to females, from ourselves, we shall give his own words, descriptive of the spectacle at BRIXTON.

"Revise your opinions," says he, "about the Tread-mill—the women are not injured—do not suffer—do not complain in the way you have been told."

Here we must differ, as far, at least, as relates to Coldbath Fields.

"I have seen them, thirty or forty, at work at Brixton—have spoken to them—shaken hands with them"—(merely by way of experiment we conclude)—"their hands are not horny. I saw a dozen or two step from the mill, those too at the hardest work. There are two or three degrees of it measured by the proportion of rest to that of labour, and according to the degree of guilt, and they were not exhausted—nor fainting—nor perspiring. I do not know," says our free-and-easy friend, "what other namby pamby sentimentalities I am to negative,"—meaning our expressions of pity for these suffering women—"namby pamby sentimentalities!"—well, let us see—"I watched for the fact—not one of them wiped her face when she came down, but sat erect and composedly till her turn for labour came—there even was little ennui or lassitude apparent among them; the greater proportion appeared patient and resigned, and those whose ill-looks I remarked upon, had been the shortest time in the prison—those who had been longest confined being uniformly the most healthy."

So far we are pleased with this, as it shews upon good authority—not that our dislike to the system is ill-founded—not that we have exaggerated or been deceived with respect to the facts we have stated—but because it gives us reason to believe that the female labour is not equally severe in all prisons.

"I'll swear," says our correspondent, (which by the way in these days is vastly improper)—"I have seen a young lady in a well carpetted drawing room looking and feeling I dare say as miserable as any of these persons, while seated on a squeaking screw music-stool at her eternal piano-forte, or still harping" at "Ah vous dirai je Maman," "juxta comitante, an almost equally suffering governess!!"

"And pray mind," says our inveterate castigator, "during the visit I have alluded to, there they were—these amiable innocents—these protegeés of yours, in the known presence of strangers, perhaps even of the representatives of that fourth estate, called the 'gentlemen of the Public Press' (pace dicam), and haply some of those who had so successfully contributed to render them the worthy objects of the discriminating sympathy of the reforming public, (a great portion of which have a fellow-feeling for the sufferers;) there they were 'be says,' in a state the most favourable for effect, quite sufficiently disengaged to cast many a backward look at their visitors, 'speaking unutterable things.'"

We rejoice mightily at this—this really gives us satisfaction—it shews the infallibility of female resources—their tongues are stopped by prison laws, and they have recourse to their eyes—we see no crime in this, rather a new proof of that ingenuity for which the sex is proverbial, and of which the poets in every age have sung. We enjoy the remonstrances of our friend, we admit his justification of the tread-mill, and his attack upon ourselves, but nevertheless we object to the system.

Well—away with the tread-mill, and let us look at patrician acts of misconduct—gentlemanly vices, not punishable by summons, nor amenable to the criminal laws. There has been more elopements, more goings off, and carryings-off, during the last ten days, than have occurred within the previous ten months—here are the brothers of Irish Earls, the sons of English Barons, Irish Barons themselves, Irish gentlemen of small fortune, and French gentlemen of no fortune at all, helter-skelter carrying off other men's wives and daughters with the most merciless decision and despatch.

A man mounted in the chair of a patriotic dinner, wrenched from the rostrum of liberty and independence to rifle the sweets of his friend's fire side, and illustrate the liberality of his sentiments by a practical experiment;—the husband of an amiable lady flies from her arms to those of the bewitched wife of an honourable husband;—and during all this the reign of liberalism, there has been a superabundance of duels fought—one less, the world says, than there ought to have been; but that is not to the purpose—we mean merely to remark upon the state of society, that while the Justices are setting men of seventy to tread upon float-boards for accidental solecisms, and while players in spangled jackets are incarcerated for dancing at Stepney, and whole hosts of publicans fined for allowing their customers to drink in their houses after eleven o'clock, their betters are doing their best to maintain the equilibrium of society, and counteract the "double-refinement" of the lower classes, by shewing themselves above the petty controul of Bow-street, the fulminations of SIR RICHARD BIRNIE, or the censure of the world or their own consciences.

The alphabet has been put in requisition to convey delicately to the world the mysterious events of the past week—and to us, who laugh at the system of initializing, nothing can be more absurd than the accounts of Lord R— and Mrs. —, and the Hon. Mr. F— and Mrs. C— M—, and Mr. G— and Miss C—, and Miss M—s and Mr. D— L—e, and Mr. W— P— and Capt. T. B. D—, and Mr. L— and Miss C— and so on. We are in hopes, however, that one or two of these things are groundless; but it is a curious thing, and worthy the attention of a philosopher, as bearing strongly upon the force of example, that never is a crime of any magnitude committed, but that innumerable similar crimes are immediately published to the world. A murder or a suicide seldom goes unimitated, and to this propensity for copying are we to attribute the present influx of vice into the market of fashion.

The theatres have re-opened, but alas! to little purpose. What is a playhouse without an audience? And neither the beauty of the buildings, nor the novelty of the decorations, nor the skill of the actors, the melody of the singers, nor the wisdom of SHAKSPEAR, nor the wit of SHERIDAN, has that attractive power which can alone make a theatre pleasant to the proprietors or the public.

Then, however, we have the DIORAMA—a most extraordinary piece of machinery, constructed upon the universal principle of "double refinement." Men and women who they went to see pictures formerly were accustomed to walk round the exhibition room and satisfy their curiosity—the thing is quite altered in the new school—the company is still, and the room moves round with the company—did ever man hear the like?

Moreover, upon the same system, the pavements are to be taken away—the rattling of carriages over stones is to intolerably noisy to be borne in this delicate age. Mr. M'Adam is to soothe us with his gentle, hard, and immortal road, while subterranean passages are to be constructed under the principal streets, in order that the painful disturbances of laying down light, fire and water may be avoided, and the operations of the engineers carried on sub silentio.

Amongst the newest inventions is that of skates—whereby with gentlemen may amuse themselves with a noble diversion—without ice; these things are called VOLITOS, and may be seen in full practice at a Tennis Court, near the Haymarket; but it is really impossible, in the small space which we can devote to the subject, to describe everything now going on in this deserted metropolis, where the streets are abandoned, the houses shut up, and not more than six hundred thousand wretched nobodies are to be seen crawling about.

We certainly breathe a hope, that while those who have the reins in hand, are devoting their time and attention to the delicate littlenesses of society, they will not allow greater evils to escape their notice—and above all, we trust, that the national spirit may not evaporate in the process of rectification.

THE successes of the Spanish Constitutionalists continue, if possible, to encrease, and the events of each succeeding day justify the able prognostications of the liberal press, and corroborate their accurate statements.

We suppose there is no man, certainly no subscriber to the patriotic fund on account of this spirit-stirring cause, who does not perceive with pleasure and a true British feeling, the unanimity and heartiness with which the free-born Spaniards have rallied round the altar of liberty, and nobly contended inch by inch, for the rights and privileges of their glorious constitution; nor can any person be blind to the pusillanimity and ignorance of that degraded and debased Prince the DUC D'ANGOULEME, whose perilous situation, after the strenuous opposition made to his progress, and the numerous defeats which he has encountered, has been forced into a position the most lamentable and ridiculous.

It is impossible not to have admired, in the progress of this glorious struggle, the bursts of real patriotism which have occasionally given a splendour to the banners of liberty: the moderation of the illustrious RIEGO; the consideration he shewed towards the merchants who were in his power; the respect he evinced for the property of the church and the attributes of his religion:—these, contrasted with the legitimate cowardice and folly displayed by the French at ST. SEBASTIAN, at SAN PETRI—the TROCADERO—CORUNNA—and the other places in which they have been exposing themselves, shed a lustre upon the patriotic cause which must cheer every man who has contributed to its support, in the whole scale of wisdom and liberality, from MR. HOLMES, who subscribed a pair of shoes, down to MR. LAMBTON, who gave a thousand pounds.

To those staunch enemies of "foreign interference," whose means the immortal WILSON was enabled to take the field, and in revenge for being sent to jail for breaking the laws of France, to annihilate the whole army of his Royal Highness the DUKE D'ANGOULEME, the conduct of the English at Corunna must ever be the most satisfactory and delightful. The sortie, in which innumerable cabbages and cauliflowers, a hoe, and a spring-gun, were captured, rivalled at least the battle of Salamanca, which, though conducted a inferior general, was at the time allowed to be rather a arlish thing—the intrepid defence which, in spite of every difficulty, was maintained by our countrymen in arms, till within a fortnight of its surrender—for it was not till our skilful and excellent countrymen found it too hot to hold that they retreated—retreated, did we say?—retired—and how retired!—gracefully, and with dignity, making retreat most honourable—if they had taken to their heels—that is those who could run, and if those who could not run had been smuggled on board a little wretched schooner, and carried off and hid on a desart island—if they had thus scampered for their lives, and at last got into an English port for safety, one might have laughed at the thing, and sneered at the affair—but those who see how exactly the reverse of all this, has been the conduct of that heroic knot of Britons, who have gained bunches of laurel, larger and greener than the cabbages they reaped at Corunna, will feel exactly as we do, towards the pride of Southwark—the glory of England.

The MORNING POST, the TIMES, the CHRONICLE, and, in short, all the papers of similar politics, are, if possible, more sanguine now, than ever. Figueras it is true has followed St. Petri, and surrendered to the French—the reason is evident—the Spaniards think these legitimate Frenchmen unworthy of notice, like LORD GRIZZLE, in Tom Thumb, when he encounters GLUMDALCA, and hold it to be more honourable to show their contempt by giving up their towns, than to make the wretched Gauls of consequence by opposing them.

Amongst the striking proofs of popular feeling, none can be more conclusive than the affection manifested by the people towards RIEGO when he was apprehended, unless indeed we mention the gratifying reception which our own WILSON met with. Indeed the firm adherence to the great cause of all its principal leaders, leaves no doubt upon the minds of Europe in general, but more especially upon the minds of those who were sufficiently liberal and wise to subscribe their money, of the real estimation in which the blessings of the Constitution are held in Spain, of the perfect happiness and independence of the KING himself (whose letters the subscribers are convinced speak his real sentiments) the detestation in which his Majesty, in common with his people, holds the French, and indeed the glorious result of a struggle which will for ever stand recorded, as displaying in their true colours the tyranny of France, the patriotism of Spain, and the sagacity, prudence, and liberality of the Whig-Radicals of Great Britain, and the eloquence, penetration, talents, and veracity of that portion of the public press which is immediately under their controul.

Were we permitted to cast the smallest cloud over a prospect so animating and cheering, we should suggest to the subscribers to whom we have already alluded, to keep an eye upon their cash—it cannot go to Spain—we certainly do not mean to impeach the charity of the gentlemen into whose clutches the cash has got, but we would venture to ask them whether they really believe it to have been the intention of persons contributing to the great cause of Spanish emancipation, to support Italian refugees in London?—because, although there is no moral sin in giving four or five shillings per week to Liberals of any nation, there would be something more Whig-like and honourable in opening a separate subscription on account of the Italians—the jumble of the two, will create confusion and make an intricacy; we throw out this hint in order to be of service, and if ALDERMAN WOOD would have the kindness when he reads this, to make some enquiry about the Queen's plate subscription he would be doing many people (amongst the number himself,) a great deal of good.

We lament that we have felt it our duty to say a word likely to give uneasiness to those kind-hearted persons who have so generously contributed on this, as well as on other occasions, but as nothing has occurred in Spain itself to damp the ardour of their expectations, or make them repent in the smallest degree of their judicious liberality, a little attention to the disbursement of all the money which came out of their pockets, will perhaps set every thing to rights in England. We sincerely congratulate them upon the brilliant result of their efforts, and upon a line of conduct which will entail upon them the respect of the present age, and the veneration of succeeding ones.

THERE are hundreds of men in the world who would rather be called knaves than fools, amongst the number, is BYRON. All the attacks upon his immorality, his indecency, his profaneness and profligacy, are ineffectual either in mending his taste or curing his vanity; but when he is shown up for folly or plagiarism, or for doing that, which he frequently does, writing nonsense, his pride is wounded, and the hope of doing him good greatly strengthened.

Amongst all his works, his Prisoner of CHILLON is with the author an important favourite; to say that part of it is touch, would be to talk sacrilegiously—to say that the most affecting lines in it are stolen, would be to talk ridiculously—but when we have requested the attention of OUR readers to the following Enigma from the TEMPLE OF WIT! and subsequently to one of the most beautiful passages of his Lordship's Poem, we shall have done our duty to the original author, wherever he may be.

"ENIGMA.

"As I was going to St. Ives,
"I met seven wives,
"Each wife had a sack,
"Each sack had a cat,
"Each cat had a kit,
"In the sack along with it;
"How many kits, cats, sacks and wives,
"Were there going to Saint Ives?"

Now read we the following palpable imitation.

"There are seven pillars of Gothic mold,
"In Chillon's dungeon dark and cold:
"There are seven columns massy and gray,
"Dim with a dull imprisoned day;
"And in each pillar there is a ring,
"And in each ring there is a chain,
"That iron is a cankering thing,
"For in the limbs its teeth remain.
* * * * *
"They chained us three to a column of stone,
"And we were three, yet each alone,
"And thus together, yet apart,
"Fettered in hand, but proud in heart,
"'Twas still some solace in the dearth
"Of the pure elements of earth,
"To hearken to each other's speech,
"And each turn comforter to each."

That this is perfectly sublime there is not a boarding school miss who is allowed to read BYRON's works, who will not readily assert—let us ask what it wants to make the imitation of the original, perfect, except these lines:—

"How many youths, rings, chains, and columns of stone
"Were there in Chillon's dungeon lone?"

THE ARCHBISHOP OF DUBLIN AND THE PAPIST.

LITTLE more can be necessary we should think to expose the malignity of the opponents of Protestanism than the following affidavit, which has been prepared by command of the LORD LIEUTENANT, who appears extremely desirous that the circumstances should be perfectly understood—this as a method of preventing irritation is extremely judicious:

Statement of the occurrences at a funeral which took place on Tuesday, the 9th of September, 1823, in the church-yard of St. Kevin's, Dublin.

Arthur D'Arcy, Esq. brewer, of Usher-street, was interred in St. Kevin's church yard, on Tuesday, the 9th of September. The funeral was attended by a number of Priests, who walked in regular procession up Church-lane, to the grave, and there encircled themselves about it. When the coffin was deposited therein, one of the Priests, who stood behind the Sexton, desired him to stand by, until he should commence their service. The Sexton, on turning round, perceived all in the church-yard uncovered, and informed the Priest that he was sorry to be obliged to interfere with him, or any other person, in the performance of their religious service, but he could not permit him to officiate there. The Priest asked him, in a very peremptory manner, by what authority he stopped him from proceeding? The Sexton informed him, by directions of the Clergymen of the parish. And by what authority do they prevent us? said the Priest. The Sexton informed him, by the sanction of their Bishop, and the express laws of the land, which prevent any Priest from reading his prayers, or performing any service in a Protestant church-yard. The Priest said they had done so before, and why prevented now? The Sexton replied, if he had, it was by stealth, and not with the sanction of the Minister of the parish, as no one, not even a Clergyman of the Established Church, could read the funeral service, unless authorised by him. The Priest then exclaimed, it was a great hardship, and also a great disappointment to them, and to that large assembly, to be prevented. The Sexton replied, he hoped not, as he understood that they always performed their funeral service before the corpse was removed from their house, and he supposed that they had done so that morning, as they themselves knew well that no Priest could perform any service in a Protestant church-yard. One of them then said, "Doctor, go on with the service, and don't allow any one to interrupt you;"—after a pause, "or," said he, "say the De Profundis." The Sexton then replied, that nothing could be done there in the way of service, except with the consent of the Clergyman of the parish, and if they wished the funeral service to be read, that he would send for him. They said, no. The Priest (Father Blake) then turned round, and, in a very audible voice informed the surrounding multitude, "that they were there publicly prevented from going through their service, and as they were prevented from praying in public, he desired them all to address their prayers to heaven, in private, to themselves." The Sexton then retired from the church-yard to his house, while the multitude were praying, and did not further interrupt them.

In a short time after, a vast number of respectable persons called at his house, and one of them asked him, was it true what they had heard, that he had the audacity to prevent their priests from going through their funeral service that morning, over their deceased friend. The sexton said he was the person. They then asked him by what authority he had done so. The Sexton replied that he had already informed them—Priests. They insisted on knowing by whose authority he had done so. The Sexton then replied, by the orders of the Minister of the parish whose church-yard it was. They then asked, had he received any particular instructions from the Archbishop of Dublin on that occasion, to prevent them. The Sexton replied, none, as he never had any communication with his Grace on the subject: and also said his Grace was not in the kingdom, but that he had acted by general instructions. One of them, a Mr. Redmonds, of Rathmines, replied, that he had always a Priest to perform the service at the interment of his mother and other friends, in St. Kevin's church-yard. The Sexton replied, if ever he had it was through stealth, as he had already mentioned in the church-yard, and that he, Mr. Redmonds, was no friend of the Priest for saying so, as the Priest could have been punished for so doing, it being contrary to law. They then threatened the Sexton what they would do to him, and that millions of them were not to be trampled on, or insulted by a few, nor would they endure it any longer; but, that they should have their rights, and would have them, and likewise would have their own service in future, performed by their own clergymen, and would not be prevented. The Sexton then said, as they threatened him for doing his duty, he requested them to come at eleven o'clock, and that they would have an opportunity of meeting the Archdeacon of Dublin there, whose church-yard it was, and that he would inform them better than the Sexton could, why the laws prevented them. They said it was a savage thing to disturb them in their dying hours, by such conduct. The Sexton said, he was sorry to hear a person that had the appearance of a gentleman, say so, as he, the Sexton, certainly did no such thing, as he believed that the poor man had died the Saturday or Sunday before. They then became outrageous, when the Sexton was obliged to inform Mr. Redmonds, who stood near him, that he was surprised to see him heading such a number of persons, both to insult and assault him in his own house, and if they would not retire, he should hold him accountable. They then dispersed.

The Sexton states, that the friends of the deceased on the evening before, when asked should the Clergyman of the parish attend, answered, no, as they would have one of their own with them.

The Sexton further states, that, during his time of holding the office (upwards of six years) no Priest had performed any service either in St. Peter's or St. Kevin's church-yards, to his knowledge, but once about four years ago (in St. Peter's church-yard), at which time the Sexton went forward to the Priest, by order of the Curate of the parish, (who was in the vestry-room at the time) and prevented him from proceeding. The Priest immediately desisted and retired.

The above statement was made upon oath before the Lord Mayor of Dublin, by the Sexton of St. Kevin's parish.

THE WEST INDIES.

WE continue to receive innumerable communications on the subject of the mischief arising from the agitation of the slavery emancipation question, in Parliament: the following, however, appears to be one of the most important which has yet come to hand:—

Extract of a Letter from St. Lucia, dated 8th August, 1823.

"It is difficult to give you an exact idea of the horrible situation in which we are placed in this miserable island; accounts are hourly coming from the country of the insubordination of the negroes; they are all acquainted with what has taken place in Parliament concerning them, and in the order in council that is preparing to prohibit the infliction of the punishment of the whip on female slaves, under any circumstance, and for the cessation of the practice of carrying the whip in the field, they have consequently become quite sulky and arrogant, and will not work—the crops will be reduced to nothing—several negroes have already left estates, and say they are free.

"A dreadful plot has been discovered on the 4th inst. that was to have been carried into effect on the 7th. Three negroes, of the names of Ensuite, Michel, and St. Louis, all of the quarter of Dauphine, after dining together, took the oaths they thought necessary, and took upon themselves the rank of Captains, and were to have met on the 7th, at Michel's, and commence the work of destruction by murdering five or six free coloured inhabitants; after that they were to have divided and have gone on the different estates in Dauphine, to be joined by the insurgent negroes they had been tampering with, and proceed to murder every white man in the quarter, and most of the free coloured people. Some of our negroes are implicated in this horrid plot, which was to have taken place simultaneously at Gros-Islet, on Grand Cul de Sac. St. Louis happened to mention it to a free coloured man, of the name of Monplaisie, who is a good subject, and divulged the whole to Mr. Fournier, the Commissary of the quarter of Dauphine, who immediately, with a small detachment, secured the conspirators. St. Louis has turned king's evidence, and the proceedings are now going on. Mr. M. arrived in town last night about 12 o'clock from Grand Anse; some faithful subject, ignorant of the apprehension of the conspirators, having apprised him of the fate that awaited him and other white inhabitants of Dauphine, on the 7th. I have no news from our estate to-day. I hope the communication with town is not cut off. An ordinance for establishing a militia is at last published, but we have few or no arms. His Majesty's Government has placed us on a volcano, where the destruction of life and property is threatened by insurrection and conflagration—judge of our situation and the state of our existence. The managers and overseers sleep with their fowling guns by their side, apprehending every moment some movement of the negroes, and every body is on the alarm and on the alert!"

PRISON LABOUR.

As we have treated this subject in a different way in another part of this paper, and as we mentioned the name of MR. HEADLAM in our last as one of our correspondents upon it, we think it only consistent with the principle of impartiality which we have laid down to give a place to some portion of that gentleman's letter to MR. PEEL.

It is hardly necessary to premise to those who have given the question any consideration, that MR. HEADLAM is a very active Magistrate, and Chairman of the Quarter Sessions for the North Riding of Yorkshire—nor will it be required of us to observe, that we have purposely confined our extracts from his letter to such parts as treat of the power of the Magistracy to inflict the sentence of hard labour, and the consideration, how far the hardship of that labour may be encreased.

"Convicts," says MR. HEADLAM, (for we waive the arguments touching the legality of setting untried, and probably innocent prisoners to work) to whom work is assigned as a punishment are sentenced to hard labour.

"The 22d Geo. III. cap. 64, which authorises the employment, in houses of correction, of prisoners not sentenced to labour, directs them to be employed in some work or labour which is not severe.

"It seems important upon this inquiry to consider the definite extent and meaning of these expressions. The first time that I am aware of the former term being used is in 5th Ann, cap. 6, which extends the benefit of clergy to all those who are entitled to ask it, without requiring them to read by way of conditional merit. 'And experience having shown that so very universal a lenity was frequently inconvenient and an encouragement to commit the lower degrees of felony; and that though capital punishments were too rigorous for these inferior offences, yet no punishment at all (or next to none) was as much too gentle; it was further enacted by the same statute, that when any person is convicted of any theft or larceny, and burnt in the hand for the same according to the ancient law, he shall also, at the discretion of the judge, be committed to the house of correction or public workhouse, to be there kept to hard labour.*' The object of this statute being to substitute labour as a punishment in lieu of death, it is obvious that the epithet hard is added in terrorem. A review of the practical effect of this statute, and of some others, which have subsequently assigned the same punishment to various offences, as well as a consideration of the degree of hardness with which labour is capable of being applied, will satisfy us that the epithet has not any very definite or appropriate meaning.

"As to the practice, till within a very few years, scarcely any house of correction was provided with the means of keeping all the convicts employed in regular serious work. Notwithstanding the sentence of hard labour, solemnly pronounced by the judge as a substitute for capital punishment, such criminals have till lately almost universally loitered the term of their imprisonment in perfect idleness.

"And even where labour is inflicted according to the sentence, to what degree of hardness or severity can it be extended?

"It has been contended by some writers, that severe unmitigated labour ought alone to be introduced into prisons?—'that prison labour should exhaust the strength and subdue the spirit of the criminal, and send him to repose worn down in body and hopeless in mind.†' Can it be contemplated, that a convict should be so far exhausted or subdued by his labour, as that the diet and rest with which he is supplied will not enable him to resume his task the following day, and so from day to day during the term of his imprisonment? If so, he must grow daily more and more unequal to his work; and if the same task be continued to be required of him for any considerable period, his health and strength, and ultimately his life, must sink under the infliction.

"It is clear that such severity of labour never was required and never would be tolerated. If by the criminal's being exhausted and subdued, is only meant that he feels so much weariness as a night's rest will remove, and so much exhaustion as the prison diet will replenish, so that he can resume his labour on the morrow with undiminished strength, then it will not appear to be more severe than the toil which the common labourer is obliged daily to undergo. Indeed it seems as unmerciful as it would be impracticable to require more.

"A great quantity of labour has been performed of late years by convicts within prison walls, in enlarging and improving public buildings. Is any such culprit, however aggravated his crime, or however deserving he may be of the utmost severity of punishment, ever expected or required to do more than the ordinary day's work of a hired labourer? Considerations of health, to which the whole treatment of prisoners, in regard both to lodging, diet, and work is referable, would not justify a more severe task.

"It may safely therefore be assumed, that the sentence of hard labour has never been construed to impose more than the average work of an ordinary labourer.

"When the statute 22d Geo. III. cap. 64, extended to houses of correction the right which had previously existed in gaols of setting to work persons not convicted, the Legislature probably had in view the words hard labour, expressed in the sentence of punishment, and therefore directed that those who work only for their maintenance should be employed in some work or labour which is not severe.

"What then is the precise extent and meaning of this direction? If the arguments already urged for the right of setting prisoners to work for their subsistence be considered of any weight, they will determine this question. There seems to be no hardship in requiring of persons who are accustomed to live by their labour when at large, the same degree of exertion when they have to earn their support in prison.

"The expression, therefore, of being employed in labour which is not severe can only mean, not more severe than the ordinary labour of honest working men. There seems no reason why it should be less so, or that a man who is well sustained with comfortable lodging and healthy diet, should procure those comforts with less labour in prison than out of it.

"In practice, therefore, it will be difficult to draw a distinction between the quantity of work to be performed by a convict sentenced to hard labour, and by a prisoner who is to be employed in labour which is not severe. The former cannot do more than a day's work, and the latter ought not to do less. But there may be a material difference in the quality as well as in the quantity of work required of prisoners.

"It is contended by some, 'that severe unmitigated labour ought alone to be introduced into prisons, and that profit and utility are quite foreign from the object.'‡ To this the Committee of the society for the Improvement of Prison Discipline reply, that, convinced as they are 'that hard labour is of the very first importance in prison discipline, they cannot perceive why hard labour may not also be useful and profitable labour.'

"The question is entitled to our most serious attention. Let it be put in this form. In making arrangements for setting to work all the persons confined in any gaol or house of correction, would it be more expedient to establish a tread-mill or a weaving manufactory?

"We have the opportunity of seeing the latter plan carried into complete operation in the county of Lancaster. The great mass of the population there being engaged in the cotton manufacture, there is no difficulty in employing every prisoner at the loom; and every prison is like a large manufactory, carried on with great profit both to the public and to the prisoners.

"In the county gaol all are so employed, except those committed for trial. In the house of correction at Preston it is the same, and the cost of their subsistence is more than covered by their earnings. In the New Bailey house of correction at Manchester there have recently been accommodations made for four hundred looms. It would, perhaps, be difficult to establish this manufacture to the same extent in any other county; and there is scarcely any other mechanical labour which could be applied so universally or so profitably to all the inmates of a prison. This, therefore, presents the system of useful and profitable labour in the most favourable point of view. Let us consider the moral effects of this system in the reformation of offenders and the prevention of crime.

"Those prisoners who have resorted to acts of dishonesty for want of education and instruction in any honest calling, will undoubtedly be improved by being taught a useful trade. But this will chiefly apply to young delinquents, who are sentenced to a long imprisonment, during which they may have time both to be taught a trade, and also to acquire the habit of practising it. As to those who have been brought up in a business differing from that carried on in the gaol, they can derive little advantage from learning a new one; and those who follow at home the same trade to which they are sentenced in prison, will not feel much punishment in pursuing their ordinary occupation.

* "BLACKSTONE, vol. iv. p. 370."
† "Fourth Report of Committee, &c. p. 34."
‡ "Fourth Report, p. 34."

"A weaver in Lancashire, who prefers vicious idleness to work, and resorts to theft to furnish the means of gratifying his criminal inclinations, if he is detected, is committed to gaol, where he is maintained comfortably before his trial, without any labour at all. After conviction, he is ordered perhaps to hard labour for six months, during which time he is employed in weaving, to which he is accustomed. He is moreover obliged to be cleanly, temperate, and sober. These are restraints to which he would not have submitted at home; but which, by improving his health, make his life more agreeable: and he will probably confess that he is now a happier man than in the riot and debauchery which brought him to his present situation. These feelings cannot but produce moral improvement; and when his term of confinement is completed, he will probably leave the prison with resolutions of amendment—though without any horror of a gaol, or any dread of the punishment there inflicted. Under the control of authority, he has felt the advantage of industry and temperance; but when he returns to society, and meets with the temptations of vice, and the seductions of evil company, to which he has before yielded, his self-command may forsake him, and he will not be restrained from crime by any apprehension of being again sent to work at his business in the house of correction.

"Is this reasoning supported by the experience of that populous county?

"At Manchester, the Governor observes, with respect to the juvenile delinquents, that they returned repeatedly, at the rate of sixty per cent., or, in his own words, three in five. Upon which the Committee remark, 'that it would be most desirable that the stepping mill were here introduced as an excellent instrument of corrective discipline for a considerable part of the inmates of this house of correction.'*

"Until within these few years that this species of labour has been introduced, the enlarged system of manufacture carried on in the prisons of Lancashire was entitled to the highest praise. Without such a system, it was difficult to contrive employment for a number of prisoners; and the consequence was, that in very few prisons did employment exist. But since the introduction of the tread-mill, it has been very generally considered, with the exception of a few fastidious persons, a most valuable improvement in prison labour.

"There seem good reasons for establishing in prisons a kind of employment which is not pursued elsewhere, and for preferring irksome labour to reputable trades.

"Considering the pains that have been taken in the last fifty years, equally dictated by humanity and policy, to preserve the health of prisoners, it requires some contrivance to connect the idea of discomfort with a gaol, and, by making imprisonment disagreeable, to make it conducive to the prevention of crime.

"This object is attained to a great degree by the labour of the stepping wheel. It has been found highly favourable to health, the first object of prison discipline. It is nevertheless generally disagreeable. The unpleasantness, however, proceeds from its dulness rather than its severity. It is irksome, without furnishing a plea for any well-founded complaint. Without any oppression, or real hardship, it excites a strong dislike, and is more likely than any labour which has been hitherto adopted to operate beneficially in the diminution of crime.

"On hardened offenders there can be no doubt that the dull monotonous labour of the wheel, though neither severe nor exhausting, will have a more salutary effect in deterring from crime than occupation in any trade which is pursued by respectable persons in common life.

"It is also equally well adapted for short imprisonments, and punishment for petty offences. It can be applied immediately on the entrance of every prisoner into gaol, WITHOUT ANY DISTINCTION OF AGE OR STRENGTH, without any reference to his former calling, and without unfitting him for resuming his ordinary habits when restored to liberty. A prisoner sentenced to labour for only seven days, may be the whole of that time kept to work according to his sentence; whereas, if the employment of the prison be confined to some useful manufacture, it is not worth while to teach a prisoner whose term is short.

"It is well known, that a great number of individuals, committed for non-payment of penalties, disobedience of orders, misbehaviour in service, and other slight offences, to whom simple imprisonment held out no terrors, have made payment, submission, and amendment, rather than be subjected to the labour of the tread-wheel.

"Although for young culprits, who have committed serious offences, for which they have to undergo a long imprisonment, and who are ignorant of any bones: means of livelihood, it will be useful to institute a system of education combined with punishment, and to teach them some of the useful trades, which, after a certain period of instruction and practice, may make them valuable members of society; yet, for the punishment of old offenders, and for the employment of those whose terms of imprisonment are short, a system of peculiar irksome prison labour seems preferable to the establishment of any respectable or profitable manufacture."

After this consideration of the subject and this unqualified praise of the mill, MR. HEADLAM proceeds to argue on the propriety of applying it to prisoners committed for trial—a point which we have no inclination here to discuss. In allusion, however, to SIR JOHN COX HIPPESLEY, MR. HEADLAM says—

"As to its effect upon the health, an Honourable Baronet in a western county, supported by the authority of several gentlemen of considerable reputation in the medical world, has recently made a very serious and elaborate attack upon the labour of the tread-wheel, as likely, from its nature, to be productive of almost every disease to which the human frame is subject, and to exhibit, in the next generation, 'a 'comparatively enfeebled race, springing from the injured health and 'wasted limbs of many of those unfortunate beings who may be exposed to this impolitic discipline.' If this alarming denunciation were well founded, there would be an end of the question, and it would be clearly wrong to insist upon a kind of work which would endanger the health of so numerous a class of our countrymen, as unfortunately the inhabitants of prisons now compose.

"But these fatal prognostics are entirely at variance with experience on the subject. They have been completely answered in argument by a very active and intelligent magistrate of the North Riding of Yorkshire, in his Reply to the Statements of the Honourable Baronet;† and they have been answered in fact, by the communications received by yourself, Sir, in reply to your inquiries addressed to the visiting magistrates of every gaol in the kingdom where tread-mills have been erected. These official returns entirely negative the imputation that any evil consequences have arisen, or are likely to arise, from the kind of labour to which prisoners are subjected on the tread-wheel.

"We may safely therefore agree with the Committee of Prison Discipline, in their observation upon the house of correction at Northallerton, 'that one of the most pleasing and satisfactory circumstances attending the introduction of the stepping mill, is the effect 'which the regular labour it imposes, has upon the health of the pri-'soners.' 'Not a man,' (says the very respectable surgeon attending the prison) 'enters the prison, who does not now leave it in higher and 'firmer health on his liberation.'

"If it is thus conducive to the health of those who are employed upon it, it cannot exceed the measure of ordinary labour; otherwise, it would be injurious in its effects. It must be obvious on the slightest inspection, that the exertion required for this task is not nearly equal to the toil undergone by many honest labourers; and I have frequently asked prisoners so employed, whether it was harder work than they were accustomed to, and never yet heard any complain that it was more severe than their ordinary avocations.

"To those, therefore, who admit that prisoners before their trial ought to be made to work for their bread, the labour of the mill cannot be thought too severe; but still they think there is something degrading and disgraceful in its nature, which ought to be confined to the punishment of adjudged guilt.

"On reflection, however, it will appear, that the degradation does not arise from the nature of the work, but from the place and circumstances in which it is imposed; there is nothing unmanly in the exercise, and nothing that would be thought objectionable, if it were found expedient to employ the power of the stepping wheel in the machinery of any respectable manufacture.

"If we look back to the statute of CHARLES II. which directs a stock of materials to be provided for setting unruled prisoners to work, and inquire into the usual practice that prevailed under its authority, we shall find that it generally consisted in setting the prisoners to beat hemp.

"The statute of JAMES I. which directs that houses of correction shall be furnished with mills, and such like necessary implements for setting prisoners to work, does not specify whether such mills shall be put in motion by stepping upon them, or by turning them by a hand-crank; leaving the regulation of such matters where it should be left, to the discretion of magistrates.

"Can it be considered that either beating hemp, or turning a mill by hand, are, in ease or dignity, preferable to the mode of work now proposed? The real cause of disgrace is, that the work is carried on in a gaol, and that prisoners only are employed upon it."

The rest of the letter contains proposals for improvements in prisons, and a general assurance of the writer's confidence in the ability and humanity of MR. PEEL, that he will give the subject his attention and consideration.

We offer no opinion ourselves upon the use of the tread-mill, as applicable to males; but we still are unwilling, indeed as yet unable, to give up the dislike we have all along felt to the labour of women at its toils, and precisely upon the principle laid down by MR. HEADLAM himself while advocating the system: he says that the labour of the mill is not greater than any labouring man would undergo, were he not in prison. Surely the argument will not hold good as relates to women—we make our women our friends and companions—we do not make them our slaves; the crimes and vices of vicious women ought to be punished: but there is something repugnant to the feelings of an Englishman in the idea of torturing a woman; a man for instance, might horsewhip his groom for insolence, or kick his valet down stairs for impertinence, and he would be only amenable to the laws for an assault, but a man who used personal violence to the most absolute virago, the most insulting termagant upon earth, in the shape of his wife's waiting woman, would be scouted as a thing in human shape unworthy the name of man; the same corrections are not applicable to the two sexes, and we must hear better reasonings and stronger facts than we have yet met with to convince us of our error.

THEATRES.

THE dramatic Gog and Magog—Drury Lane and Covent Garden—commenced their operations on Wednesday night, arrayed in splendour and brilliancy quite unprecedented. How far this dazzling decoration of the audience part of theatres may be judicious, the public of course will best determine, but in our minds it is by no means advantageous to the performers or the performances.

Nothing can be more beautiful than the sparkling roses and thistles and shamrocks, the rich linings and trimmings, the lustres, the ceiling, and the draperies of Covent Garden, but the effect produced upon the scenery and characters in ROSINA, on Wednesday, was that of giving them the appearance of dinginess and chalkiness, and slovenliness, and even dirtiness and obscurity. The foreign theatres are differently arranged, and it is to foreign theatres that audiences go really to enjoy dramatic performances—what can be more plain, more quiet than the Francois?—not that we advocate a plainness almost amounting to negligence; we think a medium might be observed in the embellishments of playhouses, by an attention to which the audience might be furnished with every comfort and accommodation, and every reasonable display of taste, without absolutely throwing the scenes and the actors into the background, or rendering the imaginary splendour of factitious palaces on the stage inferior to that of the saloon in which they are exhibited.

The play at Covent Garden was "Much Ado about Nothing," which we had not the advantage of seeing, but we cannot withhold our earnest tribute of approbation from MR. CONNOR in the Irishman, in ROSINA, which left us nothing to wish, nothing to regret—MISS TREE was, as usual, delightful and delighting—but we lamented to see a young lady of the name of HALLANDE exposed in men's clothes to act WILLIAM, an absurdity the more disgusting, as it is perfectly needless. When the farce of ROSINA was written by MRS. BROOK, it was an object in such a piece to have the then powerful assistance of MRS. KENNEDY, whose voice was of a nature not suitable to female characters, and in order to avail herself of the deep tones of this then great favourite, the authoress appropriated to her the part of WILLIAM, as giving the desired opportunity of introducing her peculiar talent without a violation of probability—but MRS. KENNEDY is gone, the necessity for making a female play this part is over, and yet at all the London playhouses a lady is doomed to enact WILLIAM—there are plenty of male singers who would have sung the song and duet extremely well, and we should have been spared an exhibition extremely unpleasant to a large proportion of the audience, and, we hope, particularly disagreeable to the performer herself.

At Drury Lane, which is more splendid than the splendid, SHERIDAN'S "Rivals" was enacted, in which DOWTON performed SIR ANTHONY in admirable style; we might venture to say to this excellent actor moderate your extravagance a little—the confidence which an actor gains by a consciousness of his power over the audience sometimes carries him too far; we have seen LISTON, who dares do more than mortal man beside himself dare do in this way, go a little beyond the furthest limit which good taste should prescribe, and we perceived in DOWTON on Wednesday more of a certain sort of bye-play than is necessary, or indeed pleasantly effective—the present age is one of refinement, and great actors, like those of whom we are now speaking, should never give to an audience a representation of manners and habits in public which men of the rank and character they happen to be personating at the moment would neither attempt nor be permitted to adopt in private society.

Of ELLISTON, in CAPTAIN ABSOLUTE, we need not speak, and of a new performer in SIR LUCIUS O'TRIGGER we had rather be silent—MR. WALLACK'S FAULKLAND was very respectable—and MISS LYDIA KELLY in MISS LYDIA LANGUISH was extremely pleasing. GOD SAVE THE KING was sung with rapturous applause at both Theatres; but owing to the necessity we felt of seeing Covent Garden we are unable to give any account of a farce called "Stella and Leatherlungs," which appears not to have succeeded; a failure to be accounted for by the circumstance of its turning upon theatres and theatricals, actors, and cant playhouse-phrases, which, as we have said fifty times before, are perfectly unintelligible to two-thirds of the audience.

Neither house was filled, but Drury Lane had the majority.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR,—Will you afford me sufficient space in your columns to perform an act of justice to MISS PATON? Let it avail for as much as it is worth, and no more. I have the pleasure gratuitously to afford my services, as secretary, to a charitable institution founded not long since, which, however useful, is not yet known so generally as to promise advantage to any one from present unpaid-for exertions in its favour. MISS PATON was requested to sing at a concert in aid of the funds of our charity: she consented, without hesitation, at a very short notice; and, although she had just come from playing a fatiguing character at one of the winter theatres, and was immediately afterwards to sing at a private concert, on the evening of the performance, the frank and amiable manner in which she expressed the pleasure she felt at having it in her power to promote the cause of charity, and her willingness to render the assistance she then gave it, convinced the few managers of the institution who were present that she was sincere, and conveyed to them a highly favourable opinion of her disposition. Whether she is mistress of her own conduct, or is controuled by another, I do not pretend to know; but I think it my duty to state that which proves MISS PATON'S guide to be not always either ungrateful to the public or mercenary.—I am, Sir, your humble Servant,

A. B.

September, 1823.

THE KING.

On Wednesday his Majesty arrived at the Palace at Windsor, about four o'clock. At half past one, a quadron of the Royal Horse Guards went out to escort his Majesty from the Cottage, and about the same time the 7th Infantry Regiment of the Line, or Royal Fusiliers, marched into the outer Castle-yard, and were drawn up on both sides in rank and file order, ready to receive the Royal carriage as it approached with military honours. The remainder of the ground to the Castle gate and entrance was kept by the Blues, as well as the carriage road up to the entrance of the Long Walk. The Mayor and Corporation, and an immense concourse of persons assembled to meet his Majesty. In front of the procession was the band of the Horse Guards, after whom came the Charity Boys with wands in their hands, and headed by the proper municipal officers. In this order, with the band playing and colours flying, the people poured out of the town in the midst of a copious shower of rain which fell at the time. In the back rows, and on the outside of the gate, and thence up to the Castle, on either side, were carriages filled with ladies, and horsemen drawn up. Great inconvenience was experienced from the excessive wetness of the grass, upon which the Deputation had to stand for nearly an hour, during which time considerable anxiety was manifested with reference to his Majesty's arrival. At length a turn of the road, three miles off, brought the Royal party in view. Struggles rushed to their places; and the utmost order and silence immediately prevailed throughout the ranks. His Majesty, preceded and followed by the outriders and the Oxford Blues, advanced in his travelling-carriage at a quick pace till he neared the procession, when he graciously slackened his speed, in order to gratify his subjects with a better view of their Monarch. This act of condescension was acknowledged by unanimous acclamations, to the complete discomfiture of the military band, which at the same moment struck up the national anthem, although without a chance of being heard. The colours were lowered, as were also the white wands with which the heads of the front row were armed; his Majesty graciously bowing in answer to the loyal salutations with which he was on every side greeted. The same manifestations of affectionate devotion marked the Royal progress through the town. The windows and doorways were filled with the fair and the aged, and adventurous boys had climbed the chimney heights. Cambric handkerchiefs were seen floating in the air, and clapping of hands and huzzas resounded far and wide, whilst an immense crowd pressed on with their utmost speed in the rear, in the hope of intercepting another view of his Majesty's passage, by taking a shorter cut than by the horse road. His Majesty passed by the lower entrance, being the gate which leads to the Deanery. Upon his Majesty's entrance the Royal Standard was hoisted on the Round Tower. The Duke of Wellington was in the carriage with the King. In the carriage next following in Majesty was the Duke of York. During the evening bands of music paraded the town, and a splendid general illumination took place, which was favoured by an intermission of the rain. The illuminations consisted of a variety of appropriate devices, principally of the Royal Arms, the initials G. R., and emblems of the Crown. The company at the dinner of his Majesty consisted of the cortege which attended him and the usual royal inmates. We are happy to say his Majesty looked remarkably well, and in good spirits. On his arrival in the Castle a discharge of artillery took place at the Pyrotechnic Station in the Long Walk, and at eight o'clock a display of fire-works in the same place.

On Thursday, at twelve o'clock, the Mayor and a deputation proceeded to the Castle in three carriages, with a loyal Address from the inhabitants, which was most numerously signed. The deputation was received by the Marquis of Conyngham, who was appointed by His Majesty to receive the Address, which, consistently with the forms of the Monarchy, he could not do in person.

On the preceding evening an ox was roasted, which was distributed to the poor on the following day. Before twelve o'clock the whole length of High-street, from the entrance to the turning into the Castle-gate, was planted with tables on each side the carriage road, and in the wide part opposite the church another was placed, nearly in the centre. Neat cloths were spread continuously from one end to the other, and plates ranged on each side. To each plate was a small loaf, a head of celery, and a lettuce, with other vegetables here and there. On the tables were placed the dishes of cold meat and plum-puddings, which were to serve for the repast. These consisted of joints of beef, roast and boiled, and roast lamb, mutton, veal, and sliced ham; all of which seemed to be of the most superior quality. Barrels of porter were placed at stated distances, and persons stationed to supply the guests, to prevent any confusion. Stewards also, with blue and white ribbons, stood at the distance of a few yards from each other, all through the lines, and with a view to avoid delay, and give every facility to the consumption of the viands, all the joints were cut up by these persons. By one o'clock the whole congregation were seated, each individual having a knife and fork and small drinking mug; and at half past one, every thing being prepared, the signal was given by a discharge of cannon.

The gathering of the poor people upon this occasion, all attired in the most cleanly and neat manner, and combining the aged and youthful of both sexes, the greybeard and the infant, formed a really interesting spectacle. Each end of the feast was blocked up with carriages, many of which appeared to have travelled some distance, filled with elegant company. The vacant part of the carriage road and the pavement were filled with promenaders, amongst whom was a party from the Castle, consisting of the Marquis of Conyngham, Lord Fitzroy, Sir Edmund Nagle, and many other noblemen and persons of distinction, who were loudly cheered on their return. At the commencement of the feast the band of the Royal Fuzileers played "God save the King," and for some time, with the mayor at their head, paraded the street. They were at times relieved by the band of the Blues. The bells of the church, the front of which was crowded with spectators, at intervals rang a merry peal. Officers in uniform, with parties of ladies, joined in the promenade, to which they gave a very lively effect. His Majesty, it is understood, was highly gratified with the accounts brought to him about it. The order and regularity of the whole surpassed any thing of the kind we had ever witnessed. The shops were all shut up, and every thing bore the appearance of a general holiday. The repast was concluded by a little after two, when the wine was distributed, after which a round of nine cheers made the round of the tables, the band playing "God save the King;" and by half past three all appearance of the festival was broken up, excepting the holiday groupes and happy faces which were every where dispersed about the town. All persons gave themselves up to their avocations. At five o'clock a party of nearly 200 sat down, presided by the Mayor, to an excellent dinner in the Town Hall. The King's health was given with great effect, and drank with unbounded enthusiasm. In the evening the town was splendidly illuminated, as before, and fire-works were again let off.
