IN SIX EASY LESSONS OF ONE HOUR EACH.—MR. BRADBURY, Private Tutor at Westminster School, solicits the attention of Ladies and Gentlemen to his unrivalled and infallible system of beautiful PENMANSHIP, whereby he pledges himself to teach persons of all ages to write with ease, elegance, and expedition, (whatever may be the deformity of their present writing) in six progressive Lessons. This system, as it equally promotes the attainment of a bold and masculine hand calculated for business, and of a light and graceful manuscript adapted to Ladies, also secures to the Pupil the certainty of writing straight, without lines, with wonderful dispatch and accuracy, and, moreover, will steady the hand of the most tremulous writer. Upwards of 2000 specimens, and numerous recommendations from letters may be seen, also references given to persons of the first distinction, some of whom are upwards of 50 years of age. Private tuition at home. Ladies and Gentlemen attended at their own residences. A new and practical system of Short Hand, taught in a few lessons, so as to enable the writer to decipher what he has written with inconceivable ease.—Apply, (or direct, post paid) at the Academy, 404, Strand, near Charing Cross.

WRITING PAPER, cheap—and of the best quality, at lower prices than ever yet offered to the public.—Bath post 4½d. per quire pitto, 5d.; superfine 7d. 9d. 9d. 10d. and 1s. the quire, or by the ream, 6s. 9d. 7s. 9d. 10s. 6d. 12s. 13s. 6d. 15s. and 17s. 6d.; very best hot-pressed Bath gilt, 1s. the quire, or 20s. the ream, J. WHATMAN'S superfine wove writing post 8d. 9d. 10d. and 1s. the quire, or 12s. 13s. 6d. 15s. and 17s. the ream; superfine foolscap 1s. 1s. 2d. 1s. 3d. and 1s. 4d. a quire, or by the ream, 19s. 21s. 24s. and 26s.; very best bank post 10d. the quire, or 15s. the ream; large ditto, 1s. the quire, or 19s. the ream; best ruled thick post copy books, 5s. 6d. per dozen; foolscap ditto, 3s. 6d. per dozen; 12 sheet copying books, 14s. per dozen; 16 sheet ditto, 17s.; and 24 sheet do. 20s.; very best red sealing wax, 4s. 6d. the lb. SMITH'S, 192, Strand, Second House from the Crown and Anchor Tavern.

NEW INVENTED PATENT GUNS, to LOAD at the BREECH.—Noblemen and Gentlemen are respectfully invited to inspect the above invention, which, for safety, simplicity, and facility of loading, will be found superior to any production of the kind yet offered to the Public. By this invention, the rapidity of loading and firing a Fowling-piece or Rifle, is increased in the proportion of at least three to one. Manufactured by A. F. BIVEN, Gun maker, No. 16, Regent street, Waterloo place.

CONSOLATION to the TREMULOUS WRITER.—The Public may look to this most singular and unique Invention with confidence as an unestimable source of comfort to those who experience any difficulties in the command of the pen, occasioned by tremour in nervous affection, heat of climate, agitation of spirits, excess or over-exertion, weakness from age or otherwise, injury of the thumb or fingers by sprain or otherwise, even to the loss of part. This happy relief exists in a little INSTRUMENT, the appearance of which, when in use, escapes observation, is capable of giving firmness, confidence, and freedom, and cannot fail to assist the declining powers of a good penman, and materially improve the performance of a bad one. It is honoured by the patronage and recommendation of Sir Astley Cooper, and other highly respectable professional Gentlemen. A few minutes practice will prove its efficacy, and it has this advantage over all medicine, its power increases by use, and one prescription will last for life. Made in elastic gold, price 25s.; cased. Sold by the Patentee, by T. Pearce and Co. No. 268, facing the front of St. Clement's Church, Strand. Letters from any part of the country, post paid, will be promptly attended to.

ESSENCE OF CUBEBS, OR JAVA PEPPER.

DALE and MARSDEN beg to inform the Advocates and Takers of this highly recommended Drug, that they are the sole preparers of the above Essence, and that it cannot be procured in any other house in England. The above Preparation being freed from all the gross and inactive part of the Cubebs, renders it a far more efficacious and convenient medicine than the powdered Cubebs or any other preparation known. To show its high state of concentration, the medicinal part of one pound of Cubebs is contained in a half-pint bottle of the Essence.—Sold only by DALE and MARSDEN, 23, Holborn hill, London, in bottles, 5s. 6d., 10s. 6d., and 1l. each.

BURGESS'S ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES.—Warehouse, 170, Strand, corner of the Savoy-steps, London.—John Burgess and Son, being apprized of the numerous endeavours made by many persons to impose a spurious article for their make, feel it incumbent upon them to request the attention of the Public, in purchasing what they conceive to be the Original, to observe the Name and Address corresponds with the above: to the general appearance of the spurious descriptions will deceive the unwarded; and further, that John Burgess and Son submit the following cautions,—some are in appearance at first sight, "The Genuine," but without any name or address:—some "Burgess's Essence of Anchovies;"—others—"Burgess's,"—and many more without Address.

John Burgess and Son having been many years honoured with such distinguished approbation, feel every sentiment of respect towards the Public, and earnestly solicit them to inspect the Labels previous to their purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments.

BURGESS'S NEW SAUCE for general purposes, having given such great satisfaction, continues to be prepared by them, and is recommended as a most useful and convenient Sauce: will keep good in all climates.

Warehouse, 107, Strand, corner of the Savoy steps, London.—(The original Fish-sauce Warehouse.)

FEETHAM'S SHOWER BATH, by the KING'S PATENT, for adjusting the force or quantity of water as agreeable, and the shower is increased or diminished at pleasure by persons using the Bath, rendering it suitable to persons of delicate habits or constitutions, either as a medical or pleasure Bath; it is made very portable, or fitted up as an article of furniture in apartments. To be had at W. and M. Feetham's Stove and Bath Manufactory, 9, Ludgate hill, and 293, Oxford street, where a large assortment of Baths may be inspected, Warm and Vapour Baths fitted up on a new and improved principle of economy and convenience.

EASE and COMFORT in SHAVING.—To those Gentlemen who experience inconvenience in Shaving from a tender face or strong beard, J. T. RIGGE most particularly recommends his celebrated MAGNETIC RAZOR STROP, which, with its late improvement, he engages will produce so keen an edge as to answer well all grinding. Some of the first of the operation of shaving as easy and agreeable as it was before unpleasant and painful, its use is simple, its effect certain; price 7s. 6d. J. T. Rigge's Aromatic Shaving Soap will also be found an invaluable addition. Manufactory, 65 Chesnilds and 52, Park-street, Grosvenor-square.

CAUTION.—In consequence of the great disappointment many persons have experienced from purchasing Inferior Trusses, SALMON, ODY, and CO. most respectfully solicit the attention of Medical Gentlemen and the public to observe, that the true PATENT SELF-ADJUSTING TRUSS has "Salmon, Ody, and Co. 292, Strand, London," marked upon the leather case, without which they are of the spurious kind. Salmon, Ody, and Co. the inventors and patentees, have made upwards of 50,000 of their Patent Trusses, and still continue to have the recommendations of all the most eminent surgeons in town and country.—☞ Persons in the country are requested to send the circumference of the body an inch below the hips. Sold by one or more druggists in every principal town in the united kingdoms.

EVER ANXIOUS TO PREVENT IMPOSITION.

DAY and MARTIN respectfully inform the Public they have, after much labour and at very considerable expence, brought to perfection a Label of such singular construction and extreme difficulty of execution, that they trust will effectually prevent the many frauds that are daily practised on the Public. An attention to the following description of the Label will ensure the genuine Blacking prepared by them. A pattern of the Label like face of a pink colour covers the principal part, the names of Day and Martin are printed in white letters, edged with pink and black, and placed on a white ground. The address, 97, High Holborn, is also white letters edged with pink and black, but placed on the lace pattern, the signature and price at foot are black on a white ground, the preamble and directions for use are printed as before, black letters on white ground.

97, High Holborn, Sept. 1823.

THE GENUINE SYRUP OF DE VELNOS.

THE Depôt for this useful Spring and Autumn Alterative is No. 52, Berner's-street, Oxford-street, where it is prepared according to the Recipe of the late Mr. Swainson, entrusted to his Nephew and Successor, Mr. Thomas Canham, alone. Among all the Medicines of this denomination, the VEGETABLE SYRUP OF DE VELNOS has obtained a distinction which its efficacy alone can support. It corrects and purifies the blood; and those who are afflicted with scrofula, leprosy, scurvy, and many of those melancholy diseases arising from impurity of the blood and juices—those who suffer by diseased liver or from the indiscretions of their youth, or whose constitutions are broken down by mercurial, antimonial, or arsenic medicines—should submit to a course of the Vegetable Syrup. The effect of this Medicine is such as not to interrupt either business or pleasure, and requires only the common restraints of moderation in diet. It is conveyed by the circulating fluids, and corrects their tendencies to all those diseases which originate in vitiated blood. It is a safe though a powerful substitute for mercury, and removes those evils which an unsuccessful use of that mineral occasions. The Syrup is prepared and sold at the Proprietor's house, at 13s. a bottle; and, by his appointment, at Mr. Atkinson's, 195, Bishopsgate-street Without; and by Mr. Canham's Agents. In every considerable town of the United Kingdom; and the Concentrated for warm climates, by his deputed Agents in the East Indies—Messrs. Mackintosh and Co. Calcutta; and Messrs. Forbes and Co. Bombay.

DR. VAN BUTCHELL, Surgeon; Man-Midwife, Son, and Assistant, of the late Martin Van Butchell, recommended by persons of distinction (references are given with permission), continues to cure Fistulas, Piles, &c. by the improved method so long and successfully practised by his father, without Confinement, Cutting, Caustic, or Risk, for suitable Fees.—No. 43, South-street, Berkeley-square, London. At home till one daily. No remuneration required from persons of respectability, until they are satisfied a cure has been performed.

LATEST NEWS.

Paris papers down to Friday have arrived; they contain an account of the fall of Figueras.—Hamburgh papers also arrived yesterday to the 27th ult.; they contain an article dated Tripoli, Aug. 1, which says:—"A courier has arrived here from Bournou, in the interior of Africa, with the news of the arrival in that town of the intrepid English travellers. It is to be hoped that their adventurous undertaking to travel into those countries will be more fortunate than those of their predecessors."

The Moniteur of Thursday contains a long report from Gen. Guilleminot, respecting the taking of Fort St. Petri, dated 22d Sept. and the following despatch from Gen. Rottenbourg to the Minister of War, dated Perpignan, the 27th, announcing the surrender of Figueras:—

"My Lord,—I have the honour to inform your Excellency that I have this moment learnt that Figueras has capitulated. The garrison are prisoners of war. It is on the 29th that the troops of Baron Damas will take possession of it.—The necessary preparations for the siege of Urgel are carrying on with activity. Batteries are already erected against the place at three different points.—I am, &c.

"Baron ROTTENBOURG,

"The Lieut.-General commanding the Division of the East Pyrenees."

"The garrison of Figueras consisted of three thousand men. Llobera has issued from Tarragona with two thousand men, and is advancing to Lerida. Gen. Fromelin and Baron Eroles are pursuing him with a force sufficient to beat him. Milans has resumed the command of Tarragona."—Journal des Debats.

Berlin, Sept 23.—The grand autumn reviews are now ended, having continued nearly three weeks. His Majesty has signified his satisfaction to all the Commanders of Corps and Regiments.—Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Cumberland has returned from Carlsbad.

Friday afternoon, Sir Herbert Taylor held a Levee as Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief, at his Office in the Horse Guards.

Despatches were received on Friday from Commodore Sir Thomas Hardy, in South America.

On Friday His Majesty's steam packet the Arrow, Capt. Hamilton, came into Dover harbour from Calais, bringing her Royal Highness the Princess Augusta Sophia.

The Hon. Frederick Lamb, youngest son of Lord Viscount Melbourne, arrived in town last night, at twelve o'clock, from his Embassy at Frankfort.

Half-pay.—The payment of three months half-pay to the Reduced Officers of His Majesty's land forces, to the 24th ult. including those heretofore borne on the Irish Establishment, will commence on the 15th inst.

Yesterday, at Bow-street, an Irishman named Buckley was charged with committing a violent assault upon a poor deaf and dumb boy of the name of Smith. The assault complained of was committed in Bedford-square, about three o'clock on Friday. The poor lad, who was among a number of other boys, it appeared, by making too much noise, offended Buckley, who is servant to a Mr. Abrahams, and in a moment of great irritation he struck the complainant on the head with a hammer; the effects of the blow was such that the poor victim of his barbarity writhed under the agony, which he even endured in the office. The prisoner was held to bail to answer the charge at the sessions.

Rogers, alias Major Hepburn, who has appeared so often before the public in the papers, during his examinations upon a charge of defrauding various tradesmen of the metropolis, was brought up for a final examination, and the parties were all bound over to prosecute him. He said nothing in his defence.

Distressing Accident from Fire.—Yesterday afternoon, at three o'clock, an inquisition was taken before Mr. Shelton, the London Coroner, at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, on the body of Frances Girdle, a child aged 8 years. Elizabeth Terry deposed, that she lives next door to the deceased's parent, in Queen-square, near Finsbury-square; on Thursday last, about noon, her attention was arrested by a dreadful screaming, which seemed to come from the house where the deceased was; she went thither, and the first spectacle on opening the door was the deceased behind it, enveloped in flames; she instantly called other assistance and wrapped a blanket around her, which extinguished the flames, and she was then conveyed to the hospital with the flesh literally burnt off her face. The deceased's mother lives, and her father was gone to work in a black lead manufactory. In detailing the case, she said she was blowing the fire and the sparks flew out and caught her clothing.—Mr. Francis Kernaa, surgeon to the hospital, deposed he saw the child when brought in, and a worse spectacle from fire he had seldom seen; her face, chest, and arms were almost destroyed; she died in an agonizing condition on Friday.—Verdict, "Accidental ye burnt to death."

An interesting publication, entitled "The Gleaner," containing amusement and information, has been for some time before the public. We have no room for extracts, but as it is a work calculated to encourage morality, we do not hesitate to recommend it to our readers.

EDWARDS' LITERAL PROSE VERSION OF THE ANCIENT GREEK DRAMA,

With the Original Greek, the Metres, the Greek order, the English Accentuation and notes, elegantly printed in 8vo. price 8s. each part,

THE PROMETHEUS VINCTUS of ÆSCHYLUS, with Blomfield's Text, is just published, together with the second edition of the MEDEA and HECUBA, revised and improved. The HECUBA and PHŒNISSÆ of EURIPIDES, with Porson's Text, are already published. The ORESTES will be ready next month. The Bishop of St. David's, in his late Work, on the Greek Original of the New Testament, asserted (p. 37.) after quoting from the Hecuba, thus speaks, in allusion to the above translations:—

"Edwards' Translation of the Hecuba of Euripides, which I quote for the sake of noticing the meritorious industry of a work, (The Literal English Translation of a Series of Greek Plays,) which may be extremely useful to self taught learners, especially to self studiorum, and to others who may wish to repair their Lost Greek."

The remaining plays of Euripides, Æschylus, &c., are all in the press, together with a Literal Prose Version of Homer, and also of Virgil, upon the same plan, the first parts of which are forthcoming with all possible expedition. Edited by T. W. C. EDWARDS, M.A. Orders received by the publisher, M. Iley, 1, Somerset-street, Portman square, and by all other booksellers.

HEATHER on the PRESENT STATE of PIANO FORTE STUDY.—Just published, by H. Falkner, 3, Old Bond street, a new edition of the above Work, price 1s. 6d.

"Mr Heather sets out with a preface, which, we confess, strongly biassed us in his favour; it is not only well and sensibly written, but it also shews that the author thinks and feels rightly on the subject of which he treats. We regret that our limits prevent us from giving an extract of his judicious observations on practice, expression, &c.; they are eminently worthy of the serious attention of every Pupil that wishes to be a proficient in the art. In the work itself we met with many occasional remarks, which equally shewed the author's good sense, the justness of his views, and, we may add, considerable experience in the art of instruction."—Vide Musical Review.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, Oct. 6.—The following telegraphic despatch has been received:—

"Le Duc d'Angoulême, &c.—Le Roi me mande qu'il est libre, et qu'il se rendra au Porte Sainte-Marie quand je le voudrai; j'espère qu'il y sera domain."—(The King informs me that he is free, and that he will repair to Port St. Mary when I choose; I hope that he will be there to-morrow.)

The second telegraphic despatch is as follows:—

PORT ST. MARY, SEPT. 29. HALF-PAST SIX IN THE EVENING.—The Duke of Angoulême to the President of the Council of Ministers:—"The negociations are broken off; hostilities will re-commence to-morrow at break of day."

OCT. 8.—TELEGRAPHIC DESPATCH.—"The Duke of Angoulême announces that the King of Spain and the Royal Family arrived at Port St. Mary's on the 1st of October, at eleven o'clock in the morning."

FROM THE MONITEUR, OCT. 7.—OFFICIAL PART.

ARMY OF THE PYRENEES.—FOURTH CORPS.—Report of the Duke de Conegliano to his Excellency the Minister of War, dated Mataro, September 30:—"My Lord—The allied troops have taken possession of the Fort San Fernando de Figueras. The garrison, prisoners of war, has been sent to France. I have the honour to transmit to your Excellency a list of the French and Spanish Officers and Soldiers whom the Baron de Damas notices as having particularly distinguished themselves in the actions of Lhoda and Lhers.

(Signed) "Le Marechal Duc de Conegliano, MONCEY."

The Moniteur contains the following, which has been addressed to the Ambassadors of the Maritime Powers:—"I have the honour to announce to your Excellency, that the Government of the King has given orders to raise the blockade of the Spanish ports of Corunna, St. Sebastian, and Santona, which have surrendered. Neutral vessels will be admitted without difficulty.

(Signed) "CHATEAUBRIAND."

The Duke de Bourbon has met with another painful accident from a fall in hunting at his country seat at Chantilly, near Paris. Two or three years ago this Prince was dangerously hurt from a similar cause. On the present occasion his horse fell with him, and broke the Duke's thigh.

The following are extracts from our letters from Port St. Mary of the 28th and 29th Sept.:—"It is certain that Count Corries has carried a letter from the King to his Royal Highness, in which his Majesty considered himself so sure of his liberty, that he begged the Prince to state by what route he should go to meet him at his head-quarters. His Royal Highness had already answered, that the shortest way was to cross the bay, and disembark at Port St. Mary's."

SEPT. 29.—We are now returned to Port St. Mary. Since nine o'clock this morning, the whole of the day we were in expectation of seeing the King arrive: the Spaniards abandoned themselves to the greatest joy. At a quarter of an hour after 12 o'clock we saw coming into the port a ship with a flag of truce, sent from Cadiz; all the population, both French and Spanish, ran towards the port; they thought it was the King, but only Alava and Count Torres landed. Our soldiers were furious because they were not permitted to attack the Island of Leon yesterday, and on coming to assist the landing of the flag of truce, cried out, "Where is the King? The King or the assault!" Never was an army seen that displayed more enthusiasm. His Royal Highness would not receive this new envoy, and we set off again for Chiclana.—His Royal Highness arrived here at nine o'clock in the morning, with all his Staff. Yesterday he run the greatest danger: his Highness entered in one of the trenches which were open on the side of the bay of Santi Petri; the enemy perceiving him with a numerous staff, immediately fired a shower of ball and grape-shot. A ball passed over his Highness's head, as he was traversing the parapet of sand.

The Paris paper, L'Etoile, of Wednesday has the following:—"The Cortes held a Secret Sitting, in which were only discussed the means of coming to an understanding with the Government as to the safety of the compromised individuals. A public sitting immediately succeeded this, in which a message to the King was decreed, supplicating him to deign to open negociations with the French General on whatever terms he should judge proper. The King replied, that he could not enter into any negociation. Then followed a second Meeting of the Cortes, and a second message to the King. The same answer was given to this. There was a third Meeting. On this occasion there were present but five Deputies; the rest were concealed, or were wandering about, peradventure searching the means of flying. The most complete anarchy was soon established; however no violence was committed. At length, the five Members, composing all the Cortes, and the Ministers, accompanied by some officers of State, go to the King; they rely upon the clemency of his Majesty; they declare to him that he is re-established in the integrity of his Royal power, and conjure him to write to the Prince Generalissimo of the French armies. The Count de Corries immediately repaired with a letter from the King. It was observed that on the morning of the 8th the militia of Madrid had put off their uniforms, and were covered with riding coats, that they should not be known."

MANZANARES, Sept. 26.—Riego entered our walls this morning, under a strong escort. An immense number of persons had assembled even the night before to see the author of so many evils in Spain pass along. As soon as he appeared, a hundred thousand voices exclaimed:—"Death to the traitor Riego!" He was conducted to a dungeon, where he will pass the night, and to-morrow, the 27th, he will continue his journey to Madrid, where he will arrive within three days.

MADRID, Oct. 3.—(By an Extraordinary Courier.)—The attention of all the inhabitants of this capital, incessantly directed towards Cadiz, was diverted for an instant yesterday by the arrival of the too famous Riego within our walls. So early as half-past five in the morning, extraordinary shouting announced the appearance of the hero of the Tragala; and in the midst of an escort of the Royal Volunteers of Arguillos, to which was joined a de achment of Spanish troops, and some French soldiers, advanced a cart, upon which was seated the author of all our disasters. The escort entered by the gate of San Bernandino, where he was delivered to the guard of the Count de Torre-Alta. All the adjacent streets were immediately occupied by detachments of infantry, and were patrolled by parties of cavalry, which did not permit any person to approach the prison. One of our Journals observes, on this subject, that if the Constitutionalists had timely assassinated the Canon Vinuesa, whilst in chains, it is only the stronger motive for the Royalists to display their superior moral principles, by leaving to justice the task of punishing the guilty. Towards evening beds were prepared for the four prisoners. Riego told the keeper of the prison that he expected to be treated as a General. "What!" replied the gaoler, "you a General! Do not you know that every thing is now on the same footing on which it was before the 7th of March of 1820. Do you think that we will acknowledge you the price of your treason? It has been decided that Riego will be treated as a simple officer; for the same time impressing upon him the fact that this was an act of pure generosity on the part of the Royalists." He went to bed without saying more.

CHICLANA, Sept. 28.—His Royal Highness arrived this morning to inspect the advanced posts. During a reconnoitring of the Isle of Leon, when a grape shot from the enemy's bank fell close to his Royal Highness, who was covered with dust, "Monseigneur," exclaimed General de Bethizi, "suppose your Royal Highness had been struck."—"I should have died in good company," said the Prince with the most perfect indifference; and his Royal Highness continued his line of inspection, amidst the acclamations of the army.—All on the sudden, our hostile preparations were exchanged for pacific dispositions. To-day, on going from Mass, the Duke of Angoulême received a letter from the King of Spain, brought by this gentleman, who had arrived at Port St. Mary. In this letter the King informed the Prince—That he was at liberty; that the Cortes was dissolved; and that he "That he was at liberty; that the Cortes was dissolved; and that he intended to know his Royal Highness's dispositions, having an intention wished to know his Royal Highness's dispositions, having an intention to land at Port St. Mary. He added, that he had promised not to pursue any one on account of political opinions—but nothing more; and that he should not engage in the affairs of Government till after his return to Madrid."—His Royal Highness will return to Port St. Mary at four o'clock to-morrow morning. Orders have been given throughout the line to desist from firing.

BAYONNE, Sept. 30.—We learn from Madrid that the Regency has issued a Decree, prohibiting the Journals from publishing any news even official, till it has appeared in the Gazette of Madrid. Madrid appears calm, but there are many discontented persons. The arrests continue; they are explained by the facility with which the arrested get out of prison, on payment of a sum, larger or smaller according to circumstances, but never less than 1000 reals.—There is a report of an extraordinary sitting of the Cortes, in which the question of removing the King and the Royal Family was discussed; it is said that it was proposed to send him to the Canaries, and that another proposal was to send him to Barcelona.—Quiroga has taken the command of some battalions which have vowed to devote themselves to death rather than surrender. At Madrid, however, the belief of an amicable arrangement, and a speedy termination of the war, still prevails, for orders have been given for the departure of his Majesty 's equipages for Seville.

Lisbon papers to the 23d ult. are principally occupied with details of the ceremony of conferring the Order of St. Michael and St. Esprit on the King of Portugal and Don Miguel, which has been sent by the King of France. On this occasion, M. Hyde de Neuville, the French Ambassador, on the 19th ult. delivered the letter of his Sovereign; and then addressed his Majesty in a speech of considerable length, in which he stated, that the greatest Princes of Christendom were Knights of the Order of the Holy Ghost. The herald at arms then presented to his Majesty the insignia of the Order. The same ceremony was then observed towards the Prince Marshal. A flight of rockets and salutes of artillery announced the conclusion of the ceremony: a splendid dinner, at which Count Palmella presided, was given to the French Embassy, and the other members of the diplomatic body.

It appears that since the Abbé de la Mennais has given up writing in the Drapeau Blanc, the responsible Editor will no longer be answerable for the faults of his former associate. He offers M. de la Mennais a fine opportunity of proving that the late reclamations he made to be brought before the Court were not a mere display. The Drapeau Blanc contains the following passage:—"The responsible Editor of the Drapeau Blanc has just been informed of the sentence pronounced against him by defaut, in consequence of the letter addressed by the Abbé de la Mennais to the Grand Master of the University, and inserted in this journal on August 22d last. We wish to believe that M. de la Mennais has not given up a cause that is still his own, and that he will use with the Cour Royale his right of personal intervention, which he could not exercise before the tribunal of Correctional Police."

ROME, SEPT. 17.—The Ex-emperor Iturbide is now at Pisa; it is thought that he will settle himself at Rome. It is said that he has brought considerable riches with him. His suite is very numerous. The Cardinal Albani has been appointed Ambassador to the Conclave by the Emperor of Austria.

NAPLES, Sept. 16.—The High Tribunal of the hithermost Principality has just condemned to death Antoine Giannone, of Naples; Joan, of Orta, Clement Prota, of Salerno; Frederic Cimino, of Monteperoso; and Felix Tafuri; found guilty of being members of the Carbonari, and of having worn the tri-coloured cockade on the 17th June, 1820, and of having conspired against the Government. The Court declared them excluded from the amnesty of the 28th Sept. 1822, and they were executed on the 12th inst.

TRIESTE, Sept. 19.—On the 16th, a ship arrived here in 16 days from Calamata, in the Morea. It brought the news that the Capitan Pacha, with his whole fleet, had left the bay of Patras on the 30th Aug. and sailed towards the Archipelago. The captain says there is a contagious disorder on board his fleet. The garrison of Patras, however, is provided with every necessary for a long time. The private letters which the captain has brought from Tripolizza and Napoli di Romana say, "that the campaign of the Turks, as far as concerns the object of conquering the Morea, has entirely failed for this year."

BERLIN, SEPT. 23.—Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Cumberland has arrived here. Among the splendid entertainments given, in consequence of the great number of officers and strangers of distinction collected here, on account of the autumn reviews, one of the most distinguished was, that given by the Duke of Cumberland, in the great saloon of the Royal Theatre, to which several hundred persons of the first rank were invited. The King, our Sovereign, the Princes of his Family, and the Duke of Cambridge, &c. were present. The reviews being now over, all the Generals who came to be present have returned to their commands.

FRANKFORT, SEPT. 29.—Her Royal Highness the Princess Louisa of Prussia is destined in marriage to the young Duke of Brunswick. The Princess is 15 years of age—her future consort 19.

PETERSBURGH, Sept. 12.—Many persons well informed entertain a hope that the meeting of the Emperors, at Czernowitz, will be followed by results favourable to the Greeks. Lord Strangford is to repair to Czernowitz, to agree on the definitive declaration made in the name of these Powers, and on the principles on which they will negociate with the Turks.

Letters from Genoa, dated the 25th ult. state, that a vessel under the Russian flag, with grain from Constantinople, had been detained by the Spanish privateers.

Accounts from Canton state, that although that place has in a great measure recovered the effects of the late conflagration, the commerce of the place was at an entire stand, and confidence destroyed on account of failures there. Another Hong was also on the point of failing, and the situation of the mercantile interests was very unfavourable.

Letters from Aleppo, of the 4th July, have been received at Smyrna; in which it is said, "the earthquakes have not yet ceased, but the shocks return only at long intervals, and are but slight. What, however, still keeps us uneasy is, that violent shocks continue to be frequently felt about Antioch and Alexandretta. The Porte has sent hither a Capidgi Baschi, to take possession of the property of the victims of the catastrophe, who have left no heirs."

SYDNEY, APRIL 3.—"Captain Edwardson, of the Snapper, brings from New Zealand two Chiefs, one of whom is accompanied by his wife. One of them is a youth of about 16, and the other is 30 years old. The name of the latter is James Caddel, an Englishman by birth, and whose history is briefly as follows:—In 1807, or thereabouts, the ship Sydney Cove, a sealer, out of this port, was cruizing off the Bay of islands, and had either stationed or dispatched a boat's crew, consisting of five hands, and a boy (James Caddel, the present chief), to one of the islands, in quest of seals. The boat was taken by the savages in the vicinity of the Southern Cape, and the hapless men, with the exception of Caddel, were killed and eaten. Fortunately, in the flight, the boy flew to an old chief for mercy, and happened to touch his ku-hah-hom (the outward mat of the Chief,) and thus his life became preserved, as his person was then held sacred. Being in too distant a part of New Zealand to indulge the hope of hastily escaping from a wretched captivity, Caddel became resigned to his apparent destiny, and insensibly adopted the manners and customs of the natives. About nine years since he was allied to a Chief's daughter, who is also sister to a Chief: and, by this two-fold tie, he became a Prince of no small influence among such subjects as those barbarous despots are destined in the present constitution of things to have the controul of. Caddel lost his own language, as well as European customs, and soon became transformed from the English sailor-boy into the dauntless and terrifying New Zealand Chief. It required some argumentation to induce him to visit New South Wales; and he would not come without his partner, to whom he appears to be tenderly attached."

THE NEW AFRICAN TRIBE.

Cape Town Gazettes, to the 26th of July, have arrived, and we extract the following interesting article respecting the or Savage Nation, whose apparent hostile approach to the Settlements has excited a considerable alarm in the On the 24th of July the Royal Commissioners empowered Esq. and M. Sir Caledron Bas to inquire into the administration, &c. of the Cape of Good Hope and tions, and the Island of Ceylon was undertaken the presence cellency the Governor, in the Hall of the Court House Town. The Gazette of the 29th contains a comparative the Exports from the Cape for the years 1821 and 1822, satisfactory evidence of the rapid progress of the Colo mercial prosperity.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CAPE TOWN GAZETTE.

SIR—Many surmises and reports having gone abroad prejudicial nation now approaching the frontiers of this Colony, and especially to the alarm of the good people of Cape Town and its think it my duty to give you the best account I am in possession specting these strangers, particularly as I have been so called upon for explanation; therefore, by your insertion of ing statement, you will much oblige, Sir, yours, obedient,

Cape Town, July 22, 1823. GEORGE THOM

"The 'Mantutees,' the invaders, are so called by the B and the other tribes to the north and east. This name, we are led to suppose, means Portuguese. This supposition sonable:—the nations in the vicinity of Lattakoo, (properly T are aware that the Portuguese have settlements on the that they are white;—they now see white people appear that quarter, when they naturally conclude that they are tuguese.

"Through the assistance of Mr. Moffat (who has taken to ascertain the truth, with regard to these invaders) and long tribes, resident to the north east of Lattakoo, but now I was enabled to collect much information, from which suppose, that the white people alluded to in last week's descendants of the crew of the Grosvenor Indiaman, wrecked forty years ago. In this conclusion I have been assured following circumstance:—When the expedition under Messrs Reenen and others) arrived at the wreck of the Grosvenor, the descendants of her crew, together with three European melancholy to relate, these three unfortunate individuals their country and their native language), they immediately great rejoicing, saying, 'Our fathers and countrymen are Now, the present invaders have been told by the Bechuanas they approach the South, they will meet with a powerful people, that will soon destroy them. To this they reply, people are our fathers, our countrymen; they will come to they will supply our wants; they will give us sheep and cattle. This coincides very much with the people found in the vicinity of the wreck of the Grosvenor. Through the same information enabled to trace the Mantatees to the place where they first menced hostilities, viz. upon the Lehayos, a nation to the west of Delagoa Bay, making the place they have left Hambona, near the Grosvenor was wrecked. Likewise, we have an account the Caffre country, in corroboration of this fact:—three individuals were taken some time back in the Sanka, from whom it appears a strange nation were approaching this colony, under a leader the white people were their fathers, &c. and were then marching westward, when they were repulsed by their neighbours the Bechuanas nearly 18 months ago. It was after this defeat that the Mantatees left their country for good, proceeding nearly due north, and fell upon the Lehayos, as already mentioned, the Mancazeers, Mosesans, and several other tribes, carrying all before them, until they reached the Wankeets' country, about lat. 24. 30. S. long. 27. 30. E. where King Maccabba—this powerful and wary chief no doubt considering the (the Mantatees) in his dominions than he promised they should be, and sent them a good supply of cattle, &c.; but this only served to delude these poor unfortunate wanderers, for the same country, the invaders had finished a bountiful regale, and were now at rest, unconscious of danger, in the deep slumbers of night, Macabba and all his forces, fell upon them and routed them in a dreadful manner. Being thus repulsed they fled southward, and having agitated all their forces, they attacked several tribes, with their wonted cruelty, laying waste the Moorotzes, Borolons, Tamahas, or Red Caffres, who are now approaching the Bechuana country, having the Rock King a prisoner, and a guide by compulsion. And, as stated in last week's Gazette, it is their intention to approach the south.

"The Bechuanas were, previous to my leaving, joined by the Griquas, who will no doubt astonish the invaders, being mounted on horses, with muskets. In all probability, they will be as much surprised as the Peruvians were when the Spaniards first appeared in their country. The Bechuanas fight with poisoned arrows. This expedition will be accompanied by Messrs. Moffat and Melville, who are eager to unravel the history of these curious strangers, and devoutly to be wished; for who knows how near we are connected by the ties of countrymen to these people. They seem to have no plan for retreat, nor do they seem to be aware of the consequences of plundering; they never attack when the property is procured; they express their astonishment at being attacked, seem to suppose that they must be supplied with provisions gratis by an unknown journey. When attacked, they fight furiously, rushing on, sword in hand, with great courage. Sometimes they are driven on by the keenest stimulant, viz. hunger. It is then that they fight like the hungry Hyena, fighting with one hand, and devouring with the other. They are Cannibals, I fear; but this is through necessity. How often are Europeans driven to this dreadful resource, companion devouring companion. The nations they have latterly approached have generally fled, leaving nothing behind them for subsistence of the invaders. It is on such occasions, no doubt, under a strong desire for food, the slain are only devoured: but that the prisoners meet a better fate, not having ascertained that a had been killed after the engagement. From these circumstances I am led to suppose, that the Mantatees, or Invaders, are composed of different nations, part the descendants of the before-mentioned, and these having the tradition respecting their Fathers, have set out with the intention of finding them, like Telemachus in quest of Ulysses, but very inconsiderately, with their wives and children, and in company of a host of savages.

"It is very probable, that the revolution in the vicinity of Delagoa Bay, mentioned by Captain Owen, is caused by the same people—may shortly expect to hear their further history from Messrs. Moffat and Melville, who, I am well aware, will spare no pains to effect that object."

IRELAND.

Thursday se'nnight, about five o'clock, the schooner Thomas, Clements master, bound to Belfast, with a cargo of coals, while near Carrickfergus Bay, near mid-channel, and about two miles from shore, under a heavy press of sail, was suddenly thrown by a squall on her beam ends, and immediately sank. At the time of the accident there were on board the captain, Mrs. Clements (the captain's wife), the mate, and a female passenger, with two children—all of whom, except the captain, perished.

A man named Hyland, charged a female called Dame Margaret Fitzpatrick, with a violent assault. The accused was a singular being, she appeared at the Magistrates office somewhat in the garb of Walter Scott's Meg Merrities; on one foot was a buskin, on the other a shoe—the remains of a Leghorn bonnet scarcely protected her head, and matted locks from the weather; her countenance, although severous, was full of a peculiar expression, and she was wrapped in a remnant of a cassock, attached to what once was a military jacket. On her ample shoulders and chest, she threw a naples blanket; resting her arm on the table before the Magistrate, and frowning, said, "May it please your Lordship, the villain gave unto me the first blow, and I submit it to your Lordship, that that is death by the law of Ireland!!" His Worship did not quite agree in that opinion. She looked vexed, and drawing herself up, said, "Hyland knows I am a mistress of every house in the Fern-court he lives in." Hyland affected an exclamation of astonishment at this announcement of her professions, and gave her a flat denial: she appeared quite exasperated, cried, clapping her hands on her hips, "Hyland, Hyland, do you knowest, as well as all the officers here and his Lordship, that I am thy mistress, and the Queen of England and Scotland!!" The affair was now rendered quite clear, the unhappy female was humanely taken care of by order of the magistrate, and sent to the Lock Asylum.

GUILDHALL.—On Wednesday, John Williams was charged with fe... ...ny. The prisoner boldly walked into the Oxford Bible Warehouse, ...Paternoster-row, and seizing a large bundle, which contained up... ...wards of 50 pairs of stockings, the property of a gentleman temporarily ... ...residing there, was making off with it, when the porter, who caught ... ...a glimpse of him as he was quitting the passage, followed and secured ... ...him. The prisoner said he had picked the bundle up in the street.—... ...Committed.

On Tuesday, A. Rogeson, a black man, well known in the neighbour... ...hood of Fleet-street, where he has resided for some years as a teacher of ... ...sing and pugilism, was charged on suspicion of setting fire to cer... ...tain premises, No. 76, Fleet-street.—The landlord of the premises ... ...stated, that they were let in distinct suites of apartments, and that the ... ...lower occupied one large room on the ground floor, as an academy ... ...receiving his pupils; and occasionally, but very rarely, has slept ... ...there. On Monday night the premises were discovered on fire. Ro... ...geson was not then within, but the door was forcibly burst open, when ... ...he discovered that a quantity of coals were alight, and blazing, were ... ...lying against the partition. From the quantity of the coals, the ... ...time in which they were piled up, and the distance from the grate, ...(about at least 18 or 20 feet from the partition, they could not have ... ...taken fire by accident.—During the bustle that this alarm occasioned, ...in the Court and in Fleet street, Rogeson never made his ap... ...pearance near the premises; but was taken into custody shortly after... ...wards, sauntering about on the opposite side of the way in Fleet-... ...street, all waiting the issue.—He was remanded.

On Thursday a further examination of Rogeson took place, and a ... ...number of witnesses were examined. One witness, speaking of ... ...Rogeson's conduct just before the fire, said—I stood on the stairs, ...saw him go out with a woman between seven and eight o'clock; ... ...I was talking very loud, and I heard him say—"This house has been ... ...set on fire, and they say by accident, but I think it was done on pur... ...pose." This witness, and two others, spoke to ... ...the repeated almost perpetual annoyances the prisoner received ... ...from the printers' boys, and to conversations and observations by ... ...Rogeson leading to shew their disposition towards him; one of them ... ...was heard to say, that he would attend at the Guildhall, and give ... ...evidence, for that he should like to see him tucked up.—Mr. ... ...Wilkinson, Solicitor, of Clement's Inn, said he had known the prisoner ... ...for years. Mary Stanger.—Wednesday, Mary M'Carthy, an Irishwoman, was ... ...charged with illegally pawning various articles of wearing apparel, ...linen, &c. the property of a lady named Richardson, resident at ... ...Oxford-street, Blackfriars-road. A female servant of the prose... ...cutrix deposed, and from her evidence it appeared that the prisoner ... ...had been in the habit of coming to her mistress's house to chac, &c. and she ... ...had actually allowed her one day during the absence of her mistress to ... ...carry a bundle to her on the return of Mrs. Richardson the day following that ... ...on which the property alleged to have been stolen. It further came ... ...out that the artful Irishwoman had placed some of the things in the ... ...servant's box, with intent thereby to implicate her in the robbery, ...but Mrs. Richardson was through illness unable to attend, but sent a ... ...letter to the Magistrate describing the female servant as a very good ... ...girl, declining to prosecute the other.—The Magistrate said, that ... ...there was reason to believe the girl a bad one, but most certainly ... ...a very imprudent one, and did wrong in admitting any person ... ...to the house during her mistress's absence, and he was compelled ... ...to commit the prisoner for one week, during which period the inten... ...ded Mrs. Richardson might attend.—Remanded for one week.

Bow-street.—On Thursday, Mary Steele was charged by a ... ...gentleman, with robbing him of six sovereigns. The gentleman ... ...stated that on Saturday six weeks, he went into a public-house in the ... ...neighbourhood of Finsbury-square, where he drank three glass of ... ...liquor, and after he had changed a sovereign and left that house, ...he felt in his left waistcoat pocket, and the silver he received in ... ...it in another pocket. On his passing the corner of Brick-lane ... ...Spitalfields-street, Wentworth-street, the prisoner accompanied by ... ...two other females, was standing there, and she prevailed upon him to ... ...accompany her, during which time she took the six sovereigns. The Magistrate, conceiving the evidence not sufficient to send her before a Jury, committed her to the House of Correction for three months.

MARLBOROUGH-STREET.—Thursday. Wm. Clarke was charged on the suspicion of having committed the following robbery.—John Colthorp, a farmer at Saxmundham, stated, that on Wednesday afternoon he arrived in town upon some business, and went to sleep for that night at a lodging-house in Queen-street, Seven Dials, kept by a man named Hagan. He was shewn into a bed-room by himself, in which he was locked up for the night, according to the practice of the house, without recollecting to pay for their beds. Here the complainant slept very soundly until nine o'clock in the morning, when on getting up he found the door open, and his coat, waistcoat, pantaloons, shoes, and hat, together with 15 sovereigns, 17s. in silver, and a draft on the banking house of Messrs. Child, for 50l. had been carried off. On the enquiry being made of Hagan, the landlord, he said that the robbery could only have been committed by one of two persons, the prisoner at the bar and an Irish bricklayer, both of whom were regular lodgers in the house, and not being locked in as the others, are the only persons who could have access to the complainant's room, and as for the bricklayer, Hagan said he would trust him with untold gold. But what made the suspicion much stronger against the prisoner was, as the bricklayer stated, both of whom slept in the same room, that about six o'clock that morning the prisoner got up and went out of the house. He was absent for an hour and a half, and then returned and again went to bed; so that when the alarm was given he was found in his room.—The prisoner was remanded. The complainant appeared at the office in a most pitiable plight, having nothing on but his shirt, a pair of thin drawers, and a pair of slippers, and wrapped up in a borrowed hackney coachman's box coat; he had no hat, nor a farthing of money left.

Two respectable tradesmen, who had been locked up all night, in the dark-hole of Marylebone watch-house, were brought up on Thursday morning before the resident Magistrate, for examination on a charge of being disorderly. Barrell, a watchman, read from the watch-house book the following charge:—"I, Barrell, charges Mr. J. Newbank and Mr. Moffatt with being disorderly, at half-past ten o'clock last night." Mr. Newbank is proprietor of several Paddington stages, and Mr. Moffatt keeps a livery-stable in the neighbourhood where the alleged offence took place. The watchman then stated that the defendants and two other gentlemen were standing at the corner of Winchester-street, Edgware-road, shouting so as to rouse the peaceful inhabitants from their slumbers. He desired them to move on, but they did not attend to him, and continued talking very loudly. Finding they would not go off his beat, he sprang his rattle, when Moffatt endeavoured to take his stick from him, but failed in the attempt, and they were finally lodged in the watch-house.

Magistrate—Were they drunk?

Watchman—Mr. Newbank was quite sober, but I think Mr. Moffatt was rather mooney, but I would not undertake to swear that.

Magistrate—What do you charge them with?—Shouting, your Worship. That is making an unusual disturbance, I suppose, said the Magistrate. It is, rejoined Barrell.

Mr. Newbank said that himself, Mr. Moffatt, and two other neighbours had been taking a bottle of wine, and were returning home perfectly sober, when at the corner of Winchester-row they stopped to part, Mr. Moffatt having to go down there on his way home; they were about three minutes talking on matters of business, when the watchman came up, and in an authoritative tone, ordered them to go on or he would take them a night's lodging, and, so saying, sprang his rattle; they were immediately surrounded by watchmen and dragged to the watch-house. He concluded by assuring the Magistrate that both himself and his friends were perfectly sober.

Magistrate—You and your friend must find bail.

Mr. Newbank—Very well, I am glad of it; we shall then, I hope, be able to turn the tables upon our accusers.—Mr. Newbank and Mr. Moffatt then entered into the required sureties, and were liberated.

MANSION-HOUSE.—Thursday, the Lord Mayor was occupied in the investigation of a charge against a stablekeeper, suspected of being concerned with a man who had presented for payment a note contained in a parcel of notes, to the amount of between 7000l. and 8000l. partly the property of the banking-house of Messrs. Taylor and Lloyd, of Birmingham, and partly of that of Sir John Esdaile, which were stolen out of the Exeter subscription coach, in the yard of the Swan with Two Necks, Lad-lane.—Two men, suspected of the robbery, were apprehended, and tried at Lancaster; they were acquitted, but were held to bail for the misdemeanour of passing some of the notes, knowing them to have been stolen.—A person was examined at the Mansion-house on the charge of having participated in the robbery. On that occasion the stablekeeper appeared to give a character to the person charged.—A person in the service of Messrs. Donovan stated, that on the day before a person came into their warehouse, and purchased a piece of Irish linen, in payment for which he tendered a 5l. note, of the bank of Messrs. Taylor and Lloyd, Birmingham. There was some hesitation about the note, and it was proposed to send the piece home to the residence of the purchaser. To this the latter agreed, and gave his address "Old Street-road, St. Luke's," but he said he wanted to take the change with him. He was then told that the note would be sent to the city, to the banking-house at which it was made payable, and if it were found to be a good one, the change would be sent to him. On learning this, the man wanted to have his note returned to him, but Messrs. Donovan declined to do so, and he went away much dissatisfied. The witness was directed to follow him, which he did, and traced him and the prisoner into several public-houses. At length an officer was procured, and the prisoner was apprehended coming out of a public-house in Charles-street, but the other man was not found.—The Lord Mayor now called upon the prisoner to explain the circumstances of his waiting for, and being found in company with the man who had acted so suspiciously with the stolen note. The prisoner said he knew nothing at all about what the witness had been talking. All he knew was, that the man they talked about was a very respectable man that had bargained with him for a poney, and had appointed to meet him and talk it over at a public-house in Oxford-street. The prisoner here began to talk very confusedly about his having tried to deal in the public-house, and his being seized as he came from it, when the officers were able to find no one there that they wanted. He declared that he knew nothing about the note.—A consultation took place on the case, and whilst it was going on, the prisoner gratuitously said, "Some notes have passed through my hands that were paid to me by a very respectable man, who is a publican in Barbican. They say they are stolen and refuse to pay me them. But I'll set the matter at rest, for I'll sue them for them."—This threat against the bankers, and the tone of defiance which he assumed, without any direct charge being made against him, were particularly remarked; but the Lord Mayor considered the circumstance did not warrant him in detaining the prisoner, who was discharged by his Lordship without any observation.

UNION-HALL.—On Tuesday, Thomas Cooke was charged with having acted in a riotous and disorderly manner in Blackfriars'-road. The defendant was on the occasion ordered to find bail; and in default of sureties he inquired where he was to be sent. The clerk replied, that he was to remain in prison at Horsemonger-lane, until he could obtain bail. Cooke instantly said, "Oh, we shall soon see that," and he began to fumble about in his pockets. Before he could be searched, he pulled out a large clasp-knife, hastily drew the handkerchief off his neck, threw back his head, and held the knife to his throat. The officer just reached the armed hand as the defendant was about to draw it across his throat. Both fell to the ground in the struggle. The officer was undermost; and in his attempt to wrest the knife from the hands of the desperate man, received several severe cuts on the hands. Another officer was also severely wounded in the arm by the defendant, who held the knife firmly, and was only prevented from doing further mischief by the snapping across of the blade. The defendant was afterwards handcuffed, and sent to gaol.

COURT OF REQUESTS.—On Thursday Mrs. Ellen Parker, straw-bonnet manufacturer, in Great Newport-street, Newport-market, summoned a lady, very fashionably dressed, for 15s., the amount of a mended square of plate glass which had been demolished in her shop front. The fair defendant was attended by a gentleman who stepped forward and objected to the demand, upon the ground that Mrs. Siller was not the person liable, as would appear by the sequel. Mrs. Siller was not the person liable, as would appear by the sequel. Mrs. Parker (pointing to the gentleman)—This is the fellow that broke my window; I can recollect him very well.

Commissioner—Not so fast, madam; let us hear the circumstances of this business.

Mrs. Parker then stated that that fellow (pointing to the gentleman) was passing through Newport-street with another, and the defendant was "toying and playing" along, when that fellow stumbled and broke a pane of glass in her front, value 15s. The fellow walked into the shop after the accident, and seated himself till the elixier came, when Mrs. Siller came in and gave her card, saying the gentleman was her husband, and that he should call and pay the damage next morning; instead of which she had never seen any thing of him or Mrs. Siller since.—Here the plaintiff produced a bill and receipt for repairing the window, which amounted to 16s. The gentleman said that he would admit that he broke the window, but submitted that that Court had no jurisdiction in the case, as their power only extended to matter of debt.

The Commissioners said that cases of this description were continually coming before them, and their jurisdiction had never before been disputed.—The gentleman observed that (should the Court decide against him) it had already been decided at Common Law that where it was an accident, the price of a common window should only be allowed.—The Court thereupon adjudged him to pay 7s. for the window, and 3s. costs.

BRIGHTON POLICE.—A gang of boys, who are well known at Brighton as notorious and desperate thieves, were put to the bar; but all of them, except Richard Smith, were remanded for re-examination. Smith is a shrewd, intelligent fellow, about 20 years old, who seemed to view with supreme indifference the situation in which he was placed. From the evidence of Mr. Worger, one of our active headboroughs, and others, it appeared that Smith has for some time past been suspected of being concerned in various robberies that have been committed in Brighton; in consequence of which, Worger meeting him in the street, with a bundle under his arm, took him into custody. The bundle proved to contain articles of wearing apparel, which, on inquiry being made at different shops in the place, were identified by Mary Parker, a clothes-seller in Crescent-street, by Mr. Langridge, a pawnbroker, and by Mr. Carey, a dyer, living at 23, Bread-street. Three separate charges were now preferred against him, on each of which he was fully committed for trial at the Quarter Sessions, notwithstanding his earnest intreaties to be sent to the Assizes, for there only, he said, could he have "a fair trial." Sir David Scott told him frankly that his reason for committing him to the Sessions was, that the Justices there knowing him better than the Judges, would award him a greater shave of punishment than would probably be inflicted at the Assizes, and such as, from his notorious character, it was very desirable he should meet with. "Oh," exclaimed Smith, with the most sang froid, "they know me at the Assizes as well as they do at the Sessions." His bearing in truth throughout the examination was most impudent and daring—his features wore a smile and exhibited the greatest indifference, and he eyed the spectators from time to time as if his situation were one of which he felt, and had reason to feel, proud. On some question being asked respecting the clothes that had been stolen, "Oh," said he, carelessly, "I only meant to provide myself with a whole suit at once." He has been released no more than a week from the House of Correction, where he was confined upwards of ten months for some former felony. Considerable interest had been excited by the apprehension of so many juvenile felons, and the room was in consequence crowded to excess with persons anxious to hear the examination.—Brighton Gazette.

The quantity of cotton imported this year into the port of Liverpool alone is greater by ninety thousand bags, than it was this time last year.

As the Reading coach was proceeding on Thursday through Turnham-green, on its way to town, the coachman observing several children playing in the road, called to them to get out of the way. One of them, in returning, slipped down, and in consequence the wheels passed over his thighs, both of which were crushed in a dreadful manner.

On Sunday morning last, a woman named Clifford, about 35 years of age, went to the house of Mrs. Worger, her sister, wife of a grocer at Ashford, and asked her if there was no one in the house? Mrs. Worger replied in the negative. Clifford then began to revive some family bickerings, but Mrs. W. told her to say nothing on the subject, but sit down and take some breakfast. Mrs. W. then went up stairs into her bed-room, and left her sister, as she supposed, taking breakfast, but she was soon surprised by hearing her creeping up stairs, and her horror can be easier conceived than described when she beheld her rushing on her with a bill in one hand and a hammer in the other. The wretched woman made a cut with the bill at Mrs. Worger, which she received on her right hand, and which nearly cut off the thumb. She then made another cut, which inflicted a severe wound in the left hand, and attempted to throw her on the bed, but in attempting this she fell on the bed herself, by which means Mrs. Worger made her escape into the street. She gave no reason for the action, and did not appear to be sorry for what she had committed. She is fully committed for trial.

On Wednesday night, so early as between seven and eight o'clock, a young lady returning home over Westminster-bridge, was accosted by a man, rather fashionably attired, in a very unceremonious and familiar manner, to which, however, she paid no attention, observing that the freedom was unauthorised by any previous acquaintance; finding that his advances were not received in the manner he wished, or perhaps expected they might have been, he changed his style, and continued to offend the ears of a sensitive and accomplished female in language of the most abhorrent and disgusting character. Still she affected not to hear him, and pursued her way, when, at length, this fiend in human shape, taking advantage of her unprotected situation, seized her roughly with the hand, whilst he shook from a cane that he held in the other a small sword or dirk, with which he twice stabbed her in the fleshy part of the arm, near the shoulder, and made off, leaving the hapless victim of his brutality prostrate and bleeding profusely. Two gentlemen, who came up, had the terrified and trembling girl conveyed to a neighbouring surgeon's, when the wounds were dressed, which, though deep, are by no means dangerous. Having swallowed some restoratives, and recovered in some measure from the agitation into which the abominable and unexpected act had plunged her, she informed the gentlemen as to the nature of the assault, and further stated, that she remembered having been addressed by the same fellow about three months ago when walking in the Green Park, in terms equally shocking and obscene: but that he did not then proceed to any other act of violence. She described the barbarian as having both the air and idiom of a foreigner, though his dress is in every respect conformable to the English fashion. The young lady's inability to make the disclosure sooner prevented pursuit, as it would then, no doubt, be altogether useless, the fellow having had time to escape.—Morning Paper.

Last week, a Coroner's inquest was taken at the New Inn, Maidstone, on the body of Mr. W. Lansell, (who had the day previously arrived from Canterbury to obtain the medical advice of a noted quack, residing near the barracks, named Keen,) and who died very shortly after reaching the doctor's house. The deceased, on his arrival, complained of being very cold, and seemed exceedingly unwell. He was placed by the side of the fire, a pipe given to him to smoke, and a glass of brandy to revive him. The doctor left the house for a short time, and on his return was informed by his housekeeper that his patient was gone to sleep—but on examining him, he found him lifeless. No medicine had been given to him. The parish surgeon deposed as to having examined the body of deceased. He was of opinion that he had laboured under a disease of the abdominal viscera, which caused his death.—Verdict, "Died by the visitation of God."

The following inquests have been held during the week:—At the Ship, Vauxhall-road, on the body of Mrs. Hammond. The deceased had for some time laboured under a continued stoppage in her stomach for which she was in the habit of taking opening pills, and bitter apple pills. On Thursday last she sent her sister, a little girl, for a penny worth of bitter apple pills, the apothecary gave her about ten grains in powder, cautioning the girl how it was to be made into pills, and its dangerous effects. The deceased on receiving the medicine, mixed it with water in a cup, and swallowed the contents. Shortly after she was seized with most violent pains, and died the same evening. Verdict—"That the deceased died through taking a large quantity of bitter apple powder, not knowing at the time it would occasion her death."—At the Black Bull, Montague-street, Whitechapel, on the body of R. Lowe, a smith, who, on Monday evening, went home drunk; when, one of his children offending him, he ran after it to beat it, fell down stairs, and was so much injured that he died the following day. Verdict—"Accidental Death."—In New-gate, on the body of Julia Weatherall, a prisoner, under sentence of transportation, who had died the preceding evening in the infirmary of that gaol. It appeared by evidence, she had been labouring under a decline for some time past, and every attention had been paid her by the medical gentleman. Verdict—"Died by the Visitation of God."—At Guy's Hospital, on the body of T. Davis, aged 24. The deceased had been spending the evening at the Jolly Miller, Webber-row, with some friends, on their quitting he stepped behind, and ran to overtake them; on approaching them he fell, when a chisel, which he had in his pocket, ran into his side three inches and a half, broke a rib, and pierced a lobe of his lungs. He was carried to a surgeon's in Great Charlotte-street, who, after paying due attention to his case, had him conveyed to the hospital, where he speedily died. Verdict—"Accidental Death."

During the past week there has been a fluctuation in the Consols for Account of about ¾ per cent. the highest point attained being 84, and the lowest quotation 83¼. The intelligence from Spain of the liberation of the King occasioned them to attain the former quotation, and they have since been at 83¾.—In the foreign securities, Spanish have been about 35¼, and have since gone down to 34¾. Colombian have been as high as 68, and Chili Bonds about 71. The South American securities are likely to advance, on account of it being now generally known that Consuls to the several States are appointed. In other securities nothing has occurred worth noticing. The Poyais continues to keep afloat yet, and speculators have been found who gave this day 17¼ for their Bonds, on the faith of the approaching dividend.—The Consols for Account opened at 83¾, and closed at 83⅝.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, OCTOBER 12.

THE KING continues at Windsor Castle, and takes his daily drives in a low phaeton, down the long walk. The Terrace was opened to the public on Sunday, and thronged by visitors, who were loud in the expressions of their gratitude for the kind attention to their dutiful wishes, so graciously evinced by his MAJESTY, in permitting them to promenade on this favoured and favourite spot.

WE have received the following intelligence from Demerara, brought by the Marquis of Salisbury packet. It needs no comment.

"An insurrection broke out at Demerara on the 18th of "August, amongst the Negroes; and, on the 21st, 400 of "them were killed in an attack by the Regular troops and "Militia."

IN another part of our paper we have cursorily touched upon the affairs of Ireland; and next week we shall take leave to submit to our readers a full statement of the case of MR. D'ARCY'S funeral—the circumstances attendant thereon—and a reply to the unmanly, dishonest attacks which have been made in the London papers upon the ARCHBISHOP of DUBLIN.

At present, perhaps, the following circumstances may not be unacceptable:—

We happen to know, that in the county of Mayo, a secret correspondence, in cypher, has been very recently discovered, together with letters fully written, referring to a secret conspiracy—this only corroborates the official statements of the KING'S Attorney-General. Our correspondent, who communicates the fact, adds—that "they should feel very much "alarmed in Mayo, did they not place great reliance in the "numbers of their Protestants."

We happen, moreover, to know, that on Sunday last, at the funeral of a deceased Papist, at Castledermot, seventeen Popish Priests attended, who went through their regular funeral service, using their prayer-books, and praying audibly.

"MR. O'CONNELL," says another correspondent from Ireland, "is the law-giver, and these very Priests have acted "upon the opinion of that person.—What"—says our friend—"will GOVERNMENT do?—The law has been openly vio-"lated—is it to be violated with impunity?"——That is the only question.

WHEN we saw LORD WILLIAM BENTINCK in the Chair at the Tavern Dinner in the City—when we heard the eloquent speeches of ERSKINE, and MACKINTOSH advocating a subscription—when we saw MR. LAMBTON subscribe his thousand pounds—when we beheld MR. HOLMES contributing his pair of shoes—when WILSON went to Corunna, and when he left it—when LORD NUGENT removed himself to Spain, to add his personal weight to the deliberations of the Patriots—when we heard and saw all these things, we knew to what they would inevitably tend, we knew that the French would be received with open arms by the mass of the Spanish people; and although we certainly did not anticipate the insults and indignities which were offered to the unfortunate Member for Southwark, in return for his solicitude for the welfare of the Continent of Europe, we were quite convinced that the DUC D'ANGOULEME would march his army first to Madrid, and then to any other point at which the captive KING might be in jeopardy. We said what we felt, we prophecied what has come to pass; and as the termination of the "Spanish cause" justifies our opinion of it, and verifies all our predictions, we have nothing more to say than congratulate ourselves and the Spanish nation upon their happy deliverance from a e dastardly faction.

But, it is amusing to see how the three papers which have fought the battles of the Revolutionists (with ink and pens we mean) receive and turn to account, the last decisive intelligence from CADIZ. The TIMES, POST, and CHRONICLE are highly entertaining; and as comparisions, though odious, are not always uninstructive, we will extract what those three liberal papers have to say upon the disappointment of their hopes, the overthrow of all their fondest expectations.

The CHRONICLE says—

"From all we are enabled to collect in the accounts hitherto furnished by the French themselves, of the concluding scenes in Cadiz, it is very evident that considerable confusion must have prevailed there before it was finally resolved to send out the KING as a peace-maker, and that the difficulties which surrounded the Government and the Cortes were so great and pressing that they had no alternative left—THE STATE OF PUBLIC FEELING NOT WARRANTING THEM TO RISK THE CONSEQUENCES OF AN ASSAULT, in the face of the formidable preparations made by the enemy. Deprived of all pecuniary resources from the moment the Constitutional Authorities quitted Madrid, and also foiled in their expectations of negociating loans in a foreign market, their straits must have been great, and the troops, as well as all the public functionaries, were under long arrears of pay. Heavy contributions had been levied on the rich inhabitants and merchants of Cadiz, chiefly constituting the militia of the place: and these exactions, added to the fatiguing service of the ramparts, with the other privations of a siege, must have considerably weakened this portion of the defence, by creating weariness and disaffection, particularly after the capture of the Trocadero."

This little article has its merits, for it informs us, that so far from the "CAUSE" being popular—"the state of public feeling" did not warrant an attack.—And moreover it seems that the "capture of the Trocadero," which these papers ridiculed not ten days since, as a matter of no consequence whatever, decided the business by creating "weariness and disaffection."

The following is equally satisfactory:—

"We may consider Spain as sacrificed. The French will probably confine their demands to the occupation of St. Sebastian, Pampeluna, Figueras, and perhaps two or three other towns, the keys of the country. The rest of Spain will be abandoned to FERDINAND and the Faithmen. The very name of this party, if we had no declarations from them, is a sufficient indication of their principles."

That is to say, the Whig newspaper openly declares, that the simple confession of a belief in GOD. is enough to stigmatize a party, without any further declaration of their principles.

A passage somewhat further on in the CHRONICLE, surprises us—he says—"unfortunately, the bulk of the Spanish people are sunk in the grossest ignorance."

The CHRONICLE has said this evidently in a passion, and inadvertently—he surely cannot mean it—if the Spanish people, to whose valour and virtue, heroism and high spirit, this very writer has been day after day, and week after week, bearing the most cordial testimony, and offering the most grateful incense, in the form of odes, poems, sonnets, letters from Spain, extracts from travels, &c. &c. are the degraded, ignorant, besotted race which he now tells us they are, he must hitherto have been sneering at his readers, and laughing at his subscribers. And if he mean to infer that the Spaniards who are sunk in the grossest ignorance are the ROYALISTS, and anti-constitutionalists, he is equally unfortunate, for in that case he admits the fact which we have all along known—that the "bulk of the Spanish nation" is favourable to royalty.

Considering that the MORNING CHRONICLE labours with incessant drudgery to advocate the claims of the papists, considering that even during the present week every thing calumnious and scurrilous, which has been levelled at the Protestant clergy in Ireland, has been eagerly quoted and published in its pages—we think the following paragraph quite worthy of notice:—

"It is the curse of the Catholic religion that the country once afflicted with it, can with the utmost difficulty return to a sound state."

The CHRONICLE has been candid enough, in these lines, to disclose the motives by which it is actuated in its advocacy of Popery.

But turn we from this hash of inconsistencies to the TIMES—let us see what that steady, impartial, well-informed, and highly enlightened journal does us the favour to observe upon the intelligence in question:—

"Our journal of to-day contains the melancholy, but not unforeseen, catastrophe of the siege of Cadiz. 'That man,' as Lord Chancellor Manners would call the King of Spain, if his Majesty happened to be oppressed by potent enemies, is now, we presume, in a situation the very reverse of distress. He is in the hands of potent friends, of a triumphant army. HE IS FREE. 'The King and Royal Family arrived at Port St. Mary at 11 o'clock this morning, October 1st.' Such are the terms of the third telegraphic despatch. The first of these documents, which was dated the 28th of September, announced somewhat prematurely the expected arrival of the King at the French headquarters, and the cause of the mistake is now sufficiently explained; for it appears that the freedom proposed to his Majesty at that period, and which he himself had made known to the Duke of Angoulême, was conditional, and that the terms were such that probably neither King nor Duke would accede to them. The preparations for attack were probably resumed, and continued two days longer, when such confusion and insubordination took place within the town, that what may be called absolute submission followed—that is, the King and Royal Family went over to the Duke, there being nothing to detain them: and with respect to the Constitutionalists, no terms were made on their behalf; they are left to do and to suffer what fate may ordain."

Here, we admit, we get a full and satisfactory admission of the triumph of the KING—and it is also well to remark the corroboration of the statement made in the CHRONICLE, of "popular insubordination;" that is to say, a distinct confession that the people were in favour of the KING—if they had not been decidedly so, the life of FERDINAND would long before this, have been sacrificed to the villainous designs of the LIBERALS.

The TIMES, however, though not half so bad as the CHRONICLE, must come in for its share of deception—it states, yesterday, that the fall of CADIZ was "not unforeseen"—we should be glad to find in the TIMES anything but expressions of certainty, to the very last, as regarded the final issue of the attempted revolution, and continued prognostications of the downfall of tyranny.

Now then for the MORNING POST:—

The MORNING POST is still incredulous—still clings to the wreck of the rebellion with a fondness quite moving—Love, this paper "hopes when Reason would despair"—does not believe one word about the fall of Cadiz—but writes about it—gods! how he writes; hear him—the MORNING POST laying about him, knocking over KINGS as they were nine-pins—he doubts the telegraphic despatches—he doubts every thing, because, we presume, he has had no letter from his friend in Paris. We will transcribe his observations upon the state of things—

"If indeed this abomination have been perpetrated—(the surrender of Cadiz,)—in the former sanctuary of Spanish liberty, then are the Cortes fully justified in resigning it to the pollutions of the enemy. Even the guardian angels of JUDAH'S temple abandoned their charge when it had been desecrated by the iniquities of its worshippers. Men cannot pretend to greater patience and toleration than seraphs. All that could be done to maintain the dignity of the Spanish name and the existence of the Constitution seems to have been attempted by the Cortes, though surrounded by defections, cowardice, and treachery; for we are told in this very article as an additional charge against them, that under such appalling circumstances, they courageously demanded terms which it would have been a redeeming trait in the French Generalissimo to grant. They required, we are told, to be allowed to retain possession of Cadiz, the Isle of Leon, and all the strong places in the power of the Constitutionalists, during two months, with permission to traffic and communicate with the rest of Spain and other countries: and they also justly denounced that the Regency of Madrid should be dissolved 'as incompatible with the liberty of the KING, the sole legitimate Government.'—It is only when they found the majority of the people and of the army cowardly towards the foe, and brave only against legislators and patriots, that they are represented to have despaired of a defence without defenders, and resigned to the former Despot of Spain the charge of protecting a Constitution which he had solemnly sworn to maintain and to obey. Such is the general character of the accounts hitherto received. As they come from the Journal of the Madrid Regency, let us trust that they are exaggerated—let us hope that they are entirely false. That Cadiz has surrendered is by no means certain. The only established fact is the departure of the KING and his family; and it is still possible that the retention of Cadiz and the Isle of Leon for some time longer on the part of the Constitutionalists may be the price paid by the enemy for the possession of the Monarch."

The surrender of CADIZ then is—if it has happened—but we are to hope that it has not—the surrender of Cadiz is just as we said of FIGUERAS, and ST. SEBASTIAN, and St. PETRI, a proof of the contempt of the Spaniards for the French—after having been desecrated, these places were none of them worth keeping—nevertheless, as we do believe every syllable which we have heard about the business, we once more congratulate the friends of good order, peace, and subordination upon the success of the Royalists in SPAIN, without any participation on the part of ENGLAND, whose armies, had the strenuous opposers of foreign influence been attended to, would have been disgracefully employed in forcing the CONSTITUTION down the throats of a people who have everywhere, and in every way, since the commencement of the contest, evinced their affection to the KING and their love of a monarchical government.

THERE has been, time out of mind, a sort of understanding amongst the newspaper people in London, that whatever their politics or literary hostility might be, personal attacks upon each other were never to be resorted to—the paper was the object, not the writers in it—this has subsisted to the present time in all cases, except, we believe, in that of BELL.

We by no means object to the mode adopted by the "gentlemen of the press," who make it a point to vilify, abuse, and libel every person whom they are pleased to fancy a writer in this paper—we perceive by yesterday's TIMES that MR. COBBETT is a constant contributor to our columns—and the CHRONICLE of Friday states that a Barrister and Member of Parliament is a very active assistant in our labours, inferring (as if it were an established fact,) that some third person, who formerly ridiculed this parliamentary barrister, is a principal agent of ours.

A work published last year attributed the composition of this paper to the LORD CHANCELLOR, LORD BATHURST, LORD LONDONDERRY, MR. CANNING, MR. CROKER, and we hardly know who besides, and every newspaper, metropolitan or provincial, has in turn assigned to different people the office of our conductor; even MR. LUTTRELL, the Whig wit, and MR. CREEVEY, the Whig scavenger, have been mentioned as our great supporters, and we care very little about it; but, as we happen to have been furnished with a quaint work in MS. called "Notices of the London Periodical Press," which contains the secret history of all the principal papers, we hope and trust, as, thank our stars, we hail nothing in common with the fraternity, they will not be offended at our breaking up the conventional treaty which has so long existed amongst themselves, which we shall certainly do by ripping up the first journal which makes a personal attack upon any individual supposed by its editor to be connected with us.

The TIMES and CHRONICLE are at present in the hands of our lawyers, and if the cowardly caution which invariably marks the assassin have not effectually secured them, (under the legal advice of their vile employers), we shall submit these journals to the criticism of a Jury, so soon as the forms of law permit; but since the CHRONICLE has recently changed hands, (although its motley groupe of retainers are still in the pay), we can conscientiously begin our literary exposure of that paper, without at all interfering with our legal proceedings against its late proprietors—and if we do lay open all its private machinery, we think we shall astonish those who are interested in such affairs. We have no wish to do it, but we will do our duty towards those who have no participation in our demerits, and whose supposed connection with a thoroughly and perfectly independent paper is crime sufficient to awaken the malice, stir the gall, and excite the scurrility of the thorough-bred, hard-going, grog-drinking, pipe-smoking gentlemen of the PRESS!!!

IRISH TYTHE COMMUTATION.

It has been remarked that our prognostications generally "come true."—We received several sharp raps o' the knuckles for our observations on MR. GOULBURN'S Tythe-bill, which were considered inconsistent with our known respect for that gentleman's talents; but it is in this apparent inconsistency we glory—we cannot consent blindly to follow any man, or any set of men. We cannot suffer ourselves to be led, or trained—we have harnessed ourselves to the good cause, and we will work hard in it, but no man shall drive us.

We saw that the Irish Tythe Commutation Bill was a bill fraught with mischief; promising, instead of pacification, constant and perpetually fermenting animosities; we saw in it degradation to the Protestants, without a corresponding degree of amelioration to the Papists.

A very few weeks indeed have elapsed since the royal assent was given to this bill. We lay before our readers a letter which has been printed in the opposition papers, which breathes the tone in which the subject is at present discussed by those for whose especial advantage the measure was carried.—

"You will see by the Papers that we are far from quiet, nor indeed is there any quietness to be expected where there is so much poverty. Throughout the whole of the district round me, the land is worn out, and produces little or nothing. This people are too poor, and too much disheartened to manure it. Its whole produce would not feed them tolerably, to say nothing of rent, tythes, county and church rates.

"'Tis an odd circumstance with respect to the new Tythe Bill brought in for the relief of the People, that there is every where a struggle between the Parson and his flock—the former endeavouring to have the Bill acted upon, and the latter striving against it, as against a new modification of an old oppression, and one which greatly aggravates its weight. The Bill, in fact, is very correctly understood by the Peasantry, as nothing more than a contrivance to give the Parson a fifth or a sixth instead of a tenth, as he is now only entitled to—for he must get, under the Bill, an income equal to what he received on an average from 1814 to 21, which would be about a sixth at the present time—there is indeed a provision in the Bill for modifying this by the price of wheat after three years; but observe, even after this term, during which the People may be ruined, the modification must take place on the basis of the old average, so that about a sixth would still continue in all cases to be exacted. But it will be said, the People may reject the Bill; this option, however, is a mockery in a vast number of parishes, where the People being all in debt to the Parson, and miserably poor, they dare not reject any measure he proposes. The Country Gentlemen as to this Bill have been outwitted by the Church, and fooled by the Government;—they very handsomely gave up their demesnes and grass lands—but of what use was this generosity to the country? It took away from the farmer the consolation which he always feels in the conviction that he can at any time shake off the gripe of the Church, by turning his land into grass; but the present Bill, at the present prices, does nothing more than give the grass land to the Parson, continuing the burden upon the cultivated land just what it was. The Bill, therefore, increases greatly the burden upon the farmer, and perpetuates the burden; and the Clergy have got all the demesnes of the Gentry, what they have been long anxiously coveting for."

So the "clergy have got all the demesnes of the gentry"—and this offends a correspondent of the MORNING CHRONICLE—it must be a mighty disinterested feeling—however, we should be glad to know what the "high literary character," as they call him, means by this assertion.

In Ireland, the grant of tythes to the clergy is of an antiquity sufficiently remote to render its origin undiscoverable, even by the indefatigable SELDON; it is, however, an undeniable fact, that their title is anterior to the date of any title to landed estate in the country.—In every transfer of property one-tenth part has remained unalienated; every purchase that has been made, every rent which has been fixed, every grant that has been conceded, has been regulated by this deduction, and subject to its operation.

If this apply generally to England as well as to Ireland, and if (as how can it be denied?) the right (we say, the unalienable right,) of the Church to one-tenth of the produce of the land, be admitted—why, for what reason are the Irish Protestant Clergy first held up to remark, observation, and censure, and then subjected to innovations and degradation? when it is a positive fact, that taking all titheable articles together the claims of the Irish Protestant Clergy never amount on an average to a five-and-twentieth—let the reader add to this, the innumerable exemptions from all payment of tythes—exemptions unknown, and not recognized in England, and we think he will have very different ideas of the subject from those communicated to the MORNING CHRONICLE by the high literary character in the letter we have just quoted.

To detect political inconsistencies is at least amusing, and surely one cannot expose one more glaring—one more absurdity gross, than the violent opposition made to the claims of the Church by men who are avowedly the greatest lay impropriators in the kingdom, not merely because they take the tenths without doing duty of any sort, but because it is notorious that in all lay impropriations the rateages of tythes are infinitely greater than where their original design is fulfilled by a clergyman having the cure of a parish—and yet, it is only where the institution remains in its purity, and the tythes are in the hands of the Church, that their existence is called an evil, and their collector an oppresser.

We are not going to enter deeply into the subject here, at the present moment: we have said enough of popish interference, of popish malignity, of popish intrigue, to open the eyes of those who will allow themselves to be awakened from their soothing slumbers over the smouldering ashes of the last rebellion. The time will come when those who disregard our warnings, will repent them of their perilous security; but we feel it a duty to state, as far as relates to the last act of KEVIN'S, has made affidavit that the ARCHBISHOP of DUBLIN issued NO ORDERS with respect to the prohibition of the popish service at the grave of MR. D'ARCY—thus solemnly and officially contradicting the irritating and infamous falsehoods of the popish priest, who, (it is also sworn to) did actually perform the service after having been warned of its illegality.

The despicable hangers-on of Whig-radicalism have so openly avowed their contempt for all religion—except that of the christian GREEKS, for whom a subscription has been raised—that it is useless combatting their malevolence, or refuting their falsehoods. They war generally against all the ancient establishments of the country, in church and state, and can be considered in no other light—their calumniations and abuse of every thing decent, respectable, and honourable, go for just as much as they are worth, and can have no other effect than that of degrading the masters whom they serve; but there are persons of weight in the country, of superior intellect, of powerful influence, upon whom the serious consideration of the present state of Ireland is earnestly but respectfully pressed.

We would not impugn the wisdom of men whose characters as statesmen are established, but we will put two simple questions to those most interested, to which any child of seven years of age will be competent to give two satisfactory answers.

If a certain system of government be acted upon for a certain length of time, during which all the evils which existed at the moment of its adoption have encreased and innumerable new misfortunes have accrued,—if fires, murders, robberies, houghings, abduction and assassination have multiplied gradually since the commencement of its operation and promise, with the long nights, to accumulate still more rapidly and still more formidably—what is to be inferred?—that the operation of that system has been successful or unsuccessful?

The child would answer—unsuccessful.

"What then ought to be done?"

The child would reply—"change it."

THE TREAD-MILL.

IN addition to the testimony of MR. JACKSON, surgeon of the Guildford House of Correction, respecting the effects of the Tread-mill upon "patients," we lay before our readers the following letter from MR. HUTCHINSON, whose name has been frequently mentioned during the discussion.

TO JOHN BULL.

Southwell, Notts, Oct. 4. 1823.

SIR—Observing that within the last few weeks my name has had the honour of being repeatedly mentioned by your correspondents on the subject of the Tread-wheel, I shall esteem myself under an obligation if you will notice in your ensuing paper, that SIR JOHN COX HIPPISLEY'S letter, addressed to the Editor of the London Medical and Physical Journal, and published in the last number of that useful work, as well as in a late one of your highly interesting JOHN BULL, will be very fully answered in the November number of the London Medical and Physical Journal, to the highly respectable and ingenious Editor of which my reply has been already transmitted. This letter of SIR JOHN COX HIPPISLEY contains a commentary on my observations, stated three months ago in the Medical Journal, and must be acknowledged by every candid and unprejudiced reader to make a feeble effort to resist the force of plain facts and positive truths, by assertions supported only by illusive hypothesis and vague conjecture.

As a period of two or three weeks will elapse prior to the publication of my reply in the Journal above alluded to, and as my silence may possibly be construed into an acquiescence with the opinions of SIR J. COX HIPPISLEY and DR. GOOD, permit me to mention through the medium of your truly impartial and widely circulated paper, that in confirmation of my sentiments heretofore given to the public on this very important subject, under the direction of the Rev. J. T. BECHER, a visiting justice of the prison at Southwell, and one of the Chairmen of the Quarter Sessions, attended by MR. MOLE, the Governor, and myself, fifty prisoners have undergone a strict and impartial examination, so as to ascertain individually and collectively their unbiassed and uncontrouled opinions respecting the comparative severity of the exercise, and its sensible effects on the different muscles called into action, for the purpose of enabling me to investigate the truth by determining from representation as well as inspection its morbid effects upon the human frame. These important questions, and equally important answers, with some general observations, I have arranged in a tabular form, under an assurance that they must carry with them, even to the minds of their most determined opponents, a conviction of the mildness, the utility, and salubrity of the exercise imposed by the Treadwheel.

With every sentiment of deference for the high respectability of SIR JOHN COX HIPPISLEY, and the scientific attainments of DR. GOOD, I can neither abandon the unequivocal testimony of my senses, nor admit the existence of imaginary evils, which are controverted by the statement of fifty prisoners practically competent to speak the truth, but personally disposed from motives of self interest to conceal it, as well as by our daily observations upon visible occurrences attaching to the health of prisoners entrusted to my care and medical superintendance as a surgeon, in which profession I have assiduously and extensively practised for nearly thirty years.—I remain, Sir, your faithful Servant,

BEN. HUTCHINSON,

Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons, and Surgeon to the Nottinghamshire House of Correction at Southwell.

On the opposite side of the question we have received some strong and pertinent remarks, and an extract of a letter giving an account of the introduction of the Mill into Trinidad.

It is now nearly seven weeks since the gentleman to whom the letter containing this acount was addressed was kind enough to furnish us with the extract—we hesitated as to inserting it, because it appeared to us to reflect personally upon the Governor of that island, whose character for humanity and moderation we never before heard impeached.

The gentleman who has now done us the favour of transmitting another copy of this extract, dwells very sensibly and forcibly upon the barbarity of the punishment in a hot climate, yet in relating facts as they have occurred in the island, he informs us that SIR RALPH WOODFORDE, the Governor, being himself present at the operation of the Mill, when a lad sentenced to hard labour was put upon it, was so struck by the violence of the toil that he ordered him off after seven minutes.

We mention this rather as a proof of the Governor's humanity and consideration than of his severity or cruelty, and we think when the introduction of the punishment is attributed to the "penal inventiveness" of his Excellency, our correspondent suffers his animosity to the system to carry him somewhat too far—an English judge might as well be stigmatized as a murderer for passing sentence of death, as a colonial Governor characterized as cruel because the Tread-mill is introduced into a colony during his administration. We certainly should think the labour excessive, when the heat of the climate is taken into consideration—yet, it should be considered that the ordinary labour of man in the fields is performed in the same temperature, and that of course the Treadmill bears the same relation to voluntary work in a hot country as it bears in a colder one.

The system of enforcing the labour at Trinidad, appears somewhat different from that adopted in England, for we are told "that the common hangman—(a proper enough officer, as far as that goes) is stationed with a cow-skin to flog the unfortunate offender in case he should not keep equal motion with the revolution of the wheel." Hence it appears, that one individual only is put upon the wheel at a time, and that the retatory motion of the machine is not the result of his treading, but that his treading is regulated by the motion of the wheel, imparted to it by some other force or power.

An instance is quoted to us, of a slave called MOSES, who "not able or willing to follow the preponderating gravity" of the machine, fell down and broke his leg. This, which is cited as an instance of barbarity, appears to us to be merely the result of idleness or sulkiness, vitiues with which the blacks are amply endowed, and the same circumstance would happen to any person here wilfully shirking the labour.

It appears they have two punishments on the wheel in Trinidad—the quick and slow. In the quick time, or "impelled motion," the wheel revolves twenty times in a minute; but our correspondent is unable to tell us the circumference of the wheel—in slow time its revolutions are at the rate of ten or twelve in the minute.

We have but one more remark to make upon this communication, but we ought, in justice to our correspondent, to make it—the letter from which our intelligence is derived was written in July, long before the Tread-mill had become a subject of general discussion, and long before SIR J. HIPPISLEY'S book had reached Trinidad. We state this to clear the writer from any imputation of party feeling in the question, and to place his communication before our readers in its real character—that of a detail of facts operating strongly upon a mind unbiassed by any prejudices, save those of humanity, and then undisturbed by the conflicting evidence which every day now brings to light.

We perceive that we have a coadjutor in BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE for the present month, in our hostility against the labour for women; and we are pleased that a work so extensively circulated, and so universally read, should have taken a similar view of the subject with ourselves. In an article called the "General Question," is the following passage:—

"SIR JOHN COX HIPPISLEY and DR. MASON GOOD, (the translator of Lucretius!) have been lately attacking the Tread-mills; and JOHN BULL has joined his forces. Do not you agree with these three distinguished philanthropists, that men should not use women with cruelty, if they can prevent it? Let the males tread away—but find a gentler exercise for the females. No strong or weak-bodied he-fellow of a pickpocket or purloiner is a proper object of compassion, except just as he is going to be hanged; and if he sweat on the Tread-mill to the utmost wish of Hamlet himself, wrench his instep, sprain his ankle, dislocate his knee, and bring his back to the lumbago, there can be no question whatever, that

"'A wiser and a better man,
"He'll rise to-morrow morn.'

"But even although no amendment in his morals be visible, is there not a satisfaction in knowing that he is on the Tread-mill, battered and blistered to a most painful degree, and ineffectually damning the keeper of the Brixton, and the inventive spirit of the age? But this argument does not apply to females; anything like needless cruelty to any woman is too shocking and abhorrent from every British feeling, to be long practised in the shape of a legal enactment; and if the cruelty be accompanied (as in this case it is) with indecent, disgusting, and degrading circumstances, it is still more odious.—Blackwood's Magazine, Sept. 1823."

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR—You have promised some observations upon the Vagrant Act, and the conduct of the Magistrates—why do you not let us have them?

Amongst your numerous readers here, no one is more surprised than myself at an observation you made last Sunday, implying, without doubt, that MR. SWABEY conducted himself properly in the disposal of a recent case at Union Hall.

If you are as impartial as you profess to be, insert this letter, for truth cannot be excluded by declamation, nor plain sense exploded by wit and humour. MR. SWABEY did refuse bail, but when he discovered the general opinion of his conduct, expressed by all parties, he said he should be glad if the man and woman could procure bail, "since so many lies had been told."

Do not defend such arbitrary measures, you have no need to curry favour—speak your mind openly and freely as you always have done; and though you may make enemies in abundance, you will secure to yourself a host of friends and supporters.—I am, Sir, yours, &c. R. W.

Manchester, Oct. 6, 1823.

We have received a letter containing a similar statement of facts from Bristol, dated Oct. 7. 1823,—the insertion of the one will answer the purposes of both writers.

THE WEST INDIES.

Few people are aware of the mischievous activity with which the Saints carry on their attacks upon the private property of our colonial fellow-subjects—few people would believe, unless we were able to shew them, the depth of the intrigue, the extent of this conspiracy against a class of men as honest and honourable as can be found in society, we mean the merchants and planters—nor the despicable quackery which these self-elected philanthropists call to their aid, in their desperate efforts to excite conspiracy and rebellion in our distant possessions.

The following is an extract from the BARBADIAN, published in BARBADOES, Jan. 25, 1823:—

"So powerful a combination of talent, of influence, deep cunning, of fanaticism, and prejudice, has been brought into action against us, that there never was so great a necessity for exertion on the part of the colonists. We are at a loss to find words sufficiently expressive of our indignation at the cruel unprovoked blows levelled at our characters, our fortunes, our happiness, by our own fellow subjects—people of our own blood. We demand but common justice, yet cannot find it at the hands of men who profess to belong to the most religious nation upon earth! We have some reason, however, to believe, that we encounter the most obloquy and abuse from two parties in England who differ widely in their religious views, viz. the visionary reformers called, par excellence, the Saints—and the Radicals, who are generally to be found in the ranks of Atheism or Deism, and amongst the supporters of blasphemy, but who, in this case, have rallied round the standard of religious enthusiasm.

"In concluding these remarks, we feel that we should be grossly negligent of our editorial duty, if we did not call the attention of the Government and people of this country to the following circumstance. Printed hand-bills, of a highly inflammatory tendency, and filled with the most atrocious slanders against all the inhabitants of the West Indies, are circulating in every quarter of the town. These infamous papers are published at the instance of the 'LONDON SOCIETY;' and we have no doubt that the members have their emissaries in every port of the united kingdom, whence vessels are departing for the West Indies, who thrust into the hands of some one on board copies for circulation in the colony to which the vessel is going.—Shall nothing be done to counteract the wicked intention of these assassins? We again repeat, apathy, under our present circumstances, is criminal."

In another number of the same paper (June 28) we perceive the following letter, which is valuable as a refutation of the calumnies of the EDINBURGH REVIEW, coming from the spot, and written with reason, sense, and moderation:—

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE BARBADIAN.

"SIR,—Reading an article in the EDINBURGH REVIEW of February last, on the state of society in the West Indies, I was particularly struck with the shameless injustice of the writers on this subject, who scruple not to brand a whole community with infamy, on account of enormities committed by a few individuals. Ex uno ascce omnes, they insinuate. I am no advocate for profligacy or inhumanity; and so far from wishing to palliate or conceal vice, I would have it exposed to open day-light and the perpetrators punished and execrated as they deserve.—But, good God! is it just that a whole community should be stigmatized for the flagitious practices of a few? and that British subjects of the West Indies should thus be held up by their brethren of Europe, to the hatred, abhorrence, and detestation of the world? It is too true that crimes of every description, and of the deepest turpitude, are committed in the West Indies; but in what country in the universe do not crimes occur? Look to England;—England, pre-eminent in arts and arms,—pre-eminent (I exult to say) in every thing great and good; England, the sanctuary of religion, morality, and law.—and tell me whether the registry of crimes committed in this most favoured land, comprises not those of every description, every degree of turpitude? In the metropolis of moral England it is stated, on unquestionable authority, that there are 50,000 prostitutes; and in the august council of this most christian country, an attempt was very lately made to defend and encourage, or at least to tolerate blasphemy!! But should we therefore pronounce the whole British nation to be profligates or atheists, we should be just as charitable in our censures, and equally as wide of the truth, as the writers on the state of society in the West Indies are in their illiberal abuse, and indiscriminate charges on the Colonists.

"The Tract under notice rejects, say the Edinburgh Reviewers, all the advantages to be derived from publications of older date; among others enumerated they mention the report of LORD SEAFORTH, in 1803, which, by the bye, was made by that nobleman with the benevolent intention, as his lordship expressly declared, 'of removing the stigma of such 'transactions from the community at large, by whom, he 'knew, they were viewed with equal abhorrence and indig-'nation.' It is confined, say the Reviewers, to recent publications, particularly one from the pen of the REVEREND MR. COOPER, a gentleman who was sent out in 1817 by MR. R. HIBBERT of Jamaica, to superintend the religious instruction of his negroes. This reverend gentleman, if he was a Wesleyan Missionary, appears to have forgotten the admirable instructions which are given by the respectable Society of Wesleyan Methodists, to their Missioners in the West Indies, viz. 'You are cautioned against engaging in any of the civil dis-'putes or local politics of the Colony, to which you may be 'appointed, either verbally, or by correspondence with any 'person at Home. The whole period of your temporary re-'sidence in the West Indies is to be filled up with the proper 'work of your mission. You are teachers of Religion; and 'that alone should be kept in view.' And when he makes that sweeping assertion that he had not seen a single white man of Jamaica who had any serious concern about religion, he should have added, that the duties of his mission (if he discharged them conscientiously,) necessarily confined him to a very contracted circle of acquaintance: he should have recollected also, God's reproof to the Prophet Elijah, when he complained that all Israel had forsaken the Covenant of God—'Yet have I left me seven thousand in Israel,' says the Almighty, 'all the knees that have not bowed unto Baal, and all 'the mouths that have not kissed him.' Religion is seated in the heart, and it is God's prerogative alone to judge the heart.

"An insult on West Indian Women, as base and unprincipled as it is wanton and uncalled-for, cannot be suffered to pass unnoticed. After a statement indelicate and disgusting to the highest degree, and which, if applied to Barbadoes, is as false as it is malicious, the Edinburgh Reviewer concludes thus:—'Let these things be weighed by our British women; 'let them, the ornaments of their sex, and distinguished both 'for their virtues and all the delicacies by which virtue is at 'once protected and adorned, let them figure to themselves a 'state of society, in which one class of themselves should be 'treated like brute animals, and the other be made the wit-'nesses of such demeanour, WITHOUT EVEN FEELING THAT 'THEIR EYES AND EARS WERE OFFENDED.' In reply to this scandalously offensive insinuation, I assert, without fear of contradiction, that, whatever may be the state of society among the men, in no part of his Majesty's dominions is the female character better supported than in Barbadoes. For genuine unaffected DELICACY of sentiments and feeling—for STRICT propriety of conduct—and for ALL those modest, unobtrusive virtues, which are the peculiar ornaments of the sex, the ladies of this island are pre-eminently distinguished; and better daughters, better wives, and better mothers are no where to be found.—I am, Mr. Editor, AMICUS.

THEATRES.

THE winter theatres appear to be going on much as usual at the commencement of seasons—the form and ceremony of acting plays to half-empty houses, or benches covered with people admitted by orders, enlivened occasionally by a sprinkling of persons who happen to be in town on business, or whose wives and daughters happen to be out of town for pleasure, are regularly gone through, but the regular campaign can hardly be said to commence before Christmas.

It has been invariably observed, that when the proprietors of the two winter theatres are living upon friendly terms, the exertions of either are most evidently weakened, and vice versâ. We certainly have every reason to hope that there is sufficient animosity existing between the rival managers, to keep up a spirit of hostility likely to be beneficial to the public. MR. ELLISTON has hoisted the red flag, by taking under his special favour and countenance the discarded Covent-Garden box-keeper, BRANDON; and we hail this manœuvre with great satisfaction, not only as reflecting great credit upon ELLISTON'S good nature and tact, not only as gratifying to an old servant of the public, and as a testimonial of his uninjured probity, but as an earnest of marked opposition to the other theatre, which we trust will evince itself in that sort of generous rivalry for public favour to which we have alluded.

The first blow put in by Drury Lane was the little farce called "Stella and Leatherlungs," upon which, now we have seen it, we are ready to bestow all the praise it deserves for point and spirited dialogue—at the same time regretting that so much talent as it evidently requires to write such a piece, should be thrown away upon a subject so uninteresting to the world, or so much humour confined to theatrical quaintnesses and slang—which, as we have said five hundred times before, are unintelligible to two thirds of the audience. Our decided hostility to "infant prodigies" upon the stages of our regular theatres induces us to be silent with respect to MISS CLARA FISHER, she may be a very wonderful person, and our dislike is to the system, not to the person. We are told by those who seem to know these things, that we need not be so squeamish about child's-play on the stage, for that MISS FISHER is by no means the infant she seems—this makes no difference to us—her appearing a child is just as offensive to us as her being a child, inasmuch as the drama is concerned. Whether the Drury Lane people find their account in producing such performers or not, we cannot say; but even supposing her success to be perfect, our opinion of the taste of the exhibition would not be in the smallest degree altered.

Covent Garden has produced, by way of counter-hit, a melo-dramatic after-piece, founded upon the subject of "William Tell." That it was chosen for its novelty we are not inclined to suppose, and as why such a subject should have been chosen at all, appears to us an almost unanswerable question, we shall not attempt to solve so deep a mystery. We are informed by the newspapers that it is the work of PETER BAILEY, Esq., the gentleman whose death, as he was proceeding to the opera, "created such a powerful interest in the public mind."

We are extremely sorry for the death of any gentleman under such circumstances; but we must confess, that the "powerful interest" in the public mind created on the occasion, is as new to us as the apparently well-known and melancholy event to which the papers refer,—however as the aim of criticism is, or ought to be, the amendment of authors, it appears quite unnecessary to point out the imperfections of a posthumous work. The scenery—as all scenery at Covent Garden is—is beautiful; and though the piece is certainly heavy, it is gratifying to the eye. If it were only to look at MISS FOOTE, the thing is worth all the money.

Some letters have been published, written by MR. NATHAN to MR. ELLISTON, and to the editors of papers, somewhat lengthy, as Jonathan says, upon the important fact of the postponement of the "Beggars Opera" at Drury Lane, an event which, by the way it is treated, one would think likely to agitate the whole face of the continent, or cause some dreadful movement in our own country at least. All actors and singers and farce-writers delight in writing letters in newspapers; they all fancy themselves and their little concerns subjects of such vital importance to society. We dare say that MR. BECKWITH, whoever he may be, is a charming singer, although ELLISTON vowed he sang out of tune, (as it appears by the documents submitted to the public,) and we have no doubt that he is a very worthy gentleman; but as far as the misfortune likely to accrue to the nation by his non-performance of MACHEATH on a particular night goes, or the interest any human being out of his own little circle takes in the affair, one way or another, we are inclined to believe that MR. NATHAN might have spared himself the trouble of writing, and the MORNING POST of printing, nearly a column upon the subject.

While we are on the subject of letters, we cannot forbear mentioning a letter which we have received from a person who played SIR LUCIUS O'TRIGGER at Drury Lane.—It runs thus:—

SIR—Altho' I have not the honor of an introduction to you, may I solicit your kind support on my second appearance in SIR LUCIUS O'TRIGGER, which will be on Wednesday next; and, when in my power, believe me, Sir, I will be grateful.

I made my first appearance in that character on Wednesday last.

I am, Sir, your's respectfully,

413, Oxford-street, 3d Oct. 1823. T. WALLER.

Upon this precious appeal, this MR. WALLER puts "private," in order to make his offer of gratitude, when in his power, more secret and binding. This is not the first nor the second appeal of a similar nature, which we have received; two, however, were from ladies, and we were silent—but this person affords us a good opportunity of shewing how the gentlemen of the press ordinarily are addressed; it affords us an opportunity of telling MR. WALLER, that if he were to be as excellent and as rich as JOHNSTONE, his predecessor in SIR LUCIUS, his name never would be mentioned by us—for this reason—if we felt it our duty to praise him, it might be thought that we did so in hopes of his gratitude; and if we saw it was our duty to censure him, he might attribute it to our just contempt of his insolence in making such an offer.

While we are on the subject, we might observe, that a letter of strong recommendation—not, however, accompanied by any "prospect" of "gratitude"—was sent to us at the commencement of the Haymarket season, in favour of MR. VINING, an actor there—it did not come from himself, but from a friend, and a very respectable man; but this well-handed appeal had the effect of excluding the name of MR. VINING from our columns throughout the season.

With respect to MR. WALLER, we perceive that he was mistaken when he supposed he was going to repeat the character of SIR LUCIUS last Wednesday—it was played by MR. THOMPSON.

MISCELLANEOUS.

WINDSOR, OCT. 6.—Yesterday the Right Hon. G. Canning arrived at the Castle on a visit to his Majesty, and left it this morning.—Lord St. Helens left the Castle on Saturday for London. General Koppel also left the Castle this morning.—At the late public dinner at Windsor, given in honour of the King's commencing his residence at the Castle, all the Port wine had been part of the stock of his late Majesty.

Oct. 7. This morning the Duchess of Gloucester paid a visit to his Majesty from Bagshot Park. Soon after one o'clock the King, accompanied by the Royal Duchess, left the Castle in a phaeton, to take a ride up the Long Walk towards the Cottage. The military band attended at the Castle yesterday evening by command of his Majesty.

Mr. Vigo, the King's Messenger, arrived yesterday forenoon at the Foreign Office, in Downing-street, with despatches from Sir William A'Court.

On Tuesday morning an Express arrived at the Foreign Office, Downing-street, with despatches from Sir Charles Stuart at Paris, stating that the King of Spain had been set at liberty, and was on his road to Madrid.—The Express came by the way of Boulogne.

THE QUARTER'S REVENUE.—The Quarter's Revenue was made up on Friday. The statement is most satisfactory. In the first place, there is a surplus on the Consolidated Fund of nearly three millions, though it must be borne in mind, that the charge on the Consolidated Fund this quarter does not exceed 7,800,000l.; whereas, last year it amounted to 10,820,000l. This diminution of the charge upon the Consolidated Fund is produced by the removal of the Pension List from it. The surplus of the Consolidated Fund, in the October Quarter last year, was rather more than 925,000l. In the Customs there is an increase of above 400,000l., an increase on the Stamp Duties, and a trifling decrease in the Assessed Taxes. In the Excise Duties there is an increase on the article of salt, upon which there had been a decrease for several quarters. In such other articles of excise as exhibit a decrease it will be recollected that the decrease does not arise from diminished consumption, but from reduced taxation. The whole income of the present quarter will, it is said, exceed the income of the comparative quarter between 2 and 300,000l. The Exchequer Bills charged upon the growing produce of the Consolidated Fund in the Quarter ended 5th July, 1822, amounted then to 8,363,352l.; at the end of the October Quarter they were 6,836,156l.; at the end of the January quarter, 1823, they amounted to 5,941,014l.; at the end of the April quarter they were 3,794,585l., and at the end of the July quarter 3,557,961l. So that the excess of income this quarter on the Consolidated Fund beyond the charge will nearly discharge the whole of these bills, and thus, by putting it in the power of the bank to reduce the amount of notes in circulation, may apply some check to that spirit of speculation in Foreign Securities, which cannot but be productive of dangerous consequences.

The new Law Courts are proceeding rapidly. The buildings are uniform with the stone buildings facing St. Margaret's Church and Henry the Seventh's Chapel: they continue along the site of the ancient coffee-houses, and thence from the corner, in like style of building, in Old Palace-yard, to a short distance from the grand entrance into Westminster Hall. The buildings are at present about 14 feet from the level of the street. Two or three of the buttresses against the side of Westminster Hall, remarkable for their architecture and antiquity, are suffered to remain: in the progress of the buildings they will be partially delivered into the custody of the Courts.

THE ARMY.—The 1st division of the 62d Regiment of Foot, which arrived on the 18th ult. at Portsmouth, on board the Vibelia transport, from Halifax, has sailed for Dublin, for the purpose of disembarking at that station.—The 3d and last division of the 62d is daily expected to arrive at Portsmouth, on board the Cato transport, from Halifax.—Some limited service men and invalids are shortly expected to arrive at Portsmouth, from Halifax.—The head-quarters and the 2d division of the 62d Foot, arrived on the 6th inst. at Portsmouth, on board the Loyal Briton transport, from Halifax. The Loyal Briton, after taking provisions on board, is ordered to convey the head-quarters and the 2d division to Dublin.

The 40th (or 2d Somerset) Regiment of Infantry is going out in detachments, as guards on board convict ships, to replace the 48th Regt. in New South Wales.

Lieutenant-General the Honourable Sir G. L. Cole, G.C.B. is gone out on a reduced salary, to take the command of the Isle of France, the civil governorship having, by a recent arrangement, been done away; and Major-General Darling is, by permission, on his return to England.—Two companies belonging to the 55th (or 2d York North Riding) Regiment of Foot, one of which is quartered at Carlisle, and the other at Tinmouth, have received orders to march from their respective stations to Hull, where they are to arrive on the 28th inst.

A deserter from the 17th Lancers has been imposing on the officers of several parishes in Herts, pretending to be in search of a deserter, named Woods, and requiring a warrant and pecuniary aid to assist him in enforcing the same. To sanction his application, he produced letters apparently signed by two county magistrates.

A detachment of the Yagers of the Hon. Artillery company has received orders to proceed on Wednesday the 15th inst. to the New Practice Ground at Woolwich, for the purpose of shewing the effect of rifle-shooting, both as regards precision and celerity; which we have been informed is intended to be done in the following manner:—An equal number of men, all experienced shots, will be stationed at 150 and 200 yards from a target occupying about the space of nine men in line. As soon as the men have taken their ground, the signal to fire will be given; the firing will continue exactly thirty minutes. The target will then be inspected by the officers present, and a facsimile taken of it in order to its being engraved and presented, in the first instance, to his Majesty, the Captain-General of the corps, and to the Field-officers.

His Majesty's Government, conformably to the general system of economy which they have adopted, have resolved on pulling down the temporary cavalry barracks at Radipole, near Plymouth. The troops of the 14th Regiment, now stationed there, under the present command of Major Milles, will in consequence march for Dorchester on Tuesday next, and occupy the permanent ones in that town. Previous to their departure, Major Milles and the officers of that distinguished regiment, gave a dejeune a la fourchette to a select party of fashionables.

Among other anecdotes told of the late King is the following:—One morning his Majesty went into the shop of Mr. Knight, bookseller, before Mr. Knight had risen, and, helping himself to the first work that lay in his way, took his usual seat, which was rather out of public view. After having stopped some time, the King rose to depart; but before leaving the shop, he carefully selected a particular leaf of the book which he had been reading, folded it down, and, apparently with the view of drawing the attention of those around him to the circumstance, gave it a rather noisy slap with his hand. He then bade Mr. Knight good morning, and returned to the Castle. As soon as his Majesty had left the shop, Mr. Knight anxiously went to look what work the King had been reading, and to what particular part of it he had seemed so anxious to direct attention; when, somewhat to his chagrin as well as surprise, he found it to be a publication of Paine, and the part turned down containing one of that writer's bitterest invectives against his Majesty and his family. The King took no further notice of the circumstance; but the hint had the desired effect; for, in his visits afterwards to the shop, he never found any thing of so offensive a description lying in his way.

Tuesday evening, Russell's Exeter Van was overturned opposite Somerset-house, in the Strand, by which the driver and another were considerably injured. They were carried into Mr. Stanton's, the coffee-house where they had their wounds dressed. Happily the accident happened in the centre of the wide part of the street; had it happened on either of the footways, from the number of passengers passing, lives must have been lost. It was only a few months ago another of these dangerous vehicles was overturned in the Strand, and falling against a window, broke it to pieces.

On Sunday last the Lord Bishop of Chester held a public ordination in the Cathedral Church of Chester. The following were ordained:—Deacons.—C. H. Dod, B.A. Christ coll.; W. Davenport, B.A. St. Peter's coll.; J. Clay, B.A. St. John's coll.; R. T. Passingham, B.A. Worcester coll.; H. Allen, B.A. Trinity coll.; T. P. Bunsen, B.A. St. Edmund hall; S. B. Ward, B.A. Caius coll.; G. P. Bonsone, B.A. Worcester coll.; T. H. Harding, B.A. Wadham coll.; J. Belcher, B.A. Christ church; D. Birds, B.A. Queen's coll.; J. Mackleston, B.A., G. Woodcock, B.A. Trinity coll.; G. B. Clare, J. W. Tomlinson; coll.; H. Jackson, B.A. St. John's coll.; T. Nicholl, Jesus

LATEST NEWS.

We have received by express, the Paris papers of Thursday, and the Filete of Friday. They contain nothing respecting Cadiz or Ferdinand, beyond what we have communicated in another part of our paper, except some few details of previous circumstances, for which we have not room.

A letter from Marshal Moncey, dated Mataro, Oct. 2, in reference to the taking of Figueras, says:—"The garrison amounted at the moment of its surrender to 2410. It was composed of the battalions of Navarre, Arragon, and Murcia; 600 were sick.—The garrison had still provisions for about 20 days; by reducing the rations one-third, they might have held out for a month. The number of cannon was 139. The stores consisted of 86,850 kilogrammes of powder, 4288 bombs, 2833 shells, 33,127 balls, 13,320 grenades, 1,432,426 cartridges, and 3439 quintals of case shot. The 2d battalion of the 5th line, and 5th battalion of the Royal Spanish division, form now the garrison of Figueras. They are commanded by M. de Cornier, Lieutenant-Colonel of the 5th Line. Orders have been given for immediately provisioning the fortress for a month."

A private letter from Port St. Mary, of the 28th September, 1823, bears "that of ninety-four deputies, sixty, it is said, voted for restoring to the King his power, and have received the accolade of his Majesty. The Cortes dissolved themselves. For the last 36 hours, the Isle of Leon was attacked with the greatest vigour. Ballesteros, the Duke del Infantado, and the Ambassadors are arrived here."

Lisbon papers to the 28th ult. arrived yesterday. They are filled with the details of the ceremony of investing the King of Portugal with the Order of the Garter, on the 23d, which took place at the royal palace of Ajuda.

New York papers to the 18th ult. arrived yesterday. An article from Natchez, dated Aug. 21, says:—"All is bustle and confusion here. The yellow fever is raging with unexampled violence. Some, who were well at breakfast, are in their coffins before nine o'clock at night. There were about seventy-five cases reported yesterday. The inhabitants are removing, and expected to go out en masse to-day."

THE REVENUE.

Abstract of the Net Produce of the Revenue of Great Britain, in the Years and Quarters ended 10th of October, 1822, and 10th of October, 1823, shewing the Increase or Decrease on each head thereof.

Deduct Increase				460,700
Decrease on the Quarter				158,259

The decrease on the aggregate amount of these branches of Revenue is only 158,259l. notwithstanding the very large reductions of taxation. The great increase in the revenue of Customs, exceeding in amount 400,000l., indicates, in a very decisive manner, the prosperity of the commercial interests of the country; and which is not the effect of any temporary causes, but is attributable to a permanent and steady increase. The decrease in the Excise does not amount to 500,000l. whereas a deficiency of upwards of 700.000l. might have been anticipated from the large reductions which have taken place.

With regard to the Revenue of Stamps, although there is a decrease of about 60,000l. on the quarter, the deficiency of the year is little more than 2,000l.—The Post Office exhibits a small increase both in the annual and quarterly accounts.—With respect to the Assessed Taxes for the year, although shewing a large deficiency, it is principally occasioned by the reduction of the receiver's balances, and from the alteration in the mode of making the remittances. The remainder is more than accounted for by the Husbandry Horse Tax, on which account upwards of 100,000l had been received in the preceding year.

The total amount of the income for 1822 was 11,205,667l; for 1823, 11,673,702l., the charge upon which amounted in the former year to 10,301,833l., and in the latter to 7,770,000l. The Customs' duties in 1822 produced 1,334,761l.; in 1823, 1,937,298l., making an increase in the latter year of 502,517l. There is also a small increase in the Post Office of 3,000l.

WINDSOR, Oct. 10.—His Majesty, with his usual attendants, took an airing this day in his little phæton in Windsor Park. Yesterday evening the military band attended and played at the Castle, by command of the King. The Duke of Wellington arrived at the Castle on Wednesday afternoon, on a visit to his Majesty.

On Friday morning Mr. Williams, the King's Messenger, arrived at the Foreign Office, Downing-street, with despatches from Sir Chas. Stuart, at Paris.

Lord Nugent arrived yesterday morning from Cadiz, in a post-chaise and four, at the Foreign Office, Downing-street. His Lordship was understood to be the bearer of despatches from Sir W. A'Court.

The East India Company's ship, Farquharson, arrived at Bombay on the 25th of May last.

THE ARMY.—We understand Lieut.-General the Hon. Robert Meade, Colonel of the 90th Foot, will obtain the Colonelcy of the 12th Regt vice General Sir Charles Hastings, Bart. G.C.H. deceased.

It is also said that Major-General R. Darling will succeed to the Colonelcy of the 90th Regiment of Infantry, vice Lieut.-General Meade, who obtains the 12th Foot.

GENERAL ORDER, HORSE-GUARDS, OCT. 8.—The Commander-in-Chief is pleased to approve of General Officers Commanding Districts in Great Britain granting Leave of Absence to Officers, and Furloughs to Non-commissioned Officers and Soldiers, under the following limitations and restrictions, viz.:—1. The leaves of absence, granted under this order to Officers, may commence as soon as the half-yearly inspections shall have been made. The furloughs granted to Non-commissioned Officers and Soldiers may commence from the 25th of the present month. 2. These indulgencies to terminate on the 10th March next, when, in conformity to his Majesty's regulations, all officers and men are to be present with their respective Regiments. 3. One field officer, one half of the captains, and one half of the subaltern officers, are always to be present with their regiments. 4. No officer (except in the performance of duty, or for the purpose of joining his regiment) is to quit the United Kingdom, without having first received his Majesty's special permission. 5. The officers employed on the recruiting service, or upon the staff of the army, are not to be included in the number hereby fixed for the constant duty of the regiment or battalion. 6. The applications for leave for regimental paymasters, and medical officers, are to continue to be made in the mode prescribed in pages 72 and 73 of the General Regulations of the Army. 7. In case of short leaves of absence being requested by Adjutants, Riding-masters, Quarter-masters, or Veterinary Surgeons of regiments, it will be necessary that a special report should be made as to the mode in which their duties are to be performed during their absence. 8. The proportion of Non-commissioned Officers, Trumpeters, Drummers, and Private men, to whom furloughs may be granted, is not to exceed ten per troop or company. When regiments or battalions are not stationed in garrisons or in military districts, the officers commanding are at liberty to use their discretion in granting the indulgence of leave of absence, under the foregoing restrictions, to the Officers and men under their command.—This order does not apply to the Officers and men doing duty at the depôts of regiments on foreign service.—By command of his Royal Highness the Commander in Chief, HENRY TORRENS, Adj.-General.

At an early hour yesterday morning, the metropolis was visited by a strong gale of wind from the south-west; not any particular damage has been done on shore. On the river some small crafts drifted up, one of which sunk above bridge, and several others were much damaged.

A watchman belonging to the Custom House, of the name of Wicks, was missing; at the ebbing of the tide, at half-past nine, his body was found near the stairs, on the east side of the terrace. It is conjectured, from the position he was found in, he must have been blown off the terrace by a sudden gust of wind. He was a man sober and orderly, and has been upwards of 14 years acting as watchman in the employ of the Customs.

At Bow-street, yesterday, Eliza Mills, Caroline Williams, Sarah Collins, and Edward Hayles, a mechanic, were charged with robbing George Abel of a purse containing nine sovereigns and some silver.

The prisoners acted in concert with each other, the robbery having been conspired in one of those dens of infamy, situate in Angel-court, Strand. The prosecutor was accosted by Catherine-street, in the Strand. The prosecutor was accosted by Mills and Williams, and yielding to their entreaties treated them, and afterwards accompanied them to the house where he was robbed; for, on taking out his purse and offering the girls a crown they appeared dissatisfied, and he very foolishly said that he had plenty of sovereigns in his purse; they combined to rob him of them, and made their escape down stairs; in pursuing them he was stopped by the girl Collins, who demanded payment for the room, upon asserting that he had been robbed, she contrived to dally with him till the other two had been robbed, she contrived to dally with him till the other two had time to escape. On leaving her the man Hayles came up and seized him by the throat; a disturbance ensued; two persons passing by gave the alarm, and the whole were secured. They were fully committed for trial.

At Queen-square, yesterday, the driver of a hackney chariot, No. 39, summoned Zachary Macaulay, Esq. to this office, for non-payment of a due and legal fare, which, according to the coachman, was four shillings, having, in consequence of a heavy fall of rain, and his vehicle being the only carriage to be procured, agreed to carry six persons, and actually so carried them from a chapel in Welbeck-street to a house in Baker-street.

Mr. White—What! six persons in one chariot; surely they must, my good fellow, have been very young or extraordinary individuals?

Driver—No, please your Worship, the youngest of them all might be about 12 years old; and instead of 4s. the gentleman who hired me refused to pay me more than two, which was but one-half of my fare.

This gentleman, on having appeared in obedience to the summons, justified the course he had pursued by explaining that the distance in question was not a mile, and that had he divided his friends into two parties the two separate fares could not have exceeded 2s., which he had offered, and the demand of the coachman seemed to him, therefore, an imposition.—Mr. White informed him that by the act regulating hackney chariots the coachman was not bound to carry more than three persons, or was entitled to 1s. for every person above that number, without consideration of the distance. Mr. Zachary Macaulay paid the charge.

A PHYSICIAN, attached to several Public Institutions, and who is also a Lecturer on one of the branches of Medicine in London, is desirous of adding one or two PUPILS. He will undertake to superintend their professional studies, and afford them every facility for prosecuting these with effect, both at home and in the practice of an extensive Institution to which he is Physician. Every attention will be paid to their moral conduct, and as they will in all respects be treated as members of the family, it is indispensable that their habits be such as entitle them to move in good society.—Address by letter, post paid, to R. J. at Mr. Anderson's, Medical Bookseller, 40, West Smithfield, London.

THE Friends of unfortunate Ladies whose state of mind may render temporary confinement and restraint necessary, are respectfully informed that a MEDICAL PRACTITIONER, in a village at some distance from London, has for several years received into his house, a small and limited number of single and unobjectionable Patients. He has at this time Four, and is desirous of receiving TWO MORE. The accommodations in the house are comfortable; the grounds immediately connected with it, pleasant, extensive, and secure; all the premises have the very desirable recommendation of perfect privacy and seclusion; and the situation salubrious; the distance from London about ninety miles, with daily conveyance by post and coach. The Patients associate as much as the nature of their cases will admit, with the wife and daughter of the advertiser; whose exertions have taught him that a soothing and friendly treatment, combined with the necessary degree of firmness, has in the cases hitherto under his care, given the best very infrequent occasion of resorting to positive confinement and coercion; and that when it has been found necessary, it has still more rarely failed to produce the desired effect.—Inquiries may be addressed (if by letter, post paid) to Messrs. Cloke and Richards, 50 and 51, Crispin street, London.

MONEY.—Any Amount from 200l. to 700,000l. may be obtained immediately on Freehold, long Leasehold, Reversions, Marriage Settlements, Bonded or other equivalent Property. MEDICAL EDUCATION.—A Physician attached to one of the largest Charities for the relief of the sick poor, in the West-end of the Town, is desirous of having as an INMATE an intelligent, gentlemanly, and industrious PUPIL, who would, alternately with himself, visit the Patients of the Charity, keep a Register of the Cases, and daily communicate and receive observations on each individually, as well as on other medical subjects. Terms 150 Guineas per Annum.—For further particulars apply to Mr. Pope, Chemist and Druggist, 96, Oxford street.

GEPRIS, Grower of CHAMPAGNE, of Avize, near Epernay, France, most respectfully informs the Nobility, the Trade, his Friends, and the Public, that he has entered into a contract with Mr. CHARLES WRIGHT, Wine Merchant, of the OPERA COLONNADE, HAYMARKET, by which Mr. WRIGHT will in future have the entire and exclusive sale of his CHAMPAGNE WINES. MR. PRIS takes this opportunity of returning his grateful thanks for the liberal and distinguished support he has met with since the year 1814, and he pledges himself that the same description of WINES, and if possible better, as it is his intention to superintend his vineyards personally, will be always on sale at Mr. CHARLES WRIGHT'S, Opera Colonnade, and at no other place in England or elsewhere, at the unexampled low price of 4l. 4s. per dozen.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—The rude and unskilful attempts constantly made to supply these substitutes for the masticatory organ, and the disgust which delicacy suffers from the unpleasantness attending them when permanently fixed, have deterred many from adopting the aid and comfort they are capable of affording, independent of the assistance they may contribute to digestion and consequent health. The ingenious application of mechanical science will enable us to obviate all these inconveniences, and allow the wearer at all times to keep the mouth in a state of perfect cleanliness, and to perform the functions of mastication, articulation, &c. with decided ease and comfort. Mr. NICHOLLES begs to state, that he is in constant attendance from ten to four, and will be happy to give ocular demonstration of the comforts derived from his efforts, under every circumstance of simple and complicated deficiency. 115, Fleet Street.

THE Property of a French Merchant, and must be SOLD for actually LESS than the DUTY, the largest and best Collection of ORNAMENTAL CHINA in Europe, including a Dejeuné Set, once the property of the great Frederick of Prussia, by Nias and Co. Agents, 32, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

A SUITE of DRAWING-ROOM or DINING-ROOM CURTAINS, either of splendid Swiss Chintz, Spanish Damasks, Tabborets, or Moreens, can be completed by MILES and EDWARDS at little more than half the prices regularly charged by other establishments. The extraordinary advantages they possess, with their immense variety, entirely manufactured since the amazing reduction in the prices, can only be credited by a comparison with the terms of other houses. For Four-post, French, and Tented Furniture, M. and E. have just received from their printing Grounds an additional quantity of Twelve Hundred Pieces of Chintzes, all warranted fast colours, and on their usual low terms.

CAUTION.—Miles and Edwards beg particularly to state, that their only Establishment is at No. 131, Oxford-street (between Holles-street and Old Cavendish-street.

CABINET FURNITURE, CHAIRS, &c.—C. MILLS (from Messrs. Gillows) begs to acquaint the Public in general, that he has for inspection an Assortment of Goods in the above Branch, manufactured in a style and manner peculiar to that House, and from the full in price of the raw material is enabled to offer every article at very reduced prices for ready-money.—C. Mills, by the desire of many Ladies and Gentlemen (who have experienced a disappointment at calling at the wrong house) requests Families inspecting the Warerooms to be particular in the number, 77, High-street, Marylebone.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—MR. W. BEACALL, SURGEON-DENTIST, 13, Newman street, Oxford-street, having with unremitting diligence, long made the Science of artificial Teeth, where mechanical contrivance is requisite, his peculiar study, continues to supply the Loss of Teeth, with Natural or Artificial, in a superior manner, without the least pain, from a single Tooth to a complete Set, at little more than one-half the usual charges. Teeth cleaned if ever so discoloured, and rendered white and beautiful, without pain or injury to the enamel. Extracting, Stopping, and every Operation on the Teeth and Gums.—Attends at home from 10 till 4.

ONE HUNDRED POUNDS REWARD.—TREVENOT, Perfumer, No. 7, New Bond street, London, aware that Perfumery Goods are sold under his Name, and with his Labels, at the different leading Towns in the United Kingdom, it becomes an imperious duty for him to declare, that he does not supply wholesale any Dealer whatever, either in London or the country that goods so sold are without his authority, and counterfeits. Entreating the Public, and the Gentry in particular, to be on their guard against such impositions, he leaves to a liberal Public to appreciate the injury he is sustaining by these base artifices, and concludes by offering the above Reward on the conviction of any one so illegally trading.

ALE, STOUT, CIDER, &c.—THOMAS FIELD and SON beg to acquaint their Friends and the Public that their genuine Burton, Edinburgh, Taunton and Welsh Ales, Dorchester Beer, Brown Stout, Cider, Perry, &c., are in fine order for use; their Foreign Wines, Cape Madeira, Brandy Rum, Hollands, Geneva, and Orange Shrub, of their usual fine qualities and their prices the lowest at which the first class of such goods can be sold.—22 Henrietta-street, Covent-garden.

NEW INVENTED PATENT GUNS, to LOAD at the BREECH.—Noblemen and Gentlemen are respectfully invited to inspect the above invention, which, for safety, simplicity, and facility in loading, will be found superior to any production of the kind yet offered to the Public. By this invention the rapidity of loading and firing a Fowling-piece or Rifle, is increased in the proportion of at least three to one. Manufactured by A. F. BIVEN, Gun-maker, No. 16, Regent street Waterloo place.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, Oct. 14.—A letter from Port St. Mary announces that the Duke d'Angoulême has raised Rear-Admiral Baron Duperre to the rank of Vice-Admiral. The King has just commanded, in order to perpetuate the remembrance of the taking of the fort of Santi-Petri, that Le Centaure ship of the line, on board of which Rear-Admiral Des Rotours had his flag, on that glorious day, shall henceforward bear the name of Santi-Petri.

TELEGRAPHIC DESPATCH from Marshal Lauriston to the Minister of War, dated Saragossa, Oct. 7.—"An enemy's column of from four to five hundred men set off from Tarragona the 24th Sept. commanded by the ci-devant minister, San Miguel, passed on the 28th by Lerida, and overrun Aragon. On the 8th of October it was overtaken by Gen. Chastellux, at the village of Fraella, six leagues from Huerta, and six leagues from Barbastro; it was overthrown at the charge of the bayonet, and put in complete derouté."

ARMY OF THE PYRENEES.—BULLETIN.—"The noble end which the King had in view, in sending his army into Spain, that of the constant efforts of his Royal Highness and of the brave troops which he commands, has been attained. His Catholic Majesty is re-established in the plenitude of his sovereign rights, and has just been restored to his faithful subjects. All the preparations for a general attack of the Isle de Leon were terminated. The brigade of the Royal Guard, under the orders of General Ambrugeac, and that of the 2d corps, commanded by General Ordonne, united under the command of Lieut.-General Bourmont, had been on board the squadron since the 25th of Sept. The naval force, under the command in chief of Rear-Admiral Duperre, was about to effect the landing of the troops, and to second their operations. The pontoons is destined for the passage of the troops which were to penetrate into the Isle Island by the mouth of the Rio Santi Petri, were collected at the spot. All the batteries on the land side, both at this point as well as before the bridge of Zuazo and at the Trocadero, were completed. His Royal Highness was already at Chiclana, and his orders for the attack were given, the final signal alone was waited for; the enemy seeing the which would not resist the means which had succeeded in combining, and which especially augmented the ardour of our troops, sought in their cowardly flight to withdraw from the active King a refuge against the disaster which they were menaced with. Full power was restored to his Catholic Majesty: one of his officers brought to his Royal Highness the letter in which the King announced his immediate arrival at the Head-quarters of the army.—In fact, on the 1st of October their Majesties the King and Queen of Spain, accompanied by the Princes of the Royal Family, embarked at Cadiz, amidst discharges of the artillery of that town, and the adjacent forts, and favoured by most delightful weather. They arrived at half-past 11 at Port St. Mary, where they were received by his Royal Highness, surrounded by his whole staff and a portion of his troops, who, entirely participating in the satisfaction which so happy a result inspired in the mind of their august Chief, at the same time regretted that having an opportunity, by further fighting, of giving new proofs of their valour and devotion to Conformably to the orders of his Catholic Majesty, the principal ports of the Isle of Leon and Cadiz were, on the 3d instant, delivered up to the French troops; and the Spanish troops having commenced their march for the cantonments which have been assigned them, we occupied, on the 4th instant, the whole of the isle, as well as the fortress. The squadron entered the bay on the same day, and immediately landed the troops which were on board. Whilst these stifficiently remarkable events took place before Cadiz, the troops of the 3d and 5th Corps d'Armée also obtained the fruits of their efforts. The fortress of Santona was occupied, on the 28th instant, agreeably to the capitulation concluded on the 14th. There were found in it 150 pieces of ordnance, and 10,000 muskets; and the fortress of St. Sebastian, against which had been directed a portion of the troops which had reduced Pampeluna, surrendered to Lieut.-General Count Ricard, who took possession of it on the 3d instant. Immediately on his arrival, the King despatched orders that all the fortresses which still hold out, should be delivered up to the divisions of the Royalist army, or to the nearest French troops, who are to take possession of them in his name. The Governors of these fortresses will, doubtless, follow the example of the Chiefs of Cadiz, and thenceforward the military operations in the Peninsula may be considered as nigh their end.

"By order of his Royal Highness, (Signed) "The Major-General Count MOLITOR.

"Head-Quarters at Puerto-Santa-Maria, Oct. 5, 1823."

CADIZ, Oct. 6.—Every thing is ready for departure. Already the grand head-quarters are at Xeres; the third column of the military equipages will begin their journey to-morrow. Count Bourmont assumed the command of Cadiz yesterday evening. It is thought he will have the command of the whole Army of Occupation, in case the King of Spain should consider one necessary.

PERPIGNAN, Oct. 6.—Another evacuation of the Spanish sick took place to-day in the hospital of this town. Their number already surpasses 700, and there is no room for more. An evacuation of the temporary hospitals of this department is about to take place. Marshal Moncey has been at Mataro since the end of last month. The news of the capitulation of Hostalrich is not confirmed. Things, however, are now in such a state that this event must be at hand.

Letters from Buenos Ayres, dated the 31st of July, state that the Convention with Spain had been duly ratified by the Congress, and that Commissioners had been sent to Tucuman, Cuili, and Peru, to induce those States to accede to its conditions.

TURIN, Oct. 4.—The Piedmontese Gazette of this day contains a long article from Alexandria, of the 29th September, relative to the evacuation of that fortress the day before by the Austrian garrison, according to the treaty concluded at Verona. Count Bubna, Commander-in-Chief of the Austrian troops in Lombardy, arrived on the 27th, and the Sardinian troops entered on the 28th. The Magistrates expressed, in the most energetic terms, their gratitude to the brave Austrian garrison for the admirable conduct and strict discipline it had maintained during the period of its stay. Our troops occupied the citadel this morning, and the Austrian troops returned to Lombardy.

DECREE OF THE KING OF SPAIN.

"The scandalous excesses which preceded, accompanied, and followed the establishment of the democratical Constitution of Cadiz, in the month of March, 1820, have been made public, and known to all my subjects.

"The most criminal treason, the most disgraceful baseness, the most horrible offences against my Royal person—these, coupled with violence, were the means employed to change essentially the paternal Government of my Kingdom into a democratical code, the fertile source of disasters and misfortunes.

"My subjects, accustomed to live under wise and moderate laws, and such as were conformable to their manners and customs, and which, during so many ages, constituted the welfare of their ancestors, soon gave public and universal proofs of their disapprobation and contempt of the new Constitutional system. All classes of the state experienced the mischiefs caused by the new institutions.

"Tyrannically governed by virtue and in the name of the Constitution, secretly watched in all their private concerns, it was not possible to restore order or justice; and they could not obey laws established by perfidy and treason, sustained by violence, and the source of the most dreadful disorders, of the most desolating anarchy, and of universal calamity.

"The general voice was heard from all sides against the tyrannical Constitution; it called for the cessation of a code, null in its origin, illegal in its formation, and unjust in its principle; it called for the re-establishment of the sacred religion of their ancestors, for the re-establishment of our fundamental laws, and for the preservation of my legitimate rights—rights which I have received from my ancestors, and which my subjects have solemnly sworn to defend.

"This general cry of the nation was not raised in vain.

"In all the provinces armed corps were formed, which leagued themselves against the soldiers of the Constitution; sometimes they were conquerors, sometimes they were conquered; but they always remained firm to the cause of religion and of the monarchy.

"Their enthusiasm, in the defence of objects so sacred, never deserted them under the reverses of war, and preferring death to the sacrifice of those great benefits, my subjects convinced Europe, by their fidelity and their constancy, that although Spain nourished in her bosom some unnatural children, the sons of rebellion, the nation in general was religious, monarchical, and passionately devoted to its legitimate Sovereign.

"The whole of Europe—well aware of my captivity, and of that of all the Royal Family, of the deplorable situation of my loyal and faithful subjects, and of the pernicious doctrines, which Spanish agents were disseminating on all sides—resolved to put an end to a state of things which constituted a common reproach, and which menaced with destruction all thrones and all ancient institutions, in order to substitute impiety and profligacy.

"France, entrusted with so sacred an enterprize, has triumphed in a few months over the efforts of all the rebels of the world, collected for the misery of Spain upon her classic soil of fidelity and loyalty.

"My august and well-beloved cousin, the Duke d'Angoulême, at the head of a valiant army, a conqueror throughout all my territories, has rescued me from the slavery in which I pined, and restored me to my constant and faithful subjects.

"Replaced upon the Throne of St. Ferdinand, by the just and wise hand of Providence, as well as by the generous efforts of my noble Allies, and the valiant enterprise of my cousin, the Duke d'Angoulême, and his brave army, desirous of applying a remedy to the most pressing necessities of my people, and of manifesting to all my real will in this, the first moment of my recovered liberty, I have authorised the following Decree:—

"Art. 1. All the acts of the Government called Constitutional, (of whatever kind and description they may be) a system which oppressed my people from the 7th of March, 1820, until the 21st of October, 1823, are declared null and void, declaring, as I now declare, that during the whole of that period I have been deprived of my liberty, obliged to sanction laws and authorise orders, decrees, and regulations, which the said Government framed and executed against my will.

"Art. 2. I approve of everything which has been decreed and ordered by the Provisional Junta of Government, and by the Regency, the one created at Oyarzun, April 9, the other May 26, in the present year, uniting meanwhile, until, sufficiently informed as to the wants of my people, I may be able to bestow those laws and adopt those measures which shall be best calculated to secure their real prosperity and welfare, the constant object of all my wishes. You may communicate this Decree to all the Ministers.

"Port St. Mary, Oct. 1."

MADRID, Oct. 7.—The King, our Sovereign, has issued the following Decree, dated Xeres, the 4th instant:—His Majesty ordains that, on his journey to the capital, no individual who, during the existence of the system called Constitutional, has been a Deputy to the Cortes in the two last Legislative Sittings shall present himself, or be within five leagues of the route to Madrid. This prohibition is also applicable to the Ministers, Councillors of State, the Members of the Supreme Tribunal of Justice, the Commandants-General, Political Chiefs, the persons employed in the several departments of the Secretaries of State, and the Chiefs and Officers of the ci-devant National Volunteer Militia, to whom his Majesty interdicts for ever (para siempre) entrance to the capital and the Royal residence, or approach thereto within a circumference of fifteen leagues. The will of his Majesty is, that this sovereign decision shall not be applicable to the individuals who, since the entrance of the Allied Army, have obtained from the Provisional Junta or the Regency of the Kingdom, a new nomination to, or confirmation of, the office which they held by his Majesty's appointment, previously to the 7th of March, 1820, but the parties here excepted are bound to prove their titles to the conditions of this exemption. The present Decree shall be communicated without delay to the Commandant-General of the Provinces, in order that they may immediately take the necessary steps for its proper execution. Communication thereof shall be forthwith made to the Captains-General of Seville and Grenada, in order to avoid the least delay."

WEST INDIES.

The arrival of the Royal Dominica Gazette of the 22d of August, enables us to lay before our readers the official details of all that had occurred down to that date, between the revolted negroes and the Colony. On the 20th of August, the following Proclamation was issued, which, too clearly shews, we think, that the insurrection may be traced to the effect produced by the recent discussions in Parliament:—

"PROCLAMATION.—By his Excellency Major-General John Murray, Lieut.-Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over the United Colony of Demerara and Essequibo, &c. &c.—Various measures being in contemplation by his Majesty's Government for meliorating the condition of the slave population in the colonies, and of progressively qualifying them for an extension of privileges; I have deemed it expedient to issue this my Proclamation, hereby notifying to that part of the slave population of this United Colony which still continues faithful and obedient to their masters, that any general misconduct or acts of insubordination on the part of that population, similar to those evinced by the unfortunately misguided slaves on some of the estates to windward, cannot fail to render totally abortive the proposed measures of his Majesty's Government—which depend necessarily on their peaceable, temperate, and industrious behaviour; an opposite line of conduct will forfeit all their claims upon the liberality of the British Government, and utterly disqualify them from benefitting in any manner by its favourable disposition towards them. The consequence of the misconduct of those slaves is, that they are at this moment suffering all the horrors attendant on the existence of martial law, which I have been compelled to put in force in that part of the colony, with all its accompanying severity.—Given under my hand and seal of office, at the King's House in George Town, this 20th day of August, 1823, and in the fourth year of his Majesty's reign. God save the King!—By command of his Excellency the Lieut.-Governor,

"JOHN MURRAY, Gov. Sec."

We subjoin the account officially given by his Excellency the Governor, of the operations of the troops against the rebels:—

"HEAD-QUARTERS AT CAMP HOUSE, Aug. 22.—His Excellency, the Commander-in-Chief, has great satisfaction in communicating to the public the success which has hitherto attended the operations against the revolted negroes on the east coast of this colony, in which quarter alone the spirit of rebellion has been openly manifested. On Monday night, detachments of the 21st Fusileers and 1st West India Regiments, who had marched from the garrison under the command of Captain Stewart of the latter corps, came up with the rebels at Plantation Wittenburgh, and after a short engagement compelled them to retire, having killed and wounded several, without any loss on the part of the troops. Mr. Van Waterschout, of Plantation Plaisance, accidentally exposed, at this time, to a cross fire on the road, received a wound in the leg. A detachment of the 21st, under the command of Lieutenant Peddie, continued to push forward, skirmishing occasionally and successfully, and forcing the negroes to retire. On Tuesday morning a large body of the revolters (between 7 and 800) assembled near Mr. Reed's, at Plantation Dochfour, well armed, &c.—They commenced an attack on Lieutenant Brady, of the 21st, who had marched early in the morning with a small party of that corps under his command from the post at Mahaica, to endeavour, if possible, to arrest their progress; they attempted to surround him, but this gallant officer effected his retreat to the post in most excellent order, killing and wounding from 10 to 15, without any loss whatever on his side. On Wednesday morning, the rebels being still in the vicinity of the post, and at the bridge of Plantation Beehive, Lieut. Brady continued to attack them, and on his march threw in a small detachment to clear some bush he had occasion to pass, where the rebels had posted a party well armed to impede his advance. This service was successfully performed, six being killed on the spot, the troops possessing themselves of their arms and ammunition, and the main body retreating with great precipitation. On the same morning a detachment of the George town brigade of Militia, consisting of the Rifle Company and others, under the command of Capt. Croal, succeeded coming up with and engaging in a gallant manner, a strong party of rebels at Plantation Elizabeth Hall. They were compelled to fly immediately, with the loss of about 40 killed and many wounded. By o'clock in the afternoon, Capt. Simson, who had been from the commencement of the revolt very actively and usefully employed with a troop of cavalry, in scouring and reconnoitring the different roads in the neighbourhood, capturing prisoners and releasing the slaves at the stocks, &c. &c. greatly charged the enemy in a very spirited manner, and arrived in George-town at noon, escorting the prisoners he had taken. Too much praise cannot be given to the conduct of Lieut. Forrester, and the men composing the troop, for their zeal and activity on this service.—A strong detachment, composed of the 1st Fusileers, and the George-town brigade of Militia, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Leahy, of the 21st, having proceeded up the coast on Tuesday evening, arrived at Chateau Margo about nine o'clock. Leaving a few of the 21st and some militia at that place, the Lieut.-Colonel pushed forward with the remainder of his detachment (reinforced by the rifle company, under the command of Captain Croal, and laboured militia, who had joined him on the march) upon Lochaber, where the rebels were reported to be assembled in considerable force. In releasing the Whites upon Plantation Better Hope, many slaves were exchanged, some arms taken, and five or six killed. The party proceeded, liberating the white people on the different estates they advanced, leaving small parties at each to maintain the communication, and arrived about three o'clock in the morning of Wednesday at Plantation Bachelor's Adventure, which was found to be the most obnoxious of the dissatisfied, in number considerably above fifteen hundred. The daring conduct of these negroes on the arrival of the detachment in assailing the very sentries with cutlasses, was punished by the loss of seven or eight on the spot. The detachment continued to march under arms, and as day-light began to break, the fronts of two separate bodies were discovered on the bridges to the right and left of the detachment, amounting to about 1,000 each, all armed, mostly with muskets and bayonets fixed upon poles; they did not appear to have more than 100 stand of arms and some pistols. The Lieut.-Colonel having in vain attempted to convince these deluded people of their error, and every attempt to induce them to lay down their arms having failed, he made his dispositions, charged the two bodies simultaneously, and dispersed them with the loss of from 100 to 150. On our side we had only one rifleman slightly wounded. The prompt and decisive measures of Lieut.-Colonel Leahy, and the gallant and steady during conduct of the 21st and the Militia under the command of Lieut. entitled to the highest praise, and cannot be too highly appreciated. The detachment resumed its march for Mahaica, and arrived there in the afternoon of Wednesday—visiting all the estates on the road and liberating the white people who had been confined in the stocks. The sudden check which the rebels have experienced at all points has had the best effects, their movements are undecided, their confidence shaken—and a returning sense of duty is manifesting itself. The prompt and praise-worthy disposition evinced by all the inhabitants, and their zeal in embodying for the purpose of making their services available in the most effectual manner, has rendered the force under Lieut.-Colonel Goodman, with the marine battalion under Capt. Muddle, of the Royal Navy, perfectly competent to the protection of the town against any attack which can be made against it. The Commander-in-Chief is infinitely indebted to both these officers, for their zeal and exertions on this occasion, and for their prompt attention to his commands. Every thing bears the appearance of approaching tranquility, and perseverance in good conduct, and a strict attention to the orders which may be issued, will effectually ensure it.

"P.S.—Since the above went to press, the Commander-in-Chief has received information, that the greater part of the insurgents on the coast have laid down their arms, and rendered their submission to Lieut.-Colonel Edmoustone, who was deputed to communicate with them; and several negroes of Success and Le Resouvenir are included in the number. Excellency is sanguine in the hopes that this submission will prove final."

A letter from Demerara, dated Aug. 23, says:—(in addition to the particulars furnished by the official details)—"A force having been sent up the coast, Colonel Leahy went up to take the command. He fell in with a large party, I believe on Wednesday. He had about 300 men, including about 30 of the rifle corps; they surrounded him, and went among them, reasoned with them, and ordered them to lay down their arms. They were in such numbers they were confident, and fired, and they fled into the Cotton Pieces, from whence they fired on his party; great numbers of the Negroes were killed. They left Bachelor's Adventure, the gang of which, with the Success, fled, and a few others, were the worst. The severe chastisement they experienced there, has lessened their confidence in their own strength. Many of the ringleaders are taken; Smith (the Missionary) with his papers has been arrested; likewise the manager on that estate, and they are supposed to be deeply implicated in fomenting the insurrection. The communications were made by letters from the Negroes, but Simson's information precipitated a business they had been some time preparing; for two Whites were murdered on Nabocles, son of the Reap's, and another White. These are the only murders yet ascertained. Mr. Grant (Hopkinson's Executor) is missing, one of the Rogers' was much ill used, and after it was said, they intended to murder. They confined all the Ladies, most of them in the stocks."

During the revolt among the negroes on the east coast of Demerara it is satisfactory to know that none of those in the Essequibo shewed a similar disposition. Four of the rebels were executed in Georgetown on the 28th of August, whose names were as follow:—Evan, of Plantation Good Hope; Damis, of ditto Plaisance; Daniel and Philip, ditto Foulis. The white persons that were murdered by the negroes on Plantation Nabocles were Mr. Richard Reid and Mr. Geo. Burgess.

FROM THE ROYAL GAZETTE OF AUG. 28, FIVE O'CLOCK, P.M.—"The Court Martial re-assembled this morning at an early hour; and military process is now passing with four more prisoners in attendance.—The names of the ringleaders executed last evening were, Geography, of Plantation Foulis, and Harry of Good Hope, East Coast. Many prisoners continue to arrive from the East Coast. His Excellency's last conciliatory proclamation, however, appears to have had good effect on great numbers.—We understand that sufficient has come out in evidence and confession to shew that the plans and arrangements of the rebels were most extensive and well laid, and to leave indeed, to admit of a doubt but that a superior order of people were the original foundation: Perhaps the intriguing Saints at home have a hand in it; if so they will hear with disappointment and pain, that superintending and just Providence has frustrated their diabolical intentions. The preventive discovery was only made a few hours before the intended one that was to make Demerara a second St. Domingo!"

SHERIFF LAMPREY'S DINNER, IN DUBLIN.

On Tuesday, Mr. Sheriff Lamprey gave his first official dinner at Morrisson's. There were nearly 200 gentlemen present, among whom were Mr. Secretary Johnston, and several other members of the Lieutenant's household. At a few minutes after seven o'clock the company sat down to a sumptuous entertainment, in which was comprised every luxury that the season affords. The wines were of the first description, and profusely supplied. As soon as the cloth had been removed, the following toasts were proposed from the chair:

"The King."

"Our most gracious Sovereign King George the Fourth"—(three times three—enthusiastic applause.)

"Duke of York and the Army"—(three times three—the loudest exhultation.)

"Duke of Clarence and the Navy"—(three times three.)

"Duke of Cumberland and the rest of the Royal Family"—(three times three.)

"Our Illustrious Countryman, the Lord Lieutenant"—(three times three, the company standing.)

"The Lord Primate and the Established Church"—(loud and great enthusiasm.)

"The Duke of Wellington and the Heroes of Waterloo"—(loud cheering.)

"Our most excellent Chief Magistrate, the Lord Mayor of Dublin"—(received with unanimous cheering, and drank with three three.)

The Lord Mayor returned thanks, and proposed the health of his excellent host

"Mr. Sheriff Lamprey"—(three times three, unbounded applause.)

On the announcement of Mr. Secretary Johnston's health, the ny, though not general, were loud and cordial; Mr. Johnston ared to retire just at the moment the toast was proposed. He, in ence, returned to his seat, and the company, for the most part, ved his health standing. There was, however, a strong feeling of ppobation of the compliment manifested by numbers present—
Solomon rose and said—
"Mr. Sheriff Lamprey—My Lord Mayor, and Gentlemen, I feel exmely flattered by the kind manner in which my health has been posed, and I beg to return my most grateful thanks to those pre-nt, wherein I concord and harmony (these words were uttered ngly a day, in which concord and harmony) have been so prevalent.

"The Provost and University of Dublin."—(cheers.)
"The First of August, 1711, the Accession of the House of Brunswick to the Throne."—(unbounded applause.)
"The Recorder and Board of Aldermen."
Sir A. B. King returned thanks.
"The late Sheriffs."—(cheering.)
Mr. Thorpe and Mr. Cooper returned thanks.
"Mr. Secretary Gregory."—(three times three.)
"The Common Council of Dublin."
Mr. Semple rose to return thanks.—"Mr. Sheriff, as senior Sheriff's
Mr. Semple rose to return thanks for the Commons of the City of Dublin; ut, I rise to return thanks for the Commons of the City of Dublin; ut I regret that it has not devolved upon a person more capable to ress itself to a body of men most painfully and responsibly circ-ibed. Notwithstanding the defamation with has been poured ainst them, they have proved that they have read the history of their untry, and understood what they have read. They know that they re planted here for the support of British principles, and they ever ve stood steadily support the British institutions, civil, ecesiastical, and political.—(Cheers.)—It has become a custom, derived om ancestral right, and almost as sacred, that the person who reprents the Commons upon these occasions, should demand of the She-iff the right to give a toast. The toast which I shall propose is not to considered as a request, emanating from so insignificant an indivi-ual as myself, but having from 4000 free and chartered citizens, who, ot to be here, and from ninety-nine out of one hundred of the loyal ntry of Ireland, who have long steadily supported the Constitution, nd the principles which seated the House of Hanover on the Throne, nd who now support it there. I therefore beg to propose—
"The Glorious Memory of King William the Third."
Great as the applause which followed the announcement of this ast had in some degree subsided, Mr. Sheriff Lamprey rose and ated, that it was not originally his intention to have proposed the ast, but as it appeared to be the universal wish of the company that should be given, he felt great pleasure in yielding to the request, and ould therefore give the toast, at the same time that he must remark e did so without meaning any offence.
"The Glorious, Pious, and Immortal Memory"—Tune—"The Boyne Water."
"The Lady Mayoress."
"Sir A. B. King, Bart."
Sir A. B. King returned thanks, and proposed the health of "Lord Farnham"—(three times three, enthusiastic applause.)
"The City of Dublin—prosperity to its trade and commerce."
"Lord Oriel, and the Linen Manufacture of Ireland."
The Lord Mayor—"Having obtained permission from the Sheriff to ive a toast, I beg to propose the health of a person who I perceive is t present in the room. I have frequently differed from that indivi-ual, but I am confident no man possesses a better heart than him ose health I am about to propose.
"Alderman Nugent"—(cheers.)
Alderman Nugent returned thanks, and proposed the health of "The Right Hon. Robert Peel"—(three times three.) Tune, "Cropies lie down."
"The new Quarter Sessions' Grand Jury.
"The Duke of Leinster and the resident Nobility of Ireland."
"Alderman Darley and the Police Establishment."
"Alderman Exshaw, the Father of the Board of Aldermen."
"The City Treasurer."
The company did not separate till a late hour in the morning.

POLICE.

Bow-street.—On Thursday, at one o'clock, Mr. Levy, one of the lessees of the Kensington Trust Turnpike-roads, attended by a solicitor, appeared to answer to informations exhibited by Mr. Wm. Cobbett against the collectors of tolls, for exacting from divers persons therein named, three halfpence more than by law allowed. Mr. Cobbett intended to conduct his case, and at the invitation of Sir R. Birnie took a place on the bench.

When the case was called on, the solicitor for the lessees stepped forward, and requested that it might stand over until they could have the assistance of counsel.

Mr. Cobbett—It is of vital importance to the public as well as the lessees, and more especially to the poor men, on whose behalf I appear exclusively, the proprietors of one-horse carts, who have suffered grievously by this system of extortion.

Mr. Levy—Why, you have never suffered, Mr. Cobbett, and why should you be so warm in the cause?

Mr. Cobbett—No, because they know me; I have threatened to indict them, and they are therefore glad to take threepence instead of a halfpenny.

Mr. Levy—Why, they let you through for nothing rather than be troubled with you; you know that you no sooner shew your face than they call out "That's Cobbett, let him go."

Sir R. Birnie said he thought the notice sufficient.

Mr. Cobbett said, that several of the complainants came from a considerable distance, and it would be a great inconvenience to them to come again. Besides, the lessees in the mean time would continue to extort 6d. or 7d. a day, which was the least they got by their extortion.

Mr. Cobbett to Mr. Levy—You are a Jew, I suppose.

Mr. Levy—I am a Jew, it is true, but you are neither Jew, Christian, nor any other religion. You are an Atheist, as every body knows.

Mr. Cobbett smiled, and observed, that what he had advanced in evidence was strictly true. He had taken up the business only in consequence of an application from several poor men who were ruined by the system. One poor man alone, a gardener, had paid seventeen shillings in three-halfpences within the last few weeks.

Some other conversation followed, during which Mr. Levy said, that he would undertake that between that day and the final decision of the case, the additional three-halfpence should not be taken; but if it was not, it should be decided in their favour, it would be resumed. He merely wanted time to meet the question properly.

Mr. Cobbett—Time! You have had time enough. I told one of the lessees I meant to pull you all up.

Mr. Levy asked what man?

Mr. Cobbett—How can I remember the face of any one of your crew, when you change them every two hours?

Mr. Levy—But you could have seen his name over the door.

Mr. Cobbett—I did not look for his name, for I did not think such a thing necessary; but I give you my word I told him so.

Mr. Levy—Your word! what is your word worth? You have been before these three years about your Gridiron, but you are not yet roasted.

Mr. Cobbett—No, nor crucified neither; nor do I wish to be.

Mr. Levy—Perhaps not; but you might be without injustice.

Sir R. Birnie said, he could not help thinking the proposition of Mr. Levy a fair one, and if Mr. Cobbett had no very powerful objection to offer, the case should be postponed.

Mr. Cobbett—Oh, in God's name, let them have the benefit of it; I do not deprive the gentlemen of the benefit of counsel.

Ultimately the hearing was postponed till Monday.

The Duke of Clarence, as Admiral of the Fleet, and General of Marines, is expected at this port. The Marines have held several reviews, under Lieut.-Col. Westropp, preparatory to being reviewed by his Royal Highness, who is very partial to that service. Admiral Sir A. Cochrane, G.C.B. arrived at Falmouth on Friday last (10th) from this port, in the Partridge tender, and sailed again on Sunday on a cruise, the Providence tender, Lieut. Nicholls, in company. The Grace tender, Lieut. Lapidge, was released from quarantine on Monday. The Genoa, 74, was in the offing yesterday, cruizing.—Plymouth Journal.

MISCELLANEOUS.

His Royal Highness the Duke of York, and his Grace the Duke of Wellington, are on a visit to the Duke of Rutland, at Cheveley, and attended Newmarket Races on Wednesday (15th inst.)—Camb. Chron.

In the afternoon of Monday, Mr. Secretary Canning left Gloucester Lodge, on his way through Oxford to Cirencester, and thence to Saltram. It is said that the Right Hon. Gentleman purposed remaining two or three days at Cirencester, on a visit to the Earl Bathurst, and that he will remain somewhat longer at Saltram, on a visit to the Earl of Morley.

The Army.—The Quarterly Payments to the several services, which became due on the 24th ult. commenced on Wednesday.—The 1st division of the 62d Regiment of Foot, which lately sailed on board the Vibelia transport from Portsmouth for Dublin, was obliged to put into Plymouth, but has subsequently sailed from the latter port for its destination.—The remaining two divisions of the same corps, which have recently arrived on board the Loyal Briton and Cato transports, from Halifax, still remain at Portsmouth.

The three Veteran Battalions, it is expected, will be considerably augmented. The head-quarter division of the 93d Highlanders marched last week from Mullingar to Athlone, to be replaced by a small detachment of veterans from Birr. Four Major-Generals are shortly to succeed to commands in the Irish districts, the period of three years having nearly expired with the present commands. It is stated that Major-General Taylor, late 98th, (a distinguished officer,) is to have a situation in the South of Ireland.—The 2d Battalion Rifle Brigade, detachment 12th Lancers, and Royal Horse Artillery, quartered in Limerick, underwent their half yearly inspection by Major-Gen. Sir John Elly, on Wednesday and Thursday.—Major M'Donald, late commanding the artillery in the Limerick district, is appointed to the command of that corps in the Northern District—head-quarters, Charlemont. The 39th detach from Head quarters here, to replace the cantonments occupied by the 29th.

The statement in our paper last week relative to the appointment of Lieut.-General Sir Lowry Cole, G.C.B. to the Government of the Mauritius at a reduced salary was an error. Sir Lowry Cole succeeds Sir R. Farquhar, as Civil Governor, and with the same emoluments; but, being a Lieut.-General, he also assumes the command of the troops, rendering the presence of a Major-General on the Island unnecessary, whose pay and allowances are saved to the country; a proceeding which has been adopted in most of the Colonies, as in the appointment of Lieut.-Generals Lord Dalhousie to Canada, Lord Combermere to the West Indies, and Sir E. Pagett to Ceylon.

Shooting.—To decide the bet between Lord Kennedy and Mr. Coke, his Lordship chose for the scene of his exploits Monreith, in Scotland, a manor belonging to Sir Wm. Maxwell, considered equal to any lands in Scotland for rearing partridges. On the 20th ult. the first day of trial, his Lordship bagged 50, and on the 4th inst. 82 brace, being in all 132 brace of partridges in two days. Thus Mr. Coke has won the wager, beating Lord K. by 42½ brace in the two days.

The trial of skill in rifle shooting, alluded to last week, took place at the New Practice Ground, at Woolwich, on Wednesday last, by a subdividual shooting for several medals, which were contended for at various distances, from 150 to 300 yards, seventeen men were selected from the subdivision, eight of whom were placed at 200, and nine at 250 measured yards, from a target 15 feet long, and five feet six inches high, being about the space that eight men would occupy in line. Thirty minutes exactly was the time allowed for firing, during which time 580 shots struck the target.

Dr. Calvert has resigned the Norrisian Professorship.

Mr. Wharton, Clerk of the King's Kitchen, at Windsor, dropped down dead suddenly in his room on Monday evening. He had been in the service of his late Majesty several years.

Portsmouth, Oct. 15.—The court-martial on the purser and master of the Doris, for trading as merchants, contrary to the articles of war, finished to-day; they are both dismissed the service. A court-martial will assemble to-morrow, for the trial of two men belonging to the Camelion, for desertion. His Royal Highness the Duke of Clarence, accompanied by her Royal Highness the Duchess, the Duchess of Kent, Prince Leopold, Duke of Saxe Weimar, and their respective suites, will arrive here on Sunday or Monday next. The royal party intend witnessing the launch of the Carnatic, after which they will inspect the Dock-yard, and other public establishments.

Information was suddenly received at Margate on Monday, from Dover, that on board one of the steam yachts was concealed a quantity of contraband goods. The Custom-House cutter put off from Margate; through some accident the boat was run down; there was a gale. Through some accident the boat was run down; there was a child in it, which one of the officers preserved by holding it up with one hand whilst he swam with the other. Fortunately, as the sea was not running high at the time, all were preserved. The steam vessel proceeded to London.

A young lady of the name of Smithers, who was on a visit at Mrs. Anson's, Quebec-place, Edgeware-road, met with an accident on Wednesday evening, which it is feared will prove fatal. She was dressing herself to accompany a party of friends to the theatre, when her clothes caught fire, and her shrieks brought the servant maid to the room, when the upper part of the unfortunate female's dress was in one blaze, and her front hair was burnt from her head.

STOCK EXCHANGE, SATURDAY.

This day was a holiday in the British Market, and no business was consequently done, except a few private time bargains. In the Foreign Money Market during the week an immense deal of business has been done. In the South American Securities, the appointment of Consuls has tended to advance them a trifle.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE ARCHBISHOP OF DUBLIN.

IN redeeming the pledge which we last week gave, to notice the malevolent falsehoods which have been levelled at his Grace the ARCHBISHOP of DUBLIN, upon the subject of a supposed interference with the funeral rites of a MR. D'ARCY, we wish it to be distinctly understood that we know the fact, that his Grace was wholly ignorant of the occurrences which took place on that occasion; that his Grace being at the time at Leamington, in Warwickshire, was not only not a party to the proceedings in ST. KEVIN'S Church-yard, but that he received his first intelligence on the subject in the public newspapers. We say we know this, because we feel that a defence of DR. MAGEE against the invectives and scurrility of the dregs of commingled Popery and Radicalism is perfectly needless—we take up the matter upon higher grounds than the personal vindication of a man who wants no defender, and whose character is too well established to be injured by the peltings of the rabble—we recur to the subject, in order to shew the falsehood of the agitators—the malignity of the Roman Catholics—the real bent of all their actions—the total want of principle and common honesty which distinguishes their mad career; so that, judging from the one case, which we will expose, the country may be upon its guard, and reject as false and untenable those allegations and those charges which the inveterate hatred of the priest-ridden mob may originate and circulate.

To argue upon the subject will be quite unnecessary when we subjoin the affidavit of the REDMONDS', and a letter from FATHER BLAKE himself—which runs thus—and which shall have due precedence.

LETTER FROM THE REV. DR. BLAKE.

"DEAR SIR—The dialogue between the sexton and myself, which is given in the COURIER of the 2d inst. has surprised, I dare say, all who were standing round the grave where the occurrence to which it refers took place. The conversation which has been thus magnified was only for a minute, and delivered in a very low tone of voice. The sexton told me that 'I must not offer any prayers there;' I asked him, 'By whose authority did he tell me so?' He replied, 'by order of the Bishop:' and thus ended the dialogue. The other circumstances I have already described in my letter of the 18th ult.—Your obliged, humble servant, "MICHAEL BLAKE.

"Chapel-house, Exchange-street."

To those who have read this FATHER BLAKE'S published letter, this private communication will be doubtlessly highly acceptable. In the one he denounces the Archbishop, endeavours to excite the strongest possible feelings against him, and says, "the order of Bishop MAGEE rung in his ears"—in the other he distinctly states, that the conversation passed in a low tone of voice, and that BISHOP MAGEE was not mentioned—so that if MR. DUNNE had stated his refusal to be in compliance with the orders of the Bishop, it might have referred to a predecessor of the present prelate, and been intended to convey that which it reasonably might have conveyed—a general prohibition of the ceremony.

But it seems that not only did MR. DUNNE not mention Archbishop MAGEE, but, that he mentioned no Bishop at all, until FATHER BLAKE having been told in a low tone of voice that he must not perform the ceremony, asked him—"Is that the Bishop's order?" to which he replied in the affirmative, without reference to the present Archbishop of DUBLIN, and above all, without mentioning his name—and yet this FATHER BLAKE issued his inflammatory proclamation to the Irish Popish populace, publicly denouncing this individual, this particular Archbishop of DUBLIN by NAME, as a bigotted tyrant and FIEND, who would deprive them of the rights of Christian burial.

But this is not all—with this flaming and inflammatory proclamation, printed and published and in the hands of all the papists—he now writes the letter which we have just inserted, and declares, by his own shewing of facts, that every word of his former statement was false!

Here it is, for fear the papists should doubt their own priest when he confesses his own sins, that we shall introduce the affidavit of the REDMONDS, who bear the most ample testimony to the correctness of the Priest's evidence against himself.—

"BEFORE THE RIGHT HON. RICHARD SMYTH, LORD MAYOR OF DUBLIN.

"COUNTY OF THE CITY OF DUBLIN TO WIT.—'John Redmond, of Rathmines-road, parish of St. Peter, County of Dublin, maketh oath and saith, that he attended the funeral of the late Arthur D'Arcy, and being a near relative of the deceased, and a mourner on that occasion, he, with his brother, Denis Redmond, and his brother-in-law, Peter D'Arcy, stood within a very short distance of the grave. Deponent saith, that there was nothing in the dress of the Roman Catholic Clergymen present, or in the order of their proceeding, to distinguish them from other individuals. Saith that the conversation stated in The Courier newspaper of the 2d inst. to have been held between the REV. DR. BLAKE and the Sexton of St. Kevin's parish must have been carried on in a very low tone of voice, as deponent, though within three or four yards of these individuals, heard nothing of it until the grave was covered, when DR. BLAKE informed those immediately around him, in a very mild way, that he had been prohibited from reciting the usual short prayers, that he requested those he addressed to join in mental prayer for the soul of the deceased, or words to that effect. That having been very imperfectly informed of what occurred between the Sexton and the REV. DR. BLAKE, and believing that so unusual an interruption would cause much public discussion, and, probably, much misrepresentation, Deponent thought it right, accompanied by the aforesaid DENIS REDMOND and PETER D'ARCY, to wait upon the Sexton himself, to ascertain upon what authority he had acted on the occasion. Deponent and his friends then proceeded to the house of the Sexton, who met them at the door—that the conversation between them attracted several respectable persons, in all from six to ten individuals, who were on their way from the church-yard, in the vicinity of which the house is situated. That neither deponent nor his brother, DENIS REDMOND, ever said that the funeral service was performed by a Catholic Priest over their relative in Kevin's Church-yard—the parents of deponent having been buried in the Church-yard of Merrion. That deponent or his brother never threatened the Sexton with what they would do to him. That neither did deponent nor any person present say "that millions were not to be trampled upon or insulted by a few," nor "that they would not endure it any longer." Deponent, or few," nor "that they would not endure it any longer." Deponent, or the persons accompanying him did not say, "that they should have their persons accompanying him did not say, "that they should have the persons accompanying him did not say, "that they should have their rights, and they would have their own service performed in future by their own clergymen, and would not be prevented." Deponent, or those accompanying him, said nothing of all this—neither did nent, or those accompanying him, said nothing of all this—neither did they say anything that could be tortured into such meaning. Deponent saith, that he did not, at any time during the conversation, become outrageous, nor did any of the individuals accompanying him become so—but, on the contrary, saith, there was something of threat in the Sexton's language, and much of insolence in his manner towards them. Deponent saith, that the utmost that on this occasion could he laid to his charge, was the guarded expression of strong feeling which was naturally excited by the transaction. Saith, that the strongest expressions used were to the following effect:—

"'That the interruption was most uncharitable, and that they were a deeply afflicted fa- (meaning the relatives of the deceased,) mily, and that having paid every demand he (the Sexton and superiors,) chose to exact, they (meaning the said relatives,) thought they would have been allowed to go to the grave in peace.

"'JOHN REDMOND.'

"Sworn before me this 10th day of October, 1823.

"RICHARD SMYTH.

"'We have read the above affidavit of JOHN REDMOND, and swear that it is a correct representation of the transaction therein described.

"'PETER D'ARCY.

"'DENIS REDMOND.'

"Sworn before me this 10th day of October, 1823.

"RICHARD SMYTH."

Our readers perhaps might, until they had read this, have marvelled at the change of FATHER BLAKE'S tone, and the glaring difference between his two letters—they will now see, that finding the united testimony of four persons published, which so completely contradicted everything he had been saying, he felt it necessary, in order to maintain his reputation for truth, to CONTRADICT himself, leaving his brethren to admire the zeal which could have induced him to misrepresent the whole affair for their good.

There is however one feature in the REDMONDS' affidavit which surprises us—we mean the silence observable in it upon the subject of the order alleged to have been issued by the Archbishop—it is true the REDMONDS tell the truth, and nothing but the truth, but they scruple to tell the whole truth.

JOHN REDMOND swears, that he and DENIS and PETER D'ARCY went to the sexton to enquire upon what authority he had acted on the occasion?—but he does not tell us what MR. DUNNE said in reply—No—REDMOND swears to as much as exculpates himself and his friends, but he is too good a papist to go on and tell us, that when he enquired of MR. DUNNE upon what authority he had acted on the occasion, MR. DUNNE distinctly told him, that he NEVER HAD RECEIVED ANY ORDER OR DIRECTION WHATEVER FROM THE ARCHBISHOP OF DUBLIN ON THE SUBJECT.

This was the plain answer given to their anxious enquiry, and with this answer in their possession, which if known to the REDMONDS must have been known to BLAKE—BLAKE dares in the face of day to malign, calumniate, and vilify, in the grossest terms, and with the most shameful design, the ARCHBISHOP OF DUBLIN—who[was absent on account of illness from the country, and whom they knew never moved in the affair—and hold him up to an incensed rabble as a FIEND, who would deprive them of their rights of burial, and deny them the blessings of the Christian religion.

Is another word necessary?—We think not; and we trust the country will see the real character of this dishonest, infamous, and unprincipled attempt—that they will duly appreciate it, and from such a specimen of popish virtue, popish truth, and popish sincerity, learn to estimate the future efforts of that desperate faction, which seeks to overturn the institutions of the country, to extirpate Protestanism, and to excite REBELLION.

AMONGST whimsical and ungracious things, the polite answer of MR. HENRY BROUGHAM, printed and published in the Whig and radical papers, to the solicitous enquiries of his friends after his health, stands pre-eminent.

These liberal prints say, that MR. BROUGHAM is pestered to death with enquiries concerning the state of his body, when there is in fact nothing the matter with him; the reason for his absence from the Nottingham corporation dinner being simply that he had "had a tooth extracted, and was afraid of catching cold."

There is a fable about a little boy and a wolf—this little lad was so much in the habit of bouncing about the ravenous animal, that when the wolf came nobody ran to his assistance, and all his flock was devoured.

Perhaps when we liken MR. HARRY BROUGHAM to a little lad watching sheep, we may be set down for bad judges of resemblances; but when we say we do not believe one word of the story about the tooth, we may probably be reckoned tolerable good judges of character.

BROUGHAM would not go to Nottingham to play second fiddle to DENMAN—he would not be associated with WAITHMAN, and therefore he made up a story about illness, which, greatly to his surprise and ours, several people who knew him, believed.—By this extraordinary credulity of theirs, his object has been in some measure defeated, for he wished his excuse to be considered as contemptuous, or at least wished it to be understood that he would not go to Nottingham, and he is so bitterly savage at the enquiries of his dupes, that he actually has affronted his hangers on, simply because they were silly enough to give credit to one of his assertions.

DEMERARA.

IN another part of this Paper we have given several letters descriptive and illustrative of the insurrection in this settlement. We have received several others, and an exclusive account of the proceedings—the vast and vital importance of the subject will perhaps excuse the voluminousness of the documents which we publish. We are inclined to give all the papers which are before us, as coming from various quarters, and breathing but one sentiment.

We have received (giving cover to some of these communications) private letters, denouncing, in terms too strong for publication, the conduct and characters of such men as MACAULEY and STEPHEN; and really, when it is recollected that MACAULEY (who is the most active of the set) having made a fortune by trade in Sierra Leone, has established himself as an East India merchant, and is deeply interested in the success of the East Indian sugar trade; that STEPHEN (another of them) sold when he could get the highest price for them, all his slaves and property in ST. KITTS; that his private feelings are not greatly interested in the success of the purchaser, and that he still continues to be Counsel of the Colonial-office, and possesses, consequently, a certain influence in the colonies; and when it is declared and avowed that the Saints and Methodists, both by their preaching and their printed tracts and hand-bills are clearly shewn to be the instigators of the rebellions and insurrections in the settlements we do think that some decisive measure should be taken by our Government, which, while it is keeping IRELAND in a state of rebellion by its kindness and conciliation, will lose our West Indian possessions by its liberality and humanity.

The following is a statement of facts:—

About half past ten o'clock on the morning of the 19th of August, MR. SIMPSON brought intelligence to the Governor of the intended rising of the Negroes to take place on that very night. This information was given to him by his coloured servant Jon, with particulars of the names of the Chiefs and their intended designs. The time of rising was determined on Sunday night, a meeting having been held at a very late hour, (I think) on Plantation Success, and messengers having been dispatched to announce at various points the order for rising on the night following.* The focus of mischief appears to have been on Plantation Success, the Chief or King being a Negro named Mars on this Plantation.

The Governor on receipt of the intelligence adopted the resolution of proceeding up the Coast in person, attended by the Fiscal, his Aide-de-Camp, Brigade Major, his Secretary, and three or four horsemen of the Demerara troop;† they proceeded as far as "Code Verwagting," where they saw a party of Negroes armed with bayonets on the ends of sticks: having approached this party, the Governor attended to their proposal of parleying; he alighted, and backed by three or four horsemen and his Staff, he advanced to them. A fellow came out as spokesman but was too drunk to proceed. The Governor promised that he would hold no parley with Slaves with arms in their hands, and insisted on their first grounding their arms—this they did—but evidently suspicious, kept constantly taking them up; a fellow then advanced, and upon his knee said, they demanded justice—that they had worked long enough, and would work no longer, and they would have unconditional freedom.‡ The Governor told them this was impossible; that the King, and the Government, and their Masters were desirous of making them comfortable and happy, and that they must be aware of their amended condition. He then told them the proceedings in England, and what was intended in future, to which they answered, "that's no good to we;" he told them that it would never be submitted to, that they should seize upon the property of their masters, who had paid money for their possession, and for them also, and their labour he was consequently entitled to: the answer to this was, "What a man buy a man? Never!!" The Governor thought it right now to effect his retreat,§ as he perceived danger of being intercepted, and mounted his gig. A fellow mounted on horseback with a foraging cap on his head, and a sword in his hand, (a SABRE) rode out towards him; from the duskiness of the evening and his equipment the Governor thought he was a white man getting away from them! at this time a shot was fired from amongst them, and the fellow on the horse commenced blowing a conch shell, which no doubt could intimidate him from continuing to do. Lieut. Forrester, one of the escort of the Demerara troop, threatened to shoot him, which the fellow braved him to do. Forrester snapped his pistol at him twice, but it missed fire, and perhaps luckily.‖ The fellow were now formed upon a bridge to intercept the Governor's return; he directed his escort and staff to charge through them, which they did, and proceeded homewards, being squibbed at several times coming down. He arrived in town about nine o'clock, and immediately the militia was ordered out. The Rifle Company of the Demerara Militia under Capt. Croal, and a Company of the 21st. Captain Sutherland,¶ and the Company of the 1st West India Regiment, Captain Stewart, proceeded in the course of the night up the Coast, part of them being driven up in carriages pressed for the occasion.

It appears that an advanced party of the 1st West India regiment first fell in with a party of the revolters, who stood and received, and several times returned the fire of the troops, and then fled, and were pursued. It appears that pursuers returning upon their party, were mistaken at first for enemies, and some shots were exchanged, and unfortunately MR. WATHERSCOUT'S leg was sadly shattered by the unhappy fire. Much apprehension had been entertained for the life of MR. SPENCER—he had luckily sent MRS. SPENCER and family to town on Sunday or Monday; a little before eight on Monday night he ordered his gig, to drive upwards to visit somebody—his negroes told him then that the bridges had been destroyed, and to take care of himself. Suddenly cocks were blown in all directions; negroes, in horrid yells, jumped up every where; his own people came about him, and told him to provide for his safety. He, with two overseers, and one negro, who never left him, leapt into a cotton piece, where they hid themselves during the night. They distinctly heard parties looking for him, and vowing vengeance against him, the "burgher" captain; they heard the house and furniture ransacked, and every thing knocked to atoms—they crept on to the sea-side, and not exposing themselves during the day-light, proceeded to town along the shore, and through the water, suffering very much from exposure to the sun, insects, &c. &c. and arrived early on Wednesday morning, the 20th.

MR. POLLARD, manager of "Nonpareil," arrived about three o'clock, P. M. having escaped; he was in the stocks from Monday night until this morning. He brought with him a negro who had seen the whole affair with LIEUT. BRADY and his party. POLLARD had been much beaten with the flats of cutlasses—he was released by some negroes, who escorted him a certain distance: upon his remarking to the head of the party with which he was, that he had better be off, "I think so too," said he, "I can protect you no longer." At four o'clock eighteen prisoners were brought in, taken by the cavalry, who surrounded the huts of Success and other estates in the neighbourhood, with CATO amongst them, an old rascal who had bought himself or had been bought free; he lived on the front of Success, and exercised the trade of a butcher, bringing sheep, &c. to market; many rumours are about about him, but I have not heard any thing of evidence against him.

A despatch arrived by water from Mahaics, where LIEUT. BRADY and a small party of the 21st were stationed with some creolescents. On Tuesday night or Wednesday morning (the 20th) about 800 of the revolted negroes were moving upon his post on Tuesday morning; he then determined to attack them with his little band of eighteen men (with only six rounds of ammunition each man) and advanced accordingly, I believe, to the neighbourhood of the "Beehive" and "Dochfour," where the hostile band were assembled on the Canal Dams. LIEUT. BRADY, with admirable precaution and presence of mind, directed, that not a shot should be fired until he and received the fire of the negroes, who were armed with plenty of fowling pieces, cutlasses, sabres, &c. &c.—he approached very close to them; a fellow deliberately aimed at him, and fired without effect—he then gave the word to fire, having formed his men into sections of six each, firing and priming in the manner called street firing—his first fire was without effect, and a tremendous yell and cheer, and great confidence was the consequence, the fire was returned repeatedly—the second fire killed three, which somewhat disconcerted them—they then endeavoured to surround him, but he perceived it and frustrated them, but found it necessary to retreat upon his post, along the Canal (which was near DR. AUSTIN'S former property) making repeated stands, and facing about and firing; as he was retreating in this manner, a fellow of great daring approached so near, as to make two successive cuts at a man of the 21st, coolly retreating with his section—he struck him on the head, but the soldier turned not, until LIEUT. BRADY cried BROWN face about, he did so, and his bayonet was through the fellow's body in an instant, and he tossed him from his bayonet into the Trench—fifteen killed of the negroes was the result of this skirmish—three of the soldiers slightly wounded. LIEUT. BRADY'S short ammunition obliged him to reserve his last round, and indeed this was a

* Letters were dispatched from one head-man to another, intimating the intended movement, and demanding whether such estate would join. A letter of this description was written for a Negro called Sandy to a driver on Dochfour, (I think,) and taken by him to the Manager, or MR. REED.

† CAPT. SIMPSON with them, but I pushed on to Success; he charged through some fellows on a bridge; he had not left the Governor five minutes when the same fellow interrupted the Governor and would not allow him to proceed on.

‡ That the King had sent out their freedom, but that their Masters and the Government here kept it from them.

§ They were assembling in his rear, a fellow sounding a conch all the time.

‖ On the side lines the Negroes were assembling, and the cry of "they are Whites, fire," was distinctly heard.

¶ Thirty men of the 21st under LIEUT. GEORGE proceeded up on Tuesday morning to Caponey, landing at Huistoderem, to communicate with the 3d Fiscal, and marching down the Coast to make a diversion, as far as Chateau Margo, from whence the bridges were broken up completely by the revolted Negroes on Monday night all along the Coast. They have had it in contemplation, and threaten to burn the kokera, ammunition placed him in a most serious and critical situation. On Tuesday the 19th August, at half past four o'clock, as soon as the tide served, a party, consisting of an officer of Artillery (LIEUT. INNES) with 2-pounders, twenty of the 21st, and twelve of the armed seamen with supplies of ammunition, &c. &c. sailed in a schooner for Mahaica where they arrived the next morning (yesterday the 20th) at three o'clock, and after Lieut. INNES attacked them again, but I believe before the junction of the artillery; the insurgents moved out a party of twelve well armed men to cut off his retreat, which he perceived, and killed six of their number, the others fled. As the troops moved up the coast they liberated from the stocks the whites who had invariably been put in irons. Some cart-whipping, with horrible lacerations are said to have taken place on two whites; beating with the flat of cutlasses has been common; several ladies have fallen into their hands, but no instances of rape have been exercised beyond intimidation. COLONEL LEAHY, of the 21st moved up the coast on Tuesday night, but up to this period nothing has been heard of him—it is confidently supposed that he has got up to Mahaica.

CAPTAIN SIMPSON'S corps of cavalry, consisting of not more than a dozen, have been very active, as far as the state of the bridges would allow them to act against the insurgents. They are at La Plaisance with a few planters, Montrose and neighbouring estates; two of which this evening (21st) brought down the Methodist Parson SMITH, and his wife, who is accused of most improper conduct. The resolution of SIMPSON has been displayed repeatedly—he has charged through them.

So many estates there has been a proportion of well disposed people, who have been forced to join the rebels under pain of losing their lives; the head driver on Nonpareil was of this description, I am told, but he was shot by the insurgents.

The reports received this day (21st) are more favourable, representing the negroes on many estates to be returning, with evident dread of alarm on their countenances; they have assembled in great numbers at the back of Success (the focus of the rebellion) and something seems to be in agitation—it is supposed the Mahaica troops have encountered and driven them back on this point. The Governor has issued a Proclamation, encouraging the negroes who have not resolved, and holding out to them the amelioration in contemplation; he has sent up to inform the negroes at the back of Success, that no quarter will be given them after 24 hours if they do not lay down their arms, and offers of amnesty to all but leaders of this rebellion.

The militia and all classes have turned out with great and becoming alacrity—the crews of the shipping, about 300, have been armed, and display the characteristic eagerness of this brave class; and in George Town, after all the detachments, we can muster about 800 bayonets, but a great proportion have never had arms in their hands; 80 of the 21st remain in garrison; these, with the seamen and the militia, artillery company, with the Militia Grenadier Company, and perhaps a few others, complete the present defence of the town—I mean the defence most to be relied upon—the others are of the description above mentioned.

On Tuesday, at five o'clock, sailed a despatch for Barbadoes; we cannot have a reinforcement here under a week from this day; our situation is indeed critical, not for the defence of George Town, for I think we can keep it, but if the flame spread George Town alone will be our only possession in this once flourishing colony. Success and Le Ressouvair are Methodist estates, to these may be added Bachelor's Adventure; these three estates have been the hot-beds of the rebellion, and the greatest atrocities and much determined insurrection have been displayed.

The following are the letters to which we have alluded, and which have not yet been published:—

Extracts of Letters from Demerara, from a Gentleman of the highest respectability, who has been long resident (upwards of thirty years) in the Colony, and a Member of one of the Courts, dated 22d August, 1823.

No. I.

A very formidable and extensive revolt has taken place among the negroes on the East coast of this river, extending from Turkeyen to Plantation Grove, in consequence of the proceedings at home. The chief foci of it are Posts Place and Bachelor's Adventure. They have not murdered any whites, I believe, as yet, but put them all in the stocks, and seized their arms and ammunition, reserving them for punishment in case of success. Your friend S—— had a narrow escape, and is now safe, but his house was demolished. In the above-mentioned range, several estates remained faithful; but it will be difficult for the negroes on them to preserve their neutrality. The whites were put in the stocks, not by their own negroes, but by those of the neighbouring estates, which seems to have been a general plan, that the perpetrators might not be so readily recognized. The Governor and suite rode up as far as Posts in the evening (18th Aug.), and it was with some difficulty that he got back, some shots being fired at him; he had some conversation with a party of them in front of Posts, and told them what was intended to be done for them, and they asked him what comfort would that be to them? and told him that nothing but unqualified emancipation would satisfy them. While he was speaking with them, the shots were fired, and he was obliged to depart. Their intention was to break up all the bridges; but as the advanced parties were so quick upon them, they only succeeded with a few. Every thing is quiet beyond Mahaica as far as Berbice, and in other parts of the colony, and there is no appearance of dissatisfaction as yet; how long it will continue so, God only knows! Very strong parties of military and militia have been sent out against them, and several skirmishes have taken place, which have been always fatal to the blacks. They got possession of all the arms and ammunition of the militia on the coast, which renders them so much the more formidable. Colonel Leahy had yesterday a considerable action with the revolters, who tried to shut him up betwixt two bridges, one party of a thousand or thereabout taking its stand at one bridge, and another party of the same strength at the other bridge. He attacked them both at the same time, and drove them off, killing from a hundred to a hundred and fifty.

No. II.

From the same, dated the 23th Aug. 1823.

I wrote you on the 22d, giving you some account of our insurrection, which took place on the 18th in the evening; at that time it was uncertain how it would end, but at this time the matter seems nearly finished, and favourably for us, at least all present opposition has ceased, and those negroes that have remained out are either daily caught, or coming in, and it is supposed that there cannot be more than forty or fifty remaining out at this time. We owe a great deal to the firm and decided conduct of COLONEL LEAHY of the 21st. Immediately before the action he had with the rebels in the front of Bachelor's Adventure, they thought they were sure of having caught him, for while they were parleying with him, and pretending to listen to his exhortations to lay down their arms, they were gathering together from all quarters to surround him, from up the coast and down the coast, many on horse-back, and about one thousand of them took their stand at the bridge on the side of Paradise, and as many on that of Elizabeth Hall, and about three hundred in the Cotton on his front, having two hundred armed with muskets. He had with him only about two hundred, consisting of thirty of the Demerara Rifle Corps, Militia, and the remainder of the 21st and Black West India Regiment. The negroes stood three volleys, and lost more than was reported at first.

The Methodist Parson at Posts place is deeply implicated I understand, and is said to be the chief instigator of the revolt, by telling the negroes they were free and ought to assert their freedom.

No. III.

Since writing the above it appears, from the evidence that has been given, that the insurrection was to have been general throughout the colony; a great many have been taken up in town as accomplices. The setting fire to the town was to have been the signal for the River and West Coast to rise, but the beating to arms in town, and the sudden and unexpected appearance of the military upon the East Coast that night gave an immediate check to it in town and its vicinity, and prevented its being so general on the East Coast as was intended. Their ostensible motive was to force immediate compliance with the orders the Governor was supposed to have received in their favour, and which, it had been represented to them by PARSON SMITH, was withheld by him in connivance with the planters.

The white men were to have been massacred in the most cruel manner, and the white women were to have been kept for wives. The lives of the whites on the coast were only saved by the military coming so unexpectedly upon the rebels the first night, which staggered them and made them hesitate to put them to death; some were, however, killed they need not hope to escape with their lives; three were only killed, and many very ill used.

If the people of England suppose it possible for the whites to retain dominion of the Colonies, the blacks being free, they labour under a very great infatuation; they will never submit in that case to any other domination than that of their own colour, which would be much more rigid than that of the whites. The consequence of the Government forcing any considerable changes approaching to emancipation, would be, in the first instance, the destruction of a great many blacks, and afterwards, before very long, the destruction or expulsion of the whites. Can you not get us relieved from the Methodist preachers, and send us respectable Curates from England of the Established Church in their place, whom we would willingly pay liberally.

No. IV.

Extract, dated Aug. 31, 1823:—

Since my last we are getting on a little better, and all danger for the present is in my opinion done away; still, however, matters are far from being settled. We certainly had a narrow escape, for had they had way. The two Missionary parsons (MESSRS. SMITH and ELLIOTT) are both under close confinement; every negro that has yet been tried, accuses the former person with instigating them to commit the act. You would be astonished to see the correspondence these rascals have been carrying on with the head people on almost every estate on the east coast.

THE Laureate has preduced the first volume of his History of the Peninsular War. In point of general ability, perhaps, there is no living author so well qualified to have undertaken this arduous task—in extent of resources, and in local knowledge connected with the history of Spain, he stands pre-eminently above any contemporary competition. It is not our province, however, to consider the work—having once ascertained its accuracy and authenticity—further than as it bears upon questions of national interest and inter-national policy.

Whether designedly or accidentally we pretend not to decide, but never did a work appear at so seasonable a period, for the purpose of dispelling the clouds of ignorance and delusion, which it has been the object of the WHIGS to raise before the eyes of the people, and of exposing in the clearest colours the bare-faced and profligate inconsistency of that domestic faction. We do not mean that MR. SOUTHEY has descended from the dignity of his subject, to castigate these gentlemen individually or en masse—he has merely brought together the history of events upon which the judgment of posterity, as well as the present age, will decide respecting the conduct and policy of governments and public men. The simple narrative—without a single passing comment—without uplifting a finger to point the inference—is amply sufficient to shew, that since the first dawn of party spirit in this country there never has been exhibited such a destitution of principle—such shameless abandonment of the common feelings of Englishmen, or so unnatural a combination against the essential interests of the country, in favour of every bosclle faction, foreign or domestic, as in the intrigues and cabals of the WHIGS respecting the affairs of SPAIN, from the first monstrous aggression of BUONAPARTE down to the present moment.

The country need not be informed or reminded of the nature and tendency of the WHIG PROVOCATIVES to war against France during the last Session of Parliament. It must be equally unnecessary to enlarge upon the policy of this country, under all the circumstances of the difficulties through which she was beginning to see her way—in avoiding, except as an imperious necessity on some great national crisis, to involve itself in renewed hostilities. It may however be necessary—or, if not necessary, a wholesome exercise of our memory—to retrace the posture of affairs, and the crisis of Spain when England was really called upon to unsheathe the sword in her defence, and which never slept in its scabbard until it had driven every enemy from the soil it had invaded, to the very gates of its own metropolis. A crisis, presenting, we have no hesitation to affirm, the result of a series of progressive crime, treachery, and oppression on the part of the "Child and Champion of Jacobinism," marked in characters of deeper and blacker colours than can be found in any one insulated chapter of history—the MASSACRE OF ST. BARTHOLOMEW itself included!—A crisis which awakened the native spirit of Britain in its fullest energy, and left untouched ALONE the cold-hearted selfish dogmatism of a domestic faction, which palliated and advocated the principles of MACHIAVEL, for the first time openly working under the sanguinary agency of a second ALVA. The WHIGS ALONE of all Europe—saving and excepting always their partisans and agents, and hireling writers, beheld with apathy the subjugation of two kingdoms by an unprincipled military despot—and where they dared not openly advocate the CAUSE of PROSCRIPTION, BLOOD, and MASSACRE, they laboured to give effect to it, by depreciating the resources and means of those who prepared to oppose or avenge it!

"The train of perfidy," justly observes MR. SOUTHEY, "whereby BUONAPARTE had thus far accomplished his purpose, is unexampled even in the worst ages of history. The whole transaction was a business of pure, unmingled TREACHERY,—unprovoked, unextenuated, equally detestable in its motive, means, and end!" He alludes to the seizure of the Spanish Royal Family, and NAPOLEON'S impudent aggression in placing his brother JOSEPH on the Throne from which he had dragged the captive King.

In all this the WHIGS saw nothing to justify the "Quixotic attempts," as they openly called them, of our Ministers, urged on by the manly voice of the British People, in opposing the career of their political idol, BUONAPARTE! "The PEOPLE "might avenge themselves," exclaimed the WHIGS, "if they "felt aggrieved!" What an undisciplined people could do, the inhabitants of Madrid did do.

"The indignation and hatred of the Spaniards," continues MR. SOUTHEY, "which had so long been repressed, now "broke forth"—that is, on the seizure of Madrid by MURAT'S army.—"As fast as the alarm spread, every man of the lower "ranks who could arm himself with any kind of weapon, ran "to attack the French"—of whom there were in, and about Madrid 50,000—as friends and allies! "There is," the historian observes, "no other instance on record, of an attempt so "brave, and so utterly hopeless, when all circumstances are "considered." They did what men in desperation could do, we repeat, to rescue themselves from the villainy and treachery through which they had been subjugated—but—gentle reader —they fought for their KING—and they fell under the butchering swords of the imperial despot, without one word or look of sympathy from the "friends of civil and religious freedom "all over the world," or the WHIGS, who, in their veneration for BUONAPARTE, seem to have literally transferred the constructive infallibility of our constitutional maxim to the moral and political conduct of their Corsican idol.

Be that as it may, the people of Madrid were massacred in cold blood—and in cold blood was the account received by the WHIGS, who only laughed at the blockheads who supposed they could resist the "INVINCIBLE ARMS OF FRENCH HEROES." We refer to the pages of the CHRONICLE, and other WHIG vehicles of patriotism of the period, for all that we assert.

Well—we will admit that these efforts and struggles for deliverance from foreign invasion and plunder were rash—and God knows, the people suffered sufficiently for their rashness. "They fled when they felt the superiority of the French into "the houses—the doors were broken open by command of the "Generals of Brigade, GUILLOT and DAUBRAI, and ALL "within, who were found with arms, were bayoneted."

Good! We will agree with the WHIGS, that when the soldiers were attacked by the mob of Madrid, it was justifiable, without adverting to the merits of the cause, to repulse them in self-defence;—although—according to some more recent WHIG opinions—the principle is not of universal application. We make, therefore, due allowance for the effects of danger, irritation, and exasperation, and are ready to admit that nothing was left to the French army in fighting in the streets of Madrid, under the orders of an imperial sharper, who had purloined the Sovereign and swindled the people out of their government, but to cut and hack, and fire away, until they had cleared the field of their new fellow-subjects—still we may be disposed to question the absolute necessity of "firing "vollies into every cross street as they passed, and firing also "at the windows and balconies," or "of stationing parties of "cavalry at the different outlets, to pursue and cut down those "who were flying from the town," to escape butchery in their own houses.

Let that pass however—and let us attend to the historian of the event.

"It might then have been hoped that the carnage of this dreadful day was ended—the slaughter among the Spaniards had been very great. This, however, did not satisfy MURAT; conformably to the system of his master, the work of death was to be continued in cool blood. A military tribunal, under GENERAL GROUCHY, was formed, and the Spaniards who were brought before it were sent away to be slaughtered, with little inquiry whether they had taken part in the struggle or not. Three groups, of forty each, were successively shot in the Prado, the great public walk of Madrid—others, in like manner, were put to death near the Puerta del Sol and the Puerta del S. Vicente, and by the Church of N. Senora de la Soledad, one of the most sacred places in the city. In this manner was the evening of the second of May employed by the French at Madrid. The inhabitants were ordered to illuminate their houses, a necessary means of safety for their invaders in a city not otherwise lighted; and through the whole night, the dead and the dying might be seen distinctly as in broad noon-day, lying upon the bloody pavements. When the morning came, the same mockery of justice was continued, and fresh murders were committed deliberately with the forms of military execution during several succeeding days."

People forget the impression made upon their minds by passing events, as the interests of intervening years present fresh topics of interest or observation; but, in reverting to scenes like these, as matter of history, no man can fail to retrace and renew the feelings of abhorrence and disgust which were originally excited in his bosom by the atrocious, unmixed, and unprovoked cruelty of an armed despot, whom the WHIGS justified and upheld in the plenitude of his abused power—and whom at this very hour they concentrate and apply their whole influence and industry to represent as a virtuous, oppressed, and innocent VICTIM!

And will posterity believe that the men composing this faction, of PROFESSING WHIGS, could in the face of Europe take side with a despot against the liberties of a persecuted nation—will those who read the history of the present times find any precedent to warrant—and will they therefore give credit to the record which shall represent these very WHIGS urging their countrymen in the same spirit of delusion to rush into a war, to hazard the salvation of the country which they have declared to be contingent upon the preservation of peace, and to rouse Europe in arms against us for—for what? To aid the same Spaniards who required no aid at our hands—to rivet the chains of TYRANNY under its most hideous form of REPUBLICANISM upon a people who joyfully hailed the French, against whom as one man they arose when THEY REALLY CAME TO USURP THEIR RIGHTS, and whom they have welcomed as DELIVERERS from one end of the Peninsular to the other!

But we are indifferent as to the inferences of posterity. The WHIGS have, to use a colloquial expression, "made their own bed," and they must lie chained to it to the latest period of time. It is with the present generation that we have to do—in whose welfare we are most essentially interested—and in this point of view every fresh proof of the blindness and fatuity of the WHIG FACTION, we consider to have its uses—inasmuch as it adds another bar to the possibility of the Interests of the empire ever being entrusted to their hands! We have hitherto only considered the inconsistency and want of principle which has marked the career of men who are content at one time to receive the word of command from LORD GRENVILLE, and at another from MR. HUME—HYPERION or a SATYR!—But what shall we say to their judgment, their foresight—their skill and ability, to discern and penetrate the probable issue of events? Rogues have too frequently the redeeming quality of talent to atone for, or at least to support their crooked policy—but the system of WHIGGERY appears to be one of daily expedients, without even an anticipation of what may befall them on the morrow. They are like MR. COLQUHOUN'S fifty thousand vagabonds, who, we are told, rise every morning in this great town, without knowing where they may rest their heads at night.

With facts staring them in the face—from the first passage over the frontier of Spain, it was clear and evident that the great mass of the Spanish people received the French as their deliverers. It is not for us to decide whether they were right in preferring the old monarchy with "all its imperfections on its head," to a government founded on free principles—but it is clear from the Jacobinical leaven of the new Constitutionalists, that the country was on the very brink of anarchy and conscription, and that the people at large detested and abhorred the LIBERALS, who had usurped the powers of the monarchy, and were following in full career the bloody footsteps of their great models and precursors, the JACOBINS of FRANCE. WE have from the beginning objected to the POLICY of the French in interfering—because we thought there was a hazard of combining men in a common cause against what might be considered an invading army—and by that means giving a temporary strength and popularity to the bitterest enemies and depreciators of civil and religious liberty—the LIBERALS! But with all our predilections in favour of the righteous cause, we could not have calculated upon the extensive and prevailing loyalty and good sense of the Spanish people, amid the practical illusions of a predominant faction, which have rendered the progress of their French emancipators from the Pyrenees to Cadiz, one scarcely interrupted MARCH OF TRIUMPH. Enough, however, was known to warrant the firm conviction that such an army, aided by the great mass of the people must ultimately overcome all the obstacles which a tumultuary faction could throw in their way. The WHIGS, on the contrary, in their blind zeal against all legitimate and established governments, saw nothing but disgrace and disaster in the attempt—and staked their reputation—so often in pawn—and so rarely redeemed—that the people of Spain would hurl back destruction upon the devoted heads of their invaders.

It may be said, that it was their policy to make this avowal—not a bit of it: they were fools enough to believe it—and their stupid and blundering creatures, in their daily journals, called upon their readers to discredit every account of French success—and even in the last and final catastrophe at Cadiz, seriously invoked the public "not to be over hasty in crediting the fact!"

What may be the result of the overthrow of the Jacobin Constitution in Spain no man can presume to say; but of this fact we can no longer doubt—that the voice of the people, in Portugal, has contributed to, and rejoices in, its fall, and that the affected sympathy of the WHIGS for the patriotic cause in the Peninsula has ended—like their memorable dancing subscription—in one of the most ridiculous farces that was ever displayed before the eyes of their countrymen.

If the Quixote WILSON ever shew his face again in the country—or return a newspaper reporter, like Sancho NUGENT—all we have to say is, that the WHIGS, and their adherents, and their scouts, have more brass about them than ever yet brightened the physiognomy of Empiricism—and more reliance upon the gullibility of John Bull, than even their illustrious predecessor, the BOTTLE CONJUROR!

Let the English people just revert to all the affirmations, boasts, and assurances of these men—let them turn to the scarcely dry files of the CHRONICLES and TIMES, and reperuse the decent wit and drollery exercised—(what a pity it should be lost!)—upon the French Marshals and General Hill!—Let them enjoy all this—and laugh at, or hoot the blockheads as they sit spinning new webs at their looms in the Strand or Blackfriars—but let them then seriously turn to the graver object, which these mischievous and unprincipled men had in view, and, thank their stars, that they seconded the moderate councils of Ministers, and preserved the country in a state of peace—let them recollect that had WHIG COUNCILS or WHIG PROVOCATIONS prevailed, we should at this hour have been at war—probably with all the leading powers of Europe—our fortunes, our blood oozing at every pore, to support—not the people of Spain—but the power of a JACOBIN FACTION, against whom the people themselves have risen, as against OPPRESSORS and TYRANTS.

For what we have avoided let us be truly thankful. It is not the lives of our fellow-countrymen alone, nor their treasures, nor all the inroads made upon public prosperity by a state of warfare, which the Whigs were so eager to offer up to the combined spirit of party—and hostility against legitimate monarchy—it is not from these alone, vast as they are, that have been rescued by foresight and sound policy—we have been saved from the contempt which must have been engendered and entailed upon us—if, after the most splendid series of successes which ever adorned the page of our history, in the cause of CIVIL and RELIGIOUS LIBERTY against ANARCHY and ATHEISM, we had been driven into aggressive warfare against OUR OWN PRINCIPLES, and thus tarnished our laurels by supporting a REVOLUTIONARY FACTION, sprung from the embers of FRENCH JACOBINISM, and kindled into a flame which should carry rapine and desolation to every throne in Europe! Be thankful, Englishmen—and again we say, beware of Whiggery—it is not of its principles we complain, but of its total want of all principle—its aptness to assume any, as it may present itself, and its ready adoption of THE WORST if it suit its purpose.

MESSRS. BUXTON, WILBERFORCE, MACAULEY, &c.

THIS generous nation, always ready and willing to bestow its thanks and praises where they are justly due, cannot, and will not, we are sure withhold their gratitude to the exemplary persons whose names grace the head of this article. In the glorious display of all the generous sympathies of humanity, in the unprejudiced exertions of philanthropy, in the religious observance of all moral obligations, in the love of tranquillity, and the destruction of slavery, these British worthies have rendered their names immortal, but they have gained a still more glorious immortality by their exertions in behalf of their suffering black brethren in our colonies.

Those, who like ourselves, are disposed to render every just tribute to such unbounded liberality, will devote some portion of their time, perhaps, to the consideration of the question—how the national feeling of respect and admiration may best be expressed? Previous, however, to hiring rooms and reporters, or opening our subscription books, we recommend an attentive perusal of the following accounts from DEMERARA:—Our letters from SAINT LUCIA—from NEVIS—from BARBADOES, which give us reason to apprehend that the actual REBELLION and INSURRECTION, consequent upon the agitation of the question of NEGRO EMANCIPATION, will not be a solitary testimonial of the services which MESSRS. BUXTON, WILBERFORCE, MACAULEY, and Co. have already rendered to their country, and which demand the expression of public feeling to which we have ventured to move our readers.

The insurrection broke out in August, and the Governor was obliged to put the colony under Martial Law on the 19th of that month, having been fired at, while driving out with his Aide-du-Camp. Military preparations were immediately made and the rebels defeated. The official details will be found in the letter from the Governor, but we look more to the cause than the effect, and therefore prefer laying before our readers a private letter, where the caution which a distant Governor must necessarily adopt in a public despatch is dispensed with, and where the motives and views of the conspirators are distinctly stated: one letter dated August 22d, says:—

"I have now the painful duty to advert to a most serious and calamitous event—no less a one than the revolt of the slaves in a populous and considerable district—the east sea coast of this colony. No official or other bulletin is published of the proceedings, as well as I have been able to understand the matter. I give you a brief detail.

"On the morning of the 18th inst. Mr. Alex. Simpson, who resides about seven miles from town, had received information from a confidential and faithful servant, that the slaves on his neighbourhood had for some time past been holding numerous secret nocturnal meetings, and particularly at a Methodist meeting-house land by a person, the head men or leaders (not without strong suspicion that one or two white incendiaries assisted,) asserted that KING GEORGE and the people of England had decreed the manumission of the whole of them, and that if was unjustly withheld by the Governor, the Court of Policy, and the white inhabitants—that they would not wait any longer, but determined that Monday night the 18th should be the time to assert and maintain their liberty, and that they would rise in a body—that sham fights should be created in the negro houses, and when the managers and overseers went out to enquire into the causes of the disturbance, a resolute party should seize possession of the dwelling-houses, of the fire arms, &c. spare the lives of some, by only confining them in the stocks, and murder others who were obnoxious to them. SIMPSON immediately came down with the intelligence to our Governor MURRAY, who at first was slow of belief. However, towards the evening, he drove up the coast, and met a party of the insurgents, with whom he had a short parley. He told them of the proposed improvements or melioration that had been ordered or recommended by his Majesty's Ministers; and was answered that it was satisfaction at all, and that they would be free, or would fight for their freedom. On which he and his aid-de-camp turned homewards, and were saluted with three musket shots, which did not take effect."

On the same night the attack of military posts was commenced by the negroes, and the writer remarks as singular—in which WE see nothing strange, knowing the nature of negroes—that "the most pampered and indulged blacks have been the most active in the rebellion."

Much praise appears to be due to COLONEL LEAHY, and indeed all the military and naval force; but we cannot look upon the accounts which we collect as anything but ominous of still more extensive and destructive insurrections. One writer says—

"Our E. B. M. was called upon four days ago to join a party of the militia, ordered to the East Coast, where they and a detachment of the 21st Regiment have since been actively engaged; there are several hundreds of the rebels killed, yet their revolutionary feelings do not subside; and from the arrangement going forward, and the military they have to contend with, very serious mortality must ensue. So much for the propriety and policy of MR. BUXTON'S motion."

The proceedings of the insurgents bore a great similitude to those of the negroes concerned in the rebellion occasioned by the Slave Registry motion. The whites were invariably fastened in the stocks, and reserved, doubtless, for death, had not a superior force released them.

The following postscript to a letter received at Glasgow, is anything but satisfactory:—

"P.S. All was very quiet in Berbice, up to yesterday afternoon."

This, as we read it, sounds ill for those who have property in BERBICE.

It becomes, however, our duty to add, that a conspiracy of greater magnitude, and of much more threatening aspect, has been discovered in CUBA, which, from its proximity to SAINT DOMINGO, possesses facilities for the removal of a military force from that island to the aid of the rebels, which renders the existence of commotions there extremely formidable, not only to CUBA itself, (which our readers know commands the entrance of the Gulfs of Mexico and Florida, as well as the windward passages), but to our West Indian possessions generally.

The following letter has appeared in the MORNING POST during the week, which we lay before our readers.

"HAVANNAH, SEPT. 1, 1823.—More important discoveries have been made with regard to the plot mentioned in my last. The three principal conspirators, knowing that the majority of the independent party would not consent to their calling in the assistance of the negroes, and aware, at the same time, that without it they could not succeed, had secretly made terms with them. The negroes, upon this, finding of how much consequence they were, counterplotted, with the intention of rising in 15 days after the declaration of the Independence, and murdering all the male whites without exception, whether of the Independents or Government party. Deputations were appointed to swear in all the negroes, particularly the Calereros, or drivers of the Volantes, and of whom families who keep Volantes have generally two or three resident in their houses. The white women, however, were to be spared. The aged ones to be sent away from the island, and the younger ones kept for wives. These double conspirators were to have been joined by 10,000 men from St. Domingo, ready to embark, upon receiving by express, from the south of the island, an account of the rising. The island was then to have been divided between the negroes and mulatoes. Such is the outline of this extraordinary counterplot. Much praise is due to the Governor for his conduct throughout this affair; and I trust that, in my next, I may be able to tell you that tranquillity is restored; at present necessarily the public mind is much agitated. Property has considerably fallen in value; as, for instance, an estate valued at 500,000 dollars, is offered by the proprietor for 100,000 dollars cash!"

The whole of the information received upon this important head proves the soundness and wisdom of the conduct adopted by the saints and philanthropists in England: the last paragraph is a striking testimonial of its justice, and its honesty. We shall resume this subject next week, when, we fear, we shall have more materials to work upon.

THEATRICALS.

THE Haymarket closed a most successful season on Wednesday—the profits are said to exceed five thousand pounds, which, when it is recollected that the theatre did not cost more than eighteen thousand, in building, will be considered very good interest for the money raised—the success has been merited, and but for the one oversight of losing JONES, our praises of the zeal and activity of the manager would have been unqualified.

Three performers were engaged to fill parts which JONES himself performed—the salaries of these three performers more than doubled that, which JONES would have received, and none of the characters which the new triumvirate divided amongst themselves, were so well or so satisfactorily filled as they would have been by the original actor, who was to be had, but who perhaps asked higher terms than the manager thought it prudent to give.

With this little exception we have no fault to find. The play of "Sweethearts and Wives," and the farce of "Fish out of Water," have given LISTON new opportunities of displaying his superior powers. TERRY has during the season made such rapid strides towards the very top of his profession, as to leave him little more to do; while the united charms of MADAME VESTRIS, the lovely LOVE, and the magnificent CHESTER, have drawn after them, nightly crowds of admirers, who are left to mourn the closing of the house as the termination of that interesting acquaintance with popular actresses, which is so agreeably maintained behind the scenes of the Haymarket, but which is not permitted within the classical walls of the larger theatres.

At Covent Garden, YOUNG has made his re-appearance in HAMLET, and we must say we never remember to have seen him to greater advantage; perhaps if we were to select any particular passage of his performance as better than another, we should mention the play scene; the affected attention to the solemn mockery, and the real interest with which he watched the KING, were masterly. In short, the whole performance was of the highest character, and richly deserved the enthusiastic applause with which it was greeted.

BLANCHARD'S POLONIUS was quaint, sharp, and smart—and FAWCETT'S GRAVE-DIGGER was extremely effective; we have hartily ever seen the QUEEN better performed; in the closet scene MRS. FAUCIT was terribly excellent;—but where shall we find words adequate to the praise of MISS TREE'S OPHELIA?—It is seldom that we see combined in the same actress, beauty and grace, and vocal and dramatic talent. In this young lady we have all. It is evident, therefore, that in such hands OPHELIA must have been every thing that its most fastidious critic could desire.

We are grieved to say, for the honour of their taste, that the GODS were particularly uproarious, and that the early part of the performance were frequently interrupted—it was, however, impossible that this indifference and inattention could last long, in a theatre where YOUNG acted and MISS TREE sang.

At Drury Lane, MR. MACREADY, transplanted from some other house, opened his career in VIRGINIUS, one of those melo-dramatic tragedies which peculiarly suit the ventriloquism of what are called natural actors, and his reception was very flattering.

MR. MACREADY is a clever performer, and moreover a clever man—he is a scholar, and, we are told, a person of refined manners, gentlemanly habits, and classical pursuits—it must therefore be extremely painful to him to witness the ill-judged puffery with which he is bedaubed in all the morning papers. We do not allude to his gallant preservation of a fellow-creature, or his own modest concealment of the fact—there he cannot be too much lauded; but really and truly the "empty praises" bestowed upon him day after day by the theatrical critics, savour so much of "solid pudding," that if we were not quite convinced of MR. MACREADY'S superiority to such conduct, we should be inclined to think them what the actor who wrote to us last week calls, "proofs of gratitude" for value received. Such exaggerated commendation does more harm than good—perhaps a specimen of what we mean may not be unacceptable. We extract the critique from the Courier, but whether it was originally published in that paper or quoted from one of the morning prints, we are unable to say.

"DRURY-LANE.—MR. MACREADY made his first appearance at this Theatre last night, in the character of Virginius, and met one of the most enthusiastic receptions that we ever witnessed in a theatre. Long before the curtain rose, the pit and galleries were crowded to excess, and the dress boxes soon filled with the elegant ladies for whom they had been reserved. At the entrance of MR. MACREADY he was greeted with an astounding burst of cheers from all parts of the house, accompanied with clapping of hands, waving of hats, and other marks of welcome and admiration. Departing as little as possible from the character of Virginius, he stood before the audience, and acknowledged their first greeting by a slight and dignified inclination of the head, and then only expressed by his countenance the deep sense which he evidently entertained of their warmth and kindness. This real scene lasted for some minutes, and it was one of the highest triumphs which an actor could ever hope to acquire.

"His performance on this occasion was one of the happiest efforts of the histrionic art. The part of Virginius does not limit the actor to the developement and delineation of a solitary passion.—It pourses nature in her wilder paths of revenge and horror; but it follows her likewise into the quiet sanctuary of domestic pathos. And whether it be the denunciation of the designing villain—in the agony of the father at the moment of the dreadful sacrifice,—or in the discovery of his daughter's love, and the soul-moving scene where he subsequently betroths her to Icilius—MACREADY was always nature. The situations of the deepest interest were seized by him with an intensity of feeling which communicated itself to the audience, and kept them spell-bound until they were released to express their admiration by the most vehement applauses. We never saw him act the forum scene, altogether, in so fine a spirit.—First, his resolute determination in confronting Claudius, then his look of despair when the troops surround them; and lastly, the few terrible moments after he has secured the knife, and is looking upon his child and folding her in his arms. These were points which rivalled each other in excellence, and which left ONE of those impressions upon the mind which ARE NEVER TO BE FORGOTTEN. But if we were to select any one scene in which he more especially out-did his former doings, it would be that in which all the transitions of restraint and impetuous impatience, and ultimately of distracted and indignant apprehension, are drawn forth by the reluctantly delivered message, on announcing the claim of Claudius upon his daughter as a slave. If MR. MACREADY always acted thus, we could never be tired of praising him; but praise would become unnecessary.

"The killing of Appius was an appalling example of what LORD BACON calls 'wild justice.' The softened and subdued feelings of the partly-recovered Virginius, on the presentation of his daughter's ashes, were excellently depicted. The convulsive sob with which he repeats her name was an echo as true to nature as it was honourable to the successful and triumphant art of the performer."

After this, it may be needless for us to add that MR. MACREADY played the part as well as he usually does, that he was very well received, and that the house for the time of year was very well attended.

While we are on the subject of puffing, perhaps the following trash had better be exposed—the morning papers say:—

"MR. SINCLAIR'S friends adopt every possible precaution to prevent his voice from suffering by the change of climate. The temperature of the air in his room is regulated with the greatest nicety to a certain degree."

This MR. SINCLAIR, our readers may remember, is a singer, who performed at Covent Garden three or four years since; he has been for some time in Italy, and has just now returned to a new engagement at the same theatre. The puff is perhaps the most absurd specimen of the art ever exhibited: supposing such precautions as those mentioned to be necessary, what is to become of his engagement, after singing one miserable December night, with thawing snow in the streets, and a choking fog in the house?—We should advise this delicate person to accustom himself to the climate and manners of his country, and either prevent the publication of such ridiculous HUMBUG, or else betake himself to ITALY again, where he may keep his voice in its present state, without taking such painful precautions himself, or giving the smallest uneasiness to anybody else.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR,—In astronomy we are left uninformed of many things, which, unresolved, materially shake the foundation of that sublime science; there is one point that I have often attempted to solve, but which, spite of all my endeavours, has considerably puzzled me.

It is said, on account of the revolution of the earth round the sun, that we are at one period of the year 90,000,000 miles nearer a star than at another period, but that so great is the distance between them and us that we see no visible alteration in their size—would some one of your numerous readers, possessed of sufficient information, inform us at what distance we should lose the sight of a star, and at what distance it would appear of larger dimensions.—I am, Sir, yours, &c.

D. ASTROLOGICUS.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR—Having read in your Paper of last Sunday some account respecting the use of the Treadmill in the island of Trinidad, I beg leave just to give you the fact of the circumstance attending the accident when one of the negroes was put in to work. He actually, from design, pushed his leg through the tread-board, choosing to break his leg rather than work. The Governor immediately ordered the wheel to be lined inside, and thus prevented what many refractory slaves would have done rather than work in any manner, in any way.

Respecting the operation of the mill-wheel, altogether taken, it is so made, that the weight of motion can be exactly suited to the strength of the person to work it—even if very young.

You have so very justly borne testimony to the humane, well-known character of SIR RALPH WOODFORD, that it would be useless in me to pay any compliment to you upon that act of public justice.

I cannot help, Sir, feeling gratified that in this country there is one Paper, at least, like the watchful Eagle, that keeps so good a look out upon the vile crew that take such pleasure in casting an odium upon the characters of every public man who receives the approbation of his Sovereign and country.—I remain, Sir, your most obedient, humble servant,

Doctors' Commons, Oct. 16, 1823.

WESTMINSTER SESSIONS.

THURSDAY.—Wm. Waldron Kelly was indicted for assaulting Robert Hagon, Esq. in the parish of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, on the 4th of June. The defendant, a Lieutenant in the Army, was indicted for assaulting Captain Hagon of the Navy; who had been on record for a considerable time, the most difficult service on the African coast for a considerable time, and had obtained the highest testimonials of character from his superiors. The assault complained of took place at the Hungerford Coffee-house, where Capt. Hagon was a lodger at the time. Mr. C. Phillips, counsel for the defendant, said that he was far from denying that an assault had taken place in the coffee-room, and on the part of the defendant he offered an apology in the Court which would no doubt be sufficient for Capt. Hagon. No doubt Capt. Hagon had been insulted, and by Lieut. Kelly, in a moment of irritation; therefore such an apology was due as one Gentleman ought to make to another. Mr. Phillips was due as one Gentleman ought to make to another. Mr. Phillips then, on behalf of the defendant, expressed his sorrow for what had occurred, which was deemed amply sufficient by the prosecutor, and under the direction of the Chairman (F. Conat, Esq.) a verdict of Guilty was returned.

The Messenger was placed at the bar, charged with defrauding the Hon. Charles Henry Trevor of a gelding, value 50l. under false pretences. This was a case of fraud respecting chaunting horses; but fortunately for the defendant, the prosecutor some time ago had the misfortune to be thrown from his horse in the country, which occasioned his death. It appeared that the defendant had forfeited his recognizances, which he had not paid into Court, and was ordered to be detained.

A wretch named Mumford, possessing the outward garb of a man, was put to the bar, on an indictment charging him with grossly indecent conduct towards two children, the eldest of whom was not more than nine years of age, in Hyde Park, on the 17th of August last. Verdict—Guilty. Sentence—Twelve months hard labour in the House of Correction.

Fanny John Tennis was indicted for stealing, on the 17th of September, a handkerchief, the property of Robert Scandler, from the person. The prosecutor stated, that on the night of the 17th Sept. he caught the prisoner with his hand in his pocket, and taking out the handkerchief, which he handed to one of his companions, who made off. A constable who was near the spot (Covent Garden Theatre) saw the robbery committed by the prisoner. The prisoner denied all knowledge of the robbery; he was the chief support of his mother.—The Jury, without hesitation, returned a verdict of guilty.—The Court said, that owing to the prevalence of this species of crime, it must be prevented as much as possible, and ordered the prisoner to be transported for seven years.—The prisoner was a well known character, and has been repeatedly in custody.

Case of Appeal.—The appellant, Mr. Grover, kept a public house, at the corner of Lisle-street, Soho; the conviction against him was, that he had his house open at an unseasonable hour—that is, about a quarter before twelve at night; hence he had been convicted in the penalty of 10s. being the first offence. If publicans would stand out against these representations, knowing, as they all did, the Magistrates' mind, they ought to become subject to animadversion.—The conviction was read, by which it appeared that it was not set out that the defendant lived in "the parish of St. Ann, Soho."—On account of this misnomer, the conviction could not be sustained, and it was consequently quashed.

KINGSTON SESSIONS.

THURSDAY.—An appeal was heard against an order signed by two magistrates, for stopping up a road in the parish of Chertsey. It was contended, for the stopping up of the road, that it was wholly unnecessary, and added to the expences of the parish in a very great degree. Witnesses were called, who stated their opinion that the road in question was not necessary, although it was partially used, and was a shorter way to some places which were frequented by those who resided in some of the populous parts of the parish. One of those witnesses, a surveyor, declared that the road was of no use whatever, and that it was, in fact, quite desolate until, from respect to Sir Henry Hotham, who resides close to it, he (the surveyor) made it passable and repaired it. He added, that the gipsies became a nuisance upon it. In support of the appeal, it was stated, that Sir Henry Hotham was the respondent in this case, on whose account this very honourable surveyor had first repaired the road, and now wished to destroy it. The appellant, because he was not wealthy, had met with scorn and derision on account of his independent and manly support of the rights of the parish; but it, because a band of gipsies might visit the gates of Sir Henry Hotham's house, the rights of a parish were to be violated, a close might be put to the law of the land on the subject, and the question referred to Sir Henry Hotham himself alone. The road could not be proved unnecessary and useless, and unless it could be proved so, the Act of Parliament did not comprehend it within its operation. The road was considerably shorter to numerous places than the main road; and was frequently used, especially when the other road was flooded; and was an old public road. Witnesses were then called, who deposed to the above-mentioned facts. The Bench deliberated and differed. A division then took place, and it was decided that the order should be confirmed by a small majority.

LATEST NEWS.

Paris papers arrived by express yesterday down to Friday. The Pilote states that Ballesteros has been arrested in consequence of the disclosures made by Riego; but this wants confirmation. Under the head of Madrid, Oct. 11, is an official article, appointing Don Victor Saez Confessor to King Ferdinand; and Major-General Don Carlos D'Amoy to be Military and Political Governor of Madrid. In a postscript to a letter from that capital, it is stated—"Cortes and Tariffa have opened their gates in obedience to the orders of the King of Spain. The Governor of Ciudad Rodrigo has demanded a suspension of arms to await the orders of the King. The troops of the line in Barcelona loudly demand that they should submit to the Regency.—General Curial has received a letter from Rotten. Barcelona ere long will be in our power."

PARIS, Oct. 16.—His Royal Highness the Duke d'Angoulême did not enter Cadiz, and there is no one who will not appreciate all the noble feeling and delicacy herein manifested. It was always as a liberator, never as a conqueror that he traversed Spain from the Bidassoa to Cadiz. He would not make his entrance into the latter city, which would have resembled a triumph. He would not appear in places which had been the prison of a Sovereign, and in which Royal Majesty had been shamefully outraged. Thus, this great character has not contradicted itself a moment; thus this magnanimous Prince daily acquires new claims to the respect of Europe, the gratitude of Spain, and the love of Frenchmen. His Royal Highness the Duke d'Angoulême will not return to Paris until the commencement of December. The Duke de Vantadour, Aid-de-Camp of the Duke d'Angoulême, arrived in Paris this morning, from head-quarters.

A Proclamation has been published, dated from Cadiz, previous to the emancipation of Ferdinand, promising forgiveness for all proceedings taken by the Cortes or those acting under them. In point of fact, this proclamation can only be regarded as the expiring effort of his gaolers to obtain some concessions favourable to themselves and their cause. It no more speaks the sentiments of the King himself, than his letters to the Duke d'Angoulême, or his Declaration of War against France.

An article from Bayonne, dated Oct. 9, says—"At Madrid it was believed that King Ferdinand would make some stop at Seville, on his way to Madrid. The trial of Riego has commenced before the Civil Tribunal, notwithstanding his military rank, and this circumstance makes it believed that he will be sacrificed. No troops now remain at Pampeluna, except the necessary garrison; all the rest are gone against Lerida, the siege of which is to be vigorously pressed."

By the St. Lucia, Captain Affleck, arrived at Liverpool from St. Lucia, which she left on the 7th of September, we learn that, though the Europeans were not free from alarm, the island remained perfectly tranquil.

A private letter from Madrid says, that accounts have been received of the death of Godoy (the Prince of Peace), who has left King Ferdinand his heir to a property of 150 million reals (a million and a half sterling).

An official communication has been issued by Mr. Secretary Canning, appointing Consular Agents to the Provinces of Spanish America, from which the most beneficial consequences may confidently be expected to result:—Mexico—Mexico, Consul General; Vera Cruz, and Acapulco, Consuls. Colombia—Santa Fé de Bogota, Consul General; La Guayra, Maracaybo, Carthagena, and Panama, Consuls. Rio de la Plata—Buenos Ayres, Consul General, and Vice Consul; and Monte Video, Consul. Chili—Valparaiso, Consul General, and two Vice Consuls. Peru—Lima, Consul General, and two Vice Consuls.

DEATH OF STEIBELT.—Paris paper.

THE ARMY.—The 93d Regiment of Foot has received orders to embark at Cork for the West Indies.—The order for the conveyance of the 62d Regiment of Infantry, from Portsmouth to Dublin, has been countermanded. The transports, viz. Vibelia, Loyal Briton and Cato, will receive the 93d Regiment, and convey it to the West Indies.—The 14th Regiment of Light Dragoons has been ordered from Radipole to Dorchester Barracks.

NORTHERN EXPEDITION.—Captain Parry arrived yesterday at the Admiralty from Whitby, at which place he landed and proceeded to town. The Hecla and Fury were continuing their passage to the River Thames. No doubt the public will feel great satisfaction at the return of Captain Parry and his brave companions from their perilous enterprize, though it is to be regretted that he has not been able to accomplish the object of his undertaking—a North-West Passage. We understand that the following is a brief summary of the proceedings of the expedition:—

In 1821, the expedition explored Repulse Bay, Sir Thomas Roe's Welcome, Middleton's Frozen Strait, and that neighbourhood, and finding no passage to the Northward and Westward, wintered in the southern bay of an island, called Winter Island, in lat. 66. 11., long. 83. In 1822, the expedition, guided and encouraged by the information they had received during the winter, from a party of Esquimaux with whom they had established a friendly intercourse, pursued their attempt to the Northward, and examined all inlets towards the West, till they arrived at a strait which separates the Northern Coast of America from what Captain Parry considers to be clusters of islands, extending Northward towards the scene of his former voyage. The great object of ascertaining the Northern limit of the Continent being thus established, Captain Parry penetrated two degrees to the Westward, with considerable expectation of final success; but in a narrow part of the strait, they found the ice fixed in that peculiar manner which indicates that it is perpetual, and not separated in any season, or under any circumstances. The expedition was therefore obliged to winter in lat. 69. 20. long. 81. 50. In the summer of this year, finding the ice still fixed to the shores, in such a manner as precluded all hope of any further progress in the neighbourhood in which he was, Captain Parry thought it advisable to give up the attempt, and return to England. The expedition has lost by illness, only Mr. Fyffe, the Greenland Master, and three seamen, and one man killed by an accident.

On Friday afternoon, about half-past five o'clock, a dreadful accident occurred in the New-road leading from the obelisk at the Elephant and Castle, to the Iron Bridge. The corner house of Melton-terrace, Borough-road, fell down with a dreadful crash, and six of the workmen employed about the premises were buried beneath the ruins. One of them, a carpenter, of the name of Parker, was killed. Another man, who was dragged out insensible, after being bloodied, was taken home in a most dangerous state. The other four escaped unhurt.

Thursday evening an inquest was held at the Pitt's Head, in Cumberland-street, Pentonville, on the body of Mrs. Eleanor Jane Maitland, aged 22, the wife of Capt. Maitland, and daughter-in-law of General Maitland. The lady's accouchement took place about three weeks since. She continued improving until Wednesday last, on which morning she expressed a wish to be dressed early, in order that she might meet Capt. Maitland, who was then expected from the Tower. She partook of some gruel, and shortly after was seized with a spasmodic affection, to which she was subject; some warm brandy and water was then given to her, and she was laid on a sofa. Medical attendance was also called in, but she expired before it arrived. The Jury, after hearing the evidence of Dr. Herbert, Surgeon Leese, the nurse, and servant, returned a verdict—"Died by the visitation of God."

A dreadful accident occurred at Dundee last week, in the house of James Stewart, tacksman of a stone-quarry at the end of Loshee. His wife, accompanied by a woman, went into an upper room, where a keg containing 25lbs. of gunpowder was deposited—a spark fell from a lamp which they held, and falling on the keg it exploded and blew off the roof; the two women were so dreadfully burnt that they expired in the course of 48 hours.

At Worship-street, yesterday, Ann Cohen, the mother of four children, was charged with stealing a gown from the shop-door of Mr. Bradley, a pawnbroker in Shoreditch, at whose shop she had just pledged an article for 2s. 6d. She was locked up.—About 12 o'clock Kennedy, one of the officers, looked into the look-up room, and perceived the poor woman to all appearance dead on the floor. He called the gaoler, who, upon unlocking the room door, saw the prisoner stretched on the floor, with her face as black as charcoal; around her neck was a handkerchief, one end of which was in each hand, her arms extended, and the handkerchief crossed around her neck; he immediately ran for Mr. Brown, a surgeon; she was taken to the Duke of Northumberland public-house, near the office. The surgeon applied many restoratives, and in about an hour she came round, and faintly repeated "Let me go home—will you?" The surgeon ordered that she should be put to bed, and her head kept high; this was done, and a draught was administered to her. The prosecutor, we understand, in consequence of this occurrence, will desist from his prosecution.

At Union Hall, on Friday, a charge was preferred against Miss Lydia Kemp of Somerset-house school, Clapham-rise, for cruelty to, and ill-treating a young lady entrusted to her care and protection for education, named Julia Larmont, aged between eleven and twelve, and whose parents reside in France. The case was most afflicting; and the Magistrate ordered Miss Lydia (who was attended by an attorney) to find bail to answer the charge at the Sessions.

PIDDING and Co. have the gratification to announce, that they sold No. 6461, a Prize of £2000, drawn last Thursday in one-eighth and 14 sixteenths, and the fortunate holders may receive the value immediately. The next day of drawing will be Friday, 31st of October. The Wheel is very rich, containing many Capitals of £20,000, £10,000, &c. &c. The Tickets are also becoming very scarce, but whilst any remain they may be obtained, warranted undrawn, at Pidding's lucky corner, No. 1, Cornhill.

Thursday last was the third day of drawing of the State Lottery, when No. 18,564 was the first of the three £20,000 Prizes, and the only one yet drawn, and was sold in Shares by BISH.—One quarter was sold to a gentleman in Hertfordshire, near Dunstable, one quarter was sent to Bristol, one eighth to Bath, one eighth to Chester, the remainder in London. Both the other £20,000 Prizes and the £10,000 are yet in the Wheel, besides several of £2000, £1000, £500, &c. &c. Warranted undrawn Tickets and Shares are selling by Bish, 4, Cornhill, and 9, Charing-cross.—Friday, 31st instant, is the next drawing day.

Many of the Newspapers having lately filled their columns with Biographies of Living Characters without acknowledging their source, it is but justice to apprize the public, that the whole are copied from that vast store-house of modern biographical information, entitled PUBLIC CHARACTERS OF ALL NATIONS, recently published in three volumes, containing particulars of 3600 distinguished Natives and Foreigners, and illustrated with 150 striking Portraits.

PHILLIPS'S HISTORY OF FRUITS.—We are requested to state, that a Third Edition of this Work is just published, enlarged with much additional information, and comprising the most approved Methods of Retarding the Ripening of Fruits, so as to insure, in all seasons, the enjoyment of those Vegetable delicacies; carious particulars of the Pine Apple, &c. This Work, when first published, was considered a production of no small merit, from the quantity of useful Information and entertaining Historical Anecdote that it contained. But if Mr. Phillips was at that time deserving of praise, for giving such a work to the public, he is now entitled to additional commendation for the pains he has taken to make it still more worthy of perusal.

We are requested to state, that the following useful Works have been lately published by MESSRS. COLBURN and CO. viz.—1. An Essay on Warm, Cold, and Vapour Bathing. By Sir Arthur Clark, M.D. &c. the 5th edition, improved. 5s. 6d. Also, by the same Author, 2. The Young Mother's Assistant in the Prevention of Diseases in Infants, a new and improved edition, 5s. 6d.; and, 3. An Essay on Diseases of the Skin, with Remarks on the Effects of Sulphureous Fumigations, 5s. 6d. 4. The Art of Preserving the Sight unimpaired to extreme Old Age, and of Re-establishing and Strengthening it when it becomes Weak. By an experienced Oculist; the 5th edition, improved, 5s. 6d. 5. The Florist's Manual, or Hints for the Construction of a Gay Flower Garden. By the Author of Botanical Dialogues; new edition, with coloured plates, 5s. 6d. 6. A New System of Practical Economy, for the Use of Families of every description, with Estimates of Household Expences; 3d edition, improved, 8s. 6d. The Estimates separately, as a Companion to the Housekeeping Book, 2s. 7. The Art of Preserving the Feet, or Practical Instructions for the Prevention and Cure of Corns, Bunions, Callosities, &c. By an experienced Chiropodist: 2d edition, 5s. 6d. And, 8. The Art of Employing Time to the Greatest Advantage, the true source of Happiness; 2d edition, 8vo. 9s. 6d.

The public curiosity still continues unceasing in collecting any object which has ever been in the possession of the late Napoleon: there is something in the human mind that loves to hoard together whatever tends to illustrate the character, or throw the least light upon the shade with which misfortune has obscured the declining moments of the Emperor Napoleon. It is natural to collect any thing which has ever owned Napoleon for its master: yes English Gentleman has purchased, at the Tuileries, the Horse and Harness which Bonaparte constantly rode during the late wars, and on which he effected his escape from the walls of Moscow: this interesting animal (which accompanied him through all his victories), is a brought bred white bath, his mane hangs majestically over his shoulders, and his tail nearly sweeps the ground; on the left side is the imperial crown, with the initial N.; he has five bullet shots quite discernable, and a bullet still remains in his tail; the trappings, &c. are very rich, and are those used by Bonaparte, The Horse has been purchased at an immense expence, merely with a view of gratifying public curiosity.

ELEGANT GLASSES, FURNITURE, &c.—The Nobility and Gentry are invited to inspect the Ware rooms of Couper and Son, 93, Bishopsgate Within, where is exhibited a large Assortment of new and second-hand Plate Glasses, admirably suited to every description of drawing or dining-rooms. The prices are just reduced 40 per cent. on plates measuring 100 inches by 72, and upwards; and on those of smaller dimensions the alteration will be found equally important. And the extensive preference given to this Establishment is thankfully acknowledged by the Proprietors, who have used their endeavours to evince their gratitude, by manufacturing articles in a superior manner, at prices suitable to the times, hope to merit a continuance of public support. In the furniture department is comprised every new and elegant article or upholstery, cabinet, and chair work, regulated upon such a scale of economy as to demand and ensure the patronage of rank and fashion

SELLING OFF unexampled BARGAINS, at the old established SILK and POPLIN WAREHOUSE, Bedford House, No. 11, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden.—SHEARS and CO. preparatory to the removal of their Establishment to No. 210, Regent street, have to announce an extensive Assortment of Summer Novelties, at unprecedentedly low prices.—Crêpe Chinoises, usually sold at 4s. 6d. per yard, now reduced to 1s. 9½d.; Turkish Imperial mantles, of exquisite beauty, made from real camel's hair, not to be obtained last winter under three guineas, now sold at only 25s.; about 500 beautiful Braganza shawls, at 6s 6d. to 7s. 6d. each, some of which originally cost 30s.; rich figured poplins, Norwich crapes, cachemeres, Gros de Naples, bombazins, Irish and English poplins, a variety of ladies' cloths for dresses and pelisses, at little more than half the usual prices; rich damask crapes, velvets, ribbons, &c. &c.; also a very great variety of genuine Edinburgh, Glasgow, Norwich, and Paisley shawls, at an immense reduction.—Bedford House, SHEARS and Co. No. 11, Henrietta street, Covent-garden.—The LEASE of the PREMISES to be SOLD.

VERY IMPORTANT INFORMATION to the PUBLIC.—In consequence of the decided and well merited preference given last year to the extensive and valuable stock of Furs kept by ARMSTRONG, 32, Oxford-street, he thinks it but justice to the public to inform them that he has taken the utmost pains in selecting a stock for the present season, which, on inspection, will be found both in beauty and cheapness to surpass any that has preceded it. As it is the general opinion that Ermine, Sable, and Chinchilla Muffs will be much in request this winter, Ladies will find at the above Fashionable Repository some of the most highly finished articles ever offered for sale, added to which, will be found a large quantity of Saxony, Prunella, and Merino Habit and Pelisse cloths of the most beautiful manufacture, and the most fashionable colors, including every new article of Winter apparel, which he has deemed necessary to blend with his extended stock of silks, &c., for which he has been so noted. J. A. also begs the attention of Ladies to his superb stock of Lace, which consists of black and white bobbin veils of the most curious designs ever beheld; bobbinnetts of every width and pattern; thread lace, French and British blonds, &c. &c. ☞ J. A. having recently purchased several hundred pieces of 4-4ths and 7-8ths Irish linens very much under the regular market prices, which enables him to offer some of a beautiful fabric at about one shilling per yard, advancing about two pence up to 5s.

A HANDSOME DRESS at a low PRICE.—BROWN and Co. 15, Henrietta street, Covent-garden, announce to the Nobility and Public, that they have introduced for this Season, some of the most beautiful materials for Ladies' morning and afternoon wear, that have ever been exhibited. The RAVENNA DRESSES, Kalmuck Cachmeres, and Tyrian Silks, in rich colours at 27s. 30s. and 32s. a dress. Their beauty and richness, warmth and durability, have given great satisfaction to every purchaser. A large quantity of beautiful Shawls, the property of one of the most eminent Factors, which must be sold, many of them at half their original prices. The usual variety of Silks and all articles sold by other Silk Mercers, at exceedingly low prices. No Patterns cut

THE GENUINE SYRUP OF DE VELNOS.

THE Depôt for this useful Spring and Autumn Alterative is No. 52, Berner's-street, Oxford-street, where it is prepared according to the Recipe of the late Mr. Swainson, entrusted to his Nephew and Successor, Mr. Thomas Carbain, alone. Among the Medicines of this description, the VEGETABLE SYRUP OF DE VELNOS has obtained a distinguished celebrity efficacy alone can support. It corrects and purifies the blood; and those who are afflicted with scrofula, leprosy, scurvy, and many of those melancholy diseases arising from impurity of the blood and juices—those who suffer by disease, or from the indiscretions of their youth, or whose constitutions are broken by mercurial, antimonial, or arsenic medicines—should submit to a course of Vegetable Syrup. The effect of this Medicine is such as not to interrupt business or pleasure, and requires only the common restraints of moderate diet. It is conveyed by the circulating fluids, and corrects the internal cause of those diseases which originate in vitiated blood. It is a safe though a speedy substitute for mercury, and removes those evils which an unacquaintance with that mineral occasions. The Syrup is prepared and sold at the Proprietor's, at 13s. a bottle; and, by his appointment, at Mr. Atkinson's, 195, Bishopsgate-street Without; and by Mr. Canham's Agents, in every considerable town in the United Kingdom; and the Concessions for the various Continental States. Agents in the East Indies—Messrs. Mackintosh and Co. Calcutta; and Messrs. Forbes and Co. Bombay.

NERVOUS DEAFNESS.—It is well known this branch of the Labyrinth, or internal Ear, is not in that state of imperfection called Deafness. MR. GARDNER is confident that the species of Deafness commonly called Nervous, he can cure; he has also prepared a portable and almost Infallible Remedy, which is sold wholesale by Messrs. Sutton and Co. No. 10, Bow Churchyard, London. Price 22s. and 33s.—Hours of consultation from 11 till 3; and by letter, with the fee of one guinea. No. 20, Skinner-street, Snow-hill, London.

HEATHER on the PRESENT STATE of PIANO FORTE STUDY,—Just published, by H. Falkner, 3, Old Bond-street, a new edition of the above Work, price 10s 6d.

"Mr Heather sets out with a preface, which, we confess, strongly biassed us in his favour; it is not only well and sensibly written, but it also shews that the author thinks and feels rightly on the subject of which he treats. We regret that our limits prevent us from giving an extract of his judicious observations on practice, expression, &c.; they are eminently worthy of the serious attention of every Pupil that wishes to be a proficient in the art. In the work itself we meet with many occasional remarks, which equally shewed the author's good sense, the justness of his views, and, we may add, considerable experience in the art of instruction."—Vide Musical Review.

MISS LINWOOD'S GALLERIES of PICTURES, in Leicester-square, are now OPEN, and will continue open every day, (Sundays excepted) from nine in the morning until dusk. Admittance, 2s. Children, 1s.

NURSERY GOVERNESS.—A Young Lady leaving School, is anxious to procure a Situation in the above capacity; her morals are good, her manners simple, and her qualifications such as to enable her to superintend the Education of Young Children. The family of a Merchant would be preferred.—Address by letter (post paid) M. E. at No. 23, Sherbourne lane, Lombard-street, or Post-office, Arundel, Sussex.

GPRIS, Grower of CHAMPAGNE, of Avize, near Epernay, France, most respectfully informs the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public, that he has entered into a contract with Mr. CHARLES WRIGHT, Wine Merchant, of the OPERA COLONNADE, HAYMARKET, by which Mr. WRIGHT will in future have the entire and exclusive sale of his CHAMPAGNE WINES. G. PRIS takes this opportunity of returning his grateful thanks for the liberal and distinguished support he has met with since the year 1814, and he pledges himself that the same description of WINES, and if possible better, as it is his intention to superintend his vineyards personally, will be always on sale at Mr. CHARLES WRIGHT'S, Opera Colonnade, and at no other place in England or elsewhere, at the unexampled low price of 4l. 4s. per dozen.

NEW LONDON FAMILY HOTEL (late Walker's), Bridge-street, Blackfriars.—GEORGE RADLEY begs leave most respectfully to inform the Public, that he has recently taken the above premises on lease, and fitted them up in a most complete manner, at a very considerable expence. From the very desirable and central situation of the house, the extent of accommodation it affords, and his determination that the business shall be carried on with the most strict attention to the comfort and convenience of the Families and Gentlemen who may favour him by their preference, he hopes to secure their approbation and a continuance of their patronage. The arrangement of the house is peculiarly well adapted for the accommodation of large or small Families as well as of Single Gentlemen; and a Coffee Room has been fitted up, and is attended in a style that has given general satisfaction. The whole is now in a state of perfect order and cleanliness, and at charges more moderate than at any other house comparable either in style or situation.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—The rude and unskilful attempts constantly made to supply these substitutes for the masticatory organ, and the disgust which delicacy suffers from the unpleasantry attending them when permanently fixed, have deterred many from adopting the aid and comfort they are capable of affording, independent of the assistance they may contribute to digestion and consequent health. The ingenious application of mechanical science will enable us to obviate all these inconveniences, and allow the wearer at all times to keep the mouth in a state of perfect cleanliness, and to perform the functions of mastication, articulation, &c. with decided ease and comfort.—Mr. NICHOLLES begs to state, that he is in constant attendance from ten to four, and will be happy to give regular demonstrations of the comforts derived from his efforts, under every circumstance of simple and complicated deficiency 115, Fleet Street.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, OCT. 19.—Yesterday afternoon there was an Extraordinary Council of Ministers at M. de Villele's. At the breaking up of the Council, the Minister of Foreign Affairs waited on his Royal Highness Monsieur. He returned there, and did not come away till eleven.

A Telegraphic Despatch received yesterday announced that the epidemic disorder at Passage had entirely disappeared, the Board of Health had declared that the measures of precaution were to cease. The Cordon will be withdrawn on the 23d of this month. The head-quarters of the army of Spain were on the 11th at Carmona. General Bergo has been sent with a flag of truce to Barcelona. The Governor Rotten has answered that he would obey the orders which should be sent him directly by the King of Spain. The King and Royal Family of Spain arrived on the 8th at Seville, where they were received with great pomp. The whole city was illuminated.

(FROM THE MONITEUR—OFFICIAL PART.)

ORDONNANCE OF THE KING.—"Louis, by the grace of God, King of France and Navarre, to all whom these presents shall come greeting. We have ordained and ordain as follows:—Art. 1. The Baron de Damas, Peer of France, Lieutenant-General of our armies, is named Minister Secretary of State for the War Department, in the room of our Cousin the Marshal Duke of Belluno, who is appointed to the Embassy to Vienna, vacant by the resignation of the Marquis of Caramanl.—2. During the absence of Baron Damas, Lieutenant-General Count du Coetlosquet, Director-General of the Bureaux of the War Department, shall provisionally hold the port-feuille.—3. The President of our Council of Ministers is charged with the execution of the present Ordinance.—Given at the Palace of the Tuileries, Oct. 19, the year of Grace 1823, and of our reign 29th. "LOUIS.

"By his Majesty's command the President of the Council of Ministers. (Signed) "TH. DE VILLELE."

MADRID, Oct. 10.—A new decree is spoken of, which will send away a great number of great persons; among them the Count of Onate, the Dukes of Altamira, and Alvarados, and Medina Celi, the Duchess Benavente, the Marquesses of Alcanis, of Santa Cruz, of Villa Sarzena, of Villa Franca, and the Prince of Anglona are mentioned.—A contribution of 6,000,000 francs is to be levied on the city of Madrid.—Col. Amor has capitulated with 350 cavalry which he had remaining with him.—The French gardes du corps are almost all set out for Aranjuez. The regiment of Cuirassiers of the Guards has also set out for the road to Andalusia, where it is to take up temporary positions by detachments, which indicates the approaching return of the King, who is expected at Madrid on the 21st, with the Duke of Angouleme. —It is Morillo who has seized the galleons coming from Manilla.—His Majesty has sent Collars of the Golden Fleece to the Prince Carignan, and the Chief of the French Staff, Count Guillemanot. The same honour had been conferred on the Duke of Hijar, Gentleman of the Bedchamber, who served his Majesty in this capacity constantly at Cadiz, and on the Count Cornes.—Among the persons who are to be sent away from Madrid, are the Nobles of Spain, who served in the voluntary Militia of the Cortes, and their number is said to amount to 11.—It is said that the Duke del Parque, the Prince of Anglona, the Marquess of Alcanien, and the Duke of Abrantes, will be banished from the kingdom.—At the time when Riego was passing through Manzanares, a regiment of cavalry (Constitutionals) had advanced from Estremadura, with the intention, it was supposed, of carrying him off. The regiment of Cuirassiers de Berry made preparations to attack them, when of a sudden the others, amounting to 470 horse, demanded and obtained an honourable capitulation. This was the fine regiment of Lusitania.

OCT. 14.—Our journals publish the following extract from a report made by the Military Commandant of Cadiz to the Military Commandant at Cordova:—"I received yesterday the important news of the occupation of Cadiz by the brave French troops, our allies. Immediately I caused the official notice of this event to be published, which excited transports of joy among the whole faithful population of this town; but, unfortunately, this town is the head-quarters of the troops under Gen. Ballesteros: and the whole of his soldiers, from the first to the last, are deeply imbued with those mischievous principles with which they infected our soil. These incorrigible revolutionists had the audacity to tear down the official notice. They shew themselves on every point unfaithful to the Convention of August 4. What has preserved these guilty propensities in them have been the perverse and malicious intentions of Gen. B. who spread among them the proclamation which the King was forced to sign at Cadiz under the daggers of his enemies. The Revolutionists profit by this piece to dare and threaten the Royalists. This state of things cannot be changed till the troops are sent away who are so much opposed to the sovereignty of the King, our master.—Orders have been given for the disbanding the corps of Ballesteros, and measures taken for the prompt execution of these orders.—Cabra, Oct. 7.

OCT. 19.—Bulletin respecting the malady experienced at Passages. M. Jourdain, a physician, sent by His Excellency the French Minister at War to observe this epidemy; M. Pateau, M.D. and Chief Surgeon of the 19th regiment of light infantry; D. Eugene Aronti, physician of St. Sebastian: and Dr. Jean Montes, physician to the Army, report as follows:—"We hereby certify that the quarter of St. Jean has been entirely freed from contagious disease since the 4th of October; and also, that we have purified all the houses and suspicious subjects in it. We, therefore, now declare that the inhabitants of this sea-port are restored to perfect health."—(Here follow the signatures, together with those of the Junta of Health.]

Copy of the convention concluded between Don Carlos O'Donnel and General Joseph M. Jacon, Governor of Ciudad Rodrigo:—

"Art. 1. Hostilities shall cease between the blockading troops and the garrison of Ciudad Rodrigo.—2. The fundamental condition of this cessation is, that the Governor and the garrison shall be ready to receive and obey his Majesty's orders as soon as transmitted.—3. Whatever is within reach of the cannon of the place shall be under the authority of the actual Governor of the garrison.—4. The blockade is suspended so far as relates to the communications with other towns or places which shall be perfectly free and reciprocal even with the garrison and blockading forces. In the latter case, the parties so communicating are to be furnished with special permissions for that purpose from their respective Generals.—5. After the ratification neither party shall attempt to augment their means of attack or defence.—6. The troops of the garrison or blockade if in want of provisions are to be respectively succoured by the other party, on a principle of reciprocity, if the occasion shall arise, and a sufficient quantity be found on the spot.—7. The present convention shall last until the arrival of the orders which his Majesty may please to send.—8. If any difficulties arise in executing this convention, they shall be amicably and faithfully investigated by the Captain-General and the actual Governor, and determined in the best spirit.

"Signed at the Head-quarters at Caridad, Oct. 7th, 1823."

SEVILLE, OCT. 10.—The King our Sovereign Lord has ordered the Body Guards to return to Madrid, and to be purified. The Duke de Rody Guards to return to Madrid, and to be purified. The Duke de Angouleme, arrived here this morning from Cadiz, and set off in the evening for the capital. It appears that he will proceed thence to France without delay. Their Majesties intend to leave this by the 18th, if the Royal carriages arrive by that time. There has been an expulsion of Liberals. The Duke of San Fernando, Amarillas, Casparria, and others, are ordered off. Balanzat, who was left with Balasteros' troops, has re-assembled them, and endeavoured to advance towards Cordova; but Foissac Latour marched thence. We shall see who will pay for this.

OCT. 12.—The important health of their Majesties and their Royal Highnesses remains unchanged, and they receive each day from this loyal city fresh proofs and demonstrations of love and attachment to their Royal persons."

PERPIGNAN, Oct. 14.—It appears that the siege of Barcelona will be undertaken. Rotten has disarmed a part of the troops upon whom he could not entirely rely, and has retired within the fortress of Mont Louis. When he heard of the liberation of the King, he replied that his master was more a prisoner than ever, and he should not surrender. A company of light artillery, and a small number of field pieces, have set out to-day for Mataro. The council of war is appointed to try the French refugees who are here.

Mina, according to the last accounts, was victualling the fort of Mount Jouy, near Barcelona, for three years. This fort is at about half an hour's walk from Barcelona, which it commands entirely, whilst it remains open to no favourable point of attack. It covers a great space of ground, and will contain nearly 25,000 men. It is bomb-proof.

ROME, Oct. 1.—The enthronement of Pope Leo XII. is fixed for next Sunday, the 5th of this month. His Holiness has named Cardinal Severini Vicar of Rome. Cardinal Gonsalvi, we are assured, intends to retire, and fix his residence at Naples.

VIENNA, OCT. 11.—According to accounts from Czernowitz, of the 4th instant, his Majesty the Emperor arrived there at nine in the morning of that day, in good health, where he was received by the Governor of the Province, Colonel Van Taafe, the General-in-Chief, Count Von Fresnel, and the Civil and Military Officers. His Majesty the Emperor of Russia was expected to arrive at Czernowitz on the 6th.

From the Bombay Gazette, May 14.—The friends of Capt. Gambier, R.N. will peruse with interest the following account of a most miraculous escape from immediate destruction:—"On a recent elephant shooting party at Ceylon, Capt. Gambier and Mr. Hay, of the Royal Engineers, had separated from their companions, and were following a large female elephant; when pretty close to her, she suddenly and unexpectedly turned upon them: escape appearing impossible, they both fired but with little effect; the animal immediately charged, knocked Captain G. down, and pursued Mr. Hay, who fell; Capt. G. having recovered, and observing the imminent danger of Mr. Hay, gallantly ran with another gun to his assistance. The elephant, on perceiving Capt. G.'s approach, turned round, seized him with her trunk, and raised him from the ground with as much ease as if he had been a straw; she then knelt down, and laid him on his back, still retaining her hold; she now began gradually to lower herself, and he already felt the pressure which appeared the forerunner of certain destruction, when, most unaccountably, the animal suddenly rose and retreated, leaving him without other injury than a severe bruise on one knee, which he probably received when she first knocked him down in pursuing Mr. Hay."

IRELAND.

RECORDER'S COURT, DUBLIN, OCT. 18.—George Devereux stood indicted for stealing 60 yards of gingham, the property of the Messrs. Orr. George Miller deposed that he was an apprentice to Messrs. Orr; knows Mr. Devereux since the latter end of April; saw him in the warehouse on the 23d of September, about the hour of one o'clock; witness follow ed him out; he had been in and out from about eleven on that morning, remarked that he wore his hat particularly high, and that he never turned his back towards witness but kept shifting his position in going down stairs; witness also observed that he kept his hip to his wife; witness had him taken into custody in the street, by two constables; he saw two pieces of calico under his coat; the prisoner appeared confused when witness came up to him, and said that he was going to buy cakes; he asked witness to go with him to buy cakes; the prisoner was brought in custody to Usher's-quay Police office; one piece of calico was found in his hat, and two behind his coat; he said that "it was very trivial"—three more pieces of calico were found at a place to which the prisoner had directed the peace officers. John Munroe, clerk to Messrs. Orr, saw the prisoner frequently in the warehouse; observed on one occasion that he had a cord tied round his body; saw part of it hanging down; witness went up to the gallery and concealed himself behind a green curtain; on seeing him come in at the outer gate, he came into the warehouse and witness saw him select two pieces of calico, and put them under his coat, he then tied them round his body with twine; saw him put another piece into his hat; witness went off for peace officers, and on his return met him on the quay, and Mr. Miller following him; he was then taken into custody. One of the officers proved having taken the prisoner into custody, and found three pieces of calico on him, two of which were tied round his body, the other piece was in his hat. This witness proved that three pieces of calico were found at a dairy shop near the coal-quay, to which the prisoner had directed the peace officers. For the defence. John M'Kenzie, book-keeper to the Messrs. Orr, was repeatedly called. He did not appear, and three messengers were successively despatched to different places in quest of him. The Court remained a considerable time waiting, but M'Kenzie was not produced. The Recorder then charged the Jury, who, without leaving the box, returned a verdict of guilty.—His Lordship then addressed the prisoner, in feeling and emphatic language, and concluded by sentencing him to be transported for seven years.

COURT SPECIAL SESSIONS UNDER THE INSURRECTION ACT.—John Murphy, sen. John Murphy, jun. James Donohue, John Cantillon, Mathew Daly, Timothy Twohig, and Patrick Daly were charged as idle and disorderly persons, having been found out of their several dwelling houses at twelve o'clock on the night of Sunday the 21st September, at Glanmire, in the North Liberties of Cork.—T. St. George Dillon, constable of police, stated, that on the night mentioned, when out on duty, and passing near the house of a man named Donohue, who had kept what is called a "sheebeen-house," for the sale of spirits without licence, at about 12 o'clock, he saw a man standing near the door, who, as witness approached, called out "the peelers" to other persons inside, who immediately shut the door, and put out the lights, and the man ran off. Witness went up to the door and knocked several times, stating at the same time who he was, but receiving no answer he put his shoulder against it and forced it open. On entering witness received several blows and was knocked down, and while down got several more; the place being dark, he could not distinguish by whom he was struck. He cried out loudly, "are you going to murder me?" and in struggling to rise his bayonet caught in the cheek of a woman, who immediately screamed, which he believed saved his life, as all the others then turned to her. He then placed the two men who accompanied him as centinels at the front and back doors, took the seven prisoners into custody, and tied them two and two. In identifying the prisoners, the witness said that the Dalys had voluntarily given themselves up, without having anything to do with the scuffle, having hid themselves in a room while it was going on; and that Twohig also had made no resistance, saying that he had been on his way home from love, and had been only attracted by the noise. There had been several women in the house, as the witness had heard, but they had all run away. The place had an appearance as if they had been regaling themselves—had since prosecuted the owner of the house before the Commissioners of Excise for selling spirits without license, and convicted him.—Ellen Ward said, she was one of the party assembled; there were several men, and about thirteen women and children, who were all dancing, for which they had a piper. It was a match making party; the only drink they had was table beer, and when tired of dancing they had a song. When the constable came to the door, it was open; one candle only was lighted on the table, and in the fright and confusion of the children it was thrown down and put out; some of them endeavoured to get out through the windows; in running after them the constable fell over the form, and in rising he struck the witness with his bayonet in the cheek, and she cried out she was murdered. On the following day she met the last witness, and complained of her cheek, and he also complained of his shins, as he said, from falling over the forms. He then asked her to go and have a drink or a glass at the house, if any was left; but on going, there was not, and he said, "Oh! d—n it, it is all gone." Witness saw no person strike him, nor heard him complain of being struck or knocked down. She saw him tie all the prisoners, to which they made no resistance.—Mary Keiff's testimony corroborated the last witness.—Sheriff Lowe, T. Harrison, James O'Connor, Thomas Rowland, and W. H. Kiely, Esqrs. gave all the prisoners an excellent character; they were only indulging in customary rustic amusement. After few words consultation with the Magistrates, without retiring, Mr. Blacker addressed the prisoners, and informed them that although they could not have been ignorant of the necessity of not being out of their dwellings after sunset, and had therefore severely incurred the penalties of the Insurrection Act, yet, in consideration of the character they bore, and as it did not appear that they had been assembled for any insurrectionary purpose, the Magistrates had concurred in acquitting them, which he hoped would operate on their future conduct, and as a caution, that while the state of the country required the Act should remain in force, they should be careful to remain in their houses after the hours prescribed.

On Friday se'nnight, as a corporal of the 25th regiment was drawing the charge out of his musket, which was not primed, in the barrack-room at Newmarket, county of Clare, it accidentally went off, and lodged the contents in the body of Thomas Doyle, private, which killed him on the spot.—An inquest was held on the body by Robert Green, Esq.—Verdict accordingly. They were both men of excellent character, and the deceased has left a wife and child.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH.

WEDNESDAY.—Moss v. O'Reilly.—This was an action for slander, between two rival medical men, at Windsor. The libellous words were "He has robbed me by not keeping his books regularly," with other slanderous words, which it was alleged had deprived the plaintiff of several valuable patients. A witness named Hague proved that the defendant said Mr. Moss had robbed and cheated him in every possible way—that he had patients of a morning before he (O'Reilly) was up, and that he had not made proper entries in the day-book, and that his conduct was otherwise so bad he had been obliged to discuss him from his service. Witness carried a letter, in these words from Moss to O'Reilly:—"Understanding you call me a thief, I have to demand from you that satisfaction which is due to me as a gentleman."—O'Reilly asked if that was a challenge to fight? Witness answered—"That is as you choose to consider it." O'Reilly then gave the letter, denying that he had called him a thief. The defendant refused to accept the challenge, and Moss, in consequence, posted him in the town of Windsor. He afterwards horsewhipped O'Reilly in the town of Windsor, upon which O'Reilly moved the King's Bench against him. Mrs. Blake, an elderly lady, lives at Windsor, proved the libellous words used by O'Reilly, that he (Moss) had robbed and cheated him, and had moreover deprived him of his professional character and patients. Mr. Dash had employed Moss, and subsequently had heard that O'Reilly had called him a thief, and had thereby injured his character; this was after the horsewhipping; but that had no effect in decreasing to employ Moss.—The Lord Chief Justice observed, it was for the Jury to say, whether the defendant meant to charge the plaintiff with putting the money into his own pocket which belonged to his employer, or merely as to enticing his patients away from him: if he signing merely that he had dismissed him for misconduct, was not actionable, unless special damages could be proved. Where the plaintiff, as in this case, had taken the law into his own hands to avenge his own wrong in such an unjustifiable way as by horsewhipping his opponent, this was not that case of aggravated injury for which a Jury would think the plaintiff entitled to more than the smallest nominal damages. The Jury, without hesitation, found for the plaintiff. Damages, one farthing.

THURSDAY.—Wynehem v. Cooke.—This was an action for £20, for work and labour done. The plaintiff is one of those fellows, who, luckily for mankind, are "inspired to cure all manner of diseases and disorders, which are declared incurable by the faculty." The result of his healing achievements boasts the recovery of a woman who had been discharged fifteen times as incurable; and the cure of a cancer after mortification had begun. Fistulas, white swellings, and deposits he made vanish like smoke. The defendant, rather a poor man, a tailor-cutter in the neighbourhood, about the time in question, had the misfortune to have a tight shoe, by which his foot suffered some inconvenience, but had also the good fortune to fall into the hands of the plaintiff, who by "God's help," with blistering, using caustic, and repeated applications of a sharp knife, succeeded in putting the member in a comfortable a condition as could be imagined. For nine or ten months the poor man had been kept in a state of suffering, and in the end found himself considerably worse than when he began. It was for the attendance the action was brought. The plaintiff's son, who sustained the case, said his father had been making experiments upon mankind for thirty-seven years, and always with the greatest success. Witness had heard Mr. Cooke say that he had done him great service.

Mr. Gurney, after some warm animadversions upon the impudent professions of the plaintiff, called upon him to prove that he had done his patient any benefit, which, as he was neither surgeon nor apothecary, was the only claim he could have to remuneration. The defendant's son proved that his father's leg was made much worse by the treatment the plaintiff used towards it. A respectable surgeon said that such treatment was against all the rules of practice. The Chief Justice called the attention of the Jury to the plaintiff's case, by which he professed to be able to work extraordinary cures. Now, gentlemen who were regular professors of medicine, never undertook to cure, but to do their best. Let the plaintiff therefore be judged by his own pretensions. Verdict—Nonsuit.

FRIDAY.—Predeaux v. Russell.—This was an action for slander, brought by an attorney—the defendant having charged the plaintiff with having been guilty of perjury. The circumstances were these, some dispute having arisen upon the suing on Bills of Exchange, a meeting took place between the plaintiff's partner and the defendant, the defendant repeated the charge, declaring he would prove it in a Court of Justice, that the plaintiff was guilty of wilful and corrupt perjury. Being called on for an explanation, he refused to retract, or make any apology.—Mr. Elliott Fox is partner with the plaintiff, remembers the defendant coming to their office respecting a bill of exchange which had been dishonoured, and a person named Harrison sued upon it. Defendant said (two ther gentlemen being in the office) "Mr. Predeaux is perjured, and I'll indict him for perjury—for he has made an affidavit of debt on which my friend Harrison has been arrested." Witness cautioned him not to persist in this declaration, as when Mr. P. returned to town he would be called upon to retract or justify it. He repeated the words, adding—"I can prove it, and I'll justify it."—In about a month after Mr. P. returned from Devonshire, when witness informed him what had passed. Witness wrote Mr. Russell the produced letter, demanding retraction and apology, on pain of having an action proceeded in for the calumny. No answer was received. After the action was brought witness saw defendant, who said Mr. Grace should defend the action, and that he meant to justify what he had said.—On his cross-examination he said, the words were spoken on the 20th of January, when he came to pay the debt and costs—and complained of Predeaux's arresting Harrison—Mr. P. did not make the affidavit—witness did—defendant did not mean to impute perjury to the witness—he (witness) did not tell him that he was the person who had made the affidavit, and not Mr. P.—There was nothing in his name to invite witness to say it was him who had committed the perjury imputed. There is 3l. or 4l. still due to witness as costs of proceeding. The Chief Justice said the plaintiff, in point of law, was entitled to a verdict, and such temperate damages as the Jury thought he was entitled to receive, by way of compensation for the injury.—The Jury having consulted for about 5 minutes, found for the plaintiff, damages One Farthing.

OLD BAILEY.

WEDNESDAY.—James Scott was indicted for maliciously cutting and stabbing Elizabeth, his wife, with intent to murder her, or do her some bodily harm. Elizabeth Scott stated, that she lived in Portland-town, St. Mary-la-bonne; but had been separated from him three years. On the 15th of September, he met witness in Park-street, he seized her by the throat, pressing her neck with his thumb, as if to throttle her, and he called her a wh——. She requested a young man, his companion, to interfere for her, who advised the prisoner to desist—he said that he had not a knife then, but he would nevertheless murder her—he then made a thrust at her neck and shoulder—witness, with uplifted hands, (which were cut in parrying the blows) begged for mercy, and cried "Murder!"—his companion pushed her away from the prisoner—but while she made a staggering retreat, he followed and stabbed her over the temple, and cut her several times on her hands and arms—witness received eight wounds on the left hand, two on the temple, one on her head, several on her neck and breast, as well as others more trivial on other parts of her person.—In her cross-examination she stated that she had been married to the prisoner 19 years—did not live happy for the first 10—no quarrel ever happened respecting a man named Sinclair—had been separated three years from her husband, or nearly so—was last confined in child-bed on the 7th of September, 1821—at the time of the assault she lived in a house taken by Sinclair, who is her cousin. The property in Sinclair's house is in his name, to prevent the prisoner seizing it. Prisoner was discharged from Clerkenwell prison that day, through the interference of witness—never gave him any provocation on that day. Mr. Lucas, a surgeon, found wounds on Mrs. Scott's temple and hands. Mr. Lucas, a surgeon, found wounds on Mrs. Scott's temple and hands, and cuts on the neck, near the jugular vein—the incisions were as if made with a sharp pointed instrument. There were also wounds on the temple, near an important artery, and another on the skull.—One of these wounds on the left arm, and another on the hand, might have been very dangerous, from their proximity to the muscles—only one of them, however, was likely to produce death.—In his cross-examination, witness observed that the artery was punctured, but whether divided or not he could not tell. Had he not stopped it, she must have bled to death. The wounds are now all completely healed.—Thomas Oliver saw a man and woman struggling near where he stood; she extricated herself from his grasp, and he (prisoner) followed her. Witness went up, and saw what he thought a knife in prisoner's hands; he collared him, and disarmed him of his weapon, which proved to be a pair of sharp pointed scissors (the prisoner is a tailor.)—The prisoner made no defence, nor called any witnesses to his character.—Mr. Justice Park summed up the evidence, having previously recited the Act 43 Geo. III. commonly called Lord Ellenborough's Act, and given the Jury his opinion thereon.—The Jury returned a verdict of Guilty—Death. Mrs. Scott stepped into the witnesses box, and earnestly recommended the prisoner to mercy.—His Lordship said it should be attended to.

A Juryman—We wish to join in that recommendation.

Mr. Justice Park—On what ground, Gentlemen—I must report to his Majesty, and must give your reasons.

Another Juryman—We have no ground, my Lord.

Court—I thought so.

John Scott, and Mary his wife, were indicted for robbing Joseph Gardner, on the highway, of some money, his property.—The prosecutor is a pensioner, and was in a public-house at Chelsea, and the prisoners were there. Being blind, he asked them to shew him to the Duke of York public-house, where he lodged; instead of doing so, they took him to the Five Fields. He told them they were taking him a wrong road, and refused to go any farther. The man then threw him down, and his pocket was cut off; he had 10s. when he left the public-house, but a soldier there put his hand into witness's pocket, and ran away with some of it. After taking the rest of his money, the prisoners left him lying on the ground calling out "Murder!" and the watchman caught them and brought them back to him.—The watchman, who stopped the prisoners, proved that Gardner's pocket, and 3s. 10d. in money in it, was found in the male prisoner's jacket pocket, and he said he had taken nothing more from the man. When the Constable of the Night was proceeding to search the prisoner, he said he was guilty of taking the man's pocket; but that, meaning the money, was all that was in it.—The male prisoner, in his defence, said, he and the prosecutor were both intoxicated, and the latter lay down in the fields while he was trying to take him to his wife's mother's to sleep, and he took the money to keep for him.—The Jury found the male prisoner guilty of stealing, but without violence, and his wife Not Guilty.

Thursday.—James Aldred Falconer, a genteel-looking young man, respectably dressed, was indicted for stealing two armlets, an eyeglass, &c. &c. value 10l. the property of Maria Brown, in the house of Elizabeth Brown. Elizabeth Brown, sister to the prosecutrix, stated, that she lives in Princes-street, Westminster, but is only a lodger—witness and her sister work at the tambour work—has known the prisoner for a year—he was in the habit of visiting them—he called on the 4th or 5th of September—witness was at home alone when he came—articles of value were on the table when he came—witness took them out to show them—she then left him in the room for nearly half an hour, when he went away, he said he would call again in a few days—after he was gone she missed the trinkets named in the indictment—the next day witness and her sister went into the City, and met the prisoner in Cheapside—they went into a private house to wait for him—he said he should be out in an hour—not coming out they sent for two officers, who took him into custody—witness since heard that he took them in a joke.

Mr. Baron Garrow—The Jury must judge of that.

Witness continued—Have been twice to the prisoner since he was in custody—once to Clerkenwell prison and once to Newgate.—Cross-examined—When the prisoner left he said he would call on the next Sunday—when he met them in the city she and her sister talked on good terms—had been on intimate terms with the prisoner, who was always kind to her—does not know that her sister is a married woman—knows a Polish gentleman to whom she was about to be married.

By the Court—They walked in company from Cheapside to Tyburn Turnpike before he went to the private house—he denied having taken the trinkets—never attempted to run away.

John Staples, an officer at Marlborough-street, stated that he apprehended the prisoner—witness said he was sorry to be under the necessity of taking such a genteel young man into custody—prisoner said it was a conspiracy against him to extort money—the prisoner directed him to his lodgings, where he would find part of the articles between the mattrass and the bed—did not make any promise—did not find the articles—searched him on his return, when the prisoner said, "I'll deceive you no longer, here is the eye glass."

Maria Brown stated that she was a single woman—knows the prisoner at the bar—saw him the next day after the articles were missed—went from the City to Tyburn—he said he had not taken the property—the eye-glass now produced is part of it—was quite sure of that.—Cross-examined—Never has been married—I know a person named Memusko—he is abroad—never was married to him—know the prisoner to be a friend of her sister's—he paid friendly and honourable visits to her—they were on terms of intimacy.—Mr. Baron Garrow called on the prisoner for his defence, but he did not speak a word.—Mr. Davidson, a respectable chymist, deposed that he had known the prisoner seven years—during that time he had been midshipman and sixth mate in the East India Company's Service—he was as one of his family; his manners were gentlemanly, and his conduct honest and exemplary. The prisoner has since gone on a voyage to the West Indies—saw one of the Directors of the East India Company yesterday, who said he would come to-day to speak to the prisoner's character. The Jury after some consultation pronounced the prisoner Not Guilty.

John Best was indicted for stealing four sovereigns and other property in the dwelling-house of Wm. Barry.—Sarah Barry, the wife of the prosecutor, stated that her husband was a hair-dresser, living in Rosemary-lane. She then went on to say that the prisoner was employed in the shop on the 7th of last July, for a fortnight, during the temporary absence of her husband, and that on the 15th of the same month, she missed the property in question, and had not seen the prisoner since, till the day he was apprehended. She believed he was the person who stole the property, for he had access to all parts of the house, particularly as she had occasion to go out on the day of the robbery.—Another witness, who was examined for the prosecution, exposed to the suspicious character of the witness, and said that after the robbery had been committed, he had seen him offering to fight for a sovereign. The prisoner protested his innocence of the charge, and denied that the house contained any property of value.—The Jury having consulted a few minutes, returned a verdict of Not Guilty.

Friday.—Harriet Cook, aged 20, was indicted for stealing, on the 21st of September, divers monies, the property of Samuel Fenn, her master.—The prosecutor stated, that on Saturday, the 20th ult. he missed some copper coin, and also some of silver. In consequence of this discovery, he went to an officer for advice, who marked two shillings and five sixpences, and sundry pieces of copper money, and put them in the desk, from whence the former were taken. The desk was locked, and the key was given to the constable, who took it away. On the Sunday morning, after she had been about her household business for some time he looked at the desk, when 3s. in silver coin, and 10½d. in copper, were discovered to be missing. The desk must have been opened by a key, which witness lost a year ago. The officer searched her, and found the money marked as described.—Mr. Smith corroborated the statement of the prosecutor, as to marking and finding the money on the prisoner, who denied the charge when it was first exhibited against her—on her person was also found a key that unlocked the desk. The prisoner put in a written defence—she had one father-in-law child, and threw herself on the mercy of the Court, promising never to offend again. Several respectable tradesmen, who had known the prisoner for seven years, gave her an excellent previous character. —The Recorder summed up the evidence, and the Jury returned a verdict of—Guilty.

William Hart, an urchin, seven years of age, was indicted for stealing 2s. in monies, numbered, from the person of Mary Connor. The prosecutrix stated, that on the day named in the indictment, she took 2s. to get something out of pledge, but as there was a crowd in Maryle-bone assembled to witness a fight, she was induced to join the mob—while standing there, she felt something move in her pocket, and putting her hand outside her clothes, laid hold of what proved to be the hand of the prisoner, which she held until she had given him a slap of the face, and then she let him go—she felt in her pocket, and discovered that only 3s. were left; there a constable took him up, and accused him of robbing her of 2s.—the prisoner said, I have 2s. in my pocket, but it is my mother's—she gets so drunk she gives it me to take care of. The officer said to the prisoner, you have got a secret pocket in his jacket, he found 14s. 6d. It was the practice of gangs of pickpockets to have a child like this to commit the robbery, he had been absent seven weeks, and they would have nothing to do with him.—Mr. Baron Garrow, in feeling terms, lamented that a child of such tender years should be so depraved. He added—"I suppose, Gentlemen, I need only ask you to deliver your verdict."—His Lordship then observed that he would consult his learned Brother as to the manner the prisoner should be disposed of. They at length decided that, although it might seem harsh, the Court would record against him fourteen years transportation; and no doubt but Government would place him in a school, where, if he behaved well, it would not be carried into full effect.

POLICE.

HATTON-GARDEN.—On Wednesday John Watts, a compositor on an Evening Newspaper, James Sadler, and John Parsons, also compositors on the same paper, were charged, the first named prisoner with killing Sidney Sadler, a compositor in the same office; and the two last named prisoners with aiding and abetting the murder. The prisoner John Watts, and the deceased Sidney Sadler, had a quarrel, which they agreed to decide by a pugilistic contest, and fought in White Conduit-fields on Tuesday afternoon; the prisoner, J. Sadler, seconded his brother S. Sadler, and J. Parsons seconded the prisoner J. Watts. It appears, that the deceased, who was of a turbulent and quarrelsome disposition, gave the challenge, and subsequently spoke of the intended contest with a gaiety that shewed he had no doubt of being victor. In the 17th round he received a blow under the left ear, which felled him to the ground; he lay insensible, and never spoke afterwards. Surgical assistance was procured, but in vain, as he expired in half an hour. The prisoners were committed to Clerkenwell prison.

The prisoners were brought up again on Thursday for re-examination, when Mr. Sergeant Sellon asked the officers, whether a Coroner's Inquest was held on the body, and what was the verdict of the Jury. The officers stated that they were present at the inquest, and that two surgeons who opened the body, gave it as their opinion, there were no marks on the deceased which could have caused death, but that there were about two ounces of coagulated blood on the brain, from the rupture of a blood-vessel, which caused apoplexy, and which might be produced by irritation, extreme passion, or by a fall, and that in consequence of that evidence, the Jury returned a verdict—"Died from apoplexy, brought on by irritation," and that the father of the deceased and the father of the prisoner Watts were both present at the inquest.—Mr. Sergeant Sellon—Where is the prosecutor; are the witnesses in attendance?—Officer—No person appears to prosecute, and there are no witnesses, your Worship; the prisoners, on hearing of the death of the deceased, surrendered themselves to abide the inquiry; they were not apprehended.—Under these circumstances, the prisoners were discharged.

GUILDHALL.—On Tuesday morning a young lady, who has for some time conabited with a young gentleman of the name of Watson, called on Mr. Gaussen, a gentleman residing in Paper-buildings, in the Inner Temple. Mr. Watson is a natural son of the father of Mr. Gaussen, to whom his connection with the young lady in question gave great uneasiness. He had frequently remonstrated with him on the impropriety of its continuance, and recommended that he should either marry her, or break off all further intercourse. This coming to her knowledge, she came to Mr. Gaussen to upbraid him, ascribing to such advice her desertion by Mr. W. Mr. Gaussen, who had never before seen her, did not hesitate to admit his having so advised Mr. Watson, and repeated his recommendation and the grounds on which he urged either marriage or separation. On this she became greatly enraged, and producing a pair of pocket pistols, threatened to shoot him. Mr. G. darted his hand across the table and grasped her right wrist—the pistol immediately went off. Getting hold of her other hand, he then pinioned her against the book-case, on which that in her left hand was also fired. Mr. Gaussen observed interrogatively, that the pistols were not loaded? To which she replied, pointing to a ball lying at her foot—but they were. It appears, however, more than doubtful if they were loaded with ball, no mark appearing on any part of the room, nor any ball being found—but that which appears to have been dropped on the carpet, close to where she was standing when held by Mr. Gaussen against the book-case. Mr Gaussen is of opinion that the object of producing and firing the pistols was intimidation. In the struggle he grazed his fingers against the flint, as he supposes, for the slight scratch, the only injury he sustained, could not have been occasioned by a bullet; and it is scarcely possible that a pistol loaded with ball, could have been fired without some consequent mark on the wall or furniture in the room. After Mr. Gaussen had secured her hands, she exclaimed—"Your cruelty has been my ruin; if you had not given the advice you did, I should never have been deserted." An officer was called in, and the young lady was taken in her carriage to Guildhall. The pistols had been brought in a handsome red morocco case, lined with purple velvet, marked with the initials "A. W." at the top. In the case was a powder horn filled with superfine powder, balls, screw, &c. On Mr. G. securing the lady he seated her in a chair, and placed the two pistols on the table; however, she had the adroitness to conceal them unobserved both by Mr. G. and the officer, but they were afterwards found in her reticule. Mr. Gaussen related the case as above stated; he was of opinion the lady had no serious intention to injure him, and in comparing the ball with the mouth of the pistol, it was found too large to have been admitted. Mr. G. wished the business to drop, and the Magistrate accordingly discharged her.

Wednesday, a fellow of notorious character, named James Fay, whose person is familiar to all the messengers and servants at Lloyd's Coffee-house, was charged with having carried on for some time past a regular system of imposition upon sailors, labourers, and others, under the pretence of being able to procure for them places of employment on board of ships or otherwise. The garb in which the prisoner appeared before the Alderman was that of a sailor, which was accounted for by the circumstance which led to his apprehension—he was sailor-hunting that morning; but on other occasions he assumes the appearance of a regular porter, and, indeed, varies his dress according to the description of persons he intends to impose upon.—John Burrough, a sailor lad, from the neighbourhood of Tooley-street, stated, that he was accosted about ten o'clock on Tuesday morning, upon London-bridge, by the prisoner, who asked him if he wanted a ship, and on his replying yes, he should be glad of one, said he could get him one. He accordingly took him to Lloyd's Coffee-house, and bid him wait while he went up. The prisoner returned to him in a few minutes with a sovereign in his hand, which he said he wanted to get changed, and asked him what money he had, adding, "Give me all that you have go.." He then gave him all he had, which was only 5½d.; with this the prisoner went up stairs again, and he never saw him afterwards until he was taken into custody.—In another case, which occurred only a few days before, the prisoner had caught a more monied customer, who hearing of his apprehension, also attended to prefer his complaint. This was a porter named Flaxman, who had in a similar manner been accosted by Fay on Snow-hill, who told him he could get him a good situation with a large pig-dealer, who shipped pork for abroad. The prisoner first took him into a public-house, under pretence of writing a note for him to take to the pig-dealer, but affecting to change his mind, said he thought it would be better to go with him himself. He then took him to the Royal Exchange, practised precisely the same tricks he had done with the sailor lad; but in this instance, instead of a few coppers, he cleaned the porter out of all he had, amounting to 19s. exclusive of the expence he had been at for the gin with which he had treated his kind friend at the public-house.—He was remanded.

BOW STREET.—On Thursday a young man of the name of George Fletcher appeared before the Magistrates, having voluntarily surrendered himself to Lack, the patrol, on the previous evening. From the statement of the landlord of Fletcher, Mr. Lacy, residing in Tottenham place, Tottenham Court-road, it appeared that about six weeks ago the prisoner took lodgings at his house. For the first three weeks nothing had occurred to excite any suspicion as to his want of honesty; At the end of the third week, however, Fletcher left his lodgings, and in about half an hour after his departure, the landlord's box was found open, and minus a watch, threes sovereigns, and some other articles. Lacy made several attempts to discover Fletcher's retreat, but all in vain. Fletcher wandered about for the last three weeks labouring under great mental agony, and rather than endure it any longer, he surrendered himself to the officer. The Magistrate asked how he came to take the things? and he answered, that unfortunately, he saw the box open; the temptation to take the things was strong—his necessities pressing; but, after all, he felt so acutely for having robbed an honest man, that he could not be happy without delivering himself up to the hands of justice.—He was committed for trial.

LIBRARIES PURCHASED.

PRICE OF STOCKS AT THE CLOSE, SATURDAY.

The British Securities were perfectly steady during the early part of the week, but on Friday the Consols for Account, which had been at 83¾, fell to 83½, at which price they have been doing during the morning of this day. This depression was occasioned by a report that a fleet had been ordered to the Mediterranean, on account of the Ministers not entirely coinciding with the views of France as regards Spain.—In the Foreign Market Chili and Columbian Bonds have both been drooping, on account of rumours being afloat that France was about to assist Spain to recover their colonies. The latter Bonds have also been affected by other rumours relative to the non-recognition of the loan, and have been doing at 53. Chili have been at 66¼; Spanish have been as low as 24½, but have since rallied about 1 per cent. In other securities there has been little to notice.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We shall fully reply to our numerous Correspondents next week.

A MONDAY'S EDITION, containing the LATEST NEWS, the STOCK LIST, the LONDON MARKETS, and the STATE OF THE COUNTRY MARKETS by that Morning's Post, is published at Three o' Clock.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, OCTOBER 26.

OF all the papers printed in the metropolis, we believe we may take to ourselves the exclusive credit of having prognosticated the evils which have arisen to our occidental possessions from the laudable efforts of the Saints—we alone have stood forward to vindicate the West Indian Planter against calumny and aspersion—we alone have made the struggle in defence of his character and property—we have called with a loud voice—WE HAVE SOUNDED THE ALARM.

This, let it be observed, we have done alone, and in opposition to the powers that be. It cannot but be gratifying to us therefore to find, that Government have resolved to send ships and troops immediately to the West Indies, to protect the lives and property which have been put into jeopardy by the agitation of the emancipation question in Parliament.

In another part of to-day's paper we have commenced an exposure of the character of MR. WILBERFORCE, which we propose to continue. It is impossible that we should suffer a person, whose name is known all over the world, to use the influence his notoriety gives him for such purposes as those to which he has been pleased to apply them; and it is only by ripping off the mask which he has so successfully worn for many years, that we can do our duty to our country.

Those who have traced the proceedings of the African Society through a series of years, those to whom the names of MACAULEY, STEPHEN, and WILBERFORCE are familiar, will do well to recall all the facts which have come to their knowledge, arrange them, sift them, analyze them; and we think, after this calm examination, their minds will be better prepared for what we perhaps may have occasion to publish, than they can possibly be at this moment.

Far are we from wishing to ask any question of MR. ZACHARY MACAULEY, the once needy overseer, now elevated into an opulent merchant, touching the sum of 129,951l. 11s. 11d., paid to him on account of Sierra Leone; nor do we mean to inquire how much philanthropy was blended in the exertions used to capture negroes, for which upwards of 275,000l. has been paid by Government. We certainly have no desire to recur to the paltry sum of fifty guineas, which MR. MACAULEY actually took for sending home upwards of ten tons of white rice, as a premium which, we believe, he himself proposed that Government should offer—we do not mean to call public notice to the fact, that, in the same page of the accounts of the Sierra Leone Company in which the sum of 141. 5s. 6d., charged for clothing African boys at school, there is an item of 107l. 12s. for a piece of plate to MR. MACAULEY—to that MR. MACAULEY who served himself in all he did for the Sierra Leone Company or the African Institution; who had obtained nearly a monopoly of the trade, constant freights for his ships, the prize agency of almost every man of war since the abolition, the agency for the Governor, garrison seizures, and a control over every thing in the colony; who, when the colony was given up to the Government appointed himself King's Agent (which, however, the late DUKE OF PORTLAND did not sanction).—We care not for all this—this, if it be not sanctity and purity, is human nature, and we find no fault with MR. ZACHARY MACAULEY for feathering his own nest; but we must have off the mask—we must strip him of his cloak—we will have the world to see a very active, bustling, worldly enterprising man, making his way in the world and getting rich from a mean origin and an humble station. But we will have no cant—these Gentlemen have gone on quite long enough—they have played their game to the extent of risking our colonies once or twice before; those colonies are now in actual danger—it is no time for half-measures—the moment to strike the blow is at hand—and the Saints and their motives must be exposed.

In all we have said of MR. MACAULEY, we have said nothing that could injure any man who did not set himself up as a spotless moralist, an unworldly philanthropist. Perhaps MR. MACAULEY may remember to have read a petition from the Nova Scotia settlers to the Directors of the Sierra Leone Company—there is in it, a paragraph, in which they complain that "MR. CLARKSON had promised, amongst other things, they should be supplied with every necessary of life from the Company's stores, at the moderate advance of 10 per cent. on the prime cost and charges; that while MR. CLARKSON remained in the colony they paid no more, but since that they were charged upwards of 100 per cent."

At the time alluded to, MR. ZACHARY MACAULEY had the monopoly of trade.

Perhaps MR. MACAULEY may remember the time when the African institution obtained the direction of the Crown estates in Berbice, in order to try experiments for the amelioration of the condition of slaves.

The consignments fell into the hands of MESSRS. BABINGTON and MACAULEY.

Perhaps MR. MACAULEY will recollect that the agent for the ships of war claimed and received from the Navy Board large sums, as bounty upon captured negroes, payable by Government when the prizes are finally condemned—perhaps he will remember that the sentences of the Colonial Vice Admiralty Court were reversed by the High Court of Admiralty in England—that this agent then informed the Commissioners that he was ready to refund 5,000l. upon application, which was made, and the money paid; but it was at the same time discovered that the agent still held in his hands 46,000l. more bounty money, which he had received while the cases were under appeal; and, as he could not legally hold the money, he was compelled to refund that sum also. The Commissioners demanded the interest for the time he had kept the principal—the agent refused to payit—the affair was put into the hands of their solicitor.

This agent was MR. ZACHARY MACAULEY.

MR. MACAULEY may, perhaps, remember that when MR. STEPHEN wrote those letters which bear the signature "TRUTH," he mentioned the fact that the Berbice Commissioners so rigidly adhered to the principle of economy that they borrowed the house of a friend as a place of meeting—this very MR. STEPHEN subsequently signs a report, (being one of the Commissioners), in which it is declared that the Commissioners found it necessary to appoint a secretary at 300l. per annum, which "included, however, the expence of an office:" to this Secretary, then in an unprecedented manner, the Commissioners gave 300l. per annum: while every other consignee of West Indian property carries on all the correspondence and pays his clerks and office-rent, and other expences out of his commission!

This Secretary was MR. MACAULEY.

Perhaps MR. MACAULEY will recollect the circumstance of removing the field-women from town to Sandvoort, and tearing them from their husbands and families, a measure which excited discontent, and induced the necessity of punishment—perhaps MR. MACAULEY may recollect that the object in thus breaking every tie which the abolitionists profess to maintain, and in doing that, upon which the whole anger of the African Institution had (in all other cases) been fulminated was considered favourable to the property of the Commissioners, and the consequent augmentation of the consignments to England.

The consignees were MESSRS. MACAULEY and BABINGTON.

And so we might go on through the whole career of these persons, even to the appointment of JAMES STEPHEN, as Counsel to the Colonial Office—a situation not recognised by the Constitution—filled by a man neither appointed by the Crown nor sanctioned by Parliament—who receives fees upon Colonial papers from the public and individuals, and whose name, with his appointments, allowances, salary and perquisites, is consequently suppressed in all returns to the House of Commons.

A fool who writes a clerk-like hand tells us in a long letter that we have made a blunder, and said last week that MASTER STEPHEN was counsel for the Colonial department—we certainly did say so, and we say so still—because the son is so evidently in the hands of the father, and the father has such uninterrupted access to all the papers of the Colonial department in consequence of the son's appointment, under the circumstances, that HE is to all intents and purposes the counsellor. If the silly person who wasted his time to tell us of our mistake imagined that we believed the Master in Chancery to be the bond fide colonial counsellor we pity him, as indeed we do for the trouble he took to tell us that MACAULEY and BABINGTON were general merchants. We would advise our correspondent to turn to the list of East India proprietors before he affects such superior information.

We have wandered from our main point in pursuit of MR. ZACHARY MACAULEY'S extraordinary virtue and contempt of worldly objects—but in returning to THE great object we have in view, we mean the general exposure of the quackery and morbid sensibility of the faction, we take the opportunity of availing ourselves of the opinion of Mr. HENRY BROUGHAM, not that we are at all inclined to pin our faith upon anything so changeable and shuffling, but as there are some fifty or sixty people in the world who have a high opinion of his intellect, and probably half as many who believe in his integrity, we will give our readers his opinion upon the differences between the Blacks and Whites in the West Indies—he appeals to the Saints thus, in his work on Colonial Policy:—

"The consistent friend of humanity may be permitted to feel some tenderness for his European brethren, although they are white and civilized, and to deprecate that INCONSISTENT SPIRIT of CANTING PHILANTHROPY, which in Europe is only excited by the injuries or miseries of the poor and the profligate, and on the other side of the Atlantic is NEVER WARMED but towards the savage, the mulatto, and the slave."—Vol. II. p. 210.

"The Negroes," says the honourable and Learned Member for Winchelsea, "are truly the Jacobins of the West; they are the anarchists—the terrorists—the domestic enemy; against them it becomes rival nations to combine, and hostile governments to coalesce."

EITHER through a blind fatuity, or in the hope of blinding others, there is no trick more common among the hackneied WHIGS, than by the misapplication of terms and principles to confound right with wrong. We can, however, attribute to downright opaque stupidity alone, the following extract from the MORNING CHRONICLE, which has lately fallen under our notice:—

"At a late representation of Macbeth at Covent-garden, several Spaniards who were in the pit were observed to be much affected at hearing MR. C. KEMBLE repeat, with an accent of the deepest regret, the following passage:—

'O, nation miserable,
'With an untitled tyrant bloody-sceptred,
'When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again!'"

Now, the story about the Spaniards is obviously gratuitous—and the quotations are as evidently elicited through the labours of the MORNING CHRONICLE Index-hunter. A groupe of Spaniards in the pit at Covent-garden, critically applying the words of SHAKSPEARE to their own circumstances, is a true WHIG hit; and there let it rest. But if we could suppose even ONE Spaniard sufficiently conversant with our language to have comprehended the tendency of the passage, we will venture to affirm that he could not have blundered—having observed the progress and developement of the plot—into such an application of the sentiment as the editor—who obviously has never read the play—has done. To whom does the term "untitled tyrant" apply? To Macbeth. And who is Macbeth? A KING-KILLER. Why is the nation called miserable—why are its wholesome days departed—and why is their loss deplored? Because a REBEL and ASSASSIN has murdered his legitimate Monarch—because treason and murder are in the ascendant—and because (which made the seven Spanish gentlemen of the CHRONICLE objects of universal attention in the pit!—because the country, under the blood rule of a REGICIDE, and an USURPER was

"Almost afraid to know itself."

But, says the sagacious Chronicler—"The idea of FREEDOM was present to all minds at these words"—

'We'll have thee as our rarer monsters are,
'Painted upon a pole—and under writ
'Here you may see the tyrant!'

The presence of the Spanish gentlemen in the pit must have had an astonishing influence over the audience, if this be true—for we will stake our reputation that such an idea could never have presented itself to the mind of an Englishman, whose best feelings would be awakened and directed towards the means of avenging the horrors and afflictions of civil warfare upon a BLOODY USURPER, and of placing the legitimate Monarch on the Throne.

"To dew the SOVEREIGN flower—and drown the weeds!"

Upon the whole our readers will agree with us, in the aptness of this mode of application by the WHIG PRESS—their judgment is unquestionable, and can only be equalled by their good taste and feeling exhibited on the same day, when censuring Ministers for attending to the DUKE OF WELLINGTON'S recommendation of fit and proper persons for the Consulate to South America, a cry is set up against the possibility of the "Mustachio influence of the Hero of Waterloo"—(in WHIG italics to point the sarcasm) becoming predominant in such appointments! This would make the Spanish gentlemen in the pit stare again no doubt.

What the DUKE OF WELLINGTON will think of this we may easily guess, but it may not be unserviceable to the Whig scribbler to tell him what the people of England will think of it—they hold in abhorrence every attempt to sacrifice to the sordid interests of a faction, the fair character of their country, and the pre-eminent qualities of those, who by their valour and wisdom have contributed to sustain it.

THE accounts hourly arriving from our different West Indian Settlements are truly aweful and portentous, and, if our saintly philanthropists at home have indeed the tender consciences which they so loudly proclaim in the streets and the highways, their pillows must be strewed with thorns on reviewing the result of their machinations. They can have no reserve on the score of good intentions, they have no plea of ignorance to resort to in defence of their policy. The consequences of their hypocritical zeal were anticipated as inevitable—they erred with their eyes open—and in their eager and unholy appetency for vulgar popularity, have set the lives and properties of millions of their fellow creatures at the hazard of the die!

Can these men reflect even upon the blood that has already been shed, without shuddering under the conviction that they have caused it to flow! Can they appeal under the especial workings, even of spiritual pride, to the God of all mercy as peace, for pardon, as the innocent causes of a crime which already stands recorded against them in characters of BLOOD! —Can they justify themselves before the Saviour of the World, in the face of his own solemn rejection of the time-serving palliative of the end justifying the means!—No—they have excluded themselves from all appeal to Heaven, or to man, by a wilful, headstrong, and persevering pursuit of their own sectarian objects; reckless, as their unsanctified confederate and ally, BROUGHAM, declared himself, of consequences to the country or the world, beyond the narrow precincts of their own party!

To leave them to the vulture gnawings of their own consciences—if not hardened against conviction and humanity—might be punishment sufficient for these vain and self-sufficient Pharisees—but, alas! the first blood has been drawn, and who shall calculate the amount of that which is yet to follow, from the passions of millions of semi-barbarians, heated and inflamed by the organized enthusiasm of these men? In every island from which accounts have hitherto been received, the poison has more or less extended—and we have as yet only the first symptoms of a convulsion, which the heated passions of the black population providentially induced them to precipitate before the conspiracy was ripe. Contented and happy—we speak advisedly—these people, only a few days before the arrival of the published accounts of the proceedings in Parliament, backed by PRIVATE MISSIONARY COMMUNICATIONS, were in possession of more comfort than any of the peasantry of any European country. Quick, irritable, and easily excited—like all men in that stage of civilization—was it to be supposed that they could hear, unmoved, that they were the victims of barbarian task-masters, who had no right or power over their destinies—of men, who were denounced and rejected by their own countrymen—and who, by their atrocities, courted the retribution which the slave population had in their own hands!

It is the language of REVOLUTION over the whole world—but especially addressed to a race of beings the least capable of estimating consequences, or of ascertaining the truth—By whom?—By the regicides of France, or the ultra radicals of England?—No; by men professing an overweening confidence in their own claims upon the mercy of heaven, whilst they assume the air of political independence, for the purpose of shewing their power, whenever the Government and its opponents approach an equal division of theirs!—And who is the master spirit of this scheme of political expediency?—The man—whom we have often exposed in his true colours to a misjudging world, and who, through the system of HUMBUG practised in every auxiliary branch of the grand scheme, and extending from one end of the kingdom to the other—is imposed upon his credulous countrymen as a SAINT and a PROPHET—when he is neither more nor less than a political adventurer, pursuing the object of his crooked ambition through bye-ways and tortuous passages, which none have dared, or have been ashamed, to explore since the days of his great and subtile archetype CROMWELL!

We set aside all the minor actors in the forthcoming tragedy, as creatures bred, and pampered, and enriched by the system, to which they have been trained by the great patron. The MACAULEYS, the STEPHENS's, the —— we know not who—the poor men become rich in declaiming against the vanity of riches, are mere puppets in the hand of the manager, and need not be brought forward until we find it necessary—which we shortly may—to exhibit the details in which their several parts have been cast, and which they are yet destined to perform.

To the name of WILBERFORCE our posterity will recur with sentiments far different from those which his fulsome panegyrists and blind followers have, up to the present period, excited in his favour. We have instances, without number, of the insincerity of this man's professions, but the occasion is not yet ripe for their production. Sufficient is to be inferred by any man, who, divesting himself of prejudice, and the distracting cant of party, looks fairly at "THE CAUSE," as it is called—(not yet the GOOD OLD CAUSE) and beholds the distribution of the Wilberforcian power in every department of trade, commerce, and manufacture of the empire—and thence branching out into every, the remotest colony attached to, and dependant upon it. Let such a man only reflect, that this powerful and extraordinary combination is linked and united by a sort of free-masonry, of which WILBERFORCE himself is the grand master—and that its essence is a professed CONTEMPT of "the things of this world," and of all those who worship God in any other manner than that adopted by the initiated!

Let such a man, we say, who has penetration to look beneath the surface, ask himself if those people can be honest in their professions, who make religion the stalking horse of their ambition, and who indulge in "spiritual extasies," whilst they are worshipping under every form, which worldly wisdom, political intrigue, and a thirst for riches and power can suggest—that which they declare to be "the mammon of unrighteousness!" Have they really misconstrued the text—or do they suppose the divine founder of our faith meant to commend the unjust steward for making to himself "FRIENDS" by the unholy barter of his conscience?

No—they are too subtle and too acute to be the dupes of a doubtful commentary. They see, and know well enough what they are about, and it is on that account that we feel called upon, as the crisis approaches, to show that neither this man nor his followers are dupes to their own zeal.

Do not let us incur the censure of the public for any lack of charity. The opinion of our political opponents, who would league with Satan if he entertained a single sentiment in common with themselves, we despise—but we would stand well with our countrymen, and they may at first feel shocked at the spectacle of a man who has been so long dressed up and elevated above the holy ones of the nation as a saint and an apostle, brought down to a level with those whom the national sentence of condemnation has long ago doomed to contempt and execration. It is a task which we would avoid—but if the press could have been heard on both sides in the sixteenth century CHARLES might NOT have been martyred on the scaffold—nor CROMWELL have been the usurper of a THRONE!

We have no one motive—as we stand before Heaven and our countrymen—but the love and anxiety for the welfare and maintenance of our Constitution in Church and State—we have no impulse but our detestation of HYPOCRISY and HUMBUG, wherever it is to be found, in these our efforts to open the eyes of the deluded portion of our countrymen, and to arrest the power of delusion before it has reached that point where the blood of heroes or martyrs must decide the issue of events.

We have only time to-day to fix the attention of our readers to two points—the great leading features of MR. WILBERFORCE'S public life. To him exclusively the country is indebted for A SCHISM in the established Church—which, in almost every parish in England—at least in every parish worth contesting—is fomented and extended by the most indecent appeals from the regular ministry—and by the officious interference of unauthorised persons in the parochial institutions. If our readers will take the trouble to refer to the page of history, they will find not only the general principle—but the minutest details of the GRAND PURITAN SCHEME for the overthrow of the Church, furnished and sedulously copied in the transactions and proceedings of the WILBERFORCIAN sect of the present day. How the struggle may terminate, we are not bold enough to prognosticate—but any man who can contemplate the "signs of the times" with indifference, which display before his eyes an embodied phalanx under the general title of the "Bible Society," of thousands and thousands of men, moved and directed by a Finger at HEAD-QUARTERS—we pity his delusion, and must hope better of the great mass of our fellow-countrymen.

The second great feature of MR. WILBERFORCE'S public life, is the ingenious adoption and successful prosecution of a scheme for the "Abolition of the Slave Trade," really originating with MR. GRANVILLE SHARPE. We cannot stop to examine the merits of this question. The real point at issue among statesmen capable of prospective views, was the time and period of carrying so important a measure—and a political manœuvre of the WHIGS to obtain popularity, during the short period of the most unpopular administration ever known in the country—they permitted their new ally to precipitate it, for the sake of raising a halo round their own miserable and execrated series of blunders and mal-administration. But even here a pledge was considered necessary from the abolitionists, that "they did not contemplate the abolition of slavery in the measure—and the PLEDGE WAS SOLEMNLY GIVEN. How it has been redeemed—or how it has been evaded by the introduction of a new actor on the scene—a MR. BUXTON—we know not whether he be the four-in-hand man—for the jesuitical purpose of avoiding personal responsibility for the said pledge, we leave our readers to decide. We have only passed the threshold—one word only hath gone forth—and it has drawn the blood of SOME, to avert the torrents of our NATIVE BLOOD, which ere this must otherwise have been shed—as the direct result of the fair speeches and philanthropic exertions of a sect professing christian principles in a purity—which sets all beyond its pale—in the class of reprobates! Have these men souls? have they consciences?—does no touch of remorse awaken them to a sense of what they have done, or what they are doing? IT IS said that the man who has set all these springs in motion—the prime mover—the child and champion of PURITANISM, is—the GREATEST OPIUM EATER in England! Well may he be so.

ALL the papers have published the following:—

"We regret to learn that a distinguished officer, who has just returned to his country, after a long absence on a distant and perilous expedition, has experienced since his return home a shock more fatal to his happiness than could have been inflicted on him in the inhospitable regions from which he has just escaped. We hear that a beautiful, lovely, and accomplished young lady, who had exchanged with the gallant officer in question a mutual pledge of unalterable attachment previous to his embarking on his dangerous enterprise, and the promise of an immediate and honourable union on his return, has, during his absence, forgotten the pledge she had given; and afforded reason to believe that the gallant officer is no longer the favoured object of her affections. On the arrival of this distinguished officer in London, he hastened after the first discharge of his public duty, and drove with an unaltered attachment and fond anxiety to the Lady's house, in the neighbourhood of Portland-place, to pay his first attentions to the object of his highest esteem, and receive her congratulations on his safe return; but, to his surprise and sorrow, he found that the house had been for some time shut up, and that the family had quitted London; and upon further enquiry he learned that some change had occurred with respect to the affections of the chief object of his solicitude, which made it advisable that he should endeavour to eradicate from his mind all recollections of her plighted faith and influence over his heart. So severe has been this shock to the brave officer, who could smile at the horrors and dangers of a frizid zone, that he has continued ever since this discovery in such an unhappy state as to seclude himself from the society of all his friends, who have in vain endeavoured to console him on the unhappy occasion, and entertain some fears of serious consequences to his health.

"We are happy to state that CAPT. PARRY was considerably better yesterday (Thursday). Twenty ounces of blood were taken from him on Wednesday, by which he was greatly relieved, and his medical attendants are now of opinion that a few days will place him entirely out of danger.

We have no mercy on a jilt; and we grieve to find that the enterprising officer, who is her victim, should have taken the defection of the young lady so much to heart. Instead of losing blood and secluding himself, we would advise him to take a drive into Hertfordshire, and make enquiries, to which he may now obtain candid answers. This proceeding will, we think, enable him to ascertain the value of what he has lost.

TREAD MILL.

A NEW champion has appeared in the tread-mill contest, who has taken up new ground, and who is in due form taken up by the CHRONICLE.

MARTIN STAPYLTON, of Mytton, Esq. has published a protest against the labour of untried convicts, in which we must confess we agree; but the CHRONICLE charges MR. PEEL with having advocated and defended the practice during the last Session of Parliament, whereas, the fact is directly the reverse of the CHRONICLE'S assertions. MR. PEEL, so far from defending such conduct, did no longer ago than the 17th of May, state in his place "that it would be very wrong "on every account that the distinction between commitment "for trial and conviction of an offence should be confounded."

The CHRONICLE, not satisfied with telling a falsehood, jests upon the supposed conduct of MR. PEEL, of whom they say, "he avowed himself partial to whipping, without ex- "plaining on what his liking was founded—it appeared a sort "of penchant—a taste, a goût."

A paper which likens his present MAJESTY to tyrants and barbarians, only keeps up its character by attributing cruelty to MR. PEEL—it is the system adopted by this Jacobin journal to vilify and stigmatize every thing that is in power—to blacken the characters of men which are in truth unimpeachable, and to attribute all sorts of cruelty, and even vice, to hearts remarkable, nay, proverbial, for their warmth, their kindness, and their honesty.

If the statement of MR. STAPYLTON (whom our readers may remember as MR. MARTIN BREE, of Arundel-street, in the Strand,) be true, there is certainly some mis-management, and so the CHRONICLE might have said; but no, it was necessary to associate MR. PEEL with the Yorkshire jailor, and attribute to him the violation of the statute law, and an inherent disposition towards cruelty and oppression!

WE have frequently been requested to point out occasionally such new publications as happen to strike us as worthy of public notice; and in the few instances in which we have obeyed the call, we have received very flattering testimonials of the influence of our recommendation. It is this which makes us cautious and sparing of praise, but we have lately been reading some works which demand the exercise of the pleasing duty.

IN the first place, a novel called "REGINALD DALTON," written by the author of "VALERIUS," has powerfully attracted our attention; that it is superior to "VALERIUS," we doubt, because the combination of splendid imagery, historical research, elevated language, and deep interest, which is to be found in that work, is wanting in the new production of the same pen—not wanting from want of ability to produce it, but from the nature and construction of the story. "REGINALD DALTON" is introduced to the reader under his paternal roof, and carried through a variety of scenes and incidents with much skill and power. The loves of the hero and heroine are witchingly told; indeed the interview between them, where he declares his affection, is as delicately and beautifully described as any thing we ever met with.

The only fault we should find with the history of the work is the implied censure it casts upon the university of Oxford, in the riotous proceedings of Under-Graduates, Proctors, bull-dogs, Gowns-men and Towns-men. The disturbances of years, for the better carrying on the plot, are huddled into a very short space of time; and although, to those who know the real state of the case, such descriptions will do no harm, yet coming from an Oxford man, whose reputation stands extremely high, they might have an effect upon mothers who read it, and who, terrified at the picture of an university life, as there exhibited, might influence—(as who doubts they uniformly can)—their husbands, in the choice of a place whereat to educate their sons.

This is all we have to quarrel with the author about; putting this aside, we must confess the great pleasure we received in the perusal of a book which—(guarding their minds from prejudice against our alma mater)—we can earnestly and sincerely recommend to our readers.

The next book, with which we have been mightily pleased, is a collection of stories, under the title of "HIGHWAYS and BYWAYS," the author of which is one of our most violent opponents, and quite uncontrolable in the force of his invectives against us. This makes no difference in the merit of his tales; and we think the story called the "EXILE OF THE LANDES" as interesting and touching as any tale of the same class we have ever met with.

Every body has read "BODY AND SOUL"—and therefore our recommendation perhaps is now useless. Should there be any, however, to whom it is yet unknown, we have no hesitation in pressing it upon their attention, as a work, the writing of which is fully worthy of the honest orthodox opinions it maintains.

THE following document, as containing a firm and moderate statement of the dangers and difficulties to which the Colonies are exposed by the intermeddlings of the political empirics, we consider worthy a place, at a moment when the subject engrosses all minds alive to perils by which, in all human probability, at this moment our Colonies are seriously assailed.

To the Honourable the House of Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, the humble Petition of the Honourable the Members of General Assembly of the Island of Dominica, sheweth,

That your petitioners have heard with feelings of the deepest dismay and alarm of the intended proceedings in the House of Commons relative to the emancipation of the slave population in the colonies; impressed with the magnitude of the inevitable dangers to result from such a measure, they hasten, as well on their own behalf as that of the mother country, to implore your Honourable House to prevent the irremediable mischiefs and avert the horrible calamities in which the adoption, or even the agitation of such a measure, must involve these unhappy countries.

Your petitioners cannot, at the same time, avoid pointing out to your honourable House the manifest injustice of an act which would at a single stroke deprive thousands of industrious and meritorious individuals of their property, and consign to want and irretrievable ruin numerous families, whose hard-labouring industry, under the pledge of the British Government for centuries repeated and confirmed, whilst it has barely procured them competence has increased, improved, and strengthened the parent state.

Your petitioners contemplate this question with the greater astonishment when they reflect on the ready and cheerful concurrence with which the legislature of these islands have met all the measures which the wisdom of Parliament has hitherto suggested for the abolition and prevention of the Slave Trade, as well as for the amelioration of the condition of the slave population; and confidently appeal to the candour and liberality of your Honourable House, whether so willing a compliance ought not to be accepted as a pledge of their good faith and intentions, rather than be followed as a precedent for measures fatal to the preservation and security of their lives and fortunes.

Your petitioners boldly challenge and court the strictest investigation with regard to the full and unqualified enforcement of these measures, as well as into their conduct in the treatment of their slaves, as the most certain proof of the sincerity of this pledge, and of refuting the unfounded calumnies and aspersions with which they are unceasingly and most unjustly loaded.

Such a disposition of property (except by a violation of every principle of law and justice) can never be attempted, without securing the fullest remuneration to the holders of it; and in the prosecution of this fatal policy, not only the enormous sum which Great Britain must appropriate for this purpose, amounting at least to 100 millions, but an annual revenue of six millions and a half, an immense outlet for the produce, fisheries, and manufactures of the united kingdoms, in addition to an extensive nursery of 20,000 seamen, and the productive employment of upwards of 130,000 tons of shipping, must be sacrificed for the attainment of an object, which can only produce and entail misery and misfortune on the very persons whose happiness is the end in view.

To provide a market for the fisheries and manufactures of England and Scotland, and for the commerce of Ireland, to create another nursery for seamen, to afford employment to the shipping engaged in this trade, will be the duty of Government. For this purpose new sources of commerce must be discovered and secured (but by which other nations will be chiefly benefitted) to indemnify the holders of West India property, an addition of 100 millions must be made to the national debt; and to supply this enormous deficiency of revenue, heavy additional burthens must be imposed on the landholders and every class of the community in the mother country.

Not only in the various modes already alluded to must Great Britain suffer, must its navy, commerce, manufactures, revenue, and landed interest be injured and oppressed, but in this general ruin must also be involved that numerous class of merchants, who, under the protection of Government, embarked their capitals in West India concerns, whose assistance fostered the infancy of these Colonies, protected their growth, and, in short, enabled them to become one of the chief sources of the wealth and power of the empire.

But if such be the consequence of this attempt, as it affects these interests, how much more deplorable will be the situation of the Colonists, how wretched that of the slaves themselves?

An immense population at once let loose from a state of subordination to the possession of freedom, what laws can restrain them—by what power can such laws be enforced? Must we be left to fall an unresisting prey? Will our country decree that loyal, faithful, and innocent subjects of every age and sex shall be exposed to the merciless discretion of slaves, whose feelings will have been stimulated against us by those who are bound to be our protectors, and who, by the vote of the British Parliament, will have been taught to consider was their tyrants and oppressors?

If, on the other hand, the humanity of the state should provide for our protection, 100,000 men would be found barely adequate for our effectual security, and the expense of maintaining an immense army at the distance of 3000 miles, must be provided for out of the purse of the nation.

That these apprehensions are far from being exaggerated, your petitioners refer your Honourable House to the horrible fate of the inhabitants of St. Domingo, upon whom every species of cruelty was practised, when none escaped with life that fell into the hands of the blacks; and to the recent insurrection in Barbadoes, where a large portion of the negroes, deceived by false reports on the discussion of the Registry Bill, raised the standard of rebellion, in the year 1816, where conflagration and murder marked their steps, and when, without the assistance of a large body of troops, and a strong militia, every white inhabitant must have been slaughtered. Had such an event happened in this island nothing could have prevented this awful result.

What will be the condition of the slaves themselves? Ignorant of the first principles of government—abandoned to the impulse of their untutored feelings—riot, disorder, and confusion, will be the first fruits of freedom; the indulgence of every lawless passion will be their sole aim; and quarrels, broils, and contests, began and closed in blood, will mature and bring to perfection the blessings of liberty.

The advocates for their emancipation may then triumph at the success of their plans, which will have plucked the richest jewel from the Crown, cut off a powerful arm of the empire, undermined the navy, commerce, manufactures, wealth, prosperity and resources of the State, and for ever destroyed a vast source of revenue; which will have added an intolerable weight to the heavy burthen of taxation, under which the country already sinks; to the attainment of which every principle of justice will have been sacrificed, every feeling of humanity and religion violated; and the success of which must inevitably involve in one common ruin, thousands of faithful and loyal subjects, and the very persons for whose supposed benefit all these important objects have been sacrificed.

With all these sacrifices, this house however venture to predict, that the emancipation of the negroes will be as distant as ever. The abandonment of these colonies by the British Government will be the signal for their occupation by other states (some of which will adhere to the slave trade) who will eagerly grasp at those advantages which Great Britain shall have wantonly thrown away; and she must either engage in perpetual wars to prevent the occupation of territory which she has relinquished or tamely behold the admirable scheme of emancipation at once defeated, the importation of slaves increased, and foreign powers aggrandized at the expence of her most important interests.

It now becomes the duty of this House respectfully, but firmly, to declare that their former compliance with the views of Parliament involved no surrender of their legislative rights in matters of internal regulation, solemnly secured by Act of Parliament; and their submission to laws so detrimental to their property and their very existence, enacted without their consent, against which they loudly and decidedly protest, can only be enforced by the subversion of their constitution, and the authority of a superior power.

Your Petitioners, confident of the truth of their statements, appeal to their Sovereign, to Parliament, to the Government, to the nation, for protection. As faithful and loyal subjects, it is their right to demand—it is your first duty to grant it: or if their fate can excite no interest, if a deaf ear is to be turned to their complaints, extend the boon of freedom to them as to their slaves; permit them to apply the produce of their industry unfettered by any burthens to provide for their security; or allow them to procure it from other powers, and if protection is withdrawn, absolve them also from allegiance.

Your Petitioners desire no such conclusion; attached by every tie to the Parent country, it is their sincere wish to remain under the protection of the British Government; and they anticipate with confidence, that the wisdom of Parliament will avert the dreadful calamities which threaten them, will preserve their fortunes and their lives, as well as the great interests of their common country, from that destruction which the success of so dangerous an attempt must inevitably produce.

And your Petitioners will ever pray, &c.

THEATRICALS.

Miss Paton has made her appearance at Covent Garden, and was received with mingled applause and disapprobation. As we certainly take the blame of this reception upon ourselves, we think it but fair to the young lady to say, that, notwithstanding our offer to publish any representation of the case on the part of the Haymarket Manager, in reply to the letter of Mr. Paton, no statement has been put forth from that quarter. This, in our minds, changes the appearance of things, and ought to ensure undiminished applause to the young lady.

With respect to Mr. Paton, we certainly took his letter as a striking proof of the incapacity which has been so uniformly attributed to him, by those who have, as we have not, the pleasure of knowing him. As we never refuse to do justice, we subjoin a letter which we have received from Mr. Francis Lee, of Albany House, a gentleman who has distinguished himself as an opponent of Mr. Owen and the system of Lanarkism.

TO JOHN BULL.

Sir—A letter from Mr. Paton appeared in the "John Bull," Sept. 28, violating orthography. Mr. Mouat avowed, in the Herald, Sept. 30, that the errors did not exist in Mr. Paton's original letter entrusted to him; (as I can also vouch, from seeing it dispatched from Lancashire); but arose from Mr. Mouat's hasty transcript for your paper. His explanation in the Herald has not been acknowledged in your subsequent John Bulls. I hope, therefore, you will insert this remark, that, if possible, the party may rest satisfied: and oblige your friend and obedient servant, L.

Albany House, Oct. 17, 1823.

At Drury Lane, Munden, on Tuesday, delighted the town with his performance of Crack, in the Turnpike Gate—a more powerful picture is not to be found in the whole round of theatrical exhibitions—and he met with the applause he so richly deserved.

Of the value of the praise of theatrical critics—of its sincerity and the judgment evinced by the "gentlemen" of the press, a pretty fair estimate may be made by reading the following notice of the performance in question, which appeared in Wednesday's Morning Chronicle.

Drury-lane Theatre.—"The Road to Ruin was repeated last night with the same cast that we have already noticed. It was followed by the farce of The Turnpike Gate, in which Mr. Munden sustained his old part of Crack. No performer on the stage, not even Kean himself, possesses the art of identifying himself with a character more completely than he does, and the consequence is, that if there be any thing like nature in the dramatic personage, it is sure to succeed in his hands. We know not whether most to admire his by play or his dialogue, both were so irresistibly droll last night, and the audience gave as much applause to one as to the other. Mr. Hoan made his first appearance for the season in the same farce, and was very favourably received."

It will be seen that our opinions and those of this writer upon Mr. Munden's merits perfectly agree—it is with infinite pain therefore we are obliged to doubt their being the results of personal observation, inasmuch as Mr. Horn, the gentleman who shares the praises of the writer with Mr. Munden, did not "make his first appearance in the same farce;" nor in fact did he play in the farce at all!

Our observations upon the fulsome and equally well-founded praises of Mr. Macready, which appeared in our last number, have drawn from that gentleman a letter, which he wishes us not to publish, but which is written in the spirit, and couched in terms and language such as might have been expected from a person bearing the high character in private life which we have always attributed to Mr. Macready.

Mr. Macready seems equally with ourselves to feel the injurious effect of such over-strained praise; and requests us to contradict the statement of his having saved a child from a burning house near Birmingham or Manchester (we forget which at the moment), and informs us, that he himself contradicted the story some months since.

We assure Mr. Macready that we were not aware of this circumstance; and we beg to assure him still further, that he is entirely mistaken if he supposes that we have the slightest affection for the Covent-Garden "Committee," or that we even know them. We never saw any one of them, excepting Mr. Charles Kemble, who as a public performer everybody has seen. When the Covent-Garden management pleases us we praise it—we do the same by Elliston or any of them—when we see errors we point them out, and we beg Mr. Macready distinctly to understand this, and moreover to believe that our remarks of last Sunday were directed, not against his acting, but against a system likely, as he says himself, to do him incalculable mischief.

Mr. Sinclair has also favoured us with a letter, which we give entire, in reply to an observation upon a paragraph which appeared in the Chronicle; and we must say it gives us a very good opinion of Mr. Sinclair's sense and judgment, and affords another proof of the bad taste of those grovelling hangers-on, who think to ingratiate themselves with public performers, by making their smallest actions and private conduct the theme of fulsome paragraphs in the daily newspapers.

93, Charlotte-street, Fitzroy-square.

Sir—As I am unwilling, like all other people, to be thought a greater fool than I am, I cannot refrain from requesting you to believe, that could I have prevented so silly a paragraph from appearing in print as the one which you quoted in last Sunday's Bull concerning me, I should most certainly have done so. Who could possibly be idle enough to write such mischievous nonsense I cannot conjecture. I should, however, never have thought of noticing it, had it not unfortunately attracted your attention and reproof.

So far from there being the slightest truth in the report, you would find, if you could do me the favour of a call, that I have not even begun fires, and I should think myself a very unworthy native of Scotland if I cared about any change of season or climate, or were coxcomb enough to pay farther attention to my voice or health than common sense dictated as a duty to myself and the public.

As you have thought fit to lend your powerful assistance in giving publicity to the silly and injurious paragraph, accompanied with a censure of myself, which, were I really to blame, I should acknowledge as just; I trust I shall not be deemed guilty of any impropriety or impertinence in requesting you, at your convenience, and in any manner you think best, to exculpate me with the public (whose good opinion is my bread) from being at all privy to such folly as I now stand charged with.—I am, Sir, very respectfully your's,

Oct. 21, 1823. JOHN SINCLAIR.

We are quite glad to find this son of Scotia, as he proclaims himself, above the quackery attributed to him; and now that he has proved that he had no intention of giving himself airs, the sooner he begins to favour us at Covent Garden the better pleased we shall be.

TO JOHN BULL.

Sir,—An astronomical query having appeared in your publication of the 19th inst. I the more readily undertake a solution of the difficulty, as recollecting myself once to have been much embarrassed with it. The querist, I apprehend, needs not be informed that the distance of Sirius (from his great splendour supposed to be the nearest fixed star,) has been supposed by Dr. Herschel and others to be not less than about six billions of English miles. The diameter of the earth's orbit has been ascertained by the transits of Venus over the solar disk to be not less than 190 millions of miles. If the latter number be divided by the less, the quotient, 31,500, will express the proportion the diameter of the earth's orbit bears to the entire distance of Sirius from the earth. Now, suppose a luminous body on the earth to be distant from the eye of an observer as far as possible to be at all sensible to his vision—for example, three miles, what difference would be made in the appearance of the object if he were to approach it only the 31,500th part of the whole distance? I answer, absolutely nothing. Just so is the case with respect to the distance of Sirius and the diameter of the terrestrial orbit. Now, Dr. Halley has shewn, from mathematical principles, in one of the early volumes of the Philosophical Transactions, that stars of the second magnitude are double the distance of those of the first, stars of the third magnitude treble the distance, &c. Therefore, if we were to approach the fixed stars the whole distance of Sirius, it would only give the appearance of stars of the first magnitude to those we now see of the second, in the same direction of the heavens, or diminish those of the second in the opposite part of the heavens to stars of the third magnitude, &c. &c. And it would require Sirius to be removed seven times the distance he now is, to be numbered among the brightest of what we call telescopical stars, i. e. his distance must be at least thirty-three billions of miles!! It is therefore manifest, that if we approached the nearest fixed star not only by a quantity equal to the whole diameter of the earth's orbit, but even of that of the Georgium Sidus, the optical distance of the starry firmament would scarcely be sensible; for the diameter of the amazing orbit of the latter planet is not the 1600th part of the distance of Sirius from the earth!!!—Your's, &c.

Oct. 20, 1823. X. Z.

TO JOHN BULL.

Sir,—The success which has attended the crafty emissaries of the church of Rome, in their endeavours to subvert the faith of the simple in our own island; the pitch of insolent daring to which the ambitious and unprincipled spirit of popery has again raised itself in the sister country, and, above all, the frigidity and shameful apathy with which those things are beheld by those who have the power to check them, even now, but who neglect to use their influence, either from a mean desire for mob-hurras, a timid servility to a few sounding names, or from a lamentable political ablepsy and degurgitation, afford sad proofs of the nature and effects of that liberality which the advocates of what is falsely called "Catholic Emancipation," have so long and seductively been inculcating on their very tractable and docile respondents, (I may not say "opponents") in certain large assemblies and elsewhere. The voice of truth—the page of history—the dear-bought lessons of experience—all that could once serve to direct and establish the judgment, are to be (and, I am afraid, in too many instances have been) disregarded, or else we shall surely be assailed with those dreadful charges—so shocking to the polite and accommodating ears of certain modern statesmen and their followers—of intolerance and bigotry! "What!" they are ready to exclaim, "not grant the poor, meek, harmless, loyal Catholics, all that they or their jesuitical leaders can desire, especially their three darling objects—pomp, power, and preponderance? What illiberality! What! are we, the enlightened of the earth—the universal friends of man (especially of those who are most distinguished as the enemies of our country) to pay any attention to the wisdom of our semi-barbarian forefathers, and to venerate a church which they purchased by their blood (and to which, indeed, we have sworn attachment, allowing ourselves, however, all convenient latitude in the explanation and interpretation of the oath,) what bigotry! The spirit of Catholicism is not now what it was in former ages. Having for a long time been fed on milk and water, instead of blood, its whole constitution is changed; it is become quite harmless, and is as obsequious and gentle as a lady's lap-dog. Its pretty fangs can now only be regarded, by the liberal and unprejudiced, as objects of curiosity. Having conceded so much to the faithful Catholics, it would betray a lamentable adherence to old prejudices to decline giving them all that they ask: besides, unless you yield it with a good grace, they may help themselves without being indebted to your grace at all."

Such, I am ashamed to say, is the substance of all the declamation with which we have been stunned during so many years by the advocates of the claims of the papists. Truly meretricious in all that belongs to their cause, they begin by cajolery and end by bullying. Grant them what they desire, and they are all meekness, obedience, and affability; pause a moment for consideration, and you are branded, menaced, and insulted! Such is, and ever has been, the spirit of the Romish priesthood, and of too many of its deluded and implicit followers.

Sir, I will only trespass further on your pages at this time, to ask a plain question or two; and let common reason and honesty return the answers:—Is not the Protestant Ascendancy the very life blood of the British Constitution? Is not this the golden thread that unites the whole in one lovely and glorious piece of workmanship? Are not our rulers and legislators bound by the most solemn ties to defend the Protestant Established Church? Are not, then, the Protestant advocates of "Catholic Emancipation," (as it is artfully designated) virtually false to their vows, and betrayers of their country, when they would set up a church which allows no equal, and subject the consciences of the highest Officers of the State to the Jesuitical controul of the crafty minions of a foreign Bishop?—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

ATLANTICOLA.

TO JOHN BULL.

Sir—The proceedings at Union Hall Police Office, relating to a Miss Lydia Kemp and sisters, have occasioned a widely circulated report that we are the persons referred to. We beg to inform you the proceedings do not concern us; and, that we have no connection whatever with the family, or the establishment of the Misses Kemp, Somerset House, Clapham Rise. Our establishment is conducted at Lymington House, Clapham, near the Common; and our references are, to the Rev. William Dealtry, M.A. Rector of Clapham; the Rev. James Phillips, Clapham; Francis Paynter, Esq. Denmark Hill; Boyd Willer, Esq. Collyer's Wood Tooting; and Richard Percival, Esq. 76, Lombard-street.—We are, Sir, your obedient servants.

ELIZABETH, MARY ANNE, and FRANCES KEMP.

Lymington House, Clapham, Oct. 23, 1823.

The banking-office of Messrs. Oldaker and Co. at Alcester, was, on Friday, entered by means of false keys, during the hour of dinner and temporary absence of the clerk, and robbed of various cash notes to the amount of two thousand pounds! Some of the property has since been recovered, having been found on the road.

On Wednesday, a Court of Directors was held at the East India House, when Capt. Wm. Elisha Farrer was sworn into the command of the ship Orwell, consigned to China direct.

On Wednesday, his Majesty's ships Fury and Hecla, from a Voyage of Discovery, arrived at Deptford. Capt. Parry, almost immediately after his return from his arduous expedition, was seized with a violent fever. Some unpleasant intelligence, of a private nature, is said to have produced this effect.

Cowes, Oct. 22.—On Monday, his Royal Highness the Duke of Clarence inspected the troops in Albany Barracks, of whose appearance he expressed great approbation. On the same day he visited our house of Industry, and most warmly applauded the plan and arrangements of that excellent institution, which he was pleased to say was a model worthy of general imitation. Yesterday his Royal Highness, the Earl and Countess of Errol, and Miss Fitzclarence, took a row up Newport River, in our Tide Surveyor's (Mr. R. Stephens) boat, who had the honour of steering her; on approaching Newport quay, the bells struck up, but the inhabitants were much disappointed in their expectation of his landing. This morning the Duke embarked on board Sir James Whitshed's cutter, the Sylph, for Portsmouth, under a salute from the Castle, and hearty cheers from a great concourse of people who assembled to greet him.

We understand the journeymen stocking-makers in Dumfries have struck for some days past, and that not a loom is now going in Dumfries.

Thursday, two houses, in the occupation of Messrs. Woolner and Smythe, in James-street, Grosvenor-square, fell down with a dreadful crash. Happily no lives were lost, nor personal injury sustained.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The King has been pleased to give the sum of 100 guineas to be run for annually at Manchester, to commence next year. Four years old to carry 10st. 2lb.; five year olds, 11st.; six years olds, 11st. 7lb.; and aged, 11st. 5lb. Heats, three miles and a distance.

South American Consuls.—The following is a list of such appointments as have transpired:—Mexico, Consul-General, Mr. Gorman; Vera Cruz, Consul, Mr. Charles Mackenzie; Acapulco, Consul, Mr. Ponsonby Staples; Commissioners, Mr. Lizard, Mr. and Mr. Ward (son of Mr. Ward, of the Ordnance). Colombia, Consul-General, (Bogota) Mr. James Henderson, author of the "History of Brazil;" La Guayra, Mr. Thomas Tupper; Maracaibo, Mr. Sutherland; Carthagena, Mr. Watts; Panama, Mr. Mackintosh. Commissioners, Col. Hamilton and Col. Patrick Campbell; Buenos Ayres, Consul-General, Mr. Parish; Chili, ditto, Mr. Nugent; Peru, ditto, Mr. Rowcroft.—The objects of the Commissioners are of a temporary nature. It is expected that after they have made their report on the condition of the countries to which they are sent, the same gentlemen will be appointed as Ministers to those governments. The Commissioners and Consuls for Mexico have already left town.

Tuesday the Lord Mayor held a Court of Aldermen at Guildhall, which 17,900l. of the Orphans' Debt was ordered to be paid off. The Chamberlain was directed to give the several parties interested notice thereof.—Richard Martin, Esq. M.P. attended the Court, and was heard in respect of the regulations for Smithfield Market; when the Court referred it to a Committee to take Mr. Martin's suggestions into consideration, and report their opinion thereon.

On Thursday a Court of Common Council was held at Guildhall, at which a motion was made for permitting George Budd Williams, Esq. and Peter Laurie, Esq. Sheriffs, to take their seats in the Court on the Bench with the Aldermen, although not members, which was agreed to unanimously, and those gentlemen were then introduced and took their seat accordingly.—A Petition from Mr. Williams, of Cornhill, in respect of making sub-ways under the public streets, was delivered in, and heard at the bar in support of the allegations. The Court referred the consideration of the question to the Improvement Committee.—A petition was presented by Sir J. Shaw, on behalf of the Marine Society, praying the Court to grant a sum of money in aid of the charity. The Governors attended at the bar, and represented the claims which the Society had to the support of the Corporation. Since their establishment they had educated 73,000 boys for the sea service, and the demand for boys was daily increasing. Last year they had in the school 646 boys, and these were of an age and description advantageous to the Metropolis.

The Savings' Banks and Friendly Societies of England and Ireland have eight millions and a half now deposited in Government funds.

Cambridge.—At a congregation on Wednesday last, the following degrees were conferred:—Doctor in Divinity—The Rev. H. I. Bonney, of Christ coll.—Masters of Arts—Rev. T. B. Wrangham, Corpus Christi coll.; T. A. Knight, Trinity coll.—Bachelors of Arts—J. Lubbock, of Caius coll.—At the same congregation, the Rev. T. P. Higman, M.A. Fellow and Tutor of Trinity college, and the Rev. H. H. Hughes, M.A. Fellow of St. John's college, were appointed Moderators for the year ensuing; the Rev. H. Kirby, M.A. Fellow of Clare hall, and the Rev. T. Spencer, M.A. Fellow of St. John's college, were appointed Pro-Proctors.—On the same day the following gentlemen were appointed Examiners of the Junior Sophs at the examination to take place in Lent term, 1824:—Rev. T. S. Hughes, B.D. Emanuel coll.; Rev. E. Bulsby, M.A. Fellow of St. John's coll.; Rev. J. Scholefield, M.A. Fellow of Trinity coll.; Rev. W. Greenwood, M.A. Fellow of Corpus Christi coll.—The following gentlemen were appointed Classical Examiners of the Incepting Bachelors of 1824:—Rev. T. S. Hughes, B.D. Emmanuel coll.; Rev. H. Law, M.A. Fellow of St. John's coll.; Rev. J. Scholefield, M.A. Fellow of Trin. coll.; Rev. T. Shelford, M.A. Fellow of Corpus Christi coll.

The Army.—Colonel the Hon. Henry King is appointed to the command of the 1st Royal Veteran Battalion, vice Major-General Keating, deceased.

Sir James Carmichael Smyth, Bart. who commanded the Royal Engineers at the battle of Waterloo, is gone out on a special mission to the West Indies.

By the recent death of Lieut.-General Bayly Willington, Colonel Commandant of the Royal Artillery, there being no officer senior for further promotion in that regiment senior to Lieut.-General Sholto Douglas, the latter officer will succeed to that battalion, and the vacancy created through the regiment.

It is a fact not generally known, in allusion to the reported levee, that the captains of 1809 (however small the promotion,) must be included in the brevet for majorities; as of that rank of the standing of 1808 there are only 25 on full pay, and for the year 1809, 34. Those above are independent of the ordnance and marines, which by no means those years are 47.—Within the last two years, upwards of 60 cadets have passed and left the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich, and are waiting their turns for commissions in the Ordnance Corps. It now appears to be the intention of the Master-General to commission 50 of them, and second them on the different corps.

Owing to the present disturbed state of some of the West India islands, the Commander of the troops there has applied for an additional force, and the following regiments are ordered to proceed there immediately—viz. 12th Foot, Lieut.-Colonel Foresteen, from Chatham; 27th ditto, Lieut.-Colonel Henry, from Gibraltar; 33d ditto, Lieut.-Colonel the Hon. Sir C. Gordon, from Mullingar. Two other regiments, it appears, have also been ordered on the same duty, but their names are not yet known.

The 1st division of the 77th regiment of infantry will march from our barracks to-morrow morning, for Dublin. The remaining three divisions will march on the 24th, 25th, and 27th inst. During their short stay in this town, their conduct has procured for them general esteem. The 1st division of the 11th regiment of foot, Lieut.-Colonel Ogilby, commander, will enter our garrison on Saturday. Major Fitz-Clarence, who rendered himself illustrious by his intrepid conduct in encountering the Cato-street conspirators, has, at present, the command of this regiment.—Belfast Chronicle, Oct. 20.

We understand that the Government think the state of affairs in the West India colonies so urgent, that they have determined to send out the reinforcements in vessels of war, instead of transports; and it is said that two line of battle ships will convey the regiments now under orders to Barbadoes.

On Thursday a scene of the utmost confusion and disaster occurred below bridge, between Horseferry and Pigeon stairs. A fleet of colliers and other vessels making for the Pool were, owing to the strong influx of the tide, occasioned by a northerly wind, driven one against the other with a general crash, and much mischief occasioned. A Dutch brig was run foul of by a Newcastle collier; the bowsprit of which coming against the anchor of the brig, forced it up the fore-stay nearly to the foremast top, whence, the rope being obliged to be cut, it fell on the collier's deck, and nearly occasioned the loss of many lives. Another collier lost all her masts and rigging, and was thrown on her beam ends, and the crew saved from drowning with much difficulty. A young man, a native of Rotherithe, lost his life, being washed overboard; he was afterwards taken up in a lifeless state, and the vertebræ of his neck found to be divided. His body was conveyed to the Surrey Canal Bridge-house. Another seaman had his eye knocked out.

On Thursday some haystacks on the estate of —— Hamilton, Esq. at Harrow on the Hill, took fire, and, with several out-houses, to which the flames communicated, were totally destroyed; but the arrival of the parish engines, with the aid of some from Hendon, prevented the further spread of the destructive element.

On Wednesday morning, about five o'clock, a fire was discovered in the lofty range of warehouses opposite the King's old tobacco warehouse, Liverpool. The fire engines arrived on the spot as soon as possible; but all exertions to extinguish the flames were unavailing, and in two hours three warehouses were a heap of ruins. These buildings were the loftiest in Liverpool, being not less than thirteen stories high. They were the property of Messrs. Thomas Hoath and Co. and contained nearly 240,000 bushels of corn, principally foreign, under the King's lock, and valued at about 6l,000l.; besides a great quantity of cotton and other goods. The total loss in buildings and commodities by this awful conflagration, is estimated at 150,000l.

Harvest in Ireland.—Wheat is one-third, as nearly as can be computed, under an average crop; the quality is generally not good, owing to the long continuance of the wet, and the early appearance of the frost. Ireland has suffered more, in respect to grain, than England. Barley is an average crop. Oats, which may be said to have failed last year, are this year considerably beyond an average crop. There is at least double the quantity of oats saved this year beyond the last. In some counties, Meath, for instance, the proportion has been four or five to one. The quality, too, is excellent, quite as good as the famous crop in 1814. Hay is generally good.

"The Author's remarks exhibit the frankness, acuteness, ease, and good feeling which we are proud to think, and pleased to say, so often belong to the character of the experienced, British Officer; while they are so well conveyed, and act with such partie-ar correctness, that not only few military men have the opportunity of forming and maturing so good a style, but many of our practised writers must fall into the rear in competition with Major Ravelin, who may set master with Geoffrey Crayon."—Monthly Review, May, 1823.

PINNOCK'S CATECHISMS.

Published, corrected up to the present year (Price Ninepence) a new Edition of PINNOCK'S CATECHISM of BRITISH GEOGRAPHY, Part I. containing an easy and familiar Description of all the Cities and Towns of England and Wales; with their Population, according to the Returns; their Productions, Natural Curiosities, &c. &c.

Part II. containing SCOTLAND, IRELAND, and the FOREIGN POSSESSIONS of BRITAIN, in all parts of the World.

A more complete and useful publication as the Catechism of British Geography never before appeared: and its extraordinary cheapness places it easily within the reach of every person who wishes to become acquainted with its valuable contents.

The same size and price may also be had the CATECHISMS of Arithmetic, Ancient History, Astronomy, Architecture, Algebra, two parts, the Bible and Gospel, Botany, British Biography, British Law, Classical Biography, Chemistry, Chronology, Drawing, Duty to Parents, Everything Essential, English Grammar, French Grammar, First Catechism, General Knowledge, Greek Grammar, Greek Grammar, Hebrew Grammar, Heraldry, History of Ancient Scotland, History of Ireland, History of France, History of Greece, History of America, two parts, History of the Jews, Italian Grammar, Land Surveying, Latin Grammar, Logic, Mineralogy, Medicine, or Art of Preserving Health, Modern History, Music, Mythology, Natural History, Navigation, Ornithology, Perspective, Painting in Oil, Poetry, Religion, Religious Denominations, Rhetoric, Short Hand, Scripture History, Trade and Commerce, Universal History, Use of the Globes.

For the superiority of these excellent Juvenile Works over all others, and for their being a most extensive and universal sale, which has enabled the Proprietor to permanent the new editions with beautiful portraits, by which they are rendered of a size in some measure augmented their value, without increasing the price.

Those who wish to look into these works, we have been pleasingly surprised at the correctness of the information they contain, within so small a compass, and so excellent a form: and we must say, that more convenient, accurate, and proper publications, were never submitted to general observation."—Literary Gazette.

A SUITE of DRAWING-ROOM or DINING-ROOM CURTAINS, either of splendid Swiss Clinzy, Spanish Damasks, Tabbotets, or Moreens, can be completed by MILES and EDWARDS at little more than half the prices regularly charged by other establishments. The extraordinary advantages they possess, with their immense variety, entirely manufactured since the ensuing reduction in the prices, can only be credited by a comparison with the terms of other houses. For Four-post, French, and Tent-bed Furniture, M. and E. have just received from their printing Grounds an additional quantity of Twelve Hundred Pieces of Chintzes, all warranted fast colours, and on their usual low terms.

CAUTION.—Miles and Edwards beg particularly to state, that their only Establishment is at No. 134, Oxford-street (between Holles-street and Old Cavendish-street.

BURGESS'S NEW SAUCE for general purposes, having given such great approbation, and the demand for it continuing to increase JOHN BURGESS and SON beg most respectfully to offer this their best acknowledgments to the Public for their liberal patronage of the same: Its utility and great convenience in all climates, has recommended it to the most distinguished foreign connexions, who have all spoken highly in its recommendation, as is prepared by them ONLY; and for preventing disappointments to families, all possible care has been resorted to, by each bottle being sealed upon the cork with their drawn and address, as well as each label having their signature, without which it cannot be genuine.

JOHN BURGESS & SON'S long established and much-esteemed ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES, continues to be prepared by them after the same manner that has given the greatest satisfaction for many years.—Warehouse, 107, Strand, corner of the Savoy-steps, London.—The original Fish-Sauce Warehouse

EASE and COMFORT in SHAVING.—To those Gentlemen who by experience inconvenience in Shaving from a tender face or inferior razor, J. T. RIGGE most particularly recommends his celebrated MAGNETIC RAZOR TABLET, which, with its late improvement, he engages will produce so keen an edge as to supersede all grinding, honing, &c. and render the operation of shaving as easy and agreeable as it was before unpleasant and painful. Its use is simple, its effect certain; price 7s. 6d. J. T. Rigge's Aromatic Shaving Soap will also be found an invaluable addition. Manufactory, 65 Cheapside and 52, Park-street, Grosvenor-square.

FOR COLDS, HOUGHS, ASTHMAS, &c.

THE PECTORAL ELIXIR. Experience during a very long period has incontestably proved the superior efficacy of this Medicine, in all cases of COLDS, COUGHS, and ASTHMATIC AFFECTIONS. By promoting gentle expectoration, it very shortly relieves the patient of a slight or recent Cold, and a few doses are generally sufficient to remove those which neglect has rendered more confirmed and obstinate, and which are accompanied with Coughs, Spitting of Blood, and other serious symptoms. Its peculiar balsamic powers tend to heal soreness, and allay the irritation of the lungs, in cases of Cough; and in Asthmatic affection it assists and gives freedom to the Breast.

Sold in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. by Butlers, Chemists, 4, Cheapside, St. Paul's, and 220, Regent-street, (near the Argyle Rooms). London; Waterloo-place, Edinburgh; Sackville street, Dublin; and by the principal Medicine Venders throughout the United Kingdom.—☞ Be careful to ask for Butlers Pectoral Elixir.

BILIOUS AND LIVER COMPLAINTS.

AS a mild and effectual remedy for all those disorders which originate in a vitiated action of the Liver and biliary organs, namely, Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Head Ache, Heartburn, Flatulencies, Spasms, Costiveness, Affections of the Liver, &c. DIXON'S ANTIBILIOUS PILLS have met with more general approval than any other medicine whatsoever. They unite every recommendation of mild operation with successful effect; and require no restraint or confinement whatever during their use. In tropical climates where the consequences of redundant and vitiated bile are so prevalent and alarming, they are an invaluable and efficient protection. They are likewise peculiarly calculated to correct disorders arising from excesses of the table, to restore the tone of the stomach, and to remove most complaints occasioned by irregularity of the bowels. Sold in Boxes, at 2s. 9d. 6s. 11s. and 22s., by Butlers, Chemists, 4, Cheapside, St. Paul's, 220, Regent street, (near the Argyle Rooms,) London; Waterloo-place, Edinburgh, Sackville-street, Dublin; and by the principal Medicine Venders throughout the United Kingdom.

GOUT, RHEUMATISM, COUGHS, AND COLDS.

LIFE PILLS, entirely vegetable, discovered by the Rev. C. CARRINGTON, Vicar of Berkely, one of His Majesty's Deputy Lieutenants, &c. for the County of Gloucester.—By encreasing the energies of the brain, and pouring new life and vigour into the constitution, they enable nature to make incredible efforts for the expulsion of disease, before organic destruction.—In Gout, Rheumatism, Atonic Gout; in Female Complaints; in Flatulencies, Coldness, Sickness, and Pains of the Stomach; in Nervous Affections; the hurtful lenee, Sickness, and Pains of the Stomach; in Nervous Affections; the hurtful ing agony of sudden Grief, or the deep Heart Ache of settled Melancholy; in every Spasmodic Pain, from the slightest Cramp to the most excruciating Colic, their stupendous success obscures all former remedies. Even in the most aggravated cases of Gout in the Stomach, they often arrest the progress of Death, and lead to a recovery: they restore to the dignity of man and parent the enfeebled and unsavory votaries of pleasure.—Sold in Boxes, at 1s. 1½d. and 4s. 6d. by BARRY and SON, Bristol, without whose Name on the Stamp, they each, by BARRY and SON, Bristol, without whose Name on the Stamp, they cannot be Genuine;) Sold also by Sutton and Co. THE LATE INSURRECTION AT DEMERARA.

We have been requested to insert the following letter, which we are given to understand has been addressed to a Gentleman in Liverpool (one of the people called Quakers,) who is supposed by the writer to have inserted those articles respecting the Insurrection at Demerara in the Liverpool Mercury, which appeared in a Morning Paper on the 20th of October:—

"Gracechurch-street, London, 22d of the 10th Month, 1823.

"RESPECTED FRIEND,—It was to be expected that thou would'st hold forth something on the topic of the Demerara Insurrection, and there is no mistaking the spirit which animates thee upon such subjects. I read thee, past all doubt, in those remarks which the papers of this city have within these few days extracted from the Liverpool Mercury. They are penned with thy accustomed sharpness, although in some passages there be a semblance of inconsistency which I shall freely point out to thee.

"Thou hast laid down in terms so strong and unqualified, the doctrine that the slave has, at all times and under all circumstances, a right to his freedom, that thy lesson, backed as it is by the logic of friend Buxton, will, when it shall reach the colonies, prompt the slaves, 'those half-naked and almost unarmed savages, to do that which thou affectest to dissuade, 'emancipate themselves, by open force, and under circumstances which can hardly by possibility lead to any result but their own destruction, or the closer rivetting the chains they seek to burst.' I use, as thou seest, thine own words, but what thou addressest to the passions will be first heard and most felt, and that which thou suggestest to reason and reflection will come second. And doubtless, to the slave, who has the right, must of consequence belong the entire discretion when and how that right shall be asserted—and what is likely to be the discretion of a slave thus stimulated? Thy regret is obvious enough, and pretty plainly expressed, that, upon this late occasion, the insurgents were too hasty, and that they did not so combine their measures by prudent precautions as to accomplish all their objects, of seizing and plundering the town, murdering the white males, excepting a few doctors, marrying (after the Negro fashion of that ceremony,) the white females, and so securing to themselves their liberty; for thou hast entirely omitted any expression of abhorrence concerning such attendant circumstances; it is only 'for the sake of the poor Negro himself' that thou wouldst prefer the more cautious, the surer process, and not from any chance which it might afford to the whites, whether male or female, of preserving themselves from murder and violation.

"Thou wilt say, as friends have already said, that these lucubrations of thine, are not more inflammatory than many things published in the Colonies by slave masters. Of that, respected friend, allow me to entertain some doubts—but even, granting it were so, thou knowest well that the productions of thy press are assiduously circulated among the negroes, by agents instructed for that purpose, which is not the case with the writings of thy opponents.

"On these grounds, I cannot but think, that such articles as thou hast been inserting of late in the Liverpool Mercury, are exactly calculated to 'hasten on a crisis,' which thou affectest to contemplate with 'deep regret.'

"I have a word or two also to say to thee concerning that 'valuable possession,' for which, as friend Buxton ingeniously sheweth, there are two competitors. Now the white man, who is one of the competitors for the value of the slave, may perchance decline to try the question by a course of abstract reasoning with the slave himself. He may prefer an appeal to the British Legislature, and say, 'I am one of your subjects, bound to confide in and respect your laws; and those laws have told me to buy and work this slave for your advantage,' (thou knowest well, respected friend, that there is such authority abundantly manifest in the Statutes of the second and third of the Georges)—' If you will take away this black man from me (then may the white say to the British Parliament,) pay me what under faith in your laws, I have given for him.' I confess I do not see what sophistry can overturn this claim of the white man. Even in a recent Act concerning the Registry of Slaves, which thou and the friends took, I believe, some part in framing—and the declared object of which is to define, for the protection of the Negroes, this description of property—the possessor of Slaves and all those who have lent money on such property see no limits assigned to their claim upon those who are now Slaves or upon their posterity. Will it not then turn out that thou and I, and friends Wilberforce, Macauley, Stephen, and Buxton, in common with our fellow-subjects, shall eventually be the parties who either must continue to sanction the transfer of that 'valuable possession' in dispute; or, chusing that it shall be abandoned to the black competitor, must in justice indemnify the White Man to whom we have sold it. It may be that this view of the case has not struck thee.

"A word more and I have done. Why doest thou on this topic call forth the high authorities of Scripture and of Our Saviour's doctrines? Methought what the Statesman Canning observed on that subject, in the Debate on Buxton's Motion, would have sufficed. I fear thou art not well read in the Bible. Truly thou quotest that great rule of Christ, "Do unto others as ye would they should do unto you."—And now tell me, respected Friend, hast thou ever asked thyself this question—If thou hadst inherited a large estate in Jamaica, cultivated by slaves, under all the authority which British Laws have given to such property, wouldst thou wish that a Society of Friends and Enthusiasts, and East India Adventurers, should either demand of thee Sacrifices which, in thy conviction, would render thy said property worthless, or, as the alternative, rouse thy slaves into rebellion, without offering to thee the smallest compensation?—Thy assured Friend,

"EMANUEL PROPER."

CHEMISTRY.—We have seen no late work on "Chemical Science" so full of important investigations, or so clearly elucidating the effects of a variety of new and ingenious experiments in Chemistry, as the "Lectures" delivered at the Surrey Institution by Mr Goldsworthy Gurney; nor do we believe there is a similar work extant from which the admirers of this useful and pleasing science can derive so much information as they will obtain from a perusal of these Elementary Lectures. His remarks on the Attraction of Cohesion, Chemical Affinities, Acids and Alkalies, Natural Phenomena, the Blow Pipe, &c. &c. are fraught with the highest interest.

DIBDIN'S SEA SONGS.—We firmly believe there is no "truly British heart," that does not feel a degree of national enthusiasm, whenever the patriotic words and appropriate melodies of this veteran's composition strike his ear; cold, indeed, and senseless must that breast be, which does not feel delighted with their unerring fidelity to nature, their genuine simplicity, or their moral tendency. We are, therefore, happy to see that these inimitable Songs, which, as their Author truly said, "have been the solace of sailors in long voyages—in storms—in battle," and which "have been quoted in mutinies to the restoration of order and discipline," have fallen into the hands of so able an Editor as the well-known Author of "Observations on Vocal Music," Dr. Kitchiner has both leisure and ability to do justice to the task he has undertaken, which includes the publication of One Hundred Sea Songs, accompanied by a "Memoir of the Life and Writings of Charles Dibdin," with whom the Doctor was latterly on terms of intimacy, and by whose Widow, as the first number of the work states, he has been assisted.

The UNIVERSAL RECEIPT-BOOK, or Family Library of 5000 practical and approved Receipts, has met with a degree of success proportioned to its obvious utility. Such a volume must find its way into every house in the British dominions, within a short period. The whole are arranged under general heads of various Arts, and references are made easy by means of a good general Index. Luxury or necessity can have no want which is not variously supplied by this volume.

The Third Volume of the much-admired Series of Separate Dictionaries, called the METHODICAL CYCLOPEDIA, is just published. It comprises the entire Mathematical and Physical Sciences, and as a work, in a cheap volume, will be highly useful to Students, as a work of convenient reference. The first Volume contained History; the Second, Chemistry, &c; the present Volume consists of Mathematics; and the next ensuing Volume will contain Geography, and include the exact pronunciation of all Foreign Names expressed in English Letters.

The great work of NATURE DISPLAYED has at length appeared, and it will not disappoint the expectations which its announcement has created. It transcends the old work of La Pluche as much as the knowledge of the age of George the Fourth excels that of Queen Anne, when La Pluche was published. The Atlas of Nature is the noblest tribute that art has ever paid to nature through the press.

Churchwardens are recommended to provide, without delay, the REGISTER BOOK for the Publication of Banns required by the New Marriage Act, which directs one to be had in every Church in November next. Books have been prepared by Swinborne and Co. of convenient and approved sizes, price 7s 6d. and 12s. neatly bound in quarto, for 400 and 800 Registers.—Sold by Baldwin, Cradock, and Joy, London: and by all Booksellers.

The public curiosity still continues unceasing in collecting any object which has ever been in the possession of the late Napoleon: there is something in the human mind that loves to hoard together whatever tends to illustrate the character, or throw the least light upon the shade with which misfortune has obscured the declining moments of the Emperor Napoleon. It is natural to collect any thing which has ever owned Napoleon for its master: an English Gentleman has purchased the beautiful white Charger and Saddle, on which Bonaparte constantly rode during the late wars, with the Bridle, &c. This interesting animal (which accompanied him through all his victories), is a thorough bred white horse, his mane hangs gracefully over his shoulders, and his tail nearly sweeps the ground; on the left side is the Imperial crown, with the initial N.; he has five bullet shots quite discernible, and a bullet still remains in his tail; the trappings, &c. are very rich, and are those used by Bonaparte. The horse has been purchased at an immense expense, merely with a view of gratifying public curiosity.

LATEST NEWS.

Paris papers down to Friday arrived yesterday. Advices from Bayonne to the 17th inst. also arrived. The Paris papers state that the regiments which were in march for Spain have received counter orders. The first detachment of this regiment, which is at Bayonne, will return from thence to Bourdeaux.

Intelligence from the Grand Head-quarters.—On the 14th the grand head-quarters were still at Ecija. It appears that the Duke d'Angoulême will arrive at Madrid on the 25th of October, and that the King of Spain will not make his entry into that capital until the 1st of November. A vessel which has arrived at Marseilles saw the white flag flying on the walls of Barcelona.

The Moniteur contains a notice of the result of applications made to the Governors of Havannah and Porto Rico, by the French Authorities in the West Indies. The Governor of Havannah, as is known, would enter into no treaty with them. The Governor of Porto Rico answered, that he would send an officer to Europe to inform himself of the state of things, and that the colony should be left under the authority of his Catholic Majesty.

CADIZ, OCT. 7.—Valdes, Alava, Latre, all the Members of the late Ministry, Isturitz, Galiano, Garcia, Herreros, and Arguelles have set out for Gibraltar. Arejula and the Constitutional Municipality are still here.

SEVILLE, OCT. 11.—We are assured that the King has published a Decree, in which he states that all Governors of strong places, who do not surrender on the first summons, shall be punished with death. The plan of the organization of the new Spanish army was given in by the Duke d'Angouleme, and several French Generals.

The Duc d'Angouleme lodged at the Palace, where he was complimented by the Chapter, the Municipality, and all the Civil, Military, and Ecclesiastical Bodies. His Majesty invited the Prince to dinner, and expressed gratitude for the important services he had rendered Spain by his valour and generosity. In the evening, after visiting the Cathedral, his Royal Highness accompanied the King and the Royal Family to the bull-fights. The Prince de Carignan, who accompanied the Prince here, after dining with the King, continued his journey. The illuminations have been more brilliant than ever.

MADRID, Oct. 12.—It is announced that Ferdinand proposes to enlist in the new organization of the army twelve or fourteen thousand Swiss, and that part of the new guard will be composed of strangers. The Constitutionalists of both parties are alarmed; those who think themselves too much implicated in the system of the Constitution, are hastening to quit the country; others are compelled to do so by the King's order, so that the number of persons proscribed in this capital is estimated at 4000. Several decrees were preparing. The first grants a general amnesty, but in the Neapolitan manner, for a great number of individuals who have acted a prominent part in the Constitutional Government, are outlawed, and many others condemned to exile, or to punishments more or less severe; among the former are the leaders of the insurrection in the Isle of Leon, in 1820, all the violent deputies and some political chiefs; Riego, therefore, would be sacrificed. A second orders the purification of all the civil authorities, and the suppression of the Constitutional army. No officer shall be admitted into the Royal Army till he shall have purified himself (purificado) in one of the Councils of War, which shall be formed for that purpose. A third expels from the Spanish dominions all foreigners, of whatever nation they may be, who have taken part in the revolution, or supported the revolutionists. A fourth convokes the ancient Cortes of the kingdom, and fixes the mode of election. A fifth gives splendid recompences to the French Generals; but it is said that the Prince has refused this to Paris.

ST. SEBASTIAN, Oct. 10.—The Corregidor of this town claims the late Governor of the place, Penat, and a Sub-Lieutenant, D. S. Pincorvo, for having garotted (executed by strangling) three priests, and several other persons on the 3d May last. Both of them are in France.

The advices from Bayonne contain a statement of the number of troops, and their distribution, which are to remain in the Peninsula, amounting to 34,600 men; but this must be mere conjecture.

Letters were received from Brest yesterday, announcing the sailing of a French fleet for the West Indies.

Yesterday was published, No. III. of THE SOMERSET HOUSE WEEKLY MISCELLANY OF FINE ARTS; ANTIQUITIES, and LITERARY CHIT-CHAT; collected by EPHRAIM HARDCASTLE.—Contents—The OCTOBER FIRE SIDE, No. III.—The TEMPLE ORGAN—The SOCIAL DAY—PROGRESS of the FINE ARTS in ENGLAND to the FOUNDATION of the ROYAL ACADEMY—The DUKE of RICHMOND'S GALLERY—MR. NICHOLSON'S PROCESS for PAINTING in WATER COLOURS—My GREAT UNCLE ZACHARY'S SCRAP-BOOK, 5, 6, and 7—The STAGE SCRAP-BOOK—WITCHES—On PAINTING in WATER COLOURS—OLD ST. MARTIN'S in the FIELDS.—Published by W. Wetton, 21, Fleet-street.

Mr. Secretary Canning, who is on a visit to the Earl of Morley at Saltrum, was at the Plymouth Theatre on Thursday, in company with the Noble Earl. As soon as he was recognized, the pit rose and commenced a loud and general applause, which was warmly echoed from every part of the house, and lasted for some minutes, when a general cry arose for "God save the King," which was accordingly played by the orchestra.

On Thursday the Duke of Clarence reviewed Colonel Moncrieffe's battalion of Royal Marines, at Portsmouth; the high state of discipline of the battalion called forth repeated expressions of approbation from his Royal Highness. On Friday the Duke inspected the different corps forming the garrisons of Portsmouth and Gosport, namely, the Royal Artillery, Major ——; Royal Engineers, Capt. Smith; Provisional Battalion, Col. Muttlebury; 17th Regiment, Major Despard; 24th Regiment, Major Craig; and 53d Regiment, Lieutenant-Colonel Mansell. The whole were drawn up on Southsea Common, and Brigaded by Lieut.-Colonel Mansell. His Royal Highness was accompanied to the ground by Admiral Sir J. H. Whitshed; Col. Sir Alex. Bryce, Col. Moncrieffe, and Major Drake; also by the Earl of Errol, Capt. Fitzclarence, R.N. &c. Nearly the whole of the troops were recruits, but their steadiness was particularly noticed by his Royal Highness. Major-Gen. Sir James Lyon met with a serious accident just as he was about to take the field command of the troops to be inspected by the Duke of Clarence. His horse startled at some children, and unhorsed the General, who received by the fall some very severe bruises on the head.

THE ARMY.—The 12th Reg. of Foot has received orders to march in a few days from Sheerness and Chatham for Portsmouth, in order to embark for Gibraltar.—The 27th Reg. has received orders, on the arrival of the 12th Foot at Gibraltar, to proceed from that garrison to the West Indies.—The 93d Reg. will arrive by divisions on the 27th, 28th, 29th, and 30th inst. at Fermoy on its route to Cork for the purpose of embarking for the West Indies.

A few evenings since, between the hours of seven and eight, the house of Mr. Rivington, in Waterloo-place, was broken into from the upper balcony, and a large quantity of wearing apparel stolen.

Lately, the only son of the Hon. Colonel Butler was drowned near Geneva, in Switzerland, at a campagne called La Prairie, where the Colonel was residing. The young gentleman was in his eighth year.

A mad bullock ran fiercely through the streets of Bristol, a few days since, and tossed and wounded ten persons; seven were taken to the Hospital, a lad had an arm broken, and another received a concussion on the brain.

In the Palace Court, on Friday, an action was brought by a widow, named Oates, to recover a compensation in damages from Montagu Burgoyne, Esq. for injuring her cottage at East Sheen. During the absence of the plaintiff in London, the defendant's servants, by his order, began to pull up the trees in her garden, to untile the roof of her humble dwelling, and commit other trespasses on the cottage, by which much damage was done to her bed and furniture, to the extent, she alleged, of 14l. 19s.—For this sum the Jury gave her a verdict.

In the Court of King's Bench yesterday, an action was brought by the City of London v. Blyth, to assess damages for breach of the obligation on the part of the defendant for the due performance of his duty as a broker. In this case the defendant entered into a contract w... a quantity of oil, at 25l. per ton, to a Mr. Flockton, who, finding ... the oil was not only of an inferior quality, but that he was impo... upon, when called upon for the money, required defendant to give ... name of his principal, which Mr. Blythe refused; and then proceed... to arrest Mr. F. for the price agreed on. On being called on for ... books; as required by the City, he gave the name of Mrs. Jane Mann... of Appleby, in Westmoreland. Inquiry being made, it was found ... she had no interest or concern in the consignment of oil by the ... ships mentioned. The Mayor or Corporation sued for penalties ... the defendant, as a duty they owed to the public. The penalty in ... case being 1000l. The facts being proved, the Jury assessed the ... mages at 500l.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST INDIA STOCK.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,

HAVING just learnt the decease of your highly esteemed Director, Charles Grant, Esq. I hastily avail myself of this opportunity to communicate my intention of proceeding to the Ballot.

I shall request an early meeting of my Friends, by whose exertions, and your good opinion, I hope to obtain the object of my ambition.

I take free to recall your attention to the annexed Resolutions, which were passed at a meeting of my Friends, on the 23d of May last.

Most respectfully and earnestly soliciting the favour of your support, I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen, your most obliged, faithful servant,

J. PETTY MUSPRATT.

New Broad Street, Oct. 31, 1823.

A numerous and most respectable MEETING of PROPRIETORS of the EAST INDIA STOCK, held in the City of London Tavern, on Friday, the 30th of May, 1823; the Right Hon. Lord Viscount Exmouth, G. C. B. in the Chair: First, It was proposed by Sir Charles Flower, Bart. seconded by in the Chair: First, It was proposed by Sir Charles Flower, Bart. seconded by David Inglis, Esq. and resolved unanimously, That with a view to the most efficient administration of the East India Company's affairs, it has been frequently urged and admitted that the Court of Directors should be composed of a due proportion of their Civil, Military, and Naval Servants; and has that the Company's Knight, it leading to the East Indies," it is, in the opinion of this Meeting, equally necessary, and of the first importance to the interests of the Proprietors, that the Court of Directors should also contain a due proportion of Merchants of acknowledged talents, integrity, and experience.

2. It was proposed by Sir Charles Cockerell, Bart. M.P. seconded by Charles Forbes, Esq. M. P. and resolved unanimously, That this Meeting consider John Petty Muspratt, Esq. well qualified for a Seat in the direction of the Company's affairs, not only from his long mercantile experience, but from his industrious habits and general acquirements as a practical man of business. Upon these grounds they strongly recommend Mr. Muspratt to the favourable consideration of the Proprietors; and they are the more confirmed in the expediency of this recommendation, when they advert to the Company's having been in the last few years deprived of several mercantile Members of their executive body.

3. It was proposed by Joseph Hume, Esq. M.P., seconded by John Blades, Esq. and resolved unanimously, That upon the principles of the foregoing Resolutions this Meeting do collectively and individually pledge themselves to support and exert their influence in favour of Mr. Muspratt's well founded pretensions to a Seat in the Direction: and that they will use their best endeavours to promote his Election upon a future Vacancy.

Charles Forbes, Esq. M.P. having subsequently taken the Chair, it was proposed by the Hon. Basil Cochrane, seconded by Sir John E. Harrington, Bart., and resolved unanimously, That the Thanks of this Meeting be given to the Right Hon. Lord Viscount Exmouth for his able conduct in the Chair.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST INDIA STOCK.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,

THE Death of your late valuable and highly esteemed Director, Mr. CHARLES GRANT, having occasioned a Vacancy in the Direction of your Affairs, I hasten to redeem the pledge which I made to you in my Address of the 2d of June last to proceed to a Ballot on the first vacancy. I therefore request the favour of your support on the present occasion; and I hope that, from the very flattering Resolutions passed at a numerous Meeting of my Friends at the City of London Tavern, on the 27th of May last (hereunto annexed) and the encouragement I have since received, I may look forward with confidence to a favourable result; and I beg to assure you, that should I, through your Suffrages, be placed in that important situation, I will use every exertion to promote the interests of the East India Company.—I have the honour to be, respectfully, Ladies and Gentlemen, your faithful and obedient Servant,

Nicholas-lane, Oct. 31, 1823. JOHN MASTERMAN.

Mr. Masterman's Committee will sit daily at the City of London Tavern, where communications will be thankfully received.

A numerous and highly respectable MEETING of PROPRIETORS of EAST INDIA STOCK, held at the City of London Tavern, on Tuesday the 27th of May 1823, in pursuance of an advertisement signed by the under mentioned Proprietors:—

John Smith, Mansion-house-place.	J. C. Weguelin.

Wm. Burnie.	R. Borradaile.
Robt. Podmore.	Thos. Poynder, Jun.
William Bewsington.	J. Bruce Richards.

RICHARD CAMPBELL BAZETT, Esq. in the Chair.

The following Resolutions were passed unanimously:—

1. Proposed by Edward Fletcher, Esq., and seconded by Lewis Lloyd, Esq.—That it is the opinion of this meeting that a practical knowledge of the Commercial Interests and Usages of this Country, with which those of the East India Company are intimately connected, constitutes an important qualification in a Candidate aspiring to a Seat in the Direction of the Affairs of that Company.

2. Proposed by Stewart Majoribanks, Esq. M.P. and seconded by Robert Sheddon, Esq.—That when with commercial experience are found united general talents, sound judgment, and active habits of business, such acquirements stamp the possessor of them with a fair and honourable claim to the favour and support of all who are interested in the welfare of the East India Company.

3. Proposed by Henry Bonham, Esq. and seconded by Wm. Willoughby Prescott, Esq.—That this Meeting do unanimously concur in considering that in the well known character of Mr. John Masterman, these qualifications are combined in an eminent degree, and that, with such pretensions, his interests are entitled to the countenance and support of the East India Proprietary.

4. Proposed by Sir James Shaw, Bart., and seconded by Joseph Butterworth, Esq. M.P. That the proprietors here assembled pledge to Mr. John Masterman their strenuous assistance to place him in the East India Direction on the first vacancy which may hereafter occur: and that they will, in the meantime, use their influence and exertions to secure his success.

R. C. BAZETT, Chairman.

Mr. Bazett having left the Chair it was proposed by Thomas Weeding, Esq. and seconded by Michael Wm. Troy, Esq. and resolved unanimously That the cordial thanks of this meeting be given to R. C. Bazett, Esq. for his very able, courteous, and impartial conduct in the Chair.

Gillow's) begs to acquaint the public in general, that he has for inspection an assortment of Goods, consisting of Drawing-Room, Dining-room, Library, and Bedroom FURNITURE, manufactured in a style and manner peculiar to that House. The declarations made by gentlemen who have selected from this Establishment goods for exportation, are sufficient to warrant the assertion that it is the BEST MARKET in LONDON; but the best proofs are to those friends who have witnessed the unexampled increase of business C. Mills has experienced, whilst it is known by them that his rise are for ready money only.—Regent Park House, High-street, opposite Devonshire-street.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, OCT. 27.—It is announced that the state of the health of his Majesty the King of the Two Sicilies is such as to excite disquietude. The Baron de Strogonoff, Minister and Envoy Extraordinary of his Majesty the Emperor of Russia, arrived yesterday in Paris. The Echo du Midi of the 24th, which we have received by an extraordinary conveyance, announces the death of Gen. San Miguel. It is thought by the end of this month the French troops will have quitted Cadiz, and that the army of occupation will be cantoned in Catalonia, Biscay, and Navarre.

OCT. 29.—Torrijos persists in defending Carthagena; his forces are pretty considerable. It is affirmed that he is at the head of a corps of intrepid marines, and that his patience is invincible.—Rotten is still at the head of a formidable troop in Barcelona; he appears determined to listen to no proposals of arrangement.—It is confidently said that the Duke d'Angouleme has demanded the pardon of the French refugees who have been made prisoners in Spain.

The Drapeau Blanc, in speaking of Torrijos, says, that he is the "second edition of Mina."

It is this evening affirmed that the Ministry have finally renounced the project of dissolving the Chambers. The election of the new fifth will consequently take place according to the accustomed forms—Oriflamme.

It appears to be authentic that the Marshal Duke de Belluno has not accepted the Embassy of Vienna.

PERPIGNAN, OCT. 22.—The son of General Abisbal, Aid-de-Camp to Mina, arrived at Gerona on the 19th, and has submitted to the King. It was not without difficulty he made his escape from Barcelona, where a strong party, at the head of which is Rotten, seeks to prevent all negociations.

BAYONNE, OCT. 21.—The Constitutional troops that formed part of Ballesteros's army are still numerous in Jaen, Murcia, and part of Andalusia. Galicia is in a ferment, and doubts seem to be entertained of Morillo. In Estremadura the Constitutionalists lately obtained considerable advantages, and obliged the troops opposed to them to retreat towards Toledo, leaving a good many wounded at Talavera. La Reyna, Carthagena, and Alicant refuse to submit, and if they please may hold out longer than the places which have already surrendered. The Empecinado has entered Caceres without opposition, and proceeded thence to Truxillo, where he arrived, though Quesada made a show of opposing him. It is affirmed that many of the troops which had quitted Ballesteros, in conformity with the Convention, have joined Lopez Banos, who is thus much strengthened. At Madrid nothing is talked of but the punishment of Riego, who is already at the gates of death, in consequence of a nervous illness brought on by the hardships he has endured. If he survives his illness, and his sentence is carried into execution, he will be dragged upon a hurdle, hanged, and quartered; his head will be sent to Los Cabezas, and his four quarters to four different provinces. The Inquisition, it seems, is re-established, and the General of the Capuchins appointed Grand Inquisitor. A very energetic proclamation of Mina is spoken of, in which he refuses to obey the order of the King, because it is not countersigned by a responsible Minister. He renews, it is said, his declaration that he will put to death a great number of Officers and Bishops if Riego is executed; and it is affirmed that this menace has produced its effect, and that Riego will be sent a prisoner to France.

His Majesty has confirmed the following nominations made by the Regency:—The Duke de San Carlos Ambassador at the Court of France; the Count de Casaflores to that of Austria; and the Count de la Alcudia to that of Russia. The Duke de Montemar is declared President of the Supreme Council of the Indies. The King, by a Decree dated the 18th instant, has suppressed the Ministry of the Interior, seeing that the reasons for which it was instituted by the Regency no longer exist. The powers of this Ministry will be vested in those jurisdictions which exercised them previously to the 7th of March, 1820.

SEVILLE, OCT. 18.—A grand circle was held at Court on the 14th inst. to congratulate the King on the happy anniversary of his birth. Amongst the Members of the Diplomatic Corps was remarked Sir W. A'Court, who congratulated his Majesty, in the name of the King of England, upon his happy liberation. Don Philip de St. Marc is appointed Captain-General, and Don Diego Ballesteros, (who must not be confounded with the General bearing this name) second Chief of the Captainship of Grenada.

The King has re-established in his functions as Envoy Extraordinary to the Court of Rome, Antonio de Vargas de Laguna.

The following is the route of the King from Seville to Madrid:—On the 23d, at Carmona, the 24th at Ecija; on the 25th at Cordone; the 26th, 27th, and 28th, he rests; the 29th at Alcolea del Rio; the 30th at Andujar; the 31st and 1st Nov. he rests; the 3d at Baylen; the 4th at Carolina; the 5th at Santa Cruz; the 6th at Valdepenas; the 7th at Manzanares; the 8th at Madridejos; the 9th he rests; the 10th at Kempleque; the 11th at Aranjuez; and enters his Capital on the 19th.

LERIDA, OCT. 22.—Col. Tholose, Chief of the Staff of the 5th division, had been sent to summon Lerida to surrender. The articles of a capitulation being resolved upon and signed, it was requested that a French officer and an officer of the garrison might proceed to Madrid to insure the reality of events. Soon after their departure the militia revolted, and recommenced hostilities. Marshal Lauriston, who had already marched beyond Lerida, retraced his steps, surrounded the fortress, and caused it to be signified that he should instantly begin the siege, and that if one Frenchman was killed he would put the entire garrison to the sword. This declaration produced its effect: Lerida opened its gates, and our troops took possession of the fortress. Lauriston is marching upon Tarragona with all his artillery.—When you receive this letter Catalonia will be tranquil.

BARCELONA, NEAR BARCELONA, OCT. 22.—On the 17th Mina sent to Sarria, after Marshal Moncey, Colonel Mensserat. This officer offers the reduction of the place, on conditions which cannot be accepted. The Marshal rejected his proposals. The Colonel returned about five o'clock, and demanded they should send to Barcelona a French General who could treat with Mina on the conditions proposed. The Colonel was received by the Marshal at dinner. On the 18th Gen. Berg was sent to Barcelona, where he arrived at eight o'clock in the morning: they received him with distinction. He returned this evening, bringing with him a project of the capitulation. But on the 18th arrived a courier from Cadiz, bringing orders to the Marshal not to accord with particular conditions to Mina, and to demand that Barcelona surrender like Cadiz. On the 19th General Berg transmitted the King's orders to the Spanish General, who answered he would defend himself; since which several flags of truce have arrived, and the Marshal has refused to receive those that do not bring the submission without condition. Yesterday evening Col. Mensserat was admitted, but we do not as yet know his mission. It is assured that before the 17th the Marshal offered to Mina very advantageous conditions, and at the same time a vessel, to carry him and his family and fortune where he wished to go. Without doubt Mina will repent this offer. During all this time the siege is carried on with activity. One hundred pieces of cannon are coming from France and Figueras.

FRANKFORT, OCT. 22.—We have received the account of the arrival of the Emperor Alexander at Czeenowitz. The Emperor of Austria went on the 6th to Neustadtlee, on the frontiers, to receive his august ally and friend. In the evening the two monarchs arrived in the same carriage, and passing under a triumphal arch, erected at the entrance of this capital of the Buckowina, proceeded between a double line of troops, amidst the acclamations of the inhabitants, to the residence prepared for the Russian Emperor. The city was splendidly illuminated.

IRELAND.

About half past nine o'clock on Monday morning, Michael Kiely, Thomas Carty, and Jeffrey Greety, alias Greene, prisoners in our County Gaol, effected their escape by clambering over the side of the centry box which is within the iron railing at the door leading from the corridor into the yard. Having passed over a shed and a wall which seemed within sight of the centry, into the next yard, where the new improvements in the old wing are being made, they got upon the old gaol-wall and dropped from a height of about 40 feet, upon Thomas's-hill, and thus escaped. A Court Martial has sentenced the centry to six weeks solitary confinement for neglect of duty.—Waterford Mirror.

OUTRAGES.—DERRY, Oct. 21.—It will be recollected that a very desperate riot took place at the fair of Dungiven, on Tuesday the 5th of August, the day after the termination of the last Assizes. Some apprehensions were entertained that the Kennedies, whose trials were postponed, would be attacked on their return to Maghera, and therefore Major Gibson, the resident Magistrate of Dungiven, obtained permission from the Judge to leave the city before the conclusion of the Assizes, that he might be on the spot to preserve the public peace. On Sunday, as had been expected, an attack was made upon the Kennedies, but owing to the steadiness of the Officer who commanded the military, the mischief intended was happily frustrated. Tuesday the 5th, being Dungiven Fair, was reserved for the display of the strength of the Ribbon party, when a number of strangers came into the town, towards the close of the day, armed with cudgels, and attacked the special constables and Protestants indiscriminately, running through the streets, and calling out for the face of an Orangeman or "Yellow Belly;" and so serious did the riot at length become that Major Gibson was obliged to call out the military, and read the Riot Act, during which several stones were thrown at him. Several persons were also waylaid and barbarously beaten on their way home from the fair. In consequence of the above outrages a very numerous meeting of Magistrates was held at Dungiven in the ensuing week, and the business fully investigated, when examinations were sworn against several of the rioters and the persons charged with the assaults upon the people returning from the Fair. Only three of the former have been as yet apprehended, whose trials were proceeded on at the present Sessions, and one of the latter, named Owen M'Laughlin, who was at the head of a large mob near Dungiven, on the evening of the riot, when a most cruel and barbarous assault was made upon Thomas M'Question and his daughter, a girl only fifteen years of age.—The Traversers were found Guilty.

WHITEBOYISM.—On the night of the 21st ult. a large party of men assembled on that part of the lands of Booby-hill, in the parish of Fethard, Barony of Shelbourne, held by Patrick Cullen, who dug up and carried off about 20 barrels of potatoes that were under distress for rent. Cullen having abandoned his farm, and taken off his corn, these potatoes were seized for rent and arrears. Cullen's father, having come near these nightly legislators, was compelled to retire.—Cæsar Colclough, Esq. being apprised of the facts, immediately ordered out a division of Police, but their search proved fruitless.—Wexford Chronicle.

On the night of the 21st ult. a party of fellows, well armed with guns and mounted pikes, attacked the house of a respectable man named Connors, at Kilnaclerman Cross, in the Barony of Orrery and Kilmore; they beat the unfortunate man most cruelly, after which they left the house without assigning any reason for the commission of the daring outrage.—Cork Advertiser.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH.

THURSDAY.—The King v. Daniel Whittle Harvey and John Chapman for a Libel on the King.

The names of the Special Jurymen being called over, the following gentlemen answered:—J. N. Hanson, merchant; B. Stokes, ditto; R. Sharpe, ditto; J. Cecil, ditto: W. Allwright, ditto; B. Barnwell, ditto, and A. Ballmanna, ditto. Seven gentlemen appearing on the Special Jury, the Attorney-General prayed a tales. The following Common Jurymen answered to their names:—James Carpenter, G. W. Crok, E. W. Jackson, T. Smallpiece, and John Hill.

These twelve having been sworn, Mr. Shepherd, jun. opened the case with stating, that it was a criminal information for malicious libel on the King, &c. The defendants had pleaded "Not Guilty."

The Attorney-General then addressed the Jury, stating, that in the discharge of his public duty he had deemed it right to institute this proceeding. When they came to hear the libel, they would agree with him that it was not written in the fair pursuit of public discussion, the proper and seemly investigation of public measures, and the acts of public men. This libel was of no such character. It insinuated, or rather directly stated, that early in the present year his Majesty was afflicted with mental derangement. The mischievous character of such publication would be obvious to all. They would recollect that his Majesty was indisposed early in the present year; and at that period the publication appeared in the shape, not of a paragraph, but as the leading article in the Sunday Times. It stated that the King's sickness was of an "alarming" nature; that it would be some time before his Majesty's "state" of complaint would enable the physicians to declare the Royal Patient in a state of convalescence; and that, let others say what they pleased, the writer deemed it to be his duty to express the fear that his Majesty's complaint was "hereditary." Those particular words were printed in italics, and their meaning could not be doubtful.

The Learned Counsel then read the whole of the libel, as set forth in the following count of the indictment:—"The King (meaning our said Lord the King).—Attached as we sincerely and lawfully are to every interest connected with the Sovereign (meaning our said Lord the King), or any of his illustrious relatives, it is with the deepest concern that we have to state that the malady under which his Majesty (meaning our said Lord the now King) labours, is of an alarming description. It is from authority we speak, when with sorrow we inform our readers (as we think it our duty to do), that the King (meaning our said Lord the King), not only still continues to be confined to his chamber, but that the symptoms of his disorder are of too serious a nature to admit of his medical attendants being able to say when their Royal Patient (meaning our said Lord the King), will be sufficiently recovered to show himself to his anxious and afflicted subjects. Dr. Knighton, his Majesty's (meaning our said Lord the King's) Private Secretary and Domestic Physician, is in constant attendance, scarcely ever out of the chamber in which the King (meaning our said Lord the King) is confined, and never farther from the scene of sickness than the adjoining room. The persons about his Majesty (meaning our said Lord the King), foreseeing that too probably it will be a considerable time before the seat of his complaint will be in a state sufficiently convalescent to render it advisable that he should quit the Pavilion, have, in order to ease the apprehensions of the public, circulated the report that pleasure and comfort, not any afflicting necessity, will induce a protracted stay at Brighton. But far from approving this deceptious kind of policy, which only ensures a more violent shock, whenever the real truth of the case shall appear, we deem it much the wiser way to use on such unhappy occasions the language of fact and reality; therefore we are as desirous of communicating, as others are of concealing the melancholy truth that the King's (meaning our said Lord the King's) disorder is, it is feared, of an hereditary description—that his Majesty, (meaning our said Lord the King,) has had too many misfortunes preying upon his benevolent mind—the loss of a daughter and a consort equally dear to him, and of a royal brother, whose political principles he loved; besides the excruciating sufferings of his Agricultural subjects, so sincerely deplored in his late most gracious speech; and the dangers in which the liberty of the Spaniards are placed by Bourbon pride and Gothic ferocity; that these and other weighty concerns have oppressed his paternal feelings, and borne hard on his superior intellects, we have too much reason to fear.—But if Divine Providence has ordained that mental afflictions shall be no less transmissible than the virtues of the heart, and the best of Princes (meaning our said Lord the Lord,) should, by their long prosperity, or the reiterated returns of his present unfortunate morbosity, have another example of the lamentable fact (which Heaven in its mercy avert,) still one resource will remain to his people (meaning our said Lord the King) the prayers of a dutiful, loving and grateful people; and seldom, very seldom, has Heaven been deaf to the orisons of nations when offered in behalf of wise and gracious Kings."—That the libel insinuated mental insanity, against the individual on the Throne, he thought the Jury could not for a moment doubt, and was it not calculated to produce most mischievous effects, on the public mind? It was not public discussion; it was not the investigation of public measures; it declared, neither more nor less, than that his Majesty—he who swayed the Sceptre, and was the chief executive in the country, was in a state of insanity, and therefore incapable of fulfilling the duties of his high station, and of managing those affairs connected with his Kingly authority. Was not that a gross, malicious, and cruel libel? It said that the King was incapable of managing his own affairs. If that were said of a private individual would not the be a libel? They would immediately pronounce that it would be a libel of the most malicious character; and was it to be said, that the King was to be libelled, so seriously, with impunity, while a like case on a private individual would be visited with the most serious penalties? Was the King, on so delicate a point, to be libelled with impunity? That was the question for the Jury. He had no doubt about the result. It was a mischievous, malicious, and cruel libel; it was calculated to produce the most serious effects on the public mind; and it had been put forward in the most prominent and glaring manner. He repeated, the question for the Jury was, might the King be libelled with impunity, when no man would dare to libel in a similar case on a private individual? That was not reason; it was not law; it was not justice; and he felt full reliance, that the Jury would declare it to be, what it really was, a malicious libel on the Sovereign of these Realms. He would leave the case in their hands; he was quite sure that they would do their duty on the present occasion. He observed that in filing, by virtue of his office, a Criminal Information, he had only performed his duty; and he was sure the Jury would not forget their duty to the King, and the Constitution of the Country.

The Solicitor-General proceeded to call witnesses.

Elijah Litchfield stated, he was Clerk to the Solicitor of the Treasury Office. Witness put in the affidavit made by Mr. Harvey, stated that he was the proprietor of the Sunday Times, which was sworn and signed by Mr. Bouverie, one of the Commissioners.

Cross-examined by the Common Serjeant—Witness is Commissioner to the Stamp Office; Mr. Bouverie is a Commissioner, but witness does not know him.

Mr. Denman objected, that the witness's proof, as to the signature of the Commissioner, was insufficient.

The Solicitor-General referred to the 38th Geo. III. sec. 14, which made an affidavit of proprietorship, when countersigned by a Commissioner, sufficient evidence.

Mr. Denman begged of the Court to take a note of his objection.

The Chief Justice said he would do so.

The Attorney-General said, he was able to put the fact of Mr. Bouverie's being a Commissioner, beyond all question.

Godfrey Sykes said, he was Solicitor to the Stamp-office, witness proved that Mr. Bouverie had been a Commissioner of Stamps, up to September, last year.

Cross-examined—Witness has seen him acting in the quality of Commissioner at Somerset-House.

Chief Justice—That is sufficient.

Mr. Litchfield being again called, said, the affidavit was signed on the 27th of January.

The libel and affidavit were then read.—This closed the case for the prosecution.

Mr. Denman then addressed the Jury for the defendant. He hoped to convince the Jury that they never could, in justice to themselves, realise the anticipations of his Majesty's Attorney-General. A great task devolved upon him, in the discharge of which, he begged the indulgence of the Jury. He was astonished, and lamented that the Attorney-General, in the discharge of his official duty, should fix upon this as a fit subject for prosecution. It was with pain he entered upon this subject. He was not to be told that the right of public discussion was irrelevant to this question. What! was the state of the King's health no fit subject for public discussion? As to the mode which it was put forward, too, he was not unwilling to meet the Attorney-General: he complained that it was headed "Early Intelligence," but was such a subject to be put into a corner, not for the perusal of the lowest classes only? He did not despair of proving that there was no subject more fit for public discussion, and which could have been put forward more properly than this. He would willingly avoid such a subject, and he was sure the Jury brought their minds to it as unwillingly as he did. It was painful at all times to touch upon matters, the discussion of which must compromise the feelings of high-minded and illustrious persons. He had known cases in which Juries had before now withdrawn altogether from such trials. The Learned Counsel here mentioned a case at Lincoln, where a Juror entreated the Court to excuse his entering upon so painful a duty; but the Chief Baron reminded him that however painful a duty it may be, he was obliged to go through with it. The case went on, and the accused was eventually acquitted. The Learned Counsel then proceeded to state more particularly the line of conduct which it would be his duty to follow upon this occasion. His client was the publisher, who, let it be remembered, was not so guilty, if guilt there was at all, as the proprietor, who had the whole controul of the concern. Mr. Harvey was a man of education, well known, and would be seen ably defended than he could be by him. The printer was a mere machine for putting into a state of publication matter, of the import of which, possibly, he might be totally ignorant. It would therefore follow, that although the proprietor might be guilty, the printer might be innocent. If there was any mischief in the article, that of itself might have been a reason for concealing it from the mechanic. He could not see why this man was indicted; the whole case could have been brought into discussion by a prosecution of Mr. Harvey alone. This the Attorney-General himself partly admitted. He meant not to question the right of filing ex-officio informations, although that power had been questioned by many able, constitutional, lawyers. But the Attorney-General might, like other men, have brought his case before a Grand Jury; and there was not a doubt but that if he had felt the pulse of the public in this way, he would not be inclined to follow up the prosecution. His not having done so formed a presumption against the policy of the prosecution. The agitation of the question now was calculated to do more mischief than if the report had been suffered to lie in the state of oblivion in which it had lain for so long a time. Many months had elapsed since this report was first circulated, which now, thank God, there was no reason for—the prayers of his Majesty's subjects had been heard. But however little foundation there was now for such a report, there was no doubt but at one time such a report was in circulation; and could it be said that these reports were not a fit subject for public discussion. When the late King was labouring under this dreadful affliction, it was not only stated in the public papers, but stated openly in Parliament. And how easily could an answer be given to it. If the King had appeared abroad amongst us, it would set this question at rest. The absence of the late King from public observation was held to warrant a sufficient presumption as to his state of health. But were any of the facts untrue? Was it untrue that Dr. Knighton was in attendance upon him? Were any of the other facts untrue which were then stated? The only crime, therefore, was in the inference which was in some degree warranted by the experience of the former reign. But then came the Attorney-General to complain of the wound inflicted upon the King's feelings—his feelings—when did his Majesty hear of the Sunday Times? Be it remembered that this was only the 17th number of this little-known paper. Reports did prevail that the King laboured under this dreadful malady—and the journalist takes it as a matter deeply interesting to the public. But the report proves happily to be untrue, and what possible injury could a report in so obscure a journal make in the public mind? He contended, that the Attorney General, with all his vehemence, and all his labour, had been fighting a "shamfight." The words "by authority" would be made much of, but what did they mean more in a public newspaper than that the journalist proceeded on the authority of some respectable individual. Nothing more was meant; it was not meant to say, that there was the authority of a Minister of State, or of the physicians, Sir W. Knighton, &c. There were some rumours abroad, and it was the duty of a journalist to allude to them. Happily they had died away—happily there was reason to believe that there had never been the least reason for the painful rumours; but it was most extraordinary—most monstrous to declare that the King's health was not a matter of public interest. It was the contrary, the public were justified in feeling anxiety on such a subject, and journalists had a right, if public discussion were to be allowed, to allude to so important a subject. It was said that the libel was calculated to bring the King into hatred and contempt; quite the reverse was the fact. It was calculated, if unfortunately there had been an derangement, to excite the sympathy of all, to disarm party feeling and hostility, if any existed. Mental derangement might afflict the wisest and the best, and in an instant dash down the most promising prospects, and check the most brilliant and laudable career. The commencement of the present reign had been much disturbed; but fact, as well as the law, forbade him to attribute those troubles and proceedings of which the country was ashamed, to his Majesty. Ministers alone were to blame; those who had collected foreign slanderers, filled green bags, and they alone were to blame! But was it to slander of bed with contempt—they alone were to blame! But was it to slander the King to allude to his "benevolent" mind. All admitted the benevolent character of his Majesty's mind; yet according to the Learned Counsel it was slander, it was sneer, it was libel, to mention his King's friends it was slander, it was sneer, it was libel, to mention his Majesty's "benevolent" mind. And the loss of a daughter, she who was to continue the Royal succession in a direct line, was it a libel to say the King was afflicted with that excellent lady's loss? The loss—it ought to have been said the death—of a consort was also mentioned as having been the subject of affliction; and yet that mention was called libel, sneer, and malice. If it were so, the late Marquis of Londonderry had been equally guilty of libel. That Noble Lord had declared in the House of Commons, that, when on his way to Dublin, his Majesty, on hearing of the death of his royal consort, was much affected. He had no doubt that such was the fact. The King, under all the circumstances, must have been greatly affected with that event. Next it was said to be sneer and libel to represent the King as afflicted with the career of the proud Bourbons in Spanish affairs—with that contest in which this country must ultimately be involved, only under disadvantageous circumstances. Was it to libel the King to say that he was afflicted by that momentous transaction which deeply interested all his subjects? Surely it was a most extraordinary way to show regard and friendship for the King's character, thus to insinuate that it was a libel and sneer to allude to his undoubtedly benevolent mind, and to those unquestionable talents which, particularly in his early years, made him collect around his Court some of the ablest men of the age. In conclusion, the Learned Gentleman lamented, that when the public mind was completely tranquil on the painful topics which formed the subject of the article complained of in the newspaper; when all these various rumours, which his Majesty's illness had unfortunately given rise to, had subsided, it should have been deemed a judicious discharge of duty to institute the present criminal proceeding. Within a week of the publication in February last, the Attorney-General, in the exercise of his sound discretion, filed the criminal information; had he passed a "little fortnight," he much questioned whether that Learned Gentleman would not have been dissuaded from adopting the proceeding.

Mr. Brougham followed, and addressed the Jury at great length.—Having expressed the hope that he should not weaken what had been said by his Learned Friend, he adverted to some of the events of the late reign, the late King's illness in 1789—the non-appointment of a Regency, and the great delicacy of the subject, should there be indisposition of the King. He proceeded to comment on the libel, and the Attorney-General's speech. He expressed his astonishment that the prosecution should have been commenced; but he was still more surprised at the course of the Attorney-General's speech. According to the prosecution and to the said speech, it was a libel and sneer to suppose that the King was similarly affected, in common with his subjects, on those topics which concerned the whole nation. Seventeen millions of people were to be afflicted by the most momentous events, but the King was not to be agitated by them. To say that the King was agitated by them, was to be denounced as libel and sneer. He must protest against the liberty and property of any man being put in jeopardy by such fanciful constructions of language, as those which were attempted to be established by the Attorney General and his ex-officio information. Mr. Harvey was the proprietor of the paper; he was known in that Court legally, and as nothing more; he was not charged to be the author of the article; however, Mr. Harvey's politics were well known, in that place as well as elsewhere. But the Jury had to look at Mr. Harvey as the proprietor of the paper only. The article asserted the King to have been afflicted at the loss of his Royal Consort. He (Mr. Brougham) believed that his Majesty was much affected by that event; to believe the contrary was to suppose that the King had not the ordinary feelings of our nature. After all that had happened, after all the persecutions to which the illustrious lady had been exposed—persecutions, about the origin of which there were persons in that place who knew more than he did—it was impossible not to believe the representation of Lord Londonderry, that the news of such an event had filled his Majesty with sincere grief. The Jury, in considering the article charged to be a libel, would examine the whole of it; they would not allow their minds to be diverted towards any particular paragraphs, separated from the general context, by any efforts made by the Law Officers of the Crown. He was glad to address a Jury in any part of England, but more particularly in the famous City of London, the cradle of the Liberties of the Country; and, he felt assured that the present Jury would show themselves worthy of their illustrious ancestors.

[Some efforts were made by persons amongst the crowd at the lower end of the Court, to applaud Mr. Brougham's speech, after the Learned Gentleman had taken his seat, but the officers commanded silence.]

The Attorney-General rose to reply. He believed Mr. Harvey to be the author, and as such he charged the individual with the publication. Till Mr. H.'s article appeared, it was admitted that there were only rumours; they were acknowledged to be such, and rumours which there was a desire to conceal; but in this article they were proclaimed to be fact, and such declaration professed to be made on authority. Only a few days before the publication of this libel, the Parliament had been opened with a speech from the King; yet, at such a time, this man had the impudence to declare that the Ministers were base enough to carry on the government at a time when the King, from mental derangement, was incapable of attending to the duties of the King's office. Let the jury recollect, that the paper did not allude to the rumours as such, but the paper after noticing them, declared the rumoured mental derangement to be fact. If that were to be endured, if the King might be so libelled with impunity, he trusted it would not be adduced as proof of the "Liberty" of the Press. The distinction endeavoured to be set up between the printer and the proprietor, was weak, and unworthy of answer; those who pocketed the profits, were not to escape with saying they were not the authors of the libel. If the jury were of opinion that the public mind ought not to be disturbed by such false and scandalous rumours and statements, they would return a verdict of "Guilty."

The Lord Chief Justice Abbott, in addressing the Jury, detailed the nature of the case. According to the law of the land, the printers and publishers, as well as the proprietors, were liable for the contents in their papers. As to the matter that was charged to be libel, he had no hesitation whatever in distinctly asserting, that if it were falsely stated of the King—or of any subject in the realm—that he was afflicted with mental insanity, the party publishing such statement would be liable criminally. On this point he had no doubt. The question then was, had the paper in question promulgated such a statement regarding his Majesty; and that was the question of fact which the law very properly left to the Jury. But he would observe, if it were a libel to make any such statement falsely against a private individual, that it was a still greater libel to publish such a statement against the highest executive authority in the country. In cases of libel, in particular, it was the custom of the Judge to express to the Jury his opinion of the publication. He had ever done so since he was a Judge—he would do so now; and he therefore had no hesitation in declaring his opinion to be, that the publication was a criminal libel.

The Jury, after a very short consultation among each other in the box, retired, at a quarter past one o'clock, to consider of their verdict. The Jury returned into Court at twenty-five minutes past three o'clock; and, after their names had been called over, the Foreman said, they were desirous of knowing whether it was necessary to prove a malicious intention on the part of the defendants in finding them guilty of publishing the libel?

The Lord Chief Justice said, a man who publishes slanderous matter to vilify another must be presumed to do that maliciously, which is the object of the publication, unless he can shew the contrary. There may be innocent publications—for instance, the delivery of a book to a Magistrate, to bring it under his observation—a man may have a good intention, but if he publishes a malicious libel, malice is to be presumed, unless it be shewn to the contrary.

The Jury then withdrew, and were locked up again until near six o'clock, when they came once more into Court, and pronounced both Defendants Guilty.—The verdict was attended by a recommendation to mercy.

The King v. Trust.—The defendant, a very young man, who kept a shop at the corner of Giltspur-street, in Newgate-street, for the sale of Carlile's publications, was charged upon information filed by his Majesty's Attorney-General, with publishing a blasphemous libel, namely, Palmer's Principles of Nature, with intent to bring the Holy Gospel and the Christian religion into contempt. Two Police Officers detected the defendant in the sale of the book, and proved the publication. It also appeared in evidence that his shop was a nuisance; the endangered the lives of the passengers. The Parish Beadle on one occasion seized eight of the obnoxious placards, and carried the same to the Green-yard. The defendant preferred a charge of felony before Alderman Ansley, at Guildhall, and proclaimed himself the supporter of Mr. Carlile's principles. After the facts of the publication had been established, the defendant read his defence, in the course of which he told the Jury he was once a Christian, but he had ceased to be one,—After endeavouring to impugn the Christian religion, by attempting to read the whole of the libel, which the Lord Chief Justice would not allow, the Jury, without the least hesitation, found him Guilty.

The Lord Chief Justice, after the trial, said—"There cannot be a more convincing proof of the mischievous tendency of these publications, than the effect produced on the mind of this unfortunate young man."

TUESDAY.—Clark v. Barber Beaumont.—The Solicitor-General stated that the plaintiff was a gentleman of considerable mathematical skill, and was the director of two offices, called the European and Beacon Fire-offices; the defendant was also the proprietor of the County Fire-office. The plaintiff was obliged to bring this action for a libel, which appeared in the Morning Post. The libel was to this effect:—

"New Insurance Company.—Dr. Price said of the projectors of Insurance and Annuity schemes, in his day (40 years ago), they believe that the scheme they are supporting will last their time, and that they will be gainers; and as to the injury that may be done to their successors or to others, it is at a distance, and they care little about it. In the event they all failed, but the projectors of the present day find it of little consequence whether their schemes will last their time or not, for if, by underselling, they can only raise a business, they gain a profitable employment; and when they have exhausted the money they have collected, a new set of dupes enable them to start a new scheme and gain new profits.—Two new Insurance Companies are announced to effect insurances at 25 per cent. under the ordinary rates; the projector of which was the manager of an Insurance and Annuity Company, which, after a run of some years, he finished without leaving the annuitants and share holders one shilling."

Charles Foreman was employed at the Morning Post office when the above libel was published—remembered the messenger from the County Fire-office bringing the paragraph to that office, and paying for it, with the amount of some other advertisements—could not remember the messenger's person, but knows Mr. Beaumont, and believes him to be the manager of the County Fire-office.

William Harman, the messenger for the County Fire-office, employed by Mr. Beaumont, who is the director, and lives in the same house. He remembers carrying the paragraph to the Morning Post, but cannot remember by whose direction. There are twelve clerks in his master's office, and could not say in whose hand-writing the paragraph was.

Charles Chievland, clerk in the County Fire-office, believed the writing to be in the hand of —— Eller, a clerk in the Provident Life Insurance-office, which is a branch of the same establishment.

—— Eller believes the interlineations in the manuscript sent to the Morning Post to be in the hand-writing of Mr. Beaumont.

The Common Sergeant then addressed the jury on behalf of the defendant, but called no witnesses. He submitted that this was nothing but a fair criticism by the directors of one rival institution against another. That it was a fact undenied that the plaintiff had been connected with the Philanthropic Society which had duped so many individuals, and it was but fair that the public should know on what footing the same individual intended to carry on two more institutions. He trusted, if the jury should find a verdict for the plaintiff, that it would be merely nominal, because if these institutions were entitled to the public confidence, surely all that had been said in the papers about them could not injure them.

The Lord Chief Justice summed up. His Lordship had no doubt whatever that a scandalous libel was clearly proved, beginning at the words, "Two new insurance companies are announced," &c. and it would be for the jury to say what amount of damages ought to be given. As to the former part of the paragraph, his Lordship thought there was nothing libellous.—The Jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff—damages 200l., costs 40s.

Clark v. Glindon.—The Solicitor-General stated that this action arose out of the last. The defendant was the printer for the County Fire Office—and, as the plaintiff came into court only for the purpose of vindicating his character, he was willing to take a nominal verdict, which was agreed to on the other side.—The Court directed the Jury to find for the plaintiff—damages One Shilling.

FRIDAY.—The King v. Clark, otherwise Jones.—This was an indictment for a libel, of an impious and blasphemous nature, against the Holy Bible, to which the defendant had pleaded not guilty. The book in question was published by Carlile, at 55, in Fleet-street, upwards of two years ago, but it was not on the part of the prosecutors a stale prosecution, for it was delayed by the defendant himself, who for a long time refused to give his name, and rather than do so, he went to prison for a considerable time. Now, the book in question was entitled, "Observations on Letters to a Friend, on Evidences, Doctrines, and Duties of the Christian Religion: by Oliuthus Gregory, LL.D. of the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich. In a letter to the Rev. Wm. Wait, A.B. King's-square, Bristol. By Richard Carlile."

John Burton was then called upon, but no answer was made.—After the Court had stopped nearly ten minutes, without the witness making his appearance, the Lord Chief Justice told the Jury, that from what he had read of this publication he had no doubt of its blasphemous nature, but of the character of the defendant they could know nothing. His Lordship said, then, gentlemen of the Jury, you must find the defendant Not Guilty.—The verdict of Not Guilty was accordingly recorded, and in about two minutes afterwards the witness arrived—but was told he might walk home again.

OLD BAILEY.

THURSDAY.—John Core was indicted for feloniously driving a certain dray at and against the body of J. Tucker, and throwing him against the ground, and that the said dray did then and there, to wit, in the parish of Shoreditch, drive against the said John Tucker, and drive him to the ground, and the wheel thereof did run over the head of the said John Tucker, and inflict a mortal wound, whereof he instantly did then and there die. The prisoner pleaded Not Guilty.

George Evans, a silk-dyer, stated, that he was standing at the corner of Worship street, on the 24th of September last, when he saw two brewers' drays there—the deceased was on the same side as the driver should be—the first dray had a driver, and passed the deceased—the prisoner was a considerable distance behind his dray—saw the deceased endeavour to avoid the dray, by propping himself behind it—had the driver been up with the dray, the accident would not have happened—the fore part of the dray passed over the deceased's head and crushed it to pieces, and his brains were scattered on the ground—deceased died instantly. Three other witnesses gave exactly the same testimony.—An officer from Worship-street proved that the width of the carriage-way was near 14 feet. The drays were the property of Messrs. Hanbury, Buxton and Co.—The Jury returned a verdict of Guilty.—The Recorder after making some observations on the scandalous neglect of draymen, ordered the prisoner to be kept to hard labour in the House of Correction for six months.

The Recorder passed sentence of death upon the following prisoners: John Williams, aged 21; John Young, 47; Wm. Kitson, 21; and George Fletcher, 23, for stealing in dwelling-houses; James Gregory, 20; Wm. Leddington, 26; Joseph Farmer. 45; John Hyden, 20; Henry Thompson, 18; James Field, 37; and Joseph Shepherd, 19, for burglaries; and James Scott, 48, for cutting and maiming. There were sentenced to be transported for life, 10; for 14 years, 5; and for seven years, 42: and 54 were ordered to be sent to the Houses of Correction for various terms.

The Abbey Chapel at Romsey was broken open on Sunday night. The thieves carried away several brass chandeliers and candlesticks, the pulpit Bible, a silk gown and cassock, and other articles.

On Wednesday morning the house of Mr. Pimlet, in Spencer-street, Clerkenwell, was broke open and robbed of a number of Leghorn and other bonnets; a watch, and other articles.

Mr. Sparks, chemist and druggist, in St. John street, put an end to his life on Tuesday last, by blowing his brains out with a pistol: he was missing from two o'clock in the afternoon till five, when he was discovered by a bricklayer, who was at work in the house, in the garret, with his head blown to pieces. An inquest was held on the body, and a verdict of "temporary derangement" returned.

FENCING.—We are requested to state that MR. ROLAND'S FENCING ROOMS are now open at No. 52, Great Marlborough-street, near Oxford-street.

MISCELLANEOUS.

On Tuesday, Mr. Wynn, the President of the Board of Controul, introduced Christopher Puller, Esq. to an audience of His Majesty, at Windsor Castle, previous to his leaving England to assume the duties of the Lord Chief Justice ship at Calcutta. His Majesty was graciously pleased to confer the honour of Knighthood upon the Chief Justice. Sir Christopher and Lady Puller, with their family, will sail from England in the course of next week.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Worcester arrived at Stutgard about the 8th instant, for the purpose of being re-married according to the forms of the Lutheran Church, which permits of marriage within closer limits of consanguinity than the Church of England.

Lord Melville and the Right Hon. Charles Arbuthnot arrived at Walmer Castle on Friday se'nnight, and returned again to London on Monday, after inspecting his Majesty's Dock-yard at Deal.

The Board of Trade is occupied with the consideration of the intricate state of the Fishery Laws, with the design of simplifying and restoring them to efficiency; but there are many difficulties to overcome not generally known on the coasts.

An order was last week received by Admiral Sir B. Hallowell, commanding at Chatham, to commission the Maidstone, Undaunted, and Lively frigates. They are accordingly getting ready as fast as possible.

Mr. Graham, the Aeronaut, made another ascent from Sidney Gardens, Bath, on Tuesday last, in presence of a great concourse of people. Mrs. Graham, a native of Bath, ascended with him. The inflation commenced at half past nine, and was completed at twelve. They ascended at 35 minutes past two, amidst a heavy shower of rain. After rebounding thrice the balloon was secured by the grappling iron taking hold of a five-barred gate, and in a few minutes, with the assistance of two men, they were landed from the car, after being in the air exactly 59 minutes. The spot where the balloon descended was on Lord Bolingbroke's estate, between Swindon and Wootton-Basset, being a distance of 31 miles from Bath.

On Monday night last two horses were stolen at Adstock, and another from Great Horwood, Bucks. It is a singular circumstance that the same horse stolen from Horwood, and which is the property of Mrs. Harris of the Crown public-house, was stolen two years ago, and a person named Hutton, was sentenced to two years imprisonment, which he is now undergoing in Aylesbury gaol.

Wright, the fellow who was tried at Huntingdon last spring assizes, for cutting his wife's throat, when a verdict of insanity was returned, and who with four others had escaped from gaol, was on Thursday the 23d inst. secured again in his former quarters. He had taken refuge with a brother for some time, and in return for the asylum given him, robbed that brother of 12l. 10s. He was afterwards found secreted in the same barn in which he was discovered after committing the murder.

Monday evening a trunk, containing apparel, trinkets, &c. was cut from a Margate stage, near Canterbury. The trunk, broken up, was found in a field near the spot the next morning.

On the same evening Stephen Knight, many years driver of a Bath coach, having committed the reins to the care of the guard, got into a doze and fell from the box, when the wheel went over his head and killed him.

Edward Hulks, Esq. on his return home from a shooting party on Thursday se'nnight, was thrown from his carriage near the Star on Chatham hill, by which accident he had his thigh broken.

A dreadful accident occurred at the Barracks at Birmingham, the latter end of last week. Mr. Davis, about 16 years of age, belonging to the regiment of Dragoons now lying there, was playing with a powder flask before the fire, by flirting the powder occasionally into it, which accidentally exploded the flask, and his hand was nearly blown off. An amputation has since taken place.

Wednesday se'nnight a fire broke out in the stables of the Castle Inn, Mordan, Herts, the whole of which were consumed, with two valuable horses. It originated in the carelessness of a boy, who set fire to some litter.

An inquest was held on Tuesday on the body of Mary, the wife of Jeremiah Hayter. Hayter, on Sunday evening last, was entering his door, at Aiderholt, in the parish of Cranborne, with his gun loaded, it by some means went off, and the contents lodged in his wife's side, (she being outside of the door,) and killed her. The Jury returned a verdict of "Accidental Death."

At the Shropshire Quarter Sessions, the petition of Mr. Wm. English (a dashing young man, who had figured away as a surgeon in Shrewsbury, and had announced himself as the author of several medical publications in embryo) was opposed by six of his creditors, under the following circumstances:—In 1821, the Insolvent came to Shrewsbury as an assistant to Mr. G. F. D. Evans, surgeon. Previous to that time the half of the debts in his schedule (the whole amounting to nearly 800l.) were contracted, and without the most distant prospects of liquidating them beyond his salary of 65l., he commenced a similar course in Shrewsbury. Here he represented himself at different times as an officer on half-pay—as an Assistant-Surgeon in the army—as a Member of the College of Surgeons—as having a debt due to his wife of 500l.—as having a title to the reversionary interest in an estate in Worcestershire—and as having had a promise from a Mrs. Stubbs, of the Isle, near Shrewsbury, of a large sum of money. All these representations, except that respecting the property in Worcestershire, he confessed to be false, but added that he was in the receipt of 20l. or 30l. a year from a sister of Mrs. English. On the faith of such stories as these (after quarrelling with Mr. Evans, and setting up in business as surgeon), he succeeded in contracting large debts with several tradesmen in the town. The Insolvent was remanded to prison for 14 months.

At the Bristol Sessions, William C. Bligh, of Bath, grocer, was indicted for concealing considerable property from his creditors. The trial commenced about one o'clock, and at nine o'clock in the evening an adjournment took place till the following morning, when, after a farther hearing of great length, the Jury returned a verdict of guilty and the Court sentenced him to be transported for life.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We had prepared replies to our various corresponding friends, but a pressure of interesting matter compels us again to request indulgence.

We beg to inform our readers that the last Number of the BRITISH MERCURY is now reprinted, and may be had at our office.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 2.

WHITTLE HARVEY and CHAPMAN, the Editor and Printer of a Sunday Paper, were found guilty on Thursday of a gross and shameful Libel upon His MAJESTY.

We are not in the slightest degree inclined to go into the merits of this case, nor into the merits of the speeches which Mr. DENMAN and Mr. BROUGHAM addressed to the audience upon the occasion; but we cannot choose but despise the tone of respect and affection which the latter person (who as being junior in his standing at the Bar to the City Common Serjeant spoke after him) adopted in his harangue.

The shameless falsehoods, the gross and scandalous inuendos of the defendant, were qualified and palliated by her late Majesty's Attorney-General with an irony and insinuation more disgusting than those contained in the piece of infamy he was hired to defend, and he was amply repaid for his condescension to the mob by an attempt to cheer him at the conclusion of his tirade.

We leave these defendants to the mercy of the Court to which they were recommended by the Jury, on the ground we conclude of the obscurity and consequent innocence of their attack—when we recollect the severity with which the law has been invariably enforced against those whose zeal in defence of the Constitution has led them too plainly to speak the truth of the basest and most depraved amongst us, we conclude that the traducers, vilifiers, and libellers of the KING will be made to smart for their baseness and scurrility.

It is not to enlarge upon this case, as we said before, it is not with a wish to criticise the speeches of Mr. DENMAN as senior Counsel, nor of Mr. BROUGHAM as his junior, that we add one syllable to this article; but it is to call the serious attention of the Attorney-General to a system, which is now regularly organized, to bring "the KING and all that is put in authority under him" into contempt and disrepute.

The attacks upon his MAJESTY with which the CHRONICLE occasionally pollutes its pages are specimens of the style adopted by the radical writers—we do not mean those course and ridiculous allusions to his MAJESTY'S person and habits, because the living evidence of their falsehood is, thank GOD, before us—we mean—the assiduous efforts to blacken the royal character, to attribute to a heart all graciousness and kindness, cruelty and wanton carelessness of the comfort of others—one of the faction—one of its leaders—one of Mr. HARVEY'S counsel, likened GEORGE THE FOURTH to NERO—the CHRONICLE not many days ago compared his MAJESTY to CALIGULA—and this system of characterizing every thing good, great, and noble, as debased, barbarous and unfeeling, does not stop there—not a human being to whom power is delegated from the fountain-head, however remote, however humble in his own person, is secure from similar aspersions.

In reverting to the conduct, public and private, of His MAJESTY, we challenge the most inveterate Radical, breathing to point out one single individual action of his life which has breathed any thing but kindness, consideration, tenderness and affection—What public act has he ever sanctioned which is marked by any but the kindliest feelings? One would think to read the writings of the liberals, that we were living under some tyrant, some absolute Monarch, who had violated the constitution and infringed our rights. When, how, and in what manner has—when, how, and in what manner can, the KING of ENGLAND do so? In his public character, then, he has never injured us—in his private character he has made the most generous sacrifices, he has evinced the warmest attachment, and by every action proved the strongest feelings of affection and paternal love for his subjects and countrymen.

To what is attributable the continuous abuse of our Magistrates, the perpetual ridicule of their conduct, the incessant attack upon their decisions and orders?—to the same spirit—to the same hope of unsettling and sowing discontent between the governed and governors; why is Mr. PEEL charged with cruelty and barbarity, and inattention to the interests of persons committed for trial and convicted of offences; why does the CHRONICLE say "Mr. Peel is fond of whipping?"—Is there one particle of truth in this statement, is a charge of barbarity or callousness borne out by any one act of Mr. PEEL'S life, by any one point of his general private character? No—but to give the unfavourable impression against a Home Secretary is part of the Radical writer's duty—it is his vocation—his bread—his object in living.

Mr. CANNING was during his secession from office lauded to the very echo by the radical papers: he becomes again a Minister and immediately the subject of invective and scurrility, not in the fair mode of political warfare, where we know the Whigs are to fight the Tories, and the Tories the Whigs, but upon points unconnected with the general system of Government—for instance:

Day after day, and month after month, have the Liberals, the Lovers of Freedom, the friends of HONE, CHRISTIANITY, LIBERTY, the GREEKS, WILSON, the SPANIARDS, and the COLUMBIANS; day after day have they reiterated their complaints of the negligence of the Government, who would not attend to the general call for the appointment of English Consuls in South America. The subject is taken into consideration, and the Consuls are appointed—the moment this is done, the CHRONICLE pronounces it a JOB of Mr. CANNING'S, and publishes a list of the salaries which that gentleman has apportioned to each of his friends in the various Consulships and Vice-Consulships.

Let us consider this case for one moment, and it will be seen that the popular request being complied with as to the appointments, it was the duty of the Secretary of State for the Foreign Department to fill them up—this then is the mere routine of office—that Mr. CANNING has or has not appointed any of his friends, we really cannot take upon ourselves to say—we confess it is so very much the policy of our Government to neglect its friends and soothe its enemies, that we should doubt whether the Right Hon. Gentleman has been able to nominate any personal favourites of his own to these situations; however, if he have, the fact of being a personal favourite of such a man, would be, we should think, no very unsatisfactory testimonial of the abilities of the gentleman appointed. Be this as it may, no sooner are they named, than they, and the Right Hon. Gentleman who appointed them, are attacked, upon the system to which we have alluded. We ought however to add, that the statement of the salaries intended for the different employments, which was published in the CHRONICLE, is entirely erroneous.

We are not going to defend Mr. CANNING or his Consuls—we are not going to vindicate Mr. PEEL or his humanity—we are not going to combat the attacks of the Radicals upon every thing Ministerial and Magisterial, but we think we have a right to direct the attention of the Attorney-General to objects better worthy his notice than the scurrility of obscure Sunday papers, which, while the daily journals afford so many opportunities for his exertions, might be left to waste their venom in the desert air.

Such of our readers as have not the advantage of seeing the TIMES newspaper, will perhaps be obliged to us for extracting the following attack upon ADMIRAL VALDEZ: it is curious and liberal, and bears upon the face of it indications of a new change in the Cockney's politics:—

"ADMIRAL VALDES.

"A curious anecdote has been related to us illustrative of the mixed impertinence and apathy of the Spanish character, and of the treachery or imbecility of the man whom it most concerns. A distinguished Englishman arrived at Cadiz during the siege, with a plan for annoying, and perhaps rendering useless, the French fleet which was lying off the town. One of the first things he did on his arrival was to lay the plan before ADMIRAL VALDEZ, who had been invested with almost unlimited powers for the defence of the place. The scheme was so simple, that a child might understand it; but VALDEZ received the proposition coldly, said he could not make himself responsible for a new mode of action, and must consult a board of engineers on the subject. After a strenuous but fruitless endeavour to convince him that a military governor invested with supreme authority might adopt what means he pleased of annoying the enemy, without the delay of boards and committees, the plan was referred to a council of engineers. From that sluggishness which, even under the most urgent circumstances, never forsakes the Spanish gentleman, and renders him at once the most inefficient, as he is the most self-sufficient, animal on the face of the earth, a considerable time elapsed before a report could be procured. At last it appeared, and pronounced the plan to be feasible and useful. The English gentleman, having this favourable answer, immediately applied to VALDEZ, and urged him to put it into execution that very night. VALDEZ stared with as much surprise as if it had never occurred to him that a plan could be good for any thing except to write a report about; and when very earnestly importuned, said he did not see how or by whom it was to be executed. The Englishman answered, "I will execute it myself this very night; only give me your permission to take out a boat, with two sailors to row it."—"We have no sailors," was the reply of the Spanish Admiral.—"Well, well," rejoined the Englishman, "I do not want sailors; any persons who can row a boat will answer my purpose." VALDEZ, thus pressed, drew himself up with that air of absurd pomposity which some blockheads mistake for dignity, and exclaimed, "Sir, we have no marine whatever, and you know it—you Englishmen destroyed it all at Trafalgar." It was in vain to argue with an idiot, who, in the very crisis of his country's danger, could, with a burst of childish spleen, reject an avowedly useful plan for serving it. The Englishman therefore left him with undissembled disgust, and went forthwith to CALATRAVA, the Prime Minister, in the hope of better success with him. CALATRAVA laughed at the story, exclaiming, "Poor VALDEZ! he is a sad dolt!" but he received a wound at Trafalgar; the ball has never been extracted, and he never sees an Englishman without its smarting." CALATRAVA added, that he could do nothing without the consent of the Admiral. Thus, between the epigrammatic petulance of the Commander-in-Chief, and the humorous comment of the Prime Minister, a plan for annoying, or perhaps, as we stated at first, for rendering useless the French fleet, was abandoned, after it had been pronounced useful and practicable! How could a city be saved, with such men to preside over its defence?

It is not for us to surmise who the distinguished Englishman may be, who thus volunteered to destroy the whole French fleet in a place where they were not, with only two land-lubbers, in a cock-boat.—LORD NUGENT would have been likely enough to recommend a heavy bombardment; but we should think he would be sufficiently aware of his weight not to undertake such an enterprize in a skiff—indeed we believe the "distinguished" person must have been mad if he actually did propose to render useless the French navy in that part of the world with a flotilla of one boat, and a force of two men.

The animosity displayed by the TIMES against VALDEZ, because he happens to be a gentleman, overcomes the respect they ought to feel for him as a Constitutionalist—this is the "nature of the beast"—anything low, grovelling, or vulgar, is quite "refreshing" to it; but the moment a revolutionist is convicted of "gentle blood," or gentlemanly descent, even its principles yield to its taste, and the unfortunate aristocrat is denounced as a "self sufficient animal, and a dolt."

"Yet," says the TIMES, "to this dolt (for CALATRAVA never called him dolt) had the entire conduct of the defence of Cadiz by sea and land been committed." Well—and what then? CADIZ never capitulated till the people rose and demanded the liberation of their King—CADIZ, if it had fallen, was invested by a powerful and commanding army—CADIZ was not like CORUNNA, taken by a detachment only, after—many days after, the "sage and hero" who had undertaken its defence had quitted it—there was no aristocracy to interfere with activity or zeal in that case! Why then does the TIMES abuse ADMIRAL VALDEZ for keeping possession of his command to the last, for rejecting the offers of joining the King, for declining to obey the King's orders till he found the voice of the nation was in accordance with them?—because one of the distinguished correspondents of the TIMES newspaper was not allowed to fire squibs at the French fleet from a cock-boat pulled, by two lubbers in a high sea!

This is the great, independent, way in which the leading journal looks at things.

We should like to hear what LORD EXMOUTH or SIR GEORGE COCKBURN, or any of our first-rate Admirals would say, if, while cruising on some important service, a distinguished friend of a Spanish newspaper-writer were to come on board his ship and propose to destroy the French fleet in a cock-boat with two pullers.—We think the Spaniard, whether a noble radical or a sluggish gentleman, would be ordered over the side in less time than ADMIRAL VALDEZ took to affect to entertain the English squib-maker's proposition. In short, so differently do the same things strike different people, that we honestly confess we think ADMIRAL VALDEZ displayed extremely good taste and tact in getting rid of the projector in the civil manner he did, and, so far from meriting the censure of the TIMES, both that paper and its distinguished correspondent ought to be very much obliged to him.

We had written thus far, when the following letter from LORD NUGENT attracted our notice in the TIMES of Friday. The publication of which is merely an act of justice to his Lordship, as well as ADMIRAL VALDEZ:—

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

"SIR,—In a narrative published in your paper of yesterday, of an occurrence which took place during the late siege of Cadiz, it is stated, as a matter of doubt, whether the conduct of ADMIRAL VALDEZ, in declining to adopt certain means that were proposed to him for annoying the French fleet, proceeded from treachery or imbecility. In the possibility of its being supposed that such an insinuation could have arisen out of any testimony of mine, I feel that I owe it to the reputation of a brave man, who has for half a century served his country with honour, to correct, as far as I may be able, an inference injurious to him, and, as I am convinced, unjust. From all the means which I had, during my residence at that place, of forming an opinion, either from personal observation, or from the information of others, I believe that there was not in Spain a man more devoted to her cause, or more faithful to the engagements he had undertaken in her defence, than ADMIRAL VALDEZ. Whatever may be the general opinion, or as it may be my own, of his other qualifications for the active duties were imposed upon him, I believe that no one who knows VALDEZ could ever suspect him of treason to his country. his honest zeal against the common enemy. I observe, state, that the Minister CALATRAVA, in a subsequent described him as a 'dolt.' I am enabled, of my own assure you that in the conversation you allude to, SENOR used no phrase of that import, or to that effect, but spoke personally, as he always did, in terms of warm regard.'

"I am sure, Sir, that you will feel as I do, that it is of common justice to endeavour to remove, as far as it servedly cast upon a man, whose character for integrity has never been impeached, and is perhaps all that has him out of the wreck of private happiness, connected have been with those of an afflicted country, and of unsuccessful.—I am, Sir, your obedient humble servant,

"Twickenham, Oct. 30. "NUGENT.

* "It will be observed that his Lordship does not assert that count of CALATRAVA'S remark on VALDEZ was incorrect in scope, but merely that he did not use the offensive word though it seems almost the only word which could fairly behaviour of VALDEZ on this occasion."—ED.

This last touch is admirable—detected in a falsehood, TIMES palliates its untruth by saying, that though the "dolt" was not used, it seems the only word which could scribe the behaviour of VALDEZ on the occasion.

Were anything wanting to characterize the proceedings the liberal writers of the present day, it would be found in fact, that because the editors of the TIMES and CHRONICLE are privately quarrelling about a stolen report of the Glasgow dinner, the latter paper falls foul of the former, and defends ADMIRAL VALDEZ against its calumnies. Independent, upright Radicals!—distinguished Gentlemen of the British PRESS!

THE CHRONICLE gives on Friday an account of the inquest lence of a newspaper reporter to the Magistrates, which, did not disgust would entertain one exceedingly—in the case of the dreadful murder which has been committed in Hertfordshire, the Magistrate declared that the publication of the confession of one of the parties would be injurious to the cause of justice, he therefore desired one of the reporters who had been taking notes not to publish the examination for the present.

"The REPORTER said, he was extremely sorry to be under the necessity of stating, that he must refuse a compliance with the order just issued from the Magistrates.

"Mr. CLUTTERBUCK said, 'the confession,' if published, would prejudice the persons accused, before trial, and it must not be published.

"The REPORTER said he was as unwilling as any man could be to prejudice any man, especially one labouring under so heavy an accusation as the present, and if he thought that the publication of the 'confession' would operate to the injury of the persons accused, he certainly should lament it exceedingly; but he has a duty to perform, he must endeavour to execute it to the best of his judgment and abilities. He had attended for the purpose of reporting the whole of the proceedings, and he felt himself bound to do so.

"Mr. NOEL said that the Magistrates had prohibited the publication of the confession, and the reporter, if he persisted in his determination, would be acting 'in contempt of the Court of King's Bench. It had been decided long ago, and over and over again, that Magistrates had the power to order a reporter to quit the place in which an examination was held, and if he suffered one to remain, he had the power to prohibit the publication of any part of the proceeding if he chose.

"The REPORTER was about to offer a remark, when Mr. NOEL said the Magistrate would do right in preventing him (the Reporter) from leaving the room with the notes which he had been taking of the proceedings.

"Mr. CLUTTERBUCK said, he would cut the matter very short. The Magistrates had thought fit to prohibit the publication of his confession, and it should not be published. He required the Reporter to give up his note-book before he quitted the room.

"The REPORTER said, that a compliance with such an order was perfectly out of the question.

"Mr. Clutterbuck—Then I shall order a constable to take it from you.

"The REPORTER said he should not give it up, and Mr. CLUTTERBUCK looked towards a constable and held up his hand, of course intending to carry his threat into execution. The Reporter not choosing to undergo a search by a police officer, took his note book from his pocket, and placing it on the table, begged it to be distinctly understood, that in giving it up he did so under coercion, and that he yielded only to what he must deem to be absolute force.

"The note-book was then sealed, and when the proceedings of the day had terminated it was sent to a newspaper-office in London."

This story we give in the words of the CHRONICLE itself, and therefore in the best possible way for the reporter.

Who these reporters may be we really do not pretend to know, nor what they imagine their duty or place in society—but it is quite time that they should be set right when one of them thinks fit to set up his duty to a newspaper-printer in opposition to the order of a Magistrate, who has hitherto performed to the country, and in whose hands is reposed the trust of administering justice.

It is impossible to ascertain the opinion which newspaper-writers and newspaper-editors entertain of themselves or their vocation, but that they are mistaken when they erect themselves into a "fourth estate" there can be little doubt—the House of Commons has subjected itself to their "reports" by the toleration of a perpetual "breach of privilege," and the insolence of the reporters (displayed upon every occasion to Members of that House,) is the return for the indulgence—as well might these persons refuse to leave the gallery during a division, or upon a motion that strangers do withdraw, as declare that they will publish that, which a magistrate tells them they shall not publish—is the mercenary trade of a professed journalist to interfere with the course of justice—are honest people to be prejudiced—are guilty men to escape—are the laws to be violated, and the magistrates insulted by reporters for the newspapers? Are the people mad?

THE BRITISH GALLERY.

THAT acknowledged advocate of the Whigs and Radicals, Catholics and Carbonari, the MORNING CHRONICLE, trumpeted up some time ago, in the EDINBURGH REVIEW, a pompous description of its own literary merits; and since that time we have been nauseated with a daily pot-pourri of poetry, politics, sedition, love, scandal, cant, and criticism. On Thursday last, in addition to our usual olla podrida, we were entertained with a disquisition on Belles Lettres and digestion; but their Belles Lettres and their politics are treated with equal felicity. At the close of the season at the British Gallery students are for some weeks admitted to copy such of the pictures as the contributors to the Institution think proper to allow. These copies are then, together with the originals, exhibited to the Governors first, and afterwards to the public. On the former of these occasions some representative of the MORNING CHRONICLE contrived to be present, and then, with a taste as ridiculous as the principles of his party are corrupt, extolled every artist below the level of mediocrity, and disparaged all who rose above it. We certainly do consider their praise as censure, and their censure as a proof of merit and integrity; but we are astonished that, if they must interfere in the fine arts they do not at least employ some experienced pen, and to the hireling scribe" (to adopt their own favourite phrase) in the present instance we are tempted to say, Ne sutor ultra crepidam. We pointed out last week the absurdity of their dramatical criticisms—we shall now shew their utter incompetence to decide on all that concerns painting.

"* Yet to this dolt had the entire conduct of the defence of Cadiz by sea and land been committed!"

The pictures left for the students are not many; the number of copies made from them, considering the short time the Gallery has been open for their use, does great credit at least to their application. Those from the paintings by SIR JOSHUA REYNOLDS, which more particularly attracted our attention, were, "The Death of CARDINAL BEAUFORT," by MR. SALTER; the only interesting copy of "The Innocent Little Flower Girl," deserving notice, was, a miniature by MISS M. A. SHARPE; the oil paintings from this subject being of a very mediocre description.

"The Sleeping Girl," from the pencil of the same artist, is a bold, clever study; several attempts were made to copy this picture, but those only which fixed our attention were made by MESSRS. GREEN, SMART, and MARKS, and one in miniature by MISS ROSS, who most happily caught the tone and chiaro-scuro effect of the original. MISS BLANCHARD'S miniature study from "The Mother and Child," by SIR JOSHUA, though unfinished, deserves much commendation; numerous copies of this subject in oils by no means merit that praise we should have been glad to have bestowed.

The unrivalled, exquisite picture of "The Snake in the Grass," from the delicious colouring which pervades this chef d'œuvre of our great English artist, induced many artists and students to copy it; the productions by MR. HASTINGS, MR. PIDDING, and MISS BEAUMONT were successful; and some reduced studies by three or four other gentlemen, possessed a great deal of the character and resemblance of the original, had they not been seriously injured by the daubing pencil of some officious underling connected with the Institution, which we shall by and bye more particularly allude to as deserving the highest reprobation; but none of the above were to compare with the miniature copy on ivory, by MISS SHARPE, whose delicacy of colouring and sweetness of expression merit the warmest applause: we must not omit noticing also a miniature copy, well executed, by MRS. MORRIS.

A celebrated picture by CUYP of "A Shepherd attending his Flock," (a Sunset) was extremely well copied by MESSRS. CLATTER, WILSON, NOVICE, TURNER, and MISS BEAUMONT: but the former was decidedly the finest picture, though the position in which it was placed precluded its being seen to the advantage to which it was entitled. MESSRS. WILSON, CLINT, and HASTINGS were also successful in their imitations of a little picture by RUYSDAEL. A painting after GASPAR POUSSIN, by MR. HARRIOT, was coloured with much effect, clearness and beauty; and a small VANDEVELDE, copied by MESSRS. WILSON and HASTINGS, possessed the silver aerial tone of colouring usually observed in this celebrated marine painter's productions.

We have been led into these observations, as the pictures which the MORNING CHRONICLE has pointed out have generally been those which scarcely merit even a secondary rank. We have a few words to say on the management of the Gallery itself; some curious stories are afloat in regard to it, such as silver tea-pots having been presented to the wives of certain hen-pecked servants of the establishment to insure a conspicuous place for the productions of artists whose works would not otherwise ever be noticed, and thus to throw into obscurity many able paintings on which the eye might rest with pleasure: to this mode of humbugging the public we shall hereafter recur, and though, perhaps, the whole Institution is not worth the trouble, yet the principle deserves to be exposed.

Amongst the pictures left for the students was one to which we have above alluded, "the Snake in the Grass," by SIR JOSHUA REYNOLDS. The noble proprietor of this desired that no exact copy should be made of it, although several copies, engravings, &c. have been for years in circulation. It appears that some reduced copies were made of it—one of which in miniature is a beautiful specimen of the perfection to which that style of painting has been brought. The rest were in oil—the day before the exhibition was opened to the public, and whilst closed to the artists, without the latter receiving any notice on the subject, some of the servants of the institution completely obliterated, and that too in the most slovenly manner, some parts of the best copies of "the Snake in the Grass." Such is the explanation we received of some otherwise very well finished pictures presenting in part a most miserable appearance.

MESSRS. YOUNG and BARNARD, the keepers, will of course give some account of this singular proceeding—and why miniature copies of this inimitable painting should not have felt the effects of their devastating brush as well as the larger productions.

It may be remembered—for it has been frequently alluded to—that a MR. JOSHUA STEELE adopted a plan for the amelioration of his negroes on his estate, called KENDALS in Barbadoes. Much has been said of the plan, which obtained the name of the Copyhold System: but as we are always anxious to afford our readers the means of judging for themselves from facts, we submit the following detail of the origin, rise, progress, and success of the system.

MR. JOSHUA STEELE went to Barbadoes several years preceding the great hurricane in 1780. He was then advanced in life; was a gentleman of liberal education, singular in manners and in character. It was understood that he was in pecuniary difficulties, and that his intention was to set the better of his embarrassments by exertion. He became possessed of Kendal Plantation in right of his wife and daughter-in-law. Kendal is one of the best estates in Barbadoes, being scarcely ever known to fail. It may not be irrelevant to add, that it was the residence of the unfortunate YARICO, celebrated by LIGON.

MR. S. was accused of being litigious; and it is stated, that at the time of his decease he was engaged in four suits in Chancery. That when his executor FRANCIS BELL died, the estate was, after sixteen years litigation, sold by order of Chancery. (Vide Master's Report, Ch. Barbadoes.)

MR. S. became dissatisfied with the Colonial Laws, and by writings and publications, still on record in the Transactions of the Society of Arts in the island, to question the legality of the Colonial Laws, particularly of making negroes chattels for payment of debts, and assigning lands in fee, by appraisement, in satisfaction of them. He insisted that the writ of elegit of England was in full force in Barbadoes, though it had been set aside by positive Acts of the Colonial Parliament for more than a century. On his arrival, he thought it very extraordinary that he could sleep peaceably in his bed, with open doors and windows, in the midst of 300 or 400 negroes (Trans. Society of Arts, p. 63), yet these very laws, when Foreman of the Grand Jury 1787, he presented to the Governor, as the greatest nuisance in the island. He was a great reformer, and his favourite plan was to annex his negroes to the soil, as the ad scripti glebæ of the Saxons. Could he have established this point, they could not have been seized for his debts by his creditors—but in this, as in all his schemes, he met with the success of most reformers.

On the institution of the copyhold system there were not less than 400 negroes on the land. At the death of the executor, when this system was abandoned, only 249 remained. Had the plan been profitable surely one convert would have been made in sixteen years, the period of its operation; and it been favourable to human existence no decrease would have taken place in the number of the blacks.

MR. S.'s practice was this: he rented the lands and houses to his negroes in small portions, and received payment in actual labour t every hour of absence, even when the cause was illness, was deducted. The blacks were to pay him for their food, clothes, and every necessary; passing between them; they were not to work for any one, but for him alone; he set the prices on his own articles of supply. The nett amount of the labour in days and hours was credited to each negro; by a person (a slave of his own) there placed by him. Every negro was constantly in debt to him. The idleness of MR. STEELE'S negro villains made them a nuisance to his neighbours.

The following returns of the negroes and produce upon KENDALS, during the operation of the copyhold system, from about the time the executor, BELL, (when the estate was sold by a decree of Chancery) took it, until its dissolution, at the death of STEEL'S are taken from MR. STEELE'S own books, and from those of his executor, now deposited in the Master of Chancery's office, in Barbadoes; that since the sale of the estate is also from undoubted authority. The prices during the first period were nearly double to the prices of these days.

1818	434,896 lbs.	410 ditto.

The two first years crops show the effect of the copyhold system still operating; but the general mode of management of estates being restored immediately after the sale of the estate, the crop reaped in 1815, shows the difference in favour of the general mode. In the last three years of the copyhold system, viz. in 1809-10 and 11, with an average of 249 negroes, the plantation made on the average 142566 lbs. muscovado.‡ In the last three years of the present proprietor, with an average of 391 negroes, 367493 lbs. average. The last three years of each system have been selected, on the belief that the plans of each proprietor were then in full force. But as the negroes had increased§ to 391, by the rule of proportion it will follow that the plantation under the copyhold system would, with this number, have given an average of 223,868 lbs. Muscovado. Let it be thus shewn:—

Average, under the general system, with 391 negroes	367,493
Ditto, ditto, copyhold ditto . 391 ditto	223,868
Leaving an annual deficit against the copyhold system,	143,625

So that, instead of having increased in a treble ratio, the copyhold system is actually short by 143,625 lbs of the average annual produce under the common management.

* The common ratio between clayed and Muscovado is 4 : 6, that is, 4lbs. of clayed equal to 6lbs. of Muscovado in value.

† The writer thinks this ought to be 351.

‡ The claying the sugar had been abandoned.

§ The writer knows not the cause of the increase.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR,—It was with no small degree of pleasure, that I read in your last Number the commencement of an exposure of the real motives of MR. WILBERFORCE and his friends, in their conduct as far as relates to the West Indies.

The present very alarming situation of our possessions in that part of the globe, cannot but awaken the most serious apprehensions in the breast of every friend to humanity, as well as to his country. It is with such feelings that I am induced to offer my humble exertions towards undeceiving the community, with regard to a sect which seems to aim at nothing less than trampling upon the established Church; and who, to reach the summit of their ambition, would not hesitate to wade through rivers of the blood, and clime o'er mountains of the mangled corpses of their murdered countrymen.

It will afford no little satisfaction to the writer, if the following observations on the conduct of the Missionaries—on the result of their instructions on the minds of the negroes—and the treatment of the slaves in Berbice, Demerara, and Issequibo, made during a residence of more than fourteen years in those colonies—should in the smallest degree assist in averting the awful calamity which threatens the Crown with the loss of one of its richest gems—the country of an extensive nursery for her hardy protectors—the revenue of no despicable source—which will too certainly prove the ruin of thousands—drench the colonies with blood, and clothe Britain in mourning.

I shall begin by putting a few questions, to which you, Sir, may be able to give me answers.

I observe the Missionary Society has denied having any knowledge of SMITH and ELLIOT, who have been arrested in Demerara as instigators of the slaves to the late insurrection. I can only say that the former had a chapel four years ago in Mahaica.

I should like to be informed if they know any thing of MR. DAVIS, in Demerara? or if they are at all acquainted with the Winkle Department, in Berbice? Did they not send out a MR. WRAY, to establish a school for the education of the children of the slaves belonging to that department? Are not these negroes the peculiar property of the Crown? And is not MR. WRAY a dissenter?—If so, is it not rather extraordinary that slaves, the property of the Crown, should be instructed in tenets differing from those of that Church of which the Crown is the head? Is not MR. WRAY the preacher in a dissenting chapel in the town of New Amsterdam, in that colony? Are MR. WILBERFORCE and his friends acquainted with MR. WRAY's religious sentiments? If they are, does it not appear strange that they who pretend to be such staunch friends of the constitution, should wish to disseminate religious tenets opposed to the Church established by that constitution?

Perhaps it is my dull comprehension that prevents my seeing the consistency of this proceeding—or, stop, probably MR. WILBERFORCE, consistency of this proceeding—or, stop, probably MR. WILBERFORCE, in his zeal for the good of his fellow-subjects, conceives that the Constitution would be all the better for a little alteration; and wishes therefore to prepare the minds of the weak and ignorant for such a change, by teaching them to believe that the Constitution has taken no care of their eternal welfare—in short, that the established Church of their country is the wide gate "that leadeth to destruction." These are not the principles MR. WILBERFORCE or his friends I am aware are not the principles MR. WILBERFORCE or his friends I am aware are sincere in their attachment to the Government avow; but if they are sincere in their attachment to the Government of their country, why do they not patronize the clergy belonging to the Church established by that Government? Do they mean to arrogate to their own ignorant empirics all the learning and piety in the kingdom, and boldly to assert that none of the divines of the Church of England are capable of teaching the real principles of Christianity, or worthy of being intrusted with so weighty a charge?—I am far from wishing to detract from the merit due to some dissenters; I am free to confess, that amongst them there are learned and good men; but I do assert such are not the characters selected for missionaries to the West Indies.

But to proceed with my questions. Can you inform me if the Missionary Society has any knowledge of a COLONEL MACALISTER, who died in Berbice, having gone out there as agent for those estates which belonged to the Dutch Company, and at the time of the capture were taken possession of by the Crown, and designated by the title of the Crown Estates?—Have you ever heard of some secret correspondence carried on between this gentleman and his employers, copies of which, as well as of some other documents, were found amongst his papers at the time of his death? and which induced those who saw them not to give either himself or his employers credit, for that disinterested philanthropy, or for that sincerity and candour which their public professions laid claim to.

Does the Missionary Society know any thing of a MR. WALKER, Agent for the Crown Estates, and Collector of the Customs in Berbice? Has this Gentleman informed them of the peculiar circumstances attending the sudden death of a negro belonging to the Winkle Department, in the Colonial Hospital, New Amsterdam, in the year 1820? Can MR. WALKER call to memory the conversation which passed between the Surgeon of that Hospital and himself, relative to the removal of the body, previous to inspection by the Fiscal? Does he bear in mind the evidence he gave before the Court of Criminal Justice, on the consequent trial of the manager, placed over those negroes by himself and coadjutor?

Does his "treacherous memory" enable him to recollect that it was his earnest wish that the body should be buried without any investigation, notwithstanding there were strong reasons for supposing ill treatment had occasioned the negro's death?—and when a positive refusal to connive at such a measure was given by one who was not of the elect—the chosen, and the manager put upon his trial? Does this humane—this upright representative of an equally upright society, retain any—the faintest recollection of his having requested and obtained leave of the Court to amend that evidence which he had solemnly sworn to?

Does his "treacherous memory" retain any impression of the surprise expressed by the Court, and of the reply it gave to the extraordinary petition to re-amend this amended evidence, when it was almost entirely confuted by a highly respectable witness? Perhaps it is convenient for the Missionary Society to know nothing of these transactions, perhaps they are really unacquainted with them; but granting such, they are not the less guilty: perhaps were it proved that their Rev. Schoolmaster is particularly attentive to the young females of the establishment; which, by the bye, it report does not grossly calumniate him, is too true; they might know as little about him as of SMITH or ELLIOT, or be deceived in his character; this is no extenuation of their conduct; it is their imperative duty to be well assured of the veracity, experience, prudence and respectability of men whom they intrust with so weighty a charge as new modelling such a society as the slave population of the West Indies.

My letter has already extended to too great a length; I must, therefore, defer some other questions, upon which I wish to be informed, until the next opportunity, as well as my observations on the treatment of the slaves, &c.; but previous to concluding I would say a few words to MR. WILBERFORCE. Far be it from me to judge prematurely or harshly of either him or his friends—they may have acted from conscience—from principle: this is, however, yet to be proved, and I strongly suspect it will be difficult to do; with not a few of them we have the most convincing proofs of interest being the main if not the sole spring of action; and there are some circumstances connected with the early life of even the leader of the phalanx which bear strong marks of selfish humanity and interested philanthropy.

I would remind MR. WILBERFORCE and his friends that, however dark may be their machinations, there is an eye, "to whom all hearts are open;" an eye that "cannot behold iniquity." I would remind them, that that mouth which was never opened but for the benefit of mankind, hath declared, "there is nothing covered that shall not be revealed, nor hid that shall not be known," and let them rest assured that, however distant, the day will come, when what they "have spoken in the ear in closets shall be proclaimed on the house tops," and strongly indeed do I apprehend they have cause to tremble for such an exposure, for I fear their motives will not bear the light.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant, VERITAS.

October 31st, 1823.

N.B. Letters have been received in Bristol from Demerara to the 6th Sept. which state, that SMITH is found guilty of the charges brought against him of inciting the slaves to insurrection.

THE WEST INDIES.

WE perceive in the number of BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE published yesterday, a powerful and well-written article on the present perilous state of our West Indian possessions, which forcibly and clearly exposes the imminent danger in which our Colonies are placed—the inconsistency, the insincerity, the policy, and the views of the various contributors to the general system by which the lives and property of thousands of our fellow countrymen are thus dreadfully exposed.

It is of considerable length, and occupies many pages of the Magazine—we differ in opinion with the writer on many points, but there are parts which we think it right to extract, strongly recommending at the same time an attentive perusal of the whole, which we have little doubt our quotations will induce most of our readers to give it.

We must however in the outset protest against the views taken by the writer in p. 440, 441, of the result and the advantages arising from the liberality so strongly expressed on the part of Government after MR. BUXTON had withdrawn his motion—the writer calls it "a pledge on the part of Government," and refers to it with satisfaction, as if Government had not gone too far in making that pledge, which our readers will understand was given in the resolutions moved by MR. CANNING. We differ toto cœlo with the writer here, because, let the vapouring and preaching of the BUXTONS and WILBERFORCES have been what it might, the negroes were accustomed to such "preachment," and it would have had little or no effect; but the promise of Government, so easily converted by "sanctified misrepresentation" into an act, did the mischief, and the conciliation of half a dozen doubtful votes in Parliament has risked the possession of all our West India Colonies.

This cautious policy is thus noticed by the writer, p. 442.

"The truth is, that TRUTH is becoming a matter of the extremest rarity in anything like the discussion of anything like a public question. By truth, we mean the boldness of truth—the courage to speak manfully 'the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.'—Look, now, at that most interesting debate in the House of Commons, of which we have been speaking—just look at it—read it from end to end; and say, honestly, whether there ever appeared in the record of any one human transaction, a more extraordinary specimen of the total suppression of the truth. We see MR. CANNING, MR. BATHURST, and many more men of enlightened minds, of liberal knowledge, of rational conduct, opposed to a set of people whom we all most perfectly know to be—as a set of complete imbeciles, vain and restless (however well-intentioned and well-principled) agitators—so many living specimens of humbug. But does anybody dare to hint this?—No, no. The subject is argued with a grave face, and the desired end is cleverly accomplished. But does any one venture to clothe that end which every one understands, in plain, intelligible words?—No, truly. The real feeling of the Ministry, and of MR. CANNING in particular, we all perfectly know was this:—Here is a subject of the greatest consequence—here is a subject fit to exercise the intellect of the greatest and wisest of men—here is a subject deserving and demanding the closest and most serious attention of the first minds in England. This subject a set of dreaming enthusiasts have taken into their hands; and, if we do not take it out of their hands, they run a great risk of ruining, by means of their folly, one of the chief supports of the commercial wealth of England. We must take it out of the hands of these WILBERFORCES and BUXTONS, or they will ruin the whole body of West Indian proprietors—they will convert a body of slaves, who are not suffering anything like the hundredth part of that misery which these people delight in describing—a set of slaves, who, in point of fact, are, in very many respects, better off than the poor peasantry of our own country—they will convert these at once into a set of lawless banditti, revelling in blood. In doing this, they will absolutely ruin the fortunes, and, in all possibility, endanger, to a fearful extent, the lives of our brothers and kinsmen, the loyal subjects of this empire, and entitled to all the protection of this government. They will produce such a work of desolation as their limited imaginations are inadequate to form even the most distant notion of;—and they will do all this, because they are foolish, weak, well-meaning, vain creatures themselves; and because they are unwittingly made the tools of a set of deeper and more designing persons, who take especial care to keep out of sight at present, but whose motives and influence we are most thoroughly aware of. We must take this subject out of the hands of these men, and THESE ARE OUR REASONS.

"Such, if this had been an age of openness, and real above-board proceeding, would have been the language—as every rational man is quite convinced it was the feeling—of his Majesty's Ministers. But no; this is not the way things must be managed in these days. WILBERFORCE, BUXTON, and the rest of them, must be borne gently in hand. If we spoke the fair, simple truth about them, we should perhaps run a risk of throwing them into the hands of the Whigs. The Whigs desire nothing but a handle for creating confusion. Give them an opportunity of making a few grand flowery speeches about liberty and they will read, without one shudder, the narrative of a whole colony bathed in blood and fire, over their chocolate the next morning. All this we are perfectly aware of: nay, more—we well know that every sane man in these islands knows quite well that we are thoroughly aware of all this; but yet, we cannot venture to beard the humbug spirit of the age—we must not speak out—we must deal in round-abouts—we must submit to flatter these imbeciles—we are setting our aces to a toil, of which these people are incapable of estimating either the importance or the extent—we are about to do what we feel to be our duty, and a duty our hearts will rejoice in performing, cost what pain it may to us—we are setting our faces to this great toil—we are entering upon this great work—we have freed our country from the danger of a foreign yoke, and it is now our desire and our hope, that our future years may be destined to be spent in the not less noble toils of interior amelioration. This is a branch, and a great one of the great, the arduous, the ill-paid toil to which we have set our hands and our hearts; but the age of open sincerity in political procedure is gone by. It is our duty and our desire to do what is right; but it is our necessity to keep terms with folly in the midst of wisdom."

As far as this description of the "concilitatory system" goes, it is true enough; and this principle, which pervades the whole conduct of Government, is that which makes a ministerial man tell you, that "HUME has done a great deal of good"—"active man"—"incorrect, but indefatigable." If MR. PITT had been alive, he would have taken HUME between his finger and thumb, and trod him into his native dirt three years since—but no matter—to the subject.

The writer enforces with warmth and energy the pledges given by MR. CANNING, on the occasion to which we have alluded, and adds—

"In a word, the government is pledged already to do its utmost endeavours for the removal of the most black and flagrant features of this in itself evil condition; and—which is a matter of the very highest importance, although apparently but little attended to by the worthy but rash men of whom so much has been said—his Majesty's government possesses the means of making experiments as to this matter, with far greater hope of success, and speedy success, too, than even the Legislature of England could possibly attain. For there are several islands in the West Indies entirely free from any controul of provincial assemblies, &c.—appendages to the Crown, and nothing more. It is there, as MR. CANNING, of course, took occasion to hint, that the government will make its first experiments. There it can act free, unfettered, unopposed, &c."

We pause here for a moment to point the reader's attention to a document which we this day publish, shewing the results of a modification of slavery, attempted upon the estate of MR. STEELE, in Barbadoes, which will serve as a satisfactory proof of what can be done with a race of people of whom MR. HENRY BROUGHAM says:—

"It will be vain to think of securing the privileges of the negro vassal SO LONG AS THE HAND OF NATURE HAS DISTINGUISHED HIM FROM HIS LORD."

That is—says MR. HENRY BROUGHAM—till the "blackamoor is washed white the negro must be a slave." As far as proofs and practice go, MR. HENRY BROUGHAM is right—indeed, he himself, speaking of free negroes, pithily observes, after a description of the enormities of which this class is invariably guilty, adds, (p. 416)—

"The ABBE RAYNAL himself, with all his ridiculous fondness for savages, cannot in the present instance so far twist the facts according to his fancies and his feelings, as to give a favourable portrait of this degraded race."

Still, however, BLACKWOOD's writer insists upon the pledge, and seems to entertain a hope of success if it were redeemed, in which, however much we admire his humanity, we are compelled to doubt his sagacity.

Of the three classes of persons who take up the question, he says, they consist of—

"First, a body of persons who act, or at least, suppose themselves to be acting, under the influence of no motives whatever, but those of general philanthropy and religious zeal. Of this body MR. WILBERFORCE may be considered as the facile princeps. The extreme imprudence, to say the least of it, with which this party have rendered it impossible not to charge them—more especially in their recent publications, and the absolute unfairness of their conduct subsequent to MR. BUXTON's motion in the House of Commons—all this has been already sufficiently commented upon."

We must just whisper to the writer our suspicions, that he has only gone "skin-deep" in his researches—because we will undertake to shew, that one person, to whom he assigns a place in the first class, might, with great justice, figure in the second, of which he says—

"The Second is a far more cool-headed body—consisting of persons who agitate the public mind, in regard to the West Indian colonies, in the hope of seriously injuring them, and of thereby gaining direct commercial benefit to themselves. This description of persons comprehends many ruling characters within the East India Company, and a still larger proportion of well-known individuals deeply connected with the free trade to India and the coast of Africa. We are sorry to say, that many who desire to be considered as forming part of the first class, really belong to this. Many of the most eminent leaders in the African Institution, for example, are well known to have great capitals sunk in these branches of commercial speculation; and even MR. WILBERFORCE himself has not in all quarters escaped the suspicion of lending himself with eyes not quite shut to the interested views of these persons. Of this we are heartily disposed to acquit MR. WILBERFORCE; but certainly we must admit, that the compliment thus paid to his probity, is in so far paid at the expence of his understanding."

We make no comment upon this—nor upon the remark which follows it, in which the consolatory observation is quoted from one of their recent publications, in which they say—"If we do not get sugar from the West Indies, we shall "get it from some other place." This, just as the question about duty upon East Indian sugar is agitating, "smells of "the shop"—as do indeed many other circumstances which have escaped the writer in BLACKWOOD, but which, in due time, we will bring to light.

The writer continues to speak of the third party—

"The Third party is neither a religious nor a commercial one.—It consists of mere politicians—such men, for instance, as MR. BROUGHAM—men who appear but too willing to disturb existing establishments of every kind, provided they can see any chance of thereby gaining a little popularity to prop up the ruined reputation of their own sorely degraded faction, the Whigs.

"These three parties play upon, and make cat's paws of each other to the best of their ability. His Majesty's Ministry, we are pretty sure understand them all; and we hope their united clamour will be found entirely unavailing to influence them in any way whatever, in their discharge of the great public duty which they have pledged themselves to perform—which, in our humble opinion, amounts to the same thing with hoping that this clamour may prove a powerless enemy to the real interests of the West Indies, and those of the Negro Slaves themselves."

We quite agree with the writer that such men as LORD LIVERPOOL, MR. CANNING, and MR. PEEL, can have no difficulty in "understanding" the objects of MESSRS. WILBERFORCE and MACAULEY, that what MR. BUXTON is driving at is as clear to them as noon day—but something more is wanting than a mere understanding of motives—a prevention of mischief—decision is necessary, firmness is absolutely required to save the colonies—and we must say, that if a Government understands clearly the motives of men, and foresees the dangers which must arise frem the conduct they choose to adopt, it only increases the weight of responsibility in case of serious mischief—which in our hearts and consciences we believe impending.

Upon the whole, however we may differ with the writer in BLACKWOOD, the article is, as we said before, able and interesting, and well worthy public attention.

THEATRES.

As we anticipated so it has fallen out—a most advantageous rivalry flourishes between the "Capulets and Montagues" of Covent Garden and Drury Lane, and never does novelty appear at one theatre but an opposing effort is made at the other—of the attempts of the past week more hereafter.

We must stop, before we proceed to the notice of novelties, to remark upon two pieces of acting, the one of which meets with our unqualified approbation, the other with our qualified censure—we mean in Comedy the Mirabel of MR. C. KEMBLE, and in Tragedy the Cardinal Wolsey of MR. YOUNG.

The Cardinal Wolsey of YOUNG is the least satisfactory performance of his, that we ever saw—whether he likes the part or not, we cannot pretend to say, but beautiful as were many of his touches, the whole was incomplete—there appeared, in truth, an inattention to many of the leading points perfectly unusual in YOUNG's acting—it is absurd to feel as one does with respect to the histrionic representation of WOLSEY—nothing could have been more unlike the authenticated portraits of the Cardinal than KEMBLE; yet, upon our minds, the dignity, the grandeur of personal appearance which he imparted to SHAKSPEARE'S Wolsey remain indelibly impressed; and perhaps the absence of those, superadded to an unaccountable absence (if we may be allowed the expression,) in YOUNG himself, sent us home out of humour; any stranger, who had never seen YOUNG before, we have no doubt would have been perfectly pleased and satisfied—but we, who have watched his career with gratification and delight, were mortified and surprised at his manner of under-playing himself.

Turn we from this, to the pleasanter duty of pronouncing, as far as our humble judgment goes, the Mirabel of MR. CHARLES KEMBLE a piece of acting quite unequalled on the stage—where the entire performance is so excellent, it would be vain to select any particular bits; the air, the manner, the appearance, the gaiety, the grace of the thing, made it certainly one of the most finished performances we ever saw. Puretete is not suited to JONES, but he has the happy privilege of being incompetent to act badly—he plays one part better than another, and pleases us more at one time than another, but we cannot remember ever to have seen him altogether unsuccessful. MISS FOOTE looked sweetly, and acted charmingly.—MRS. CHATTERLEY'S dress has excited great discussion—we pronounce it unnecessarily tawdry, and particularly ugly. MRS. CHATTERLEY must do a great deal in the way of disfigurement, before she contrives to spoil her personal appearance—she was very near being successful in the garb she assumed upon this occasion.

On Tuesday the Covent Garden managers produced a ballet, under the guidance of MR. VENAFRE, to describe which is so far, so very far beyond our little powers, that we despair of doing justice to its merits. That it was intended to be serious there can be no doubt, because there was a ghost in it—that it produced the most extraordinary shouts of merriment, proves that it failed in its aim of moving to grief, or exciting to astonishment. We shall say nothing about it, and sincerely hope that the reception it met with, will put an end of the exhibition of posture-masters in tragedy.

At Drury Lane MR. MILMAN'S dramatic poem, called Fazio, was represented, in order to introduce MRS. BUNN, after an absence of several seasons. This lady, who is the wife of the present stage manager of the theatre, (a gentleman of considerable merit and activity, and to whose exertions much of the success of the SHAKSPEARE monument at Stratford is owing) was, as our readers may remember, MISS SOMERVILLE, and we never see her under her new appellation without thinking of COLMAN'S joke in Love laughs at Locksmiths—"Dub"—says TOTTERTON—"Dub—bless us what a short name for a grenadier."

MRS. BUNN'S figure is much above the ordinary height, but there is so much grace in her action that it does not appear so. Her voice is remarkably good, and her enunciation clear and distinct—her conception of Bianca was just, and her delineation of the character powerful—indeed, if she could divest herself of the recollection of MRS. WRIXON BECHER she would rank amongst our first tragedians; but there does every now and then occur something, so like an imitation of the most defective parts of that charming actress, as to remind us of what we have lost, disadvantageously to her, whom we possess. She is nevertheless a great acquisition to Drury Lane, where the stock of heroines has been heretofore somewhat scanty.

A gentleman, calling himself YOUNGE, (with an e) enacted Fazio—this character was performed at Covent Garden by MR. C. KEMBLE, but at Drury Lane nobody could be found to undertake it, except this unhappy personage—we presume he was compelled to the task, and shall spare his feelings, by making no remarks upon what, as far as the management goes, we consider to be about as flagrant a piece of impudence as ever was played off upon the public.

The redeeming piece of splendour now comes to be noticed. The "Rajah's Daughter," the "Cataract of the Ganges," in which fire, water, silk, velvet, morocco leather, tin and tinsel, real horses, turbans, trowsers, trumpets, comicality and seriousness, chargings and marchings, repulsings and countermarchings, singing, dancing, bombast and buffoonery, together with many other articles too numerous to be detailed in the limits of an advertisement, have been combined to delight the wondering eye and astound the open ears of JOHN BULL.

The managers of theatres seem to treat the town as physicians of the old school treated their patients, and think the surest way of forcing down bitter pills is by gilding them—there must have been as much gold-leaf expended in this pantomime as would cover the surface of Grosvenor-square; every thing is gilt—every thing shines in tawdry impeachment of the MIDAS-like taste in which it has been produced—it is, however, splendid and noisy beyond description, and if it had been delayed till Christmas, would have been a charming treat to the little ones.

Somebody said in the newspapers it was written by MR. COLMAN—if the name be correct, we presume it must be from the pen of the veterinary surgeon. It has been received with shouts of applause.

A correspondent begs us to notice the impropriety which he witnessed at Covent Garden Theatre one night last week. In the private box of the DUKE of DEVONSHIRE was seated the keeper of an oyster-shop in the vicinity of Drury-lane, in company with a female, whose name our correspondent furnishes us with, but which, for obvious reasons, we suppress, the beau being a waiter of the establishment:—our correspondent is not aware, perhaps, that in the absence of the DUKE of DEVONSHIRE his box is at the disposal (we presume) of some members of his household, from whom it may have been procured indirectly—for the party in (the case) his Grace is innocent of the introduction company into his box, the managers are equally blam because, as private boxes are private property, they would not incur the responsibility of so unwarrantable warrantable a tenantry.

Another correspondent begs us to enquire of MR. Do in what edition of the School for Scandal he finds this which he uses in Sir Oliver—"Well, my old Rose Tough;"—conscious that no actor of MR. DOWTON's eminence would of himself venture upon an interpola little in unison with the general character of SHERI writing.

A third correspondent forwards the following letter we publish, in order that the subject may be brought notice of the managers themselves:—

SIR—I beg leave to call your attention to an impositive public are every day liable to, with respect to the taking of box-offices of the theatres, which I saw the other day endeavo be put in practice upon a gentleman at the Box-office in Dr Theatre—which be very properly resisted, receiving in the disrespectful answers to his application for places, and finall him determined not to be imposed upon) an humble apology same.

The common practice among these gentry is, on application best places vacant on the dress circle, to ask, "How large a Sir?" and if the answer is not equal to their ideas in point of to what it ought to be, the answer is, "Very sorry, Sir, the places we can offer you is a third row in such a box," &c. &c. nine times out of ten there are preferable places, reserved in those friends who are in the habit of taking tickets at their b otherwise bribing them.

This is an abuse that ought to be exposed and corrected. knowing your independent principles with respect to theatricals, leave to state the above facts for your information—and have the nour to remain your obedient Servant,

HORRID MURDER.

At Bow-street, on Wednesday, Ruthven brought two young in his custody on suspicion of being concerned in a murder committed on Friday last, at Aldenham, near Watford, Herts. names are John Thurtell and Joseph Hunt. The former is the Mr. Alderman Thurtell, of Norwich, and the other lately be Army and Navy Coffee House, St. Martin's-lane. The murder supposed to have taken place in consequence of the report of a being heard, which was immediately followed by the groans of apparently in great pain, and on the following morning a quan blood was discovered on the spot, and also a pistol, with the ram choaked up with the brains of a human being; a handkerchief a knife were found at a short distance, and a gap had been forcibly in the hedge through which it appeared the body had been dragged blood and brains were found on part of the bushes. Information was mitted to Bow-street, and Ruthven was dispatched to make inquiries when he succeeded in gaining such information as induced him to prehend the two prisoners. A coat, much stained with blood, was found in their possession, and also a pistol, which is supposed to the fellow to the one found in the field. Ruthven immediately set off with them in a chaise to Watford. They were examined before two Magistrates, when a great number of witnesses gave similar testimony to the preceding, and the prisoners were separately questioned.

Elizabeth Freeman stated, that on Friday night, a little before eight o'clock, she saw two men in a gig, in Gill's Hill-lane.

John Herrington, labourer, was at work with Robert Hunt, in Gill's Hill-lane, about six o'clock in the morning of Saturday last; when two men, one of whom was tall, and wore a white hat, and the other a shorter person, with large black whiskers, passed them. When they had proceeded about ten poles, they stopped, stooped down, and appeared to be "grabbling" in the hedge, as if looking for something they had lost. In about five minutes they went further up, and came back; and as they passed again, one of them told Hunt he was sized there in his gig the night before. Hunt asked the man in the white hat if he had hurt himself, and he replied, "But little." On being asked if the horse and gig were hurt, the tall man said, "No, the gig did not go over, nor the horse fall." The same morning witness found a pen-knife on the spot where the men had been looking, and shortly afterwards, on the same spot, he found the pistol, marked with blood, &c. At twelve o'clock the same day, the same two men came again down the lane, in a gig, very neatly dressed, and both had black hats on. They "looked hard" at the spot where the pistol and knife had been found. About half an hour afterwards, Mr. Probert, who occupies Gill's Hill Cottage, came down the lane alone, and asked some questions. (The conversation did not bear upon the case.)

Richard Hunt corroborated the testimony of his partner, adding that the man in the white hat said, "The lane is a d—d nasty place—as dark as the grave. I was coming up here last evening, and was capsized out of my gig." Witness asked him if he had hurt himself, and he said "No; but he had lost a silk handkerchief and a pen-knife, but he had found them both." Witness asked if he had hurt himself or horse, or if the gig was broken, and he said "No, it never fell." Witness said it was a queer thing that he should be capsized out of his gig without its falling. They went away without answering.

Susan Anne Woodroffe, servant to Mr. Probert, at Gill's Hill Cottage, stated that her master came home about nine o'clock on Friday evening last with two gentlemen. The same two left the house on Saturday morning. They went out that morning about six o'clock and were gone about half an hour. The two gentlemen did not go to bed on Friday night. Neither of them came through the kitchen all night.

A gardener in the employment of Probert proved seeing the two men go out together towards Gill's Hill Lane, on Saturday morning.

John Haddis, aged 13, had lived with Mr. Probert seven years, and looked after his horse and gig. Last Friday, about ten o'clock at night, Mr. John Thurtell came to his master's house in a gig, which was a dark grey horse, and a dark green and black gig. The horse's head was leading from Butler's Green when he drove into the yard. He had a great coat on of a light colour. His outside clothes did not appear to be dirty. In half an hour, Mr. Probert came in with another man. Their gig came in the direction from Radlet. He saw Mr. Thurtell's inside clothes and boots on the following morning, and they were covered with dirt—they were "nothing but dirt." On the inside coat were spots of blood—middling-sized drops. The gentleman with Thurtell had large black whiskers. He saw the other gentleman cleaning Thurtell's coat with a wet sponge—this was in the morning. There was no blood on that gentleman's coat. The gig in which Mr. Thurtell came appeared very heavy, as if it had luggage in it. Thurtell was wiping himself said any thing to him about an accident. Thurtell was wiping himself that night with a sponge in the stable. On Sunday, as witness was coming from Mr. Nicholls's, he saw several "lumps" of blood on the dirt heaps, and two holes in the hedge in Gill's Hill-lane. The gentleman brought a sponge with him. There was a bag in his gig, with a clock, and that the two men took away with them on Saturday evening. They came again on Sunday, and witness went up with them and his master on Monday. He was taken to the Coach and Horses, in Conduit-street, Bond-street, and left there by Mr. Probert, as was in return in two hours; but did not come back at all. The chaise and gig seemed hired.

The prisoner, Joseph Hunt, was then called in, and the solicitor for the Prosecution told him that the Magistrates and he would feel it their duty to put some questions to him; but it was for he should be warned, that he was not bound to answer a single one unless he chose, and, after all, he was not bound to say any thing likely to criminate himself. Under this warning he would exercise his own judgment. The prisoner, between a long interrogation, and answered every question freely; and at length made a confession, (the particulars of which it would not be proper to disclose) and in consequence of which the murdered body was searched for, and found in a pond within seven miles of Watford; the legs, which were quite naked, were tied together with some new cord, and the upper part of the body was concealed in a sack tied on. Round the sack was a handkerchief containing stones. The body was conveyed, precisely in this state, to the Artichoke, a public house at no great distance from the pond, where it will remain for the Coroner's Inquest.

John Thurtell was next called, and received the same warning, and underwent a very long interrogation. When it had nearly closed, he observed, he was never carried pistols, and he said he never did. He was asked if he found a small pistol on a bank near Probert's house, and pressed, he said he found it upon him.—Ruthven produced it on Sunday morning last. Ruthven found it upon him.—Ruthven produced it.

He was asked, "Do you know Mr. Weare?"—Prisoner (firmly)—I do.

Do you know where he is?—I do not.

Do you know did you see him last?—On Tuesday, last week, was the last time I saw him.

Did you see him last Friday?—No, I did not. I did not meet him accidentally on Friday, in the Edgware-road.

Now, Mr. Thurtell, you have said you found this pistol near Probert's; I ask you, would you say when I tell you I can produce the fellow to it, that you found within a few yards of the same spot?—I know nothing about that.

The pistol, with the blood and hair still adhering to it, was then produced to the view of the prisoner, from the paper in which it was wrapped, and his countenance and manner underwent a change too great to escape the notice of the most careless observer. His countenance, naturally sallow, assumed a deadly pale, and he appeared to shudder at and sink backwards at the sight of the weapon, the state of which, however, it should be added, was such as to be likely to produce a strong effect upon a perfectly innocent man.—The pistols were then compared. They were of the same size, each had "Hill, London," engraved on it, and they were numbered 2 and 3. In the locks, ornaments, and every part, they exactly resembled each other.

Mr. Noel—I can tell you, Thurtell, Mr. Weare is not to be found.

Thurtell—I am sorry for it; I know nothing about him.

The prisoner was removed, and the labourer, Herrington swore positively that he was the man who wore the white hat, and spoke to him on Saturday morning.

Wm. Heworthy, of No. 4. Spring-gardens, billiard-room-keeper, stated, that on Thursday last he saw John Thurtell and Mr. Weare, of Lyon's Inn, at his house together. Mr. Weare said then, he was going out of town with Thurtell the next day, for a few days' shooting in Hertfordshire. On the following day, Mr. Weare called upon witness about three o'clock in the afternoon, and said he was on his way to see John Thurtell, in the Edgeware-road.

John Thurtell was recalled, and persisted in saying that he had never seen Weare since Tuesday or Wednesday at the latest. They were then committed.

Thurtell is the person who, in conjunction with his brother, obtained a verdict some months ago against the County Fire Office, for a loss alleged to have been sustained by them in certain premises in Watling-street, where they carried on the business of wholesale dealers in Norwich stuffs, and which premises were burned down, some time last winter. It may be necessary to state also, that at the last Middlesex Sessions a true bill was found against them for conspiring to defraud the County Fire Office in that affair, and that a Bench warrant for their apprehension was issued accordingly. Thomas Thurtell and Robert are in custody at St. Albans.—For Coroner's Inquest see the 1st Page.

WRITERS, CADETS, and GENTLEMEN'S OUTFITS are equipped to effect comfort, economy and dispatch, by GEORGE GENOA and CO. No. 9, Cornhill, London.

EDMONDSON and RODHAM, 125, New Bond-street, ever grateful for the least encouragement they receive from the Public, whilst they are thankfully elated them to increased exertions, beg to inform the Nobility and Gentry that they have recently imported into this country an extensive assortment of the most valuable FURS, which they are enabled, under the peculiarity of their purchases made by their agents abroad, to submit on terms the most reasonable. It gives them great pleasure in acknowledging the very liberal patronage they have received in the manufacture of their Silks, which they have always met with approved perfection, in addition to their Shawls, made under the immediate superintendence at Edinburgh, and which have met with such high approbation by Parisians who have visited this country. It further gives them great satisfaction in the assurance they have received of the superiority of their Velvet Hair Cloths, Fancy Ribbons, of the most novel French designs, and elegant article they have laid in adapted to the season; and they are happy in having obliterated the long-existing prejudice towards the system of Ready-money Trade, by the terms which no other establishment has hitherto submitted to. New Bond-street.

ROGERS'S IMPROVED FLANNEL, Manufactured from his own Yarn of Wool only, continues to preserve a decided preference over every other species of Flannel, for its peculiar softness and not shrinking in washing, a proof of which the very extensive demand he has for the Article, and the universal Approbation and Home Consumption, bears ample testimony. Its peculiar softness affords warmth and comfort to the tenderest habits, when other Flannels are found unpleasant. A saving of at least one sixth in the quantity used, on account of not shrinking in washing, is a strong recommendation on account of economy. For Waistcoats, and Ladies' Under Coats, it is particularly recommended. The Proprietor has prepared an extensive Stock for the approaching Season (in which considerable improvements have been made), so that he may be assured they will not be disappointed in the execution of their orders, which he regrets was the case during the last Winter.—This Flannel may be had from the principal Drapers in Great Britain and Ireland; and Wholesale from the Patentee, John S. Rogers, Chester.

WARD'S IMPROVED DIGESTIVE SEGARS.—Health and Luxury united in the use of these celebrated Segars; their medicinal virtues in cases of indigestion, &c. are already well known and highly appreciated; are mild and gentle in their operation, and do not cause the nausea usually complained of by those who are unaccustomed to smoking; indeed in the use of them arises a most grateful perfume.—Sold only by Ward, (sole proprietor) 16, Piccadilly; Soulier and Co. 4, Burlington Arcade: and Ward, 9, Newgate-street, in boxes, at 3s. 6d. who also begs to recommend to the notice of Connoisseurs in Segars, that they have on sale the finest Cabanas in London, imported by them direct from the Havannah.

BURGESS'S ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES.—Warehouse, 170, Strand, corner of the Savoy-steps, London.—John Burgess and Son, being apprized of the numerous endeavours made by many persons to impose a spurious article for their make, feel it incumbent upon them to request the attention of the Public, in purchasing what they conceive to be the Original, to observe the Name and Address correspond to with the above: the general appearance of the spurious description will deceive the unguarded, and for their detection, J. B. and Son submit the following cautions,—some are in appearance at first sight, "The Genuine," but without any name or address:—some "Burgess's Essence of Anchovies;"—others—"Burgess's,"—and many more without Address.

John Burgess and Son having been many years honoured with such distinguished approbation, feel every sentiment of respect towards the Public, and earnestly solicit them to inspect the Labels previous to their purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments.

BURGESS'S NEW SAUCE for general purposes, having given such great satisfaction, continues to be prepared by them, and is recommended as a most useful and convenient Sauce: will keep good in all climates.

Warehouse, 107, Strand, corner of the Savoy-steps, London.—(The original Fish-sauce Warehouse.)

CAUTION.—In consequence of the great disappointment many persons have experienced from purchasing inferior Trusses, SALMON, ODY, and CO. most respectfully solicit the attention of Medical Gentlemen and the public to observe, that the true PATENTED ELASTIC STEEL TRUSS has the "Salmon, Ody, and Co. 299, Strand, London," marked upon the leather case, without which they are of the spurious kind. Salmon, Ody, and Co. the inventors and patentees, have made upwards of 50,000 of their Patent Trusses, and still continue to have the recommendations of all the most eminent surgeons in town and country.—☞ Persons in the country are requested to send the circumference of the body an inch below the hips. Paris papers down to Friday, arrived by express yesterday. They state that the Grand Head-quarters was on the 22d at Carolina, and on the 23d at Santa Cruz.

An article from Madrid, dated Oct. 25, says—"The official letter from Seville of the 20th, attests that the King and all the royal family continue to enjoy good health. It is the intention of his Majesty to arrive on the 11th November at his royal Castle of Aranjuez. His Majesty proposes to visit Toledo, after having made some sojourn at Aranjuez. Every body is looking forward with impatience to the arrival of M. Pozzo di Borgo, who we are told is to effect an agreement between all our political parties, and to conciliate all interests, both foreign and domestic. He is said to be intrusted with a special mission from all the principal Sovereigns of the continent, and particularly of Louis XVIII."

The Empecinado has entered the town of Caceres, in Estremadura, by stratagem, which he pillaged and set on fire. The houses of one street, the convent of St. Francois, and numerous other edifices were consumed. The number who perished in the flames is 170. The number of killed is still more considerable. He caused the throats of the patients in the hospital to be cut.

Yesterday was published, No. IV. of THE SOMERSET HOUSE WEEKLY MISCELLANY OF FINE ARTS, ANTIQUITIES, and LITERARY CHIT CHAT; collected by EPHRAIM HARDCASTLE.—Contents—The OCTOBER FIRE SIDE, No. III.—My GREAT UNCLE ZACHARY'S SCRAP BOOK, Scrap 8—PROGRESS of the FINE ARTS in ENGLAND—BRITISH INSTITUTION, PALL MALL, SCHOOL for PAINTING, the STUDENTS and the PICTURES which they have COPIED—OLD ST. The Freedom of the Borough of Plymouth was voted to Mr. Secretary Canning on Wednesday; the box in which the Patent of Freedom was presented was cut out of a very fine block of marble which now forms part of the Breakwater. It is handsomely mounted in fluted silver, and very highly polished inside and out. On the lid was inlaid the Plymouth Arms, and round the inside on the under silver surface is finely engraved, in varied style—"The Freedom of the Borough of Plymouth to the Right Hon. Geo. Canning, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, &c. Capt. Nicholas Lockyer, R.N. C.B., Mayor, 1823."

It is much feared that the next post will bring disastrous accounts of the shipping on the North East Coast. The port letters of Friday night mention the gale as being tremendous, but not sufficient time to ascertain its effects. Some of the mail coaches had not arrived at the General Post Office at a late hour yesterday morning, the roads having been rendered impassable by floods.

THE ARMY.—It is understood that Lieut.-Gen. Sir John O. Vandeleur, K.C.B., will be appointed Colonel of the 14th reg. of Light Dragoons, vice Gen. J. W. Earl of Bridgewater, deceased. Lieut.-Gen. Sir George Airey, it is expected, will be appointed Colonel of the 39th reg. of foot, vice Gen. Nisbett Balfour deceased. The 12th reg. of infantry will arrive at Portsmouth, preparatory to its embarkation for Gibraltar. The 93d reg. of foot has marched from Fermoy on its route to Cork, in order to embark on board the Cato, Vibella, and Loyal Briton transports for the West Indies.

Thursday, in the Court of Common Pleas, a Mr. Jones obtained a verdict, with 300l. damages against Mr. Shaw, a cheap schoolmaster, at Bowes, in Yorkshire, for gross inattention to the health of one of his pupils, the plaintiff's son, aged 12 years, by which he was entirely deprived of sight; and on Friday Mr. Ockerly, a tobacconist, in Bishopsgate, obtained a like verdict in the same Court for similar inattention to three of his sons.

At the London Sessions, yesterday, Robert Selby Hele, Charles Knatchbull, and John Watson, were indicted for a riot and assault in the Fleet Prison. Evidence having been called fully substantiating the facts, the Recorder charged the Jury, who retired, and, after an absence of half an hour, returned a verdict of Guilty against Hele, but acquitting Knatchbull and Watson.—Mr. Brown, the Warden of the Fleet, said, that in preferring this charge he had been actuated by no vindictive feeling; a sense of duty to the public and an anxious desire to preserve peace and quiet within the prison, had been his only motives.—The Recorder observed that Mr. Brown had performed his duty in a manner reflecting great credit on himself, and for which as well the public as the unfortunate persons under his care were equally obliged.—Judgment on Hele deferred.

In the Court of Chancery, yesterday, his Lordship came into Court at twenty minutes past ten o'clock, and looked exceedingly well in health, after his residence in the country.—It being the first Seal, the Court proceeded with motions. Before the business commenced, his Lordship intimated that he would not be able to sit on Monday. The business was of no public interest.

In the Vice Chancellor's Court, yesterday, an application was made on the part of Mr. Chambers, the banker, for six weeks further time to put in his answer to the supplemental bill filed in the Opera House case; but the Vice Chancellor said it was impossible for the Court to hear, without injury to Mr. Chambers's character, that that gentleman, a respectable banker in London, could not have put in his answer to the bill in eight days, much less in three months. The rule to be attended to in such applications was, that the Court's conscience should be satisfied, by having it shewn on affidavit, that the defendant had diligently applied himself in preparing his answer, from the moment the bill was filed, until the period the application for further time was made, and that had not been done here. The motion would have to be dismissed, and dismissed with costs.—Mr. Hart then observed, that as his client was not anxious to put the process of contempt into execution, he would let it stand over for a fortnight, thus indulging Mr. Chambers with fourteen days longer to put in his answer.

A General Court Martial was held in Corfu a short time since, on Quarter-master Reynolds, of the 28th Reg. on a charge of having procured from different tradesmen, in 1816 and 1817, soldiers' necessaries and other articles, to the amount of 643l. 18s. 1d. for which he had not settled up to the date of the Court Martial. The Court found him Guilty, but recommended him to mercy in consideration of his long services (46 years) and having been defrauded of several sums of money by a person in whom he had confidence. His Majesty, in consequence of the recommendation, was graciously pleased to direct that he should be placed on half pay.—A Court Martial has also been held in Dublin, on Paymaster Wm. Phillips, of the 40th Reg. for embezzling various sums of money, amounting to 2093l. 7s. 3½d. He was found Guilty, and sentenced to make good the sum of 1997l. 17s. 3d., being his actual deficiency, which arose from untoward circumstances, and not from malversation in his official capacity. His Majesty was graciously pleased to direct that he should be placed on half pay.

PIDDING and Co. acquaint the Public that the Whole Ticket, No. 3,606, drawn last Friday, Oct. 31, a Prize of £20,000, was sold to a gentleman of the Stock Exchange; they have also the pleasure to announce that No. 4,645, another Prize of £2000, drawn on the same day, was sold in 1 Quarter, and 12 Sixteenth Shares at their Office, where the Holders may immediately receive the Amount. Thus the Public on that day have again gained at PIDDING'S more Capital Prize Money than at any other Office.—Friday, Nov. 14, will be the last Day of Drawing, when all the remaining Capitals of £20,000, £10,000, £1000, &c. must come up. Tickets and Shares warranted Undrawn, continue on Sale at the Lucky Corner, 1, Cornhill.

MURDER OF MR. WEARE.

On Friday the Coroner's jury assembled at the Artichoke, at Elstree, and proceeded to view the body in a room up stairs. It presented a spectacle truly horrible. There was a wound on the right cheek, occasioned by a pistol-ball, which had passed into the interior of the head. On the left temple was a wound, or rather hole, which went nearly through the head. It appeared to have been caused by some blunt instrument being driven with great force into the head. The aperture corresponded in size with the barrel of the pistol, in which brains were found. The throat of the unfortunate man was cut nearly from one ear to the other. Bruises were still visible in his body. After the jury had assembled, Probart, Thomas Thurtell, and Hunt were brought to the house, and placed in separate rooms. Probart was taken, in company with the Coroner and Jury, to the room where the corpse was lying, and was asked if he had ever seen it before? He looked at it, and said in a tone of solemnity, "I never saw that corpse before in my life. I declare to God I never did. You may rely upon in it I never saw that unhappy man before." He betrayed no extraordinary emotion. He was conveyed back to his room, and there in a few minutes, he uttered his tone, and made disclosures which in proper time will appear before the public. In the course of the morning, a search was made about the premises of Gill's-hill-cottage, and in a dung-hill was found a shirt steeped in blood, and cut down the middle from top to bottom. This, on being compared with some shirts of the deceased, was found to be of the same size, and the work in each corresponded. A sack was also found there, and some pieces of cord.

The witnesses who were examined before the Magistrates on Wednesday evening and Thursday, gave the same testimony. The jury were occupied until nine o'clock in the inquiry, and they then adjourned.

The brother of the deceased was present at some part of the investigation, and was deeply affected, so much so as to be obliged to quit the room.

The Old Times has published the following as the confession of Hunt:—"One night that I was at Rexworthy's billiard-rooms, John Thurtell told me he wished to see a Mr. Weare; and on entering the house we saw Mr. Weare sitting there. After some conversation between Rexworthy and John Thurtell, the latter called Mr. Weare out of the room, and they were absent for about 20 minutes. I was during that time in conversation with Mr. Green and Mr. Rexworthy about a billiard-table. During that conversation, Thurtell and Mr. Weare returned, and I and Thurtell went away. As we were on our way up the Hay-market to the Cock, Thurtell told me that Mr. Weare had behaved extremely ill to him; for he, with another man of the name of Lemon, had won 300l. of him (Thurtell) at blind-hookey. When he discovered that he had been robbed of his money by false cards, he challenged Mr. Weare with foul play, and Weare's reply was—'You dare not say a word about it, for you know you have defrauded your creditors of that money.' John Thurtell then observed to me, that sooner or later he would be revenged. At one time in particular he (John Thurtell) was in difficulty, and applied to Mr. Weare for the loan of 5l., and Mr. Weare's reply was—'Go and rob for it, as I do.' On Thursday night, which was the night before the murder took place, John Thurtell asked me to call on him on Friday morning, which I did. Said he—'Hunt, I wish you would take a walk with me.' We walked together as far as High Street, Marylebone. When we got into High Street, we stopped at a pawnbroker's shop. After looking at some jewellery which was in the window, John Thurtell observed, that those pistols (here the examinant looked at and pointed to the pair already mentioned, which were on the table), marked 'Hill,' I believe, were just the things he wanted to shoot cats with. They were marked 1l. 17s. 6d. and he gave 1l. 5s. for them. We then returned to Mr. Tatsall's, the Cock Horses, in Conduit Street, and dined. After dinner, John Thurtell asked me to get him a horse and chaise immediately, as he had to meet a gentleman who was going into the country with him, on a shooting excursion. He gave me 1l. 10s. to get the horse and chaise, for which I paid 1l. 5s. He desired me not to say where the horse and chaise was going. Mr. Probart, the proprietor of the horse and chaise, supposed it was going to Dartford; but it came down into Hertfordshire. As soon as the horse and chaise came to the door, which was at a quarter before eight o'clock, John Thurtell told Mr. Probart, of Gill's-hill, who was present, that in consequence of warrants being issued against him and his brother for a conspiracy to defraud the County Fire-office of 1,900l., he should go to his (Mr. Probart's) cottage, for safety. Mr. Probart said 'Well, if that's the case, you may as well wait, and we will go together.' John Thurtell said, 'No, I can't stop, I have a gentleman to meet at Cumberland-gate,' and he immediately drove off, taking with him a great coat which he borrowed of his brother Tom. I did not see him put these pistols into his pocket when he started, but to the best of my knowledge they were about his person. After three quarters of an hour had elapsed, Mr. Probart, of Gill's-hill-cottage, said, he did not want to travel by himself, and would be glad if I would take a seat with him in his gig, and spend a pleasant evening or two. I accepted Mr. Probart's offer. (Here the examinant described several houses at which he said they stopped and drank.) We arrived at Mr. Probart's cottage, when John Thurtell came up and said, 'I have settled that b—, who robbed me of 300l.' Probart said, 'Who d'ye mean? What d'ye mean?' 'Why,' said John Thurtell, 'I mean to say, that I have blown his brains out, and he lays behind a hedge in the lane.' 'Nonsense, nonsense,' said Probart; 'you have never been guilty of a thing of that kind, John Thurtell; if you have, and near my cottage, my character and my family are ruined for ever; but I can't believe that you have been guilty of so rash an act. Here, Hunt, (to examinant) take in the loin of pork, and desire the cook to dress it immediately.' I went into the kitchen, and waited until Probart came in, which, to the best of my knowledge, was after a lapse of five minutes. Before we went into the parlour, I said to John Thurtell, 'You are jesting about killing a man to-night?' 'Ay, but I have,' was his reply, 'and no one else but Weare, that robbed me of my 300l.' Mr. Probart said, 'John you have produced such an affect on me, that unless we retire and get some refreshment, my senses will totally leave me.' We then had a glass of brandy. [Here he described the supper which was served up, and said that John Thurtell complained of being sick and could not eat.] After supper, Thurtell called me and Mr. Probart out, and produced a very handsome gold watch, with a gold lace, saying, 'What do you think of it now? This is something towards the 300l. I was robbed of; and if you will go with me, I will shew you where he lays stiff enough.' Mr. Probart and myself both declined, observing, that we would not witness such a sight for the world. Thurtell said, 'You will not see him, for he is in a sack.' I and Mr. Probart declined going near the spot. About one o'clock in the morning, Mr. Probart called me out, saying, 'Do you think Thurtell has been guilty of this murder?' My reply was, 'It looks very suspicious, his having the gold watch; and in consequence of which, I would rather decline going to bed, and, if it was agreeable to him, I would sit up in the parlour with him through the night.' About three o'clock in the morning, John Thurtell said, 'Come and look at him; he is a b——y rogue, and I have had my revenge.' We both declined going near the spot, and walked about the garden till four o'clock. John Thurtell said, 'If you decline going to fetch him, I will go myself;' and in about ten minutes he left me and Mr. Probart, for the purpose, as we supposed, to fetch the dead man, William Weare. While he was gone, Mr. Probart said to me, 'Good God, Hunt! what shall I do if this account of Thurtell's is true?' (Examinant detailed some further conversation.) During the conversation, Thurtell returned, saying, 'He is so heavy I can't carry him; and if you won't assist me in moving him from behind the hedge, I shall put a bridle upon my horse, and throw him across his back;' and he accordingly took out his horse with a bridle on. Mr. Probart said, he hoped he would not bring a dead man near his premises. 'What b——y stuff you talk,' said John Thurtell; 'I shall bring him and chuck him into your fish pond.' While he was gone with the horse, I and Probart went into the parlour. Probart was much agitated, and as for myself I had not a nerve but what was in a state of convulsion. As near as I can recollect, about a quarter or half-past five o'clock in the morning, Thurtell came into the parlour, and said, 'I have thrown him into the fish-pond.' 'Then, by God,' said Probart, 'I insist upon your getting him immediately off my premises.' Mr. Probart and myself went to the fish pond, where we saw the feet of a man upwards in the water. Thurtell fetched a line, which he threw across the feet, so as to sink them, at the same time saying, 'Probart, don't you be alarmed, for I would not have you get into trouble, knowing that you are a man that has a family. Let him remain here till night, and then I will get him safe away.' On Monday night Thomas Thurtell asked me to go to Mr. Probart's, and inform him of the disappointment respecting the bail. John Thurtell said, 'If you are going down, I'll go with you, and take that man away from Probart's premises.' I said, 'If you are going upon that business, don't think I shall aid or assist you.' His reply was, 'I want no assistance; I can do it myself easy enough.' When we arrived at Probart's, Thurtell appeared greatly agitated. When we had been there some time, Probart and Thurtell went out together, and in ten minutes Probart returned by himself. In half an hour Thurtell came in, and asked us to put the horse in his gig, and take it round to the gate. We did so, and Thurtell brought, use a shoulder a corpse, a male corpse, one part in a sack, and the feet leg ging out. He asked Probart to lend him a hand to put the corpse the corpse in the chaise himself, and died the feet to the dash He then said there was plenty of room for me in the and the corpse. I declined having any thing to do with it would walk on, and he might overtake me. I walked in which Thurtell overtook, me and said he had disposed of the a small muddy marsh about four feet deep. From thence best of our way to town. And now, gentlemen, I believe as clear as if you had been present yourselves.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR—The proceedings at Union Hall Police Office, relative to Miss LYDIA KEMP and sisters, have occasioned a widely circulated report that we are the persons referred to. We beg to inform you, proceedings do not concern us; and, that we have no connexion whatever with the family, or the establishment of the Misses KEMP, Russet House, Clapham Rise. Our establishment is conducted at Lymington House, Clapham, near the Common; and our references are to the Rev. TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST INDIA STOCK.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,

THE Death of your late valuable and highly esteemed Director Mr. CHARLES GRANT, having occasioned a Vacancy in the Direction of your Affairs, I hasten to redeem the pledge which I made to you in my Address of the 24 of June last, to proceed to a Ballot on the first vacancy. I therefore now beg to solicit the honour of your support on the present occasion; and I hope that, from the very flattering Resolutions passed at a numerous Meeting of my Friends at the City of London Tavern, on the 27th of May last (hereunto annexed) and the encouragement I have since received, I may look forward with confidence to a favourable result; and I beg to assure you, that should I, through your Suffrages, be placed in that important situation, I will use every exertion to promote the interest of the East India Company.—I have the honour to be, very respectfully, Ladies and Gentlemen, your faithful and obedient Servant,

Nicholas lane, Oct. 31, 1823. JOHN MASTERMAN.

Mr. Masterman's Committee will sit daily at the City of London Tavern, where communications will be thankfully received.

AT a numerous and highly respectable MEETING of PROPRIETORS of EAST INDIA STOCK, held at the City of London Tavern, on Tuesday the 27th of May 1823, in pursuance of an advertisement, signed by the under-mentioned Proprietors:—

RICHARD CAMPBELL BAZETT, Esq. in the Chair.

The following Resolutions were passed unanimously:—

1. Proposed by Edward Fletcher, Esq. and seconded by Lewis Loyd, Esq That it is the opinion of this meeting that a practical knowledge of the commercial interests and usages of this country, with which those of the East India Company are intimately connected constitutes an important qualification in a Candidate aspiring to a seat in the Direction of the affairs of that Company.

2. Proposed by Stewart Marjoribanks, Esq. M P. and seconded by Robert Shedden, Esq. That when with commercial experience are found united general talent, sound judgment, and active habits of business, such acquirements stamp the possessor of them with a fair and honourable claim to the favour and support of all who are interested in the welfare of the East India Company.

3. Proposed by Henry Bonham, Esq. and seconded by Wm. Willoughby Prescott, Esq. That this meeting do unanimously concur in considering that in the well-known character of Mr. John Masterman, these qualifications are combined in an eminent degree, and that, with such pretensions, his interests are entitled to the countenance and support of the East India Proprietary.

4. Proposed by Sir James Shaw, Bart. and seconded by Joseph Butterworth Esq M.P. That the proprietors here assembled pledge to Mr. John Masterman their strenuous assistance to secure a seat in the East India Direction on the first vacancy which may hereafter occur; and that they will, in the meantime, use their influence and exertion to secure his success.

R. C. BAZETT, Chairman.

Mr. Bazett having left the Chair, it was proposed by Thomas Weedding, Esq. well-known character of Mr. John Masterman, these qualifications are combined and seconded by Michael Wm. Troy, Esq. and received unanimously. That the cordial thanks of this meeting be given to R. C. Bazett, Esq. for his very able, courteous, and impartial conduct in the Chair.

THE CASE of a DISTRESSED WIDOW.—MRS. HARE, the subject of the following distressing statement, is, with feelings of pain and anxiety for herself and three infant children, prevailed upon to submit her case to the consideration of a benevolent public, to whom the widow and faithful partner of seldom known to plead in vain. It may not be difficult to recal to the memory of many persons, the horrible murder in the house of Monthenry, near Rathkeale, in the county of Limerick, when the residence of Major Hare, late of the 97th regiment (now of Limerick, then the residence of Major Hare, late of the 97th regiment (now retired) was attacked by a numerous banditti, who were in search of fire arms, and the Major, while in the act of defending himself and family, was shot dead upon the spot. By this dreadful circumstance his widow and three helpless children have been deprived of their only support. Mrs. Hare is the daughter of the late Rev. Dr. Bowes, Rector of St. John's, New Brunswick With a slender fortune she married Major Hare, then a Captain in the 98th Regiment, who, at the conclusion of the war, felt obliged from ill health, to sell his commission for the purpose of living in Ireland, where he purchased a small property, which (which precludes the widow from being placed on the pension list,) besides stock for a farm, which they rented and enjoyed for the space of five years, in uninterrupted happiness; but now, what a reverse! Melancholy to relate, his inconsolable widow, with three little ones, is left totally destitute, without any fault or want of duty on her part—a prey to feelings of acute misery, arising from accumulated distress—the sudden and dreadful loss of an affectionate husband, accompanied with the total devastation of the property. Mrs. Hare has no relatives who could in any way mitigate the calamities with which she is surrounded; she therefore is induced to submit her case to the public, with the hope of raising a sum of money to provide for her future maintenance for herself and children, by investing it in Government Security, in the names and at the discretion of certain trustees; this hope, under Divine Providence has outweighed every consideration of diffidence and delicacy, and she now waits with anxious feelings for the result.—☞ The Magistrates for the county of Limerick have attested to the truth of the murder; and any further particulars respecting the statement can be obtained on application to Lieut. Hare, Charleton, No 8, Lansdown place, East Wing, and to Captain Hamnett, Esq. No. 18, Lansdown crescent, Bath, who have a perfect knowledge of the great respectability of the decent, Bath, who have a perfect knowledge of the great respectability of the deceased widow, and who will take care that the money contributed shall be properly disposed of. His Majesty, with his usual benevolence and liberality, has condescended to put his laudable subscription together with his Royal Highness the Duke of Gloucester, and many others of the first respectability, (as may be seen attested to on the murder; and any further particulars can be obtained by the Bath and Exeter papers,) whose generous aid is most gratefully felt and acknowledged.—Subscriptions received at Sir John Lubbock, Forster, and Lubbock's, Bankers, Mansion-House-lane, London; by Sir Wm Temple Pole, Bart. Shute House, near Axminster, Devon; and at all the Banks and Public Libraries in Bath, Cheltenham, Exeter, and the chief towns and watering places of the South and West of England.

G. PIUS, Grower of CHAMPAGNE, at Ay, near Epernay, France, most respectfully informs the Nobility, the Trade, his Friends, and the Public, that he has entered into a contract with Mr. CHARLES WRIGHT, Wine Merchant, of the OPERA COLONNADE, HAYMARKET, by which Mr. WRIGHT will in future have the entire and exclusive sale of his CHAMPAGNE WINES. G. PIUS takes this opportunity of returning his grateful thanks for the liberal and distinguished support he has met with since the year 1811, and he considers himself that the same description of WINES, and if possible better, as it is his intention to superintend his vineyards personally will be always on sale at Mr. CHARLES WRIGHT'S, Opera Colonnade, and at no other place in England or elsewhere, at the unexampled low price of 6l. 6s. per dozen.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—The rude and unskilful attempts constantly made to supply these substitutes for the masticatory organs, and the disgust which delicacy suffers from the unpleasantry attending them when permanently fixed, have deterred many from adopting the aid and consolation they are capable of affording, independent of the assistance they may contribute to digestion and consequent health. The ingenious application of mechanical science will enable us to obviate all these inconveniences, and allow the wearer at all times to keep the mouth in a state of perfect cleanliness, and to perform the functions of mastication, articulation, &c. with decided ease and comfort.—Mr. NICHOLLES begs to state, that he is in constant attendance from ten to four, and will be happy to give ocular demonstration of the comforts derived from his efforts, under every circumstance of simple and complicated derangement 115, Fleet Street.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

BAYONNE, OCT. 28.—The private letters from Andalusia affirm that the party of Ballesteros daily increases, and that his army, consisting of 9000 men, spreads serious alarms, and that it has destroyed all the triumphal arches that were erected on the road by which the King was to pass. His intention is to make the Sierra Morena the centre of his operations, whence it will not be very easily to dislodge him, if, as is expected, the French army retires to take up a position on the Ebro. Cadiz is not sufficiently provisioned to supply the wants of the garrison, great quantities of flour continue to be shipped here, and sent to that place. The King continues to make numerous nominations; the Captains General are—for Catalonia, Baron D'Eroles; Valencia, Don Philip St. Marcq; Old Castile, Charles O'Donnell; Estremadura, Don Gregorio Laguna. The Ambassadors to Foreign Courts are—Paris—The Duke of San Carlos; Petersburgh—The Count d'Alcudia; Vienna—Count de Casa Flores; Berlin—Marquis de Torrecilla; Naples—Don Pascal Vallejo; and Dresden—Don Joachim de Costa.

MATARO, Oct. 29.—I hasten to inform you that the Articles of the Capitulation of Barcelona were signed yesterday, and that the King's troops are to take possession of this important place on Friday, the 31st inst. in the morning.

MADRID, Oct. 30.—Don Carlos Aunory took possession, on the 15th, of the military and political government of Cadiz, which his Majesty had confided to him, on which he immediately addressed a proclamation to the inhabitants of that great town, in which he reminds them of all the evils which took place in the infancy of the Revolution. He says, "What is that liberty which echoes in all our public places?—it is a liberty to oppress, to pillage, and to murder one's neighbours! True liberty will appear, under the laws and conformable with the paternal intentions of the King, who sends me amongst you, not to exercise vengeance, but to protect and console the good citizens."

The King has dismissed above 200 persons belonging to the Palace, because they have some Constitutional ideas which his Majesty will not tolerate. On the 14th was a Court day at Seville. Sir W. A'Court was present, as Ambassador from England.

The corps of the French Army which are in Andalusia are going to leave that Province, in the following order:—First column to consist of 1000 infantry and 300 cavalry. The head-quarters of this division will arrive in Madrid on the 31st inst. one day after the Prince. The second column, of 1100 infantry and 900 cavalry, will arrive in Madrid on the 1st of Nov. The third column, of 1500 infantry and 600 cavalry, on the 2d Nov. The fourth column, of 1200 infantry and 550 cavalry, on the 3d Nov. The division of General Vallin, consisting of 2000 infantry and 1600 cavalry, will leave Seville one day after his Majesty, and arrive here by the route of Estremadura. The brigade of M. the Prince de Carignan, composed of 700 infantry and 750 cavalry, will follow his Majesty to Madrid. All the other corps have received orders to march for France, and the Dauphin regiment of Cuirassiers left yesterday: those of Berri, Orleans, and Conde, will depart on the 25th, 26th, and 28th inst. The artillery will follow the same movements.

United States papers to the 9th ult. bring intelligence from Lima, which states that Bolivar was concentrating his troops, with a view of moving in advance, and it was not supposed that the Royalists would await his attack. An expedition had been fitted out at Callao, against Upper Peru, consisting of about 4000 troops, under General Santa Cruz, who had embarked on board transports for that destination. They were also to be joined on their way by those of Chili troops. The Colombian forces were about to leave Maracaybo for Porto Cabello, for the purpose of attacking that place. Commodore Beluche was also proceeding with the squadron to the same point. Everything was quiet at Maracaybo, and the authorities were engaged in re-establishing the former regulations of the place.

HEAD-QUARTERS AT CAMP-HOUSE, DEMERARA, SEPT. 2, 1823.—"His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has deemed it necessary to direct, that no punishment shall be inflicted by any owner, manager, or attorney of the property on the east coast of this Colony, on any slaves who shall have delivered themselves up, under his Excellency's Proclamation of the 20th ult., for any irregularities committed by them during the late revolt.—(By command) "J. R. BRANDT.

"Lieut.-Col. and Adjutant Gen. M.F.

"N.B. This order to be made known to the gangs between George-Town and Mahaica, and a copy thereof taken by the proprietors, attornies, or managers of the different estates."

SEPT. 8.—A report prevailed, which we are happy to say proved untrue, that the negroes had risen. A strong detachment marched out, the picquets were doubled for the night in town. We sleep with a brace of pistols loaded, two dirks and a sword in our room. Should any thing happen to us in town, and we are obliged to fly for our lives (which God forbid) we shall try to get on board the Sea-flat. One day there was an alarm that the negroes were coming into town; no less than 100 ladies went on board; some of the most fearful were seen running through the town with a pillow-case in each hand, containing wearing apparel, &c.

The following is an extract from the Demerara Gazette of September 8:—On Monday, the 25th, a General Court Martial assembled at the Colony House and has met daily (except Sundays) since. A particular detail of their proceedings we cannot at present give. The evidence before the Court will afford the best and most correct narrative of the causes which occasioned the revolt. A report of the trial of the respective prisoners is preparing, and will be laid before the public as soon as the Court shall close. Fourteen of the ringleaders have already been executed on the Parade Ground in Cummingsburg, independent of those tried and shot on the different estates of the coast, and upwards of 200 remain yet for trial. The whole of the ringleaders are now taken, except two, (Quamina and Richard) belonging to Plantation Success. Jack, the Chief of the Rebels, who had hitherto eluded pursuit, was arrested yesterday. Tranquility is now completely restored, and we have the satisfaction to know, that our present military establishment is adequate to put down any insurrectionary movement, however formidable, that might be meditated by the enemies of the colony.

Letters from the same island state that 23 of the black insurgents had been executed, and the trials of others implicated in the late diabolical attempt were proceeding.—Smith, the missionary, was still in custody, and there was every appearance of proof being produced that he was the principal promoter of the insurrection. He preached to a large assembly of blacks on the evening previous to the intended massacre of the white, and took his text from the four last verses of the 149th Psalm, viz.:—

"Let the praises of God be in their mouth, and a two-edged sword in their hands;

"To be avenged of the heathen, and to rebuke the people.

"To bind their kings in chains, and their nobles with links of iron.

"That they may be avenged of them, as it is written; and honour have all [illegible]."

MURDER OF MR. WEARE.

The following statements have been made respecting the persons concerned in the murder of the above person:—

The statement of Thomas Thurtell is to the following effect:—On the Friday of the murder, he met his brother and Hunt at the Coach and Horses; in the evening Hunt came up to the door in a gig, drawn by a grey horse, into which John Thurtell, his brother, got, and drove away; Hunt then asked him what he wanted with them? John Thurtell his brother, then asked him what he wanted with them? Hunt made use of some expression, and asked what was that to him? and then turning to Probert, said, "Bill, will you be in it?" Before they went away Probert smiled. Hunt had previously brought a sack and some cord, which he put into John Thurtell's gig, and then said, "Jack, it's all right, drive away like ——." Hunt said before they left the house in the evening, addressing himself to John Thurtell, "Jack, our friends had better be civil, or they will get served out;" following this threat up with the most horrible oaths. Both J. Thurtell and Hunt were constantly talking of ripping people up, and shooting them; but he (T. Thurtell) thought it only their idle bravado. On Saturday morning he went to the Coach and Horses, and remained there all day; John came about three o'clock, and was in excellent spirits; he (T. Thurtell) remarked his hands were much scratched, and asked him how it happened? John said, he, Probert, and Hunt had been netting partridges, and that his knuckles were scratched by the brambles; he observed a gold watch in John's hand, and asked him where he got it? John told him to ask no questions, as it was no business of his: Hunt came in shortly after with a bundle, containing a blue coat, a buff waistcoat, and a pair of leather breeches, which he had taken out of pawn for John Thurtell. On putting down the bundle, he pulled out of his pocket three sovereigns, some silver, and a 5l. note, and said to Mr. Noyes, who was present, "Now, you ——, do any of you want change for a 5l. note, for if you do, I'm your man; we are Turpin-like lads, and have done the trick;" and then he laughed heartily, and winked to John. After Noyes went out, he (Thomas) feeling surprised at such declarations, said to his brother, "what have you been doing?" when Hunt exclaimed, "Why, committing murder, to be sure." These dreadful words being of ordinary use in Hunt's mouth, he did not believe him, and took no further notice; Hunt then went on to say, "we have been shooting game, and Probert has been holding the bag;" he (Thomas) did not, for a moment believe they had been committing murder. In the evening he (Thos.) went again to the Coach and Horses, and saw Hunt and his brother at supper; they were eating oysters; Hunt repeated that they had been Turpin-like lads, and addressing John, said, "We must have a bottle of wine—nothing else will do now," and then laughed. He said, in continuation, "that the old woman (meaning his wife) was in a precious rage with him for stopping out all night, but when he pulled out the money she was satisfied. He gave her a sovereign, and told her to get a pair of fowls, and a piece of pickled pork." The statement then went on to detail the circumstance of T. Thurtell walking down to Probert's on Sunday morning; he was overtaken on the road by his brother and Hunt, who took him up; on their reaching Edgeware they met Noyes, and John alighted and joined him. He went on with Hunt to Probert's, and he observed a new spade in the gig; Hunt threw the spade over the hedge, saying, "that Probert did not wish his wife to know he was extravagant." They all dined together that day, Probert, Mrs. Probert, her sister Miss Noyes, Mr. Noyes, John Thurtell, and Hunt. Nothing particular occurred. He remembered somebody calling on Probert and accompanying him on business to Mr. Nicholl's. When Probert returned he appeared extremely agitated. He (T. Thurtell) went to bed with his children early, and neither heard nor saw more.

The statement of Tetsall, the landlord of the Coach and Horses public-house, Conduit-street, detailed the meetings of the parties at his house.

Hunt and Probert arrived at Hertford gaol between four and five o'clock on Sunday morning, in two post-chaises, and well guarded. John Thurtell has been confined there since Thursday last. The visiting Magistrates ordered the three prisoners to be kept separate: that they be double-ironed—and that no person whatever be permitted to see either of them, excepting the Chaplain to the gaol. On the Magistrates' order being alluded to, Hunt betrayed considerable alarm, and entreated that he might not be kept in solitary confinement.—"Why should you fear being alone?" was asked; the reply was evasive, Hunt only observing, that he should greatly prefer the company of three or four persons. It is nevertheless ordered, that two men should always be with each, and Hunt's desire is, therefore, at present complied with; he is in one of the rooms usually devoted to female prisoners, of whom there are none in the gaol at this time. With respect to Probert—the opinion is, that he is not so deeply implicated as Hunt.

On Sunday the three prisoners attended divine service; they were in three distinct pews; the text was appropriate, "Do justice, love mercy, and walk humbly with thy God." A pin might have been heard drop during the sermon. Beyond mute attention, nothing peculiar was observable in the conduct of the prisoners.

John Thurtell still denies all knowledge of the murder, but when the coroner was detailing to a third person in his presence, the mangled state in which the body of Weare was found Thurtell betrayed evident constraint of manner, and was obviously affected, although he seemed desirous of assuming the appearance of indifference; his mouth was distended, his eyes were fixed and strained, and there appeared a manifest conflict between the resolution to conceal and a suppressed propensity to communicate.

Early in life John Thurtell went to sea. On returning to this country he obtained a lieutenant's commission in the German legion, then serving in Portugal, and, as we believe, still enjoys the half-pay of that rank. On his return from Portugal he commenced business at Norwich, in the trade of that city. There he became a bankrupt, and never obtained his certificate. He then came up to London, and took the Black Boy public-house, in Long-acre. His own name did not appear as the ostensible landlord, but he had sole management of the concern—which was also ultimately unsuccessful. A house was then taken in Watling-street, where the Norwich trade was carried on by J. Thurtell, but in the name of his brother. The destruction of those premises and several other houses by fire will be in general recollection. From the time when the house in Watling-street was burnt John has continued to reside at the house of his brother, the Cock, in the Haymarket, which is now in the possession of the assignees, under the commission of bankrupt against Thos. Thurtell.

On Monday Hunt was in better spirits than he has hitherto been, and expressed his "conviction that his evidence would be taken, and he should be acquitted."

Thurtell indulges greatly in smoking; and in the absence of visitors his pipe is his constant companion. He indicates by his conversation an aversion from dwelling upon the horrid and desperate transactions with which he is charged. If it be mentioned he maintains a sullen silence, but if any other subject be started he breaks out into a hurried pursuit of the question, as most anxious of obtaining a momentary relief from the thoughts of the murder. He continues to protest his innocence, and endeavours to shift the onus on Hunt.

In addition to the above statements, the following particulars have transpired during the week.—On Monday evening Mrs. Probert and Miss Noyes were apprehended and taken to Bow-street, and underwent a long examination, they were afterwards taken to Watford, in custody of Bishop, an officer belonging to Bow-street. They did not reach the Essex Arms till twelve o'clock at night, and it was then announced that the Magistrates were forthwith to enter upon the examination. After some time, however, it was notified that the proceedings were to be deferred till the next day. Miss Noyes seemed to be much more sensibly affected than Mrs. Probert; she cried almost incessantly, and was greatly depressed. After having had tea in the same apartment with the officers, they retired to rest in separate chambers, in which they were locked up for the night. Miss Noyes entreated that she might be allowed to have a light during the night; but this was refused, as well as a subsequent request that the chamber-maid might be allowed to sleep with her; she, in consequence, spent the night in darkness, and we understand, in the greatest agony, not venturing to go to bed at all. In the morning they breakfasted again with the officers, and soon after ten were conducted on foot to Mr. Clutterbuck's house. It is deemed proper that the entire proceedings should not be published in the first instance, and we therefore restrict ourselves to stating, that the female servant deposed to having entered the parlour in the cottage when Hunt was lying on the sofa, which she observed to be bloody.

The father of Mrs. Probert and Mr. and Miss Noyes carried on an extensive business as a brewer at Flexfield, in Wiltshire; retiring from business, he resided for some years, highly respected, at Hampstead; he has been dead some time. Late on the night of Monday a stranger left a paper at the house of Benjamin Rocke, Esq., the Coroner for the county; it contained information that early on the ensuing morning a person would leave London for Probert's cottage, in search of property. It further stated, that the note was sent by the person who communicated to the Coroner the circumstance of Woods being decoyed to the house in Manchester-buildings. In consequence of the receipt of this note, Mr. Rocke immediately left Hertford, well armed, in his gig, for Gill's-hill cottage. It has been drained entirely off, and a general, but unsuccessful search made for the clothes and property of the deceased. Another search within one of the plantations adjoining the cottage, a place was discovered, which had evidently been dug for the purpose of burying Weare. It is in length six feet, in breadth two feet and a half, and depth about two feet. Further progress in the depth appears to have been impeded by a very large stone, which the spade appears to be newly one taken down by Hunt in the gig) was not sufficient to remove. Two labouring men were found busily employed in digging up the mould near the spot where Weare was murdered, and desisted their employer.

We understand the great coat worn by John Thurtell on the night of the murder has been found, with the lining of the sleeves cut out, as if for the purpose of removing the marks of blood; there are no marks, however, on other parts of the coat.

Hunt maintains his usual confident demeanour, which was calculated upon, whilst he expects to escape from punishment by long admitted evidence for the Crown. Upon the subject of Weare's statement, he at first denied all knowledge of such a person; but on a subsequent consideration of the necessity of maintaining a system in which truth is so essentially necessary, and to which deposition falsehood would be so fatally destructive, he related the following account:—The house in Manchester-buildings was not entirely unoccupied, except by Thurtell, who concerting Woods to have something to Miss Noyes tending to prejudice him in her opinion, requested Hunt to get him into the house. The latter accordingly became the ready pander of his vengeful and unhuman scheme. Imposed upon Woods' credulity by a false tale, and prevailed on company him back to the house in Manchester-buildings. The door was opened by Thurtell, no other person being in the house, kept behind the door. Woods, on perceiving the scheme and determined entirely destitute of furniture, suspected foul play, and immediately informed Thurtell of the circumstance, and he pursued but could not overtake the intended victim. Hunt adds, that no intention to murder existed, but that Thurtell meant to call Weare to an account for the language he had used. Thurtell, when questioned on the same subject, admits a knowledge of Woods, but denies every other part of Hunt's statement. He says he took the house on a speculation which did not answer, because he was unable to furnish it.

Thomas Thurtell, at the commencement of the examination, declared most solemnly, that his brother John and Probert once left the house for the express purpose of murdering Woods, who was in the adjoining ground. The motive with John Thurtell was doubtless jealousy of Woods, as the more favoured suitor of Miss Noyes, but for what, perhaps, of an incentive, equally powerful, the heart of Probert filled him, and he declared, with a dreadful oath, that he could not kill his associate. Thurtell, fearing to be singly opposed to Woods, although in point of size there is no comparison between the two men, the ordinary intention was not carried into effect. Both Probert and Thurtell express much anxiety to see the Newspapers, but this as yet is present denied them. The latter and Hunt have each sometimes more than five pounds in their possession; Probert is without a shilling; buy himself a dinner; and Thurtell learning this, on inquiry, expressed his willingness to pay his expences as long as he had money remaining, that he would not advance a farthing for Hunt if he were starving. Hunt writes to his mother for money, and, in his letter, calls God to bear witness to his innocence. He complains much of his quondam friends, who, on being applied to for assistance since he has been in Hertford gaol, have expressed their anger at his taking so great a liberty.

It is said that Thurtell offered Mr. Weare's watch to a certain pawnbroker, which the latter refused. Since the arrest of Thurtell, and the appearance of Hunt's confession, he has felt himself most fortunate in not purchasing the watch, and has been congratulated by his friends in escaping those censures and remarks that certainly would have followed, had he possessed it.

On Wednesday se'nnight, when J. Thurtell was apprehended, he had even found upon him three small bullets, or what are called buck-shot, which suited the calibre of the pistol found in his pocket. He first said that they belonged to or were intended for the pistol, and said they were cast for an air-gun, which he had had for some time. The officer went to the Cock, where, in a room occupied occasionally by John Thurtell, he found the air-gun and its apparatus. The gun itself is in the shape of a common walking-stick. It is composed of metal, cased with tin, and coloured so as to look like wood. There were nobs upon it to resemble the knots which are seen upon certain descriptions of sticks. The top part of the stick takes off, and the pump, which is separate from the rest, but so small as to go into the pocket, is fixed on in a moment, and the gun fitted with air. The calibre is very small, it being calculated only for a species of bullet very little larger than swan-shot. The gun has been tried by the officer, and found to be most perfect and effective in its operation. It will send a bullet through an inch deal-board at a moderate distance. It has been shewn to a gun-maker, and pronounced to be one of the completest things of the kind ever manufactured. In the room where it was found was a cupboard, the door of which was full of pewter pots, and no doubt had been made a sort of target by John Thurtell. Bishop went to Mrs. Walker's, in Windmill-street, where, in a deal trunk belonging to John Thurtell, he found a bayonet, highly sharpened, which he brought away.

On Wednesday night Mr. Tetsall, the landlord of the Coach and Horses, Conduit-street, was apprehended by Bishop on a warrant, which he stood charged as "an accessory in a certain felony and murder." He was taken to Bow-street. Bail was offered for him to any amount, but refused; the Magistrate observing, that the warrant was issued by the Magistrates of Hertfordshire, and merely backed by him, and he could not, therefore, do otherwise than send him down. It was in a private room occupied by J. Thurtell in Tetsall's house, that the pistols, cord, sack, &c. used by the murderers were conveyed by Hunt, immediately after they were purchased in the afternoon previous to the murder. Hunt also shaved off his Whiskers at Tetsall's house, a circumstance which must have excited great suspicion in the mind of any one; yet he made no disclosure of the fact, not even to the officer at the time Hunt was apprehended at his house. These and other circumstances have occasioned his apprehension.

Mrs. Probert and Miss Noyes were committed to St. Alban's Gaol. During the time that they were in custody and under examination, they were both much affected, and were with difficulty prevailed upon to take any refreshment.

On Wednesday night, Mr. Noyes, who carried on the business of a wine-merchant, in the Strand, near Charing cross, the brother of Probert's wife, was apprehended and conveyed down to Watford in a post chaise. Mr. Noyes went down to Probert's cottage in company with two of the alleged murderers, on the Sunday after the murder, and remained with them the whole of that day, at which time the body of the murdered man was in Probert's fish-pond. It was not suspected at all that Mr. Noyes was concerned in the murder, but the object is to ascertain whether he knew of the fact any time before Probert or the rest of the party were apprehended, and concealed it.

Tetsall has been admitted an evidence against the accused parties, and held in bail to appear at the next Hertford Assizes, to give evidence on their trial. The watch of Mr. Weare, which is said to be valuable, and the seals have not yet been traced, and the accused parties all deny having any knowledge where they are. Hunt says John Thurtell had them, and John Thurtell says Hunt had them to dispose of, and that Probert had the watch chain; this latter part of the statement is confirmed by Mrs. Probert sending for the Magistrates on Thursday night and producing the chain from her person, about which she had concealed it ever since her being taken into custody, as she wore it under her neck kerchief. The chain is identified to be Weare's property. It is fine gold, with small links, and when shewn is a lady's neck-chain, and when double forms a handsome watch chain.—It has been proved that Noyes was informed of the murder having been committed, on the Sunday when he accompanied the murderers down to Probert's to dine. No part of the plunder has been traced to him as yet, or he would be committed as an accessory after the fact. On his arrival at St. Alban's gaol, on Thursday night, he was in the most indescribable agony, persisting in his innocence of any concern in the murder, and exclaiming that the accusation against him would be his utter ruin.

It is a singular fact, that Mr. Graham, who was robbed by Lovell and his associates of upwards of 4000l. is the nephew of Mr. Clutterbuck, the Magistrate, who is now so actively engaged in unravelling this mysterious murder.

IRELAND.

On Monday, whilst Baron Smith was charging the Jury at the Session House, in Dublin, a sentinel on duty in the Court stabbed Gilmore, the sub-sheriff of Newgate; the bayonet entered about a quarter of an inch into his side. The reason he gave for stabbing him was, because Gilmore would pass through the entry which he had to guard. A bill was preferred against the soldier before the Grand Jury.

The neighbourhood of College-green was once more the scene of disturbance this morning (Tuesday, the 4th inst.) The peaceful inhabitants were alarmed at one o'clock by the shouts of a crowd of persons who collected round the statue. They continued to parade round College Green and the adjacent streets in groups, offering no resistance to the police in the neighbourhood, until this journal went to press, at four o'clock, up to which hour there had been no attempt at a riot. At that time there was a strong party of police in attendance:—Dublin Evening Post.

Freeman's Journal.

On Sunday last, about half-past three o'clock, the Lord Mayor, accompanied by Mr. Sheriff Perrin, went to the house of Mrs. Delamour, Golden-lane, in whose drawing-room he surprised a number of men, who assembled under the character of a Trade Association. His Lordship took all those persons, with chest, books, &c. to the Mansion-house, where they underwent a long examination, in the course of which it appeared that those persons were bound together by an oath of secrecy, which they refused to take. "I do solemnly swear that I will keep secret all that is about to be given in this room." Three of them taken have given evidence to that effect, one of whom, according to his own acknowledgment, declared that as soon as he was sworn by the chairman, named Hart, the oath was thrown into the fire, agreeable to the regulations of the association.—Dublin Morning Post.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH.

Tuesday.—This being the first day of Michaelmas Term Mr. Carpenter brought up a report of the number of convicts on board the Cupper lately sent by the officer of the Court.

Thomas Farnell, the brother of John, who is in custody, charged with the murder of Mr. Weare, came up this morning in custody of the Sheriff of Middlesex, by whom he is charged with a conspiracy—to render it some civil actions.—He is a respectable looking man, apparently about 30 or 37 years of age. He appeared considerably depressed.

The King v. John Smith.—The defendant who had been convicted of smuggling brandy in Kent, appeared in Court upon a writ of Habeas Corpus. Mr. Platt moved to quash the conviction and discharge the defendant. The application was made on the ground that the conviction was informal. The 45th of Geo. III. enacts that every person found carrying brandy shall be subject to the forfeiture of the same, and all such penalties as the Act shall provide for every such offence. The conviction stated that John Smith had been convicted before the Magistrates of having on the 14th of October carried seven gallons of foreign brandy in half ankers, which were subject and liable to forfeiture. The Court held that the conviction was defective, consequently it was quashed, and the defendant discharged.

Barry.—Mr. C. Phillips opposed the Rule for a Criminal Information against Barry O'Meara, for a libel on Sir Hudson Lowe contained in Thirteen Voices from St. Helena; but without going into the merits of the case, in consequence of the intimation from the Court as to the delay in applying for a Criminal Information, he urged that Barry O'Meara ought to have his costs, on part of them, as no negligence had been shown to warrant the Solicitor-General's tardy application.—The Solicitor-General supported the Rule, contending, that there was no limitation of time for criminal informations, except in the cases of Magistracies.—Mr. Justice Bayley observed, that the Court expected that, when a party applied for defence by criminal information, he would show that he had been promptly alive to his own character; but here five editions had appeared before a complaint was preferred.—Chief Justice Abbott said, the Court must discharge the Rule, on account of the lateness of the application; but as there was no precedent for discharging such rules with costs, the Court could say nothing about them.—Rule discharged, but without any costs being allowed to Mr. Barry O'Meara.

MIDDLESEX SESSIONS.

Tuesday.—Mr. Alley submitted a schedule from the journeymen silk weavers of Spitalfields, for regulating and reducing their prices, in order to meet the views of the master manufacturers, as recommended by the House of Lords in the last Session of Parliament. The Court and avenues thereto were filled to excess with the journeymen weavers; and after the Court had received the schedule, as is customary, when no opposition is made by the masters, Mr. Alley, in a few words, acquainted the weavers that they might now retire to their homes and business, as the Court had received the schedule. A journeyman weaver, named Baker, came forward, and objected to the schedule in toto, stating as a reason that many of the operative weavers did not know what the reductions in the schedule were—and that he, for one, would not permit it to be submitted to the Magistrates until he had a proxy of his fellow workmen knew the reductions them by—The Chairman, after consulting with the Bench, suggested the propriety of having the reduced prices printed immediately, for general circulation throughout the whole trade; and that in the meantime the journeymen should meet lawfully, and impress upon the minds of their fellow-workmen the absolute necessity of meeting with candour the master-manufacturers. He returned the schedule, with an understanding that it should be printed without any delay, and appointed Thursday, the 27th inst. for receiving the same; by which time he trusted, all the journeymen silk weavers would be of one mind as to the prices which the generality of them proposed to reduce.

Parish of Hammersmith v. the Rev. E. Berry Godbold.—Mr. Phillips moved for the order of filiation pronounced by the magistrates in this case be made a rule of Court. He made this application publicly, because after the order had been pronounced, the reverend defendant had thought proper to insert a letter in the newspapers requesting the parish not to acquiesce in that order, and to suspend their judgment until they should learn the result of an appeal which he had lodged against it, to the sessions. Since then, however, he has paid every shilling, and in defence of the Magistrates whose conduct he had published, he (Mr. Phillips) made this application. The Court granted the order of the Magistrates to be entered on the files of the Court.

On Wednesday morning a fire broke out in the workshop of St. Sepulchre's in the East-house, and in less than an hour the premises were completely destroyed. When the roof of the building fell it buried in the ruins a number of the unfortunate sick. Five have been since found—one man and four women, in a state too shocking to describe; three of the latter for a length of time had been in a state of unsound mind. On the same evening about half past nine o'clock a fire broke out at a carpenter's shop in Bennet-street, Stamford-street, Blackfriars'-road, which did considerable damage, but did not extend beyond the premises.

Yesterday last it was discovered that the convicts under sentence of transportation Newgate had it in contemplation to effect an escape, by an entrance to the yard of the Gaol from the Press-yard. In consequence of the Governor, aided by his assistants, repaired to the yard, and there discovered that the rugs and blankets of the convicts had been actually cut into slips, in order to form a ladder for their escape. They were all immediately locked up for the night. On Monday morning the Sheriffs attended the Gaol; an examination took place, the result of which was, that three of the principals were double ironed and confined in their cells.

Wednesday night, Wm. Booth, a constable, found a gentleman shot in a hedge on the Fulham road. He proved to be an officer on half-pay of the neighbourhood. He was in the practice of taking out a fowling-piece, with which he had committed the act. Three slugs had passed through his cheek. A surgeon, who sewed up and dressed the wound, expressed hopes of his recovery.

Families fitting up their Town or Country Residences.—MILES and EDWARDS, splendid Stock of London Chintz Furnitures, Spanish Damasks, Drawing Chintzes, Moreens, &c. &c. is, without exception, the largest, the most elegant and cheapest in the kingdom. This immense assortment having been purchased at Sale since the extraordinary diminution in value, the proprietors are enabled and determined to sell full one third below the regular prices of old goods. M. and E. are aware, that by this innovation upon the system which they have incurred the animosity of other houses; but the unprecedented encouragement experienced from the principal Nobility and Gentry, is ample compensation and a sufficient inducement for them to adhere to their plan. In fitting up drawing room and dining-room curtains, four-post and French beds, &c. families may, in many instances, effect a saving of nearly a third by inspecting this matchless stock. Miles and Edwards's only establishment is at No. 134, Oxford-street, (between Holles-street and Old Cavendish-street.

MISCELLANEOUS.

On Tuesday the Duke of York held a levee as Commander-in-Chief, at his Office in the Horse Guards, which was attended by between 30 and 40 Military Officers.

Wednesday morning, a Spanish courier arrived at the Foreign Office, Downing-street, express from Madrid, with despatches from the new Government of Spain.

The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty have, by a recent regulation, ordered, that all Clerks who may in future be entered in any of the public offices under their controul, shall undergo a twelvemonth's probation prior to their being entered on the establishment.

Tuesday being the anniversary of the landing of King William, it was observed in the usual manner. The Royal Standard was hoisted at the Tower. The Church steeples and many ships in the River displayed colours.

Wednesday being the anniversary of the Popish plot, it was observed as a close holiday at the Bank and all the public offices.

A paragraph has appeared in some papers, intimating that an unusual delay had taken place in the communication of the acquiescence of his Majesty in the recent election of Mayor, by the citizens of London. This report is totally false. The delay was attributable to the absence of the Chancellor from town, added to which it was no way unusual: it was the 4th of November last year, in fact, when the Lord Chancellor expressed his approbation of the election of Alderman Heygate to be Lord Mayor—the Royal approbation this year was given on the 6th.

On Monday the Lord Mayor elect (Mr. Alderman Waithman), attended by several of the Aldermen, Recorder, Sheriffs, and the various city officers, was presented to the Lord Chancellor, at his house in Hamilton-place, on his election to that office, for his Majesty's approbation.

Wednesday, a Court of Directors was held at the East India House, when the following Captains were sworn into the command of their respective ships, viz.—Captain George Welstead, General Harris, St Helena, Bencoolen, and China; Capt. A. W. Campbell, Duke of York, Bombay and China; Capt. John Shepherd, Berwickshire, Bengal and China; Capt. John Levy, Astell, China.

The East India Company's ship Repulse, outward bound, arrived at Bencoolen on the 16th of June. The Charles Grant arrived at the Mauritius the 12th, and sailed again for China on the 20th of June.

On Thursday the General Committee of the National Society, for the education of the poor in the principles of the established church, held their meeting at St. Martin's Vestry Room. The Bishop of London, Sir J. Langham, Bart., Sir John Nicholl, Archdeacons Pott and Cambridge, and other members of the Committee were present. Nine fresh schools were united to the Society, and nine grants of money, in sums from 20l. to 200l. each, were made towards the erecting, enlarging, and fitting up of school-rooms.

"Whereas we have judged it expedient, that in future, soldiers who shall be discharged from our Regular Forces, and shall have claims to the Out-pension of our Royal Hospital at Chelsea, arising from service alone, shall upon reports from Commanding Officers of the Regiments to which they respectively belong, confirmed by the Discharges of the men, be placed on such Out-pension, without requiring their personal appearance before the Commissioners of our said Hospital, provided their claims to Pension shall, upon investigation, be found correct.

"We will and pleasure is, and we hereby direct and order, that from the 24th day of August, 1823, inclusive, the Commanding Officers of our Regular Corps of Cavalry and Infantry do, in the case of men discharged under the circumstances above mentioned, immediately transmit Reports upon their cases, accompanied by their discharges in the proper form, to the Commissioners of our Royal Hospital at Chelsea; and we hereby authorise the Commissioners of our said Hospital, upon receipt of such Reports and Discharges, to dispense with the personal appearance of the soldiers so discharged, and to consider their claims to Out-pension, and to assign to them such rate of Pension as their respective services may, under existing regulations, appear to the said Commissioners to entitle them to.

"And for so doing, this shall be a sufficient warrant, authority, and direction.

"Given at our Court at Carlton Palace, this 19th day of August, 1823, in the Fourth Year of our Reign.

DURHAM, Nov. 3.—In consequence of an explosion of foul air in a coal pit, called the Plain Pit, belonging to the Marquis of Londonderry, situate near Rainton, about five miles from this city, a number of unfortunate persons have lost their lives. The accident took place this morning about five o'clock. There are a great variety of rumours afloat respecting the number of persons employed in the pit at the time; but it is ascertained that fifty-three men and boys have certainly perished.—An inquest has been held on the body of Thomas Golightly, one of the men. A verdict was returned, "That the deceased came by his death in consequence of a quantity of inflammable air taking fire, but from what cause the Jurors could not say."

A very valuable improvement has been made by Mr. Richard Evans, of Bread-street, in the method of preparing or roasting coffee, which, it is said, will supersede it to a great extent the use of Mocha, as our own plantation coffee, of a fine quality, is rendered equal in flavour, at nearly half the price. This discovery is of great utility, as it will increase the consumption of an important produce of our colonies.

A few evenings ago, a gig passed along the road, from Scarborough to Malton, containing a female and two men. From the dress and appearance of the former, she is supposed to have been a young woman from Hutton Bushel, who had left her friends unknown to her friends, and has not since been heard of. The same evening, a female voice was heard uttering cries of distress, by some of the servants of the Rev. Mr. Canning, at West Heslerton, and next morning a quantity of blood, and human hair was found against the gate leading to the house of J. R. Foulis, Esq. at that place, and a woman's glove on the adjoining road; all under circumstances which would appear to indicate that a murder had been committed. The blood and the marks of the gig wheels were traced from West Heslerton to Scampston Bridge, a distance of about three miles

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We feel quite ashamed of our silence to our correspondents—we beg them to assure themselves that we are always most anxious to notice their favours, but the pressure of interesting matter which flows in towards the end of the week, compels us to omit our acknowledgments.

The very extraordinary letter of Mr. Ball, and its enclosures, have been received.

A.B. (dated Nov. 5) is requested to furnish us with what he promises by Thursday morning.

The writer of the short letter marked private is requested to allow the matter to rest precisely where it is till next Sunday—he need feel no uneasiness or apprehension, nothing unpleasant can occur.

Ex, with many thanks.

We can recommend to such readers as are fond of literary whit-what, and antiquities, "a periodical work called the Somerset House Weekly Miscellany."

Our readers will find the article respecting Miss Tree, and a letter from Mr. Bishop, the composer, in our last page.

Our other friends must excuse us.

LONDON, Nov. 9.

LORD MAYOR'S DINNER.

Our readers may form some idea of the correctness of the gentlemen of the press, when we inform them that a very respectable reporter, forgetting that the anniversary of the Lord Mayor's feast fell this year on a Sunday, or rather that it was observed with the usual formalities on Monday instead of Saturday, has actually furnished us with an account of the proceedings at Guildhall, as if they had really happened yesterday. He was only hired for the Hall, and therefore we are deprived of the pleasure of giving any detail of the procession. He writes thus:—

"The preparations at Guildhall were upon an unprecedented scale of splendour; the avowed indifference of the present Lord Mayor to any thing like needless ostentation having given way to his sense of the importance of the high office he holds, the representation of his family, and his respect for himself. Till near six His Lordship and family received the congratulations of the nobility, and innumerable presentations took place to the Lady Mayoress—her Ladyship was simply attired in a crimson slip covered with imitation net, sprigged and worked, with a body of crimson velvet, ornamented with jewels of inestimable value; a magnificent plume of feathers waved on her head, and the general appearance of her Ladyship was such as to excite universal surprise and admiration. His Lordship looked extremely well, and conversed with the nobility with his usual affability.

"Dinner being announced by a flourish of trumpets, His Lordship proceeded to his stall on the hustings, the Lady Mayoress being handed by his Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex, ushered in by Mr. Grigsby, the Common Hunt, in a dress suit of clothes, bearing his wand of office. Miss Peggy Waithman was escorted by Mr. J. C. Hobhouse, the patriotic member for Westminster, Miss Sally leaning on the arm of Mr. Maberly, the eminent leather-seller, and member of parliament. Mr. Hume, Mr. Ellice, and Mr. S. Whitbread, jun. attended the younger branches of this distinguished family. There was a general search for the Earl of Fife, who was expected to hand Mrs. Waithman's maiden aunt, but he could not be found, so the lady was given over to the care of Mr. Common Sergeant Denman, who appeared remarkably happy in the office.

"The Hall was quite filled with the eaters and drinkers usually present upon such occasions, although the numerous discoveries incidental to the late shocking murder had an evident effect upon most of the Common Council who happened to be acquainted with that distinguished and hereditary Whig, Mr. John Thurtell—the routine of festivity was gone through in the ordinary fashion, and after the usual toasts had been given, the Duke of Sussex rose, and said,

"Gentlemen.—Averse as I am from public speaking, and indisposed as I feel myself at present, I cannot resist the impulse of my heart—I feel called upon to propose a toast. Every body knows the principles which seated my illustrious family upon the Throne of these Realms, I pray God I may never never forget them—(loud cheerings.)—A man may forget his wife—(laughter)—He may find it convenient at one time to marry, and at another time to forget that he is married—(Hear, hear.)—He may forget all the ties of private life, but he can never forget those great principles, those fundamental principles—(Loud cries of hear from Lord Nugent*)*—which placed his family on the Throne.

"Gentlemen—At least I speak to such gentlemen as are not holders of Spanish bonds.—(Murmurs.)—I congratulate you upon the result of the war in Spain; I always prognosticated, as indeed did all my honourable friends now round me, the ultimate success of the cause—and I glory in the fulfilment of our predictions! The King of Spain is free.—(Hear, hear.)—And I am prepared to state that the greatest possible triumph to the Constitutionalists is, that his freedom has been purchased by foreign influence.—(Loud cheers.)—Gentlemen, I repeat, I know the principles which placed my ancestors on the Throne of these Kingdoms, and revere them too much to endure the idea of any thing like foreign interference; and this, every gentleman aware of my political consistency will admit: perhaps, however I am wandering from my subject, I rose for a simple purpose, and have been drawn away by the cheering appearance of things around me, from the direct object of my address! I have to propose the health of Citizen Waithman, Linen—(Here his Royal Highness was stopped and escorted by the Common Sergeant.)—I beg pardon. I have to propose the health of the Right Honourable the Lord Mayor.—(Thunders of applause.)

"Tune'—'Oh the charming Mrs. Draper.'

"Tootle, tootle, tootle,
"I wish I was a Linen-Draper,
"Tootle, tootle, tootle.

"After the tumultuous approbation had, in some degree subsided the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor rose and silence being obtained by the aid of his Lordship's Chamberlains, Maccbearers, Sword-bearers, Train-bearers, and Common Serjeant!!! &c. his Lordship spoke nearly as follows:—

"May it please your Royal Highness, my Lord and Gentlemen!!! This is perhaps the most interesting moment of my life—risen as I have from the meanest station in society to the pinnacle of power in this great city; for wretched as the times are, and profligate as are the Ministers, still London is a great city—I certainly feel myself placed in a situation at once awfully eminent and rapturously splendid—to have at my right hand a Constitutional Prince of the Blood—(Loud cheers)—whose private and public life are pledges of that sincerity and attachment to the laws and liberties of the country, is indeed a great gratification to me! I am proud also to see my friend, Mr. Sylvester, of the Strand, near us; and I am proud, above all, to have amongst the inferior officers of my establishment, such men as Mr. Denman. If I am not quite collected in my observations, the company will excuse me. I am unused to such society, and the lights and the champagne (champagne, my Lord, said the divert-ont of the toasts)—the champagne, as my excellent friend behind me truly calls it, must be my excuse.—(Loud cheers.)

"Gentlemen, when I reflect upon the shameful treatment of the late lamented Queen, and the murders at Manchester, my blood runs cold, and I wonder that we are sitting here. It is true, as the Morning Chronicle justly observes, England would indeed have been a different country if she had not withstood the French Revolution, and opposed herself to every thing like the vindication of our rights; but as I find my royal and royal friend on my right is trending upon my toes, seeming to imply that I have said enough, I shall conclude by drinking the health of the 'Opposition Members of the House of Commons.'—(Loud cheers.)

"Mr. Edward Ellice rose, and in the absence of any person senior in the ranks of opposition, begged to return thanks; he did not, however, wish it to be understood that he was pledged to any particular party, but as the general sense of the company appeared to be hostile to the administration, he had no hesitation upon this occasion to speak his sentiments as they stood at present.—

"Tune—'How happy could I be with either.'

"The health of the Sheriffs was proposed, and drank with great applause.—

"Tune—'Ah! sure a pair were never seen.'

"Mr. Whittaker returned thanks—which was enough, but—

"Mr. Sheriff Laurie rose, nevertheless, and observed, for himself, that as this was the first time he had appeared in harness before his Lordship, he would take the opportunity of saying a few words—he had swallowed his oil, and was now attending to the decanters, but he could not, under the proud circumstances in which he found himself, neglect an attempt to disprove an old and vulgar saying, that "two of a trade can never agree"—he had been a saddler now for thirty years, he wanted to curry favour with no man, but seeing a brother tradesman present, he begged to offer a toast, which, if contrary to etiquette, he was sorry for, but could not help it—he proposed the health of Mr. Maberly.

"Tune—'Have you been to Abingdon.'

Mr. Maberly attempted to return thanks, but he had eaten so much, and his neckcloth was so tight, that he sat down with evident marks of indisposition.

"The Illustrious House of Waithman' was then given by the Duke of Sussex.

Mr. Waithman, jun. rose and said—

"My Lord and Father, and Gentlemen, in returning thanks for the honour you have done us, I have nothing to say which will adequately express my feelings or that of our House, corner of Bridge-street, Blackfriars—Myself and brother beg leave respectfully to inform the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public in general, that we have on hand a very extensive stock of mul-muls, ginghams, and stout Irish sheeting of the first quality, cottons of superior texture, and extremely cheap huckaback for jack-towels. We likewise have a very beautiful assortment of patent net-lace, (samples may be seen on the Lady Mayoress this evening,) ditto to that, seven shillings and sixpence per yard, sprigged nine and six; also numerous articles in the thread and worsted line—orders for captains of ships and exportation furnished on the shortest notice.

"N.B.—His Lordship and Sons continue to give the highest price for India shawls.

"(Loud cheerings crowned the conclusion of this appropriate speech.)

"His Lordship was then graciously pleased to give—

"'The health of the independent Members of the Common Council.'

"Mr. Savage rose to return thanks.—His attachment to the House of Hanover could not be doubted—his predelection for the White Horse was notorious: 'Nay, my Lord,' said the Honourable Gentleman, 'every body knows that when I quitted the White Horse, it was to set up in business myself at the Red Hart,—where, Gentlemen, horses stand at livery upon easy terms—and I defy any man to say that I starve the horses because, as a popular writer says, 'I loves 'em as I does myself.'

"'I shall take this opportunity,' continued the Honourable Gentleman, 'to say a few words on the tyranny of Magistrates, and the barbarity of the Vagrant Act, (loud cheerings). I am glad to see this sympathetic feeling, (loud cheers)—Nothing can be more galling than for a Jack in office to be empowered to send a respectable man to a watch-house for a tipsy frolic in a free country—(loud approbation, particularly from Mr. Alderman J. J. Smith*)*. Gentlemen, I am a friend to freedom, and I call upon Mr. Hansard for a song.'

"Mr. Hansard sang—'My lodging is in Leather-lane,' as arranged by Cook.

"The company about this time having made themselves extremely sick, began to be excessively disagreeable, and the signal being given the party retired to the Court of King's Bench, which was fitted up for dancing, where the ball was opened by the Lady Mayoress and Mr. Samuel Rogers, who was fancifully dressed in a Spanish habit, which had been sent over by Senor Arguelles to Lady Holland.

"Lord Nugent favoured the company with his celebrated bolero, accompanied on the castanets by General Romai.—Mr. Galloway, an intimate friend of Lord Erskine's, and president of the society of gentlemen who escaped hanging, sat with his back to Mr. Pitt's statute, as he calls it, at dinner—a circumstance which caused an universal remark.

"Mr. Hunt, of St. Martin's-lane, who was expected to have enlivened the company with his singing, was unable to attend, being in Hertford Jail, but several gentlemen of equal respectability exerted themselves to add to the conviviality of the day.

"We are authorised to state distinctly, that nobody smoked after dinner except the Duke of Sussex and the Lady Mayoress. The crowd of hackney-coaches was immense, but there were fewer robberies committed than ever were remembered, most of the principal depredators upon ordinary occasions of a similar nature being very differently engaged upon this.

"Among the company invited were several persons of distinction."

As this account is evidently false, we only publish it to shew what reporters will do. Lord Fife and Lord Cardigan have been asked, but of course do not intend going: the Duke of Sussex we think will not and Lord Nugent is too much of the aristocrat to let himself down by any such ridiculous exhibition as is here spoken of; Lord Erskine cannot well appear without affronting old Hardy, the shoemaker; Denman must go as a servant of the corporation, and Wilkie, the painter, who has got quite radical by living so near Holland-house; and perhaps Dr. Ealy, who has a ticket, may be of the party. If it were a masquerade, it would be crowded just for the fun of seeing the thing: as it is, quantity must make up for quality, and numbers atone for respectability. We know out of upwards of one hundred and thirty invited, twenty-two only proposed going last night; how many of these will actually attend now, remains to be seen. We shall, of course, give an authentic account of the affair next Sunday.

MR. BUXTON.

Our readers will remember how this philanthropist changed his opinion upon the Spitalfields Bill last session. A letter (one of four upon the same subject) from a correspondent, in another part of this paper, will perhaps throw a little light upon this alteration. We see no harm in a man's looking after the "main chance;" but we will not allow any of the sanctified faction to set themselves above their fellow-creatures. Mr. Buxton is a brewer, and gets his bread by selling the beer he brews, and with the proceeds of such sale, is very likely, to do a certain degree of good; but is worldly a brewer as any other brewer in England. If he do us the favour to get down from his stilts, we will give every credit. But the saints as a party—as a body—must be unmasked. We will have no cant, no flattery; the truth, the whole truth, we will lay open, and but the truth shall satisfy us.

MR. MACAULAY.

We have spoken of Mr. Buxton as a brewer, [illegible] now to speak of Mr. Zachary Macaulay as a merchant; we charge Mr. Macauley with nothing worse than [illegible] other merchants daily commit; and when we lay [illegible] conduct, it is not to expose him quoad dealer and trader, but quoad Eremite and Saint.

Now we will call the attention of those bleating [illegible] who implicitly follow these privileged bell-wethers, [illegible] of Parliament, to the manœuverings of Mr. Macaulay, [illegible] year 1813. This holy body had, from his extraordinary [illegible] spectability and devoutness, obtained the ear of our Government, and upon his pious representations, Government was led to believe that gunpowder, that mortal enemy of mankind, where, was more deadly in its operation in Africa than [illegible] where else, inasmuch as it enabled the native Chiefs to carry savage war on each other for the sake of slaves, which encouraged the traffic on the coast.

Who, that knows Mr. Zachariah Macaulay, [illegible] his earnest plausibility while thus [illegible] measure likely to check the wanton exportation of [illegible] ical commodity—who is there who does not see the [illegible] solicitude with which he enforced a proposition to the Treasury, that the exportation of gunpowder to the western coast of Africa should be limited to one barrel to every ten tons shipping, so that a vessel of 250 tons should be allowed to carry out only 25 barrels of powder.

The very idea of diminishing a traffic in a thing so [illegible] troublesome as gunpowder, struck our Government as [illegible] thing conciliatory, and Mr. Zachariah Macaulay, [illegible] for his discretion, and admired for his humanity, carried the point. There we have the Saint exerting himself to the salvation of human lives, for the suppression of a traffic in human flesh."

Now for a "Touch of the Trader." While Zachariah the Saint, was pressing this measure upon the Lords of the Treasury, Mr. Zachary, the merchant, was freighting a vessel with gunpowder, her fore-topsail loose, her [illegible] flying, and the capstan manned to "Up anchor and away" the moment the order in Council should issue, he having previously procured from Zachariah, the Saint, a copy of said order to send out per said ship—which all came to pass—no other African merchant being in the slightest degree in the secret—so, out went the ship, powder and order and all—and rose the commodity to 20*l.* per barrel on her arrival on the Coast, and Mr. Zachary Macaulay pocketed somewhere about five hundred per cent. upon the shipment.

Well, and what then?—Nothing—we find no fault with [illegible] making five hundred per cent of his gunpowder, but we cannot allow it to be set off by his humanity and consequent squabbles of the African Chiefs. But we have not got to the end of the story yet—oh dear, no!

The mischief arising from this saint-like manœuvre was this—when the Africans found that gunpowder was not to be served out to them in small quantities from England, what did they do?—went to market with the Americans, who "guess" did not care three straws whether all the African Chiefs were at war together, and who made a pretty penny by the humanity of our Saint. But what did the Saint do? when he found that the Yankees, and other nations, had got hold of the powder trade, he saw all at once the dreadful consequences of such facility for war, and in two years, after labouring very hard, St. Zachariah's influence succeeded, and the order he had got passed, was repealed.

Now there is nothing discreditable in this—it is all a fair marketting job, and Zachary Macaulay, the merchant, did it remarkably well; and if it had been done by any of those laughing, jolly, red-faced citizens, who affect nothing and profess nothing but money-making and money-spending, we should have been the first to have congratulated Mr. Macaulay upon his sharpness—but the sanctity curdles all—turns it sour—it sickens one.

What did Judge Thorpe say?—he once taxed Zachariah with monopolizing the trade of Sierra Leone—he did much the same on selves last week. What did Zachariah say?—he boldly replied, that he was surprised to hear such calumny against him, when of eighteen ships which sailed from the Port of London for Sierra Leone, only one was chartered by him!—There is the truth for you—there is the "speaking the cerd"—there is no equivocation there, no higgling, no haggling with conscience in that answer of Zachariah.

How came it then that his memory was so treacherous? He is not enough of a wit to plead that, for a want of recollection—he never told the fact, that although only one ship was chartered by him, the other seventeen were ships on general freight, and that nine-tenths of their cargoes were actually shipped by him—aye, by Zachariah himself.

Well, and what harm is there in this? We answer, none upon earth: the more cargoes he shipped, the more investments he sold, the more money he made.—It was his aim—it was his object, and his end, as it is the aim and the object, and the end of every merchant, to make a fortune. And he was quite right to conceal, and misrepresent, and deny, and assert, the way of business, because, more or less, every man of business does the same—but Saints do not—sanctified, holy persons, carefully eschew all such proceedings. Perhaps Zachariah will roundly deny the conduct we attribute to him—perhaps Mr. Griffiths, at Water-lane, or Messrs. [illegible] and Ridman, of Tower Hill, would do us the favour to refresh his memory. We need say no more—next week we shall continue to pluck the daw, it is all we wish, all we want; we have no desire but that Mr. Zachary Macaulay should enjoy the fruits of a long and active mercantile life in quiet and comfort; but against Saint Zachariah we wage eternal war.

When we find this great Mumbo Jumbo exalted as one of the stalking horses, behind which the most debased and depraved anarchists and terrorists, quacks, charlatans, depredators, and disturbers, intend to frighten the people of England out of their senses and their colonies; and bully the West Indian proprietors out of their rights and their property, it is high time that the idol and his fellows should be stripped and served as the stuffed effigies of Guy Fawkes were served on Wednesday, exhibited to the populace, at once objects of ridicule and contempt in themselves, but commemorating by their exposure the preservation of the country from a dreadful explosion.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.

It has long been our intention to attract the notice of our orthodox English readers to the present state of the Scots' EPISCOPAL CHURCH, but we do not lament the circumstances which have hitherto delayed the fulfilment of those intentions, because the recent publication of the charge of BISHOP LOW to the Clergy of the Episcopal Communion of Ross and ARGYLE, affords us an opportunity of bringing the matter before the country under considerable advantages.

It ought to be much better known than, in truth, we believe it is, that a Protestant Episcopal Church, with services, articles, and canons, precisely similar to our own, is at the present moment existing in Scotland under the persecution of that unapostolical church, of which that fashionable exhibitor of the polite art of preaching, MR. IRVING, is a favoured member, and which the most refined and enlightened persons amongst us, find it agreeable or right, to patronise and uphold.

It ought also to be much better known than it is, that in this age of LIBERALITY and CONCILIATION; the Government makes yearly allowances of money to the Dissenters in England, to the Dissenters in Ireland, and to the PAPISTS!!!—while it bestows not one mite upon the Protestant Episcopal Church of Scotland, which it nominally upholds and sanctions, and which in form, construction, establishment, and ritual, is precisely the same as the Episcopal Church of England.

It ought to be farther known that this national established church is supported by private contributions—it ought to be further known that while every struggle is making to increase the power and privileges of the papists, no finger stirs to maintain the respectability of the Protestants, who are, in point of fact, more oppressed, more opposed, more thwarted in Scotland, than the Romanists are in Ireland.

Since we have spoken of the two bodies, let us, for a moment, compare the meekness of the Scots Episcopal Church with the insolent haughtiness of the Roman Catholics; the titular bishops of Ireland assume the temporal character of peers, and are styled Lords Bishops, while the heads of the Scottish Church are addressed simply as commoners, although their episcopal authority is derived by succession, and established by the Apostles.

This being premised, we will take leave to extract a few passages from the Charge to which we first alluded, delivered by the Bishop of Ross and ARGYLE, the Right Reverend DR. LOW, on the 18th of last June, and which has been published at the request of the clergy of that "Episcopal Communion."

The Bishop, in a preface, tells us that he had proposed appending copious notes, illustrative of his subject, and descriptive of the sufferings to which the Scots Episcopal Clergy have been exposed at various times, which he justly observes, have been most singularly overlooked. The Bishop having been induced to relinquish the plan, with a peculiar modesty recommends the task of compiling such a work to some one to whom "writing for the public eye is more familiar" than himself.

"The history of our Church," says the Right Reverend Doctor, "has not been studied with that attention, nor detailed with that interest, which its importance unquestionably requires. Between her condition in this world and that of the Primitive Church, a comparison has been instituted or attempted to be made; and, during some periods of her existence, the parallel may have been tolerably exact; but, in point of real depression, a comparison, I am afraid, must now be made much to our disadvantage."

The Bishop proceeds to draw a comparison between the present position of the Episcopal Church in Scotland, and that of America, of which he gives the following extremely interesting, and (we presume to many of our readers) novel description:—

"In constitution, indeed," observes DR. LOW, "that church is equally primitive and apostolical, and, like our own, she enjoys from the State only a simple toleration. But here, I apprehend, the resemblance ceases; for being but of yesterday, she has hitherto been exempted, and long may she be exempted, from all the desolating effects of civil convulsion; and though perhaps not avowedly encouraged, yet she is not positively discouraged, by the civil power, in having recourse to her, as we have to us, an establishment which, if not openly hostile to, is nevertheless jealous of every step which we take, or which is taken in our behalf.

"It is gratifying to know, from the most authentic documents, that the Protestant Episcopal Church of Independent America may be considered as in a highly flourishing condition; certainly as in a situation of progressive improvement and increase. On the par to Christians of other communions, she is indeed exposed to very considerable and severe hostility; but in controversies excited by that hostility, she has hitherto maintained her ground with learning, argument, and temper, equally creditable and Christian."

There is an amiability in all these observations highly creditable to the principles and character of the Divine by whom they were delivered; perhaps the following paragraph may apply forcibly to the present state of things at home as well as abroad:—

"The present condition of the Episcopal Church in that country, (America) affords a triumphant answer to a thousand illiberal cavils, which have been urged by ignorance, prejudice, and bigotry. The liberty, independence, and national honour of the United States are as safe in the hands of Episcopalians at least, as in those of any other class of religionists in that growing country; and the descendants of many a moody Covenanter, and of many a narrow-minded Puritan, are now the willing and well principled adherents of that communion which their intemperate and prejudiced forefathers abhorred, because they did not know, and would not learn, its sober principles and beneficent practice."

We have not room to extract more of that part of the Bishop's Charge which turns upon the neglected historical facts relative to the Scotch Episcopalians, nor need we do so, for we are inclined to hope that we may induce the really religious and benevolently disposed to read the work entire.

We consider that we only do our duty in extracting the following passage, as suggesting a line of conduct which (it really does appear to us) ought to be adopted.

"It is beyond dispute, that, for sixty years after the Revolution, Episcopacy was preferred by numerous congregations, in most parts of Scotland, to the religion established; nor was it for the advantage of the country, of sound religion, and of sober morality, that it was then subjected to such hardships as no zeal could surmount, and such as seriously injured, without tending to promote the influence of any other, a system of religion which was conscientiously preferred. In this extensive district, where the harvest is great and scattered, and the labourers are few, much good might be done, were we enabled, by a moderate grant, such as is bestowed, from year to year, on the dissenters in England, and on the dissenters Protestant and Popish, in Ireland, to provide resident ministers in every place in which the people, who have not the means themselves of meeting the expence, would receive them with open arms."

With the following address to the Clergy present we must conclude our extracts:—

"I have left myself," says the Bishop, "but scanty room reverend brethren, for any direct address to you, as men and as clergymen; but for this there is the less occasion, as most of you have a ready and long been tried and approved; and God forbid that ever I should be obliged to retract any part of this praise through the inattention, the you disposed, as I know you are not, to be negligent and careless of very laborious charges of this diocese would compel you to be, as I know you are, instant in season and out of season; and your alacrity in the discharge of your ministerial duties is further evident in your ready compliance with my suggestion of archidiaconal visitations, which, at the same time that they are gratifying and pleasing to me, must minister to the spiritual welfare of the diocese in general. But while I am thus satisfied of your unwearied zeal and assiduity in watching over and in feeding your flocks; in imparting and in recommending to those of maturer years sound and primitive principles and practice, unmixed with any of that disgusting, hypocritical, selfish cant and fanaticism, so lamentably prevalent in the present day—I must exhort you, by all the ties of the interesting and sacred relation subsisting between us, to be mindful, above all things, of the religious instruction of the rising generation; I mean the catechising, at regular and stated periods, of the young persons of your respective congregations. This early and religious culture of the mind is a duty equally imperative to pastors and to parents; of which the neglect or the performance, the failure or the fulfilment, may extend their consequences to all eternity, and furnish cause for ever of anguish or of exultation.

"In regard to your commerce with the world at large, I have but little to say, and little to recommend; for sobriety of manners and good breeding, being, as I may say, without a metaphor, as native to you as your language; it is the less incumbent on me to impress upon you the requisition and preservation of that mixture, rare indeed, of gravity and sweetness, of piety and affability together, which can preserve inviolate the rights of religion without hurting those of society, and pay what is due to society without injuring religion."

We hardly remember to have read anything more simply and touching, more pure and affecting, than the conclusion of this pastoral address.

A singular paper has been transmitted to us with this Charge; written by the late JOHN BOWDLER, ESQ. of Eltham, strongly appealing to the country in behalf of his neglected Church.—The appeal comes forcibly—it contains this remarkable passage—a passage breathing a devotion to the interests of religion, an absence of care or solicitude about self, and a firm reliance in the mercies of a just GOD, which we never saw paralleled.—

"In early life, Providence placed me in a situation which gave me such an insight into the merits and wants of the clergy of the Episcopal Church in Scotland, as seemed to call upon me to do every thing in my power to assist them: for I found them to be inferior to our own clergy only in wealth, rank, and some of the advantages of a polished education. The more I became acquainted with them, the more I was convinced of the great advantages which must result to true religion by affording them some support and encouragement. By the exertions of their lay members in Scotland, and of their friends in England, they were by degrees raised from a state of absolute destitution, to one which barely affords them the common necessaries of life; yet we have witnessed such good effects, as have given us abundant encouragement to persevere in our endeavours to procure a decent provision for them, and the means of educating others to succeed them in their calling. Still, however, they are greatly deficient in these respects, as well as in a fund for providing places of worship, even of the most humble description, adequate to receive their several congregations. It was my humble hope that I might be able to procure them some further assistance, while life was continued to me; but that expectation, and the measures which were in prospect, have been interrupted by the NEAR APPROACH OF MY DISSOLUTION. No means, therefore, seem now to remain for me, but by a short statement of their case to excite the friends of pure religion to take an active interest in their welfare; and upon such I trust it may make a strong impression."

We think it cannot fail to do so, and in so far as our humble exertions go to further a purpose so benevolent, they are at the service of the friends of the persecuted, the supporters of the neglected and oppressed.

We have taken up this subject, because we felt it a duty, and not at the suggestion, or in consequence of any communication with the gentlemen whose names are mentioned in MR. BOWDLER'S "dying request," but as our wish is, to be of as much service to the cause as possible; and as the document forwarded to us is printed, we conclude that we may, without offending any of the parties named therein, state that MR. JUSTICE PARK, LANCELOT SHADWELL, ESQ. of Lincoln's Inn, G. W. MARRIOT, ESQ. of the Inner Temple, and the REV. THOMAS BOWDLER, Rector of ADDINGTON WEST MALLING, Kent, will furnish any requisite information as to any funds raising, or to be raised, for the service of the EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.

DR. COLLYER took the Chair on Wednesday at Orange-street Chapel, at a meeting of some Tract Society. Many soldiers were present, and a long speech was made and resolutions moved or seconded (we forget which) by a Trumpeter in the Life Guards of the name of RAWLINS—under all the circumstances of the case, this requires deep attention: we had intended to apply the test of ridicule to this meeting but it calls for more serious interference.

WE hardly remember a circumstance which has caused an equal sensation to that excited by the murder of MR. WEARE—its nature, the rank in life sustained by the actors in the dreadful tragedy—the combinations, the developements, in short, the ramified conspiracy is in its character so extraordinary, so un-English, so novel, and so appalling, that every mind is filled with the thoughts of it—every tongue is employed in its discussion.

The murders of the MARRS and WILLIAMSONS created a wonderfully strong feeling in the country, but it was the feeling of expected burglary and consequent murder, and every house was forthwith manned and armed for resistance—the CATO-street conspiracy filled us with consternation, but it was the horror consequent upon the discovery of a murderous plot to subvert a Government; in which the deluded wretches who embarked in it were consigned, like DESPARD and his miserable associates, to death, while the great directors live on, smiling and bowing to the mob, undetected, and unconvicted, if not unsuspected—but here we have a sort of domestic treason, a combination of plunderers and robbers against the community, unequalled, and not resembled by anything we know of, in the annals of our country.

The particulars, as far as our limits will allow, are to be found in another part of the paper, and perhaps any observations upon the evidence would be premature, although we may be permitted to express our strong surprise at the offer of mercy so strangely and inconsiderately held out to HUNT, whose share in the transaction will, we apprehend, turn out to be infinitely more important than by his own confession it at first appeared to be.

The examination of the females, and indeed their confinement, is a measure highly judicious; it is quite evident that MRS. PROBERT was in possession of the fact on the night of the murder—that night which the hardened miscreants passed, after having deposited the mutilated remains of their miserable victim in a pond on the premises, in supping and "singable victim in a pond on the premises, in supping and "singing several songs;" at that time we should say that the females did not know any thing of what had transpired—that the wife did not know any thing of what had transpired—that she might have overheard enough to set her crying and keep her awake might have known, in history subsequently—that she might have overheard enough to set her crying and keep her awake we can easily understand, and yet fully acquit her of any thing beyond the natural affections of a wife, for concealing all she knew so seriously affecting PROBERT'S safety, but we cannot understand the conduct of MR. NICHOLLS, (who is not yet apprehended) nor MRS. HEWARD, who were down at the cottage, who conversed upon the subject there, and yet never alluded to it elsewhere.

The apprehension of MR. NOYES is another highly judicious step; he dined at TETSALL'S the day of the murder, three or four other persons were there backwards and forwards, whose name TETSALL does not remember: his apprehension was a matter of necessity as we see it, and we think it might not be unadvisable to ascertain by whose order the workmen were set upon Gill's-hill-lane on the morning after the murder, nothing having been done to the road for upwards of forty years, although it had been frequently presented by Grand Juries.

Without wishing unnecessarily to wound anybody's feelings, it appears quite evident that the prosecution cannot delicately or properly be entrusted to MR. NOEL. MR. NOEL was the intimate friend of MR. WEARE. True—and when MR. NOEL was apprehended last year at a gaming-house, and taken to Bow-street—MR. WEARE came and procured bail for him—he was therefore the intimate friend of MR. WEARE; but it must be recollected that so were Messrs. PROBERT, HUNT, and THURTELL. The intimacy of the whole party probably arose from a similarity of habits and dispositions; and, we are quite sure, in a case so vitally important to the community, the prosecution should devolve upon some public officer, and a man more remote from any connexion with the parties than MR. NOEL.

The mysterious history of the house in Manchester-buildings ought to be more closely investigated. MR. WOODS should be more minutely examined—his original backwardness excites in us a proportionate desire for his evidence. We are inclined very much to credit the account given of that part of the conspiracy; and although it may be objected, that if such a house existed, MR. WEARE would have naturally been taken thither to be pillaged, and, if necessary, murdered, we are inclined not readily to admit the objection. The house was uninhabited—it was in a state at once to have opened WEARE'S eyes, as it did those of WOODS'—and WEARE was a powerful man, the neighbourhood populously inhabited—an alarm would have been given;—this is supposing WEARE to be wholly unconnected with the general system; but it is to be recollected, that upon one occasion, at least, the unfortunate man was an associate of the murderers in their designs upon others.

Several very sudden disappearances have taken place since the murder—one, a person who has long been a disgrace to the cloth, and who long before this should have been deprived of his gown, is deeply implicated. We should be sorry to find another member of the same holy calling involved; but we fear it is so—it is dreadful to relate, but no less than seven names of respectable persons have been reported to us as being on the list of the proscribed, independently of MR. BARBER BEAUMONT, who,—such is the repugnance of Englishmen to assassination and conspiracy—has become, from every thing absurd, conceited, and ridiculous, quite interesting in our eyes, from the mere force of the jeopardy in which he has been latterly living.

One thing we submit should be done—a special commission should issue as soon after the present term as possible, for the trial of the prisoners—delay not only is unsuitable to the atrocity of the case, but we are convinced the ends of justice, as relates to those still undetected, will be better consulted by a speedy public investigation of the affair.

No persons can more sincerely than ourselves lament, when private affairs are unnecessarily brought before the public; but since every newspaper in the United Kingdom has thought proper to give its version of a disagreeable difference represented to exist between the lately-returned Voyager, and the Lady, to whom he was, previous to his departure, engaged to be married; and as if by one consent they all conspired to impute the sin of fickleness to the latter, we think it right to state the real fact, in order that these journalists may amend their evidence, and that the public may be undeceived.

It is true, that the officer in question, was engaged to be married, and that the lady remained constant till his return; when he chose to break off the match—that there were difficulties to be encountered, in the outset before his departure, is most true; and that some circumstances had occurred, previous to his acquaintance with the young lady (to which there can be no necessity now to refer) is also most true; but they were distinctly and explicitly detailed to the officer, by her uncles, and considered, at the time, by the intended husband, as not at all likely to interfere with his happiness, nor as militating, in the smallest degree, against the match.

On the recent arrival of the officer in England, it appears, that by the advice of his friends, he declined any farther connection with the family of the young lady, on the ground that the circumstances to which he did not object, so long as they remained a "family secret," had, since his departure, afforded matter of common conversation. Here the matter rests, and whatever may be the impression upon our minds of the officer's first determination, it is certainly but justice to the young lady to declare, that nothing whatever has occurred, since the commencement of their acquaintance, which ought in justice to have changed it; except the loquacity of the friends of one of the parties during the separation.

THE TOPAZ CUP.

THERE has been a discussion and correspondence about a cup sold at Fonthill, and which the late miserable owner of that gewgaw bought of BADDOCK, the china-man, for three hundred pounds. It fetched six hundred at the sale, although LEWIS, a man who keeps the new shop the corner of Ryder-street, declared it was chrystal. MR. H. PHILLIPS asserted that PROFESSOR BUCKLAND had pronounced it a TOPAZ. This the professor denies; but it matters not to us, (although we are pretty much inclined to publish a portion of the two catalogues, in order to expose the humbug of the sale.) We only wish to record a joke which SAM ROGERS made when he heard of the discussion:—"Topaz!" said he, "chrystal! psha, these are bad materials for cups;—I prefer QUARTZ."

A whig member of parliament who was at the sale related this to us the other evening. To say that we do not believe it would be useless, when we have said our informant is a whig, and moreover, a whig who, in order to procure attention to his bad jokes, most probably serves them as he does his valuable books.—Disposes of them at Fonthill, under another name as likely to get a better price for them.

THEATRES.

THERE is a word in every body's mouth, which in common parlance is most strangely misapplied; we mean the word JUSTICE—in conversation, in literature, the idea of punishment is universally associated with JUSTICE—upon boards offering rewards for robberies, (which they invariably do, and not for robbers) they are always held out as payable when the offender is brought to Justice—indeed it has grown into a synonime—to say Justice has overtaken him, means, that a man is to be hanged, and so on; and there is another word equally perverted from its real meaning, which is criticism—to criticise a play is the same as to abuse it—and a critic and cutter-up are identified in the minds of play-writers and play-actors, as one and the same person.

It is our happiness this week to be able to separate the characters, for we have the agreeable task to perform of praising every thing we have to notice. The new play at Covent Garden combines, in a most unusual degree, good writing and much interest, with the most magnificent scenery and decoration we ever saw upon a stage, and as if the consent had been general to make a grand effort to blend all attractions in one piece, BISHOP has outdone himself in the music.—When we say that of the composer of "When the Mill goes," "The Chough and the Crow," and "Bid me discourse," we need say nothing more to express our opinion of the present performance.

We do not consider it necessary, nay we do more, we consider it always injudicious to be "as good as a chorus," and detail the plots of new pieces, it most assuredly spoils the interest, and more than that, unless the machinist or some other competent officer of the Theatre chooses to send it to us, we could not do it if we would. In the new play of CORTEZ, the principal incident is borrowed from DRYDEN'S Indian Emperor, and the rest of the drama from history chiefly, and partly from some modern melo-drames. Upon the whole, however, we may venture to pronounce it most deservedly successful, and extremely likely to produce an immense revenue to the treasury—the house was overflowing before the curtain rose.

We next proceed to notice the "Winter's Tale" at the other house; and we never feel more pleasure than in being able to bestow the very highest praise upon MRS. BUNN'S Hermione—her performance of the whole part was chaste and beautiful; but in the statue scene she out-did all her rivals—the grace and beauty of her appearance, the infinite skill and taste with which the drapery was made to fall over her fine figure, so well adapted to the situation, the attitude she assumed, in short every part of the scene was perfect, and the audience testified their admiration by shouts of applause.—MACREADY'S Leontes was an able performance, and MUNDEN'S Autolycus droll beyond description. The house was crowded to witness the performance.

Feeling as we do towards MRS. BUNN, and her unqualified excellence in the part of Hermione, our contempt for the system of puffing adopted by the friends of actors and actresses, induces us to expose to the ridicule it so justly merits the following piece of bombast and stuff, which was paid for and inserted in the MORNING POST of Tuesday.

"MRS. BUNN, in the character of Hermione, was distinguished by testimonials of decided approbation. This lady would be seen, with peculiar effect, in the Medea of GLOVER, the Phædra of SMITH, and the Mologune of MORE; characters which have long been strangers to the public, from the want of an actress gifted in those advantages which are indispensable for the delineation of the heroic and the grand. MRS. BUNN is a performer who is free from every taint of imitation; she is original and natural, and founds a school and manner of her own. Into the character of Hermione, she infuses some of the sweetest surprises of acting, and some of the most powerful witcheries of female excellence yet seen upon the British stage. When tried in competition with predecessors of recorded brilliancy, she loses nothing by comparison. To mark out every point, which received dignity from her demeanour, impression from her energy, and illumination from her enthusiasm, would be a task as endless as to enumerate the fascinations of her face and form. Though it is arduous to pronounce what is most excellent where all is excellence, yet it is manifest that tenderness and grandeur are the banners under which she weaves the plumes of victory. Were it to be said that inequalities are perceptible in her performance, the observation reaches no farther than when we remark that the most splendid edifice itself has passages; that gems, which form a diadem, are linked together by an ore inferior in refulgence; that blossoms, fair in April freshness, still hang from branches which are less in beauty. To the stage this magic actress seems what the rose is to the garden, the diamond to the mine, AND THE ASCENDING SUN TO EVERY CHARM OF NATURE!!!"

Hence it appears that this lady at Drury Lane will not only fill their coffers with money, and dissipate the powerful smell of the stable, but that she will light the theatre as well as fill it; such, at least, are the effects likely to be produced by a lady who is at once a Diamond, a Rose, and the Sun!—We conclude the above puff was written by the same man who wrote about the same lady in BLACKWOOD, where he said "her voice was not a voice but an echo."—If he really admire MRS. BUNN, we would advise him not to injure her by such absurd trash, which, as far as relates to herself, if she have the good taste which we suspect by her performance of Hermione she has, must be as painful to her feelings as it is unpleasant to those of others.

While upon the subject of puffs, we must notice the following, which adds premeditated falsehood to fulsome flattery.

"Miss LYDIA KELLY, whose wonderful ascent of The Cataract, at Drury-lane Theatre, has excited such admiration and astonishment, has been pronounced by MR. DAVIS to be the first horsewoman in Europe."

We do not know whether MISS LYDIA KELLY is desirous of so much equestrian celebrity as that which it is attempted to afford her in this little observation, nor do we know whether MISS LYDIA KELLY is a fine horsewoman—but that she does not ascend the Cataract at Drury Lane we do know—that part of the exhibition being assigned to one of the male performers attached to the stud.

We have no room here for a few remarks on the indisposition of MISS M. TREE, which will therefore appear in another part of this paper.

But whether we have little room or much room, we must find a corner to announce the return of LISTON to Drury Lane, and we really doubt which of the two plays chosen for his appearance was the more attractive of the two. SHE STOOPS TO CONQUER, played as it was last week at Drury Lane, is indeed a treat—DOWTON'S Hardcastle is the perfection of the art—and ELLISTON, if rather too matured in appearance, performed the modest guest with infinite success. LISTON'S Tony, which it is but fair to say was the feature of the night, is beyond all description comic, and the eclat with which the Comedy went off is a sufficient proof of public feeling.

As to the HYPOCRITE, we can find no words adequate to the praise of DOWTON'S Cantwell—the smooth, unchaste devotion—the grovelling worldliness, mingling with the affected sanctity in the character, are most admirably pourtrayed by this highly gifted actor—he never endangers his well earned reputation, but when he "o'ersteps (not only) the modesty of nature," but of society, by the unnecessary introduction of a sort of vulgarity, exiled even from the lower classes, in Cantwell, vulgarity, exiled even from the lower classes, in Cantwell, the nature of which, we admit, affords much temptation to an actor with a prurient imagination; we were pleased to see less of this than usual; at least the author has done so much which we must bear with, that the additions of the actor were only perceptible as they heightened the effect and invigorated the character. LISTON'S Maw-worm was sufficiently good to ensure him the invectives and execrations of all the canters in London. The Maw-worms and Cantwells of real life, to whose recent proceedings at Orange-street Chapel, although they might, with the greatest propriety, be noticed in this department, we have given a gentle brush over in another column of our paper of to-day.

We are quite sure that a few words in behalf of a suffering female will not be thrown away upon our readers, and although we have received no communication on the subject, we venture, without a fear of offending her feelings, to mention that the daughter of MRS. MARTYR, married, and with four children, is in the greatest distress; she has been discharged from Covent Garden Theatre; she was a pupil of MADAME MARA; but we believe her physical powers were not adequate to the display of her professional science. She is, however, the daughter of a once popular actress, and is unfortunately excluded from the advantages arising from the Theatrical fund.—We have no private or personal knowledge of the lady, and are even unacquainted with her present name, but we read the account of her circumstances in the MORNING POST, and saw that Messrs. YOUNG and FAWCETT were interesting themselves in her behalf. The private respectability of their names, added to the weight which their powerful talents must give to any person whose case is taken up by them, is a sufficient guaranty to us for making this appeal, and mentioning them as referees upon the occasion.

We would mention this case particularly to MR. ELLISTON, as a most favourable opportunity for exercising that liberality which he has so recently displayed in the appointment of MR. BRANDON.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR,—Observing in the JOHN BULL Newspaper the melancholy statements of numerous outrages in the West Indies, which are justly ascribed to the machinations of the "Saints," I am induced to send you a communication which I have this month received from a very intelligent and respectable merchant in Berbice, which you are at liberty to insert in your valuable Paper, if you think it neither too stale nor uninteresting. Its only recommendation is, that it carries along with it strong proofs that the noble exertions of WILBERFORCE and his party are crowned with success to a great extent.

"This kind of property" (says my correspondent, speaking of sugar and cotton estates) "has much deteriorated, owing principally to the interference in England of MR. WILBERFORCE and a party of canting hypocritical enthusiasts, who are, and ever have been, much disposed to shew off their philanthropy at the expence of other people, but who would not part with a stiver out of their own pockets to save half the universe from destruction. I am collecting materials for the purpose of exposing some of those worthies, and I shall, I think, turn author on my return to Europe. Here in this colony (Berbice) were two very fine sugar, and one coffee estate, belonging to the crown, and which in 1811 were given over to a committee of these Saints, to carry on practically their plan of ameliorating the condition of the slaves attached to them. What was the consequence? The estates were ruined, cultivation suspended, and out of a population of twelve hundred of the finest negroes in the colony, there were only four births in three years! But this was not all—while all other proprietors were deriving handsome returns from their estates, these properties were getting annually deeper in debt. ZACHARY MACAULAY, another of these canting persons, who acted as agent for the concern in Europe, while the colonial agents here were carrying on a system of the most shameless pillage and devastation, completely demoralizing the negroes; in fact, paying great attention to the fleece, but none to the flock. Since the termination of this commission about five years ago, they have never thought proper to publish to the world a report of their proceedings, or a statement of their accounts. If I can only get these materials in an authentic shape, I will most willingly spend two or three hundred pounds in unmasking these hypocrites, and in shewing to the British public what villainy is carried on in the name of religion, and under the cloak of philanthropy."—I am, Sir, your most obedient servant,

R. CLIFTON HADWEN.

Pinchbeck Spalding, Peterborough, Nov. 3, 1823.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR—If not previously informed, perhaps it may be worth your knowing, in your praiseworthy attempts to expose the worldly-mindedness of the Saints, that MR. BUXTON is not totally uninfluenced by the good things of this world, or the disinterested person he may wish to make people think he is, as the following instance may convince you.

MR. BUXTON was at first a warm supporter of the late Spitalfields Silk Act, and on the first reading of the Bill voted in its favour. MR. BUXTON is a brewer, and as such supplied many of the houses in the neighbourhood of Spitalfields with beer. The weavers immediately abandoned these houses and determined to drink no more of his beer. MR. BUXTON'S customers stated the facts to him, and how much his conduct was against both their and his interests.

MR. BUXTON, you will say, of course rejected all compromise with his conscience. Not so exactly—he promised to reconsider the Bill and its principles, and so singular an effect had this reconsideration of the Bill, that on its second reading his ideas of the matter were completely changed—he saw the thing in quite a new and a different light, and if he did not speak against the Bill, he certainly at least voted against it.

If you think this fact worth noticing, you may have it fully substantiated by inquiry in the neighbourhood of Spitalfields, and my information is at your service in exposing the humbug of the Saints.—I am, Sir, your reader and sincere well-wisher, *****.

TO JOHN BULL.

ORANGE INSTITUTION.

We are informed by a correspondent, who signs himself AN ORANGEMAN, and who tells us that he was present on the 5th November, at St. Mary Somerset Church, in Upper Thames-street, where that society held their first meeting as a public body, to celebrate the anniversary of KING WILLIAM III. landing on these shores, that the DEPUTY GRAND CHAPLAIN OF THE INSTITUTION, in very manly and energetic language, explained at large the views and the principles of that Institution; and that he also spoke certain bold constitutional truths, which are expected to create a great sensation in a certain quarter!

Our correspondent adds, that the sermon is to be printed at the request of the Society, in a cheap form, for very wide circulation throughout the empire. AN ORANGEMAN.

London, Nov. 6, 1823.

We insert the above letter with great pleasure, admitting, however, the impression upon our minds to be that it is written by the DEPUTY GRAND CHAPLAIN of the Institution himself.

WE give our readers an extract of a letter from Dublin, from an enlightened and able correspondent:—

"There is no doubt of the existence of a conspiracy, exclusively Popish, to assassinate the Protestants, and that preparations have been making for some years back for this horrible work. The Jesuits and Priests are supposed to be at the bottom of it, although they are too cunning to appear in the front ground, that which principally elicits the rage of Satan is the circulation of the Scriptures in Ireland, and the system of scriptural education generally adopted throughout the country. The Roman Catholic Hierarchy and Priests universally set their faces against this species of education, and they anathematize, (bell, book, and candle) the parents of such Romish children as go to these schools, and deny them what they are pleased to term the church rites, absolution, extreme unction, &c. &c.: of course the poor wretches consider themselves, under such circumstances, as inevitably doomed to perdition; the Priests know full well that the craft is in danger, that the word of God, and their religion are completely opposed, and that the Scriptures universally read and understood, Popery with all its blasphemous rubbish must fall prostrate to the ground. This final overthrow we have no reason to expect without a struggle: Satan will not yield his kingdom without exertion. Government may devise various plans of conciliation; they may even pass the commutation of tythe bill—they may also send hundreds of thousands to feed the hungry and clothe the naked, but unless they surrender the country altogether to Popery, all other boons will have no effect. Popery, with all its horrible concomitants, blasphemies, lyings, idolatry and superstition, is the bane of devoted freedom—it means whatsoever, unaccompanied with scriptural education, will prove inadequate to root it out. We can hardly expect anywhere a change to be wrought upon the passing generation; but whoever lives to see the third generation from the present time, will find me, if I am not greatly mistaken, a terrestrial Paradise; the seeds are now sowing in perilous times, in spite of all opposition, and posterity will reap abundant fruits, when we and perhaps our children lie mouldering in the dust.

"Dublin, July, 1823."

TO JOHN BULL,

ZACHARY MACAULAY, ESQ.

SIR—As you have of late directed the attention of your readers to the public conduct of this gentleman, I wish to ask whether the following paragraph, which has appeared in the Morning Chronicle the Liverpool, and other papers, (and to which I have not seen any contradiction) is a puff or a hoax.—I am, Sir, yours, &c. ANTE-HUMBUG.

"It will be satisfactory to our readers to learn that MR. ZACHARY MACAULAY has made an offer of his personal services to the society for abolishing the state of slavery throughout the British dominions, proposing to visit those countries in which slavery exists, in order to report to his brethren at home whatever instances of cruelty and mismanagement can be gathered from the slaves themselves. This venerable and disinterested philanthropist will direct his views in the first instance to the Virgin Islands, and to a minute investigation of the state of that most interesting class of people—the female slaves. The motives of love, it is but justice to say, will add fresh lustre to the name of one who, as the chief founder of the prosperous colony of Sierra Leone, deservedly ranks as the HOWARD of the present day. Any communications on this important subject may be addressed to the Secretary of the Society, 18, Aldermanbury; or to Messrs. Macaulay and Hatchard, George-street, Mansion House."

THE LATE STORM.—The accounts received from various parts of the country give a very dreadful detail of the disastrous effects of the storms last week. At Bath the Avon overflowed to an unprecedented extent, it rose fourteen inches higher than at the memorable flood in 1809. The houses in the Dolemeads were under water, which reached to the bed rooms; cries were heard for assistance at an early hour on Saturday morning; a ferry boat was procured by Mr. Nash, the rescued all the inhabitants from their danger. Numerous boats were employed on the lower Bristol road, on the Quay, and the adjacent streets in ferrying the people from their houses.—At Bridgewater the night of Thursday, the bed of the Frome overflowed its banks, and the innabitants of the Weir, and the streets adjoining, were awakened from their slumbers by the rushing of the water into their shops and cellars. At day-break all the low land round Bapsist Mills and Taunton's-bridge was under water; and pigs, sheep, poultry, casks, household utensils, &c. floated down the stream.—On Friday night a fisherman and Wardie, the former foreman of Mr. Moore's manufactory on Dalkeith's Common, brought a package to Keynsham, to be forwarded to their employers, residing at the corner of Old Bond-street, and on returning about nine o'clock they were swept away by the rapidity of the current and both were drowned.—At Melksham trees were blown down in all directions, in some instances attended with serious consequences. The coaches from Devizes were necessitated to pass by another road, and one of them, after coming by Bromham and Sandridge to Melksham, was prevented ingress to the town, by some trees which fell across the road at Lonbourne, and had to go all the way back again.—The Falmouth mail, when within four miles of Exeter, on Saturday, was upset, the violence of the wind having produced such terror in the horses that they refused to proceed, and actually turned back. An elm tree, upwards of 100 years old, the property of the Rev. G. T. Cosserat, at Brampford Speke, was torn up by the roots. A considerable number of cattle have been drowned. About fifty boats were drifted out to sea from Exmouth and the River Exe.—In the neighbourhood of Buckingham the snow and rain, combined with an unusual boisterous wind, formed an almost frightful tempest. Part of a flock of sheep (amounting to nearly 70), the property of Mr. Terry, of Quarendon, were drowned in a field near Eden Mill, and also several belonging to Mr. Gurney, of Aylesbury. A bridge at the entrance of Leighton Buzzard was blown down by the wind, which impeded the progress of the Buckingham and Kidderminster coaches, and numerous other carriages travelling to that place. Men were employed in clearing the roads of trees, which were blown down.—At Bedford—On the banks of the river Ouse is a street called Thames-street, which is built principally of wood. This being inundated, Mr. Bass, of the George Inn, drove down his gig to extricate the inhabitants; but in his effort he, from the depth of the water, lost all command of his horse, and finding himself in a perilous situation, sprung out of his gig and was carried home by a boat. His horse perished, and the life of Mr. Boss is considered in jeopardy. Saturday being market day all business was suspended, as the inlets of the town were entirely impassable. Several houses have been entirely destroyed by the flood.—Around Gloucester, and in the vicinity of Tewkesbury, great devastation was made in the extensive plantations of General Dowdeswell, at Pull Court; entire rows of trees were levelled with the earth; one large elm tree fell across the road at Sedgberrow Bridge, which, united with the high land-flood, for a considerable while entirely interrupted the communication on the Evesham road. Many valuable sheep belonging to Mr. Petley and Mr. Pitway, were drowned in the night.—Upon the arrival of the Bristol mail at Worcester, on Friday morning, considerable surprise was excited at the absence of Godfrey, the guard. Mr. Jones, of the Star and Garter, despatched two men in a post-chaise the route the mail had travelled in quest of him. Near Severn Stoke they discovered the guard lying in the road completely insensible. They placed him in the chaise and brought him to his sister's, in Sidbury, where he now lies in a dangerous state. When at Tewkesbury, he observed he had never before experienced such a journey, and thought he should perish.—The London Mail to Worcester was overturned about two miles on this side Oxford, in consequence of its coming in contact with a stage waggon, owing to the excessive darkness of the night.—At Windsor and round that neighbourhood, the greatest flood that has been known for many years, came very suddenly. Nothing was to be seen from Maidenhead to Chertsey but water over the tops of the hedges. Eton was surrounded with water, and in the streets to such a depth that no one could pass except in a boat or cart; part of the Park wall was thrown down by the violence of the water. No carriages could come to Windsor by Datchet, the water was so deep round the wall. The loss in cattle has been very great.—Coventry and its neighbourhood also felt the effects of the storm. The wind from the north and north-east, during several hours, was most awfully tempestuous, and the rain excessively heavy and incessant. The Cambridge coach was prevented arriving nearer to Northampton than Wellingborough, in consequence of the obstructions upon the road from trees blown across it. At Abington, part of the church, which has lately undergone repair, was blown down. In many places the water had risen to an immense height; and large trees have been blown down in various directions.—Several of the extensive districts of the Fens in the isle of Ely and county of Norfolk are completely overflowed, and considerable losses have been sustained by the occupiers of farms, many sheep having been drowned, and corn and hay-stacks washed away. Many of the mails were stopped on their route by the flood; the road between Hindon and Wincanton, near Salisbury, was rendered impassable by snow, which was so deep as to render it necessary to dig out the coaches.—At Yarmouth, the dreadful gales drove several vessels on shore; the greater part of the crews, however, were saved, owing, in a great measure to the assistance of Captain Manby's apparatus, by which the lives of the crew of the Venus (10 in number) were preserved. The fishing yawl, William and Francis, drove upon the beach near Winterton, and out of seven persons, five of them were washed overboard and drowned; two boys saved themselves by clinging to the mast. On the Norfolk coast, seven sail were driven on shore between Hunstone light-house and Lynn.—Very serious damage has been sustained in the Fens within the counties of Cambridge and Huntingdon. The great banks from the long draught were completely prous, the waters blew them up, thereby inundating many thousand acres of valuable land, and destroying great quantities of corn, hay, and cattle.

A SYSTEM of GEOGRAPHY, by M. MALTE BRUN. 4 vols. 8vo. price 3l.

"M. Malte Brun is probably known to most of our readers as the author of a systematic work on Geography: he is besides the Editor of a Periodical Digest, under the title of 'Nouvelles Annales des Voyages de la Geographie et de la Histoire;' the first as much superior to the compilations of our Guthries and Finkertons, as the other is to the garbled productions of our Trustees and Masters."—Quarterly Review, vol. xxii.

Vol. I. Is occupied with Mathematical, Physical, and Political Geography.

Vol. 2. Asia in general, Turkey, Arabia, Persia, Siberia, Japanese Islands, China, and Thibet.

Vol. 3. Indostan, Chin, India, and Oceanica.

Vol. 4 Africa and the adjacent Islands.

Vol. 5. Containing the Description of America, is now in the press.

Vols. 6 and 7, which contain the Description of Europe, are nearly ready for publication.

The Editor of the English edition has availed himself, not only of the suggestions of the author M. Malte Brun, but of the latest accounts of Voyages and Travels, the most important Geographical and Statistical Works, Parliamentary Reports, &c. to accommodate this publication to the present advanced state of Geographical Science.

ORIGINAL EAST INDIA WAREHOUSE, 66, New Bond-street, near Brook street.—MOON and RUCKLAND are giving the fullest value for every SHAWL that is sent to them, of any kind, Indian, Persian, or Paradise, and other Oriental Curiosities.—P.S. Ladies desirous of purchasing BRITISH SHAWLS and SCARFS, of the first quality and newest patterns, are respectfully invited to inspect the largest Stock in London, at full 20 per cent. under the usual prices, for ready money.

EDMONDSON and RODHAM, 125, New Bond-street, ever thankful for the least encouragement they receive from the Public, which has stimulated them to increased exertions, beg to inform the Nobility and Gentry that they have recently imported into this country an extensive assortment of rare and valuable FURS, which they are enabled, under the peculiarity of the different purchases made by their agents abroad, to submit on terms the most economical. It gives them great pleasure in acknowledging the very liberal support they have received in the manufacture of their Silks, which they have brought to such approved perfection, in addition to their Shawls, made under their immediate superintendence, at Edinburgh, and which have met with such decided approbation by Parisians, who have visited this country, as to give them great satisfaction in the assurance they have received of the superiority of their Saxony Wool Habit Cloths, Fancy Ribbons, of the most novel French designs, and every article they have laid in adapted to the season; and they are happy in having obliterated the long-existing prejudice towards the system of New Bond-street, by the terms which no other establishment has hitherto submitted.—125, New Bond-street.

TEN THOUSAND POUNDS WORTH of RICH SILK and DRAPERY GOODS are now SELLING OFF, by order of the Executors of the late Mr. J. Richardson, upon the Premises, 111, Oxford-street, corner of Regent Circus.—As the lease of the house is disposed of, and the new proprietors enter at Christmas, the Executors have made a greater reduction than under any other less urgent case they would think correct, for the purpose of selling off the Stock by the 21st of Dec. as the whole must be cleared by that time. In order to dispose of their rich gros de Naples and levantines, they have made up a variety of opera cloaks, which they intend offering to the public at half the prices generally charged for them. They have also on hand a beautiful collection of sable, chinchilla, fitch, ermine, and other muffs, and tippets, the whole of the skins; 421 real Sicilian damask cloths, with napkins to match, a little soiled; 20 pieces real Russia sheeting full 3 yds wide, without a seam, and a few pieces stout ditto for servants, 9d. a yd; fine Irish sheeting, 1l yd wide, 2l.d.; 426 pieces of fine Colerain linen, soiled, at 11d. a yard; real Witney blankets, large size, 8s. 6d. a pair; large counterpanes, 5s. 3d.; fine hair cloths, 9s. 6d. in all colours, many soiled; 500 pieces large assortment of Bengal and India shawls and scarfs; cambric handkerchiefs, 2½ per doz. and the largest size 5s. 6d. cloaks, 10s. 6d. The Stock must be cleared by the 21st Dec. by order of the Executor of the late Mr. Richardson, at 111, Oxford-street, corner of Regent Circus.

GRAFTON HOUSE, 274, HIGH HOLBORN, facing Red Lion street, Wholesale and Retail FUR WAREHOUSE.—ROBERT GUMWOOD most respectfully solicits the immediate attention of the Nobility, Gentry, and Public to his superior and choice Stock of Winter Goods, consisting of Furs, Pelisse Cloths, Cloaks, Welch Flannels, Silk Mercery, Drapery, Haberdashery, Hosiery, Gloves, &c. &c. Beautiful Chinchilla muffs, 30s. 33s. and 36s.; Fitch ditto, 20s. 22s. and 25s.; Squirrel back, 18s.; Ermine, 11s. 6d.; real Sable, 23s. 30s. and 38s.; pelisse cloths for charity, 20d. 2s. and 2s. 6d. per yard, 9d.; Merino wool, various colours, 5s. 6d.; habits, 7s. 9d. and 10s. 6d. the best superfine, 12s. 6d.; fashionable coloured cloaks, 6s. 9d.; large size 7s. 9d and 9s.; stuffs for ditto, 7½d.; twilled ditto, figured; Welch Flannels, yd-wide, 12d. to 8s. 6d.—N.B. Muffs repaired or exchanged. Pelerines, Flounces, and Trimmings of every description.—Two respectable young men wanted immediately.

GUNS, PLATE, and PLATED GOODS.—JAMES COLLINS (who for several years conducted the business at Wilson's old established Warehouse, No. 12, Piccadilly-go-lane, Regent-street) begs to inform the Nobility and Gentry, and in consequence of the late Proprietor having relinquished the business in his favour, he has opened a Shop at No. 12, Vigo-lane, where he intends to carry on the Business upon the same plan which has hitherto given such general satisfaction. He has just selected a large and elegant assortment of Plate and Sheffield Plated Goods, of the most modern manufacture and design, and has on sale a large variety of town-made Guns and Pistols, &c. by all the principal London makers. J. C. flatters himself from the length of time he conducted Mr. Wilson's business, and the consequent experience he has gained, the Public will be induced to favour him with that encouragement and support which the old concern so long enjoyed.

RECTIFIED SPERM OIL, 4s. 9d. PER GALLON.

UPTON and CO. Oilmen and Colour Manufacturers, 64, Queen-street, Cheapside, most respectfully acquaint the Public, that by a process entirely new, they are enabled to sell a Sperm Oil so highly rectified as to equal in purity Sphits of Wine. This Oil being in the first instance of the finest quality, and afterwards completely cleansed from every impurity there is no waste, and its flame is equal in brilliancy to the best Gas, with the superior strength and steadiness of an Oil Light. Its cheapness is its excellence that it will burn well in every kind of Lamp.—N.B. Other Lamp Oils from 2s. 3d. to 3s. 9d. per gallon; Linseed Oil 2s. 6d. and Turpentine 5s. per gallon.

THE ROYAL FAMILY, and LADIES and GENTLEMEN may rely on it, they will not have a hair fall off or turn grey, by now using Prince's celebrated Russia Oil, as it is impregnated with an extra valuable ingredient, through which it has made the Russia Oil the greatest nourisher and preserver to the hair in the universe, will make it grow thick and long, and prevent its falling off or ever turning grey; and is such a nourisher to the roots of the hair, that if it even has begun to turn grey, will restore it again to its natural colour, and, if used often it will never turn grey again, and is sure to clear the head from infancy to old age, and will always keep the head and hair clean and beautiful. Gentlemen who have lost their hair, and have the least sign of roots of hair remaining, by using regularly, for a few months, Prince's Improved Russia Oil, with the extra valuable ingredient, will be sure to restore it, and produce a fine head of hair, which hundreds have experienced. Even Medical Gentlemen have published, in the Gazette of Health, that Prince's Russia Oil is superior to any Oil for the hair, and will do, in cases of baldness and weak hair what can possibly be done.

It is no wonder that Ladies and Gentlemen have complained of late of the Russia Oil not being of service to the hair, as they have found out that unprincipled persons have sold them counterfeits; therefore ladies and gentlemen ought to be particular and aware of a respectable person.—Ask for Prince's Improved Russia Oil. The ounce bottle, 5s.; or a large bottle, containing 5 ounces, for 11. is a saving.—Sold by the Sole Proprietor, A. Prince, No. 9, Poland street, Oxford street, near the Pantheon; and by most principal perfumers and medicine venders.

MISS M. TREE.

WE are quite aware of Theatrical manœuverings and political indispositions, and we confess, knowing the sensitive delicacy of public performers touching their dignity, we might have been induced to attribute the sudden illness of Miss TREE on the night previous to the intended performance of the new play at Covent Garden, to a dislike to the part assigned to her, or a disinclination to be associated with the quadruped actors of that Theatre. With this pre-disposition to doubt, (which we certainly were not led to feel, by any previous exhibition of similar whims on the part of the young lady,) we were not very much surprised at seeing a paragraph, evidently concocted by the Committee of Management, in the Courier one evening last week, which we have not at hand to quote, but the tendency of which, was evidently to awaken a spirit of disapprobation on the part of the public against Miss TREE.

This paragraph, however much it pained us to see gentlemen combining to attract displeasure to one of their most popular and serviceable performers, confirmed us, as we before said, in our suspicions, that Miss TREE had been playing the management a sly trick; and we lamented the justice of our first view of the case. Little did we imagine that at the very period of the publication of the paragraph in question, the MANAGEMENT were in possession of the following letter from the father of the young lady, enclosing a certificate from her physician:—

Monday, Nov. 3, 1823.

"MY DEAR SIR—During the last week, and most particularly since the rehearsal on Saturday, my daughter has been extremely unwell, and it is with real regret that I find myself obliged to forward to you this morning a certificate from her medical adviser, who informs me that she requires a secession from labour for eight or ten days, before she can with safety resume her professional labours.

"I have delayed writing until this morning, in the hope of obtaining permission for her attendance at the Theatre; but as that is at present impracticable, I can only deplore the necessity, and trust that you may be enabled to make your arrangements without her.—I am, dear Sir, your obedient servant.

(Signed) M. TREE."

CERTIFICATE.

"I hereby certify, that Miss M. TREE is at present very much indisposed; there is a great degree of general weakness and relaxation of her frame, with occasional spasms affecting the chest and stomach. She is incapable of using any great exertion, and it appears to me that rest and quiet for some weeks will be requisite for her health, which otherwise might materially suffer from a relapse of her former severe indisposition.

(Signed) "JOHN MITCHELL, M D."

"November 3, 1823."

We ought to observe, that we have no authority for saying that the paragraph to which we allude, came direct from the Management, but the nature and character of it certainly give that impression. Should it be so, we cannot but express our surprise, that because the Theatre in Covent Garden has lately made the acquisition of Miss PATON, the conductors should necessarily stigmatize or cast unfavourable shadows over the public conduct of Miss TREE, who was, at all events, till recently, the "very prop which did sustain their House."

We hate comparisons, but we believe Miss TREE must know enough of herself never to shrink from competition with any vocal performer at Covent Garden Theatre. We know nothing of Miss TREE personally, we never exchanged one syllable with her, and in all human probability never shall, but we will vindicate the weak against the powerful, the amiable and exemplary individual, the able and fascinating public performer, against any thing like a combination or party to injure or run her down, and as Miss PATON'S name has been most invidiously introduced into this discussion by more than one newspaper during the week, we cannot refrain from observing that Miss M. TREE has, as Miss PATON had, when she suddenly quitted the Haymarket (in somewhat better health) the certificate of a physician; and that Miss TREE has not (like Miss PATON) with such a certificate in her hand, taken the opportunity of traversing the country from London to Manchester, and from Manchester to Exeter, to sing in public.

Those who see the delicacy of Miss TREE'S constitution —those who admire genuine talent, and unassuming excellence, will join with us in supporting her against a mean attempt to injure her professional reputation, by mis-representing the cause and nature of an illness evidently occasioned by her exertions in the service of the public, to the great advantage of the theatre to which she is attached.

We subjoin the following letter, which we received last night from MR. BISHOP:—

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR,—I am at all times most unwilling to intrude myself on public notice in such a shape as this, but some of the Daily Newspapers having lately the unfair to speculate rather freely on the motives of Miss M. TREE, Miss PATON, and myself, in regard to the distribution of music in the last new Opera of "Cortez," it is become my duty to attempt some elucidation of an affair which has been so maliciously misrepresented. The plain truth, Sir, is, that not one song has been added to the part as originally written for Miss PATON in the above Opera, nor was it even asked for by that lady; my "gallantry" was therefore not put to any test. And, that Miss M. TREE should have "rejected the part" because Miss PATON had asked for, and received an additional song, is evidently but an "invention" of her enemies; as I not only believe her incapable of such an act, but am convinced, from the state in which I observed her voice was, at the last rehearsal she was capable of attending, (the Saturday previous to the performance of the piece), that real, and severe illness, and illness ONLY, has been the cause of her not appearing in this Opera!

Hoping, from your professions of justice towards Theatricals, that this letter may not be deemed troublesome or uncalled for, and that you will do me the favour to allow it a place in your paper, I have the honour to remain, Sir, very obediently your's,

HENRY R. BISHOP.

Theatre Royal, Covent Garden, Nov. 3, 1823.

The Antelope has been commissioned at Chatham by Lieutenant Hire, for the purpose of conveying a considerable number of convicts to Bermuda, where docks are building, and other considerable naval plans projected. The Antelope will lie at the Island five years.

PIDDING and Co. acquaint the public that the Whole Ticket, No. 3,606, drawn last Friday, October 31, a Prize of £20,000 was sold to a gentleman of the Stock Exchange; they have also the pleasure to announce that No. 4,645, another Prize of £ 60 , drawn on the same day, was sold in one Quarter, and 12 Sixteenth Shares, at their Office, where the holders may immediately receive the amount. Thus the Public, on that day, have again gained at PIDDING'S more Capital Prize Money than at any other Office.—FRIDAY, November 14, will be the last Day of Drawing, when all the remaining Capitals of £20,000, £10,000, £1,000, &c. must come up. Tickets and Shares, warranted undrawn, continue on Sale at the Lucky Corner, 1, Cornhill.

LATEST NEWS.

Advices from Bayonne to the 2d inst. arrived yesterday, which state that Gen. Mendez Vigo has been conveyed under a strong escort to Bordeaux, and confined in the fort of Hat.

MADRID, Oct. 25.—Ferdinand still so far depends on his resources that he has already given orders to send to the Havannah and then to that he has already given orders to send to the Havannah and then to Lima, the poor remains of the Spanish navy, consisting of the Asia, ship of the line, two frigates, a corvette, and two brigs. This expedition will be seconded by some French vessels, which will join it in America. It is also affirmed that the French commerce will enjoy henceforth, at the Havannah, and in the colonies which are not yet independent, several important privileges.—The journey of his Royal Highness to Madrid, preceded by the head-quarters, are indications of the return of part of the army to France, which, at the same time, will scour the provinces of Alicant, Carthagena, and Castille, on the other, on the one side, and Andalusia, La Mancha, and Arragon, on the other.

Intelligence reached town from Paris last night, that the King of France was alarmingly ill, occasioned by an attack of gout in the stomach.

Lisbon papers were received yesterday to the 26th ult. They contain no news whatever relative to Portugal itself or to Brazil. Among the naval arrivals are several from Pernambuco; one of which had 350 soldiers on board; the other brought only a few soldiers. A ship of war, in nine days from Madeira, announced that tranquillity prevailed in that Island. Some vessels are mentioned as on the eve of sailing for Pernambuco and Rio de Janeiro.

Advices have been received, viâ Bucharest, from Constantinople, dated on the 27th of September, being later by two days than the letters received by the regular mail, which induce the belief that another revolution has broken out in the Turkish capital.

Sir George Nayler, Garter King at Arms, and the suite attached to his mission to the King of Portugal with the Most Noble Order of the Garter, are returned to England.

In the Court of King's Bench, yesterday, Mr. Denman moved for a Rule to shew cause why a new trial should not be had in the case of the King v. Harney and Chapman. The ground upon which he moved, was, that the law had not been correctly laid down by the Lord Chief Justice on the trial. The Learned Gentleman contended, that it was not libellous to state a falsity of any person, without a criminal intention being proved on the part of the person publishing the falsity. The Court, however, after the arguments of Mr. Denman and Mr. Brougham, in support of the motion, was of opinion that the directions given by the Chief Justice were correct, and refused the motion for a new trial.

In the Arches Court, yesterday, in the case of Street v. Street, the Decree was affirmed. It was an appeal on the part of the husband against the judgment of the Consistorial Court, at Exeter, which pronounced for the divorce between the parties, on account of the adultery committed by the husband, and allowed his wife 11. 7s. 6d. in addition to 100l. per annum, alimony. The husband appealed against the addition, but the Court thought that the Court below had taken a correct view of the case, and decided accordingly.

At Union Hall, yesterday, Fanny Taylor was charged with firing a pistol, and wounding a young man named Arnold, in the employ of a grocer named Sentance, in the Borough. The cause assigned was unrequited love.—She was remanded.

At Marlborough-street, yesterday, Josiah Taylor was charged with keeping a common gambling-house, at No. 58, Pall-mall. He denied being the owner or occupier of the house, but he was held to bail to answer the complaint at the Sessions.

At Mary-le-Bone Office, yesterday, Mr. Joseph Wilfred Parkins was charged with assaulting John Owen, a carpenter, who lodged in a house belonging to him in Riding-house-lane. He was ordered to find bail.

At Bow-street, yesterday, Henry Holloway, a lad about thirteen years of age, was fully committed, for picking the pocket of Thomas Muslin. The prosecutor suddenly missed his handkerchief, and immediately perceiving the prisoner tucking something into his breast, he pursued and took the lad into custody. The handkerchief was not found upon him, but Jones saw him throw it into a cart.

Charles Mason, stable keeper, of Hyde Park Corner and Welsden, Middlesex, was fined in the mitigated penalty of 20s. for not having his name printed at length on his cart, he having merely the initial C, and not the word Charles prefixed before the surname of Mason.

In our last paper, we noticed an accident which happened to a young gentleman named Davies, belonging to the 2d Reg. of Dragoon Guards at Birmingham—we have since received a letter from Mr. W. Fuller of Upper Tooting, from which we are happy to learn that the accident is not so serious as was stated. Mr. F. says—"The surgeon of that regiment informs me, that not only will the hand be saved, but that he has a confident expectation of its continuing useful."

An enquiry took place yesterday morning before the Rev. Dr. Goodenough, at Westminster School, respecting a serious injury which one of the scholars (Sir Roger Kynaston) met with at the school on the 5th Nov. He was amusing himself with the other boys, by discharging fireworks in Dean's-yard, of which he had a great quantity in his pockets—a spark from the other fireworks fell into his pocket, the whole exploded, and he was dreadfully burned, so that his life is considered in danger.

At Conner's request has been held at the Committee-room of Saint George's Workhouse in the East, on the unfortunate paupers burned to death at the late fire:—John Pritchard, aged 80; Agnes Sadler, aged 70; Rebecca Cook, aged 36; Kitty Hall, aged 26, and Ann Hainsley, aged 70;—when it was proved that the fire was occasioned by a pauper lighting his pipe, the sparks from which fell into a quantity of tow in the room. The paupers who perished were imbecile, and incapable of assisting themselves to escape destruction. Verdict—"Accidentally burned to death."

NEXT FRIDAY, all the Prizes, all the Capitals, and all the Tickets and Shares must be drawn, as the Lottery finishes that day, consequently the £20 000, the £10,000, and all the other Capitals must then be drawn: and it is not because B. Sil has to boast so splendid a list of Capitals already sold by him, that he has less chance for those which remain, and many think his previous success is only the forerunner of further good fortune. We find he has already sold in the present Lottery—18 564 £20,000 in shares: 393 £1,000 whole ticket: 13 943 £500 in shares: 6 826 £500 whole ticket: 2,794 £300 in shares; 12,121 £300 in shares; 9,406 £200 in shares; 13,547 £200 in shares, &c.

PRICE OF STOCKS AT THE CLOSE, SATURDAY.

The principal business doing this week in the money market has been in the Foreign Securities, which have been somewhat agitated. This particularly applies to the South American Bonds, of which the Chili went down as low as 64, being a fall of 7 per cent since last week. They have, however, subsequently rallied, and are doing at 67. Columbian Bonds are also somewhat heavy at 61¼, and have been as low as 60¾. Spanish have fluctuated from 27 to 28, and in other Foreign Stock we cannot notice any alteration. Our own Consols for Account have been looking up; they opened at 83¾, and are now at the close 82.

ONE HUNDRED POUNDS REWARD.—THEVENOT, Perfumer, No. 7, New Bond street, London, aware that Perfumery Goods are sold under his Name, and with his Labels, at the different Perfumers in the United Kingdom, it becomes an imperious duty for him to declare, that he does not supply wholesale any Dealer whatever, either in London or the Country, that goods so sold are without his authority, and counterfeits. Entreating the Public, and the Gentry in particular, to be on their guard against such impositions, he leaves to a liberal Public to appreciate the injury he sustains by these base artifices, and concludes by offering the above Reward to the conviction of any one so illegally trading.

JOHN SALTER, 35, Strand, Goldsmith, Silversmith, and Sword Cutler to his Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex, respectfully returns his most grateful thanks to the Nobility, Gentry, his Friends, and the Public, who have so liberally supported him during 24 years, takes this opportunity to inform them that he has REBUILT the HOUSE, No 73, corner of the Adelphi (lately destroyed by fire) where he has laid in a new and fashionable assortment of Goods, such as he trusts will merit the continuance of their favours, support, and approbation; every attention has been paid to increase the accommodation of his friends, and he is determined to meet the ideas by selling the best articles on the very lowest terms. The old stock selling at 35, very cheap, and the house to be let.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS.—The Memorial Bearnais states, that 9,000 cavalry and 5,000 infantry, are to be cantoned this winter in the depôt of the Lower Pyrenees. The district of Orthez will be more particularly destined for the cavalry. The contracts for forage have been concluded for the space of four months.

According to a Secret Convention, there will be put at the disposition of Generals Mina and Rotten, a ship to carry them to France, where, it is said, they have obtained permission to reside.—Pilote.

The editor of the Journal Politique et Literaire de la Cote d'Or, is cited to appear on the 21st inst. before the Royal Court of Dijon, in full assembly, at the suit of M. the Procureur-General, who demands the suspension of the Journal during the space of a month, on account of its tendency.

A horrible assassination was yesterday attempted on the person of a venerable Greek priest, aged 80 years, named Isaakarus. About 10 o'clock in the morning cries were heard issuing from the apartment which he occupied, at No. 361, Rue St. Honore. On breaking open the locked door they found the old man prostrate at the feet of his assassin, who had attempted to murder him with a razor, which he still held in his hands. He was arrested and handed over to a patrole of the Royal Guard. He was taken to the Prefecture de Police. The old man was conveyed to the Hospital de la Charité, where he lies in a precarious state. It is supposed that his long bushy beard obstructed the razor, and prevented the attempt being immediately fatal.—Paris Paper, Tuesday.

MADRID, Nov. 5.—The Second Chamber of the Senores Alcaldes of the Royal Household and Court, have just pronounced the following Sentence:—"Don Raphael Riego is condemned to the punishment of the gibbet. He shall be conducted to the place of execution passing through the most frequented streets of the capital. His property shall be confiscated to the King; he is besides condemned in the costs of the suit." The prisoner has been placed, at ten o'clock this morning, in the Chapel.

This morning his Royal Highness the Duke d'Angoulemе left this city for Paris; we are assured that previously to his departure he received despatches, announcing the capitulation of Barcelona, Tarragona, and Carthagena.

ADDRESS OF THE GRANDEES OF SPAIN TO HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE DUKE D'ANGOULEME.

"ILLUSTRIOUS DUKE—The class of the Grandees of Spain who, on the 27th of May last, had the honour to offer to your Royal Highness the expression of their respective sentiments towards your Illustrious Person, and their sincere wishes for the happy success of the enterprize which had been confided to your valour and prudence, by your August Uncle, in the name of Europe, have now the flattering satisfaction to congratulate your Royal Highness on its happy and prompt result, and to manifest their gratitude for the incomparable benefit of having placed our legitimate Sovereign in a state to govern freely and wisely. Your Royal Highness has converted into prediction the principal of our wishes, and those of all good Spaniards. On them depend the inestimable enjoyment of that peace, order, and justice, which your Royal Highness proposes to re-establish among us. Certainly, the glory of having succeeded in such heroic exploits will rank the name of your Royal Highness among those of the most illustrious warriors. Generous France, enlightened Europe, and humanity, are indebted to you for the most signal benefits. Your name and your deeds will be transmitted in our country from generation to generation, with our eternal and profound gratitude, and the remembrance of the honourable answer which your Royal Highness returned to the Grandees of Spain will be perpetuated in their hearts. 'Your sentiments are those which might be expected from loyal and faithful subjects'—'my desires are conformable to yours.' Our joy, heroic Prince, is in harmony with yours! To prove to you our gratitude, we offer our services to your Royal Highness, and when Heaven shall call you to other exploits worthy of your courage and your talents, we wish you as much happiness, and your country as much glory, as you have given to Spain and to France.

Report of M. the Marshal Duke de Conegliano to his Excellency the Minister at War, dated Barcelona, Nov. 4.:—"M. the Baron—The French troops have to-day taken possession of the fortress and city of Barcelona. The troops of the line of the garrison, consisting of from five to six thousand men, have been divided into four columns, and have marched off for the cantonments assigned to them. Arrangements have been made to insure their subsistence, and for the maintenance of strict discipline amongst them. A superior officer accompanies each of the columns. The volunteer and impressed militia deposed their arms yesterday. Their number amounts to about seven thousand. The fortifications of the city and forts are in the best state. More than three hundred pieces of artillery en bronze were mounted on the ramparts. Considerable stores of provision and ammunition were found. The inhabitants received us with confidence. Perfect order has never ceased to prevail. Every thing indicates that it will not be disturbed. General Vasserot exercises the functions of Governor. The Spanish Officers, charged to signify the ratification of the capitulation to the Governors of Tarragona and Hostalrich have arrived at their destination. About the 6th, or the 7th inst. at the latest, all the fortresses of Catalonia will be occupied by the Royal Allied troops; the complete pacification of this province may, therefore, be regarded as certain.—I have the honour to be, &c.

"The Marshal Duke de CONEGLIANO.

(Signed) "MONCEY."

BARCELONA, Nov. 4.—The French troops took possession of Barcelona this day, conformably to the Convention concluded on the 2d inst. Gen. Vasserot has been appointed Governor. The most perfect order prevails.

TRIAL OF DOCTOR CASTAING FOR POISONING TWO BROTHERS.

[From the Paris Papers of Nov. 10.]

From an early hour this morning, the doors of the Court of Assize were beset by a thronged and anxious multitude.—Tickets of admission had been applied for by all the Foreign Ambassadors and persons of the first distinction, for whom arm-chairs were placed near the seats of the Judges. About 200 places were reserved for the witnesses, the Members of the Bar, and persons who had procured tickets. The space open to the public is not capable of containing more than 100 persons. Upon a table, in front of the President's bureau, several bottles and phials containing chemical preparations were arranged. At half-past ten o'clock a huissier called over the names of the witnesses to the number of 91; 65 of whom are for the prosecution, and 26 for the prisoner. A few moments after the prisoner Castaing was brought in by two gend'armes. He seemed to shrink under the almost palpable impression of the gaze. He was fashionably dressed in a full suit of black, and even appeared to have paid great attention to his toilette. His countenance is rather handsome. His deportment at first was timid, uncertain, and embarrassed, and a deep flush spread itself over his cheeks and forehead on first encountering such a multitude of looks. He, however, soon recovered himself, and the burnlude of looks. He, however, soon recovered himself, and the burnling blush of his face gradually and imperceptibly subsided into habitual paleness and that yellow sallowness the result of anguished feelings and close confinement. At his side, and behind him, were placed eleven gend'armes. At three-quarters past 10 the Judges entered the Court, and the President opened the proceedings. He asked the prisoner the usual questions—his name, age, profession, and last place of residence. The answers were given in so low a tone of voice, that the President called upon him to speak louder.—He then declared his name to be Castaing, his age 27, his professian a physician, and his last domicile to have been in the rue d'enfer (Hell-street.) The President then read to the Jury the formula of their oath, and each, as he was named, pronounced the words, "I swear it!" The President now ordered the huissier to read the indictment, acte d'accusation, recommending the prisoner to listen attentively to its perusal. During the reading of this voluminous document Castaing appeared almost constantly pre-occupied and buried in deep reflection; from time to time he took notes. On the reading of those passages relating to his connexion with a young widow, and where extracts from her letters expressive of tenderness and devotion to him were read, he seemed deeply affected, and evidently struggling to prevent the tears starting to his eyes.—The French Act of Accusation, which differs from our indictment, from its containing not the leading facts only, but the whole of the circumstances and mode of the intended proof, first states the origin and manners of Castaing, the accused. He was, it is said, too young to have acquired much practice as a physician, and was left with a very slight allowance from his relations. He attached himself criminally to a widow who was as poor as himself, by whom he had two children, she having three others by her marriages. It is necessary, however, the Acte says, to acknowledge that there was nothing disgusting in this union, beyond the criminality of their living in an unmarried state, as there appears to have been a complete union of hearts, Castaing always speaking of the mother of his children as his wife, and with the most entire affection. Castaing, notwithstanding the narrowness of his means from these circumstances, was "devoured with an evident desire of making a fortune." He studied with assiduity, but turned particular attention to the knowledge of the poisons. Castaing was on terms of the closest friendship with H. and A. Ballet, for whom he acted as physician. Hippolyte, who was the elder brother, and had inherited the greater share of the father's property, was consumptive. He had intended, it is alleged, to leave the bulk of his property to his half-sister, a Madame Martignon, and had made a will to this effect. It is alleged that Castaing had informed Auguste that this will was deposited with a M. Lebret, and that the only means of getting at it was by paying this Lebret 100,000 francs. To this plan Auguste consented. Hippolyte was attacked by illness, and after four days, died, on the 18th of September, 1822. The only circumstances which have led to the presumption that he was poisoned by Castaing, are the necessities of the latter, his having entertained the project of selling the will to the other brother—his having, on the 2d of September, purchased a quantity of acetate of morphine, the active principle of opium, and one of the recently discovered vegetable poisons. After the death of Hippolyte, Castaing pretended to go to Lebret with the 100,000 francs, and in reality brought the will himself to Auguste, who destroyed it. In May, 1822, Castaing was so poor that he was obliged to make the greatest efforts to pay a long standing debt of 600 francs; but in October, 1822, he lent his mother 30,000 francs, his mistress 4,000 francs, and placed 66,000 francs in the funds, not in his own name, but in that of his brother. He gave in prison an account of an uncle having left him these one hundred thousand francs, which turns out to be entirely an invention. After this time the surviving brother, Auguste, (irritated against his half-sister, Martignon, for her supposed attempts to deprive him of his succession,) was induced to make a will, in which he constituted Castaing his sole heir. In May last he deposited this will with a notary, to whom he said the testator had been attacked with spitting of blood, which was entirely false. There seems in this month to have been some coolness between the two friends, as Auguste had been warned by a Miss Percillie, an actress with whom he was connected, of the projects of Castaing on his fortune. On the 29th of May, however, Auguste and Castaing went on an excursion to St. Germain and St. Cloud, a short distance from Paris, and it is remarked as singular in the act of accusation that this journey was made alone in a hired carriage, when Auguste Ballet had an equipage and servants unemployed. On the 30th of May, in the evening, they went to the inn (the Tete Noire—Black Head,) at St. Cloud, where Castaing asked for some mulled wine for his friend, and requested the waiter not to put sugar in it, as they had bought sugar on their walk. He had also brought lemons. The sugar and lemon were mixed with the wine without witnesses. Castaing, after the wine was mixed, left the room to visit a female servant who was ill in the inn. Auguste drank some of the wine, but complained that it was too bitter to drink much. He had, however, a very restless night, and in the morning was too ill to rise. Castaing, in the morning, rose at four o'clock, and told the domestics that he was going to take an airing in the park; but it is to be proved that he went to Paris, where he purchased a quantity of emetine (the active principle of ipecaccanha,) a powerful poison, and of acetate of morphine. When he returned he asked for some cold milk, which he gave to Auguste, who was immediately after seized with vomiting and purging. M. Pigache, a physician of the place, was called in, who prescribed, but his prescriptions were not executed. M. Pigache returned and bled the patient, who appeared relieved; he proposed to renew the bleeding, but Castaing dissuaded it. Pigache ordered tranquillizing potion, Castaing administered some in a saucer, three minutes after the patient became senseless, and never recovered. A physician was, after some delay, sent for from Paris, and the unfortunate Auguste expired amidst the tears and lamentations of Castaing.—The extraordinary progress of the disease excited suspicion in the other medical men. The body was opened, and it appeared that the symptoms were such as might have proceeded from morphine and emetine, though similar symptoms might have proceeded from natural maladies. Castaing had caused every thing which could lead to an examination of the evacuations to be removed. A great many circumstances are adduced to add to the presumptions against Castaing. His denying any knowledge of the existence of the will in his favour; his agitation during the opening of the body; his having gone privately from St. Cloud to Paris to consult with the notary; the absurdity of the account he had given of the purpose for which he had purchased the poison; viz. to destroy dogs and cats which had made a noise; the disappearance of this poison without it having been applied to any such purpose; the absurdity of a physician going to Paris to purchase emetine and morphine to poison dogs and cats, for whom arsenic, as the act expresses it, would have been "very good;" finally, his endeavouring to conceal the fact of his purchasing it, and many other minor facts, are all made to contribute to the proof of his guilt.

The Clerk having finished reading the Act of Accusation—sixty-five witnesses for the Crown were ordered to withdraw, and twenty-six for the defence, who left the Court. Castaing was examined at some length by the President, his examination generally went to a denial of the facts charged against him, and the Court adjourned. On Tuesday the prisoner was again examined, and continued to some length.

Tuesday evening, a meeting of mechanics was held at the Crown and Anchor in the Strand, for the purpose of forming a Mechanics' Institute. The objects of the meeting were stated by Dr. Birkbeck. He detailed the origin and progress of a similar institution at Glasgow, the existence of which had given rise to the present meeting. It was his sincere wish to see the mechanics of the first city in the world possess such an institution, and enjoy similar advantages. Resolutions were then adopted for furthering the objects of the professor.

MURDER OF MR. WEARE.

Orders have been issued from high official authority to [illegible] further communication of intelligence respecting the prisoner, additional precautions have been taken for the frustration of [illegible] tempt at rescue. In lieu of one watchman to the ward, six are employed, relieving each other in turn—two going to the door of the gaol within the outer wall, constantly, during the day and night. There are also several officers from Bow-street in Hertford, for the purpose of recognising any of the associates of the prisoners, who they hazard a visit.

An order has been issued to the Governor of the gaol, prohibiting the admission of any person to even a sight of either of the [illegible] soners confined there; and recommending it to all gentlemen in the commission of the peace, not being visiting Magistrates to the gaol, to forego the exercise of their usual privilege; this order was [illegible] upwards of twenty Magistrates of the neighbourhood. A warrant some days since issued for the apprehension of Lemmon, who is supposed to be now in Paris, which being backed by the French Ambassador to the Court of St. James's, was addressed and [illegible] Sir C. Stewart, to be laid before the French Minister of Police.

The Magistrates who have been engaged in the investigation of this soul harrowing transaction, have at last brought their labours to a close. Among the subjects to which they have directed their attention, has been the reported mysterious disappearance some [illegible] while ago from the cottage, of a female in an advanced state of pregnancy. She is said to have been the daughter of a clergyman, and to have been seduced by one of the gang.

About a week ago a man brought a part of a box coat to the office in Bow-street, which he said he found in Brook-street, Blood-street, on the morning after the murder. It had marks of blood and dirt upon it, and the sleeves and skirts had been cut off. The body of the box has since been identified as the property of Weare. It remains in the care of Bishop, at Bow-street.

Some of the officers of Marlborough-street office having received information that two persons had hired lodgings and removed [illegible] to No. 4, Cumberland-street, New-road, remained [illegible] woman of the house informed them, that on Monday the 28th of October, two men, one of them a tall man, wearing a white hat, and the other much shorter, dressed in shabby-black clothes, agreed to hire the apartments on her first floor by the week. The man with the white hat said he should occasionally sleep there, and had some valuable furniture he should move in. He gave his name as Mr. Brown, and referred for his character to a Mrs. Hunt, No. 29, in the same street. she received from Mrs. Hunt a most favourable character of Mr. Brown. The next day a cart was driven to the door, accompanied by the same two men, containing a quantity of furniture, including several feather beds, the whole of which were deposited in the apartments, and the landlady received strict injunction to be very careful of the property, particularly the feather beds. From that time until the Tuesday after the murder of Mr. Weare, she saw nothing of either of the two men, but on that morning, the shabby-looking man called (whom she now has no doubt was Joseph Hunt) called about [illegible] o'clock, and inquired if Mr. Brown was at home. She replied that he was not. He then went away, but had not been gone above a quarter before he returned, accompanied by Brown (Thurtell), who she has no doubt now was waiting for him at the time, and merely sent him to reconnoitre the premises. Brown (or Thurtell) still had the white hat on, and he also inquired very anxiously about a black hat, which he said he expected to be sent there for him. They both stopped in the apartments only a few minutes, and took their departure after looking the rooms, and Brown saying he should be back in a day or two; since she has never seen any thing more of them. Plank, one of the officers, on hearing this explicit statement from the woman, had no doubt whatever that Thurtell and Hunt were the parties who had hired the apartments, and without further delay instantly burst open the door of the apartments, and found a dressing case, in which was contained a set of razors with the name "John Thurtell, Cork, Haymarket," engraved at full length on them. He next forced open a large chest, and found a variety of property, among which were several shirts marked "T. S. T." supposed to mean Thomas and Sarah Thurtell.—The officers having identified the suspected parties with the lodgings, sealed the doors of the rooms, until communication of the circumstances should be made to the magistrates at Watford. They ascertained that Mrs. Hunt, residing at No. 29, is the mother of Joseph Hunt.

The Secretary of State for the Home Department has determined to lend his official aid in the investigation of the circumstances connected with the murder of Mr. Weare. In pursuance of this resolution, Mr. Stafford, the Chief Clerk of Bow-street, has received instructions to take the depositions of such persons as have not yet been examined before the Magistrates at Watford. This, for several reasons, is a judicious arrangement, and as many of the witnesses reside in London, the expence of carrying them backwards and forwards to Watford will be avoided. Added to this, the clothes of Mr. Weare, and other property, found at Hunt's lodgings and elsewhere, being deposited at Bow-street, they can be seen without trouble. The laundress of Mr. Weare on Wednesday gave her testimony. She has waited upon Mr. Weare, at his chambers in Lyon's Inn, for nearly five years, and she speaks with positiveness to all the things found as his property.—James Slack, a dealer in hardware, has also been examined. He lives in Long Acre, and it appears it was from him the spade was purchased for the purpose of digging the grave in which the body of the intended victim was to have been buried. Mr. Slack's description of the person to whom he sold the spade exactly corresponds with the appearance of Hunt before he shaved off his whiskers. The purchase took place on the Thursday before the murder, so that it would seem clear that not only the murder, and the manner of its perpetration, were the subject of a settled plan, but the mode of disposing of the body had also been decidedly fixed.—A carrier in the immediate neighbourhood had been down with his caravan and horses to Gill's Hill cottage a day or two after the murder, and removed some goods up to town from thence. Mr. Conant had this man brought before him. He gave his name Thomas Daffrin, carrier, Old Compton-street, Soho. He stated, that on the Monday after the murder of Mr. Weare, Mr. T. Noyes told him that he must send down a caravan at a very early hour the next (Tuesday) morning to Mr. Probert's cottage, to remove some goods to town. He accordingly did send his man with the caravan and horse. The caravan was loaded, and contained, among other things, a gun-case, shooting-dress, &c.; but just as they were about to depart, Mr. Norris, a Magistrate, ordered the whole to be again unloaded, and every article strictly examined. He being satisfied, suffered the caravan to be re-loaded, and depart. The goods were then conveyed to a house in Titchfield-street; but at this house they refused to take the property in, and the carter was then obliged to convey them to his master's, No. 35, Old Compton-street, where a sheriff's officer seized the whole, and in his possession they now remain. This statement of Daffrin's was corroborated by his man, and the Magistrate seeing nothing to throw suspicion on the conduct of either, They were both discharged.

On the search made in Mr. Weare's chambers, in Lyon's-inn, by his brother, it appears that 23l. in gold and silver was found in one of his drawers, and that none of the other drawers had been forced; hence it is concluded that Hunt did not visit them, as had been suspected. The expence of Mr. Weare's funeral, at Elstree, was 30l. which will be paid out of his effects; but as yet, no trace has been found of the larger sum of which he was supposed to have been possessed.

Mrs. Probert and Miss Noyes are both of them so much indisposed as to keep their beds, and require the attendance of a medical practitioner; they are little disposed to eat, but have every indulgence and attention consistent with the peculiar situation in which they are placed. They are in separate rooms, and both greatly depressed. Mr. Noyes is not ironed; he has a person constantly with him day and night.—Miss and Mr. Noyes are remanded for re-examination.

On Thursday, a Professional Gentleman from Thurtell's family was allowed to open a communication with him, for the purpose of receiving instructions for the defence on the approaching trial. The Magistrates, however, positively refused to allow admission to any second person, or even to admit the gentleman who applied as Solicitor, to have a preliminary conversation with Thurtell, before he undertook his case. The Magistrates said, that that gentleman, if once admitted, and no other, should have the conduct of Thurtell's defence.

On Friday morning, about 11 o'clock, a dreadful accident happened in Smithfield, an infuriated bullock broke from its halter, ran amongst the others, foaming at the mouth and bellowing in a most terrific manner, and the dogs belonging to the drovers increased his fury. A man, in attempting to throw a rope over his horns, was tossed in the air, and fell to the ground with such violence that one of his legs was dreadfully fractured, and his right shoulder dislocated. He was carried on a shutter to the hospital. The bullock made off up St. John-street, towards Islington.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

FRIDAY.—Beer v. Ward.—Mr. Scarlett appeared to move for a new trial in this case. The first time he had the honour to and a third come before his Lordship to pray for a new trial in "Beer v. Ward," he did it, not on the ground that there had been any omission in summing up on the part of the learned Judge who tried the first issue—not on the ground that the verdict had been obtained against evidence—but because certain documents and circumstances had not been laid before the Jury, nor even thought of, but which were afterwards deemed necessary to have the full consideration of a Jury, and therefore the Court granted the new trial. On the present occasion he was the Court granted the new trial. On the present occasion he would studiously avoid saying one word that might be thought disrespectful to the Judge who had tried the second issue—for no man could have a higher respect for any individual than he (Mr. Scarlett) has for that learned Judge—nor would he say any thing that he would not say before that Judge himself, although his grounds of this application for a new trial were upon the partial summing up of the evidence to the Jury, that is to say, the trial having been exceedingly long, on account of an immense deal of documentary, as well as parol evidence, having had to have been gone into, it was not to be wondered, that the Judge should have at the close of the third day's labour, left the case to the Jury, not in that impartial manner, and with all the observations from the Bench upon the newly introduced evidence which this Court would have wished. The Learned Counsel then began to travel into the history of the facts in the case, the question being the legitimacy, or the illegitimacy of a gentleman of the name of William Cotton, but the history having already been so fully and so often before the public, we shall not enter into it at present.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH.

THURSDAY.—The King v. T. Dolby.—Mr. Gurney moved for the judgment of the Court on the defendant, found guilty on an indictment, preferred at the instance of the Constitutional Association, for the publication of certain passages in a work entitled the "Political Dictionary."—The defendant had affidavits, which he handed to the officer. The affidavit of the defendant himself was then read. It set forth that he was not the author of the work prosecuted, and that he had published it merely as a political squib or jest, without any ideas that it was of pernicious tendency. As soon as he knew that a bill of indictment was found against him, he desisted from selling the work, a very few copies of which had been put into circulation, and had during the last two years altogether refrained from selling any political works. He had carried on a different branch of his trade, and was now ready to give up all the copies of the libel. The prosecution had already involved him in much pecuniary difficulty, and had lessened his means of providing for a family of four young children. His wife, to whom he was tenderly attached, and who rendered him great assistance, not only in the management of his family, but in his business, had died since the commencement of this prosecution: and, as he and her medical attendants believed, from the alarm and distress which she felt at a prosecution which she feared, from the character of the association, would be pressed to the utmost against him. He was arrested on the 18th of May, 1821, without any notice, taken to the King's Bench, and treated with much asperity by the solicitor for the prosecution. His wife was seized with convulsions, and remained ill till she died, having frequently expressed her apprehensions that the proceedings would terminate in his ruin. He was now unable to pay any large fine, and a separation from his business and family would probably be attended with fatal results to both.

An affidavit of Mr. Alderman Key was read, stating that he had known the defendant for several years, but particularly for the last two years, and that he considered him as a sober, industrious, and honest man. He believed that the defendant had given up the sale of all political books, and was engaged in works of an unexceptionable and beneficial kind, to which his personal attention was requisite.

The affidavit of Mr. John Langley, surgeon, of Newcastle-street, Strand, stated, that the deponent was called in haste on the 18th of May, 1821, to attend Mrs. Dolby, whom he found convulsed, and afflicted with violent spasms. Judging that she had been affected by some recent occurrence, he questioned her when she was a little recovered, and she imputed her illness to the arrest of her husband and her own apprehensions excited by the harsh conduct of the attorney. He attended her till her death, and with Dr. Davies, her physician, believed it was occasioned by distress of mind. He had attended the family of the defendant for some time, and believed him to be unexceptionable in his domestic relations.

Mr. Gurney said, that having heard those affidavits, he wished the case to stand over till Monday, that inquiries might be made, and probably the defendant would not lose by the delay.

The defendant immediately assented.

FRIDAY.—The King v. Evan Maudesley—Mr. Williams moved for a writ of Habeas Corpus to bring up from Lancaster gaol the defendant, Evan Maudesley, a fustian cutter, for the purpose of being admitted to bail. The verdict of the Coroner's Jury had found the defendant guilty of manslaughter, in respect to a female apprentice, Matilda Lee, who died in his service. The child, Matilda Lee, was bound by the parish of Manchester to the defendant in 1818. She was then 11 years of age. About a year and a half ago, she was ill of a fever. A surgeon attended her until she was well. A month since she was ill of diarrhœa; a surgeon again attended her, and had recourse to medicines which did not produce the desired effect, and the girl died. The affidavits stated that the prisoner and his wife behaved well to the girl.—The Court granted the Writ.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

FRIDAY.—Bennett v. Thurtell.—Mr. Sergeant Pell said he had to move, on the part of the defendant's bail (Thomas Green) in this case, for a writ of Habeas Corpus cum causa, to enable them to render the defendant (now in gaol under charge of conspiracy) in discharge of the bail. The defendant, Thomas Thurtell, was the person against whom a new trial had been moved for in a cause pending between him and a Fire Insurance Office. He had supposed the ordinary course to be, to make the application to a Judge at Chambers; but from what happened the other day in the Court of King's Bench, it would appear that the application must be made in Court.

Mr. Justice Park—Do you move for a Habeas Corpus of prerogative?

Mr. Sergeant Pell—No, my Lord, for a Habeas Corpus cum causa.—Rule to shew cause granted. (The action is for 20l. 16s. 10d.)

BOW STREET.

On Friday the hearing of 22 informations exhibited against five persons of gambling celebrity came on before G. R. Minshull, Esq. The informations charged the defendants with playing a certain unlawful game called Hazard, contrary to the enactments of the 12th Geo. II. c. 28, for preventing excessive and deceitful gaming, whereby they had rendered themselves liable to the penalties of 50l. for each offence, with full costs of suit. The name of the defendants are, Capt. Wal. don Kelly, Sir Waller Brunton, Mr. Arthur O'Leary, Mr. Bolton, Bow. Siretch, and Mr. Thomas Welsh; the latter person having been brought from Whitecross-street Prison, where he is at present for debt. The witness called to substantiate the averments in the information was Thomas Jackson, who described himself as a glass-cutter, residing at Caroline-place, Brompton. He detailed the fact of having seen the defendants, Kelly and Welsh, playing at hazard on the day named in the information, at a common gambling house, at No. 8, Oxendon-street, Haymarket, where he went for the purpose of seeing Kelly to solicit the payment of a sum of money owing to him for goods, who then protested he had no money; but the witness remained in the room a short time, and saw him engaged in playing hazard, when he repeatedly staked money. He then took down the names of all the persons he knew, and who were then playing, for the purpose of bringing them to justice. The defendant, Welsh, against whom informations are laid, pleaded, that owing to his being a prisoner, he was precluded from making the necessary arrangements for his defence, and he was, in fact, unable at present to employ Counsel on his behalf; but, if the hearing was postponed until a future day, he should, by the assistance of some of his friends, be able to do so. After some discussion between the Counsel on both sides, it was agreed that the hearing of all the informations should be deferred until Tuesday.

HUNTING INTELLIGENCE.—The Fox Hounds will meet to-morrow at Stoke Mardolph; Wednesday, at Gedling; Friday, at Rodleston Manor.—The Earl of Scarborough's Hounds to-morrow at Micklebring Village; Wednesday, at Rossington Bridge; Friday, at Clayworth Village—each day at half past ten o'clock.—The Burton Hunt.—Sir Richard Sutton's Hounds to-morrow, at Stapleford Moor; Tuesday, at Spittal; Wednesday, at Brattleby Village; Thursday, at Legsby Village; Saturday, at Branston Wood—each day at eleven o'clock.—Mr. Meynell's Hounds to-morrow, at Bradby; Thursday, at Elvaston; Saturday, at Wichnor Park.—Sir George Sitwell's Hounds, Tuesday, at Pleasley Park; Friday, at Barlow Woods—each morning at ten o'clock.—The East Essex Hounds to-morrow, at Fitz Place; Wednesday, at Pebmarsh-street—each day at half past ten.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Tuesday, the Duke of York, as Commander-in-Chief, held a Levee at his Office in the Horse Guards, which was attended by the Earl of Roscommon, Generals O'Loghlin, Egerton, Cockhill, Horsford, Sir A. Campbell, Sir Wm. Kier Grant, and between 20 and 30 others.

Wednesday, at two o'clock, the Lords of the Council assembled at the temporary building for the Court of Exchequer, Westminster-hall, for the purpose of nominating Sheriffs for England for the year ensuing.

THE ARMY.—The 17th reg. of foot has received orders to march from Gosport to Doncaster, for Hull. The reg. has marched to Doncaster, where it will arrive on the 29th inst. The 53d reg. of infantry marched on Friday from Gosport to Weedon, where it will arrive on the 24th inst. The 58th reg. of foot has marched from Weedon to Brighton, where it will arrive on the 24th inst.

It is in contemplation to establish a packet for Buenos Ayres, if the expense, which must be considerable, is not too great for the trade to reimburse.

The East India Company's ship Waterloo, arrived at Bombay on the 7th of June.

Captain Harris, of the Hussar frigate, has been put on his trial before a Court Martial, at Plymouth, consisting of five Captains, of whom the senior Captain, M'Kenzie, was President, for alleged delay in obeying the orders of Government to sail immediately with the British Envoys for South America. The trial is at a stand, however, in consequence of the President having been taken suddenly ill. Mr. Canning has been examined as a witness, and, it is said, fully acquits Captain Harris, having declared that no blame is attributable to him, and that the Envoys alone were chargeable with the delay.

HOME CIRCUIT.—WINTER ASSIZE.—Before Sir Alan Park, Knt. one of the Justices of his Majesty's Court of Common Pleas, and Sir George Sowley Holroyd, one of the Justices of his Majesty's Court of King's Bench.—HERTS—Thursday, December 4, at Hertford.—ESSEX—Monday, December 8, at Chelmsford.—KENT—Monday, Dec. 15, at Maidstone.—SUSSEX—Monday, December 22, at Lewes.—SURREY—On Wednesday a Court of Directors was held at the East India House, when the following Captains were sworn into the command of their respective ships, viz.:—Capt. H. A. Drummond, of the Castle Huntly; Capt. J. Walker, of the Macqueen; and Capt. A. Chrystie, of the Thomas Coutts.

On the 29th ult. Vice-Admiral Sir Harry B. Neale gave a splendid dinner on board the Revenge, in the Tagus, to the King of Portugal, the Infante and Infantas, Ministers, Officers of the Army and Navy, &c. The deck was covered from stem to stern with canvas, and the interior fitted up with flags, &c. forming a tent. The Royal barge left the Arsenal at noon; and on its approach the frigates Active, Naiad, and Seringapatam, manned tops and yards, and fired a royal salute. The King did not retire till half past six.

NAPOLEON'S WHITE BARD CHARGER.—We have at length to announce to the public, that the beautiful charger of the late Napoleon, which has already excited so much interest and curiosity in the minds of all ranks, is at length ready for exhibition, and will be produced for their inspection some time this week. We understand that the delay in bringing him out has been occasioned by the numerous portraits which have been taken of him, by some of our first artists, who all pronounce him to be a most perfect horse, as to symmetry, blood, and bone.

The ship Brothers has been chartered by Government for the conveyance of female convicts to New South Wales, which vessel will sail in the course of a few days with 90 women (convicts,) and also about 20 females and their children, wives of prisoners at New South Wales, to whom Government have granted the indulgence of proceeding to that colony, on the recommendation of the Governor, in consequence of their husbands' good conduct and industry in the settlements. We understand that only 300 male convicts are, in the first instance, to proceed to Bermuda, who are to be employed upon the public works, in the naval department.

The Fury, Capt. Parry, and the Hecla, Captain Lyon, were both paid off at Deptford on Wednesday. The apparatus for conveying the warm air, and several other things, are however left on board.

A few days since, upwards of 2000lbs. of foreign snuff were seized at Gainsborough, on board one of the packets for Lincoln. It has been brought up by one of the Hull packets, was to be forwarded to Lincoln, and it is supposed would have been thence sent to London. The snuff seized is said to be worth 500l.

It is stated that a communication has been made to a person, high in office, of two hundred gambling houses of various rank and notoriety throughout London; names, characters, descriptions, &c. of the keepers and servants, together with a list of the persons, and proper descriptions superadded of those who visit those houses, and that copies of the disclosures have been furnished in consequence to the Police Magistrates.

The day of nominating a representative for Huntingdonshire is fixed for Tuesday se'nnight, the 25th inst, and the following day is appointed for the election. Sir Wm. Ingilby, of Kettlethorpe, is the only candidate.

No service took place last week at Salisbury Cathedral, in consequence of the aisles being under water. The waters were still rushing from the hills.

About one hundred and fifty puncheons of rum have been picked up at Yarmouth and lodged in the Custom House, supposed to have come out of some large vessels which foundered during the late gales.

On Tuesday a battle between J. Hudson and Ward, for a stake of two hundred sovereigns, was fought at Moulsey Hurst; the seconds were Randall and Peter Crawley, for Hudson, and Spring and Belasco, for Ward. They fought fourteen rounds. In the fourth much courage was displayed; in the eighth Hudson put himself first in the attitude of an enraged virago, and then folded his arms, taking care of his distance from the enemy. Ward was too tired for offensive operations, and Josh. said, "Why not stand to me, and fight? I don't want to stay here a week." At the turn to he placed a good left-handed body hit, but was thrown. The 13th round won Hudson the battle; the hit in the eye, with many other bodily bruises, tried the thorough bred of Ward. In the 14th he had a trial, but a push would have won it. Josh. gave away no chances, but hit for the last floorer, and on Spring getting his man on his knee his head dropped motionless, and he was deaf to the welcome word of "Time." The umpires proclaimed Hudson the winner.

Some sacrilegious wretches have lately attempted to force open the Countess Dysart's family vault in Helmingham church, Suffolk, with the view, it is presumed, of stealing the leaden coffins: 100l. reward is offered for their detection.

A few nights ago, the Rectory-house of Ealing, in Middlesex, was broken into and robbed to a considerable amount in plate, &c., belonging to the Rev. Mr. Harvey, Curate of the parish, and present occupant of the house. Among the booty carried off, were several valuable marriage presents. The robbers effected their purpose by performing the window shutters with a centre-bit. The laundry house of J. Hopkins, Esq. was also broken open, and stripped of a large quantity of linen.

On Monday last, Robert Crowther was committed to Norfolk County Gaol, charged by a Coroner's Jury, which assembled at Seething, in that county, with the horrible crime of having poisoned his mother, by mixing arsenic with flour, of which she ate, after it had been made into bread.

At the last Berkshire Quarter Sessions, a poor man was committed to hard labour for three months, for concealing and not delivering to the owner, a parcel which had dropped from a waggon.

On Thursday evening as Mr. George Fowler, builder, after leaving the house of his son, in Bell-yard, Temple Bar, in perfect health, was entering his own residence in West-square, he fell down and instantly expired.

MASTER KYNASTON.—We understand that though this young gentleman was severely scorched by the accident which happened to him at Westminster School, on the celebration of the 5th of November, great hopes are now entertained of his recovery.

Jeremiah Riley, who was convicted at the Middlesex Sessions last February, and was sentenced to seven years transportation, has escaped from Woolwich Dock Yard.

On Friday morning a fire broke out at Mr. Stevens's, a tallow-chandler, in Stove-street, Tottenham Court-road, which entirely destroyed the premises.

On Thursday morning, as the daughter of Mr. Owen, of Doctors' Commons, Proctor, aged 11 years, was making toast for breakfast, her clothes caught fire. Her screams and those of her sisters alarmed their father, who immediately ran down and clasped her in his arms to smother the flames, and tore her clothes off, her arms, neck, hands and sides were so dreadfully burnt that she lingered till the next morning, when she died.

PROSPECTUS of a NEW DICTIONARY, ITALIAN and ENGLISH and ENGLISH and ITALIAN, with the Equivalents in French, 2 vols. 8vo. By STEFANO EGIDIO PETRONJ and JOHN DAVENPORT.

Just published, in 1 vol. octavo, price One Guinea,

THE MERCHANT, SHIP OWNER, and SHIP MASTER'S CUSTOM and EXCISE GUIDE, for the Year 1823-1824: comprising every species of Information relative to SHIPPING, NAVIGATION, and COMMERCE. To which are added, Finance Accounts, and other Official Documents, not hitherto published. Also a description of Counties, Places, Exclusives, and Markets, illustrated by Maps drawn and engraved expressly for the work. Ninth Edition. By Mr. POPE, of the Custom-house, Bristol, and late of the Custom-house, London.—London: Published by Baldwin, Cradock, and Joy; and sold by all Booksellers.

☞ This work is the fruit of laborious research and intense application for no less a period than seventeen years. The information contained in it cannot be acquired from any other publication whatever.

In two volumes royal 12mo. price 14s. the fourth edition of

LETTERS to a FRIEND on the EVIDENCES, DOCTRINES, and DUTIES of the CHRISTIAN RELIGION. By OLINTHUS GREGORY, LL.D.—London: printed for Baldwin, Cradock, and Joy. By whom also are published, in 4 vols. 8vo. price 2l. 2s. the second edition, corrected and revised of OBSERVATIONS, CRITICAL, EXPLANATORY, and PRACTICAL, on the CANONICAL SCRIPTURES. By MARY CORNWALLIS, of Wittersham, Kent.

DR. EVANS'S HISTORY OF ALL RELIGIONS.

Just published, in 18mo. the Fourteenth Edition, with the Addition of an Account of the Sauks, an Indian Sect resembling the Quakers; of the recent Seceders from the Church of England; and of the Jerkers and Barkers in the United States of America: embellished also with a new Engraving of Eight Heads, price 6s. boards,

A SKETCH of the DIFFERENT DENOMINATIONS of the CHRISTIAN WORLD. UNIVERSAL TECHNOLOGICAL DICTIONARY; or Familiar Explanation of the Terms used in all Arts and Sciences; containing Definitions drawn from original writers. By GEORGE CRABB, A.M.

☞ For variety and comprehensiveness of information, systematic arrangement, and practical utility, this work challenges competition. It has a decided superiority over every other book of reference: and the publishers look forward to the period, at no great distance, when its merits being fully known and duly appreciated by the public, there will not be found a lover of literature in this or any other country, where the English language is known, who will not consider the Technological Dictionary an important acquisition to his library.—London: printed for Baldwin, Cradock, and Joy.—By whom is published, by the same author, in 8vo. price 11. 1s. the Second Edition of ENGLISH SYNONYMES EXPLAINED, in alphabetical order; with copious Illustrations and Examples, drawn from the best writers.

"The present work forms a valuable addition to the Philological Treatises we possess. Mr. Crabb brought to the task a sound judgment, and an extent and accuracy of investigation, which have gone far to supply the chasm which remained in this branch of our literature."—British Critic, Oct. 1823.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN CATTLE DOCTOR; being a concise and familiar Description of all the Diseases incident to Oxen, Cows, and Sheep.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

The demand for last Sunday's paper continuing to increase, and it being impossible to reprint it, the BRITISH MERCURY of next Wednesday will contain the account of LORD MAYOR'S day, by anticipation, as it originally appeared in BULL.

The brokers of MR. ZACHARY MACAULAY have, it seems, published a contradiction of some part of our statement respecting that gentleman: had they forwarded such contradiction to us, it would have received every attention, but as they chose to print their letters in a newspaper which by no chance we ever see, and of which we only this morning heard, we are obliged to delay our reply till next Sunday, when we shall continue the subject, and perhaps shew the mischievous tendency of injudicious zeal.

The Letter of VERITAS, if possible, next week.

We have been unavoidably compelled to divide the report of the Barbadoes Council; and we have to apologize for its non-insertion last Sunday, which arose from the lateness of the hour at which it arrived on Friday.

Our Correspondent is mis-informed with respect to the REV. W. CUNNINGHAM; indeed, in its present shape, his communication is inadmissible.

The history of the proceedings at Barmouth is received, and our friend will do us a great favour by continuing his correspondence at any seasonable opportunity.

Every care will be taken upon the subject referred to by our correspondent who writes by his Anamnensis.

Our servant, who dined at Guildhall, says, the wine disagreed with him, and tasted as if mixed with British spirits. The Committee ought to have bought some of MR. PHILLIPS'S real FONTHILL particular—although, perhaps, the double journey might have shaken it too much.

MACALISTER is the name which OMICRON has forgotten. The whole of that charlatanerie has been exposed, and published over and over again. We have no occasion to refer to old stories.

We cannot admit the private history furnished by B. G.: it would surely be much better to let the thing die away. If there is no intention to fulfil the engagement, why rip up old histories—if there is, it is much wiser to say nothing about it.

The Elegy on the Death of MR. WEARE, would have the effect of ridiculing a most serious catastrophe—if we are to answer the question of the writer as to our opinion of the murder, we must say that the character of the whole transaction is materially changed by the discovery, that instead of a plot to destroy an innocent gentleman, it turns out to be a quarrel among a gang of sharpers: for as it seems to us it is merely by chance that WEARE was the victim on this occasion, and that if it had been HUNT'S turn, or PROBERT'S, to die, WEARE would just as readily have taken a part against them, as they have against him—about the mysterious disappearances of ladies and gentlemen, which are related in the papers, we confess we are sceptical.

We are happy to announce that His Royal Highness the PRINCE of SAXE COBURG, has been pleased to subscribe fifty pounds in behalf of the sufferers by the fire at HOT, by which melancholy event six hundred families have been deprived of their homes, and every thing they possess, the loss being estimated at £100,000 sterling.

PRICE OF STOCKS AT THE CLOSE, SATURDAY.

The British money market has been very steady this week, Consols for Account having been steady at 83⅛—the fluctuation not having exceeded ¼ per cent.—In the Foreign money market, Columbian Bonds have rather drooped, but for the last two days have been done at 59, 60—Spanish Bonds having undergone some considerable alterations. They have been as low as 22¾, but have since rallied about 1 per cent upwards.—In any other description of security, there is nothing to notice.

THEATRE ROYAL DRURY-LANE.—On Monday, The Winter's Tale, with the Cataract.—Tuesday, (for the first time) the new Tragedy of Caius Gracchus. The Prologue to be spoken by Mr. Terry, the Epilogue by Mrs. Glover, Miss L. Kelly, and Mrs. Orger, with the Cataract.

NEW SURREY THEATRE.—On Monday Evening, and during the Week, will be presented for the First Time, an entirely new Melodrame, of peculiar interest, in Three Acts, with new Scenery, Dresses and Decorations, to be called The Gamblers. Principal characters, Messrs. H. Kemble, Rowbotham, Gallot, Julian, and Mrs. W. Clifford.—Among the Scenery will be seen the Bald Faced Stag, on the Edgeware Road, in which will be introduced the identical Horse and Gig in which the horrid murder is supposed to have been committed: also a correct view of Gill's Hill Cottage and Pond, &c. After which, the truly admired and laughable Burletta of Asleep or Awake! To conclude with (first time at half price,) the Death of Mary Queen of Scots.—The free list must be suspended.—Boxes, 4s.; Pit, 2s.; Gallery, 1s.—Second Price Quarter-past Eight o'Clock.

ADELPHI THEATRE.—To-morrow, and During the Week, TOM and JERRY! or, LIFE in LONDON. To conclude with an entirely new Burletta, entitled Down the Area; or, Mistress and Maid.

A MONDAY'S EDITION, containing the LATEST NEWS, the STOCK LIST, the LONDON MARKETS, and the STATE OF THE COUNTRY MARKETS by that Morning's Post, is published at Three o' Clock.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, Nov. 16.

Advices were received yesterday from Paris, which confirm the statements which have gone forth for several days respecting the health of the King of France. His Majesty is in a state of gradual decay, with great loss of strength.

WE have already directed the attention of our readers to an article in the last BLACKWOOD, upon the present state of the West Indian question—and are therefore the more desirous to mark distinctly those shades of difference which separate our own opinion, upon this virtually important question, from that of so able a writer. We never expect to see any thing like CANT in BLACKWOOD—we are therefore assured, that the liberal allowance made for MR. WILBERFORCE'S change of opinion in the course of sixteen years—that is, from the period of the abolition of the Slave Trade in 1807, to the introduction of his measure of emancipation in the last Session—proceeds merely from an ignorance of that Honourable Gentleman's character—or from the more creditable feeling of attributing the best motives to even equivocal conduct.

We are the more strongly induced to be explicit upon this head, because we have been pestered with correspondence of every sort and description, from "independent churchmen"—"orthodox Christians"—and "no friends to the Wilberforces,"—all, or the greater portion, of which we have the means of tracing to the creatures and apostles of this man—deprecating our animadversions upon the SAINT, lest we should do an injury to the CAUSE of "true religion."

CANT, gentlemen, will not go down with us—your "true religion" we call by its right name; and whatever allowance we may be disposed to make for heated enthusiasm, or even vulgar fanaticism, we "hate, detest, and abhor" all those pharisaical pretences to ULTRA PIETY, which are digested in committees and associations, and Bible Societies, for the purpose of obtaining POLITICAL POWER and INFLUENCE among the leaders—and of affording opportunities for daubing and plaistering their dupes with "you tickle me, I tickle you" speeches, upon hustings, and assembly-rooms, and even among "the abominations" of a public play-house.

We care little about MR. WILBERFORCE but as the leader of a sect and the head of a faction, which, in all its parts, structure, and combinations, as well as in its foundation, is precisely and literally similar to that which prepared the way for the murder of the First CHARLES—and transferred the monarchy to the fanatical adventurer, CROMWELL. The thing is hedged about with so much art—is fed and nurtured through so many ramifications—is so factitiously cited under appeals to the best feelings of our nature, that in attacking this HYDRA, we are fully aware, not only of the too powerful means of resistance embodied in societies under this man's influence, from one end of the empire to the other—but of the powerful prejudices we have to encounter among those who, meaning well, and being sincere in their professions, will not credit imposture whilst it appears to be respected even in the highest quarters.

So much for the dissuasives, which the parties themselves would urge with us, for forbearance. We consider the danger great, in proportion to the means which the subtilty of the "Saintly faction" have been permitted gradually to accumulate—and loudly as we have occasionally declared ourselves against this canting, contemptible offset of PURITANISM—often as we have endeavoured to raise a laugh at the mountebankism of the "HUM-FUM-GAMBOGEES," we never felt ourselves imperiously called upon to tear off the mask from this new order of Jesuitism, until the first OVERT ACT of the initiated—which now threatens to deluge our West Indian possessions with the blood of our fellow subjects, and which in the same spirit may re-act at home with ripened and matured means—the fearful scenes in which BAREBONE revelled—and the saints prevailed.

If we are strong in our expressions, it is because we are sincere—we have no paltry ends to answer—no employers, by whose expedients or political views we are to dock or trim our animadversions; we see the danger—and the nature of it; and we have no hesitation in affirming, that if the great bulk of the nation remain inert—if their spirit or their apprehensions be not roused, the united efforts of "Christian Observers" and "Whig Chronicles," under their several leaders of saints and sinners, not only the Church, but the State, may be brought into jeopardy, from which, even the united force of all that is pious and loyal in the country may not be able to redeem us.

Men who can see no further than their own noses, may judge of the sincerity of these men, when they find WILBERFORCE and BROUGHAM united in one common cause—although the one has furnished his present opponents with the strongest arguments against what is now avowed as the "object of his devoted zeal"—and the other has recorded a public pledge that he had never a design to emancipate the slaves in our West Indian possessions!

But to the point;—the Abolition of the Slave Trade was carried—as every man must now admit—by a political manœuvre—the question had been rendered popular by pamphlets and harangues, scattered and forced upon the country, through the associated missionary and affiliated societies of WILBERFORCIAN FREE-MASONRY—the trade itself was abhorrent to every feeling mind—it could not be defended in the abstract, or palliated in its details; and was, therefore, like every other question which admits of a simple statement, and an appeal to the passions of men, especially calculated to become popular. But the real question was not an abstract one—or one to be decided by popular feeling;—the evil was admitted when once duly exposed—and much of it might have been alleviated, and was alleviated by prompt legislative measures.

But the question embraced contingents of vital importance to the empire at large—it involved the interests of a large portion of British landlords who had 250 millions sterling vested in the soil, commerce, and shipping of the West Indies—it compromised the safety of thousands of British subjects resident there—and it was a fearful experiment upon our naval superiority, to which we are indebted for our existence, as one of the leading powers of Europe!

These were considerations of too great importance to be be overlooked by real and patriotic Statesmen—MR. PITT was a sincere abolitionist, but he would not venture on the hazardous experiment, except by gradual and progressive advances—he would not influence those on whom his station might be supposed to have weight, to rush headlong into a measure of which no precaution could anticipate results arising from such a complication of interests.

The WHIGS, however, who, before they had been able to build up the wall for their own heads—for which SHERIDAN gave them so much credit—had in the course of a few months rendered themselves so contemptibly unpopular, that in mere desperation they had recourse to a "popular measure," already "cut and dry" for their purpose, as WE OURSELVES heard the same Sheridan acknowledge! Thus,

"Fools rush in where angels fear to tread."

WILBERFORCE, whose machinery was always at hand, availing himself of the opportunity of making "common stock" with the new ministers—for that gentleman and his faction are always with the Ministers, unless on special and reserved occasions—readily came into their views, and whilst conscious that their sole object was to throw him out as a "tub to the whale," he more wisely or cunningly felt that they were preparing a triumph for him, and an accession to his means of extending his sect and faction.

To shew that we are leading our readers to no gratuitous conclusions, without having sound and tenable premises from which to draw them, we shall for a moment advert to public documents to prove the means by which—as on the present occasion—the WILBERFORCIANS influenced the public mind.

GENERAL GASCOYNE, in his place in the House of Commons, in deprecating the hasty and intemperate mode of carrying a question of such national importance, particularly protested against the inventions and artifices which had been resorted to in order to agitate the public mind. "The Church, the theatre, the press had laboured" to extend the prejudices of the people. LORD GREY (then LORD HOWICK) dared not deny the fact—but he palliated it. "He knew," he said, "that there had been a most laudable and persevering attention on the part of the honourable gentleman (MR. WILBERFORCE) with whom the measure originated."

This is not true—by way of parenthesis—for the very first step in this new career of MR. WILBERFORCE was of a piece with all which followed. To MR. GRANVILLE SHARP the whole and entire merit of tracing, and digesting, and originating the question, which has fed and clothed WILBERFORCE and his party through life, is due—out of his hands it was taken, and made the ORIFLAMME of the WILBERFORCE illuminés—with less justice even than the tri-coloured banner of "TRIAL BY JURY," appropriated to HIMSELF by ERSKINE.

But this is only laughable.—The use made of the question is any thing but laughable.

In vain did our wisest statesmen and our most gallant naval commanders protest against the rashness of the proceeding—LORD ST. VINCENT having protested against it as the harbinger of destruction to our navy, left the House—and NELSON has bequeathed the following record of his opinion upon the subject.—Remember, reader—that neither WE, nor those whom we quote upon the occasion, defend, nor justify the system which prevailed with respect to the SLAVE TRADE. All that we or they apprehended, is, the consequences which too rapid an experiment upon such a comprehensive question might entail upon the country—and the justification of those inferences, which experience has only tended to confirm.

The following extract is from a letter addressed to the late SIMON TAYLOR, one of the largest proprietors in that island:

"I was bred, you know, in the old school, and taught to appreciate the value of the West Indian possessions; and neither in the field nor in the senate shall their interest be infringed, while I have an arm to fight in their defence, or a tongue to launch my voice against the damnable and cursed doctrine of ——(Query, Wilberforce!) and his hypocritical allies—and I hope my berth in Heaven will be as exalted as HIS—WHO WOULD CERTAINLY CAUSE THE MURDER OF ALL OUR FRIENDS IN THE COLONIES. I did not intend to go so far, but the sentiments ARE FULL IN MY HEART, and the pen would write them."

This is the recorded opinion BRITONS, of your own NELSON!—How do his words begin to be verified!

Now, then, to the more particular object of our present discussion—namely, the allowance made by the writer in BLACKWOOD for MR. WILBERFORCE'S abandonment of the pledge given—when his first great step was to be secured, that he never contemplated or would concur in any measure for the emancipation of the West Indian negroes.

We will take for granted, in favour of this gentleman, that he does not mean to avail himself of a MR. BUXTON, who was thrust forward upon the late occasion as the originator of the motion. The whole arrangement was previously too well known to admit such a subterfuge, even if we could suppose him guilty of it. MR. BUXTON is, we are told, a brewer—and if so, a very proper person to represent the enthusiasts against all sorts of slavery. Publicans, we presume, among the SAINTS, are still coupled with sinners, and out of the pale of their charity.

MR. WILBERFORCE, then, was the prime mover of the proceedings which have given rise to the insurrection in Bermuda—and to the present agitated state of all our colonies in the West. Now, it may be necessary to shew, that his former pledge was not lightly given, and that we have not availed ourselves of mere words which might incidentally fall from a man—especially a professed enthusiast—in the heat of debate, to fix this charge upon him.

The Egyptian priests, we know, had two doctrines—the one of which the initiated were alone permitted to share—the Jesuits also had a secret key for the interpretation of their Monita—whether the modern Saints proceed upon similar reservations, it is not for us to say; but that a solemn pledge was thought necessary, even by the Ministers, at the period of the Bill being passed—and that it was given—may be inferred from the following extract from the speech of my LORD GRENVILLE—(that, "in abolishing the SLAVE TRADE, justice "would be done to the inhabitants of AFRICA, who were the "party aggrieved, but that liberty to the slaves on the Islands "would be to them in their state of ignorance and barbarism a "baleful POISON!"

But the test was at hand—LORD PERCY brought in a specific Bill, for the purpose of "gradually abolishing slavery in his Majesty's Colonies in the West Indies." His Lordship reasoned justly in the abstract—and the very force of his argument ought to have satisfied all who heard it, that in rashly yielding to a factitious popular clamour, they were opening a door to the admission of a principle, which in its extent would lead to the eventual destruction, not only of our Colonies and commerce, but to the very bulwarks of our safety. His Lordship proposed only a gradual abolition—but LORD HENRY PETTY—then Chancellor of the Exchequer—rose under the greatest agitation, and deprecating even the discussion of the subject, "entreated most respectfully, but most strongly, his Noble Friend either to withdraw his motion, or concur in the previous question, which he should feel it his duty to move."

SIR CHARLES POLE also deprecated the discussion, but was glad the motion had been made, "as it would open the eyes of all men who were interested in the West India Islands, to the dangers which threatened them!"

What said WILBERFORCE to all this?—

"He declared that both HE, and they who acted with him, were satisfied with having gained an object, which was to be obtained with safety. The SOLE POINT they had in view, was the abolition of the SLAVE TRADE, and NOT THE EMANCIPATION OF THE SLAVES. The ENEMIES of the abolition had always confounded THESE TWO OBJECTS—the FRIENDS of the abolition HAD ALWAYS DISTINGUISHED THEM!!!"—Annual Register, 1807. p. 120.

Look, Britons, at the conduct of THIS MAN NOW, and form your own judgment of him.

LORD WAITHMAN'S GRAND FETE.

WE never had so good an opinion of newspaper reporters as we have now: for, strange as it may appear, with the exception of the prolific oratory of the DUKE of SUSSEX, and the prolix panegyrics of SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH, our account of the fete of last Monday, published the day previous, was as correct as any thing could be—even to CAM HOBHOUSE'S duty and SHERIFF LAURIE'S eloquence.

Upon the whole, there never was so admirable a travestie of pomp and state as the pageant of the present year. Independently of the black-sweeper at Bridge-street, who formed part of the procession, (his broom decorated with LORD WAITHMAN'S favours) the line of march was headed by an elderly gentleman, dressed up in a Herald's tabard, having on his head a barrister's wig, powdered, to which was appended, a black silk bag, there being around his neck, at the same time, a large and full-plaited ruff.

That this was LORD WAITHMAN'S fool, we are inclined to believe; and that his antics were curtailed after dinner is not attributable to any disinclination on his part to be amusing we are equally sure—the fact is, that the incessant and indefatigable exertions of His Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex, left no room for the professional buffooneries of any of his Lordship's hired retainers.

His Royal Highness proposed the healths of Lord Waithman—of the late Lord Mayor—the present Lady Mayoress—the late Lady Mayoress—the Ladies—the Judges—the Aldermen—the Corporation, and Success to Trade, with a speech to each.

Lord Nugent was the only nobleman present, if we except a person dressed in the uniform of the Life Guards, who was addressed by Lord Waithman as Lord Gingham, (we conclude by mistake). There was also another person dressed in the uniform of the King's household troops, who subsequently opened the ball with Miss Waithman, and who was said to be a Major Camac. We should doubt the fact, although it is assumed (perhaps for the sake of the rhyme) in the subjoined ballad. We say we should doubt it, because, when we recollect the conduct of Lord Waithman only two years since,—the marked inveteracy his Lordship displayed, not only on the Inquest upon the rioters at the Queen's funeral, but in his Letter to Lord Bathurst, and the invectives his Lordship was pleased to bestow upon the gallant fellows composing the household troops—we are of opinion, however amiable conciliation may be, that no officers holding commissions in those particular regiments, would sit down to dine with a man who tried every means to stigmatize them as ruffians and murderers; and who even declared that one of them levelled a carbine at his head, for the purpose of assassinating him. If the private feelings of gentlemen do not partake sufficiently of the esprit de corps, to keep them away from such parties, their appearing out of uniform would evince more respect to themselves, not to speak of that which is due to the service, and more especially to the distinguished regiments to which they have the honour to belong.

There never was so tumultuous or unruly an assemblage of decently dressed people congregated upon a similar occasion—and one opposition nobleman: no—not even Lord Mountford, who is as little particular as most people;—not even Lord Erskine, who invites himself to dinner at other public meetings—not any human being one ever saw before, except three of the Mountaineers, were present; and, as if to lower the unhappy Master of the Feast, Lord Nugent (the sole scion of nobility there) took occasion, in a short speech which he made in return for the honour done him after his health had been drank, distinctly to state that "the respect he shewed to the Lord Mayor, in accepting this invitation, was not paid to the individual, but to the office." This qualifier is very satisfactory, but we should much rather that Lord Nugent had staid away altogether.

We are much inclined to jest whenever such a subject as a Lord Mayor's day is started; but seriously speaking, the exhibition of Monday ought to have a powerful effect upon those whose duty it is to uphold the dignity of the City of London. We know the answer we shall get—men of rank and character will not submit to the association with their inferiors, which would be inevitable if they joined the corporation—but we do say, that the sight of Guildhall, filled as it was on Monday, by a riotous, drunken, ill-behaved rabble, in the total absence of any thing like weight or respectability, ought to save the Mellishes—the Wigrams—the Robarts'—the Wards—the Barings—the Marryats—the Mannings—the Bosanquets—the Praeds—the Goslings—and all that class of men, with a desire to rescue the first mercantile city in the world from the degradation it must suffer in the eyes of other nations, when its government is vested in the hands of retail shop-keepers and third-rate tradesmen. It was not so in former days—it ought not to be so now.

We must, however, do justice to part of the Lord Mayor's visitors, we mean his own daughters—they are remarkably fine young women, and extremely well-mannered—so much so, that certainly by seeing them only, one never should be led to suspect their real station in life—they were truly the flowers of the flock. Indeed, if we except a mighty pretty little girl in a white sattin Spanish hat (whose name we of course could not ascertain) there were no presentable persons in the assembly but themselves.

We have not heard the names of any of the visitors except the few we have noticed, unless indeed, we mention Mr. Edward Ellice and Mrs. Carter—the gentleman is, as some of our readers know, a Member of Parliament—the lady keeps a potatoe and earthenware shop in Rosemary-lane, and appeared to enjoy the breaking of the crockery as the best part of the entertainment.

We shall now allow our muse her play, and attempt to record the events of the tenth in doggrel verse, which is more easily retained than prose, and will doubtless remain in the minds of those who admire as we do—the triumph of Lord Waithman.

LORD WAITHMAN'S TRIUMPH.

Tune—"Derry down."

Whoe'er has seen London must needs know the Hall,
Adorned with two Giants, so portly and tall—
It is of that Hall that my muse fain would speak,
And a dinner, and ball given in it last week.
Derry down, down.

No Cockney alive can I'm certain remember
A much finer day than the tenth of November,
When Waithman the mighty, began to prepare
For the wonderful duty of being made Mayor.
Derry down, down.

His Lordship, who mingles the good with the great,
Proceeded to Westminster, floating in state—
No dangers he feared, since from proverbs he found
There was not a chance that he e'er should be drown'd.
Derry down, down.

Judge Graham received him, and gave him such praise
As very old Judges bestow, on such days;
But Waithman was tickled with language so fine,
And bid the Recorder invite him to dine.
Derry down, down.

The oath then was tendered, Lord Waithman was sworn,
And the sword and the mace at his coming were borne,
His oath did I say—the word came in pat,
You may turn to the dictum of Kenyon for that.
Derry down, down.

The forms all gone through, they returned with the tide,
To the stairs at Blackfriars, whence they were to ride,
And his Lordship desired the cortege to stop,
To take up his wife and his girls at the shop.
Derry down, down.

How grand 'twas to see my Lord Waithman go ride
In his great gilded coach the whole length of Cheapside,
While the plumes of his daughters fulfilled the wise words,
That very fine feathers make very fine birds.
Derry down, down.

At Guildhall arrived, (trumpets sound his approach),
Lord Waithman abandoned his extra-sized coach,
And repaired to the chamber to take up his state,
Where wisdom and he, guide the civic debate.
Derry down, down.

Mrs. Waithman prepared—all the company bowed,
The dinner's announced—how oppressive the crowd;
But my lady, to make all the city folks stare,
Is led by the son of a King to her chair.
Derry down, down.

In right of his rank and his figure next comes,
Lord Nugent so famed for torpedos and bombs;
But poor Mrs. Waithman cried out—some say swore,
That she ne'er saw a Lord like his Lordship before.
Derry down, down.

In naming the guests, no praise the muse grudges;
But no man of rank had arrived, save the Judges.
Would they keep away from champagne and green fat?
No; they were, indeed, too good judges for that!
Derry down, down.

Cam Hobhouse, whose waistcoat was covered with gold,
And whose coat was too little his body to hold;
Like a pigeon stuck up, seemed to stand on one leg,
While escorting to table the elegant Peg.
Derry down, down.

The dinner went on, and though Probert and Thurtell
Were absent, yet still their friends got through the turtle,
The dishes were cleared—and the bottles passed quick,
Till the ladies grew hazy—the gentlemen sick.
Derry down, down.

After dinner his Lordship—(Lord Waithman)—proposed
A toast, by which most of his cronies were pozed,
He gave in a bumper of claret the "King,"
('Twas in hopes to induce his great brother to sing.)
Derry down, down.

On gentlemen subject to coughs or the asthma,
The dense fog of London acts just like miasma:
For singing the Prince said his lungs were too weak,
But he kindly arranged it by offring to speak.
Derry down, down.

Seven toasts he proposed under seven pretences,
Till he frightened his friends out of their seven senses;
But the Prince was determined to act Lord Mayor's fool,
To shew that he was not afraid of John Bull.
Derry down, down.

Lord Nugent whose health—one really would think,
To look at his Lordship no person need drink;
Returned his brief thanks, but small Henry Grey
Found no opportunity his speech to say.
Derry down, down.

Hume was brief, and more pleasing than ever before—
But Macintosh dealt out a dose of his lore;
This teacher at schools makes the most of his knowledge,
For his speech of the tenth will still do for the college.
Derry down, down.

The mob getting tipsy 'twas moved to proceed
To the hall of debate, where my lady had "tea'd!"
For the young city dowdies, let what may befall,
Will never go home without having a ball.
Derry down, down.

So pretty Miss Waithman looked all round the place
For some decentish person of figure or grace,
But such was the dearth, that she chose from the pack,
To open the ball with her,—Major Camac!
Derry down, down.

The uproar was dreadful, and many the crates
Of butter-boats, soup-tureens, dishes, and plates,
That fell by the hands of the mob in the hall,
Who, unable to dance, still would keep up the ball.
Derry down, down.

In these dingy pleasures—in this smoky fun,
The thing was continued till half after one,
When the company home in their "jarvies" were packed,
For fear of infringing the new Vagrant Act.
Derry down, down.

TO JOHN BULL.

Sir,—The very severe animadversions which have of late appeared in the public journals on the new Vagrant Act, having excited considerable interest, and given rise to a very general misconception of its provisions, the following explanation may not perhaps be unexceptionable to your readers.

In February, 1821, Mr. Chetwynd first brought this branch of our criminal code under the consideration of Parliament, and judging from his speech upon that occasion, the primary object of the Hon. Member appears to have been to establish a more efficient and less onerous mode of conveyance for offenders of this description; when directed to be passed to their respective parishes.—From official returns it was ascertained that the system of passing entailed upon the country an enormous annual expence; and no sooner was the matter mentioned in Parliament, than communications were received from all parts of the country, complaining of the frauds, abuses, and evils of that system. A committee was therefore appointed, who soon collected a mass of valuable evidence from Magistrates and other experienced persons—judiciously availing themselves also of the practical information which the society established in London, for suppressing mendicity, had acquired upon the subject.

The result of their enquiry was, a conviction on the part of the committee, that the entire abolition of the system of passing vagrants was preferable to any attempts to amend it; and a bill was introduced for that purpose, the duration of which was limited to one year.

In the following Session (1822), therefore, the subject necessarily again occupied the attention of Parliament. The Committee had then the satisfaction to find the success of their experimental bill universally acknowledged; and thus, without the slightest collateral inconvenience, a permanent saving of 100,000l. per annum was effected in the expenditure of the county rates, which it is scarcely necessary to state, are charged upon the poor's rate, and consequently affect every house-keeper in the kingdom.

The abstraction, however, of so prominent a part of the punishment of vagrants, as the passing was intended to constitute, rendered some other alterations indispensable; and it was suggested that the consolidation of all provisions relative to the crime of vagrancy (diffused through nearly 50 statutes) into one act, which should reject all obsolete and superfluous matter, would be productive of great convenience and advantage to the public.

With this view, the present act was prepared, and a copy of it sent to every principal magistrate in the country. And, notwithstanding every provision underwent the most ample discussion, the Committee, with the caution, which in a peculiar manner marked their proceedings, have limited its duration to two years, so that the subject must be again revived in the ensuing session. The bill was then passed with the unanimous concurrence of both houses.

I have felt it impossible to omit these preliminary remarks, because the vituperation which has been indulged in upon the present occasion, has extended to the motives of those with whom the act originated; and a desire hastily to force through Parliament highly penal and unconstitutional enactments, is amongst the most venial offences attributed to its author.

To the charge of haste, or want of deliberation, the facts I have stated are, I trust, a sufficient answer—facts I may be allowed to add, which are matters of record, and which consequently were accessible to any person whose sense of justice might induce him to let enquiry precede reproach.

But I will no longer detain your readers from an examination of the Act itself, and I propose, in the first place, to notice the punishment which it authorizes.

As to the first class of offenders, viz.—idle and disorderly persons, the Act makes no alteration whatever—they are liable as before to be imprisoned for any period not exceeding one month, but as to rogues and vagabonds, Magistrates, whilst deprived of the power to pass them to their parishes, are also restrained from committing them for any shorter period than one month. Under the old law the punishment of a vagrant was usually made up of an imprisonment for seven days, and the passing, which was of course proportioned to the distance of the offender's settlement. Now putting out of view the professional vagrant, to whom a jaunt at the public expence to any place he chose to elect as that of his settlement, was any thing but punishment, what could be more severe upon many who unwillingly brought themselves within the operation of the vagrant law, than thus to be forced back upon the parish, when perhaps a sincere desire to procure independent employment had alone caused them to become wanderers.

This apparent extension of the period of imprisonment, if viewed as a substitute for the passing, is in fact a mitigation of the punishment: it was an arrangement called for by the abolition of the pass, and suggested by the judicious desire of the committee, that there should be assigned to the crime of vagrancy a clearly defined punishment, uncompanied by the absurd direction to convey the offender in custody from one extremity of the kingdom to the other.

With respect to the higher degrees of punishment which the sessions are empowered to inflict, the present maximum is two years imprisonment, by the old law offenders might be tranported. Whipping also, which might be ordered by one justice, can now only be inflicted by order of the sessions. Upon the whole, therefore, I feel justified in asserting that the treatment of vagrants is not only more judicious and economical, but infinitely less severe since the passing of the present act.

Let us now proceed to enquire, whether under the very comprehensive term of rogue and vagabond, any, and what new species of offence has been created, and it is here more particularly that we must look for some justification of the abuse and opprobium by which the act has been so unmercifully assailed. After a careful examination I can only find two new definitions of the crime of vagrancy, which I will transcribe in the words of the Act:—

"All persons imposing, or endeavouring to impose upon any churchwarden or overseer of the poor, or upon a charitable institution, or private individual, by any false and fraudulent representation, either verbally or in writing, with a view to obtain money or some other advantage or benefit."

"All persons openly exposing or exhibiting in any street, road, public place, or highway, any indecent exhibition, or openly and indecently exposing their persons."

Strange, Sir, as it may appear, all the alledged cruelty, oppression, tyranny, and innovation of the new Vagrant Act are contained in the two passages above quoted. The necessity and propriety of both are I think beyond dispute. Surely when we consider the extent to which the cause of charity is injured by the importunities of the worthless, it will appear an imperative duty to arrest the career of those who make a trade of palming upon us "false and fraudulent" statements of distress, and who owe their success to an abuse of the best feelings of our nature.

The intention of the other provision is obvious. It is notorious that in unfrequented parts of the town ruffians are in the habit of annoying females by exposures quite horrible and disgusting, and one can readily conceive other cases of exposure which, if less criminal, are equally offensive.

I perfectly remember when our public journalists were loud in their complaints of the state of the parks, and in censure of the culpable negligence of the police, whose interference they now decry as tyrannical and oppressive.

Are we then to concede those spots, hitherto devoted to the health and recreation of our families, to purposes, which, if suffered to become habitual, would render them utterly useless? Let any man who with his wife, sister, or daughter has ever had the misfortune to encounter those nuisances, answer the question. To talk about proceeding by indictment, or by any circuitous mode, is idle—the only way to prevent the feelings of individuals from being outraged, and to preserve common decency from constant violation, is by a punishment which can be summarily inflicted, and the enactment which authorises it appears to me to be in strict accordance with that principle by which every man in a civilized state surrenders a portion of his individual rights to secure the well being of the community.

But it will be said there may be exceptions—certainly there may, and such cases are expressly provided for by a clause in the act.

"Provided always, that it shall be in the discretion of the justice or justices of the peace, before whom any person as a rogue and vagabond, or idle and disorderly person, shall be brought, either to commit or discharge such person, although an act of vagrancy be proved against the person so charged."

To argue that summary powers, even if entrusted to an intelligent and honourable magistracy, is liable to abuse, is only to say that which can with equal truth be asserted of any power entrusted to any persons.

Whether the present Act has been misconstrued or abused in any of the cases which have been recently published, is altogether a different question, and may perhaps form the subject of a future communication. I have already, I fear, trespassed too long upon your indulgence; but important as the subject is, it has become still more so from the manner in which it has been treated, and I cannot bring myself to conclude without expressing my regret that the conductors of the periodical press, to whom is entrusted the controul of what has been designated "the most competent instrumeat of public instruction ever devised," should have ventured to impugn an Act of the Legislature which it is doubtful if they ever read, and to denounce it as an unconstitutional, oppressive, and alarming innovation, without taking the trouble to compare it with previously existing provisions on the same subject.

Such lamentable want of candour is not to be palliated by an affected regard to our rights and liberties, nor are we to be cajoled into an opinion that they are likely to be "frittered away" by any enactments similar to those I have attempted to analyze. Really one cannot but smile when the committal of a vagrant to the house of correction is gravely ascribed to "that unhappy predelection for penal legislation, which characterizes the present period," in contradistinction I presume to the "good old times," when Englishmen in the plenitude of that liberty which modern legislators have so alarmingly curtailed, were for offences against the vagrant laws merely branded with hot irons, or subjected to the mild and constitutional punishments of slavery, transportation, and—death.—I am, Sir, Your very obedient Servant,

B.

London, Nov. 14, 1823.

THE WEST INDIES.

We have devoted so much of our attention to the important subject of our West Indian affairs, that we think we need make no apology for publishing entire—the Report of a Debate in Council at Barbadoes, on the Despatch of my Lord Bathurst to his Excellency Sir Henry Warde. We offer no opinion, and our object in publishing the Report is to shew the impression made upon the white population. It is not difficult to see what the effects upon the black population must necessarily and consequently be.

" REPORT OF A DEBATE, &c.

" September 3, 1823.

" At a Meeting of the Council this day, by adjournment, for the purpose of taking into consideration a Despatch from the Secretary of State for Colonies, to his Excellency SIR HENRY WARDE.

" MR. HAMDEN addressed the Board:—

" I rise to call your attention to the most momentous subject that, perhaps, ever engaged the deliberations of this Board. The Despatch from LORD BATHURST to his Excellency the Governor, demands our most careful and attentive consideration; not less on account of the variety, than of the importance of the topics which it embraces. I believe I may say, that few men interested in West India property have felt less anxiety concerning the late proceedings in England in reference to these Colonies, than I have: but, if I have regarded the attempts of our enemies with a smaller degree of apprehension than others have, it is not because I have mistaken their tendency, or underrated their danger; but because I felt confident that the wisdom and foresight of Government would defeat the mischievous projects of these relentless popularity-hunters. But, Sir, I can no longer contemplate the crisis at which we have arrived, without serious misgivings. It is impossible for any reflecting man to peruse, without dismay, a Despatch from the Secretary of State for Colonies, threatening, in most direct terms, to legislate for us in England, unless we adopt, in toto, and without hesitation, a certain plan of government for our slaves, prescribed by him: more especially when we find that, along with many very wise and judicious regulations, there are some which must prove totally subversive of discipline; and others which, although applicable to the circumstances of some of these islands, would be most inconvenient, if not ruinous to others.

" If this Despatch referred to points purely speculative—and where truth is to be sought by the deductions of reason alone—I should feel it the height of presumption in me to oppose LORD BATHURST, or to question the conclusions of his judgment. But in a matter of practical detail, where experience should be the guide, surely some deference is due to local knowledge and personal observation; and the man who possesses these accidental advantages, may, I trust, without any dereliction of modesty, claim some right to be listened to. I hope I shall show before I sit down, that I have not come forward to raise captious objections, or to excite a spirit of opposition to the measures proposed by the Minister. I declare, that, on the contrary, in attempting to point out what strike me as defects in the plan, I am influenced by a sincere desire to insure the faithful and cordial co-operation of the people in such measures of amelioration, as may ultimately obtain the sanction of the Legislature.

" I shall now proceed to make a few remarks on certain points of his Lordship's Despatch. ' It would be superfluous,' says he, ' to insist ' on the indispensable necessity of religious instruction, as the foundation of every beneficial change in the character and future condition ' of the slaves.' This is an axiom not to be controverted;—and I have great pleasure in being able to say, that the inhabitants of this colony are already deeply impressed with this truth; and that the PUBLIC VOICE calls loudly upon us to devise means for accomplishing, what all acknowledge to be necessary. There is already formed an association of gentlemen, in conjunction with the clergy, for the purpose of furthering this most important undertaking, which, I doubt not, will prove effectual to its object;—but it must be obvious that we have great difficulties to contend with: the chief of which is, the want of persons properly qualified to instruct the slaves. The clergy have, with laudable zeal, offered to do all that is in their power;—but the labourers are too few for the vineyard;—and it is impossible that these gentlemen, engaged as they are with parochial duties, can do much more than superintend the faithful execution of a plan. We must have lay-catechists to initiate the slaves in the elements of religion, before they will be capable of deriving much benefit from public discourses. —The country, I fear, does not afford a sufficient number of persons possessing the necessary qualifications, who would be able to undertake it. And, indeed, if such were to be found, a still greater difficulty arises from the depressed, and almost ruined state of our affairs; which would hardly enable us to furnish the means required for the support of an extensive establishment of Catechists. The masters themselves must contribute their personal labours, or little will be done. It is true that LORD BATHURST has held out a prospect of obtaining pecuniary aid from the British Parliament; but he has connected the offer with conditions, which, I fear, will compel the inhabitants of Barbadoes to decline the proffered boon—although a difference in physical circumstances, may make the conditions practicable in other colonies—as I shall presently shew. LORD BATHURST requires the abolition of the Sunday-market. And if the negroes are to be made Christians they should undoubtedly be taught to respect the Christian Sabbath. ' But,' says his Lordship, ' no application will be made to Parliament for a grant of pecuniary assistance, except when the abolition of the Sunday-market, and the substitution of some other day for that purpose, has been prospectively secured.' Now, Sir, I think I may assert, without fear of contradiction, that in the present depressed state of West India affairs, this concession, as far as it concerns Barbadoes, is impossible; impossible while we feed our slaves, and provide for their comforts as we now do, and while we pay the present duties on our produce, and the present rate of interest on our debts. Is it necessary in addressing any assembly in this country, to expatiate upon our pecuniary difficulties? Is it not known to every individual that the planter who is in debt to any amount can barely keep down his interest? How, then, can it be expected that, under such circumstances, we shall consent to surrender one-sixth part of our already extenuated income? For this is not a matter of argument, it is a matter of arithmetic, of demonstration: if one-sixth of the productive labour of an estate be withdrawn, the cultivation, and consequently the returns, must be reduced in the same ratio. Now, let me ask, not which of us is willing, but which of us is able to give up in these bitter times, one-sixth part of the returns of his estate? We cannot suppose that we should be expected to continue the same cultivation by increasing the daily task of the slave! But, should such a regulation ever go forth with the authority of the Legislature, supported by the power of Government, is it not be feared that it would have the effect of inducing unkind and unfeeling masters to endeavour to indemnify themselves, either by increasing the labour, or by diminishing the allowances of the slave? I have said that arrangements which may be adopted without much inconvenience in some colonies, would lead to disastrous consequences in others; and, in illustrating this remark, I shall be able to point out the injustice which must result from this Procrustean system of legislation, which, without any regard to peculiarities of physical or moral condition by which different countries are discriminated, would prescribe the same standard for all. In some of the more favoured islands around us—as, for example, in Trinidad, St. Vincent, St. Lucia, Tobago, and, I believe, in the Colonies on the Southern Continent—where the soil is more fertile than ours, and where there is a more regular and constant succession of rain, the labour of a man for one day in each week is found sufficient to provide subsistence for himself, and I believe for his family, it has hitherto been the custom to allow the slaves a day in the week, for the purpose of cultivating spots of land which are allotted to them for their support, and the master has no further concern about feeding them. In such countries five days of the week yet remain to be applied to the cultivation of the staple crop of the plantation. In this Island, where our soil has become so sterile as to require constant manuring, and where the droughts are sometimes so protracted that vegetation is occasionally at a stand for months, it is found necessary to make the raising of a sufficient crop of provisions a primary object of plantation economy; and the same causes which forbid the master to trust to the spontaneous industry of the slave, and the uncertain returns of constantly varying seasons, compel him to bestow an infinitely larger portion of labour on the cultivation of provisions, than is found necessary in those favoured Islands. I have enquired among a great number of the most experienced planters, what is the quota of the labour of an estate devoted to this object; and not one has placed it below a third—some have stated it at one-half. I believe we may take the medium, and fix it at two-fifths. The poverty, also, of our soil renders the labour which remains to be applied to the cultivation of the staple crop, less productive than elsewhere. And as in the Islands above alluded to, the slaves are themselves farmers, and depend upon the success of their farming, so are they necessarily traders, and dependant on their success in the markets. With us every necessary which the slave can require is provided by the master, and is to be found in the stores of the plantation. The goods which they have to take to market are comparatively insignificant; nor are the supplies which they procure from thence less so. The poultry which they may raise with the superfluity of their allowance, or the surplus of allowance in kind, which can never be considerable, are the only objects of honest traffic which they have. As to more valuable articles of property, it is, you know, usual for the slave to ask for a day in the week when he wishes to sell his pig or his goat; and no respectable owner or overseer, I believe, ever refuses it. You all know, gentlemen, that not one-fourth of the adult population of your Estates visits the town on the present market-day, Sunday. Nevertheless, as the slaves have been accustomed to the privilege of coming to town on that day, if they wished it, or of going any where else that inclination or business may direct them, we must grant some allowance of time, as a compensation for the privation which is implied in the abolition of Sunday-markets. This must be the subject of future arrangement. An infinitely smaller concession than Lord Bathurst proposes, will be sufficient to satisfy the slaves on account of the innovation, while it would afford them abundant means of negociating their very circumscribed market transactions. A judicious selection of one or more members from each family, changing the persons, so as to give to each members from each family, changing the persons, so as to give to each slave a holiday in turn, will, perhaps, accomplish all that is required. This I will venture to assert, that in few parts of the world does the mere agricultural labourer earn so much comfort for himself and his family by a week's work as our slaves enjoy;—and whatever apparent concession some of the colonies may seem to make, I will not acknowledge that there is a better system than ours, while I see our people so contented and happy, and while I know that we, with our very dense population, stand at the head of the scale with regard to increase.—Gentlemen, I warn you to look circumspectly before you concede, because I trust, that every concession which is made, and every pledge that is given, will be observed with the strictest good faith. Let not the panic of the present moment terrify us into engagements which we cannot fulfil, and when perhaps ' ease would retract vows made in pain, as violent and void.'

" I turn with pleasure to the next topic introduced in this Despatch because I have the satisfaction of agreeing most entirely with his Lord, ship upon it. Or if indeed I do differ with him at all, it is in a way that will not disoblige him; for I am disposed to go even one step further in behalf of the slave than he has gone. ' Religious instruction,' says he, ' is also a necessary preliminary to another important improvement in the condition of the slaves, the admission of their evidence in courts of justice.' It is obvious, that the total exclusion of slave testimony must render nugatory some of the provisions which may be made for their protection; and, under the restrictions proposed by his Lordship, I do not think there is much danger that this privilege will be more frequently abused by the description of slaves to whom he would limit it, than by the lower orders of other classes who already enjoy the privilege in question. He recommends, that upon a slave appearing in a court to give testimony, he shall produce, under the hand either of some of the parochial clergymen, or of the religious teacher authorised by the master or overseer to instruct him, a certificate, stating that the proposed witness has been so far instructed in the principles of religion, as in the judgment of the party certifying adequately to understand the obligation of an oath. And to guard against false certificates, his Lordship proposes to keep parochial registers of the persons whose competency to give evidence shall, from time to time, have been certified. He also suggests, that the being enrolled in such a list may be made an object of laudable ambition, and a stimulus to attention and good conduct. All this bears the stamp of wisdom and justice. Utterly to exclude persons qualified as above described, and whose qualifications are so satisfactorily attested, from the right of giving testimony, would be as irrational as it would be unjust. The influence which a master unavoidably possesses over the mind of his slave, must always operate to the disadvantage of his credibility; and LORD BATHURST, looking perhaps to this source of influence, hesitates in proposing that slave testimony shall be taken as sufficient proof against the life of a white person. I should be disposed to qualify this exception in one case. That is, where the dying declaration of a murdered slave attributes his murder to a white person. In such cases it often happens that no other direct evidence can be obtained, and all the motives which can operate upon the mind of a slave so circumstanced, would concur with the moral obligation to speak the truth. Even the bad motive of revenge would determine him to fix the accusation, and consequent punishment, upon the person who had deprived him of life, rather than upon any other individual. In all such cases allowance is made for the possibility of mistake, and much dependance is placed on corroborating circumstances. Nor would I render altogether inadmissible the testimony of slaves who, being deficient in the necessary degree of religious knowledge, could not take an oath. The information to be derived from this inferior class may often afford a clue for the discovery of guilt, although it may not amount to absolute proof, and go to conviction.

" LORD BATHURST thinks that it would not be prudent to receive the testimony of a slave against his master. The same caution was observed amongst the Romans. But I have doubts whether, under certain circumstances, it may not be necessary to allow it.

" Upon the next subject, I shall touch very lightly—the marriage of the slaves. So soon as the slaves are capable of comprehending the sacred obligations which they contract by marriage, according to the rites of our church; and so soon as they are willing to engage in these exclusive and permanent contracts, I am sure that I shall have no objection to their forming matrimonial connexions.

" Nor am I disposed to differ from the Noble Secretary for the Colonies in regard to the next subject of discussion—the manumission of slaves. An honourable member of this Board some time ago gave notice of a bill to remove all obstacles to manumission; and the only opposition, if opposition it could be called, came from a member, who very properly observed, that it was unnecessary, inasmuch as all difficulties were already removed, and the colonial law evaded by what are called English manumissions—a mode of enfranchisement which had grown into almost universal practice, under the connivance of public opinion, and the acquiescence of the Courts, even before it had obtained the sanction of legislative authority. And I do not know that a better mode could be devised, of obviating the inconveniences arising from a disputed title in the slave about to be manumitted, or of protecting contingent rights, than the plan proposed by LORD BATHURST. But, I confess, I do not think it just, that the public officers should be deprived of such fees (which, by the bye, are very moderate) as may accrue upon these transactions. These are all patent offices, held by a person resident in England, who enjoys a snug sinecure, while the labour of the office is performed by a deputy, who, in no single instance I believe, retains a larger portion of the emoluments, than is barely sufficient to defray the expenses of the office and support himself. His Lordship recommends that all manumissions should be recorded. It is obvious, how much this regulation would increase the expense of clerk-hire and stationery.

(To be continued in our next.)

THEATRES.

ROGERS is inexhaustible—LUTTRELL said the other day in his presence that the managers of the playhouses were extremely short-sighted in crowding the stages of their theatres with pageantry like that exhibited in the piece called CORTEZ, and the pantomime of the CATARACT. " Gad," said the Whig wag, " if they are short-sighted, they seem to fancy the " public as short-sighted as themselves—at least so I judge " from their offering the town a pair of spectacles!"

This exquisite jeu d'esprit caused a roar. We have not had an opportunity of attending the theatres this week from having unfortunately sprained our ancle—(we are obliged to say we, because it sounds importantly; but the ancle is our sole and individual property—ROGERS would have applied this designation to our foot.) We went to Brighton, partly to be shampooed; but we will confess we were chiefly led thither by the false pretences of the MORNING CHRONICLE, which told us that we might any day see MR. TIERNEY taking exercise before breakfast, smoking a cigar; we arrived—enquired—but old slyboots had been in Saville-row at least a week before we got down here.

Disappointed in not seeing GEORGE, we forthwith laid our case before his namesake, SIR MATTHEW, whose skill, care, and attention will, no doubt, set us upon our pins in a mighty short time.

MRS. DAVISON, by the way, is a vastly clever woman—she is one of the best of our comic actresses—she ought not to be acting here. RUSSELL (who is an excellent manager, and moreover a very successful one,) does not, perhaps, think so—she is the best LADY TOWNLY we have, and ought to be in London.

MR. LARPENT, the reader of plays, is doing his duty, and has, therefore, called down the abuse of the WHIGS, and an attack from the COURIER.

MR. KNOWLES, who is the author of the Monodrame, or Tragedy, with one character for MR. MACREADY, called the Gracchi,—to which MR. LARPENT has refused a licence, without reference to the Lord Chamberlain—is the author of Virginius, a play which the said MR. LARPENT in his liberality allowed to pass unnoticed, a year or two since—a friend, and a sincere friend to the Government, took the liberty of pointing out parts of that play which ought not to have been licensed.—The play underwent a second revision, and the Licenser got a rap over the knuckles,—therefore is the Licenser right, and moreover the COURIER wrong, when it says we may talk sedition on the stage, because there is none in real life—this is a silly argument, and could only be introduced into the COURIER by that private sort of personal influenee, which a paper, universally read and attended to as that is, should scout—there is such a thing as principle—there is such a thing as duty: and neither the private politics of play-writers and their heroes: nor the private friendships of Authors and Editors, ought to interfere with the impartiality of conduct essential to the reputation of a public journal.

MR. CHARLES KEMBLE has sent us the following letter, which we insert with great pleasure. We have already said that we had no authority for stating that the paragraph in the COURIER to which we alluded, came from the management of Covent Garden Theatre. We are happy to be able thus authoritatively to refute even the suspicion.—

SIR.—The Managers of Covent Garden Theatre knew nothing directly or indirectly concerning the paragraph alluding to Miss Stephens, which was inserted in the COURIER, till after its publication. You will, I trust, insert this in your next.—I am, Sir,

Your obedient Servant,

Nov. 12, 1823, C. G. Theatre. C. KEMBLE.

KING'S BENCH, DUBLIN.

The King v. Samuel Morris, Provost of Tralee, and a Magistrate of the County of Kerry.—On Friday last Mr. John Plunkett obtained a conditional rule for liberty to file a criminal information against Mr. Morris, a Magistrate, for admitting certain persons to bail who were charged with capital offences. The motion was grounded on the information of Mr. Wm. Harnett, whose house was attacked some time since by a party of White Boys, one of whom was afterwards apprehended, and admitted to bail by Mr. Morris; and on search being made in the Crown Office, it appeared that he had admitted several persons to bail, charged with various sorts of capital offences.—This prosecution has been commenced by direction of Government.

CASTLEBAR, Nov. 6.—We are sorry to learn that almost every night of the last week was distinguished by some act of outrage in the district of Coolcarney, in this county. The house of a tithe proctor, named Corolan, was attacked on the nights of Tuesday and Wednesday: his windows were broken, and he was threatened with the most exemplary personal chastisement. On another night, the disturbers of the peace in that quarter, called at the houses of three men, who had been engaged in carrying tithe oats, and gave them, as we are informed, a severe beating; and a fourth of those obnoxious carriers was sworn, in the open day, not to attempt again to come to Coolcarney to collect tithes there. On the night of Saturday, the house of a man named M'Ginnis, was visited; he also was severely beaten by those ruffians, and sworn, (to use the words of our correspondent) on seven book oaths, to quit his house, with his family, on the following day, in order that the former occupant may resume possession. The unfortunate M'Ginnis has, in consequence, removed from his holding.

CASTLEBAR, Nov. 8.—We are happy to state, that Constable Miller, of the Barony of Clanwilliam, has apprehended William Kinane, Matthew Kinane, John Dwyer, and John M'Grath, on well grounded information of being the murderers of the late William Greene, of Ariemout some time ago. Kinane and his three companions have been committed to our county gaol by William Sadlier, Esq.

On Thursday evening, about half-past four o'clock, we observed a most extraordinary phenomenon in the atmosphere. While the rain descended in torrents, the southern part of the heavens became suddenly illuminated, and continued increasing in light for about ten minutes. The thermometer rose, in this time, 15 degrees, and the barometer was very sensibly affected. The sky appeared on fire. People felt a degree of alarm almost as if the final day was approaching, for nature seemed to wear a face of direful anger. At length, however, the rained ceased, and the heavens assumed a serene aspect, since which the temperature and state of the weather has been mild and agreeable. We should be glad that some of our scientific readers would favour us with their opinion of this extraordinary appearance. It is to be remarked that, just before the brightening, the atmosphere had been unusually dark.—Waterford Mirror.

LONDON SESSIONS.

FRIDAY.—John Sugden, agent to Messrs. Wallingtons, carriers, and fourteen other persons, porters, helpers, &c. to the carriers, were indicted for assaulting Arthur John Jackson, a constable of Bread-street Ward.—Messrs. Wallington had formerly held the lease of the whole of the premises of the Saracen's Head Inn, Friday-street, letting off the tavern and hotel to Mr. Blake. Messrs. Wallingtons lease expired at Midsummer last, from which period Mr. Blake had become the lessee of the whole of the premises; and as he had also commenced doing business as a carrier, much ill will had in consequence been created between him and the agents and servants of his former landlord; daily bickerings and quarrels ensued in consequence, which on the 30th of June terminated in the affray and assault which had given rise to the present prosecution. Jackson was called in on that day to preserve the peace, who, after warning Sugden, the latter resisted violently, and called to the men to his assistance; and in this conflict the officer was very seriously injured, by being jammed in between the door-post, besides receiving other bruises from the kicks and blows of the defendants. Two medical gentlemen deposed that he was so seriously hurt, that for five days his life was considered in imminent danger; that he kept his bed for upwards of a month, and that he was not perfectly recovered until the latter end of September.—A verdict of Guilty was taken against all the defendants, with a view that a proper recompense should be made by them to Jackson the officer, in consideration of which, the Counsel for the prosecution agreed that they should not be brought up for judgment.

A Cabinet Council, it is said, will meet next Tuesday. It is nearly three months since one has been held. All the Ministers are expected to be in town by that day.

A Court Martial was held at Kingston Barracks, in Jamaica, on the 19th May, and continued by adjournment to the 25th of that month, on Capt. James Fogo of the Royal Artillery, on the charge, " For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in drawing his sword and violently assaulting and striking Lieut. Cookson, of the Royal Artillery, on the 12th May, 1823, such conduct being much aggravated by its having taken place at the head-quarters of the Major-General commanding the forces, and in presence of his (Capt. Fogo's) Commanding Officer, Brevet Lieut.-Col. Holcombe, commanding the artillery, he being at the same time endeavouring, in pursuance of his orders from the Major-General commanding, to effect an amicable adjustment of a previous misunderstanding between the prisoner and Lieut. Cookson.?"—The Court found him Guilty, and sentenced him to be cashiered; but, in consideration of his long and active services, and other circumstances, recommended him to mercy, which his Majesty was most graciously pleased to extend, and " to command that Capt. Fogo shall be severely reprimanded, and strongly admonished not to suffer his passions again to surprise him into the commission of an offence which is equally at variance with the principles of discipline, with the laws of his country, and with the rules and habits of society. Upon a consideration of the circumstances which have justly called forth the censure of the Court upon the conduct of Lieut.-Col. Holcombe, and Lieut.-Heath, his Majesty has been pleased to command that those officers shall be informed of the regret and marked displeasure with which his Majesty has viewed a proceeding so discreditable to their characters.

NAPOLEON'S MEMOIRS, the Third Livraison.

"It was during the years of a dreary and hopeless exile, that his mind, so fertile and restless was action, whose health depended on incessant and boundless exercise, let to prey upon and eat into itself, as the rust corrodes the neglected sword, and brand, sought to beguile the hours of sorrowful and bitter recollection by striving for a little on the past, and dictating the Memoirs of which we have to-day to bear some account. This work bears impressed on it the stamp of the gigantic mind from which it emanated. It is wholly free from the usual vices of such composition of depth, originality, comprehensiveness, and great energy of expression, are its prominent characteristics. A profound and intuitive sagacity, and unerring insight into human character, mental resources almost supernatural, and an incredible knowledge of the minutest details of every subject examined, are exhibited in almost every page: nothing escapes the observation, or transcends the capacity, of the Imperial Annalist. He combines the judgment and penetration of Tacitus, with the prodigious versatility of Livy, and the more enlarged views of modern philosophy and science; policy, war, civil administration, statistics, and even literature, in short, whatever he touches on seems to unfold its most recondite principles to his view, and is at once comprehended and appreciated. With these qualities, his style clear, vigorous, admirably harmonizes, yet appears occasionally to labour under the weight and importance of the materials of which it is the vehicle; and notwithstanding the extreme exclusion of every thing in the shape of ornament, there are occasional flashes of deep intellectual eloquence which strikes like a flash into the soul, thrills into its inmost recesses, and leaves us overmastered and subdued by its sudden and irresistible impulse. It is fortunate that the prodigious exuberance of his ideas forced the Emperor to have recourse to dictation; for, in this manner, his statements come warm and fresh from his mind, and in the original mind, stamped with the innate freedom, boldness, and originality of his character, and utterly divested of any symptom of painful and anxious elaboration. In the same ratio in which it increases the pleasure we derive from his perusal, this cannot fail to augment their value, as the living and vehement expression of those prodigious faculties to which all men of all countries have been compelled to render an unanimous homage. To the future historian, whose duty it is to delineate with regard to the Memoirs themselves, no history can be more impressive."—Constable's Edinburgh Magazine.

The fourth and last Livraison of this important Work are in a forward state.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR,—As an inference may be drawn unfavourable to my character, in having business with Mr. Probert, the others being entirely unknown to me, except Mr. Heward, whom I have frequently seen about here, I think it necessary to explain the whole of my business with either of them; I have lately purchased (for a gentleman) the freehold estate at Gill's Hill, the cottage occupied by Probert being a part, my employer was anxious to get immediate possession, and desired me to negociate with Messrs. Heward and Probert for the remainder of their term, (up to Michaelmas next,) and that brought them to my house on the Sunday evening, nothing else. I disclaim any other acquaintance with either of them. I must add, I was not at Gill's Hill on the Sunday, as stated in the public papers, nor for some weeks preceding, and then only on business relating to the purchasing and getting possession of the property: in fact, it was not said in the evidence that I was there on the Sunday. If you think well of inserting this in your Paper, you will oblige your humble Servant,

Butler's Green, Aldenham, Herts. C. NICHOLLS.

LATEST NEWS.

Paris Papers down to Friday have arrived, and some private letters have been received, dated Friday. The Duke d'Angoulemе is expected in Paris about the end of this month, when splendid fetes will be given, and public rejoicings take place, in honour of his return. It is confidently said, in quarters where the truth was likely to be known, that General Guilleminot is finally to be the Minister at War, and that Damas only holds the office until the return of the former.

Advices reached the City yesterday by express from Paris, which state that the new Royal Spanish Loan had been contracted for. The amount of the Loan is variously given; according to some accounts, it is for 2,500,0001. and to others, 3,000,0001.

We have received the Brazilian Diario do Governo to the 21st of September. The anniversary of the proclamation of the Independence of Brazil, was celebrated on the 7th, on which occasion a Deputation of the Legislative Assembly offered their congratulations to the Emperor. The reply of his Majesty to the speech delivered by the President leaves not the slightest reason to suppose that he will ever separate himself from Brazil.

Dutch journals to the 12th inst. also arrived yesterday. According to intelligence from Odessa, the Emperor of Russia has actually renewed his diplomatic relations with Turkey, by the appointment of M. Minziacky to Constantinople.

The report that the Melo drama called the "Gamblers," was suppressed, is entirely unfounded; it will certainly be produced at the Surrey Theatre to-morrow evening. Report speaks highly of its merits.

In the Arches Court yesterday, the case of Lady Turner v. Sir G. Page Turner, Bart. was heard, and it charged cruelty on the part of the husband. The libel stated the marriage of the parties, and that several children were the issue of it, that, shortly after the marriage, Lady Turner experienced such repeated ill-treatment from Sir Gregory that she found it impossible to live with him. He would strike her with his clenched fist, before her servant, to the ground; accompanied with calling her by the most opprobrious names. He would portion out a small allowance of money for the support of his family, barely sufficient to find them in common necessaries. The lady enumerated various indignities which she suffered; the ill-treatment caused her to miscarry, and she remained for a length of time ill, during which she did not experience that attention from him which was required, but in consequence of the scanty allowance given her by her husband, she was suffered to pine in almost absolute want—that shortly after her miscarriage Sir Gregory absented himself, without informing her to what place he had gone, and there continued for a length of time, unknown to her or her friends. On several occasions after his return, she again experienced the same course of ill treatment, when he again absented himself from home; during his absence she was delivered of a son, when notice was immediately sent to Sir Gregory of the fact, and entreating him to return home—he, however, disregarded the entreaties, and not for a long time after did he return home, or make inquiries after Lady Turner. The further hearing of the case was postponed.

In the Court of King's Bench yesterday, a rule to shew cause was granted, why the warrant of attorney given by a Mrs. Saxby to Moses Cashmore for 70l, should not be set aside. She was introduced to Cashmore, a jeweller, who agreed to let her have goods to that amount, for which she executed a warrant of attorney in her maiden name. Application was made to his Lordship the Chief Justice, to set aside judgment which had been entered up on the warrant of attorney, on the ground that she was defrauded as to the value of the goods, which fetched 30l. only. His Lordship made an order upon that application, which was, that the defendant should be discharged out of custody upon paying the sum of 30l. into the Court. No sooner had his Lordship pronounced this order than Cashmore had her taken into custody on a charge of felony; upon that charge she was committed to prison to take her trial at the Old Bailey. The bill being thrown out by the Grand Jury, Cashmore presented another bill for fraud, which was found and tried at the Middlesex Sessions, and she was acquitted.

His Lordship addressed the prisoner. He had no doubt from the suspicious manner in which he was found, but that he was guilty of a participation in an act of robbery of the worst description; yet, as there was no legal evidence likely to convict him in another place, he felt it his duty to set him at liberty. "You are," said his Lordship, "a well-known character in this and other places connected with this species of robbery, I therefore advise you to be more cautious in future you are discharged."

Prisoner—My Lord, we are forced to do these things—the surgeons cannot do without them.

Lord Mayor—Then I'd advise you to get an Act of Parliament to sanction your depredations—and further, that when you make your will, that you leave your body for their use.

At Bow-street, yesterday, Mr. Scarlett's system of economy, as regards one shilling hackney coach fares, is likely to prove highly beneficial to the public at large, for a gentleman, conscious of the enormous exaction of the extra sixpence, summoned the driver of the coach, No. 321, he having demanded more than his legal fare, in taking the gentleman up at the top of the Old Bailey, stopping at the Saracen's Head, Snow Hill, and finally putting him down at Exeter Change. One shilling and sixpence was demanded, and for which overcharge, the coachman was summoned to Bow-street. Sir R. Birnie went over the distance with his compasses, and seemed inclined to decide in the defendant's favour, but recommended the parties to have the distance measured, to which they agreed, and each deposited his 5s.

The LITERARY MUSEUM of yesterday containing 48 closely printed columns of matter, consisting of Reviews and Extracts from the following interesting Works:—The Duke of Rovigo's Memoirs, concerning the Execution of the Duc d'Enghien—Bird's Poetical Memoirs—The Exile, a Tale—The Stranger's Grave—Friendship's Offering—Bristed's Thoughts on the Anglican and Anglo-American Churches—Lockhart's Pilgrim's Tale—Buonaparte's History of France—Original Papers: Leisure Hours—My Own Room—Rich Relations—Foreign Correspondence—Original Poetry—London Mechanics' Institute—Science—Fine Arts—The Drama—Varieties, &c. &c. &c. Price 9d., or for its immediate transmission by post, the Museum may be had stamped, price 1s. Published by John Warren, No. 7, Brydges-street, Covent-garden; and to be had of all Booksellers and Newsvenders in the Kingdom.

ELEGANT GLASSES, FURNITURE, &c.—The Nobility and Gentry are invited to inspect the Ware rooms of Cooper and Son, 83, Bishopsgate Within, where is exhibited a large Assortment of new and second-hand Plate Glasses, admirably suited to every description of drawing or dining-rooms. The prices are just reduced 40 per cent. on plates measuring 100 inches by 72, and upwards; and on those of smaller dimensions the alteration will be found equally important. The extensive premises given to this Establishment is thankfully acknowledged by the Proprietors, who, in their endeavours to evince their gratitude, by manufacturing articles in a superior manner, at prices suitable to the times, hope to merit a continuance of public support. In the furniture department is comprised every new and elegant article of upholstery, cabinet, and chair work, regulated upon such a scale of economy as to demand and ensure the patronage of rank and fashion.

BEARS GREASE.—J. ATKINSON, Perfumer, 44, Gerrard-street, Soho-square, London, respectfully informs the Public, that he receives a supply of the above article every six or eight weeks from his correspondent in Russia, and it is potted without any admixture, only a little perfume to keep it sweet, and render it pleasant for use. The reputation this article has long held for making the hair grow, and the remark of a celebrated Lecturer on Physiology, that "Bears Grease from the animal in its native climate no doubt possesses very remarkable properties for regenerating the hair," supersedes the necessity of further remark. J. A. will only add that this is genuine as imported, and a very pleasant article for dressing the hair.—Sold by appointment by most Perfumers, in pots, price 2s., 3s. 6d., and 5s.—Caution—of the daily complaints J. A. receives of deceptions, renders it necessary to inform the Public that his signature and address is always on the bill round each pot of his importation.

DENIS JACOB, Dealer in Diamonds and Pearls, begs leave to inform the Public he has REMOVED to 213, REGENT-STREET, where he gives Ready Money for the above Articles.

THE IRISH LINEN COMPANY beg leave to announce to the Public, that the above House is their only Establishment in this country where they continue to supply the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public, with warranted Grass-bleached Linen, for Shirts and Sheets, of the best fabric and colour at a price considerably lower than they can be procured through any other medium. They also engage to return the purchase-money should any fault appear. Good Irish Bills and Bank of Ireland Notes taken as usual.—Country and Town orders punctually attended to by JOHN DONOVAN, 31, Bloomsbury-square, London, } Agents.

JOHN DOYLE, 31, St. Mary's Abbey, Dublin. }

☞ Country Shopkeepers will find dealing with the above House much to their advantage, as small parcels of goods are forwarded at exactly the same price as if a round or box was ordered. For Ready Money only.

ROAD TOOLS upon Mr. M'Adam's IMPROVED SYSTEM; shovels, grafting tools, sieves, mattocks, mud scrapers, and rakes of every description, barrows with iron wheels, &c. The tools are well steeled, and will be found much more durable than the generality of these articles. Surveyors requiring large quantities supplied at 25 per cent. under the usual prices. Gunpowder, patent shot, refined cart grease, and paints, oils, and colours of every description. Manufactured and sold by Robinson, Taylor, and Co. (successors to M'Adam and Co.) Willow-wharf, 67, Bankside Southwark.

THE greatest discovery that really prevents the Hair falling off or turning grey, and produces a thick growth on bald places, is ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL. This Oil is the first production of the age, and the Original and Genuine, which for many years has been universally admired; also PATRONIZED and SANCTIONED by the most illustrious Personages:—the ROYAL FAMILY; their Imperial Majesties the EMPEROR and EMPRESS of RUSSIA, the EMPERORS of PERSIA and CHINA. This Oil is also acknowledged by the most eminent Physicians as the best and cheapest article for nourishing the Hair, preventing the hair being injured by illness, change of climate, study, travelling, accouchement, &c.; removes the scurf, harshness, and dryness; renders it soft and glossy; prevents its falling off or turning grey; creates a thick growth on the baldest places; makes the Hair strong in curl, which it keeps in damp weather, exercise, &c.; imparts a pleasant perfume; and turns dusty whiskers, eyebrows, &c.—The Proprietors warrant its innocence, and to improve the Hair from the infancy to the latest period of life.—Ask for "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL," and strictly to observe, that none are Genuine without the little book inside the wrapper; and the label is signed on the outside, in red, "A. ROWLAND & SON." The prices are 3s. 6d.—7s.—10s. 6d. and 21s. per bottle. All other prices are impositions.—The Genuine has the address on the label, "No. 20, Hatton Garden."

Also, RED WHISKERS, GREY WHISKERS, EYEBROWS, Hair on the Head, effectually changed to Brown or Black, by the use of ROWLAND'S ESSENCE of TYRE. By merely wetting the Hair, it immediately produces a perfect change. Price 4s.—7s. 6d. and 10s. 6d. per bottle. Sold by the sole Proprietors, A. Rowland and Son, No. 20, Hatton Garden, Holborn, London; and, by appointment, by most Perfumers and Medicine Venders.—Ask for "Rowland's Oil," or "Rowland's Dye," and observe the signature, "A. Rowland & Son." All others are counterfeits.

RECTIFIED SPERM OIL, 4s. 9d. PER GALLON.

UPTON and CO. Oilmen and Colour Manufacturers, 64, Queen-street, Cheapside, most respectfully acquaint the Public, that by a process entirely new, they are enabled to sell a Sperm Oil so highly rectified as to equal in purity Spirits of Wine. This Oil being in the first instance of the finest quality, and afterwards completely cleansed from every impurity there is no waste, and its flame is equal in brilliancy to the best Gas, with the superior strength and steadiness of an Oil Light. So unequivocal is its excellence that it will burn well in every kind of Lamp.—N.B. Other Lamp Oil, run 2s. 3d. to 3s. 9d. per gallon; Linseed Oil, 2s. 6d.; and Turpentine, 5s. per gallon; white lead, 3s. 6d. per cwt.; and refined coal tar palnt, 15s. which quantity will cover 1000 square feet.

BURGESS'S ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES.—Warehouse, 170, Strand, corner of the Savoy-steps, London.—John Burgess and Son, being apprized of the numerous endeavours made by many persons to impose a spurious article for their make, feel it incumbent upon them to request the attention of the Public, in purchasing what they conceive to be the Original, to observe the Name and Address corresponds with the above: the general appearance of the spurious descriptions will deceive the unguarded, and for their detection, J. B. and Son submit the following cautions,—some are in appearance of a green hue; "The Genuine," but without any name or address;—some "Burgess's Essence of Anchovies;"—others—"Burgess's,"—and many more without Address.

John Burgess and Son having been many years honoured with such distinguished approbation, feel every sentiment of respect towards the Public, and earnestly solicit them to inspect the Labels previous to their purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments.

BURGESS'S NEW SAUCE for general purposes, having given such great satisfaction, continues to be prepared by them, and is recommended as a most useful and convenient Sauce: will keep good in all climates.

Warehouse, 107, Strand, corner of the Savoy-steps, London.—(The original Fish-sauce Warehouse.)

FOREIGN INTELLENCE.

PARIS, Nov. 18.—Yesterday being the anniversary of his Majesty's birth, who entered on his 69th year, the King received the congratulations of Monsieur, the Duchess of Berry, and the children of France; and after breakfast, at which their Royal Highnesses and the Great Officers of the Crown were present, his Majesty received the felicitations of the Duke and Duchess of Orleans.—His Majesty gave reception to the Ministers, Prince Talleyrand, the Grand Dignitaries, the Papal Nuncio, and the Ambassadors of Spain and Naples.—Louis XVIII. has ordered that a public reception should be given to the Duc d'Angoulême upon his return to Paris. He is expected there on the 2d of December.

BAYONNE, Nov. 10.—The apprehensions that may be justly entertained from the excess of the exultation of the Royalist party, now they are the masters, may be judged of by the excesses committed on All Saints' day: in the church yards, after having defaced, with their sabres, the epitaphs of the Constitutionalists, they stopped at the graves of Sierra, Pamblei, and Landaburu, from which they took the bodies and tore them to pieces.

It is stated in accounts, from Guadalaxara, that a Colonel of the corps of the Empecinado having been brought to prison, the people, with loud cries, demanded that the Governor should deliver him up to their vengeance. He had the cruel weakness to have the gates of the prison opened: the people seized the Colonel, dragged him through the streets with a rope about his neck, cut off the nose and ears, and last of all, his head.

BRUSSELS, Nov. 16.—A British Cabinet Messenger passed through our city on the night of the 14th going from St. Petersburgh to London, with despatches. Persons not acquainted with the ancient customs of Spain, relative to the execution of persons condemned to death, will certainly be surprised at General Riego's having been drawn to the place of execution by an ass, and hanged. It is the custom, in Spain, for persons condemned to be taken to execution on asses: the nobles are clothed in black, and strangled; those who are not noble are clothed in white, and hung. This was the case with General Riego.

MADRID, Nov. 7.—As soon as the Duke d'Angoulême quitted the capital, (which was on the 4th inst.) the second Court of Alcades d'Casa y Corte hastened the necessary preparation for making the ill-fated Riego drink the last drop of the chalice of bitterness. He was transferred to the public prison at an unusual hour of the night; there his sentence was read to him, which was as follows:—"Don Rafael Riego is condemned to the capital punishment of the gibbet; he is to be dragged through all the streets leading to the place of execution, his property to be confiscated to the profit of the King's Chamber, and he is to pay the expenses of justice." At ten o'clock in the morning of the 5th he was led into the burning Chapel (a room lighted up with funeral candles, and other emblems of death.) Riego showed the most unshrinking firmness. All he said was, "May God grant that my death may conduce to the happiness and tranquility of Spain." During the night of the 5th preparations were made for the execution. Amongst the crowd of ferocious people who looked on with pleasure at the progress of this fatal work, some were remarked and fully recognized to be the same who, on a very different, but not distant, occasion, had shouted in the ears of Riego, "Viva el heros de las Cabezas!" To-day (the 7th) the execution took place at the Plaza de la Cebada. Here and in all the adjacent streets there was an immense crowd of people, amongst whom were numbers of monks and priests, as also in the windows. Silence prevailed during his passage from the prison to the fatal spot; he exhibited calmness and serene courage. On mounting the scaffold, his legs appeared to be feeble, they were evidently swelled, probably from the weight of the irons with which he had been loaded. When the executioner made a sign that he had ceased to exist, a vivo was set forth by a number of persons close to the gibbet, which was of an immense height.

The Madrid Gazette of the 10th, in answer to the London Papers says, "The Royal Decree, by which a certain class of individuals is not banished, but sent to a distance of fifteen leagues from the capital, has been executed with the utmost mildness. Only 200, and not 900 persons have left Madrid; none have been obliged to go on foot, all on horseback or in carriages. It is not true that a forced loan has been demanded. There is no Apostolic Junta in Spain."

Letters have been received from Barcelona, through France, dated the 8th inst. They mention that General Moncey entered that place, and took possession of the fortresses on the 4th. Tranquility prevailed and commerce is restored.

LEMBERG, Oct. 20.—Count Nesselrode has addressed a circular note to the Allied Courts, to acquaint them with the negociations of Russia with the Ottoman Porte, and to announce to them that they will shortly be terminated.

FRANKFORT, Nov. 12.—His Serene Highness the Duke of Brunswick-Luneburg has been pleased to announce to the Senate of this city his having assumed the reins of Government on the 30th October.

The Bermuda paper of the 4th ult. mentions that a dreadful storm occurred there on the preceding Saturday night, and on the morning of Sunday: a great number of houses were uncovered by the wind, walls, fences, and trees destroyed. The storm commenced from E.S.E., from which it changed to about West. In St. George, the barracks were blown down, and partly into the sea; several wharfs were completely destroyed. The whole viranda of Mr. Taylor's house. (Post Master) on the declivity of the signal-hill, Port St. George, was raised and blown over the house and conveyed a considerable distance up the hill.

Extract of a letter dated Canton, May 15:—It is rumoured that the Chinese Government will renew the demand for the seamen in the affair of his Majesty's ship Topaz, in the ensuing season; but it is expected some means will be found out to evade it: and it is hoped no interruption to trade will take place in consequence.

SMRNA, Oct. 28.—Since the death of the heroic Marco Bozzaris, his brother Constantine has made himself known; and, according to a letter from Tino, dated the 13th of October, he has avenged the death of his brother. He has completely defeated the Pacha of Scutari, who had advanced with fresh troops towards the end of September, and destroyed the greater part of his army. Among the prisoners were 600 Latin Christians, whom Bozzaris sent to their homes, after reproaching them for having fought against their Christian brethren.

TRIAL OF DOCTOR CASTAING FOR MURDERING TWO BROTHERS.

The examination was further continued on Wednesday. He admitted that when the body of Auguste Ballett was opened he was embarrassed, and asked M. Pelletan, the operator, some questions because as he (Castaing) said, "Terrible suspicions were afloat respecting me."

[The examination of the prisoner having concluded, the witnesses to prove the charge were then examined: their testimony and the depositions given are for the most part tedious and uninteresting; we, therefore have selected the following:]

M. Martignon, the brother-in-law of the two Ballets, was then examined: he described the means which Castaing took to prevent his wife from having access to her brother during his illness. Hypocrites's body was opened by Castaing and M. Segalas, the appearances of which were the same as in the body of Auguste. The physicians, Laennec, Lhermminier, and Segalas, gave their testimony. The two latter declared that they had discovered that 14 grains of acetate de morphine when given to animals had not killed them.—(Castaing here said, "I bought only 15 grains of it.")

The President reminded him that, by his own confession, which was confirmed by the books and deposition of the druggist Chevalier, he had bought 30 grains of it.

M. Laennec, one of the professors in the Faculty of Medicine, deposed, that he recollected Castaing as an individual who had attended his lectures, and had assisted in performing a cure, in which a very strong dose of emetic had been given without danger.

The President—What is your opinion regarding the causes of the death of Hyppolyte Ballet?

M. Laennec—As a physician, I can affirm nothing, but as a man if I had seen Hyppolyte Ballet in his last moments under such circumstances as have been related to me, I should have suspected he had been poisoned.

President—Castaing, what have you to say to this?

Castaing—I am not guilty of the crime which is imputed to me. I can look you in the face, (pointing to the image of Christ which is in the Court,) I can throw myself at your feet and say I have not committed it. What M. Laennec has said is merely opinion, but I submit to it, and also to the decrees of the Court.

Mademoiselle Percillie was the next witness examined. She described herself an actress, and stated she was 27 years old; she declared Castaing had destroyed Hippolyte Ballet's Will, either before or after his death, and that he advised Auguste to submit to a loss of 100,000 francs.

The Advocate-General—What effect did the death of Auguste make upon you? The witness (raising her voice) said, "The news of his death affected, but did not surprise me, when I learnt that M. Castaing was in his company."

Dr. Laennec was asked what would be the effect of acetate of morphine taken frequently, and in small quantities, and he replied that the effects of this medicine were not yet very well known, but he seemed to think, whatever the effects might be, they would be of less importance if when taken it was followed by frequent vomitings.

Some difference of opinion existed as to the possibility of the deceased reaching the wine from his bed, but it seems he might have done so and helped himself. Auguste complained, in the presence of a servant, of the wine being sour; he put sugar in it, and both he and Castaing drank while the servant was there. She tasted that which M. Ballet drank of. The nurse swore that the deceased threw up large quantities of stuff at different times before his death. The prisoner admitted that he threw away what was thrown up by the sick man. An apothecary's servant proved having sold to Castaing acetate of morphine on May 31st. A. M. Audibert, proved that Castaing came to him for 12 grains of emetic, also on May 31st, in the evening, presenting a physician's prescription, as not written by himself, when it was, and pretending to be a student of law; and this he explained by saying, it was to obtain the medicine at a cheaper rate.

The witnesses for the defence were called. M. Chaussier, Professor at the Faculty of Medicine, Paris, said that he had found no trace whatever of any poison in the stomach, neither mineral nor vegetable, and that the inflammation of that organ was not a proof of poison. The circumstances he had remarked in the body could not have been produced by poison. The Judge reminded him that he differed from the rest of his brethren, and that his evidence was contrary to the paper he had signed. He seemed not quite certain whether or not it was possible for vegetable poisons to be administered, and leave no trace behind. The destruction of parts discovered in the brain of Auguste, the witness admitted, might have been caused by poison and by several other substances; but the effects he had observed in the stomach and intestines certainly not.—M. Majendie had also examined the stomach and intestines, but found no trace of poison. He was, however, of opinion, that vegetable poisons, if given in small doses, cannot be detected, and that it was possible all the effects observed in the body of the deceased might have been caused by poison. The history of the disease was, however, incomplete, which made it difficult to form a correct opinion on the subject. To a question from one of the Jury, he replied, that the effect of a narcotic poison having ceased for several hours, it could not again be called into action, and cause death.

The doctor, Laennec, who had been previously examined, was recalled by the President, and desired to give his opinion upon the following case:—A man 25 years old, usually enjoying good health, takes in the evening warm wine in which has been put some lemon and a quantity of acetate de morphine, sufficient to cause death, or to produce considerable derangement in the animal economy. He takes this warm wine at nine o'clock in the evening; the next day, at nine o'clock in the morning, he takes some cold milk, in which there has also been mixed a portion of acetate de morphine. At six o'clock in the evening, he has given to him a spoonful of a potion in which there is mingled some acetate de morphine. The Court is desirous of knowing what would be the probable consequence of giving that last potion?

M. Laennec.—The acetate de morphine is a substance still new, and of which the use has been adopted very recently indeed. Very few physicians have yet employed it. Many physiologists have made experiments with it upon animals; but one cannot conclude from these experiments upon animals what the effects will be that it will produce upon man. Those effects may vary; but in general, if a substance extracted from opium can excite sickness, the effects which follow it will not be the same as if sickness had not followed it. Besides, the effects vary according to the age and strength of the individuals; it is with it as with emetic—one man may take 100 grains with impunity, whilst another will die from taking 10.

After examining several other witnesses whose testimony was not material, the case on the part of the prosecution closed. The first witness called on the part of the defence was M. Chassier, a physician of 80 years of age. He stated that he had known several instances of death under circumstances as extraordinary as those of Auguste Ballet, in which not the slightest ground for supposing they were poisoned was detected on opening their bodies. The witness then stated, that if the red spots observed in the stomach of Auguste had been produced by poison, they would have been spread over it generally; instead of which they were merely local.

The President.—Might they not, however, have arisen from poison? M. Chaussier.—"Let us not lose ourselves in the vagueness of possibility; you know as well as I that ex posse ad actum non valet consequentia." He then proceeded to state, that as the evacuations of Auguste had not been preserved, there was a corpus delicti wanting in this case.

The President.—You are not wanted here to teach the President his duty, but simply to answer such questions as he may put to you.—May the poison have been the cause of Auguste's death?

M. Chaussier—Death may be caused by a thousand circumstances.

M. Roussel, Counsel for the prisoner—After the death of A. Ballet the pupil of his eye was contracted; is that the natural effect of narcotic poisons?—No, on the contrary, those poisons dilate prodigiously the pupil of the eye.

M. Barruel and M. Magendie, two members of the Institute, deposed to the same effect as the last witness.

M. Brechet, Professor of Anatomy in the School of Medicine, deposed that he knew the prisoner from his having studied dissection under him. He likewise deposed to Castaing's being received into several most respectable families on intimate terms. He could not say whether the prisoner had given lectures to any pupils or not; but he might have done so for any thing which he knew to the contrary.—M. Barbier, Chief Surgeon in the Military Hospital of Val de Grace, gave the prisoner a good character for morality, talent, and industry in his profession.—Several witnesses belonging to the lower order of society spoke in strong terms of gratitude of the attention which they and their families had received from Castaing during ill-health. He always declined taking any fee from them.

The President told the prisoner, that though these witnesses proved, on the one hand, the disinterestedness of his character, they proved, on the other, that his practice was not among the opulent classes of society. How, then, was it that you were able by your economy to lay up the 4000 francs which you said the other day you had laid by?

Castaing—I have only summoned such witnesses as could speak to the morality and disinterestedness of my character. I have not summoned those of my patients who paid me for my trouble.

A witness proved that Castaing and Auguste had called upon him on the morning that they were at St. Germain en Laye, and that Auguste entered into conversation with him about hiring his lodgings. A woman of the name of Peison proved, that on one occasion, when Castaing was not with Auguste Ballet, he had been seized with a fit of indigestion, which produced violent vomitings, and that it had been necessary to call in a physician to cure him.—M. Talvander, a clerk in the office of the Minister of Marine, stated that he had been a pupil of Castaing, who had always had seven or eight other pupils. He paid him from 40 to 50 francs for attending his lectures for two months.

The evidence for the defence here closed.

On Monday, M. Berryer, advocate for Castaing, made what appears to have been a forcible as well as eloquent speech, contending that no proof had been adduced of corpus delicti, the fact of the poisoning, and dwelt on the evidence of M. Orfila, the celebrated writer on poisons, who pointed out the symptoms of poisoning as directly contrary to those which appeared in the case of Auguste Ballet.

At half-past 11 at night, the Jury acquitted Castaing of the charge of poisoning Hippolyte Ballet, but found him guilty of destroying the will, and also of poisoning Augusta Ballet, by a majority of seven against five. The Court joined with the majority of the Jury. Castaing being informed of the result, uttered several incoherent expressions importing his innocence of the crime, but said he should die with pleasure, as death would unite him with his dear friends whom he was accused of murdering.

The Court sentenced him to death, and to pay 100,000 francs damages, and costs towards the cost incurred in the proceedings.

IRELAND.

ATHLONE, Nov. 15.—Within a few miles of this place, the 14th inst. two small parties of Major Wills's police, 10 in number, fell in with nearly 100 of the deluded people who were destroying the country; the latter, on discovering the police, rushed on them, when firing commenced on both sides—two of the Ribbonmen were killed, and one, armed with a pike, taken prisoner. Early in the last week, the house of a man, named Linden, was attacked and stripped of a gun, the only fire-arms it contained. So daring are the miscreants in this quarter, that they visited the house of the Rev. Mr. Peacock, at Mount Temple, in the open day, in order to procure arms—and a few nights back, five sheep, the property of this gentleman's Proctor, residing near Moate, were shorn of their wool, and their fleeces carried away. Three houses in the barony of Tyrawley, in Mayo, were broken into on Monday and Wednesday. Major Warburton, Chief Magistrate for the Province of Connaught, is at present busily employed in mustering and organizing at Ballinasloe, a body of 7 or 800 men for the Police Establishment. They are to be supplied with arms and accoutrements from the arsenal at Athlone.—Dublin Journal.

On the night of Tuesday last, the house of Mr. J. Roberts, Newtown, in the barony Pubble Brien, was attacked by a number of armed persons, who beat him and some strange labourers who were in his house, in a most savage manner. On the night of Wednesday last, a numerous party of insurgents called at the house of a person named Collins, at Newcastle, and having received a smaller sum of money than they demanded, proceeded to violence, and broke the doors and windows of his house.—Limerick Chronicle.

A young lady, named Margaret Thompson, possessing a considerable share of beauty, and scarce eighteen years of age, has been residing for some time at Ticknock, a little beyond Ballinteer, Dundrum, at the foot of the Dublin Mountains, under the protection of a gentleman of this city. On Sunday evening, this young lady, being alone, requested of Mrs. Cardiff, in whose house she lodged, to allow her daughter, a young woman about her own age, to sleep with her, and having consented, the two young ladies retired for the night. On Monday morning, some time having elapsed beyond the usual hour of Miss Cardiff's rising, without her having made her appearance, Mrs. Cardiff proceeded to the chamber where they had slept, and knocked at the door repeatedly, without receiving any answer. The door was then burst open, and the agonized mother beheld her daughter and the other young lady, lying lifeless. Reports through town respecting this melancholy occurrence were very numerous; among others, it was said that they were poisoned. There was no foundation whatever for this statement; their death is supposed to have occurred in consequence of a charcoal fire being kept in the room where they slept, which was ill ventilated and the chimney defective. This dangerous kind of fuel, it is believed, thus caused them to be suffocated. Surgeon M'Namara, has examined the contents of the stomachs of both the deceased; we understand they exhibit no symptom or appearance of poison.

On Monday night, a stack of corn was burned on the lands of Knockanethoota, Rock-hill, the property of a man who had taken the grounds, after a former tenant had been ejected.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH.

THURSDAY.—Mr. Chitty said he moved the Court in a very distressing case of misconduct in a young man articled to an attorney of this Court residing in the country, praying for a rule to shew cause why he should not be at liberty to transfer the young man's indentures to serve his time with some other attorney. The party on whose behalf he moved had received a very small premium, namely, 100 guineas. The young man had, it appeared, seduced the attorney's daughter, a child under 14 years of age, just returned from school, and was beside detected in an attempt upon the servant girl. Thus it turned out he was discovered to be a very depraved character, and on that ground it was submitted the attorney had just cause to desire to get rid of him. The father of the young man would not consent to transfer his articles, but was willing he should give them up on condition that the attorney would return the 100 guineas premium.—Mr. Justice Bailey.—Take a rule to shew cause.

The Attorney-General prayed the judgment of the Court on D. W. Harvey and J. Chapman, for a libel in a Sunday Paper of the 19th of February. Chief Justice Abbot read the information and his notes of the trial, the verdict of guilty against both the defendants, and the Jury's recommendation of both defendants to mercy.

John Chapman put in an affidavit, setting forth that he had been a farmer in Essex, and had failed, owing to the pressure of the times: that Mr. D. Harvey took deponent's son to educate him for a Clerk in the event of Mr. Harvey being called to the Bar; the said son was taken into the printing-office, at 15s. a week, on condition that the deponent should allow his name to be entered at the Stamp Office, the son being a minor; that deponent had never been in the printing-office; and that he had no interest in the publication; and, if sent to prison, no means of maintaining himself. A long affidavit was put in from the defendant Harvey, which stated, that the failure of his attempts to be called to the bar, while it disappointed his hopes, compelled him to engage in a new scene of action; and that the purchase of the Newspaper presented the opportunity of such exertion. He added, that he had been, for years past, so afflicted in his health, that he required the frequent aid of medicine, and the constant attention of his domestics. A medical gentleman's affidavit, bore testimony to the imperfect state of Harvey's health.

Mr. Harvey proposed to read the affidavits of three of the Jury who had tried him, but as they related to what passed while they were locked up, they could not be received.

Mr. Harvey addressed the Court at some length in defence. He adverted to what had been said on the state of the King's health by other newspapers. The Court observed, that these papers, unless proved on affidavit, could not regularly be received by them; and the Lord Chief Justice asked the defendant how he could expect to benefit himself by reading other libels: he advised him to refrain from that course.

Mr. Harvey then adverted to what had passed amongst the Jury whilst out of Court, and said he had it from one of that Jury, that if his Lordship had asked on what they grounded their recommendation to mercy, they would have told him they founded their recommendation on the conviction that the defendant had been misled by his information, and not by any malicious intentions. And had his Lordship in reply stated malice to be necessary to constitute a libel, they would instantly have found a verdict of not guilty. He added, that affidavits to character had not been adduced, because it was not viewed as a criminal proceeding that involved moral principle; and that (as in the case of the John Bull), no affidavit had been put in, setting forth that he had subsequently published worse matter than that charged to be libel. Having adverted to the sentences of John Bull—he said his case was not like that of the publishers and proprietors of that paper, who were brought up to receive judgment for no less than five libels upon the late Queen in succeeding papers. Two of those defendants were only fined 100l. each, and imprisoned for three months, and the other (Mr. Arrowsmith) on account of ill health was fined 300l. and was not imprisoned.

The Lord Chief Justice referred to the book in which the judgments were entered, and then observed, that it appeared at the time when Weaver, Shackell, and Arrowsmith were brought up to receive judgment for libels on the late Queen, they were in custody for a previous libel on the Lady Caroline Wrottesley, the time of imprisonment for the latter libel (nine months) not having then expired.

Mr. Brougham—(amicus curiæ)—But, my Lord, Mr. Harvey conceives as a topic of mitigation, that this is his first offence, and that in this respect his case is favourably distinguished from theirs.

The Lord Chief Justice—Mr. Harvey has been fully heard, and I am sure he has done himself very great justice; the second libel in the case he has done himself very great injustice; but it was long after the first prosecution.

Mr. Brougham—No; but it was long after the first prosecution.

The Attorney General said, as to the mischievous character of the libel, all persons of decent mind must admit the fact. He did not desire any heavy sentence; he required what was commensurate to the offence; but it would be deserting his duty not to call on their Lordships for such sentences on the parties as would tend to prevent the repetition of such offences.

Mr. Justice Bayley pronounced the sentence of the Court. In so doing, he said that the defendants had been found guilty on evidence that justified the result, but accompanied with a recommendation to mercy to which the court had cheerfully attended. The libel was of an aggravated character, especially as it purported to come "from authority," as if the proprietor, or his authority, personally knew the correctness of the statement. The statement turned out to be altogether without foundation; it was altogether false. It was a libel, also, which, had the alledged facts been true, a feeling heart would not desire to see published it. As to Chapman's case, he had sworn that he was the printer when he was not. The Court had taken all the circumstances into their consideration. The sentence was, that Harvey should pay a fine to the King of 200l. that he be imprisoned in the King's Bench for three months; that he give sureties for five years, himself in 1,000l. and two sureties in 500l. each, and that he be imprisoned till such fine be paid, and sureties given. That Chapman be imprisoned, also in the custody of the Marshal of the Marshalsea, for two months.

The Solicitor-General moved, that a number of gamblers detected in these practices in the King's Bench Prison, by Mr. Jones, the Marshal, and two turnkeys, on application of the Marshal that they should be removed by order of this Court to some other prison, under an impression that their example would tend to demoralize the rest of the inhabitants of this gaol.—The Court directed a rule to show cause why they should not be removed to another gaol, with leave to answer the matters of the affidavit; as that they might be indicted for the offence.

The King v. Abraham.—The Solicitor-General prayed judgment on the defendant, convicted of an aggravated assault upon a revenue officer, who had commenced overhauling the stock in his malt-house, near Monmouth. He had already been imprisoned six months, and the Court taking that circumstance into consideration, sentenced him to be imprisoned one month longer.

FRIDAY.—A mandamus was directed to be issued, calling on the Marshal of the King's Bench prison to shew cause why he refused to bear the complaint of a Mr. Forrester, a prisoner, against Bridgeman, another prisoner, whom the former charged with embezzling a note for 10l. which he entrusted him with to get changed.

In the case of Laing v. Delamere, which was an action for crim. con. brought by the Captain of an American trader against an attorney, and in which the latter had suffered judgment by default, a motion was made for delay, on the ground that the defendant could not be found, and that if the Court granted the motion the father of the defendant, who was left to manage his affairs, might be able to reduce the damages. The Court granted the defendant six weeks before the execution of the writ, on condition that the father paid the costs, and judgment to be given as if this term.

CONSISTORY COURT.

FRIDAY.—Manville v. Manville.—This was a case brought by Ann Manville against her husband for cruelty and adultery, and prayed for a divorce. The husband did not appear in the regular manner to the citation, but had suffered the case to pass over from day to day. The libel was read.—It stated that in the months of March, April, and May, 1821, Mrs. Manville experienced repeated ill treatment from her husband—that at that time they continued to reside at the Constitution, public-house, Great James-street, Lisson-grove, of which house Mr. Manville was the landlord—but in consequence of such repeated ill treatment, she was obliged to leave the house—that shortly after the marriage he used to beat her, and use the most disgusting and disgraceful language towards her—on one occasion he put himself into a most violent passion and knocked her down, when she fell into hysterics—she then left the house and went to her brother's, but at the earnest entreaties of her husband she again returned home, upon his promise of amendment; a short time, however, had only elapsed, when he again returned to his former practices, put himself again into a violent passion, and taking up a carving knife threatened to stick it into her—and the wife considered he would have done so had he not been prevented by several persons, who entered on hearing the disturbance. On another occasion he struck her down in the bar, when the servant came to her assistance, but was obliged to leave, being in danger of her life. He then dragged her into the kitchen, where she received a violent blow, which broke several of her ribs, and she has not been again restored to perfect health. This was the charge of cruelty complained of, and the libel then proceeded to state the adultery, as alledged by the wife against the husband. It then stated other gross, and more disgusting acts on the part of the husband. Dr. C. Robinson admitted the libel.

Bellamy v. Hulme.—This was a suit instituted by the wife against the husband for cruelty and adultery, in various charges contained in the libel. The parties had been living together only 13 months when the cruelty and adultery is alleged to have been committed; but the wife had resorted to another tribunal, and exhibited articles of the peace against her husband, and he is now bound in 200l. and two sureties for his good behaviour. The charge is cruelty and adultery, and that brought by the wife of a pawnbroker, in Stepney, on one occasion he threatened to cut her arm off, beat her brains out, and cut her throat, on another occasion, the libel says, he seized a red-hot poker, and brandishing it about, said he would run her through, a servant hearing the noise, came into the room, when he laid down the poker under the grate, this she stated in the articles of peace; but when the libel is brought forward she recollects that she then informed the servant, in the hearing of her husband, of the repeated ill-treatment she received from him. The libel also goes on to state, that on another occasion he returned home between 11 and 12 o'clock at night intoxicated; on one occasion he returned home when his wife was in bed, and catching up a large case knife, attempted to strike her with it: that she evaded his blows, and getting out of bed, fell on her knees before him, but he threatened to rip her up. On the part of the husband it was contended that the libel was incapable of proof. Sir C. Robinson took a general view of the case, and considered it would be impossible for the Court to shut its doors against the complaint of the wife, and therefore admitted the libel.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS' COURT.

FRIDAY.—Thomas Kingston, formerly churchwarden of Stoneleigh, in Warwickshire, was sentenced to be imprisoned for 12 months, for embezzling the parish monies to the amount of 231l.

POLICE.

MANSION-HOUSE.—About three years and a half ago, the house of the Rev. Mr. Fitzthomas, then of West Tilbury, Essex, and now of Sunbury, in Middlesex, was broken open in the night by robbers, who entered by means of a centre-bit, with which they bored the window-shutter. A great quantity of plate and other valuable property was taken off, amongst which were some silver candlesticks, which had been nearly a century in the family. Soon afterwards three men were apprehended on suspicion of being concerned in the burglary, and taken at the Assizes, where two of them were convicted and executed. No tidings were received of the property until a few days ago, when Mr. Fitzthomas accidentally looking in at the window of the shop of Mr. Simmons, a jeweller, in Holborn, saw a pair of the old candlesticks of which his house had been robbed. Mr. Simmons said the candlesticks had been brought to his shop, about eight months ago, by a lady, who drove up in a hackney coach, and who had the appearance of being mistress of such property. He gave her 5*s.* an ounce for them.—The candlesticks were ordered to be given up.

On Friday, Thomas Silby, one of Mr. Whitbread's carters, was charged with having wilfully driven his dray against the small cart of a Mr. Clements, and broken it to pieces, and endangered the life of his children who were in it. As soon as the fellow saw the cart was entangled, he said—"Now I've got you." Had not the father caught one of the children, he must have been killed. Fully committed.

HATTON-GARDEN.—Tuesday, F. Woodard, a baker, No. 60, Cow-cross, was fined 10*s.* and costs, for selling a poor woman a loaf, weighing 3lb. 8½*oz.* for a 4lb. one. He had been before fined 20*l.* for having deleterious ingredients in his possession, and 5*l.* for obstructing the officers in a search, and they were now ordered to keep a strict eye on him.

On Thursday, a sturdy young beggar, a native of Glasgow, was charged by Mr. Smith, a shopkeeper, near Hatton-garden, with coming into his shop, where his daughter, a delicate young woman, was attending to business, and demanded charity in a very impudent tone, and being refused it, he exposed his arm, which was a shocking spectacle, being one mass of disease and ulceration. Mr. Smith followed him, and found him repeating the same offence in another shop. He said he wished not to press the case upon the mere asking for charity, but he observed, that if fellows were allowed with impunity, for the sake of exciting commiseration, thus to shock females with their disgusting exhibitions, the consequences might sometimes be most serious. The Magistrate committed the prisoner for one month to the House of Correction.

On Friday a young man was detected looking into the area window of one of the Chambers in Lincoln's Inn, and the constable who was appointed to watch (as many chambers had been robbed within the last week.) secured him. The officer found him with a dark lantern, with paper (evidently for the purpose of lighting the taper,) and a knife with a blade six inches in length, and very sharp pointed. The prisoner was remanded.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE KING'S COURT.—On Friday at half-past 12 o'clock his Majesty arrived in his travelling carriage at his Palace in Pall-mall, from his Palace at Windsor, and soon afterwards the King held a Court, which was attended by the Lord Chancellor, the First Lord of the Treasury, the Secretaries of State for the Home and Colonial Departments, the First Lord of the Admiralty, the Master General of the Ordnance, the President of the Board of Trade, the President of the Board of Controul, the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Viscount Sidmouth, the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of King's Bench, &c. &c.

The following had the honour to be presented to the King, Sir Francis Bayley, on his being appointed Recorder of Prince of Wales's Island. Sir Charles Harcourt Chambers, on his being appointed one of the Judges of the Supreme Court at Bombay. Sir William Bannatyne, late a Judge of the Court of Session in Scotland. His Majesty was pleased to confer the honour of Knighthood on them.

His Majesty gave audience to the Lord Chancellor, Mr. Secretary Peel, the Earl of Liverpool, and the Duke of Wellington. The Court broke up about five o'clock. After the Council, the King left town for Windsor.

Great preparations are at present making at the top of the Long Walk, Windsor, for the placing of the statue of his late Majesty, which is to be erected there in front of the grand entrance to the Castle. It is to be fifty feet high, and will represent the King pointing to the Castle.

On Friday Sir Henry Torrens, Adjutant-General, &c. inspected the 1st Battalion of the Grenadier Guards in the King's Mews. The battalion performed several movements, according to the improved system.

It is said that Mr. Justice Bayley is to be the new Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, but it does not appear that any thing definitive is settled as to the new Judge.

CAMBRIDGE, Nov. 21.—On Monday last the Rev. Richard Haggitt, M.A. and the Rev. Joseph Cape, M.A. Junior Fellows of Clare Hall, were elected Middle Fellows of that Society. We understand they have been elected into two new Fellowships, founded by the present Society, from the improved rental of the estates belonging to the college.

At the auction of Mr. Wood, of Ercall Park, Salop, two butchers quarrelled and fought. After a few rounds one of the combatants received a blow which killed him.

Lord and Lady Londonderry, on being informed of the lamentable accident at Rainton Colliery, transmitted to their principal agent the sum of 300l. with a discretionary power to make any addition to it that might be required, for the relief of the necessities of the relatives of the sufferers.

Last week the first pile of the intended new bridge about to be erected on the Pier at Margate, was driven into the rocks at that place.

The Irish Catholic Association have agreed to purchase lots of ground, of from one to three acres, not more distant than two miles from the city of Dublin, for the purpose of burying their dead.

On Wednesday last, the Royal Naval Club had their first Dinner for the season at Oman's, in Edinburgh. About thirty Admirals and Captains of his Majesty's Fleet were present; and it is deserving of remark, that the Vice-Admiral and Rear-Admiral of Great Britain (Sir J. Saumarez, K.G.C.B. and the Right Hon. the Earl of Northesk) were present—a circumstance which has not occurred since the Union.

Castaing has appealed against his sentence to the Court of Cassation.

On Friday the Recorder made his Report to the King in Council of the following prisoners, under sentence of death in Newgate:—James Hughes, aged 17; J. Clark, 26; W. Smart, 20; S. Hadden, 28; C. C. Kalmeyer, 20; W. Clavenbole, 18; J. Young, 47; G. Fletcher, 23; M. Healey, 26; S. Hitchman, 20; J. Williams, 21; W. Kitson, 21; and H. Cockrill, 19, for stealing in dwelling-houses to the amount of 40*s.* and upwards.—J. Smith, aged 24, for uttering forged Bank-notes.—S. T. Fielding, aged 21; H. Bardon, 19; J. Elgar, 19; and M. Kennedy, 20, for highway robberies.—S. J. Chalfont, aged 47, and W. Brown, 21, for horse-stealing.—S. Courtney, alias E. Jones, aged 27, for returning from transportation.—J. Williams, aged 16; W. Smith, 16; W. Young, 20; S. Phillips, 16; J. Jefferies, 63; J. Crisp, 29; J. Field, 37; J. Ford, 17; J. Wright, 25; J. Dixon; G. Ambrose, 18; T. Wellman, 20; H. Thompson, 18; and J. Shepherd, 19, for burglaries.—J. Brace, aged 30; J. Hyden, 20; Wm. Leddington, 26; J. Brown, 27; J. Gregory, 20; and J. Farmer, 45, for housebreaking.—E. Hogan, aged 18, and J. Scott, 48, for cutting and maiming.—When the following were ordered for execution on Wednesday next:—John Smith, John Hogan, John Crisp, and James Scott.—The other prisoners were respited during his Majesty's pleasure.

On Thursday night, the out-buildings belonging to Mr. Ward, Richmond-green, were discovered to be on fire. The fire was prevented from spreading to the dwelling-house, and subdued in about an hour and a half, but not until the coach-house, stables, and other offices, were demolished.

On Thursday evening, the Fortitude stage-coach, to Kentish Town and Camden Town, was overturned in Gray's Inn Lane, occasioned by the fore axle-tree breaking. A woman, outside passenger, was pitched into an undertaker's shop, the door of which was open, and she escaped with only a slight bruise.

EFFECTS OF THE LATE STORM.—The return given in on Saturday last of the number of trees blown down in Earl Bathurst's Park, was 1042, and on the estate 1143.

Between Sunday evening and Monday morning of the last week, the counting-house of Charles Lawrence, Esq. Mayor of Liverpool, was entered, and rifled of about 300*l.* in notes and cash, and bills of exchange; the whole amounting to upwards of 3000*l.*

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

The extent to which the papers forwarded to us, (and not the notice of action this night received) explanatory of the leag career of Mr. Zachary Macaulay, have encreased, renders it impossible for us, in this number, to bring the subject properly before our readers—next Sunday the whole proceedings of the Sierra Leone Company and its agents will be submitted to the public. In the meantime we have heard with pleasure, that Mr. Canning has withdrawn his name from the African Institution, and that certain regulations have been established likely to curtail the unbounded privileges of Mr. Stephen in the Colonial Office.

In compliance with innumerable letters from Officers of the Navy and Army, we beg to inform our friends, that after to-day a regular portion of the paper will be appropriated to the best and most authentic naval and military intelligence, military movements, stations of regiments, military and naval obituary, appointments, &c. It is our wish to accommodate ourselves to the different tastes and wishes of our readers, in return for the brilliant and unprecedented patronage which we enjoy.

The letter on the new publication of Fox's Book of Martyrs next week.

We are requested to say that the Officer of the Household Troops who performed at Guildhall, was not Major Camac, but Lieutenant-Colonel Camac—we would not deprive Miss Waithman of the advantage of his brevet rank for the world—in the regiment he is only a Captain.

The authoress of "No Fiction" (a letter sent to us so signed) had better read her wholesome preachment to her son at home this morning—it is really mighty uninteresting to us, and would be to our readers, we are quite sure.

"The Enemy to Ingratitude" is thanked, but we knew all that before—the apparent mistake is the thing which has annoyed the person most.

We have received a capital account of the invitations to a Stoke-hole dinner, given to a certain Committee to which Anti-Humbug alludes—but the subject is gone by.

We thank Z.—The signature of a letter from Barbadoes looks like Barbarian, and the contents justify the mistake.

An article which we had prepared on the Scots Episcopal Church, in answer to some Presbyterian cavilling, is unavoidably postponed till next week.

PRICE OF STOCKS AT THE CLOSE, SATURDAY.

The money market during the week, as far as British securities have been concerned, has been remarkably steady; Consols for Account having kept at 83¾ to ⅞. In the foreign market the fluctuations have been confined to Spanish, which have advanced about 3 per cent. having been done as high as 27¼. In the South American securities we cannot notice any thing in particular; Chili and Columbian being steady—the former at about 66¾, and the latter at 59¾.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, Nov. 23.

The insatiable desire of the radical writers to vilify and traduce the Clergy of the established church, never shewed itself more unequivocally, and we must add more injudiciously, than in a series of attacks upon a Mr. Lloyd, a magistrate of Hertford, made in consequence of that Rev Gentleman's having zealously exerted himself to fulfil the intentions of his brother magistrates, with regard to the safe custody of Hunt, Thurtell, and Probert, and the absolutely necessary exclusion of strangers.

We know nothing of Mr. Lloyd, and never heard his name till it was lugged before the public on the present occasion; he may be clever or dunceish, wise or silly, for all we know, but we certainly see no reason why his name should specially be brought forward, being one only of eighteen Magistrates who signed the order upon which he, being a resident in Hertford, has acted.

It appears by the mandamus issued from the Court of King's Bench, that the Judges of that Court view with very different feelings from the world the transactions which have occurred at Hertford, and that they recognize (during a period when the most cogent reasons exist for the greatest caution with respect to the prisoners) the power of a person, the intimate friend of the father of one of the prisoners, to have an interview of three hours with him in the character of his professional adviser, and then, having obtained access to the prisoner upon no other ground, to decline the office, and recommend his town agent as his successor.

To Mr. Fenton's character the profession speak highly, and we have neither right nor inclination to say one word against it; but it should be recollected, that the feelings of nature are powerful and all-moving; that Mr. Jay, the Norwich attorney, is the friend of Mr. Thurtell, the Norwich Alderman, the father of the prisoner, and certainly it became him, so connected with the family in friendship, to determine whether he chose to undertake John Thurtell's defence or not, before he obtained an interview with him upon the ground that he had undertaken it. Mr. Jay knew that Norwich was an hundred and twelve miles from London before he went to Hertford Jail; and he must therefore have known the inconvenience to which he would be put in defending Thurtell without having an interview with him—he might have mentioned that Mr. Fenton was his town agent then, and then have recommended him as his substitute.

We may perhaps be accused of unnecessarily mixing up politics with a matter not in the slightest degree political—but it will be observed, that Mr. Jay and Mr. Fenton were at Hertford when Mr. C. Pearson arrived, and was arrested, the prisoners, be it observed, occupying rooms in the Jail adjoining that in which this popular attorney was to be confined. Mr. Lloyd, the clergyman who has brought upon himself the abuse of the Radical press for his activity, upon making this discovery, caused the prisoners to be removed from that part of the Jail—Messrs. Jay and Fenton volunteer an undertaking for Mr. Pearson, whose caption and imprisonment at that particular time, in that particular place, and under such particular circumstances, does seem to us very extraordinary indeed.

We consider ourselves justified in connecting the political principles with the professional duties of some of the persons concerned, because the name of Thurtell has latterly appeared among the visitors of public patriotic dinners, sufficiently often to attract attention.—Two Thurtells honoured the public dinner given at Lowestoffe last year, where, we believe, Sir Harry Bunbury, Sir Robert Harland, Sir William Middleton, and various other Suffolk gentlemen, attended; and one of these Thurtells also favoured a recent Whig dinner in the north, (not improbably about the time of Doncaster races) with his company and eloquence.

Whatever responsibility the Court of King's Bench may, in its acknowledged liberality, choose to take in the indiscriminate admission of various people to the desperate junto in Hertford jail, the Magistrates, we contend, deserve every credit for their prompt and decided measure on the occasion; and we cannot help repeating, that we consider it highly illiberal in the liberal papers to single out a clergyman, as an oppressor and a tyrant, who was only one of eighteen who signed an order, which is described by the writers on that side of the question as a most oppressive act, and only resorted to by the Parsons in hopes to form a precedent for inquisitorial proceedings when any offender against the Government shall be in their clutches.

This is as wise as it is proper and liberal—for when it is considered that the peremptory order for the exclusion of Mr. Fenton bears, amongst other names of the highest respectability, that of my Lord Dacre, a nobleman whose whole political career has been marked by the most devoted attachment to the rights of the people, and that the mandamus rescinding that order, and opening the prison doors, is signed by the Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench—the King being virtually present—it will be unpleasant for these liberals to satisfy their readers where the apparent persecution originated.—The truth is, it was a salutary order, and moreover emanated from the Magistracy—it is part of the system to run down the Magistracy, and if by a lucky chance there should be amongst the Magistrates a Clergyman, it answers a double purpose, to make him the object of attack.

The Chronicle upholds Colonel Stapylton (as they call him), who is a Magistrate, merely because in Yorkshire he opposes his fellows. We must however observe, that the person so praised for his wisdom and humanity is no Colonel, and that until he took the name of Stapylton, he was better known to the public as Mr. Martin Bree, of Arundel-street in the Strand, of whose late popularity Dr. Eady is the present envied possessor.

We have, however, a few observations to make upon the case of Mr. Weare's murder, which we feel it necessary to the furtherance of justice to submit to our readers; indeed we could have wished, however amiable and exemplary Mr. Clutterbuck, the justice, may be in private life, that the conduct of the examinations had been confided to Sir Richard Birnie, (whom we conclude is in the commission for Hertfordshire) or to some other able Police Magistrates of London, whose constant occupation in cases of atrocity, added to the knowledge they possess of the haunts and habits of metropolitan miscreants, gives the tact and experience actually necessary in dealing with pieces of villainy so complicated and ramified as the murder of Mr. Weare.

The observations we have to make refer to Mr. Nicholls, the farmer, a letter from whom we last week inserted in this paper, in which he distinctly states, that he was not at Probert's on the Sunday after the murder, but that Probert and Heward came to his house on that evening about the sale of Gill's Hill Cottage, and nothing else.

We consider it our duty here to print Mr. Nicholls's evidence as it has been already published—the evidence of Hetherington, the labourer, and that of Susan Ann Woodrough. We of course take the evidence from the book published under the inspection of Mr. Heward himself.

"John Hetherington, a labourer, sworn.—Was at work in Gill's-Hill-lane, about six o'clock on Saturday morning, the 25th inst. and saw two men walking about 50 yards up the lane from Gill's-hill, towards Butler's-green. One had a white and the other a black hat on; the former was a tall man, with black whiskers, and the other shorter, with a white coat. They grabbled in the hedge; witness and a fellow labourer, named Hunt, spoke to the gentlemen, and one of them said, 'I was thrown out of my chaise here last night.' Witness was sure he should know the tallest man with a white hat, if he were to see him again. The witness, by order of the Coroner, was taken into the rooms where Probert, Thomas Thurtell, Hunt, and other persons were, and pointed out Probert as one of the men; but could not identify amongst them the man with black whiskers, who answers the description of John Thurtell. Witness heard his fellow-labourer, Hunt, ask the gentlemen if they were hurt, and the tall one replied that he was capsized; but neither horse or gig were overturned.—After witness had breakfasted, he walked up the lane again, supposing if the gentleman had been overturned, that some money might have been thrown out of his pocket, and, on searching, he found a knife, which was covered with blood. The knife was produced. About ten o'clock the same morning, he found a pistol in the hedge, near the spot where he had previously seen the gentlemen 'grabbling.' The pistol was bloody. Witness gave the pistol to Mr. Nicholls, his employer, who was in a chaise, about twenty yards up the lane, and Mr. N. told him that Mr. P. Smith had informed him that he had heard the report of a gun in the lane on the overnight. On the spot where the pistol was found, witness kicked the leaves, and the more he kicked them the more blood was found; and Mr. Nicholls said, 'I am afraid that something very bad has been done here.' Witness told Mr. Nicholls, who was at that time in his chaise, that he had seen two gentlemen 'grabbling' there. Mr. Nicholls told him not to divulge any thing that he had seen. This took place about ten o'clock on last Saturday morning."

That being, as the reader will recollect, the morning after the murder, at which period Mr. Nicholls became possessed of the pistol clotted with blood, hair, and brains.—Now hear Mr. Nicholls.

"Mr. Nicholls, a respectable farmer, corroborated the evidence of his tenant, Hetherington, as to receiving a bloody pistol from him, and discovering a 'sprinkling' of blood in the hedge. He received the pistol on Saturday morning, and did not give it up to the Magistrates till Tuesday; witness did tell Hetherington that Mr. P. Smith had informed him that he heard a gun or pistol fired on Friday night; did not know that the Magistrates sat at St. Alban's on a Saturday, or he should have given information to them; witness was in company with Probert on Sunday last, at his house, on private business; he remembered saying on that occasion to Probert, 'What the devil makes you here, you at on Friday evening last?' Probert replied, 'What manœuvres do you mean—I know nothing of it?' Witness replied, 'I suspect some one at your house fired a pistol in Gill's Hill-lane on Friday night.' Probert said, 'What time was the pistol fired?' Witness said, 'Eight o'clock.' Probert said, 'It was not me, nor any one at my house, for I did not arrive at home till long after that time.' Witness had this conversation with Probert before his making any communication to the Justices, and previous to this time he had received the pistol from Hetherington, which had BLOOD upon it; had seen a BLOODY knife found upon the spot, and had seen the BLOOD on the ground, and heard of the groans, and yet he did not suspect that a murder had been committed. Did not see the brains or the hair on the pistol till Monday morning. Witness had not wilfully done wrong in not communicating these facts earlier to Mr. Mason, the magistrate; for he thought that as there was a good deal of drinking going on at Probert's that some of them were going to London, and that some one belonging to the family had concealed themselves in the hedge, and fired to alarm their companions as they passed.—Coroner: You have told us part of what passed between you and Probert on Sunday evening, tell the remainder.—Witness: He was not there above half an hour with Probert.—Coroner: Was not something said by Probert about dragging a pond?—Witness: There was. A Mr. Heward was present, and Probert spoke about filling up his pond. Witness said it would be a pity to have the pond filled up. Heward replied, jokingly, 'it shall be dragged first, and some large fish will be found in it.' At the time, it appears, the body of the deceased was in this pond. Witness wrote on Monday the 2d, to Mr. Mason, and informed him he suspected a murder had been committed."

This is the evidence of Mr. Nicholls—in his letter to us he denies that it was in evidence that he went to Probert's, but states that Messrs. Heward and Probert came to his house on the Sunday—this statement Mr. Heward corroborates; and moreover says, in his evidence, that while they were there—

"Nicholls, as well as Smith, said on the Sunday, that it was a gun they heard go off. Nicholls did not say he had a pistol and a knife in his possession! Witness believed he said he had been down to the spot in the lane, and saw some blood, but he did not make the slightest allusion to the pistol which since appeared to have been then in his possession. He said something of the hedge being broken. On Tuesday morning witness met Mr. Philip Smith in one of his fields. Witness was shooting. Mr. Smith said 'he believed there was something more serious in what they had been talking about on Sunday.' 'Why?' said witness, 'Because,' said he, 'I have been at the place again, and have seen some blood, and the hedge is broken, as if a body had been dragged through; besides, a pistol and a knife were found.' 'A pistol?' said witness in surprise, and Smith answered in the affirmative. Witness then said, 'Good God! how could you keep it a secret?' Smith added, that it would not rest now, and on witness asking where the pistol was, he said he supposed the Magistrates had got it by that time.—The Coroner remarked, that Mr. Nicholls having complained, in a letter addressed to him, of the observations which he had felt it his duty to make on his conduct in keeping the fact of finding the pistol a secret, he desired it to be understood that the present examination showed that those observations were fully justified."

Here we have a distinct statement that Messrs. Heward and Nicholls did not go to Probert's on the Sunday; and in the pamphlet, compiled from communications of Mr. Heward himself, is the following observation:—

"The papers state that the sale of the estate was completed by Major Wood, the late owner of it, only six days before the murder occurred. The following are the real facts of the case; and they will be found to have an important bearing on subsequent events. The sale of the estate was completed on the Monday after the murder: and it was in consequence of prior negociations for giving the purchaser, Mr. Barber, possession of his share of it, that Mr. Heward, under whom Probert held the cottage, went down to Gill's-hill on Sunday after the murder. He went to the cottage about one o'clock in the day, and appointed with Probert to go at six in the evening to Mr. Nicholls, of Butler's-green, who was acting in behalf of Mr. Barber. It has been stated in some of the newspapers that Mr. Nicholls, and Mr. Heward, dined with Probert on that occasion; but nothing can be more erroneous. At six o'clock, according to the appointment, Mr. Heward called on Mr. Probert, but did not enter the parlour; Mr. Probert accompanied him to Nicholls's, where the conversation took place which is given in Mr. Heward's evidence before the Coroner."

As Mr. Heward's pamphlet contains this distinct statement of real facts, which "will be found to have an important bearing on subsequent events," he would do the cause of justice a great service in stating how and where he passed his time on that day, Sunday, from one o'clock, when he called at Gill's-hill cottage the first time, till six o'clock, when he called the second time, by appointment. There can be neither difficulty in, nor objection to, this statement, and it will be very satisfactory, because in the printed evidence which Nicholls gave before Mr. Heward gave his, he certainly is made to admit that he and Heward went to Probert's on Sunday, which fact is singularly enough corroborated by James Haddis, Probert's servant, who swears, amongst other things, to the following fact:—

"On Sunday, John Thurtell, Thomas Thurtell, Hunt, Probert, Mr. Noyes, Mr. Heward, and Mr. Nicholls, were at Probert's; Mr. Noyes came alone in a chaise, and Mr. Heward and Mr. Nicholls came about business."

These testimonies should be reconciled, which they may easily be by Mr. Heward—and we confess we are surprised, since he has taken the trouble to publish a book about the affair, that he has not explained away discrepancies so very striking as those which we have just noticed. The female servant of Probert, Susan Anne Woodrough, proved that her master came home on Friday the 24th from London, about nine o'clock at night, with two other persons, viz. Mr. Hunt and John Thurtell—Hunt and John Thurtell had both white hats on when they arrived—Mr. Probert gave witness some pork chops to cook, and told her not to get them cooked till he came back, and he then went out with the two other gentlemen, with a lanthorn and candle—Mrs. Probert told witness that they were gone to Mr. Nicholls's on business!!

Of course, not being Magistrates for the county of Hertford, we have not a word to offer upon this subject, nor anything to add, except this fact:—

The road to Gill's-hill Cottage has remained for forty years untouched and unrepaired, it has been complained of over and over again, and even presented by Juries, and nothing ever has been done to it in the way of repair—on the very day of the murder labourers were set to work upon it by the Surveyor of the Roads—who happens to be the very Mr. Nicholls in question.

These coincidences are curious, and, as Mr. Heward very justly says, are likely to have an important bearing on subsequent events.

The second Clergyman who is missing is the Rev. C. Colton, Rector of Kew and Petersham, the author of an extremely moral book called Lacon, and another work called Hypocrisy!

The Post of yesterday mentions that this Reverend Gentleman is gone to France!—we knew that before.

The Times gives an account of what people have said to Thurtell about his present situation compared with his former rank in the navy, and states also his replies. How admirably comical this is—it so happens that Thurtell never was in the navy—he has a relation, Charles Thurtell, who is in the service, whence arose the mistake into which the Times has so stupidly fallen.

We are sorry to see personal feeling peep out upon occasions where most chiefly it ought to be carefully repressed—everybody knows that the late Lord Erskine was the intimate friend of the late Mr. Perry, and a frequent contributor to his paper, the Chronicle. Since the death of Mr. Perry, the Chronicle has changed proprietors, and we conclude

...at that period been deprived of his Lordship's aid.—...however, surely is not a sufficient reason to adduce for ...so cruel as that paper chose to observe towards the ...Lord's memory yesterday. After an account of his ...career, occupying two columns and a quarter, the ...anecdote is related of his Lordship:—

...allusion to his Lordship's brilliant services in behalf of the ...Press, we cannot help adverting to a circumstance which ...much he identified himself with the Press. During the ...period of his Chancellorship, when the Whigs were in power, ...things of any value fell to his disposal. The very first, one ...and 400l. he gave to the Rev. John Moir, who became ...defective vision from continuing to execute an engagement ...Morning Chronicle. Lord Erskine, during Lord Mel... ...seeing his friend, the late Mr. Perry, whom he greatly ...esteemed, at the Bar of the House of Lords, he went up to ...gave him the presentation for Mr. Moir, observing that he ...no time in discharging what he considered a sacred duty, to ...importunities of other and more powerful connections, whose ...the circumstance had not reached."

...there is nothing wrong in such an action, taken in the ...sense of the thing; but it is quoted without much ...deration by the Chronicle in its spite, at a time when ...paper is teeming with abuse of our established Clergy for ...interference with secular employments, and taunting ...every day with their hopes of making their way by ...subserviency.

...will not argue the point with the Chronicle, but sup... ...case for its consideration—we will suppose (not the ...ability, for we put it hypothetically altogether) that Lord ...during a State Trial on which he was sitting as Lord ...Steward in Westminster Hall, should, from his place ...perceive the Editor of a Tory newspaper (whom he ...and esteemed!) standing at the Bar of the House of ...—that he should go up to him down at the bar, and ...him with a living of 400l. per annum, to give to ...clergyman who wrote in his Tory newspaper, saying at the ...time, he considered it a sacred duty. We ask—(putting ...Moir's character out of the question) — what the ...Chronicle would say to my Lord Eldon?—it would fire ...such a volley of its mud and pebble-stones at both Patron ...Priest as would astonish us—the one for using his power ...the Church, to tamper with hireling scribblers, and the ...for making his way "up the ladder" by political fa...—it is this which betrays the irony of the Chroni...'s praise of poor Lord Erskine.

If we are doubtful, however, upon this part of their article, ...which follows is quite unequivocal:—

"As a man he was generous and kind-hearted. The world are ...fully acquainted with his little indiscretions, which were injuri... ...himself alone. Prudence is the virtue of age, but Lord ...was a young man in disposition to the last. He had a buoy... ...spirits very rare in this country.

"His pension was very great. An unfortunate purchase of an ...which from the fall in the value of land, especially of a poor ...became of little value to him, though he had paid a large sum for ...and a large family of sons and grand-children dependent on him, ...pressed him greatly towards the latter years of his life. But he ...carefully concealed his difficulties from those who would have been ...to assist him. We have a striking case of this in our eye.

"With all his knowledge of character, it would appear he was weak ... enough to expect that gratitude could lodge in a royal bosom. He was ... mistaken with respect to the general principle peculiarly unfortunate ...in this particular instance!"

The delicacy of Lord Erskine is certainly not so generally known as his indiscretions—but most assuredly we should have suffered the insidious attack of his quondam friends to have passed unnoticed at the present moment, had they not involved in their irony the character of our Monarch. This is cautious—to have covered their animosity towards the departed Nobleman, they should have given a different tone to this part of their satire.

In the first place, Lord Erskine has been in the receipt of a pension of four thousand pounds per annum for seventeen years; as a reward for the services of three hundred and thirty days—he was raised to the peerage—and when he retired from the Chancellorship, received that singular and unprecedented mark of Royal personal favour to a Lawyer, the Order of the Thistle, which to a nobleman of his Lordship's character was as gratifying as it was distinguished.

His eldest son, now Lord Erskine, is enjoying, and has been enjoying for many years, a pension from the Government, for his services—(we mean his embassy)—in America—his second son, the Hon. Henry Erskine, is in the Church, well provided for, and honourably allied—his third son, the Hon. Thomas Erskine, also well married, and highly esteemed in his profession, is rising rapidly at the bar—his fourth son, the Hon. Esme Erskine is, or was, a field officer in the army, and the female part of his Lordship's family by the first Lady Erskine is most happily established; this being the case, the insidious Chronicle can only wish to draw public attention to the fruits of his Lordship's second marriage, of which, and its extraordinary solemnization at Gretna Green, his Lordship's subsequent attempts to dissolve it, and the inferior declaration that his Lordship had no such wish; we are convinced his Lordship's real friends will think the last said is soonest mended.

We thought the barbarity of the Chronicle in their continued attacks upon Lord Londonderry after his Lordship's death, were barbarous, shameful, and cruel, but then he was a Tory; their hypocritical assault upon a departed Whig, we did not look for.

We are glad to find that Captain Harris will shortly be relieved from the unpleasant situation in which he has been placed by the inevitable dissolution of the Court Martial at Plymouth, by an order for a new trial at Portsmouth—we have read the proceedings of the late court, as far as they went, and cannot attribute any blame to the prisoner, who appears to us to have done everything he could to get Sir Edward Thornton on board—if our Portuguese Minister had been aware of the political race of politeness which we were running with France just at that moment, he perhaps would have quickened his motions—it would indeed have been very proper that we should have been the first to have exhibited

"The radiant galaxies of blended stars,
"Whose influence governs mortals here below."

The following attack upon the Countess of Warwick and her fete, which appears in yesterday's Chronicle, requires a few observations:—

"WARWICK CASTLE FETE.

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE MORNING CHRONICLE.

"Sir,—I have sent you the Warwick Papers, and have learnt one or two additional particulars of the Grand Warwick Castle Fete. After supper, his Grace of Wellington rose and said, 'By the request of the Countess of Warwick, I give the King's health.' The toast was drunk standing. No other toast followed.—On Sunday, his Grace of Wellington attended divine service at the grand church of St. Mary's, the organ struck up 'See the conqu'ring hero comes.'—Every County Gentleman's butler who attended to assist at the supper, received a sovereign for his trouble.—A shrewd Gentleman present was heard to say—'A few more such fêtes, and the Independence of the County of Warwick is lost!!'—The crowds that gathered round the supper table (said a by-stander) of Exeter 'Change, 'One shilling more, Ladies and Gentlemen, and you shall see him eat !!!!!—I am, Sir, Yours, &c.—C——."

Daventry, Nov. 19.

Here we have his Grace the Duke of Wellington charged with the horrid crime of drinking the King's health, and the lovely Countess of Warwick included in the indictment, as aiding and abetting him. "The toast was drunk standing; no other toast followed."

If the writer in the Chronicle merely means to say, that it is wrong for the people to shew their affection to the King by drinking his health, and their personal respect to his Majesty by drinking no other toast, we can quite understand his meaning, but we cannot at all understand what the Countess of Warwick's proposal to drink the King's health in her own castle can have to do with the "Independence of the County of Warwick." Does the County of Warwick, or does the writer in the Chronicle, wish to be independent of the King, or are noblemen and ladies to be dragged before the public for doing an act of duty in their own houses?

But we find there is another reason why the Independence of Warwickshire is to be lost—"Every County Gentleman's butler "who attended to assist at the supper received a sovereign for his "trouble."

Now is it possible, we ask, that the leading Whig Journal of England can be sunk so low in the world as to have admitted such a line as this—does it mean that the fact that Lord Warwick's House Steward gave the County Gentlemen's servants a sovereign a piece for waiting at table at supper, will influence the votes of such County Gentlemen at an election—does the Chronicle think Lord Warwick's man ought only to have given them half-a-crown each—perhaps a sovereign is too much, and a raggamuffin radical is suffered to call Lord Warwick to account for his conduct in his own house for being too liberal—had the Butlers received fifty guineas each, and been Freeholders instead of Tray-holders, we might have said something.

The natural curiosity of his countrymen to see the greatest Hero England ever possessed, is ridiculed and laughed at, while a mob running after Orator Hunt or Brougham to laugh at them and riot, is represented in the same paper as the people crowding to shew their admiration of their Friends—it should seem too as if the Duke of Wellington had courted this popularity. If the Duke hunted out occasions to woo the people, if he sacrificed his principles, his allegiance, and his loyalty, to shew himself at taverns, on hustings, at public meetings, and popular assemblies, he might deserve the coarse, vulgar, and truly Whig attack, which we are called upon to notice, and which summons the innocent guests from a private supper-table before the tribunal of the public.

We have to announce the death of Thomas Lord Erskine, an event which took place in Edinburgh, in consequence of an inflammation of his lungs. His Lordship was in the seventy-sixth year of his age, and by his death a green riband is placed at the disposal of Government.

We have received some very sensible strictures upon the absolute absurdity of Mr. Fowell Buxton's pretensions to sanctity, and the ridiculous hypocrisy with which all the maudlin sensibility of the faction is put forward in the world.

Mr. Buxton began his career by questioning the title of the proprietor to the slave, which is very much like our doubting his right to his own dray-horses—the property, whether the sound of the thing be humane or not, the property of the master in his slave has been determined and recognized, and any interference with that property (as we shewed last week, out of Mr. Wilberforce's mouth) positively disclaimed by the party—this Mr. Buxton now says, that he has no objection to admit the title of the master, if he will ameliorate the condition of his negro. There is not one West Indian planter who would not rejoice in doing so, and join with Mr. Buxton, heart and hand, in such amelioration; but the fact is, that this Mr. Buxton is wholly ignorant of the subject which he has been taught to espouse, he does not know how to amend their condition—how should he?

Charity, they say, begins at home, and at all events white men are equally (or ought to be) objects of our care and sympathy with blacks; it is quite notorious that the ruin of thousands originates in the public houses of the metropolis: drunkenness, theft, and murder, lurk in the dreadful and intoxicating beverage, doled out to the lower classes in the shape of porter:—this is notorious—it is avowed—we do not ask, as Mr. Buxton asks the West India proprietors, to ruin himself for the mere philanthropy of the thing—we do not wish him to brew such beer as shall not leave him a vast profit—we do not above all ask him to give up his brew-house and his trade—we do not ask that; though the saints would drive the West Indian out of his trade and his bread if they could—we ask Mr. Fowell Buxton, who keeps a vast many public houses, to declare that he will not, under any circumstances, allow his pot-houses to be tenanted by any but respectable people, and that he will give directions that fair wholesome drinking may be permitted, but no drunkenness.

We state our belief that such a measure would diminish crime more than anything else that could be done; we know that if one half less porter were consumed than is now consumed, there would be by one half fewer murders and thefts committed. Will Mr. Fowell Buxton endanger his income by making such a sacrifice? Will this eminent member of the London monopoly risque his own pounds, shillings, and pence, for the temporal or spiritual good of his fellow-creatures at home?—he may answer the question, and when he acts upon the suggestion, we may listen to his canting about the blacks, of whom he knows nothing,—till then, we advise him to stick to his beer, thank God, and be satisfied.

We have only just received a copy of a letter, (just published) addressed by the Rev. Mr. Gleig, (son of the Scots Bishop,) to Sir Edward Knatchbull, Bart. one of the Members for Kent, on his accepting the office of President of an Auxiliary Church Missionary Association, in the month of August last:—we mention this fact to excuse ourselves to our correspondents, who called our attention to the subject, for not noticing the pamphlet this week, which we should have done had it reached us in time. We shall do so in our next number.

Those persons who doubt the real disposition of the Saints to promote schism, and dissent from the Established Church, will do well to read the following account of a transaction, which took place during the autumn of the present year, at Barmouth.

Mr. Wilberforce, it appears, passed about two months at that place, which, as our readers know, is a small watering place in Merionethshire, containing some two dozen lodging houses—at the same time arrived a Mr. W. M'Ghee, a clergyman without cure or benefice, and with him some pupils of his, (amongst whom is a son of Lord Lorton) and Mr. M'Ghee took up his residence next door to Mr. Wilberforce, of whom he is a particular friend.

The Church of Barmouth is nearly a mile and a half distant from the town—the ordinary service is performed in Welch, but for the accommodation of visitors, it is usual for the Curate to apply to any Clergyman who happens to be at the place, to perform divine service, and preach at a convenient hour, and in English—it happened that a clerical visitor had been entrusted with this duty by the rector himself, who is a tutor at Brasenose.

Messrs. Wilberforce and M'Ghee attended at the appointed hour, and heard a sermon, in which, although the atonement of our Saviour was represented as the sole meritorious and efficient cause of salvation, a reference was had to our own repentance from dead works as the judicial condition on which it would be awarded.

Immediately on the return from church, Mr. M'Ghee, we are told, called on the curate, and without any communication with the clergyman who preached, as he was appointed to do by the rector, volunteered to take the English duty himself. This the curate, in common courtesy to his rector's friend, of course refused, whereupon Mr. M'Ghee hired a store-room, and having fitted it up with planks laid on barrels, issued a circular private notice that morning service would be preached there every ensuing Sunday—whispering himself in society, that the Gospel was not preached at the Church!

No notice of these proceedings, however, was sent to the officiating clergyman. This irregular service Mr. Wilberforce and family regularly attended, and forsook the church, for which it will no doubt be said there was a good reason, inasmuch as the curate (not the officiating English clergyman) had (Mr. Wilberforce's NAME having been used on the occasion) given his permission, but when Mr. M'Ghee had preached, and the curate learnt the character of his sermons, he saw his mistake, called on Mr. M'Ghee, noticed the illegality of the proceeding, and withdrew the consent he had given.

Mr. M'Ghee, in reply, said, that he had only asked his consent pro formâ—that he was very sorry he had done so—that he should have performed the service if the consent had been withheld, and would do so, even if the Bishop himself objected—in saying which he plainly intimated that Mr. Wilberforce's views and opinions coincided with his own.

The end of this affair was a visit from the rural Dean by order of the Bishop of Bangor, when, after a violent contention, and the threat of temporal penalties, to which he was liable by the Ecclesiastical law, the reverend churchman submitted, and, together with Mr. Wilberforce, left Barmouth the ensuing week.

Here is a naked fact—open to contradiction if untrue—to explanation if correctly stated. We shall not pause to notice the total absence of all gentlemanly courtesy or good feeling on the part of this Mr. M'Ghee towards another clergyman, but we must make one observation, which is indeed a striking commentary upon the tendency of his sermons——The meeting-houses were abandoned by the Dissenters to follow him!

This will not excite much surprise when it is known that Mr. M'Ghee frequently praised the dissenting ministers, at the expence of the Clergy of the establishment. On one occasion he used this expression—"Does any one of ye feel the righteousness of God within him? if so, never mind the custom of the country, but stand up and say so;" on another occasion he said,—"I know I preach to you a new doctrine, such as you never heard before—you may be good men, that is good practical men, discharge all your worldly duties, attend church worship regularly, and yet be as far from God as possible."

We have made these extracts for the purpose of enlightening our readers, and lay the whole circumstance before the public without an observation.

While we are on this subject, we may as well mention that it has been reported to us, that on Sunday last a clergyman of the Established Church preached, extempore, a sermon in behalf of the Chelsea charity schools, in the church of that parish.

This innovation has caused considerable surprise and alarm amongst a large portion of the parishioners, who are induced to attach more importance to the circumstance perhaps than they otherwise would, from the fact that the reverend gentleman in question is one of the chaplains to the Bishop of the Diocese.

It is not our intention here to refer to the matter of the discourse, we merely wish to call the Bishop's attention to the fact as represented to us, that his Lordship may by his conduct on the occasion shew whether we are, or are not, to look to the Bench for the sanction of conduct which lowers the dignity of pulpit compositions into the crude and undigested harangues of cant and methodism.

Riego, we lament to say, has been executed:—we are loyalists and royalists, and can feel for the delicate situation of a newly rescued monarch—but we are sorry for the execution of this man, who, if a traitor, was at least a generous one, and who certainly was a prisoner of war, and whose case, at all events, was deserving of consideration. That the English public should be called upon to put themselves in mourning for him is eminently absurd—the same request was made in the case of Francis and Honey, and, we believe, in that of Thistlewood—it is nonsensical, and not national—the Spaniards themselves would not put on one bit of black were Wilson to be hanged to-morrow.

The King of Spain, however, has quite recovered his character in the city, by his reported acknowledgment of all the debts contracted by the Constitutional Government.

SPEECH OF MR. HAMDEN,

AT A MEETING OF THE COUNCIL IN BARBADOES.

"Upon the subject to which Lord Bathurst next adverts, namely, the sale of slaves for the satisfaction of the debts of the owners—his Lordship justly remarks, that among the whole range of projected improvements in the colonial system, there is perhaps none which, on attentive consideration, will be found to present more difficulties than this. His Lordship then enters upon an elaborate examination of the question, in which he shows a very intimate acquaintance with the subject. But these are matters not requiring much local knowledge, and on which adequate information may be obtained by the perusal of books and papers; we cannot, therefore, be surprised to find the Noble Secretary of State so much better qualified to legislate for us on these topics, than he appears to be on certain others. And I have great satisfaction in adding that this part of the Despatch is not more remarkable for a perfect knowledge of the subject, and for its clear and luminous views, than for a just and scrupulous regard to the rights of property. I notice but one apparent exception to this remark; and this, I think, must have arisen from an ignorance of the extreme depression of West India affairs. 'A time,' says he, 'should be fixed, beyond which no existing judgment should be entorced.' His Lordship must assist us with his ministerial influence to render our properties infinitely more productive than they now are, before such a period could be fixed, without the grossest injustice to junior creditors. With respect to the remedies proposed for these evils, I fear that they are more plausible than practicable. However, we all know that the evils arising from compulsory sales of slaves, are by no means so great in reality as they appear a priori. Owing to the almost universal practice of mortgaging estates for debt, it very rarely indeed happens, that the slaves of a plantation are sold under an execution separately from the estates to which they are attached. My memory furnishes me with but two instances of plantations being broken up by the Provost Marshal (as our phrase is) that is, of the slaves being detached for the satisfaction of creditors. And, in one of these two instances, the negroes were removed to the next estate but one, and returned to the possession of their former master. In the other instance the number of slaves was very inconsiderable indeed; and in so small an island as this, even when slaves are removed by sale from their habitations, it can hardly happen that they will be transferred to situations so remote as to cut off all intercourse with their former connexions. This, by the bye, may serve as another example to illustrate a remark which I formerly made—that much inconvenience must arise from setting up one standard for the regulation of many countries differing very widely.

"I trust I have, by this time, made it manifest that I have every disposition to acquiesce in the plan proposed by the Minister for the Colonies on every point except where it seems to me to militate against important interests: and I hope that on these points I have shewn that I do not differ from him on trivial grounds. I may therefore expect that a liberal construction will be put upon what I may hereafter say; for I must confess that I am now approaching a part of the Despatch in which I differ most essentially from its author. The subject I allude to relates to punishments. And here it is impossible not to see how much his Lordship's mind has been poisoned, by the false and calumnious representations of our enemies. I will not conceal that I have always been led to believe, that the Noble Secretary for Colonies is, in point of feeling, any thing but a friend to that part of the British dominions which is peculiarly under his superintendency. But, at the same time that I could not but regret this, I have consoled myself with the reflection, that as a conscientious man, and a faithful minister of the Crown (a character which public report also attributes to his Lordship), he would be peculiarly watchful over his feelings, lest his prejudice should betray him into a dereliction of his duty. Hitherto experience has confirmed this confidence. But, on the present occasion, it does appear to me, that the importunate voice of popular clamour happening to chime in with the tone of his Lordship's feelings, has proved irresistible, and got the better of his more deliberate judgment. I question whether the history of legislation furnishes a more striking illustration of the remark of a most sagacious and profound writer on political science: 'It often happens (says Montesquieu) that a legislator desirous of reforming an evil, thinks of nothing but of this reformation: his eyes are open only to this object, and shut to its inconveniences.' That his Lordship's eyes have been shut to the inconveniences inseparable from such a system of discipline as he proposes, I shall easily show. Upon the subject of punishments, I can dare to speak out boldly. I speak out with the confidence of innocence. No man in this community will suspect that I am the person who would wish to uphold the power of the master, for the sake of abusing it. I will not condescend to say that I am known to be incapable of cruelty to a slave: I claim a higher meed of praise. It is not vanity which bids me, upon this occasion, boast, that I know I am distinguished for humanity and kindness as a master. I do not mean to insinuate by this that there exists a contrary feeling amongst the respectable slave-owners of this colony. Need I recall to your minds the testimony, on oath, of many most respectable witnesses, which appeared in a report upon this subject, but a few short weeks ago? I trust that the facts there collected, will prove sufficient to remove suspicions, unfavourable to the slave-owners of this colony, from the most prejudiced minds. But I presume to speak of myself in a way that the occasion alone could justify, in order that my opinions may carry with them the weight which is justly due to the opinions of a man who, I call God to witness, always endeavours to regulate his conduct towards those whom Providence has placed under his controul, by the most scrupulous regard to justice and humanity, and who ever considers the happiness of the slave the primary object of discipline. It is this feeling, Sir, which urges me to declare, that such a system of discipline, as is here proposed, must lead to a total subvdrsion of the master's authority, and consequent insubordination; and ultimately be productive of an incalculable augmentation of offences and punishments. Yes, Gentlemen! an augmentation of punishments. I stand up as the advocate of the slave, when I supplicate you not to give your sanction to measures, which will convert the mutual confidence and good will which now subsists between the master and slave, into mutual suspicion and distrust—causing the master to be regarded as a tyrant, the slave as a spy: the one constantly provoked to go the utmost verge of his authority—the other curiously jealous lest he dare to exceed it—leaving no room for mercy, and cancelling all claims to gratitude. Will you banish the peace and contentment which now prevail among us, and invoke discord, anarchy, and rebellion? I pray Heaven, that subsequent events may not prove that I speak in the spirit of vaticination—vaticination do I say! events of the most recent occurrence, events which are now actually passing in a neighbouring colony, already give to these opinions the weight and authority of history. When the rebel of Demerara is asked, why he who lately appeared so well satisfied with his condition, and who seemed to look up to his master as his friend and protector, now appears in arms against him—what is his reply? That he has lately been led to believe that he ought not to be satisfied with his condition; that the people of England are on his side, and wish him to live idle and be free. Poor deluded creatures! Happy! contented! faithful!—they have been seduced into crimes, for which many of them have paid the sad forfeiture of life. Their's has been the sacrifice, but where sticks the guilt? But, let me not be misunderstood. Let it not be supposed that I am the advocate of unlimited power. Few men are worthy of such a trust. My opinions on this head, stand recorded in the Report, which I had the honour to bring up a few weeks ago as Chairman of a Committee of this Board. Your Committee has there recommended, that acts of cruelty, should be punished by severe penalties: in extreme cases, amounting to a forfeiture of possession, and an absolute incompetency to hold property in slaves for ever after. But in the name of justice, let punishment fall on the guilty only, and do not, as is here proposed, confound the innocent and the guilty in one common disgrace. But to return to the Despatch. In the first place, the punishment of flogging is to be totally interdicted in all cases where the offender is a woman. Now, sir, although the idea of flogging a woman may shock our notions of gallantry, I believe the sound reason of the thing consists in this—that discriminations in regard to punishments should rest on a real difference of character and conduct, as to softness of manners and sensibility of mind; and accordingly we find, not only in savage life, where there appears to be scarcely any natural difference of character between the sexes, but even in the most civilized societies, that whenever the gentler sex have, by depravity or vulgarity, forfeited their claim to distinction, they are treated with as much harshness as the men. And I doubt whether a milder discipline would be necessary for the poissardes of Paris, or the furies of Billingsgate, than for their hardy spouses. Are not women flogged in houses of Correction in England? and what discrimination is there in the punishment of men and women for crimes? Let it here be remembered, that crimes—aye, crimes of a very serious nature, are often the objects of domestic punishment among us; and that slaves in this country receive moderate floggings for offences, which in England would be punished with death, whether the offender were man or woman. In point of fact, feelings of tenderness towards females, which, if they be not natural, the refinements of education and habit have made almost as strong as if they were so, do operate powerfully in mitigating the punishments of females. Hence it is that even I, who have failed to give the most unequivocal proof of tenderness for the sex, can say that I have never ordered a woman to be flogged since I have assumed the management of my estate. But of this I am certain, that did the women on my plantation doubt that I had power to flog them, I should be provoked to it in a very few hours. Unfortunately, our black ladies have rather a tendency to the Amazonian cast of character; and I believe that their husbands would be very sorry to hear that they were placed beyond the reach of chastisement. In the case of one woman on my plantation, who had a more than ordinary fondness for pugilistic exercises, I made her put on a suit of her brother's clothes, that the habits might seem more becoming the sex. It had a good effect. However, to return. The only punishment for offences of magnitude that can be substituted for flogging, is confinement: and this is a mode of punishment for women not without serious objections, on the score of humanity. Most women at the age when they are engaged in the active labours of the field have young families; and as the mothers cannot be confined beyond a day or two without injury to the children, every humane man avoids this as much as possible. And, besides, must it not occur to every man, that to prohibit the flogging of women absolutely, and under all circumstances, would have the effect of covering the men also with impunity? Are your buildings broken open; your fields plundered?—of course it has been done by a woman. "What has she to fear?"—would be the husband's argument. And, after all, there can be little doubt that, in a moral point of view, there are much more serious objections to the prison discipline of England, than to the very moderate corporal punishments which are inflicted on women in this country. There may, undoubtedly, be some brutes among us, who are not sufficiently influenced by those feelings of tenderness for women, for which I have, without fear of contradiction, given credit to the community at large. We must take care in the slave code, about which this Board is now employed, to give these gentry some sharp lessons in gallantry.

"Now, as to taking the whip from the driver, I foresee, that by depriving him of all means of enforcing prompt obedience to his orders, he will lose the respect of the gang altogether; and instead of from one to three stripes with a rod, or with a cat of four tails very rarely, (for such is now the discipline of the field), we shall have to inflict daily punishments for outrageous acts of insubordination. If a labourer in England is lazy or sulky about his work, he is dismissed; and the fear of being turned out of employment is found sufficient to insure good behaviour. But what controul are we to have over our slaves? Once establish this rule, and then adieu to all peace and comfort on plantations. We are to be employed from morning to night in hearing and adjusting complaints of the driver. A person conversant with the field-work of our plantations, can alone know in what a variety of ways a contumacious spirit may embarrass the business of an estate, if there exist no power to check it on the instant.—As to postponing the punishment to the day after that on which the offence has been committed, it is a wise and prudent caution for every man to observe in matters of importance. I know from experience, that the pain of inflicting corporal punishments may very often be saved altogether, by such a regulation. It will often appear, when the offender is brought up for punishment, that, as far as the individual is concerned, all the object of discipline (repentance) has been accomplished by the apprehension of it. But whether it may be advisable to enforce this regulation by penalties, on every the most trivial occasion, appears very questionable. If a gentleman on being told he is a liar by a man on a looting with him, knocks the offender down on the spot, he is allowed to have acted in a very natural way; and should he even reiterate the blow, he would not be considered a very ferocious person, who deserved the infliction of a heavy penalty; but we slave-owners, frail, and debased as we are said to be, must learn to exercise a more watchful controul over our feelings. The thing which must strike every man, as the peculiar cruelty and hardship of our case, in reference not only to this Despatch, but to the usage we commonly receive from all persons who write or speak on West India societies, is, that, while they stigmatise us as devils, they require from us the perfection of angels. With what justice may this character of the Cornelian laws be applied to this code, that 'They laid snares, sowed thorns, and opened precipices, wheresoever the citizens set their feet.'

(To be concluded in our next.)

THEATRES.

MR. SINCLAIR, the singer, has made his promised appearance at Covent Garden Theatre, and in as far as relates to the effect produced upon us, we must acknowledge the effect of his performance was bitter disappointment. He sings very little better than he did when he went away, and acts a great deal worse—an English singer Italianized is but a mongrel at best, and we prefer the noisy songs of INCLEDON in the purity of their native vulgarity, to the attempts at refinement which are so bunglingly imported from the continent to our national theatres.

Nothing could be more injudicious than the selection of the CABINET for MR. SINCLAIR'S re-appearance on the London stage—BRAHAM, at once the composer and original singer of the songs in that opera, has given a feature, a character, a currency to the music, to venture near which, is to become a copyist, and widely to depart from which, is to spoil the effect altogether:—of course in composing or adapting the music of this piece BRAHAM took care to accommodate it to his own voice and peculiarities, to which we are sorry to say we trace nothing but a bad imitation in the best performances of MR. SINCLAIR. We shall be glad to hear this gentleman in some other opera, or we should be still more glad to hear him sing either at concerts or oratorios, in which we might receive all the pleasure his vocal powers can impart, without being annoyed by the worst attempt at acting we ever saw made, if indeed we except that of a MR. LARKIN (we believe) who was most impudently put forward to act FAWCETT'S part on Wednesday, while FAWCETT played that, which was originally MUNDEN'S; so vile an exhibition never disgraced a metropolitan theatre, and what added to the disgust and anger we felt at such a detestable exhibition, was the actual presence on the same stage of the actor who had really made the character lively and entertaining.

We have every respect for the versatile talents of the author of the "Cabinet," but we must hint to the Covent Garden Management that the revival of that piece, in which within the same walls, the strength of the theatre, now dissipated and gone, was once employed, is extremely injudicious—it only serves to remind one how different things are now to what they have been, and how lamentably inferior they are comparatively with what they might be.

At Drury Lane a tragedy, (as it is called) under the title of "The Graccki," has been enacted.—That any part of it should have frightened MR. LARPENT, we are indeed greatly surprised, for except as a succedaneum for laudanum, (which taken in too large quantities might be dangerous) we see nothing likely to alarm any human being in the whole thing.

It is a sort of copy of Virginius, a democratic, ranting, trashy play, which was acted by MR. MACREADY some two or three years since, and in which TERRY performed a tragic character, which kept the theatre in a roar of laughter. We have a ditto to every part of that strange performance in the present play—there is MACREADY acting the whole piece, and TERRY looking as if he had just arrived from Gill's Hill-lane with part of the hedge in his possession, making the house incalculably merry; and there is poor MRS. BUNN—(by the way, an error of the press in one of the morning papers last week made her name look extremely comical) crying and weeping as Cornelia never cried or wept in the whole course of her life;—in short, there is altogether one of those lamentable proofs of the abandonment of dramatic writing by every person able to write, which every now and then come out and die away after lingering seven or eight nights—it is indeed bitter bad; and being so, is proportionably puffed in all the newspapers by the gentlemen of the press, who kindly think that the worse a thing is, the more praise it stands in need of.

A most ridiculous prologue was recited by MR. TERRY and an EPILOGUE was performed, which we print and publish, as a proof of what may find its way to the public through the management of a national theatre—that it was hooted from the stage it is but just to say—that it was ever permitted to disgrace the walls of a London playhouse is to us astonishing. We beg our readers to peruse it, and fancy a man with common sense, acting as caterer for the public, capable of allowing it to be repeated before an audience in an age of intellect and enlightenment like that in which we live.

EPILOGUE TO CAIUS GRACCHUS.

SPOKEN BY MRS. GLOVER AND MISS L. KELLY, AS FINE LADIES; & MRS. ORGER, AS A COUNTRY GIRL.

Scene, the Stage.—Enter Mrs. O. (P.S.)

Mrs. O. Be this Drury-lane? 'Fegs I've blunder'd I fear.
Can any one tell if JOHN DONSON be here?
Here be two silver shillings, saved out of my salary.
Pray, Gentlefolks, which be the two-shilling gallery?
To see the new Tragedy, JOHNNY and I Mean to go. How delightful! Lord, how I shall cry!
[Going off P.S., meets Mrs. G.)
Lord, Ma'am!

Mrs. G. Bless me, child! what! a Roman in pattens,
Red cloak and straw hat! odd costume for the Latins.
Dost thou stalk in this garb thro' the new Roman plan,
To mollify hearts? What's your name?

Mrs. O. Molly Gray,
If that ben't my road, Ma'am, this must be my way.
[Going off O.P., meets Miss L. KELLY.)

Miss K. Lady Anne!

Mrs. G. Lady June!
What, like me, on the wing?

Miss K. Dear! which is the Private Box door? Mr. Spring! (calling).

Miss G. Come over the Stage.

Miss K. Is the new Play begun?

Mrs. G. By the time I should rather suspect it is done,
And I hope to the taste of these folks below;
You that think so, say aye; on the contrary, no!

Miss K. Where's your Box?

Mrs. G. No. 10.

Miss K. What's o'clock?

Mrs. G. Not eleven.

Miss K. You've dined very early;

Mrs. G. At half after seven:
I wish I had thought of it, as I'm a sinner,
I might have seen all the first Act before dinner.

Mrs. O. Oh, dear! only look!

Mrs. G. What's the matter?

Mrs. O. Rue droll,
There's a man with an S P Q R on a pole!!!

Miss K. Who's this?

Mrs. G. A stray damsel in quest of her swain.

Miss K. Did she come from the clouds in the last heavy rain?

Mrs. O. No, Ma'am, from the Swan with Two Necks in Lad-lane.

Mrs. G. (Surveying the house) 'Pon my word this is pretty! all the crimson gilt.

Miss K. Seems well shaped for hearing;

Mrs. G. And not badly built.

Mrs. O. (Reading Play-bill)—C A T; Cataract—R, A, Ra—Ref Daughter—
The house overflowing.

Mrs. G. Aye that's with the water.

Miss K. What's here (looking to the Pit) Don't I see in yon remote spot
That some seats have backs, and that others have not

Mrs. G. Yes, that is all right for security's sake—
Watch and watch—half may slumber, and half keep awake.

Mrs. O. Like the sailors on board of the Wash, Captain Drake.

Miss K. If your Ladyship thinks it would not be a sin,
Suppose we, this winter, bring Drury-lane in.

Mrs. G. No, my dear, that wont do in our part of the town,
This Play must be French, or it will not go down.
French Plays and French Sauces suit well our digestion,
To patronise English is out of the question.

Miss K. The Actors seem here to have nothing to fret 'em.
Hane they got up Wild Oats?!!!

Mrs. G. No, the Horses have eat 'em.

Miss K. If we were seen here all the town would attack us.
What's the name of the Tragedy?

Mrs. O. (reading) "Cane us and Crack us"!!!

Mrs. G. The scene lies in Rome—

Miss K. Is it serious or funny?

Mrs. O. Well, that large flat candlestick's worth all the money
(Drum sounds.)

Mrs. G. Hark!

Miss K. Hush!

Mrs. G. What was that?

Miss K. It was somebody drumming.

Mrs. O. Lud, Ma'am?

Mrs. G. What's the matter?

Miss K. The horses be coming!
I spy a side saddle—I've hit it—I'm gone.
I'll get up on horseback, and trot up to John.
[Ex. Mrs. Orger.

Miss K. Well, since we're too late, there is no need of sorrow;
You and I will see Cains Gracchus to-morrow.

Mrs. G. Agreed! and we'll bring a whole boxfull to greet it,
If these our kind friends will butt et us repeat it.

We think there needs no observation of our's.

On Thursday the following Gentlemen were called to the Degree of Barrister-at-Law by the Hon. Society of Lincoln's Inn:—John Malcoe Saunders, Esq.; Wm. Wildes, Esq.; Bennett Gosling, Esq.; Alfred Stephen, Esq.; Stephen Williams, Esq.; Theodore Dickens, Esq.; and James Pringle Barclay, Esq.

ST. JAMES'S PALACE.—There have been very extensive alterations and improvements proceeding in this Palace, those portions which were injured by the fire, and the other which covered the ancient along which the public used to pass from the Park to St. James's street, and which abutted upon the German Chapel, have been taken down. The space between the Palace and the Chapel and Marlborough-house is not yet open to the public. The alterations in the Palace are of a still more important nature; his Majesty intends the Drawing-rooms, Courts, &c. should be held at St. James's Palace, as was the case in the late King's reign. Four large and good rooms have been formed, that will answer all the Court purposes, having entrances from the four courts of the Palace, and noble staircases for the company to retire to their carriages across the Garden to the "drive" of St. James's Park.

On Thursday, a meeting of Commissioners in the case of Thurtell's bankruptcy took place, in Quality-court, Chancery-lane. Mr. Stedman, the proprietor of the house No. 4, Cumberland-street, New-road, in which some furniture was deposited, supposed by Thurtell and Hunt, and which the Commissioners claim as belonging to the bankrupt, underwent a long examination, and several letters were held out to him of committal to prison, &c. unless he gave immediate admittance to the messenger of the commission, and authority up all the property thus left in his possession.—Mr. Stedman positively refused to do either one or the other, until they gave him sufficient proof that the property belonged to the bankrupt, and an indemnity against any future claim from any other party—for instance, the Crown, or perhaps the very persons who gave him charge of the house in the name of Brown.—Ballard, an officer of Marlborough-street, who resides in the next house to Mr. Stedman, was also strictly charged as to his having given any advice to resist the interference of the Commissioners' messenger; but there appeared to be no grounds whatever for such suspicion, and in the end both were discharged, without a step being taken, as was threatened, against Mr. Stedman, who, on his return home, found that Baily, a man who got into the house on Tuesday night by stratagem on the part of the Commission, and had been since locked up in the passage, being regularly starved into submission, cried for mercy, and had been suffered to depart several pounds lighter in weight than when he entered the house. It is not supposed that Mr. Stedman will be again interfered with.

Shakspeare's Cliff at Dover, has lately been considerably reduced in height, from its base having been washed away by the sea, and the consequent fall of parts of its summit.

LATEST NEWS.

Paris papers down to Thursday have been received. The King of Spain, the Journal des Debats informs us, "was actually at Aranjuez on the 12th inst.," and on that very day "was to issue the important decrees which Spain expected from him." With respect to these important decrees a letter was said to have been received on Friday, in London, which announced "that an extraordinary courier had just reached the French capital from Madrid, which he had left on the 14th inst. and that the intelligence he brought was that the King of Spain had ordered two new decrees to be drawn up at Aranjuez for his signature, the one revoking the decree of Port St. Mary's, and declaring his intention to grant a general amnesty, with certain exceptions; the other acknowledging the whole of the debt contracted by the Cortes up to the period of the departure of the Foreign Ministers from Madrid."

Lisbon papers arrived yesterday, dated 3d inst:—An article, dated the 2d, from Lisbon, referring to the entertainment given by Vice Admiral Sir Harry Neale, on board the Revenge, to the King of Portugal, (as noticed in our paper before) says:—"The preceding article was incorrect, the entertainment having no political object, but being given only in consequence of his Majesty having expressed a wish to see the ship, where the Vice-Admiral, of course, received him with the honours always paid to such illustrious visitors. His Majesty was accompanied by the Infants and Infantas, and was received on board by the diplomatic body, and a splendid company of ladies and gentlemen. There was a ball, followed by a magnificent collation, at three o'clock, of which above 200 persons partook. The health of the King, and of the Royal Family of the Kings of Great Britain and Spain, and of the Allied Sovereigns, were drank with enthusiasm; the ships of war in the harbour (except the Revenge) firing Royal salutes. The dancing was then resumed; a profusion of refreshments was presented, and his Majesty, with his company, left the ship at six o'clock."

The Secretary of State for the Home Department has remitted the fine of 500l. on Mary Ann Carlile, and she has been discharged from Dorchester Gaol.

Another remarkable trial is expected to come on in the course of a few days before the Paris Court of Assize. It is that of Madame Bousier, the widow of a grocer, and Nicholas Kostolo, a Greek courier, for poisoning the husband of the former.

We have lately seen some testimonials from parishes in London and its neighbourhood of the good effects of Duke and Co.'s waterproof process, which has been applied for several years past to the watchmen's great-coats, and which is generally adopting by the other parishes as calculated to preserve the health of the watchmen.

SUICIDE.—A gentleman occupying apartments in the house of a Mr. Linstead, in Hatfield-street, yesterday shot himself. Till the Coroner's inquest shall have sat upon the body, we refrain from giving the particulars; it appears, however, that so determined was the unfortunate person upon his own destruction, that failing in an attempt to cut his throat, he had recourse to a pistol, and before any aid could be procured he expired.

In the Insolvent Debtors' Court yesterday, James House, who had been removed from Ilchester Gaol to the Fleet, was remanded for the space of six months, for defrauding his creditors in the disposal of his property.

In the Court of King's Bench, yesterday, Joseph Jacobs, Edward Corbett, or Cobbett, Peter Atkinson, Charles Courtney, or Cockshail, James Stevens, William Wells, Robert Ainsworth Kingston, John Bentley, Charles Goulshall, and —— Bentley, ten prisoners, were brought up, at the instance of Wm. Jones, Esq. Marshal of the King's Bench Prison, to receive the judgment of the Court, upon an affidavit, made by Mr. Jones and two turnkeys, they having detected them gambling in a room within the walls of the said prison. The Court, in passing sentence, observed, that the case of James Stevens presented much stronger features of misconduct than that of the others. The sentence of the Court upon him therefore was, that he should be kept in solitary confinement in one of the strong rooms within the said prison, for the space of one month: and with respect to the other prisoners, the Court directed the Marshal not to allow any of them the rules, but ordered that they should be kept within the prison walls for the space of one month; and with respect to Charles Courtney, whose imprisonment had but just expired for a previous offence of which this was a repetition—that he should give security for his good behaviour for the space of six months in the sum of 40l. and to be confined until such security should be given.

In the Arches Court, yesterday, the case of libel brought by Lady Eleanor Eliza Page Turner against her husband, Sir G. P. Turner was heard; it pleads that in May, 1819, when she was advanced in pregnancy with either first child, and whilst at dinner, Sir Gregory rose from his seat, flew into a violent passion, and struck her about the head.—The 6th article pleads a transaction in January, 1820, between Sir Gregory Page Turner and the mother of this lady—it says that Mrs. Bayfield applied to him for money to pay for the confinement of Lady Turner, when he refused to give it. In the article it says, Elizabeth Gertrude Bayfield earnestly requested him to supply his wife for the purpose aforesaid—he then fell into a passion and struck her. There was a variety of other charges, similar in effect. After Dr. Adams had been heard in extenuation of the husband's ill conduct, the case was adjourned until the next court day, in the hope that the parties may accommodate their differences.

At Halton-Garden yesterday, the long pending examination of Margaret Stanton, for a violent assault upon her husband, took place at this office. Richard Stanton, the husband, was the first witness called up; he is a middle sized man, of sallow complexion, there is nothing pleasing in his appearance; she is a slender middle sized woman, and of rather prepossessing appearance. It was not the first interview the prosecutor and the prisoner had had since this offence was committed. On Friday, the prosecutor, accompanied by his brother, went to the prison to see his unfortunate wife, to whom he expressed his determined resolution to prosecute her. Mr. Webb, who attends the prison, and Mr. Whitmore, surgeon, were examined, and were the only persons present when the husband was giving his evidence. On the first examination, it was stated that the parties lived unhappily together, in consequence of the prosecutor keeping company with loose women, stopping out two or three nights in the week, and when he came home was generally intoxicated, when he invariably used her ill, and on one occasion brought home a woman to sleep in the same bed with him. On the night previous to this shocking affair, he came home about 11 o'clock, they quarrelled, and he expressed his determination to sell his furniture next morning, and part from her and go and live with another woman; they went to bed, and whilst he was asleep, she committed the assault in question.—She was fully committed for trial.

At Bow-street yesterday, John Blackburn and John Curtis, apprehended on Wednesday in the Strand carrying two large baskets full of lead, were fully committed for trial, the same having been stolen from the premises of Mr. Fearer of Stratford Brook, Chiswick—the lead found in the possession of the prisoners corresponding exactly with his roof, which had been entirely stripped of its covering.

Green and Bitton remanded from the last examination, and charged with being privy to the robbery of the Swan, Chandos-street, were again put to the bar, the one was discharged, but the watch found on his person kept till an owner be found, the other fully committed to take his trial, for having implements of house-breaking in his possession.

We have seen a very useful paper, which we should recommend to every one who possesses a Bible, it is called A Key to the Holy Scriptures, pointing out the proper lessons for every Sunday in the year 1824. It is published by Mr. Wetton, 21, Fleet-street; price 2d. to be continued annually.

DARTMOOR RAILWAY.—This noble, we might, perhaps, more properly say stupendous, work, after four years' incessant exertion and a considerable expenditure, is completed for trading purposes, and to the tasteful eye and the patriotic mind, we know no undertaking, at least in this county, that offers more of scenic interest and general usefulness. Commencing about three miles from Prince Town, (which distance is to be speedily finished,) and proceeding, amidst natural beauties of the grandest and most attractive description, through the recently perforated tunnel, to Catdown, whence it will be extended to Sutton Pool, it would confer dignity on any era, and reminds one of an ancient Roman road, excepting that, instead of being straight, it occasionally and necessarily curves, from the particular line of country.—To visitors of the port, there is nothing more worthy of notice than the railway, and when traversed from one extremity to the other, we would boldly challenge them to say, if Italy or France, Spain or Switzerland, can present any thing more truly great or more picturesquely imposing. A view from Roborough Down, between Sir Thomas Tyrwhitt's wharf and Jump of the vale of Meavy, and the river meandering for some length through it, like a streak of silver upon green velvet, would alone recompense the trouble of a ride, independent of other inducements.—But the beauties of nature, however impressive, are secondary to the higher objects which arise to the mind's eye in traversing such scenes. The merchant, the trader, and the agriculturist, must all fondly, and not without hope, look to the period, when, by their combined endeavours, the railway will be devoted to busy traffic, and a population shall arise, to consume the importations and to furnish the exports, through various channels of commerce. Dartmoor, so long condemned to sterility, in a few years may again wear the verdure of woods, and corn, and grass, and no longer stand as a by-word, and reproach for its infertility in other counties. To Sir Thomas Tyrwhitt the measure is indebted for its origin, and the spirited proprietors, aided by their committees, chairmen, contractor, and engineer, have succeeded, in defiance of all obstacles, in achieving a task which reflects credit, not only on them collectively as well as individually, but on the port of Plymouth, nay, on the whole of the county.—The elegant front of the new chapel sufficiently proves to what ornamental and useful ends Dartmoor granite may be converted; and, on surveying it, it is hardly possible to refrain from wonder at the neglect and indifference with which this material, until lately, has been treated. We understand that the orders for it to Messrs. Johnson and Brice, the gentlemen who have an underlease from the Company for several years, from London and elsewhere, are large and pressing. In this brief sketch, we feel and confess, that very inadequate justice is done to the theme, which demands peculiar powers and a much abler pen than our own, but it is not the pen only that can fully describe it. A series of the most striking views along the line, accompanied by short poetical effusions by each, would amply reward the painter and the poet who should attempt it. The course of the river Dart has been thus illustrated, and we see no reason why that of the railway is less entitled to similar distinction.—Plymouth Paper.

THE ART OF PRESERVING THE SIGHT.—A New and Improved Edition has lately been published of this excellent little work. We strongly recommend this tract to the attention of Londoners especially, and to those of studious professions in particular.

LITERARY INTELLIGENCE.—The following interesting works are nearly ready for publication:—I. A History of the Commonwealth of England from the commencement of the Civil War to the Restoration of Charles II. By Wm. Godwin—II. Memoirs of the Life and Times of Salvator Rosa. By Lady Morgan—III. The Private Correspondence of the Poet Cowper, now first published from the Originals in the possession of the Editor, the Rev. Dr. Johnson—IV. A Series of Sketches, or Tales, entitled Sunlings and Joslings, from the pen of a writer of great popularity—V. The third and last volume of Sismondi's History of the Literature of the South of Europe. With Notes, by T. Roscoe, Esq. comprising the Spanish and Portuguese writers.

Extract of a letter from a Lady to her Friend:—"You will recollect that I was distinguished by the possession of a beautiful head of Hair. Miscarriage, protracted illness, and anxiety of mind, united, however, to deprive me of that ornament; my tresses fell into rapid decline, became extremely thin and grey, and assumed the appearance of advanced age. Speaking truly, I became actually horrified by the humiliating change; which, however, resorting to borrowed locks, I contrived to conceal. These substitutes are no longer necessary. I, happily, was made acquainted with a remedy to restore my lost hair, and my head now abounds with its accustomed ringlets, reinstated apparently in more than pristine health and beauty by the use of Rowland's Macassar Oil."

SKETCHES of the IRISH BAR. Another Number of these interesting Papers, containing Mr. Sergeant Lefroy, will be found in the New Monthly Magazine for Nov. 1: and the preceding Sketches, comprising Mr. Plunkett, Mr. Bushe, Mr. Saurin, Mr. Joy, Mr. O'Connel, &c. may be had by ordering the New Monthly Magazine from August 1822 to 1823.—Printed for Henry Colburn and Co. ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—The rude and unskilful attempts formerly made to supply these substitutes for the masticatory organs, and the disgust which delicacy suffers from the unpleasantry attending them when permanently fixed, have deterred many from adopting the aid and comfort they are capable of affording, independent of the assistance they may contribute to digestion and consequent health. The ingenious application of mechanical science will enable us to obviate all these inconveniences, and allow the wearer at all times to keep the mouth in a state of perfect cleanliness, and to perform the functions of mastication, articulation, &c. with decided ease and comfort. The NICHOLLS'S begs to state, that he is in constant attendance from ten to four, and will be happy to give every demonstration of the comforts derived from his efforts, under every circumstance of simple and complicated deficiency. 115, Fleet Street.

ARTIFICIAL MINERAL TEETH.—MR. J. MASSEY, Surgeon Dentist, begs leave to announce to the Nobility, Gentry, and Public, that he has invented a new kind of Mineral Composition for Teeth, which is the most beautiful transparency, colour, and enamel, and, in degree of tenacity, to them to deemed unattainable. The decided advantages of Mineral Composition Teeth over every other artificial supply, has long been acknowledged, they being the only substitute by which the functions of mastication and articulation can from the use of bone, &c.—Its Teeth executed with Mr. Massey's newly invented instruments, by which they are raised perpendicularly out of the gums, and thus the operation is performed with the greatest safety, and with infinitely less pain to the patient.—60, Frith street, Soho.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—MR. W. BEACALL, SURGEON DENTIST, 13, Newman street, Oxford-street, having with unremitting diligence, long made the Science of artificial Teeth, their mechanical construction and adaptation, his peculiar study, continues to supply the Loss of Teeth, with Natural or Artificial, in a superior manner, without the least pain, from a single Tooth to a complete Set, at little more than one-half the usual charge. Teeth cleaned if ever so discoloured, and rendered white and beautiful, without pain or injury to the enamel. Extracting, Stopping, and every Operation on the Teeth and Gums.—Attends at home from 10 till 4.

BOSTON MILLS, YORKSHIRE.—TO BE LET, together or separately, and entered upon immediately, all that WATER CORN MILL, carrying five pairs of mill stones, and all suitable machinery fixed for the two pairs of mill stones, and the like machinery; all lately put into excellent repair, situate at Boston, in the centre of an excellent corn country, in the East Riding of the county of York. TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST INDIA STOCK.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,

IT has for some time been an object of my ambition to become a Member of your Honourable Court of Directors, in order to devote the remainder of my public life to the superintendence of those highly important concerns in which I have been engaged from a very early period.

In the various public situations, requiring active habits of business, that I have filled during the last twenty-five years, first under the Government of the Company, and latterly under that of the Crown, an opportunity has been afforded me of becoming intimately acquainted with your interests in India, and of using my best endeavours to combine the extension of British influence and commercial intercourse with another object, which has ever been considered by you of equal importance—the amelioration of the condition of the people of that part of the globe. May I venture to allude generally to my services in these situations as a fair ground of pretension to your favourable consideration.

My very recent arrival from the Mauritius, has prevented me hitherto from paying my respects to you individually, to solicit the honour of your votes and support, but I shall take the earliest opportunity of doing so, and of assuring you in person of my ardent desire and full determination to watch over and promote the best interests of the East India Company, to the utmost of my power, should your suffrages place me in that situation to which an honourable ambition alone prompts me to aspire.

With these views I beg leave to inform you that it is my intention to proceed to the ballot on the next vacancy.—I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen, with the greatest respect, your most obedient and most humble servant.

13, Bruton-street, Nov. 15, 1823. ROBT. T. FARQUHAR.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST INDIA STOCK.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,

THE hopes with which I had entertained of success, from the very flattering encouragement which you gave me, have been fully realised by the result of the Ballot this day; and I have now the pleasing duty of rendering you my sincere and grateful thanks for the distinguished honour you have conferred upon me in Electing me a Director of your Affairs. Allow me to reiterate the assurance that it shall be my earnest endeavour to evince a due sense of such kindness by a zealous and perseverng attention to your interests.—I have the honour to be, with great respect, Ladies and Gentlemen, your very faithful and obedient servant, JOHN MASTERMAN.

Nicholas lane, Wednesday, Nov. 26, 1823.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST INDIA STOCK.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,

I HAVE the honour to submit to your consideration the subjoined RESOLUTIONS, to which I most respectfully solicit your favourable attention.

I cannot pretend, I cannot hope to realise the expectations which those Resolutions, dictated by the partiality of friendship, would seem to hold out; but I can confidently assure you, that should I again have an opportunity of engaging in your service, my best endeavours will be exerted to promote the interests of the East India Company, and to show myself worthy of the flattering encouragement which I have already had the gratification to experience.

Under such auspices, I need hardly repeat my fixed determination to proceed to the Ballot on the next Vacancy—I have the honour to be, with the greatest respect, Ladies and Gentlemen, your faithful and obedient Servant,

3, Upper Portland place, 27th Nov. 1823. HENRY ST. G. TUCKER.

AT a numerous and highly respectable MEETING of PROPRIETORS of EAST INDIA STOCK, held at the City of London Tavern, on the 27th November, 1823—SIR THOMAS BARING, Bart. M.P. in the Chair, the following Resolutions were passed unanimously:—

1st. Proposed by Sir Alexander Johnston, and seconded by George Cumming, Esq. M.P.—That as the administration of the affairs of the British possessions in India involves the exercise of every function appertaining to a great and powerful Empire, it is of essential importance that, among the Members of the Executive Body appointed to regulate and control the conduct of the Local Authorities, there should be found a due proportion of Individuals, qualified by employment in the several Departments of the Public Service in India, for the efficient discharge of that great and responsible duty.

2d. Proposed by John Martin, Esq. M.P. and seconded by William Remington, Esq.—That Henry St. George Tucker, Esq. having in the course of active service in India, comprehending a period of 23 years, discharged the functions of several of the highest Civil Offices in India, especially those of the Financial, Revenue, and Judicial Departments, with a degree of ability and success that repeatedly obtained for him the recorded approbation of the Authorities, both at home and abroad (as fully set forth in the official documents circulated with Mr. Tucker's Address to the Proprietors of the 4th of May, 1821, to which this Meeting particularly requests the attention of the Proprietors of East India Stock), that Gentleman possesses in the opinion of this Meeting, fair pretensions to aspire to the honourable and important situation of a Member of the Executive Body of the East India Company.

3d. Proposed by Thomas Weeding, Esq. and seconded by Thomas Hankey, Esq. —That the accession of the knowledge and experience which Mr. Tucker would bring to the Court of Directors, in addition to general talents and acquirements, must be deemed peculiarly valuable in the financial and judicial branches of the Administration, in which he held successively the high and responsible situations of Accountant-General, Judicial and Revenue Secretary, and Secretary in the Financial and Colonial Departments.

4th. Proposed by Lewis Loyd, Esq. and seconded by Robert Shedden, Esq.—That, in addition to the qualifications above noticed, Mr. Tucker has had an opportunity of acquiring an extensive knowledge of the principles of commerce, and of their practical application to the reciprocal interests of India and the Mother Country, in consequence of his having held the office of Public (or Commercial) Secretary to the Supreme Government, and of his having been placed in other situations involving the practical details of commerce upon a very extensive scale.

5th. Proposed by Richard Campbell Bazett, Esq. and seconded by Edward Fletcher, Esq.—That, on the ground of these high qualifications, the Proprietors present at this Meeting, actuated by the desire of upholding the weight and efficiency of the Executive Body, earnestly recommend to the Proprietors of East India Stock, the election of Henry St. George Tucker, Esq. to a Seat in the Direction on the first Vacancy which may occur, and pledge themselves to employ their strenuous exertions for the accomplishment of that object.

THOMAS BARING, Chairman.

Sir Thomas Baring having quitted the Chair, it was moved by Sir Alexander Johnston, seconded by Thomson Hankey Esq. and resolved unanimously, that the Thanks of this Meeting be given to Sir Thomas Baring, Bart, for his very able conduct in the Chair.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, Nov. 26.—Yesterday, at noon, his Majesty transacted business with the Baron de Damas, Minister at War, and the Count de Villele, President of the Council of Ministers. Preparations are making at the Court Theatre to celebrate the return of the Duke d'Angouleme, by the performance of Iphigenie en Espagne. The King will be present at this representation.—It is now said that the King of Spain will not go to the Escurial until the 20th of November, and that the Conferences relative to the situation of Spain will open on the 1st of December.—The Constitutional General Milans, with his family, arrived at Perpignan on the 16th inst.—It is affirmed, that the King of Spain has conferred the Order of the Golden Fleece upon M. the Count de Villele, and the Viscount de Chateaubriand. The Count Gouvion, Peer of France, died on Monday at his hotel, Rue de Faubourg St. Honore.—The Duke d'Angouleme was to sleep last night at Mont de Marsan. The Prince Generalissimo will arrive to-morrow at Bourdeaux, where he will stay the 27th.

MADRID, Nov. 18.—The King of Spain has deigned to confer the Order of the Golden Fleece on Count Pozzo di Borgo.—The following is the Speech of that Minister to the King, in the solemn audience on the 15th:—"SIRE—When the rebellion broke out against the sacred rights of the throne of your Majesty, the Emperor, my august master, perceived in his wisdom all the extent of the evils which the authors of this criminal attempt prepared for Spain.—The most painful experience confirmed these just presages which were showed by alarmed Europe, in proportion as the acts of violence and injustice of the usurpers of public power destroyed the most confident hopes. The necessity of stopping the fatal consequences of a state of things become dangerous to all made the Congress assemble at Verona, to employ to put an end to it even by force of arms, if the obstinacy of the disturbers of the general tranquillity rendered this resolution indispensable. It was for France to take the initiative in this noble enterprize. She has just accomplished it with glory, and your Majesty is restored to your people and your allies in all the plenitude of your legitimate power, a condition necessary to the happiness of Spain, and to the safety of Europe. The whole world, Sire, expects to see their just hope confirmed. The difficulties which your Majesty cannot fail to encounter in the pacification of your vast dominions will only enhance the merit of having conquered them. You will find the means in the wisdom of your own determinations, in the virtues of your people, and in the interest with which you are sure to inspire your allies; and your Majesty will then have the glory of terminating the evils of the last revolution by the firmness which hinders them from reviving, and the clemency which causes them to be forgotten. It is in these sentiments, Sire, that the Emperor, my august master, has ordered me to offer to your Majesty the most sincere congratulations on an event which he had so much at heart on so many accounts, and to confide to you his hopes, which are those of his allies, on the happy lot which your wisdom, Sire, is going to prepare for your numerous kingdoms, whose fate is essentially united with that of Europe."

His Majesty made the following answer:—"I have received with satisfaction the noble expressions of friendship from the Emperor your Sovereign. The part which his Majesty the Emperor and his august Allies have taken for the submission of Spain, and to shorten its disasters, I cannot but appreciate. I am occupied in repairing the evils my people have suffered, and I confide in Divine Providence to obtain that result, which is all I desire."

The Duke d'Angouleme has named Lieutenant General Count Bourmont General-in-Chief of all the French troops that occupy the Peninsula. The Count Bourmont arrived at Madrid on the 14th.—The King our Sovereign has testified his regard and pleasure to Count Bourmont, and has decorated him with the Grand Cross of the Order of St. Ferdinand.

Nov. 20.—His Majesty issued a decree yesterday, the 19th, to the following purport:—There shall be established a Council of Ministers, and in which Council shall be discussed all the affairs of general interest—each Minister is to make his report on the objects of his special department. The King will decide himself on the decision, which will be inscribed on a register, with the motives. Should the King not be able to assist in person at the Council of Ministers, he shall be represented by the first Secretary of State, and the Minister of Grace and Justice, who must register the deliberations. By the said decree his Majesty names his Ministers in the following order:—D. Victor Saez, First Secretary of State; D. Garcia de la Torre, Minister of Grace and Justice; D. Joseph San Juan, Minister of War; D. Marie Salazar, Minister of Marine; D. Juan Erro, Minister of Finance.

BAYONNE, Nov. 20.—We have news from Madrid of the 16th, by which we learn that the terms of the capitulation of the city of Alicant and the Balearic islands were very favourable to the Constitutionalists. The accounts from Estremadura say that the Empecinado is still in arms, and will not listen to any terms; he is at present with a respectable force at Alcantara, and has had an action in the environs with Morales, who is reported to have suffered some loss.

TRIESTE, Nov. 10.—Letters from Corfu, of the 29th October, in which confidence may be placed, announce that the Pacha of Sintar has arrived near Missolonghi, at the head of twelve thousand men, and has besieged that important place. The moment the news was known in the Morea, seven thousand Greeks, under the orders of Colocotroni and Ypsilanti, set off to the assistance of that place.

RIO JANEIRO.—Extract of a letter to the editor of the Salem Observer dated August 12:—"The Government is not yet in a settled state. The laws of the Cortes are dictated by the Emperor and his Ministers.

He is a favourite with the people, but they view with a jealous eye any attempts to render him absolute. The troops are generally well paid, and are often liberally regaled with wine, &c. by him at his residence, which is a few miles from the city. A short time since, he injured himself by a fall from his horse, and his first entrance into the city, since his recovery, was made a few days ago. The rain fell in torrents. He and the Empress were on horseback, and I hope our American ladies would not think I told a traveller's story, if I assured them that she rode comme un homme. Her dress was ordinary, her complexion very dark. You will recollect that she is sister to the Ex-Empress Maria Louisa Bonaparte. He is a decent-looking man, but was distinguished only by badges of royalty. They were escorted by the military, who, joined with a large number of negroes, it can scarcely be said, rent the air with vivas. At the entrance of the city his reception was said to be different, the inhabitants joining in the usual acclamations. On the sabbath evening, he visited the theatre, which was crowded to overflowing, and was received with the waving of handkerchiefs, and with shouts.

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—We learn that the arrival of a vessel in fifteen days from Vera Cruz had been announced at Baltimore, the Captain of which stated that the town of Vera Cruz had been entirely razed to the ground by the fire from the Castle of San Juan de Ulloa. If this account be correct it will of course bring matters to a crisis in Mexico, and most likely cause the total expulsion of the Spaniards from that state, as the fear of the injury now sustained by the town, was the only cause which prevented the Mexican Government under the late Emperor from commencing the siege of Ulloa.

Accounts have been received from the United States to the 2d of the present month. Under the head of Vera Cruz, we learn that all communication with the castle of San Juan de Ulloa and that city had been prohibited by order of General Victoria, and that hostilities, after so long a cessation, had been recommenced. The Governor of the Castle had erected additional works, as although the Mexicans gave out they only intended to occupy the Island of Sacrificios, it was thought they would attack the Castle itself.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

House of Lords, Nov. 25.—Parliament assembled this day, to be further prorogued. At nearly half past three o'clock, the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Shaftesbury, and Lord St. Helens, took their seats before the Throne as the Lords Commissioners, whereupon the Yeoman Usher of the Black Rod was directed to require the attendance of the Lower House.—After the Royal Commission, which was dated the 18th inst. had been read by their Lordships' Assistant Clerk, the Lord Chancellor, by virtue of the same, and in obedience to his Majesty's command, now declared that Parliament was prorogued from this 25th day of November, to Tuesday, the 3d day of February next, "then to sit and to be holden in our City of Westminster, as aforesaid."

IRELAND.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH, DUBLIN.

Baron Von Hoffman.—In this case a conditional order to restrain proceedings in the Insolvent Court, in the matter of Jacobs, of New York, v. Baron Von Hoffman, was obtained last week, and upon defendant's counsel coming in to show cause against the rule, the case was argued very fully on Saturday by Counsel on both sides. The grounds upon which the rule was sought to be made absolute were—that the parties being aliens, and the debt upon which defendant was arrested having been contracted in a foreign country, the Insolvent Debtors' Court could not take cognizance of it, and also that the defendant representing himself as possessed of property in Sclavonia, in Hungary he was unable to comply with the provisions of the Insolvent Debtors' Act, requiring the surrender of all his property to assignees appointed by the Court, as any surrender he could make in Ireland would not be valid in Hungary.

The Court allowed the cause shown against making the rule absolute, upon the following principles:—1st. That aliens subject to our laws, and liable to suffer their penalties, must also have the benefit of their protection and assistance; and, secondly, that any foreign creditor availing himself of our laws, must show a strong case to deprive the debtor of the advantages incident to his situation. The cause shewn was allowed with costs.

On Friday night, about eight o'clock, a desperate attack was made on the coach from Dublin to this city, via Cashel, which, we are happy to say, has not been attended with the loss of life, though the passengers, guard, and coachman were in imminent danger, and narrowly escaped. The coach was going at its usual rate, with the Hon. Captain Browne, and a female, who appeared to be a servant, inside, and that gentleman's body-servant, with the coachman and guard, outside. The night was very dark, and the coach lamps were burning clear, when they approached within about five miles of Cashel, in a part of the road cut through a bog; four shots were fired together at them from behind the ditch at one side of the road, which was immediately returned by the guard with one of his pistols; and the coachman, who was only a short time on the road, put the horses at full speed, but this proved of no effect, for the road was impeded with cars, large stones, &c. and the coachman, to save them, was obliged to turn the horses to the side of the ditch, where the coach got fast, and another volley was fired by the villains, which was returned by the guard with his second pistol. The Captain's servant jumped down and opened the door for his master, who made off, as did the guard with the mail; the coachman and the female in like manner—the former to obtain assistance. During this time the fire from the attacking party was not repeated; but, on the contrary, they made off, which it is conjectured was occasioned by a supposition on their part, that when the coach drew up it was with the intention of offering resistance. Captain Browne made through the bog to Grange turnpike, where he detailed the occurrence, and left directions, should the coach arrive there, that he was safe, and repaired to the house of a Mr. Mills, a short distance off. The coachman hastened to some houses, into which he got with difficulty, and about twelve men were procured, who went back, where the coach was found without being disturbed. The guard, who hid with the mail in the bog, and the servant, who was also concealed in another part, came up, and by their combined efforts removed all the impediments, and proceeded on to Cashel, where they arrived four hours late, and upon examination they found two shots had struck near the boot, but the coach being shot-proof, they did not enter. Here the greatest alarm was manifested for Capt. Browne's safety, the men at Grange having omitted to mention his being there, and the coach arrived in this city about 11 o'clock all in the same suspense. The feeling that was excited on its arrival was most intense, lest any mishap should have befallen Captain Browne; but we are happy to state, that it was set at rest, by his reaching town late on Saturday evening, in a chaise. The object of the villains evidently was plunder, and their disappointment arose from cowardice. The men who gave their assistance did so freely, and their names have been taken down, in order that they may be rewarded.—Cork paper.

OPENING OF THE BRIGHTON SUSPENSION CHAIN PIER.

On Tuesday last the Chain Pier was opened to the public by a procession consisting of the High Constable, the Commissioners, and other constituted authorities of the town, attended by the Magistrates and a number of the nobility and gentry at present residing here.—This splendid work of art and science has been accomplished in the space of twelve months; and, whether viewed as a national monument, or as a novel invention, it is a gratifying evidence of the resources and intellect of our country. The material part of the Pier is made of English iron, which within a very few years has been by great assiduity brought to such perfection as entirely to supersede the necessity of going to a foreign market for it. Captain Brown, the projector and builder of this bridge, has, by his talents, which have likewise in other things most materially served his country, (the chain cable, &c.) produced a pier of such beauty and accommodation as stands unrivalled in the world. The utility of the Suspension Pier is not even known; it can be laid down on exposed coasts, affording a certain means for boats to land, and more particularly to get off to vessels in distress, in weather which, without such means, render aid impossible; to the man of pleasure and the valetudinarian, it offers a marine promenade unequalled; and in its present infancy there is no calculating on the general and numerous purposes to which it may be applied. Every arrangement had been made for the gratification of the public, and tickets were issued to all persons who applied for them, for entrance on the esplanade and bridge to see the opening. At one o'clock the procession moved from the Old Ship. At this time the Esplanade, the Pier, and the Marine Parade were thronged with spectators, the ocean was covered with pleasure boats, and not a vacant spot could the eye discover, but thousands of objects displaying beauty, fashion, and gratification. The procession arrived at the Pier at two o'clock, and moved to the outer head, where a de jeune a la fourchette was provided; immediately on its arrival the band struck up "God save the King," and the huzzas extended a one instant from the multitude, the whole length of the Pier, the shore, and the pleasure boats.—A revenue cutter lying in the roads also fired a royal salute.—A temporary house had been erected over the outer end of the Pier, in which was laid out the dejeune for those gentlemen specially invited. As soon as the company had entered the room they were seated to a dejeune, consisting of all the delicacies the season affords, with the choicest wines; Capt. Brown presided, supported by the Earl of Aberdeen, the Bishop of Dromore, the Dean of Salisbury, Mr. T. R. Kemp, M.P., Mr. Cripps, &c.; and Mr. T. West was in the deputy chair, supported by Mr. Parker, Mr. Blabe, the High Constable, &c. After the repast Capt. Brown rose and gave "the health of the King," which was received with the warmest plaudits; then followed, "the Duke of York and the Army," "the Duke of Clarence and the Navy," "the Royal Family." The healths of Capt. Brown, the Earl of Aberdeen, &c. &c. were given, and each gentleman returned thanks. At half past four the Court of Directors of the Pier Company, Capt. Brown, Mr. T. R. Kemp, M.P. Mr. West, and Mr. Walker, assembled on the head, and Mr. Slade, the secretary, proclaimed by order of the Court the Pier to be open under the Act of Parliament. The Court then moved down the Pier, preceded by a band of music, and beadles, and followed by a band, along the Esplanade, and when arrived at the Western Gate the town crier also proclaimed the Pier open under the Act of Parliament. Mr. Forth, M.C. then passed through the gate, and paid the first toll.—The company then gradually retired from witnessing one of the most gratifying events which ever occurred at Brighton. In England the Brighton Suspension Pier stands without a parallel, and, for extent, is in the whole world without compare. Our highly favoured town will derive incalculable benefit from this wonder of the age; and when we reflect with what disinterested views Capt. Brown has devoted his talents to the completion of the work, we feel satisfied his exertions will not pass without his meeting with a most gratifying testimonial of the high consideration with which he is esteemed. The bands of the 7th Hussars and of the 68th Regiment of Infantry, played during the entertainment. At eight o'clock there was a brilliant display of fire-works on the Esplanade and on the bridge. The cutter in the roads was also illuminated.—It is supposed that not less than 5,000 persons were on the Pier at one time—the best assurance of its strength; and the number of spectators cannot be estimated at less than 30,000. Nearly 300 were present at the dejeune.—The foundation of the Pier consists of four clumps of piles, 268 feet distant, driven nearly eight feet in the rock, and rising 14 feet above high water at the highest spring tides. The three first clumps contain 20 piles each; the fourth, which is in form of a T, contains 150 perpendicular and diagonal piles, strongly braced, the cross-part of which is paved with about 200 tons of Purbeck stone, and beneath which galleries and flights of steps are constructed for the convenience of embarkation. The Pier, which is 1,134 feet long, and 13 feet wide, with a neat cast iron railing on each side, is supported by eight chains, each containing 117 links, 10 feet long, 6¼ in circumference, and weighing 112lb. which are made fast in the cliff. From the cliff the chains (four on each side) pass over a tower of cast iron, (one on each clump of piles,) with a dip of 18 feet, secured at the outer clump of piles, and from which are suspended 360 rods, connected by an iron bar, on which the platform rests. The length of the Esplanade from the Steine to the beginning of the Pier is 1,250 feet, along which the carriages will pass.—Yesterday afternoon Capt. Brown went to the extremity of the Pier in his gig, after which he drove Mrs. Brown and some friends to the end and back in his own carriage.—Brighton Gazette.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH.

THURSDAY.—The Solicitor-General shewed cause against a rule obtained by Mr. Brougham for leave to file a criminal information against Lieutenant Graham of the privateer service, for challenging the Earl of Harborough. The Learned Gentleman said, that Lieut. Graham had conducted himself with propriety in this case, and the affidavits would prove, that under circumstances of great provocation, he had acted with extreme moderation and forbearance. The only affidavit on the other side was the Earl of Harborough's, who swore that on the night of the 28th of August last, he had been stopped, in order to be searched, and that the person who stopped him drew a pistol and used violent language; and further, that when the Earl attempted to go up the beech, he was again stopped, and that the person stopping him fired the pistol, that others then came up, and one of them threatened to cut him down; that the Earl had formerly and now a second time asked for his warrant, which was refused. Now, it was sworn, in reply, that Lieut. Smith, who had come up, said the name of the officer who stopped him was William Pinner, and he would be forthcoming in the morning. The Earl had not landed from a pleasure yacht, but from a galley, was dressed like a smuggler in blue trowsers and jacket, and check-shirt, and wore, as usual with his Lordship, a long beard, and appeared to have something muffled in his breast. He landed on the beach near Dover, where smuggles often landed, and where there had been a struggle with smugglers a short time before. Pinner did not know him to be the Earl, and left it his duty to stop him, and fired his pistol as a signal, upon which a superior officer and several men came up, and two of them laid hold of the Earl. It was between twelve and one at night. Lieut. Graham and others thought it their duty to search the lugger from which the Earl landed, and which looked like a common fishing vessel, and Earl ordered them to quit his vessel; an altercation ensued, the Earl telling the officers they looked like highwaymen. The mob on the shore shouted, "Go it, my Lord, throw them overboard." It was sworn that no violence of manner or language was used, and that Lieut. Graham gave his card only to satisfy his Lordship that he was a Lieutenant, not having his commission, for which the Earl called. In the month of May before, his Lordship's boat had been searched, but it was because the Earl had refused to give his honour that there were no contraband goods on board. After the Solicitor-General had read a number of affidavits, the Chief Justice said they would hear what Mr. Brougham had to say on the other side.

Mr. Brougham was heard, and he said, if the Court believed that Lieutenant Graham did not give a challenge to Lord Harborough, but only gave his card in order to give an answer to the question, "How can I know whether you are an officer?" he had not a leg to stand upon. But by the variations between the affidavits of Lieut. Smith and Lieutenant Graham, the latter of whom admitted that he said, "if you want any further explanations you may know where to find me." But Graham did not swear that he had not challenged, but, that he had no recollection of having given a challenge. The words were so qualified that Lieut. Graham might say afterwards, "I did challenge him but he refused to fight me."

The Lord Chief Justice—The duty of the Court is confined to the law in this case. Though I may blush for a nobleman wanting manners, I have no right to read him a lecture upon that subject. Considering the evidence on both sides, I am decidedly of opinion that the rule must be discharged with costs.

In this opinion Mr. Justice Bayley and Mr. Justice Best agreed, and the Rule was discharged with costs

FRIDAY.—The King v. the Mayor and Corporation of Monmouth.—Mr. Scarlett said he shewed cause against a rule for a quo warranto information, on the Mayor and Corporation of this Borough, calling on them to shew by what authority they elected certain persons to corporate offices. He observed, this was one of those litigious applications which calculated on the facility of granting quo warranto informations, by which any person like the present applicant, having a long purse, might accomplish his purpose of disfranchising any borough, by putting the corporation to the intolerable expense of sixty-one quo warrantos, upon captious objections taken to their proceedings. The objections taken in this case were, that the Charter of James I. the prescribed mode of choosing burgesses, was not as here done: which was, that 15 of the burgesses being elected Common Council, had proceeded, by law made by themselves, to elect each other, whereas the charter gave no such power, but directed the bell to be rung to announce the holding a Court to elect burgesses, and that a public proclamation was required to be made three times previous to such election.

The Lord Chief Justice observed, the Court were all of opinion the rule must be made absolute for the quo warranto information to issue, because the mere ringing of the church bell, that being as well for other purposes, was not sufficient notice of election.

Mr. Justice Bayley asked if the question could not be decided by trying one information, as the due election of the Mayor would necessarily turn upon the same question, whether the notice was sufficient—The answer being in the affirmative, Rule absolute.

 In our paper of last week we noticed the sentences on several persons for gambling in the King's Bench Prison, and among the rest the name of Charles Godshall was mentioned as having been imprisoned for one month. We are requested by Mr. Charles Godshall to say the account (which was copied from an Evening paper) is incorrect so far as concerns him, for the Court discharged him on his own recognizance for six months, and he suffered no imprisonment.

The rule for a criminal information against Edgerley, printer, and Messrs. Sherwood and Jones, publishers, for having published an account of the murder of the late Mr. Weare, was enlarged as far as regards Messrs. Sherwood and Co., Mr. Scarlett, of Counsel for these gentlemen, having stated that Mr. Sherwood swore that he had known nothing of the publication, but that when he heard of the application against the theatre, he recalled all the copies he could, and sold none since, and would sell no more.—Mr. Gurney intimated that he would press against Messrs. Sherwood and Jones, but the other defendant was in a different situation, he was printer as well as publisher. The Court, therefore, upon the learned Counsel pressing the rule against Edgerley made it absolute with respect to him, and enlarged against Messrs. Sherwood and Jones until next Term.

Mr. Justice Bayley said that the defendant would have an opportunity of conducting himself, in the meantime, in a manner which, he hoped, would prevent further proceedings against him.

The Solicitor-General shewed cause against the rule for a mandamus against Mr. Jones, the Marshal of the King's Bench Prison, commanding him to hear a charge of felony made against a prisoner named Forrester. The affidavit of the prisoner, by a fellow prisoner named Forrester. The affidavit of the marshal stated, that he had heard the charge, and therefore the rule was discharged.

On the motion of Mr. Chitty, a writ of certiorari was granted to remove the prosecution against Thomas Thurtell for a conspiracy, from the Middlesex Sessions into this Court, on the ground that Mr. Barnard Beaumont, the Managing Director of the County Fire Office, is a Solicitor for the county of Middlesex; and that he (Beaumont) inserted a paragraph in the Times newspaper, which stated, that Thurtell had declared he never had any property in Watling-street where he had declared. This was denied by the assignees of Thurtell, and the trial took place. This closed the Term.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS' COURT.

THURSDAY.—John Dove was opposed. The insolvent had been a shopkeeper and butcher, and joined in a bond with a Mr. Chaplin to certain turnpike trustees, for which the latter had to pay 120l. The business of the shop the latter said is carried on by the insolvent, but some of the furniture and property which he had previous to his being bound were carried away. The insolvent said his wife was now supported by friends, and was not carrying on any business. The Court, however, conceiving that some concealment had taken place, adjudged the insolvent to be imprisoned six months.

POLICE.

QUEEN-SQUARE.—Friday, William Anderton, private in the 3d batt. 1st regiment of Grenadier Guards, was charged with fraudulently obtaining a military dress coat, value 10l. the property of Wm. Gilbert, one of the band. Mrs. Sarah Gilbert deposed, that her husband was employed at the Lord Mayor's show, on the 10th inst.; the prisoner came to her lodgings, in Ranelagh-street, Pimlico, about ten o'clock in the morning, saying he belonged to the 1st batt. of the 1st regiment, stationed at the King's Mews barracks, and had been sent by her husband and Mr. Blaney, master of the band, for her husband's best coat, as they were to take water at Whitehall-stairs, and he was to take your coat there. Finding his account relative to her husband correct, she did not hesitate giving him the coat, which he wrapped up in a handkerchief and carried off.—He was remanded.

MANSION-HOUSE.—On Friday, a vagrant, who had been found selling matches and begging in the streets, and who had been servant to Alderman Wood, in 1810, was brought before the Lord Mayor. The unfortunate fellow said, he was ashamed to apply to the Alderman, and preferred the course of life he now pursued, although it was the most severe and unprofitable course he had ever fallen upon.—The Lord Mayor gave him a trifle to assist him on his way to Somersetshire, his native place; and told him, that if he appeared again in the streets in the capacity of a beggar, he should go to hard labour for three months.

BOW-STREET.—On Thursday, Felix Webb, a toll-gatherer on the Kensington Trust, doing duty at the gate at Kensington, appeared to answer to a complaint preferred by Mr. Cobbett, for having used abusive and insulting language to him on the 11th of October.—James Palmer said, on Saturday, the 11th of October, he was in the employ of Mr. Cobbett, and that in endeavouring to pass the Kensington-gate, the toll-gatherer wanted him to pay 4½d. instead of 3d. He accordingly did this to his master, upon which Felix Webb began to abuse him. The words he recollected were, "You did not dare to show your face in a Court of Justice; nor would the Magistrate take your word for any thing you said."—Mr. Cobbett—Did you not hear him call me an Atheist?—Witness—I cannot say, for I was then at some distance, but he continued abusing you.—Mr. C. said, that the whole conduct of Webb was gross and offensive in the extreme.—Webb denied being the man; and observed, that if he had been present when Cobbett called his employers "Jew thieves, and robbers," which he understood he did on the day in question, he (Webb) would probably have been before their Worships for another kind of offence.—Sir Richard Birnie warmly reproved Webb for thus threatening to commit a breach of the peace; and as no evidence was offered to rebut that of Palmer, Webb was convicted in the full penalty of 5l. and costs. He gave notice of appeal.

WORSHIP-STREET.—On Thursday several bakers appeared before the Magistrate, in consequence of summonses issued against them for taking rolls, or bread under the denomination of rolls, on the Sabbath day. This was a prosecution instituted by the journeymen, not for the purpose of seeking rewards by fines and penalties, but to establish their right of enjoying the Lord's Day, as secured to them under the 56th of Geo. IV. cap. 106, sec. 16, which enacts, "That no master, mistress, journeyman, or other person, exercising or employed in the trade or calling of a baker, shall on the Lord's Day, or any part thereof, bake or bake any bread, rolls, or cakes, of any sort or kind." The different offences were satisfactorily proved, and the Magistrate, under the Act, fined them ten shillings each, without costs, which they severally paid before they left the office.

HATTON-GARDEN.—On Wednesday Elizabeth Hammond was charged by Mr. Hodson, of the Skinners' Arms, Judd-street, with various embezzlements, while acting as his bar-maid. The prisoner has been in his service about three months, during which there were defalcations in his receipts, which induced him to watch her conduct. He also discovered that she had contracted an intimacy with a young man, for whom she had taken lodgings opposite to Mr. Hodson's house, to be better enabled to supply him with liquors, &c. and a note from him was discovered, in which he upbraided her that "the old port is not forthcoming according to promise." Mr. Hodson had missed a bottle of port wine regularly for some days past. On the two last nights, he sent a friend to purchase a pint of brandy with marked silver; and on each succeeding morning but two shillings were found in the till. To Mr. Hodson's astonishment, a band of musicians used to attend every evening to play before his house; but he has since ascertained they were in her regular pay. When taken into custody, four of the marked shillings were found upon her. After a long investigation she was remanded until Friday.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE KING.—Friday night, at a quarter before eight o'clock, the King arrived at Carlton Palace from Windsor.

The Duke of York left his residence in Stable-yard, St. James's, at an early hour on Thursday morning, for Beau Desert, Staffordshire, the seat of the Marquis of Anglesea, where a shooting party is expected to meet his Royal Highness.

On Wednesday a ballot was taken at the East India House for the election of a Director, in the room of Charles Grant, Esq. deceased. At six o'clock the glasses were closed and delivered to the Secretaries, who reported the election to have fallen on John Masterman, Esq.—The numbers were—for Mr. Masterman, 1121; Mr. Muspratt, 459.—A Court of Directors was also held, when Capt. E. M. Daniell, was sworn into the command of the ship Duchess of Athol, consigned to Bengal and China.

The election of a Member for the County of Lincoln came on last Tuesday. Sir W. A. Ingilby, Bart., was proposed by the Rev. Sir C. Anderson, and Sir J. Thorold, Bart., by Col. Johnson. At the close of the poll on that day the numbers were, for Sir W. Ingilby, 385 —for Sir J. Thorold, Bart. 280.—At the close of the second day's poll: Sir W. A. Ingilby, 851—Sir J. H. Thorold, 517—Majority, 334.

It is stated that the new Post Office will be finished and ready for occupation in three years.

Senors Arguelles and Quadra, Members of the late Spanish Cortes, have arrived in London.

On Tuesday last a seizure was made at the London Docks of considerable magnitude by Mr. Chafy and Mr. Southgate, two of the landing surveyors of his Majesty's Customs, of 3,600 squares of plate glass, which had been secreted abroad in the middle of some casks of slate powder, in order to evade the duties on their arrival into this country, which duties amount to nearly 1000l. By the vigilance of the officers the parties concerned in this nefarious transaction are known, and we are liable to the penalty of double the value of the goods seized. We trust that the commissioners of his Majesty's Customs will punish these characters to the fullest extent of the law, which will not only be the means of preventing similar frauds on the revenue, but protect the fair dealer.

Tuesday a meeting took place near Clapham, between E. Mitford, Esq. and —— Lloyd, Esq. Mr. M. was attended by Captain Osborne late of the 69 Reg. the latter by a Mr. Jefferies. On the first fire Mr. Mitford was slightly wounded in the thigh; Mr. M. begged for a second pistol; Capt. O., pressed for an accommodation, when Mr. J. remarked that they had come to fight and not to talk. The principals then called to their seconds for pistols, and at the second discharge, Mr. Lloyd received a ball in the right shoulder, and the affair terminated.

In consequence of the high price of coals an enquiry has been made into the cause; it was stated at the Mansion House the other day that it arose from the following practice, which could not be too much reprobated:—Some of the most eminent dealers bought their coals at the pit mouth, and freighted their ships with them. Upon the arrival of the cargoes, they made purchases, or pretended purchases, of part or the whole of them, through their factors in London, at an exorbitant price, and thus compelled the public to pay for small quantities in proportion to the price which the original purchasers had thus unfairly put upon the article. Some legislative enactment must be made to remedy the great evil, and Petitions are preparing in the maritime districts, to be presented next session, for the repeal of the coast duty on coals.

Mr. Bell, Professor of Law in the University of Edinburgh, has published a contradiction of a paragraph which has appeared in all the papers, in which it was said that the Commissioners on the Administration of Justice in Scotland, were about to make some arrangement to reduce law expences to half what they are at present:—"I should," says Mr. Bell, "have been very unworthy of a place in that Commission, if I could have been capable of the indiscretion and indelicacy of disclosing any of its proceedings, or hazarding predictions as to the ultimate effect of labours not yet finally closed. And I beg earnestly that you may do me the justice of contradicting, in the most absolute and explicit terms, the paragraph to which I allude."

OXFORD.—On Tuesday the following degrees were conferred:—BACHELOR IN MEDICINE—R. Venables, St. Mary Hall.—MASTERS OF ARTS—Rev. E. Leslie, Christ Church, Grand Compounder; Rev. E. Timson, Trinity College; G. H. W. Heneage, Student of Christ Church; Rev. A. W. Gregory and Rev. E. Cobbold, St. Alban Hall; Rev. F. R. Stevens, Worcester College.—BACHELORS OF ARTS—W. Yates, Esq. Grand Compounder; A. Crowdy, and J. Gladstone, Brasenose College; J. Colquhoun, Oriel College; W. Whalley and R. B. Berens, Christ Church; E. Falle, Pembroke College; E. Hammond, University College; D. Maclean and W. J. Veitch, Balliol College; C. S. Greaves, Queen's College; G. Dixon, St. John's College.

On Wednesday the prisoners, under commitment for trial, were removed to Newgate from the different prisons, preparatory to the Sessions, which will commence on Wednesday next, at the Old Bailey.

On Wednesday John Smith, aged 26, for uttering forged notes; J. Scott, aged 48, for cutting and stabbing his wife in the vicinity of the Regent's Park; E. Hogan, aged 17, for cutting and maiming his fellow workman, a journeyman baker, in the vicinity of Doctors' Commons; and J. Crisp, aged 29, convicted of Burglary, were executed in the Old Bailey.

THE MURDER OF MR. WEARE.—It is understood that the Magistrates have determined to send Hunt to trial as a principal in the murder of this person.—Mr. Nicholson visited Probert in company with Mr. Williams on Wednesday night; they remained a considerable time with the prisoner, who freely, and expressly of his own accord, gave a circumstantial narrative of his whole life, and particularly of his connexion with John and Thomas Thurtell. He described the origin of his acquaintance with the Thurtells in the following manner: While standing at his own door, when he was in the wine business, John and Thomas Thurtell while passing made a sudden stand, and one of them put his hand to his hat, as a token of recognition. Probert remarked that they had the advantage of him, as he had not the pleasure of recollecting their acquaintance. Thomas Thurtell then introduced himself as proprietor of the Cock, in the Haymarket, and said, as he was in extensive trade he should be glad to do business with him in the wine and spirit way. Probert, anticipating a good customer, cultivated the acquaintance, and an intimacy and interchange of family visits was the consequence. During this intercourse J. T. proposed to marry one of Mrs. Probert's sisters, but the lady rejected the proposal on the ground of a previous engagement. The Thurtells, John in particular, continued occasional visits to Gill's-hill cottage; and on the very day (Friday) of the night when Mr. Weare was murdered, John Thurtell invited himself and Hunt to Gill's hill cottage, and said they would be down for a day or two, as they meant to pay a visit to the Earl of Essex's grounds at Cashiobury, to bag some of his game. Circumstances, however, spared the noble Earl from the intrusion of such a visit. Lord Essex has often remarked, since the affair of the murder has been agitated, and since it was known that some of the party said to be implicated were good unlicensed shots in the neighbouring preserves, that he wondered they never paid him a visit. That he had not escaped their notice is very clear from the anecdote above-mentioned. Probert's last statement of his knowledge of Mr. Weare's murder does not differ from that which he has already made.

The indictments are now preparing against the three prisoners. Mr. Gurney, Mr. Bolland, and Mr. Broderick, are retained for the prosecution. Mr. Chitty, Mr. Andrews, and one or two others, are retained for the prisoners.

Two persons, against whom warrants were issued more than a fortnight ago, are said to have been arrested on Monday night at one of their old haunts, which they had not visited since the promulgation of the murder. They were sent off in charge of the officer for examination before the Magistrates at Hertford.

INTENDED FRAUD.—Few occurrences of late years have created such sensations, and caused so much inquiry and surprise, as the base and deliberate attempt to cast a stain on the character, and injure the property of the late Captain Adam Mackenzie, of the Royal Navy, whose death we recorded last week, the following particulars of which we believe to be generally correct:—Within a short time after Capt. Mackenzie's decease, a woman, calling herself Mrs. Mackenzie, made application to the Hon. Sir A. I. Cochrane, and stated herself to be the lawful wife of Capt. Adam Mackenzie, to whom she had been married at the parish church of Maker, Plymouth, on the 27th of August, 1822, of which marriage she produced a regular certificate, and also a correspondence, purporting to have passed between Capt. Mackenzie and herself. A respectable solicitor of Portsmouth, employed by the pretended Mrs. Mackenzie, had waited on the Rev. Mr. Ley, the clergyman of Maker, and ascertained that the certificate the woman had produced was an exact copy from the marriage register-book; some naval officers, friends of Capt. Mackenzie, had also visited Maker for the same purpose, and felt convinced that such a marriage had been solemnized, although the signature of the book was at variance with Captain Mackenzie's habit of writing his name, being there written "Adam Mackenzie," and Capt. M. always signing "A. Mackenzie." This circumstance, coupled with Capt. Mackenzie's known upright character and regular habits, prompted further enquiries; and on the Rev. Mr. Ley being asked as to the age and appearance of the person calling himself Adam M'Kenzie, he replied that as far as his recollection served, he appeared to him very much junior to the late Captain Mackenzie, who was advanced in age. In order to get at the bottom of this complex affair, Sir Alexander J. Cochrane earnestly requested the attendance of the Rev. Mr. Ley, in order that he might view the corpse, and ascertain, if possible, the identity of the person he had married. On examination Mr. Ley was fully convinced that there existed no similitude, and now the intended fraud was evident. As the woman lived in St. Aubyn-street, the Rev. Mr. Ley, accompanied by Capt. Thomas White, R.N. of Stoke, adjourned to her house, where they found the shutters closed, and all bearing the appearance of mourning for a near relative. On entering, the woman was not in the room, but on her coming in shortly afterwards, she exhibited great trepidation, and to the questions put to her, answered in a very contradictory manner. At last, being taxed with the heinous nature of her conduct, and the severe punishment consequent on detection, which was unavoidable, she requested that all but Mr. Ley as the fraud had been discovered, she requested that all but Mr. Ley would leave the room, which request being complied with, she discovered many circumstances relative to the transaction, with which of course, we are totally unacquainted; but from what followed the next day (Thursday) must have implicated the partner in her guilt. In the evening she absconded from her house, and has not been heard of since. Inquiry was next made in the Dock-yard, where the husband, who at his marriage had represented himself as "Adam M'Kenzie," was found in the person of George Condy, a shipwright, who, upon being summoned from his work to the Commissioners' Office, betrayed considerable agitation, and immediately went to a shed to change his working dress: here he ascended by a ladder into a loft, where it appears he took a large clasp knife from his pocket, and drew it across his throat with such violence as to divide the windpipe, but not with sufficient force to cut the carotid artery. His groans shortly after attracted the attention of some of his brother workmen underneath, who on going above found him fainting from the loss of blood. Being removed to the Surgeon's office, his wound was examined and dressed, but he died on Saturday.

WESTMINSTER REVIEW.—In projecting this New Quarterly Review, the Conductors conceive that they are about to take possession of ground entirely unoccupied by any prior Publication. The other Critical Works of the same kind are the powerful and efficient advocates of their respective parties; but it is the firm and decided determination of the Editors of the Westminster Review, to take part with no faction, to support no band of men, and to perform the duties of the office which they have undertaken, and in which they are not untried, as uninfluenced by personal enmity as by personal friendship. In this Publication they have organized a Critical and Political Review, whose decisions shall be formed on the basis of general principles alone, and which, even should their tone ever rise to severity, will never be polluted by the virulence of party spirit. The Editors have great satisfaction in stating, that they are the organs of an able and active portion of the Britons, who having seen with regret and somewhat of indignation, that the name of Criticism has been usurped with sinister views, and that the interests of literature and of a wise policy, and through them, those of the public have been sacrificed for selfish and unworthy purposes, are resolved to establish a tribunal where a fairer and more unbiassed hearing may be obtained. They are far from denying the utility of the works of this nature which already exist; on the contrary, they are willing to confess that they have produced much good, and that they still represent with zeal and ability the parties they espouse. But the Editors of the Westminster Review are of opinion, that between their narrow and conflicting systems, there is one great class of interests too often lost sight of; these are the interests of the community at large. It is their ambition to make this Review the representative of those interests, and the firm and invariable advocate of those principles which tend to increase the happiness, and ameliorate the condition of mankind. Having said thus much of the spirit in which the work will be conducted, the Editors feel disposed, as regards the plan and execution of it, to refer to their forthcoming Number. In a short announcement like the present, it would be impossible to describe them with any precision; and under any circumstances, perhaps no specimen would be more satisfactory than a description. It will readily be seen, from a slight inspection, that the plan embraces some novelties, and it is confidently trusted, that the execution will be such as to deserve no small portion of the public attention.—The First Number will appear in January, 1824.—Printed for Longman, Hurst, Rees, Orme, Brown, and Green, Paternoster-row, London.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, Nov. 30.

HIS MAJESTY arrived on Friday night at eight o'clock at Carlton Palace, and to-morrow evening will honour DRURY LANE THEATRE with his presence: the performances commanded are the HYPOCRITE, and LOVE, LAW, and PHYSIC.

MR. MACAULAY.

THE Solicitors to this Gentleman have informed us, that they are instructed to commence an action against us for defaming his character—that we have the smallest wish, to defame his character as MR. ZACHARY MACAULAY, the general merchant, we distinctly deny;—that the notice we have received will not divert us from our purpose of exposing the real nature of MR. ZACHARIAH MACAULAY'S pretensions to the character of a SAINT, we as distinctly assert—what are the grounds of his attack upon us we cannot at present understand? Sanctity is neither a trade nor a profession we presume—if it be—it is high time the world should know a little more about it.

Lest we should be supposed to invent calumnies to cast a stigma upon the zealous advocates of that great and important measure (which they have heretofore so clearly and pointedly disclaimed the intention of attempting) NEGRO EMANCIPATION, and to prove how vindictively the spirit of those benevolent personages works against us, we will simply quote from the pamphlets of JUDGE THORPE suadry paragraphs and pages touching MR. ZACHARY MACAULAY, which have been suffered to pass unnoticed by the legal advisers of that mild and beneficent personage for six years. We are aware that plated goods must be handled gently, and DR. THORPE (who was ruined for daring to display the quackery of the Saints) has certainly rubbed off enough of the coating to shew the brass. We suppose, since, however much the learned Doctor has been persecuted, he has never yet been prosecuted for these exposures; we may justify ourselves here, by the insertion of a few extracts from his works—what we have of our own, we shall reserve for our justification elsewhere.

We think it right in the outset to observe, however, that we are not partizans of JUDGE THORPE—we merely avail ourselves of the information published by him, to exonerate ourselves from the charge of "defaming MR. MACAULAY'S character."

At page xi. of the Preface to the fourth edition of DR. THORPE'S Letter to MR. WILBERFORCE—(Rivington, 1815) he speaks of MR. MACAULAY thus:—

"Uneducated for any profession, and uninstructed for any regular system of mercantile pursuits, he was brought from a subordinate station in a West Indian plantation to the service of the Sierra Leone Company, with a salary (as I learn) of four hundred a year; he managed their concerns for many years; four hundred thousand pounds of private and public property was wasted, the Company sink to insolvency, and the managing servant rises to affluence, forms a new association with his old friends the nominal Directors, undertakes to plan and regulate it gratuitously, and denominates himself at once an African Merchant! We read his letter, (dated Nov. 4, 1807,) speaking of his Majesty's Ministers in a tone of familiarity and disrespect, that a continued intimacy from college would not justify, even between persons of equal rank. I have before me his public letter to the DUKE of GLOUCESTER, proclaiming 'the flattering kindness he has received 'from him, and the many noble and distinguished characters with 'whom he had been associated for eight years;' and the way he has obtruded himself into every official department is well known. I hope I am not overloaded with aristocratic notions, yet I must declare that I consider the encouragement of this sort of conduct as setting at defiance all distinctions in society. It cannot be palliated by the man's possessing great talents, extensive learning or elegant manners, for 'he has no pretensions to any of them.'"

JUDGE THORPE proceeds then to observe that there are, amongst other charges which he brought against MR. MACAULAY, fourteen which he says are not supported by a tittle of evidence, then the judge takes up and brings his proofs—but before we recur to this preface to the fourth edition of the Judge's letter, we will just look at the first edition of the letter itself.

Part of the following information we have previously published, but the candid and single-hearted letter from MR. MACAULAY to GOVERNOR LUDLAM yet remains to be read.—

"Fifty guineas were given to MR. MACAULAY, (late Secretary, and always Director,) for importing into this country above ten tons of white rice from the west coast of Africa. Did this gentleman propose the premium that he might receive the reward? The proposition was absurd, and the acceptance disgraceful. MR. MACAULAY is the great shopkeeper of the colony; he is the only person that has regular ships in trade from England; the chiefs in the adjacent rivers constantly send rice for the supply of the colony (often beaten clean by their slaves;) above ten tons of this was put on board MR. MACAULAY'S ship returning to England, and he receives fifty guineas reward! What advantage was this to Africa? and was not the fund intended solely for her benefit?

"In the next page I come to the statement of the funds, and see, 'for clothing African boys at school, &c. 141. 5s. 4d.' and 'for a piece 'of plate to MR. MACAULAY, 107l. 12s. 0d.'!! Here is parsimony indeed in the natural distribution, and prodigality in an eleemosynary donation. But why this profuse expenditure on MR. MACAULAY? He has been serving himself in all that he has done for the Sierra Leone Company or the African Institution; he has obtained everything by his influence over their leaders; nearly a monopoly of the trade; great freights for his ships: the prize agency of almost every man of war that has gone to the coast since the abolition; the supply of the navy on the coast with provisions, &c.; the agency for the Governor and garrison seizures;* in short, the whole controul over everything attached to the Colony there and here, has been with him, not only in the company's time, but on the surrender of the colony to Government; he arranged the offices, and recommended the persons to fill them; he allotted for himself the appointment of King's Agent, and had not a promise made by LORD GRENVILLE, when in office, been executed by the late DUKE OF PORTLAND, he would have succeeded.

"This immediate interference with Government from 1807, will more clearly appear from his own letter to GOVERNOR LUDLAM, which I extract from a pamphlet of the much-injured MR. GRANT; it was first published in the African Herald, and may be found in the High Court of Admiralty, as transmitted by GOVERNOR THOMPSON.

"'London, 4th Nov. 1807.

"'My dear Sir,—A word in private respecting the African Institution. I cannot help regarding it as an IMPORTANT ENGINE. We 'have many zealous friends in it, high in rank and influence, who, I 'am persuaded, are anxious to do what can be done, both for the Colony 'and for Africa. Mr. PERCEVAL and MR. CANNING are with us decidedly. LORD CASTLEREAGH, with whom our business more immediately lies, is good humoured and complying, but his secretary, Mr. A Cook is hostile to the whole thing

"Caret, in pencil.

"In the margin, in pencil—and Mr. Wilberforce desires me to add, disposed from a point of honour to do the utmost for the Abolitionists."

"Interlineations in the original."

"Words [will eagerly] defaced."

"Words in italics underscored in the original."

'A
'fear
'may be disposed to
'and [will eagerly] seize any circumstance
'which will put it in his power to do us mis-
'chief.

"'You will see how very important it is to
'be aware of this in your communications
'with Government. Indeed, in all the 'OSTENSIBLE LETTERS YOU WRITE, whether
'to LORD CASTLEREAGH, the African Institu'tion, or myself, it will be right to consider
'the effect of what you say on lukewarm
'friends, and in the hands of secret enemies, with
'for such will unavoidably mix us. In such hands there are truths
A
'which will be made to produce all the effect of falsehood, and instead 'of being used as they ought to be, as a spur, will be employed as 'checks to all exertion. I cannot mean, of course, that you should, in 'any degree, varnish your representations. I merely mean that you 'should not unnecessarily discourage the exertions of benevolence.
'People who do not know you, will suppose the case to be desperate 'where you seem to doubt; and your testimony, if convertible to an 'adverse purpose, would be formidable. Your own mind will suggest to you the guards, limitations, and exceptions, with which what I
'now say should be received.

"'I have NO DOUBT that Government will be disposed to adopt al'most any plan which we may propose to them
'with respect to Africa, provided we will but
'save them the trouble of thinking. This you 'will see to be highly important.'

"Words in small capitals underscored with a double line in the original."

"So far appears to be in the hand-writing of an amanuensis; the remainder in the same hand, with the signature.

"'I have one remark to make, which you will see to apply to much 'of what I have written to you by this conveyance. I am not writing
'for myself, but for others; and am therefore obliged to propose topics
'of consideration to you, which, but for this circumstance, I myself
'might have deemed superfluous, and might have saved you the trou'ble of answering. But I had time I could give you several reasons
'why the same truths will do more good coming from you than from me.
'I ever am, my dear Sir, your's very truly,

"'ZACHARY MACAULAY.'"

We make no comment whatever upon this very characteristic letter, but leave that for our readers to do. We cannot, however, help calling particular attention to the lines which express the facility of managing the British Government by SAVING THEM THE TROUBLE OF THINKING—if this be not philanthropy, the deuce is in it.

Now, it seems in a paper which we have not seen, that two letters have appeared denying that MR. MACAULAY is the exclusive shipper of goods to Sierra Leone, and moreover denying the history of the Gunpowder which Messrs. (we do not remember what) and REDMAN say they shipped on their own account, and that it "went off remarkably well."—(witty brokers, cutting a joke upon us.) Now to shew that with us all these histories of MR. ZACHARY MACAULAY did NOT originate, we will take leave to extract a portion of the preface before referred to.

"2. MR. MACAULAY says, 'I never had, nor could I have a mono-
'poly of the trade of Sierra Leone, nor any thing which approached 'to a monopoly of the trade. MR. VANNECK, MR. HAMILTON, and
'MR. NICOL testified, in the most unqualified terms, that nothing of 'monopoly either existed now or at any other time at Sierra Leone.' I never said MR. M. had a monopoly of the trade, because the law did not allow it: but though I did not state it before, I now do affirm, he had in 1807 what approached to it, and MESSRS. VANNECK, HAMILTON, and NICOL would say the same, and even declare that no person not possessed of large capital, could venture to ship articles from England to traders in the Colony, fearful of encountering not MR. MACAULAY'S competition, but HIS PERSECUTION. * * * * *

"As early as 1812, GOVERNOR MAXWELL (as he informed me) wrote to MR. WILBERFORCE, complaining of MR. MACAULAY'S exorbitant charges being very injurious to the colony, which could not have been necessary had there been really a free trade in existence.

"MR. MACAULAY then chooses a particular period, and publishes a list of seventy-eight vessels which had landed goods at Sierra Leone in thirteen months. In this list he includes all the captured ships (with or without slaves) that had landed prize goods, the government, and other little colonial vessels that carry articles for barter, or convey provisions from the adjoining rivers, and all the vessels that touch at the colony, going up and down the coast for water, for wood, and to sell or exchange a little tobacco, rum, flour, hams, cheese, &c. &c. for any trifling articles they may want on board; and thus MR. MACAULAY would induce the public to believe from this list of vessels, and his own comment, that he has only one thirteenth part of the trade; whereas, as I have before stated, he has nearly the whole, and is the only person who has regular ships trading from England to Sierra Leone.

"MR. GEORGE FRAZER, of Commercial-Buildings, has sent out some articles to GOVERNOR MAXWELL and MR. CARR, two or three times. MR. NICOL, of Austin Friars, shipped some goods to MR. CARR once. MR. STOKES, of Throgmorton-street, has sent out articles once to MR. NICOL. MR. ALLEN, of Plough-court, sent a few things to the poor black settlers. An adventurer may sometimes stop at Sierra Leone with dry goods, &c. Wine, in small quantities, will occasionally come from Teneriffe; but except some large cargoes condemned in the colony (which can have nothing to do with the regular trade of the place) MR. MACAULAY has landed ten times as much from one ship as all the others. Nevertheless, this gentleman having obtained a return from his relation, who is collector of the customs at Sierra Leone, makes this delusive display, to avoid the appearance of engrossing the trade, in the same way as he had done in the "African Institution Report" of February last, to prove the captured Negroes were properly disposed of, by a similar sort of return from the same relation, in his capacity of superintendant of captured negroes.

"The next thing to be noticed, is a return from the same person in the same way, of 41 vessels trying to produce from the Colony, as if the Colony itself produced any thing but a few bags of coffee for Governor MAXWELL, and a few bags of cotton for MR. Kenneth Macaulay, from the appropriation of the unrewarded labour of the captured slaves.

"MR. MACAULAY asserts, 'that he is simply indebted to himself for 'whatever part of the Sierra Leone trade he enjoys; and that his suc'cess was certainly impeded, instead of being promoted, by his situa'tion of Secretary to the Institution.' He makes this assertion publicly, when it is notorious that every enclument he derived at Sierra Leone was from his connexion, first with the Sierra Leone Company, and afterwards from the same old interest in the African Institution, keeping him pre-eminent.

"Did not the Company bring him into notice at Sierra Leone?—Did not the Company send him out as Governor?—Did not his situation under the Company open his trade in the Coleny, and create his authority over subsequent Governors and all descriptions of persons there?—Did not his influence with the Directors of the Company introduce him to every official department in London, and to all those eminent persons about whom he familiarly writes, that he 'has asso'ciated with for eight years.'!!

"MR. MACAULAY speaks of the extensive commercial concerns in which he is at present engaged, and even complains how much his private concerns had suffered from his attention to the Institution; yet it is acknowledged that he had no trade until he connected himself with the Company, and he allows that he ought not to have traded to Sierra Leone until the Company ceased to trade in 1807. It is not less manifest that his obtaining the same power over the Directors of the Institution, which his connexion with the Company procured him, has extended his trade with the Colony tenfold, for he had little or none (as I learn from good authority) until 1808: yet he tells us he is solely indebted to himself, reiterates his gratuitous services to the Institution, and complains of his losses and trouble from his disinterested efforts for Africa, although nearly all he possesses he obtained by the one, and never did any thing beneficial for the other."

The preface continues at great length, to reply to an answer of MR. MACAULAY'S; we think it right for many reasons to select a few more passages.

"After MR. MACAULAY, by applications at public departments, has positive information of the men of war that are to go to Sierra Leone, and how long they are to remain, he then makes his calculations upon provisions and agency. So happily does he adjust these matters, that when his Majesty's ship Crocodile sailed for Sierra Leone, he dispatched a ship, at the same time, full of stores and provisions for her supply, which it would have been unfriendly in her Commander to have carried in the Crocodile."

MR. MACAULAY says:—

"DR. THORPE affirms, that 'I have provided for myself, my re-
'tives and friends.' I (replies DR. THORPE) have pointed out how well he has provided for himself, and have given his own acknowledgment that he would probably have accepted the King's Agency at Sierra Leone, as I mentioned in his arrangement of offices. As to his relations—on my landing in the Colony, I found his brother, MR. A. MACAULAY paramount; his cousins in the offices of Secretary of the Colony, Superintendant of captured slaves, Government writers, &c. &c. with several black MACAULAY'S in office; and as to his friends, I only beg leave to remark, that it is not the custom to recommend unfriendly persons to lucrative employments. I therefore presumed they were his friends.

"MR. MACAULAY says, 'the falsehood of this charge in all its parts
'may be easily ascertained; my communications with Government
'have been almost exclusively on public questions.' He then mentions two instances that affected his private interest. I reserve these must be to my feelings I must mention others. When MR. MACAULAY induced the Board of Trade to controul the quantity of gunpowder to be shipped for Africa, was it exclusively for the public interest that he prevailed on the Board to allow a large quantity of gunpowder to be sent out at the same instant by himself, to the exclusion of others who applied? Is it exclusively for the public interest that he is so active about African convoys, inducing them to be ordered or detained for his own convenience? So that when a merchant in London inquires when a convoy will sail for Africa, he is referred to MR. MACAULAY. Is it exclusively for the public service that many respectable merchants vessels are detained, till MR. MACAULAY'S ships are ready to sail? And all this when he wishes to prove from his list of vessels, that he has not a twelfth part of the trade even to Sierra Leone."

Upon the vital, touching, trying question of MR. MACAULAY'S public conduct on the Slave Trade ABOLITION—not the abolition of slavery—but of the Slave Trade, we perceive the following remarks—

"When the English trade for Slaves was stopped, fewer vessels naturally went to the coast with British goods, therefore MR. MACAULAY had fewer competitors in the market. When the native chiefs were not supplied in their own territories by the open Slave Trader, they sent to Sierra Leone—a great advantage to MR. MACAULAY'S trade. When England abolished the Slave Trade, it caused a part of the British navy to be stationed at Sierra Leone, and to rendezvous where the Vice Admiralty Court was established. The captured slave ships were consequently brought there, and MR. MACAULAY became Agent for Prizes; he also supplied the navy with provisions and stores, &c. &c. These were the great sources of his wealth. This would not have been the case had there been an universal Abolition, or if the Slave Trade had been universally followed.

"I cannot investigate motives. I cannot dive into the mind of man, and fathom the secrets of the heart. I can only judge from actions. I see effects, and endeavour to trace out their causes."

DOCTOR THORPE proceeds to say that he believes all MR. MACAULAY'S acts to have been purely mercantile. The following is a curious anecdote respecting MR. GRANVILLE SHARPE, with whose views MR. MACAULAY perpetually expresses his perfect accordance.

"After I had introduced the Hon. MRS. FORBES, (who had resided many years with her husband on the coast of Africa), to MR. SHARPE, when speaking of the information that lady had communicated, he assured me he knew the Directors had been long deceived; and under great agitation of mind informed me, that MR. MACAULAY HAD PROPOSED TO INCREASE THE POPULATION OF SIERRA LEONE, BY PURCHASING SLAVES, AND PLACING THEM IN THE COLONY, then wi'h great fervour he exclaimed—'It would have been carried, had not THOMAS CLARKSON 'and GEORGE HARRISON strenuously supported me.'"

We are unable to continue our extracts, or make any observations upon those already made, for want of room; but we think it fair to MR. MACAULAY to say that since their publication things are very much altered—his shipments have become more moderate, and having amassed much wealth he has devoted his attention to the East India Trade, and has shewn himself an active advocate for the measure of reducing the duties upon Oriental Sugars—a measure, which, however favourable to the monarchs of Leadenhall-street, would add another to the already overpowering evils which oppress the West Indian Planter—the quackery of the advocacy of this measure, not in MR. MACAULAY only, but in all its supporters, we shall expose in glowing colours whenever the subject is again agitated.

It happens to have come to our knowledge, however, that MR. MACAULAY continues at every favourable opportunity his attentions to Sierra Leone—his brother—(and in due season we shall prepare a pleasing edition of INKLE AND YARICO for the edification of the world) his brother, MR. KENNETH MACAULAY, who has been on a visit here, left England in the HERALD, 234 tons, PIHIE Master, laden entirely by MR. MACAULAY—and we again ask—where is the harm of that?—again we answer none—all we say is, that it is TRADING and not SANCTITY.

We are unwillingly compelled to quit the subject which in vindication of ourselves from any unworthy motives, we have been obliged to extend to an unusual length—we shall resume it next Sunday in order to display the general utility of the labours of the African Society in a moral sense.

IN the report of law proceedings published in the TIMES newspaper, in the matter of LORD HARBOROUGH and LIEUT. GRAHAM of the Navy, Mr. BROUGHAM, the barrister, is made to say, that he knows the affidavit of the latter to be made up of "inventions."

We really cannot exactly understand the limits which custom has placed to the irresponsibility of Lawyers in Courts, and Members of Parliament in the House of Commons; but we think when the hired advocate of LORD HARBOROUGH may with safety denounce an Officer in HIS MAJESTY'S service, as having spoken falsehoods and sworn to them, it becomes every man who is really an advocate for freedom, and the rights of Englishmen, to enquire upon what occasion an Englishman may presume to turn upon a calumniator whose vindictiveness and scurrility have not even the merit of principle to support them, and who for a guinea previously sent him, would have been ready to cast a similar imputation upon the LORD, whose rank and title he so democratically brought into play upon the occasion in question.

What advantage MR. BROUGHAM may expect to gain by such intemperate language we cannot pretend to say; but we put it to his candour as a man of spirit and a man of honour, whether it is fair to stigmatize so vehemently and decidedly in his absence, an officer in the service of his country who appears only to have done his duty, merely because his opponent happens to be a Lord. If any man dared to give MR. BROUGHAM the lie publicly, what would MR. BROUGHAM do?—we know.

"OF two evils choose the lesser," is an old saying about to be verified in Lincolnshire, where SIR W. INGILBY is beating SIR JOHN THEROLD to his hearts content.

The present LORD YARBOROUGH, whose elevation to the

* These accumulated sources of wealth arise evidently from the present state of the abolition; was an universal abolition effected, or the slave trade universally permitted, it is obvious they must cease: what follows?"

passage by the death of his noble and highly-respected father, has vacated the seat for the county, is the friend of SIR WILLIAM IGNILBY, who, like his lordship, is a fair, honest, opposition man, a gentlemanly WHIG.—SIR JOHN THOROLD is a rabidly radical, supported by MR. WELLS, the Huntingdon Attorney.

The state of the Poll is perfectly decisive, and no doubt can be entertained of the result; indeed who could have doubted that when the county had rejected poor HERON on the canvass, it would throw out his deputy and nominee on the poll.

The only droll thing which has occurred, is a brief correspondence between this WELLS and THOROLD. THOROLD, first before the election, writes a sort of coaxing letter to WELLS, and sends him, with the letter, half a buck!—this the attorney, who has no nose — for venison — returns, declines it, and says that his enemies would make a handle of it if he took it—adding, that "Cæsar's wife should not be suspected" at election time.

Only conceive, MR. WELLS, the attorney, being CÆSAR'S wife—he has already gotten the name of MRS. CÆSAR with all the Lincolnshire Whig-wags, who, to do them justice, appear to have a sovereign contempt for the radical opponent of honourable feeling and gentlemanly independence.

To shew that we do not "reckon without our host," we have only to record the state of the poll on Thursday evening, and the speech of MR. WELLS, its reception, and his consequent retirement from Lincoln.

At first, the numbers were—

INGILBY	851
THOROLD	517
Gross Majority	334
Majority on that day's poll ..	229

And now we extract from a party journal the following report of the speech of MR. WELLS, CÆSAR'S wife, the principal supporter of SIR JOHN THOROLD, and who would not accept his venison.—

"MR. WELLS (of Huntingdon) next addressed the Freeholders.—Gentlemen, you are all aware that there is a very large building carrying on in this yard, (they are enlarging the prison.) When I was a few days ago the respectable Magistrate who superintends the work, I asked him if he intended to make one part a Lunatic Asylum? [Loud hisses, and cries of 'for you, is it?' The music here struck up, and a great part of the crowd moved off with the different parties.] The Magistrate replied in the negative, upon which I told him that the issue of this contest would require the erection of such a building [loud hisses and groans.] Gentlemen, those who are paid for raising a clamour do not wish to hear the truth. If the present contest ends in the election of SIR J. THOROLD, as I hope and trust it will, then nine-tenths of the freeholders will go mad for joy, and of course a Lunatic asylum will become necessary; but should the Yorkshire baronet, Sir W. INGILBY, be elected, then nine-tenths of the freeholders will become melancholy mad, and a lunatic asylum will be equally necessary [hisses.] Gentlemen, the Honourable Yorkshire Baronet has told you that he is opposed to a body without a head. I will tell that Hon. Bart. what body he is opposed to. He is opposed to the whole of the independent freeholders of the county of Lincoln—to a set of men who are determined to send him back to Yorkshire disappointed and disgraced [applause and loud hisses.] I understand the Hon. Bart. has taken objections to me personally—he ought not to object so much to me, for I am not half so likely as many others to 'smell a rat.' (MR. W. has lost part of his nose) [a laugh.] But had I possessed in one part of my head what I want in another, the Hon. Bart. would not dislike me so much. Had my ears been a little longer, he might like me the better, for I am told the Hon. Baronet hates a patriot, but likes a donkey. [loud hisses, and cries of 'this is disgraceful!' &c.] The Hon. Baronet it appears, is at war with me, but I beg to assure him that I am not at war with him, although he has been good enough to exhibit several caricatures of me. I stand here the independent advocate of the rights and interests of the Freeholders of this county, aye, and of the People of England, and I regard not obloquy [a man in the crowd said, 'hold thy tongue man, here's a halfpenny for thee, and go home.'] MR. WELLS (taking the halfpenny) 'I thank you, Sir.' Gentlemen, my Lord YARBOROUGH has sent us by his steward, a halfpenny to support our cause. [To the farmer] Have you any more to give Sir? [The farmer, 'Yes, here's another halfpenny for thee, and hold thy tongue.'] MR. WELLS, taking the halfpenny, 'I thank you, Sir.' Gentlemen, we have got a penny from my LORD YARBOROUGH; have you any more to give, Sir? [A person in the crowd, 'Here's a button for you, you are worth a crown.'] Gentlemen, so long as the noble spirit which Lincoln has manifested on this occasion exists, so long will I stand forward to animate, to invigorate, and to direct that spirit, and render it so far as in my power effective. No threats, no ridicule, no derision shall daunt or dismay me. I know I have an honest cause to support, and therefore I look only to the means of achieving its success. My principal object is, if possible, to reduce the enormous, the disgraceful expences attending county elections. I think it disgraceful to see freeholders—Englishmen, come into town and enquire "Where can I get a ticket? Where can I get a cockade or a ribbon?" To which the answer was, "go to the Black Boy, and you will get them." The five hundred and nineteen who voted for SIR J. THOROLD paid their own expences, while the 851 on the other side were in the situation I have just described. For myself, I would rather see SIR W. INGILBY receive 400 additional votes from men who paid their own expences, than one single vote at his own expence. Apropos of the Black Boy Inn, I believe the landlord kicked out SIR WILLIAM'S voters last night. [A Person in the crowd "And the Black Horse too"] nor would the "Black Horse" be rude by them. I hope SIR W. INGILBY will become a little more liberal, and not allow the respectable Freeholders of Lincolnshire to be treated with such indignity."

This description of the reception given to the leading Radical of the day by the PEOPLE, stated as it is in a Radical Morning Paper, is extremely diverting—but it will hardly be believed, that after dinner, on the same day in which this Gentleman had promised so "undauntedly to direct the spirit of Lincolnshire" (GOD help him!), he was induced to beat a retreat, being not sufficiently ARISTOCRATIC for the DEMOCRATS whose cause he was advocating—"Cæsar's wife" was very foolish in refusing the venison, he could not have been worse off if he had accepted it than he is now; besides, half a buck was a most harmless gift, inasmuch as whatever might have been said to a simple haunch, every man at a contested election is free to take a side—CÆSAR'S wife is a silly body.

OUR readers will perceive that SIR ROBERT WILSON has been degraded from the Sovereign Order of the Red Eagle of PRUSSIA. The POST and the TIMES, and those papers which have espoused the cause of this great personage, consider it an honour to be deprived of such Orders. This is very strange —the KING of PRUSSIA, who has expelled WILSON, is the same KING of PRUSSIA who conferred the Order upon him; and certainly if we may judge by the eagerness with which the Ex-General courted and sought such decorations, he did not consider the attainment to them a disgrace—SIR ROBERT however has still one or two foreign crosses left.

IT is with great regret we are obliged to delay our notice of the Rev. MR. GLEIG'S letter to SIR EDWARD KNATCHBULL on his acceptance of the office of President of a Branch Missionary Society at Maidstone,—the pamphlet is full of interesting matter, and contains the fullest exposure of the quackery of the Saints.

We were surprised upon enquiring into the subject, to find that the letter has been so long delayed—the meeting took place early in August—and we were still more surprised to find that SIR EDWARD KNATCHBULL did not preside over the meeting when it actually was holden.

The former is accounted for by the fact that the reverend writer was not, till very lately, aware that SIR EDWARD had consented to fill the office—the publication of such a letter at all under the circumstances of SIR EDWARD'S absence from the meeting is also accounted for by a reference to the cause of that absence, which was illness—the intention was the same, and as the acceptance of the office of President is the ground of the address, the fact that the chair, on the occasion named, was temporarily filled by my LORD TORRINGTON, makes no alteration in the leading feature of the case.

On Sunday next, without fail, we shall review the pamphlet, and lay many edifying extracts from it before the public.

SPANISH PATRIOTS.

WE copy the following from the TIMES of Friday:—

"Yesterday a Committee, composed of gentlemen of the first respectability, assembled at the British Hotel, Cockspur-street, for the purpose of promoting a subscription for the relief of those Spaniards who have been compelled to seek in this country an asylum from the vengeance of the restored Ferdinand. The committee, after consulting for some time as to the best means of effecting the object which they have in view, adjourned until Monday next. Colonel Jones, of the Grenadier Guards, who was in the Chair, received communications from Earl Spencer, and other distinguished individuals, approving of the proposed subscriptions, and expressing the strongest sympathy for the unfortunate Spaniards."

Nothing can be more noble than this design of subscribing, and nothing more respectable, we dare say, than the meeting —but might we ask what has been done with all the money the public have already subscribed to the Spanish cause?—nothing has been done in Spain with it, that we can perceive, and we must say a small sketch of an account of receipts and disbursements would be a very acceptable document.

There has also been a subscription for the GREEKS—a little statement of the disposition of those funds would be pleasant; and there is thirdly, a subscription for a Cenotaph to her late Royal Highness PRINCESS CHARLOTTE—and a fourth, for MR. WYATT'S Statue of his late MAJESTY GEORGE III.—and a fifth for some plate which was to have been presented to the late QUEEN CAROLINE—and a sixth for SHERIFF PARKINS'S Hackney Coachman. We have no desire to check the charitable inclinations of any persons disposed to relieve the revolutionary refugees—but as far as the other affairs which we have just named go, the smallest information will be most thankfully received.

WE are authorised to contradict the report (which appeared in this paper of Sunday, the 16th inst.) that his Royal Highness PRINCE LEOPOLD had kindly and charitably contributed fifty pounds to the subscription for the poor inhabitants of HOF, who are reduced to the greatest distress by a conflagration which took place recently in that town—the statement was at all events premature.

WE have received a letter from a MR. JONES, the author of a poem called the "Fall of Constantinople," which he sent to the "ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE," as a candidate for the prize announced by that body.

Every body knows that the KING is, and ever has been, the most munificent patron of the Arts and Belles Lettres, and while his splendid donations of LIBRARIES and PICTURES bespeak the extent of his liberality to the nation, his patronage of all societies and institutions for the furtherance of science, the dissemination of knowledge, and the amendment of the national taste, marks his gracious care and condescension.

With the name of our beloved SOVERHIGN the Society of Literature is honoured—that society which offered for the best poem on the subject of the Fall of Constantinople, a premium of fifty guineas.

For this reward MR. JONES was one of the sanguine competitors, and if his poem had been rejected upon fair grounds, we should never have mentioned the circumstance, because we do not mean to criticise his work, and because, let the accusation of intriguing and influence have been what they might, we certainly should not have interfered between a disappointed author and a constituted board, to whom we should for every reason have felt inclined to allow judgment and independence; but MR. JONES states a case which calls for explanation, and we therefore take up the subject, in order that it may meet that eye which paternally and graciously watches the public interests, and that the name of MAJESTY may not be subjected to any illiberal observations from the conduct of a body favoured with its patronage, which really, from MR. JONES'S shewing, does appear perfectly inexplicable.

MR. JONES says this:—

"The Society was desirous of being provided with a Dissertation upon HOMER, an Essay on the Greek language, and a Poem on the Fall of Constantinople. In order, therefore, to command perfection, and exalt our literary fame, it made proclamation, that to the authors of the best Dissertation upon HOMER, the best Essay on the Greek language, and the best Poem on the Fall of Constantinople, it would award, in exchange, certain valuable considerations. Now, the moment compositions on these specified subjects were furnished by the literary world, the covenant was entered into—the compact was ratified—the bargain was struck. Nothing, then, either more or less, remained for the Society to perform, than to make, with the best grace of which it was capable, the stipulated awards. Had all the productions been execrable, still it could not justly have escaped from the self-imposed obligation of distinguishing with its prizes the Flowers of the Flock—the Master-Thistles—the best of an execrable Collection!

"The question, whether a certain degree of goodness was not a condition, of course, must be answered in the negative—for it is so answered, and in the superlative degree too, in the unreserved and definite proposals of the Society itself. Bad as the best compositions might be, the best compositions were, without qualification, promised the prizes. Whoever might hope to defend the conduct of the Society, by arguing that it would have been disgraceful in it to have rewarded bad productions, should be admonished, to his discomfiture, that the disgrace attaches to the miserable contriving, which ultimately reduced the Society to a choice between the evils of forfeiting its good faith, or bestowing rewards on unworthy objects."

MR. JONES proceeds in his preface, (whence we make this extract, or rather whence MR. JONES who forwards it to us makes this extract,) to speak in stronger terms than any less ill used person, than an enraged poet would perhaps select in describing the affair, and then very properly makes the following explanation:—

"After having, in a sense, involved men who would start with indignation did they know the real state of the case, in the perpetration of an inhuman and public fraud, I should think myself inexcusably negligent, did I not take especial pains to exempt them from the charge of any intentional or avoidable implication in so disgraceful a transaction. Though of political principles far different from those of the noble head of the house of Lansdown, who stands first on the list of the Society's council, I have that perfect conviction of the integrity, magnanimity, and keen sense of honour, which he shares in common with such men as my LORD GRENVILLE, and other well known individuals, whose names appear in this list, that I should deem myself a heretic to make any scruple of prudence in avowing, that I cannot involve them in the accusation of having been privy to, or consenting in, the clumsy fraud of which the Society has been guilty. Such men will thank me for my remarks, as they will put them on their guard for the future, and shew them the necessity under which they lie, of either withdrawing their names from the Society, or providing against any evil implication for the time to come, by remodelling its operative machinery, and, henceforth, keeping an eye, for their own sakes, on all its proceedings.

"If the Royal Society of Literature require, in but a subordinate degree, the good opinion of the public, it cannot proceed in its course, under the present guidance—shall an incapable and mischievous Quorum continue to possess the active and influential management of its concerns, after having committed literary treason against the Sovereign! after having associated his Name with doings that have called down the indignation, and contempt, and derision of the nation? —This is not the first time I have paid my tribute of respect to the character and acquirements of our illustrious King;—I shall not be harged with disrespect towards his Name, in my strictures upon the misconduct of a Society, peculiarly under his patronage; for the whole bent of those strictures tend to make manifest my regret, that a condescension, which was the offspring of a genuine zeal for the intellectual advancement of his people, and a munificence which was truly regal, had been woefully abused; it tends to prove my anxiety, they should be abused no longer."

We know literally nothing of the case beyond what is here displayed by MR. JONES. But we are most anxious to know more, and shall be happy and proud, to publish any statement or vindication of the Society which it may think proper to put forth in answer to this violent accusation of breach of faith. We have read portions of the poem, and distinctly state that it is too good to be dismissed with the herd, as being too bad for consideration.

In conclusion, since JONES is a commonish name, and is moreover borne by many talented persons, it may be necessary to distinguish the aggrieved gentleman in the present case by his christian name. Every body knows the story of the Freshman who went to wine with MR. JONES, of JESUS—never having been at his rooms, or even to his college, when he accepted his invitation, he asked the porter which were MR. JONES'S rooms?—"MR. JONES!" said the Porter—"there are thirty-eight MR. JONES'S in College—what is his christian name?"—"WILLIAM," said the Freshman.—"Dear me," replied the porter, "there are nineteen WILLIAM JONES'S up, at this moment."—"That is extremely awkward," muttered the under graduate—"very awkward indeed, for I am engaged to wine with my friend, Sir."

"Oh, wine," cried the Janitor, "that alters the case, there's only one MR. JONES in the College who drinks wine—that's the staircase, Sir."

Everybody, when they hear that MR. JONES has been writing a poem, and is rowing the Royal Society of Literature, will immediately ask what MR. JONES it is? When we tell him that his Christian name is JACOB, they will at once discover him, for, of all the MR. JONESES who are "up"—there can be but one whose name happens to be JACOB.

WE have received an incalculably long account of an elopement, of which (we may be wrong) we do not believe one word, and at all events we have no room for such a detail.

As on Sunday next we shall have occasion to display the prevalent quackery of methodism in various instances, we shall not enlarge here upon a subject which has given us at once a feeling of sorrow and disgust. We mean the publication in the newspapers of a letter said to have been written by SMITH, one of the unhappy persons who were executed on Wednesday, which, together with the account of his last moments, is, indeed, a terrible specimen of the blasphemous misuse of religious terms and holy words, which distinguishes the whole class of ranters and pervades all their transactions.

The person in question was attended by a MR. BAKER, and a namesake of his own, the Rev. MR. SMITH, (by whom ordained we know not) late a boatswain, we believe, in the navy, and now gambierized into a Bethel-union preacher:— we extract the circular account sent to the papers of the proceedings on the day previous to the execution.

"Yesterday morning, a little before 6 o'clock, they were brought from their sleeping apartments, and conveyed to the large room, where they were joined by the Rev. Gentleman before named. When he entered the room, Smith was engaged in fervent prayer, and the reverential awe which he appeared to feel, and the energetic language he used, would not have disgraced the pulpit of the most popular preacher. This ended, he rose, and saluted his spiritual visitants, and proceeded to relate, in a firm tone of voice, the feelings of his mind, and expressed his hope that all was right within—yet he lamented that he did not feel more—fearing that the eternal quietude of his mind might arise from an improper source. "I (said he) I feel a something which cannot be of human origin." After spiritual advice and caution had been given by the Ordinary and his attendants, the Rev. G. C. Smith offered an invocation to Heaven on their behalf in language of sublime eloquence. After which Mr. Baker gave out an hymn, No. 72, Jones' Supplement, from which Crisp had aforetime expressed himself to have received consolation. They all sang in an audible voice, particularly the following verse:—

> "The lofty triumph of my soul
> Shall teach itself out-brave;
> Leave dull mortality behind,
> And fly beyond the grave."

Scott and Smith then entered into free conversation with their spiritual advisers. Smith observed, "I acknowledge the justice of my sentence, but I am a murdered man, and I hope I shall be the last the Bank will cause to ascend the scaffold."

Why such nonsense is printed the ignorant parties interested in such a display of their own exertions alone can tell—a man murdered by a just sentence!—but let us go on.

The following is printed as a letter written by the culprit at six o'clock in the morning of the execution to his fellow prisoners:—

"My dear Friends and Fellow-sufferers,

I take my last farewell of you all—I am happy, and so are all—I trust we are going to glory—our feelings are greater than we can express—I trust you who have obtained mercy will not abuse it. Listen to the voice of conscience —do not take conviction for conversion, but ever cleave to that which is good. Piece vice for heaven's sake—leave off swearing—read the 107th psalm, and meditate on it. Pray heartily for the Holy Spirit to direct your lives. You are going into the world again, pray take the advice of a dying man, and read you Bibles, and regulate your conduct thereby. O! had you but listened to the admonitions of Mr. B. how much better would you have been; with what comfort could you have looked back on the many precious truths he has told us—what consolation they afford you in your ensuing trials! Hear a word from a dying man, 'I am happy.' Do thou be happy, but seek it from the right quarter, that is from the Bible; be much in prayer, and particularly in secret prayer, and God will hear you. He has, I believe, heard a wicked sinner like myself, and I am sure he will hear you. What should we have done if it had not been for Mr. D——; he opened the gospel truths to my soul, which I hope will be the saving of it to bliss eternal. I feel happy, and so do we all (this part of the letter was written rather later than the former)—and I hope it's on a right foundation. Nature shrinks, but that we cannot help. O listen to the Gospel's joyful sound! and may God bless you all! I hope Mr. B. will ever attend the prisoners in this place—and I hope he will be spared yet many years, for he is a valuable instructor in the hands of God.

Let our readers mark this passage—the wretched man on the verge of eternity is made, (that is, if he wrote the letter,) to withdraw his thoughts from heavenly things to compliment MR. BAKER, and to secure him employment in the prison.

"I have sent you a few tracts, and I trust you will read them. O ever read your Bibles, for it is a bitter thing to sin against God. Seek an interest in the precious blood of Christ, for 'he will save to the uttermost all that come unto God by him.' Farewell, my dear friends, farewell! Before you receive this, I hope and trust I shall be so glory." J. SMITH.

"P.S. I would have wrote more, but my time is short—adieu.—Now, my dear friends, on the brink of eternity I charge you, I entreat you to consider your ways; let my dying lips prevail with you all to kneel before God and beg for mercy—adieu—farewell!"

Now we ask, whether there is any evidence in this letter of that inward repentance, that abstracted contrition which real, humble, and sincere devotion would inspire?—No—it is a shameful libel upon religion, got up, like all the other manœuvres of Methodism, and full of pretension and quackery—it is extremely disgusting, and calculated to do the cause of religion more harm than good—we abstain from saying more until our next number.

SPEECH OF MR. HAMDEN,

"The regulation to which I am next to advert, will help to illustrate this remark. It is a regulation which could have proceeded only from a legislator, who is not himself subject to the law. Speaking of those countries where the people have a voice in framing their laws, it has been justly said, 'Les loix sont toujours douces, parceque celui qui les établit s'y soumet.' Of course you will understand, gentlemen, that I allude to the book which is to be kept for the purpose of registering the offences and punishments which may take place on the Estate, and to which the master or overseer is to swear, quarterly, before a magistrate. I have oftened sickened at my humiliation as a Colonist; but this makes every other degradation I have experienced appear as nothing. Is it possible, that any honourable man can submit to this debasement? 'Penal laws are to check the arm of wickedness, but not to wage war with the natural sentiments of the heart.'* The vile wretch who has already compromised the dignity of virtue, and made terms with a guilty conscience, will not feel himself degraded by this quarterly purgation. But can it be supposed that any honourable man, proud in the consciousness of deserving the applause of men, and the approbation of heaven, will endure to be sent quarterly to a magistrate, stained with the imputation of guilt, there to make oath that he has not been acting the part of a monster and brute during the last three months? Hear the words, I would almost say of something more than human wisdom, (you will allow me to take the book, for nature has not gifted me with a ready memory,) "Let us," says the immortal MONTESQUIEU, "follow nature, which has given shame to man as his scourge; and let the heaviest part of the punishment be the infamy attending it." And he goes on—"But if there be some countries where shame is not a consequence of punishment, this must be owing to tyranny, which has inflicted the same pudishments on villains and honest men." When we all of us, without distinction, the honest man no less than the villain, carry about with us the odium of being a brute and a savage—which this regulation would fix upon every slave owner indiscriminately, the sense of shame will indeed no longer be a scourge. We shall all appear infamous alike; and many a violent man who dares not expose himself to the execration of the community, and the infamy which now attaches upon every act of barbarity, will, when restrained by no check but the penalties of law, contrive by ingenious expedients, to evade the most curiously contrived machinery of oaths and inquisition.

'Harsh laws are always impotent. They will be evaded.

'Et magis valebunt ingeniorum acumina, quam legis auctoritas.'

BACON.

This will ever be the case, not only when laws are harsh, but when they are not adapted to the genius and manners of the people. And LORD BATHURST, I think, will not deny that a system of Government not free from defects, but under which the people are contented and happy, is infinitely preferable to the most perfect Utopian system that is not in accordance with the habits and manners of the people. And how can he know what is adapted to the manners and sentiments of these colonies? SOLON being asked whether the laws he had given to the Athenians were the best, replied, 'they are the best they can bear; and divine wisdom said to the Jews, 'I have given you precepts which are not good'—that is, not good in themselves, but convenient for you, in deference to habits and prejudices. In casting my eye over the concluding part of that paragraph of the despatch which is now under consideration, a word strikes me which I cannot help remarking. When the person of a slave shall exhibit recent marks of flogging or 'mutilation.' The use of this word may serve to show what are LORD BATHURST'S notions of our punishments; and may help to account for the extreme severity of the discipline to which he would subject us. I could assure his Lordship, that the mutilation of a fellow-creature excites no greater horror in his mind than in the mind of every respectable slave-owner of this country; and as to the marks of flogging, the expression forces upon me a comparison which I hesitate to make—a comparison of our punishments with the punishments of the army and navy. I am informed that it is a constant rule that the soldier who receives a flogging is taken from the halberts to the hospital—the punishments being always administered with that degree of severity which renders surgical aid necessary. Now, Gentlemen, will you forgive me if I ask you, if you ever suffered such a punishment to be given on your estates as to render it necessary that the culprit should be confined to his room or his bed for one day? Are you not extremely annoyed if even one stripe more severe than the others shall happen to have broken the skin? And are the effects of ordinary punishments visible on the person two days after they have been administered? For myself, I declare before heaven, I have now given a faithful description of punishments on my estate; and I conscientiously believe, that among owners throughout the island, with very few exceptions, they are on the same moderate scale. Yet, as I have before said, there are, no doubt, a few brutes among us—thank God! a very few, I believe. But we must take care, if we cannot restrain the ferocity of such men, to provide suitable scourges for them by law. The last subject of regulation adverted to in the Despatch, relates to the means of ensuring to the slave what property he may have acquired. As I never in my life heard a single instance in which the property of a slave was invaded by the master, I do not feel very solicitous about it; but, of course, I would not oppose any regulation for more effectually securing the peculium of the slave."

"We have now arrived at the most serious, I would almost say awful, part of the Despatch. In the concluding paragraph we are given to understand, that we must not presume to exercise any judgment or discretion in matters involving, not our most important interests only, but our very existence. The edict has gone forth, and woe be to him who hesitates to obey it. The words are these—'And if (what I am unwilling to imagine) you should meet with any serious opposition, you will lose no time in transmitting to me the necessary communication, in order that I may take the earliest opportunity of laying the matter laid before Parliament, and submitting for their consideration such measures, as it may be fit to adopt in consequence.' Gentlemen, it would be insulting your understandings to expatiate upon the evil consequences that must result from a system of foreign legislation. Every school-boy knows that oppression, injustice, and ruin must be the fate of those who live under a system of government, where the governor resides three or four thousand miles removed from the theatre of their operations; and where, as it has been said in the late Report of your Committee, 'Calumny would supply the place of observation, and speculation usurp the province of experience.' If I wanted to give you proofs of these things, what need I do more than refer you back to this very Despatch which I hold in my hand. Take warning from this. There is not, I believe, in his Majesty's dominions a man who has less of what is called the spirit of radicalism in him, than I have. I consider the British Constitution the best in the world—the British people the happiest in the world. And great and powerful as is the influence of Government, I do not think that in the present state of things, with the enormous wealth which is diffused among the people, and the ardent spirit of liberty that pervades every class, the interests of the nation or the happiness of the people would be so well provided for, if the influence of Government was less. And, notwithstanding the clamour there is in England about the corruption of Parliament, I doubt whether there ever was in the world a legislative assembly so much governed by reason and justice. But do not let us delude ourselves with the notion, that the interests of the Colonies would be effectually protected and provided for, by the British Parliament, should they undertake to legislate for us. The influence of Ministers is notoriously sufficient to insure the sanction of Parliament to most measures which they propose. But, then, when the matters relate to Great Britain herself, Parliament has ample means of being informed of the premises, and therefore is fully competent to judge of the expediency, and tendency, of the measures proposed. Their own interests are immediately implicated, and the Minister, in deference to the integrity of Parliament, does not venture to put their pliability to too severe a trial. The case is widely different in reference to the Colonies. The knowledge which Members of Parliament can obtain upon these subjects, is necessarily imperfect, and generally derived from corrupt sources. An honest assembly forming their judgments on the representations of West India society, given by MESSRS. WILBERFORCE, MACAULAY, STEPHEN, and BUXTON, could not do less than bind us in chains of iron. But I believe the more conscientious and enlightened Members of Parliament, begin to have their suspicions of this junta, and hesitate to sacrifice the lives and properties of their fellow-subjects on information resting upon such authority. Nevertheless, this very class of Members, diffident in themselves, and confiding in the more full and accurate knowledge of official persons, would, from honourable scruples, pin their faith on the Minister. The result of which would be, that although you are talked to about measures submitted to the consideration of Parliament, and made to believe that your interests are to have a fair and impartial examination there, the will of the Secretary for Colonies is your law—and you will live under the most absolute, unqualified despotism that ever crushed a suffering people. The good character of the individual who may happen to be at the head of your affairs, is no security for your rights. This is a broad maxim, which admits of no exception—that those who hold their rights at the will of an individual, have no rights at all. I anticipate much wit and many smart jokes, about the inconsistency of slave-owners talking of rights and liberties; but this is the clamour of ignorance: look to history, and you will there find that no nations in the world have been more jealous of their liberties than those amongst whom the institution of slavery existed. We still appeal to Greece and Rome for the brightest examples of patriotism, and in short, of all the nobler virtues. MR. BURKE has, with that profound, piercing insight into the sources of human actions for which he was so distinguished, most happily developed the causes of this fact, in his speech for conciliating the North American Colonies. But if it has been determined that Colonies are best governed by the strong arm of irresistible power, will not Englishmen have some tenderness for the habits and principles in which the present generation has been trained up? They will surely spare us at least; and in pity let them begin by closing the doors of their schools and their universities against our sons, and by prohibiting the exportation of English books and English newspapers to the colonies. Yet still I fear that the blood, which flows in their veins would boil until it burst asunder the chains of despotism. It is English blood. It has been beautifully said, 'An Englishman is the worst man on earth to argue another into slavery—his speech betrayeth him.'" This topic would lead me into a copious discussion, but it is time for me to conclude; and I shall only add that I hope I have not inflicted a parricidal wound on my country, by presuming to disobey this Despatch so far as to have raised the voice of remonstrance against the fiat of the Minister."

(To be concluded in our next.)

THEATRICALS.

IT is what the cocknies call quite refreshing to perceive any thing like good taste, and a desire to obtain legitimate approbation, now and then peep out in the midst of senseless pageantry and idle noise. The revival of "King John," at Covent Garden, whether we consider the splendour with which it has been got, the magnificence and propriety of the costume, or the excellence of the acting, deserves the highest praise; and we have little doubt, if the Covent Garden managers were to devote an equal share of pains and talent upon the other plays of the immortal bard, they would reap a plentiful and honourable harvest.

YOUNG in KING JOHN was extremely effective, his declamation is always beautiful, and we hardly ever remember to have seen him more ably avail himself of the opportunities afforded in this character of displaying his powerful talent than on Monday: to speak of CHARLES KEMBLE'S FAULCONBRIDGE is only to repeat the praises with which it has ever been rewarded; it is in truth a most powerful and admirable piece of acting—he never was more effective.

We were extremely happy to find that the favourite system of dressing up girls in men's clothes was, upon this occasion, broken in upon; and we were not, as heretofore, disgusted by the unnatural transformation of the sexes. We cannot particularly compliment the boy who performed the part of PRINCE, but we can compliment MRS. BARTLEY upon her CONSTANCE—it was an able and successful piece of acting, and evinced the full possession of those powers with which, as MISS SMITH, she formerly attracted the town. Upon the whole, the play affords a great treat to the lovers of its illustrious author and the drama in general, and, as we said in the beginning of this article, reflects the greatest credit upon the taste and liberality of the management.

MISS TREE is reported on the "recovery" list, and is to make her re-appearance in the ENGLISH FLEET—we look forward to this event with great pleasure.

We have received the following communication, to which we readily give a place:—

TO JOHN BULL.

MR. EDITOR—The uniform impartiality which you observe in that part of your paper devoted to the criticism of the drama, induces me to suggest an observation which I have frequently made as to the ill-arrangement of the music to the evening's performance. I do not allude to the operas which the two great theatres are in the habit of representing during the winter season, for to the music which is generally played between the acts of more serious pieces. I will cite but one instance among many others, in which I have been struck with this inconsistency, and I doubt not but you will agree with me that it is to be regretted that a defect, which might be so easily remedied, should so long have been countenanced in the two first English theatres.

On Saturday last the subject selected for the evening's performance was MOORE'S tragedy of "The Gamester," and certainly if it be desirable that the thread of the subject should be preserved as far as possible by the music which occupies the interval between each act, in no case do I think should a selection of more serious character have been chosen.—When I remind you that MOZART'S lively air of "Fin ch'han dal vino," formed a part of this selection, I flatter myself that you may be led to notice this subject on some future occasion; nor am I less confident that MR. BISHOP needs only some such suggestion to pay this attention to his department in the theatrical management.—I am, Sir, your obedient Servant, G. P. R.

London, Nov. 18, 1823.

WE insert the following letter, because it may be an act of justice. Our police report was copied from the daily papers—we ourselves know nothing of the transactions alluded to, nor of any of the parties concerned in them.

TO JOHN BULL.

Sir—I feel quite indignant to find in your report of the proceedings at Bow-Street on the 14th instant, under the head "Rex v. Kelly" after alluding to the Gambling House, you make Jackson state "that he went there for the purpose of seeing Kelly, to solicit the payment of a sum of money owing to him for goods sold and delivered to Kelly, who then protested that he had no money, but the witness remained in the room a short time and saw him engaged in playing hazard, when he repeatedly staked money."

Now, Sir, I beg to observe that Jackson alleged no such thing against me, and I will assert without fear of contradiction, that I not only do not, and never did, owe the man one farthing, but that I never at any period saw him. "I will be appeared as the prosecutor in this information—I trust, therefore, in justice to my own feelings that you will immediately recall this aspersion on my character as an officer and gentleman, through the same medium as you sent it forth to the public:—To be subject to such an information as the present, is quite annoying enough, without being exposed to the mortification of being solicited for payment at such a time and place for a sum of money said to be due to a perfect stranger by me—I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant,

WALDRON KELLY.

PRINCE HOHENLOHE, OR MIRACLES IN THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR,—The printed notification of which the following is a transcript, has for some time past been exposed for the inspection and edification of the disciples of popery, in a covered passage leading to the Romish chapel and Romish school in this town; which, as appears by that advertisement, is a depôt for the sale of that precious commodity yclept the miracles of PRINCE HOHENLOHE—a new code of superstition for the rising generation!—

"This day is published, price three-pence, an account of a miracle wrought by PRINCE DE HOHENLOHE, (PRIEST OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH) the 1*st August*. 1823, on MISS STUART, of the Convent of St. Joseph Ranelagh, who had been afflicted with sickness for four years and seven months. Communicated in a letter to the Clergy and Laity of Dublin, by the Right Rev. DR. DANIEL MURRAY," &c.

'To be had at this School.'

Had I not seen this document with my own eyes—had not daily accounts established the fact that the pretended miracles of PRINCE HOHENLOHE are received as orthodox by the Roman Catholic body, as "OBSTINATE INFALLIBILITY" would have opposed my belief in so extravagant a production of the enlightened age in which we live.

It is obvious, that the morbid constitution of Popery requires a renovation of its impaired energies by an exercise of empiricism which can deceive none except those who are absolutely priest-governed, and determined to remain dupes of the most degrading superstition.

True miracles are the most powerful evidences of a true religion. —Fraudulent miracles are the most damning proofs of a false religion. Living subjects may be more interesting objects of adoration than 'graven images'—I however entertain too favourable an opinion of the improved intellect of my countrymen, to believe, that the spacious Romish chapels constructing in this and other towns, will ever be filled by disciples of the old Romish superstition, or of the modern Romish superstition founded upon the delusive miracles of Prince Hohenlohe.

Christ selected as the dispensers of his miracles and other important purposes of his interesting mission, men in the humble walks of life—but nothing less than the miraculous agency of a Prince and Priest of the Romish Church, would harmonize with the aspiring policy and aristocratic constitution of the Roman hierarchy.

The governors of the Latin church see with alarming apprehensions, that within a comparatively short period, (since the glorious Reformation) the members of the reformed religion have multiplied with the astonishing number of FIFTY-SIX MILLIONS, which is nearly half the amount of the members of the whole Roman Catholic church in the known world; and they are aware that nothing less than the gigantic but perilous expedient, of introducing a SECOND MESSIAH, can shield their church from the scrutinizing eye of TRUTH, and the unerring genius of REFORM!!!—Yours, Sir, respectfully,

Author of a Defence of the Civil and Religious Constitution of Englishmen, A Defence of the Natural Character, &c. &c. &c.

THE NAVY AND SHIPPING GENERALLY.

The GLASGOW, 50, CAPT. B. C. DOYLE, arrived at Portsmouth 22d inst. She carried out SIR W. LUMLEY, K.C.B. and Commissioner BRIGGS, to Bermuda—21 days passage; left Bermuda 20th of October, with Commissioner LEWIS and family, on their way to Malta.

The SALISBURY, 60, ADMIRAL FANIE (CAPT. MAUDE), was expected at Bermuda the middle of this month.

The DOTTERELL, CAPT. HOPE, left Bermuda on the 21st October, for Halifax.

The ARDENT (hulk) laying off the Dock-yard, at Bermuda, is condemned to be broken up.

The JASPER, CAPT. ARBUTHNOT, was struck by a sea off Guernsey, which laid her on her beam ends, washed a boat from her quarter, and an anchor from her bow; she arrived at Portsmouth Tuesday, 19th October.

The CAMBRIDGE, 80, CAPT. MALING, is fitting for South America, at Chatham.

The VICTOR, 18, CAPT. PRICKETT, sailed on Monday for Plymouth.

The ARACHNE, 18, is ordered to be commissioned for foreign service.

The SAPPHO, 18, CAPT. JENKIN JONES, has sailed for the Cork station.

The PHAETON, 46, CAPT. STURT, was towed into Portsmouth harbour by the Comet, and went into Dock Wednesday.

The CYGNET and PLOVER brigs are to be commanded by Lieutenants on the packet service.

In the heavy gale of wind at Bengal—The ORACABESSA, CAPT. MICHAEL, totally lost, 36 of the crew landed at Kedgeree.—HELEN, ditto totally lost.—The LIVERPOOL, GREEN, Master, totally lost, only four of the crew saved.—The CATTAIR brig totally lost.

The ANTELOPE has sailed from Chatham with convicts, for Bermuda. The BRITOMART and ALACRITY had arrived at the Mauritius. The BENCOOLEN, SWALLOW, and HYTHE arrived safe at Bengal from London.

MAURITIUS, July 28.—The EMILY, COUPLAND, arrived here on the 21st inst. from Batavia—experienced a heavy gale near the Cape of Good Hope, sprung a leak, and has put in here for repairs. The CLYDESDALE left the Sand Heads 48 hours before the late gale, and is supposed out of danger.

We are informed that the French squadron, which the Pluton brought intelligence of being in the West Indies, has returned to the ports of France. Two razees and four frigates and sloops only were left at Martinique. Should SIR LAWRENCE HALSTED think it needful, the SUPERB, 74, will be detained in the West Indies, as his flag-ship, in which case SIR THOMAS STAINES, K.C.B. will take the command of the ISIS.

Admiral Sir J. H. Whitshed, K.C.B. is appointed President of the Court Martial ordered at Portsmouth on Captain Harris, C.B. of the Hussar. It is said the other Members of the Court will be formed from the following Officers should they not in the interim be ordered to sea:—Capt. the Hon. T. B. Capel, C.B., Royal George yacht; Capt. James Nash, Queen Charlotte; Captain Sir W. Hoste, Bart. K.C.B. Albion; Capt. H. E. P. Sturt, Phaeton; Capt. B. C. Doyle, Glasgow; Capt. Houston Stewart, Menai; Moses Greetham, Esq. Deputy Judge Advocate.

COWES, Nov. 24.—Arrived the Madeira Packet, Allen, from St. Thomas's; on 13th Sept. she met with a hurricane which upset the vessel while laying-to under storm foresail, and she lay on her broadside 25 minutes, but by cutting away her mast she righted; had five feet water in her hold; was obliged to throw over a part of her cargo of coffee, &c.

The PENROSE, from Westport to Liverpool, was driven on shore near Cambletown, during a gale on the 20th inst. and it is feared will be totally wrecked—as was also the FERDINAND, FINK, from London to Swinemunde, near Elsineur, on the 13th inst. The DIANNA, of Peterhead, has been run down off the Caskett, by the TRIUMPH, of Aberdeen. A boat, marked "CHARLES FINLAY, Kincardine," was picked up on the 24th inst. off the Needles.

It is said that Captain Parry is to be sent on another voyage of discovery, and the following have been sent to us as the details of the proposed expedition:—Captain Parry, in his first voyage, discovered, after entering Lancaster Sound, but did not explore, an opening which he called Prince Regent's Inlet—leaving that, which seemed to turn to the South West, on his left, he proceeded in a north westerly direction, and the body of Lancaster Sound not being then explored, this inlet was necessarily passed by. It has been resolved that this inlet shall now be examined. Capt. Parry is therefore to proceed the ensuing summer, in the Hecla, to Prince Regent's Inlet, and it is said he expects to succeed, if any where, in this direction. We doubt his success in any direction.

Captain W. Little, of the Maida, of this port, arrived from Minamichi, was examined on Saturday, (22d inst.) before the Magistrates here, charged with shooting a young man of the name of Mason, belonging to Dartmouth. The body of the young man was interred in the church-yard at Devonport on Saturday.—Hull Packet.

Wednesday last a Court of Directors was held at the East India House, when Captain EDWARD MAXWELL DANIELL was sworn in to the command of the ship Duchess of Athol, consigned to Bengal and China.

A most extraordinary fraud has been attempted upon the friends and family of the late CAPT. MACKENZIE, R.N., the particulars of which our readers will find under the head "Miscellaneous."

Arrived at Portsmouth, his Majesty's ship Redpole, CAPT. ANDERSON, from the Mediterranean; she is placed under quarantine.

PLYMOUTH, Nov. 25.—Wind West.—Arrived off the Port the Nile, Davidson, from Smyrna in 48 days; Hero, Day, from ditto; Peggy, Nicoll, from Labrador in 32 days; and Olive Branch, from Newfoundland in 25 days.

The ship Louisa, Fosdyke, arrived at Philadelphia 27th October, fell in with and took off the crew and passengers (20 in number) of the Duke of York, Taylor, from St. John's, New Brunswick, to Liverpool; she was hove on her beam-ends and water-logged in a hurricane on the 28th. The Captain, crew, and passengers were saved.

In the account of Capt. Parry's voyage, which has been published, it is mentioned, that the Esquimaux spoke the wrecks of two vessels lying to the northward of the expedition. No doubt they were the wrecks of the Aurora, of Hull; and the Dexterity, of Leith, whalers, which were lost some seasons since on the west coast of Baffin's Bay, to the southward of Lancaster Sound. Some of the wreck was seen this year, two or three miles inshore.—Aberdeen Chronicle.

DOVER, Nov. 26.—In the course of last night, a number of couriers charged with despatches, arrived from France, and set off immediately for London. Messengers from Naples and Spain have also arrived with despatches. Sailed his Majesty's packet Eclipse, Sherlock, to attend, with his Serene Highness the Duke of Weimar, and suite.

Saturday the remains of Capt. ADAM M'KENZIE, of his Majesty's ship Ocean, were interred at Stoke, with military honours. The procession moved from his late residence, in George-street, at half past eleven o'clock, followed by a long train of mourning coaches, private ...surgeons, and Naval Officers, and attended by a detachment of 300 ...Royal Marines.

...An American cutter, of 24 guns, boarded three British merchant-...men off the S.W. coast in the course of the last week, and after help-...ing himself to whatever they pleased in small arms, ammunition, ...duck, sail-cloth, and cordage, the privateer sheered off.

...The Right Hon. OSBORNE reigns from his seat at the Admiralty Board, ...in the room of the late Hon. KEITH DOUGLAS.

...Unsuccessful accounts received at Lloyd's on Thursday, of the losses off the ...American coast by the late gale have been serious, many vessels have ...been totally wrecked; among them was the Duke of York, bound ...from Liverpool to St. John's, N.B., which was completely lost.

...Mr. Croker arrived on Thursday at Portsmouth to attend the Court. ...It is understood here that Mr. Canning has sent a sworn deposition of ...the facts, as far as his evidence goes; stating, at the same time, the ...impossibility of personal attendance from a press of public business in ...London. The opinions of naval men are various as to the reception ...which such a document.

...In addition to the evidence offered at Plymouth, ...Mr. Turner, of the suite of Sir W. Thornton, will be heard ...before the next Court. Mr. Turner did not arrive in sufficient time ...for the former Court.

...The Amsterdam Dutch brig Courier, Capt. Lucas, belonging to ...the Treasury of the King of the Netherlands, arrived at this port from ...Helvoetsluis, on her way to the Mediterranean. It being customary with ...every particular nation to continue the old and friendly custom of salut-...ing the flag of the Port Admiral, on lowering her anchor she com-...menced firing her guns, when, unfortunately, the wadding of one of ...them struck the head of a waterman, who was close alongside, which ...killed him shortly after. His name is Marshall, of Gosport.

...Sir George Martin is named as the successor of our Port Admiral ...Sir G. Whitshed, with Mr. Triphook as his Secretary.

...Capt. Hardyman, C.B. is appointed to the Ocean, at Plymouth, in ...room of the deceased Capt. M'Kenzie.

...Orders are taken up in the river, Lieut. ..., to understand a few transports at one of them.

...Lieut. R.N. is appointed agent of one of them.

...Dover, Nov. 27.—Wind W.S.W.—Came down from the River and ...anchored in the Concord; Leith, for Pernambuco; also from Yarmouth, ...the Mary Crow, for the Mediterranean. Several vessels are coming ...down the River; names at present unknown.

...Portsmouth, Nov. 27.—Wind Southerly.—Arrived from the Downs, ...the Swiftsure, Woolwards, for Honduras; John, for Trieste; Reward, for Jamaica; ...and the Belle, for Lisbon.

...Plymouth, Nov. 26.—Arrived the Sandwich packet from Jamaica, ...which is ordered under quarantine, in consequence of the death of one of ...the crew, and a passenger being now ill.—The Nelson, Ellersley, from ...Jamaica, was boarded by two Spanish privateer boats, which took ...£1,000 dollars from the passengers; they also robbed the master, and ...left him in the mate.

...The Ann, of Dumbarton, from Archangel, was on shore near North ...Shields, 5th inst. without any person on board.

THE ARMY AND MILITARY MATTERS.

...There is no truth in the statement that our army is to be increased ...to the amount of ten thousand men. There is to be an addition to our ...military force, but nothing like the amount mentioned. The increase ...will be merely sufficient to replace the troops which are destined for ...the West India Colonies. This measure is rendered necessary, in ...consequence of the very low scale to which our military establishments ...have been reduced; so that any extra demand for troops, although it ...be only two or three regiments, leaves a positive deficiency in some ...part or which of the service.

...Major-General Darling, late Acting Governor of Mauritius, hav-...ing given over the government and military command of that colony ...to Sir Lowry Cole, arrived in London on Saturday se'nnight; the ...Major-General has been recently appointed Colonel of the 90th foot.

...The 53rd regiment of foot marched from Gosport on the 14th inst. ...and arrived at Weedon on the 24th.

...The 30th regiment of infantry marched from Weedon on the 13th ...inst. and arrived at Brighton on the 24th.

...We have to announce the death of General John Barclay, of the ...Royal Marines; he was appointed, on the 15th March, 1755, Second ...Lieutenant in the Royal Marines. He served from 1757 till 1759 in ...the Mediterranean, and was present, in 1760, at the siege of Belleisle. ...He was subsequently employed on an expedition to the coast of Africa; ...was present at the first relief of Gibraltar, at the attacks of Red Bank ...and Mud-Fort, in the Delaware, and at the capture of the Spanish Fleet, ...under Admiral Langara, and at the taking of Admiral de Grasse, in ...the West Indies.—His commission as First Lieutenant, was dated the ...4th July, 1758; as Captain, 14th October, 1762; as Major, by brevet, ...13th August, 1777; and Lieutenant-Colonel, 19th February, 1783. ...He was appointed Major in his corps the 24th Dec. 1791; Colonel, by ...brevet, 1st March, 1794; Lieutenant-Colonel in Marines, the 29th ...October, 1794; Second Colonel Commandant, 1st Feb. 1798; Colonel ...Commandant, 21st December, 1803; and Resident Field Officer of ...Chatham, the 25th September, 1806. He received the rank of Major-Gen. ...on the 3rd of May, 1796; of Lieut.-General, 25th September, 1803; ...of General, 4th June, 1813.—General Barclay was placed on the ...retired list, the 26th April, 1814.

...General Barclay's son is a Colonel in the army, and in the com-...mand of the 66th regiment, on service in India.

...It is said the 7th Royal Fusileers Regiment will shortly march into ...Portsmouth; at present there is not sufficient men to do the duty, and ...every day orders are expected to march detachments from the Provin-...cial Battalions to Gravesend for embarkation, to join their respective ...regiments in India.

...The estimates for forming the Military Store in Penny-street, Ports-...mouth, into a Barrack, have been forwarded to town; we understand ...it amount to be some what less than 40001. to provide comfortable ...quarters for 450 men in single berths, and good accommodation for ...officers. It is a most substantial building, and has long been lying idle.

...On Thursday the Duke of York held a levee as Commander in Chief, ...at the office in the Horse Guards, which was attended by General Gas-...coigne, General Sir George Nugent, Major-General Wm. Douglas, ...Major-General Conran, Vice-Admiral Sir Wm. Hotham, Sir Giffin ...Wilson, and about twenty others.

...Detachments, consisting of 24 officers and 400 men, belonging to ...the 1st Battalion of Light Dragoons and the 16th Lancers; and to ...the 14th, 38th, 44th, 59th, and 87th regiments of infantry, are ...ordered to prepare for embarkation on board the Berwickshire and ...Princess of Athol, East Indiamen, for Bengal. Detachments, con-...sisting of 10 officers and 300 men, belonging to the 4th regiment of ...Light Dragoons, and the 20th and 47th regiments of foot, have re-...ceived orders to prepare for embarkation on board the Duke of York ...and Castle Huntley, East Indiamen, for Bombay. The above detach-...ments are ordered to be embarked by the 31st of December.

...The Field of Waterloo no longer wears even a distant appearance of ...war; within a few years, been the scene of so much slaughter. The ...corn produced there, during the past harvest, were more ...abundant than the oldest man living can remember; and the ground ...was ploughed, and in part sown with wheat for the next year.

IN SIX EASY LESSONS OF ONE HOUR EACH.—MR. BRADBURY, Private Tutor at Westminster School, solicits the attention of Ladies and Gentlemen to his unrivalled and infallible system of beautiful PEN-MANSHIP, whereby he pledges himself to teach persons of all ages to write with ease, elegance, and expedition, (whatever may be the deformity of their pre-sent writing) in six progressive Lessons. This system is peculiarly calculated for the attainment of the best and most scientific hand calculated for business, and of a light and graceful manuscript adapted to Ladies; also secures to the Pupil the certainty of writing straight, without lines, with wonderful dispatch and accuracy, and, more-over, will steady the hand of the most tremulous writer. Upwards of 2000 speci-mens, and numerous recommendatory letters may be seen, and references given to persons of the first distinction, some of whom are upwards of 50 years of age. Private tuition at home. Ladies and Gentlemen attended at their own residences. A new and practical system of Short Hand, taught in a few less time, so as to enable the writer to decipher what he has written with inconceivable ease.—Apply, (or direct, post paid) at the Academy, 464, Strand, near Charing Cross.

PRAY DON'T LAUGH.—Although the Russian Bears laugh at the English Bulls, as there are petty Perfumers, Hair-dressers, and others, who melt bullocks' fat, and put it in pots, and perfume it, and take in the public by pretending to sell them Bears' Grease; but it is well known in Russia, that Bears' Grease is only fit for the leather, and makes the hair turn grey and fall off; the truth of this is well known to every one who knows the Emperor Alexander, as he lost his hair at an early age; and many persons of distinction in the North also lost their hair at an early age, through using Bears' Grease. In short, in Russia and other parts of the North, where the Bears are, it is found from experience that Bears' Grease is too harsh for the hair; and we never recommend it in this country, for the hair is not of the proper consistence, or must be deprived of its injuring the hair; but Prince's celebrated Russia Oil is mixed with the most nourishing Oils in Europe, and it is always like a jelly, and it is proved by every one who has given it a fair trial, to be the only article that ac-tually preserves and promotes the hair, if used constantly, not a hair will fall off, or turn grey: it is such a nourisher to the hair, that even if it has begun to turn grey, it will restore it to its natural colour. It is sure to clear the scurf, from infancy to old age, and when dressing with it will always keep the head and hair clean and beautiful, and in curl. Will sure restore the hair on bald places, if there is the least sign of roots; Medical Gentlemen of the Medical Hall, who have analyzed Prince's Russia Oil, have published in the "Gazette of Health," No. 16, that the discovery is a great credit to the proprietors, and is superior to any other Oil for the hair, and will do in cases of baldness and weak hair what can possibly be done in strengthening and restoring it. The medical gentlemen have also analysed another Oil, which is daily puffed in the Papers, as used by Emperors, Kings, Dukes, &c. &c. and have published in the "Gazette of Health," No. 12, that on examining the ingredients of this grand Oil, they find it contains only common Oil, coloured and perfumed: therefore it cannot be compared to the Russia Oil as a nourisher to the hair. It is no wonder that Ladies and Gen-tlemen have complained of late of the Russia Oil not being of service to the hair, as they have found out that unprincipled persons have sold them counter-feits. Ladies and Gentlemen will be particular, as impostors in Great Britain, France, and other different parts of the Continent, have made the covers of the Counterfeit Russia Oil so much like the genuine, and some more to deceive, falsely, have printed on the counterfeit covers, "the original," or "genuine Russia Oil," and some even are so daring, although they know it is punishable, to put the original Proprietor's name. Therefore purchasers should be cautious, and have it of the Proprietor, or respectable venders. Ask for Prince's Improved Russia Oil. The ounce bottle five shillings, a large bottle, containing five ounces, one pound, is a saving. Sold by the sole Proprietor, A. Prince, No. 9, Poland-street, Oxford-street, near the Pantheon; and by most principal Per-fumers and Medicine Venders. Prince's Russia Oil has been improved with the extra ingredient since January, 1822, through which it will keep pleasant in this or any other climate. Several Captains who have come from the Continent have declared that whenever they landed merchandise, they have been asked if they had any of Prince's Russia Oil; therefore merchants will find an advantage in exporting it. Merchants and Captains will receive a liberal allowance for ex-portation. As several Ladies and Gentlemen in the country have been taken in by unprincipled persons selling them Counterfeit Russia Oil, therefore will be sure to have the Genuine by sending a remittance to the Proprietor, it will be forwarded immediately by coach.

LATEST NEWS.

Paris Papers down to Friday arrived yesterday. The Madrid Gazette contains a Royal decree of the King of Spain, establishing a new Council, which, he states, is to be modelled "as it was formerly re-established by my august and dear predecessors;—Philip V., by means of a Cabinet Council, which he formed with his Ministers, by a resolution of the 30th of November, 1714, and Charles III. by the re-institution of the Supreme Junta of State created under a Decree of the 8th of July, 1787;—I have resolved, that you, together with the rest of my Secretaries of State and Despatches; Don Jose Garcia de la Torre, of Grace and Justice; Don Jose San Juan, of War; Don Luis Maria Salazar, of the Marine; and Don Juan de Erro, of Finance; shall form a Council, to be denominated the Council of Ministers."

All the fortified places in Spain have now surrendered to the French in the name of the King. Alicant was the last that submitted. The Empecinado is now the only Constitutional Chieftain who remains in arms.

Letters from Bogota to the 29th Aug. state, that General Bolivar was at Quito. The fall of Puerto Cabello was considered certain, now that Morales had abandoned the cause of the Royalists.

The Saint Jago Gazette says:—"Such is the distressed situation of the island of Tobago, that, on the application of the Governor for 700l. to repair a fort, highly necessary in the critical state of the Colony, the reply of the Assembly was—' That, from the unparalleled state of distress into which this Colony has fallen, this House is totally unable to comply with your Excellency's wishes, respecting the sum of 700l. to be applied to Fort King George.' We fear such must be the answer of the Assembly of Jamaica, next Session, to the question of Supply."

An article from Hanover, dated Nov. 17:—The Duke and Duchess of Cambridge arrived there on the 15th, in good health. The marriage of the Princess Eliza of Bavaria was celebrated at Munich on the 16th by proxy, Duke Charles officiating on that occasion. The Princess was to arrive at Berlin on the 28th, and on the following day (yesterday) was to be married to the Crown Prince.

Jamaica papers to the 12th ult. arrived yesterday:—His Grace the Governor had issued a Proclamation, calling the Houses of Assembly to meet and proceed to business on Tuesday, the 28th of October.

An Article from Curacoa, dated Aug. 2. states, that at Porto Rico, a French frigate of 54 guns, and a brig of war, lately arrived there from Martinique, both carrying flags of truce. Their object was to propose a continuation of the good harmony and reciprocal mercantile intercourse subsisting between the two islands. They received for answer, that the local Government of Porto Rico could not deviate from the path marked out by the Constitution, nor from the orders of the superior Government, which would be executed according to their tenour, and the respect due to the nation. The brig returned to Martinique with this answer, and the frigate proceeded to the Havannah, on a similar mission to that on which she had gone to Porto Rico.

All the letters received by this Mail concur in representing the Island to be in a state of great alarm from the disposition manifested by the Negro population; to counteract which, meetings having been called in all the parishes, to consider of the best means of preventing the anticipated consequences.

In the Court of King's Bench yesterday an action was tried, brought by White v. Bailey. It was on a bond for 140l. given by Lieut. Wm. Hewitt, late of the Royal Navy, against Rosetta Hewitt, now Mrs. Bailey, widow, administratrix of her deceased husband, who in 1819 died at Dominica. This instrument, it appeared, had been indorsed over to the plaintiff by Messrs. Lee and Lock, to whom it was payable when due; and the question was, whether an admission of her liability, before the bond in question was regularly presented, was sufficient to establish the fact of her being administratrix, in the absence of more formal proof of her having sued out letters of administration.—Plaintiff nonsuited; subject to a case.

In the Court of Commissioners of Bankrupts, yesterday, the third examination of Thomas Thurtell was to have taken place; but a few minutes after one, Mr. Wontner, the Governor of Newgate, had a conversation with the Commissioners upon the possibility of the bankrupt being brought before them.—It terminated by the departure of Mr. W. to consult the City Solicitor on the legal point. Mr. W. shortly afterwards returned, and stated that the City Solicitor was of opinion that as the bankrupt was committed to Newgate under a criminal process, he could not be brought before the commissioners for the furtherance of any proceedings in a civil court.—The Court intimated to the Solicitors on both sides, that under these circumstances, it could only receive proofs of debts.

In the Arches Court, yesterday, nothing of any importance came before the Court; the cause of Lady Turner v. Sir G. P. Turner was called on, but no arrangement having taken place between the parties Sir John Nicholl ordered the cause to stand over.

In the Court of Exchequer, yesterday, an information was tried against Thomas Sugden, a tallow-chandler, at Brigham, Halifax, Yorkshire, for making more candles than he had given notice of to the Excise. The defendant consented to a verdict for the Crown.—An information was also tried against John Gatcliffe, the master of a vessel called the Cottingham, trading to the port of Hull, and it charged him with making a false entry of the goods on board his ship, by which he had incurred, by the statute of Charles II. a penalty of 200l. and had landed improperly a quantity of tobacco and pepper, by which he had incurred a penalty of 100l.—The facts were proved, and Mr. Baron Hullock summed up the evidence, and the Jury returned a verdict against the defendant, in the penalty of 200l. on the first count.

We recommend to our female friends, a most elegantly illuminated pocket-book, entitled "Friendship's Offering; or, The Annual Remembrancer." It is chastely and beautifully embossed, and its contents are equal to its embellishments. The Views of Dresden, Madrid, St. Sebastian, Geneva, Lausanne, and Florence, are admirably engraved, with an interesting description of each city, form part of its matter. These elegant productions, intended as souvenirs at Christmas, to friends and young persons, have hitherto been got up on the continent; to rival whose most stylish efforts, it appears to be the determination of Mr. Relfe, No. 13, Cornhill.

Naval preparations continue in our arsenals, and more especially of our largest ships. The St. Vincent, of 120 guns, is fitting at this port with extraordinary haste; a great many shipwrights are employed upon her, and it is expected she will carry a flag.—Plymouth Journal.

THE ARMY, AND MILITARY MATTERS.—Continued.

The 23d (Royal Welsh Fusileers) will arrive at Fermoy from Dublin, the 3d of December, on its route to Cork, for the purpose of embarking on board the William Harris, Fanny, Indian-Trader, and Prince of Orange, transports, for Gibraltar.—The 75th Regiment of Foot, now stationed at Gibraltar, has received orders, on the arrival of the 23d Fusileers at that Garrison, to embark on board the aforesaid transports, in order to be conveyed to Portsmouth.

Two companies of the 73d regiment of infantry, now stationed at Edinburgh, and two companies belonging to the same corps, now quartered at Glasgow, have received orders to march, the former at Edinburgh on the 3d, and the latter from Glasgow on the 4th of December, for Portpatrick, where they are to arrive on the 11th and 12th of the same month, on their route to Ireland.

On the arrival of the 17th Regiment of Foot at Hull, the remaining four companies of the 73d Regiment, have received orders to proceed forthwith to Portpatrick, on their route to Ireland.

PIGOT and Co.'s LONDON and PROVINCIAL DIRECTORY for 1824 is just published. It comprises a more extensive Directory of the Metropolis and 12 miles round it, than was ever before compiled, besides upwards of 300 Cities, Towns, and Sea Ports in 18 Counties,—the whole is embellished with a Map of England, and a New Plan of London, formed into 70 divisions, with a corresponding Street Guide. To be had of all the principal Booksellers, and at the Directory Office, 24, Basing-lane.

Portland, Oct. 4, 1823.

AT a very numerous and respectable MEETING of the MAGISTRATES, FREEHOLDERS, and other INHABITANTS of this Parish, convened this day in the Court House, by the Honour the Custos, agreeably to a Requisition, for the purpose of taking into consideration the state of the Island.—His Honour the Custos in the Chair,

Resolved unanimously.—That as the original settlers of this Island were free born subjects of Great Britain, they brought with them those rights and privileges which are inherent in Britons; that the native spirit of freedom which distinguished British subjects in, and ever has been, the characteristic of his Majesty's loyal subjects of Jamaica, and that every attempt to abridge or interfere with the Colonial rights of this Island has been constantly resisted, and, we trust, will never be submitted to or compromised.

That the adoption of the measures to which the British Government in the late Imperial Parliament has given its sanction, with a threat of enforcing them, is unquestionably a breach on the part of Government of the conditions under which his Majesty's subjects were induced to embark their lives and fortunes in the settlement of this Island; an unconstitutional interference with its internal Government and affairs, sacrificing justice and national faith to party views and the visionary speculations of designing and self-interested enthusiasts.

That the apprehension and alarm, arising out of the late proceedings in the British Parliament, "and which must have entirely filled the mind of every Colonist alive to his own safety, the safety of his family, and the security of his property," left the very discussion of them might tend to excite anarchy and revolt, appear now but too well founded from the late dire catastrophe which has occurred in the Colony of Demerara: That, therefore, we are justified by every law, human and divine, to resist, by every means in our power, interferences fraught with such calamitous tendency, and unwarranted by any national expediency.

That in perceiving the Mother Country disposed to invalidate every charter that we have hitherto enjoyed, and to infringe every compact, and, as it were, to dissolve our union of interests, we trust that, in the spirit of that justice so loudly boasted of, Parliament and the Nation will pay us the value of our properties, and leave us free to become subject to whatever Government we may consider likely to ensure our personal safety.

That this Island, in the fortunate days when the circumstances of the Inhabitants were far different, and when the burthens and restrictions imposed by Great Britain were less oppressive, has never failed in shewing the strongest disposition to render the situation of his Majesty's Troops most comfortable; and that, though still animated with the same disposition, they are now totally deprived of the means by the very agency of the Government.

That the grant of subsistence to the Troops was originally gratuitous and voluntary, not founded on any constitutional principle, from which the British Government could claim it as a right, but which was liberally bestowed in times when our industry was rewarded, and the labour of cultivation remunerated by fair and reasonable prices.

That, under the circumstances of acknowledged distress in which this Colony is at present involved, the unexampled depression in the prices of our staple commodities, the heavy and oppressive new Duties which are still continued to be imposed on our produce in time of Peace, whilst an exemption therefrom has been partially granted to other portions of the Empire, render it (in the opinion of this Meeting) an imperative duty on the Representatives in Assembly of this Colony, to adopt every possible mode of retrenchment and economy.

That, under the pressure of such accumulating distress, and of calamities which must be the inevitable consequence of the measures contemplated by Government, it would be inconsistent, unjust, impracticable indeed, to raise from the impoverished inhabitants of this land contributions that were cheerfully paid in happier times.

That, deeply impressed with the justice of the maxim admitted by all Governments, "that allegiance and protection should be reciprocal," and conscious of our unshaken loyalty, it is our decided opinion that the pay and subsistence now before us, for the Regiments and Corps stationed in this Island should be no longer continued, and that our Representatives in Assembly be recommended to oppose every proposition to that effect.

That we recommend it to the serious consideration of the Legislature to revise our Militia Law, and to take measures to place our Militia in a more efficient and effective state, ready for every emergency.

That the following Gentlemen, James Clayton White, John Sutton Minot, Anthony Lindsay, Maurice Jones, Robert Mein, John P. Passley, and John Deans, Esqrs. or any three of them, be a Committee to correspond with the other Parishes in furtherance of the object contained in these Resolutions.

That the Thanks of this Meeting are eminently due, and respectfully offered, to his Honour the Custos, for convening the same, and for his very proper conduct in the Chair; That he will be pleased to sign these Resolutions, and cause them to be published for one month in each of the following Newspapers:—In the three County Papers of this Island, viz. the Royal and St. Jago de la Vega Gazettes and Cornwall Chronicle, and also the Jamaica Journal, and likewise the Courier and John Bull London Papers.

THOMAS OAKLEY, Chairman.

THE MEDICAL PROFESSION and Public are respectfully informed, that the publication of the two first Volumes of BICHAT'S GENERAL ANATOMY, applied to Surgery and the Practice of Medicine, translated by CONSTANT COFFYN, and revised by Mr. GEORGE CALVERT HOLDEN, has been unexpectedly delayed, is now in the Press, and the two first volumes, bound in one, 1l. 11s. 6d.—The publication of the other two volumes will follow after a very short interval. The proportional price payable on delivery.

THE LAST of the Year's LOTTERIES. Having this day contracted for the above, the highly improved Scheme is before the Lords of the Treasury, by which it is intended to have SEVEN Prizes of £20,000 being between two and three times the usual number, and of course between two and three times the usual chance of obtaining Prizes of that magnitude. Two First-drawn Prizes the First Day will have £20,000 ALL MONEY extra each, when every Blank will also have the option of £9. money, making the intrinsic value of each Ticket near £16, and as those Tickets will be sold at the reduced price of 18 guineas, and the Sixteenths 26s.; every purchaser before the First Day (if some of the great excess of Capital Prizes, &c. are not obtained) will find the actual cost of a Ticket, even if not drawn a prize, £9. 18s. and Sixteenths 14s. 6d. only. Schemes at large will be at every Office, and advertized as soon as possible.—Messrs. J. and J. SIVEWRIGHT, Contractors.

FOSTON MILLS, YORKSHIRE.—TO BE LET, together or separately, and entered upon immediately, all that WATER CORN MILL, carrying five pairs of mill stones, and all suitable machinery fixed for the dressing of Flour. Also, a modern built Windmill, nearly adjoining, carrying two pairs of mill-stones, and the like machinery; all lately put into exceedingly good repair, situate at Foston, in the centre of an excellent corn country, in the East Riding of the county of York. Also Two Dwelling Houses, suitable for the families of the tenants of the mills. Another Dwelling House, used as an Inn, with several cottages for servants employed on the premises; together with fifty-two acres of rich arable meadow and pasture land, late in the occupation of Lumley and Co. who, at the said Mills have enriched on a trade in the several articles of corn, flour, coals, lime, bricks, tiles, timber, flags, and stone used for buildings. The occupiers have a free and exclusive right of navigation up to, and down from the said Mills, into the Driffield Canal, leading down to the town of Hull, and the Humber.—The situation of the said Mills is very eligible; being six miles from Driffield, eleven from Bridlington, fourteen from Beverley, and twenty from Hull.—For other particulars, apply to Mr. Snowball, Land Agent Malton, Yorkshire.

DUKE & CO.'s WATERPROOF INVENTION, No. 23, Aldermanbury.—This process was established in 1804, for all kinds of Woollen Clothing, which are also preserved from moths. It is effected without any visible change in the fabric; the insensible perspiration passes through equally as in unprepared Cloth. Great Coats, &c. after wear in the rain, should be hung up by a fire, or in the wind, so that the moisture may be dried of before further exposure to wet. Resistance to warm water is the best test of the process having been applied. The following has been lately sent to them:—

"Cornhill Watch-house, Oct. 24, 1823.

"Report as to the Great Coats made Waterproof by Messrs. DUKE and Co, whose system has been used for them ever since the year 1817.

"From the nature of the Watchmen's duties it appears that their Great Coats are successful in keeping out the rain, although they have been in wear four years; and they have no greasy property or offensive smell. It also appears, that as they do not retain the usual quantity of moisture when exposed to rain, they of course sooner become dry. "ROBT. SPOONER, Ward Beadle."

Similar reports have been received from St. Luke's, Old-street, and other parishes, which may be seen at the Warehouse.

ALE, STOUT, CIDER, &c.—THOMAS FIELD and SON beg to acquaint their Friends and the Public that their genuine Burton, Edinbro' Taunton and Welsh Ales, Dorchester Beer, Brown Stout, Cider, Perry, &c. are in fine order for use: their Foreign Wines, Cape Madeira, Brandy, Rum, Hollands, Geneva, and Orange Shrub, of their usual fine qualities, and their prices the lowest at which the first class of such goods can be sold.—22, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden.

The Company continue to effect Insurances on Lives, on equitable Rates, without Entrance Money, or any additional Premium for sea-risk in decked vessels to or from the British Isles, or to or from the opposite line of coast between the Texel and Havre-de-Grace included—to grant and purchase Annuities under a special Act of Parliament—and also to purchase well-secured Reversions of considerable amount, and respectable parties, on liberal terms.—Agents are appointed in all the Cities and principal Towns in the United Kingdom.

THOMAS PARKE, Sec.

AMICABLE SOCIETY for INSURANCE of LIVES, Serjeants' Inn, Fleet-street, London, Incorporated by Queen Anne, 1706—and by Powers further extended by his present Majesty's Charter, granted the 12th February, 1823.

The Directors have now to offer to the attention of the Public, TABLES of RATES for the INSURANCE of LIVES, at the various ages from 8 to 72, either for the whole Life; any specific number of Years; the contingency of one person surviving another; or for the joint continuance of the Lives of two or more Persons, the insurance payable on the death of either.

Insurances in this Office are effected in certain cases at a reduction of nearly 20 per cent. and on the whole on terms greatly favourable to the Insured; and Insurances may be effected from £200 to £2000, and every kind of Insurance, however short the period of continuance, is entitled to a participation in the pecuniary advantages accruing to the Corporation. These advantages are wholly appropriated to the benefit of the Insured, in proportion to the amount of each Insurance.

In the last year Insurances on 146 Shares became claims, of which 59 receive additions amounting to 60 per cent.; four Shares 50 per cent.; three Shares 40 per cent.; three Shares 33 per cent; and 79 Shares 20 per cent, beyond the sums originally insured.

Abstracts of the Charters and By Laws, with Tables of the Premiums, may be had at the Office, where attendance is given daily from Nine till Three o'Clock.

By Order of the Court of Directors, J. PENSAM, Registrar.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST INDIA STOCK.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,

THE Election for supplying the vacancy caused by the death of your late lamented Director, Mr. Grant, being now over, I presume to bring myself to your recollection.

In April last I had the honour to inform you that I was encouraged by my friends to entertain hopes of success, in aspiring to a seat in the East India Direction.

Those hopes were founded on my having been actively employed more than 30 years in the civil service of the Company, under the Bengal Government; and of having, towards the end of that period, been selected by the Honourable Court of Directors to be a Member of the Supreme Council of Bengal. I stated to you that I had filled that high and arduous situation from October, 1817, to Feb. 1822, an interval conspicuous by the great and important measures which led to the present prosperous state of the British dominions in India; and I expressed a hope that during so long a course of service, might, according to the measure of my humble ability, render me a useful servant to you in this country.

The encouragement which I have received since I came forward has justified the expectations which I indulged of being honoured with your favourand support. In June next, I shall have been in England the time required by law to qualify me as a candidate, and I trust that I am not too presumptuous in expressing myself sanguine that your countenance will enable me to present myself at the ballot upon the first vacancy which may subsequently occur.—I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen, with the greatest respect, your most obedient humble servant,

Thompson's Hotel, Cavendish-square, Dec. 1. JAMES STUART.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST INDIA STOCK.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,

I BEG leave to submit to your consideration a Copy of the Resolution which was unanimously adopted on the 29th inst., at a numerous and highly respectable Meeting of Proprietors of East India Stock, some of whose names are annexed, and most respectfully to solicit the favour of your support on the next Vacancy in the Direction. On your impartiality and independent principles, on your favourable consideration of my long services, and on the zeal and sincerity of my personal friends, I confidently rely; and should I, through your kindness and unbiassed suffrages be elevated to the distinguished office to which I aspire, it shall be my highest ambition to prove to you by devoting my time and attention to its important duties, that I have not been undeserving of your generous patronage and support.—I have the honour to be, with great respect, Ladies and Gentlemen, your very faithful and obedient servant,

Campden Hill, Kensington, Nov. 29, 1823. CHARLES MACKINNON.

At a numerous and highly respectable MEETING of PROPRIETORS of EASTINDIA STOCK, held at the London Tavern, on Friday the 28th of Nov. 1823, GEORGE PALMER, Esq. in the Chair.

Resolved unanimously, That, considering the great importance of the trade with China to the best interests of the East India Company, to British India, and to the country, it is highly expedient and desirable that there should be, at least, one Member of the Court of Directors possessing, from personal residence in China, practical knowledge and experience of the trade of the country, and of the peculiar policy and usages under which it is conducted; that Mr. Charles Mackinnon's independent principles, his attainments, his long and acknowledged services to the Company, and his public and private character, together with his entire freedom from commercial or other pursuits, constitute in our opinion, a strong claim to the confidence of the Proprietors; and with these impressions, this meeting earnestly recommend him to their patronage and support, and individually and collectively, pledge themselves to use their most strenuous and unremitting exertions to secure his election. GEORGE PALMER, Chairman.

EDUCATION.—A Gentleman, who, during his residence at Cambridge, obtained the first Literary honours there, (as may be known by application to his College) and who is now married, receives into his house, situated at a convenient distance from London, Three Pupils, upon moderate terms. He will at Christmas have VACANCIES for only Two, and can give references to parents whose children he has Educated, which he hopes will prove in the highest degree satisfactory. Address (post paid) to X. L. Z. care of Mr. Mawman, Bookseller, 39, Ludgate-street, London.

TO the Friends and Guardians of Ladies labouring under MENTAL AFFLICTION, or Imbecility of Mind, from Nervous Irritability. The Advertiser is a Lady of the utmost respectability, residing in an airy, cheerful situation, four miles from town; who, from many years' experience under some of the first Physicians in town, and by kindness and proper treatment, has restored several to their usual energy, and enjoyment of rational mind—the friends of whom will be most happy to satisfy any who wish it. Six is the limited number, that she may have full time to bestow on the invalids entrusted to her care; and every attention which humanity suggests will be paid them, and a carriage provided if required.—Ladies requiring Medical aid may remain under the direction of their own Physicians, though a Medical Gentleman attends daily. The most respectable reference will be given.—Cards of address can be had of Mr. Robinson, 79, Fleet-street, or Mrs. Tull, 7, Markham-place, King's-road, Chelsea.

PRIVATE TUITION.—In an Establishment of the first respectability, healthfully situated within a mile and a half of the Parks, there will be a VACANCY for Two Young Ladies after Christmas. As a limited number only is received, the Conductress has it in her power to offer all the advantages of private tuition, superadded to those commonly allowed to result from companionship in study; and here she would be understood to refer not only to the improvement, but also to the domestic comfort of those committed to her charge.—Terms—for Board and Instruction (in the usual branches of female education) Thirty guineas per annum; French, Italian, Music, Dancing, &c. &c. &c. by very eminent Masters, at the accustomed rates. For further particulars apply by letter to A. W. (post paid) 31, Poultry.

PRIVATE PUPIL. A Married Clergyman of the Established Church, residing within a convenient distance of London, and receiving a few Pupils into his House, has now a VACANCY, the most satisfactory references can be given to Noblemen and Gentlemen whose sons have been under his care. Letters to be addressed to the Rev. E. S. I. Mr. Egerton's, Bookseller, Whitehall, London.

VACATION.—A Married Clergyman would be glad to admit into his Family a Young Gentleman, and superintend his Studies during the Vacation of the Public Schools or Universities: the distance from London is within twenty miles.—Letters to be directed for the Rev. A. B. Mr. Hills, Italian Warehouse, 62, Piccadilly, corner of Albemarle street.

MONEY.—Any Amount from 200l. to 700l. may be obtained immediately on Freehold, long Leasehold, Reversions Marriage Settlements, Funded or other equivalent Property. Noblemen and Gentlemen of ample responsibility, accommodated on Personal Security.—For particulars apply to Mr. Moor, 125, Strand, (if by letter post paid,) where communications will meet with implicit confidence and attention

HERTFORD WINTER ASSIZES.

These Assizes commenced on Thursday, before Sir James Allan Park, one of the Judges of the Court of Common Pleas, and Sir George Sowley Holroyd, one of the Judges of the Court of King's Bench. The Judges having arrived on the preceding evening. At nine o'clock, Thomas Nicholson, Esq. the Under-Sheriff, for the county, left Hertford in the High Sheriff's state carriage, and attended by an escort of javelin men, &c. for Cole-green, three miles on the St. Alban's road, for the purpose of meeting the Judges, their Lordships having arrived at Cole-green at about half-past nine on Wednesday morning in a post-chaise and four. Their Lordships entered the state carriage, in which also the Rev. Mr. Lloyd, Chaplain to the High Sheriff, took his seat. Mr. Nicholson proceeded in the post chaise to Hertford, and the cortege following closely, arrived in this town at ten o'clock, when their Lordships attended Divine Service at All Saints Church; the Rev. Mr. Lloyd officiated. Their Lordships left Church a few minutes after 12, and proceeded immediately to the Town Hall, when, having entered the Criminal Court, Mr. Justice Park, addressing the two Juries (who had been called over in the interim by Mr. Knapp) he wished it to be clearly understood that, as during the Assizes his Learned Brother (Mr. Justice Holroyd) would sit in either Court at the same time, none of the Jurors could be allowed to return home until formally discharged; it was absolutely necessary that they should all be in attendance until the whole of the business of the Assizes had been gone through.—After the routine business of reading the proclamations, calling over the roll of magistrates, constables, &c. &c. was disposed of, the following gentlemen were sworn upon the Grand Jury. There was an unusually full attendance of magistrates and grand jurors:—The Hon. William Lamb, M.P. Foreman; the Right Hon. Sir George Gaselee, Bart.; Sir John S. Sebright, Bart.; Sir Culling Smith, Bart.; Sir George Duckett, Bart.; the Hon. Baron Dimsdale; Henry Cowper, Esq.; William Baker, Esq.; Thomas Hope Ryde, Esq.; Nicolson Calvert, Esq.; Thomas Byron, Esq.; Samuel Smith, Esq.; Thos. Daniel, Esq.; Daniel Gaes, Esq.; Adolphus Meetkerke, Esq.; Patrick Haddow, Esq.; William Robert Phillimore, Esq.; Charles Edmond Rombold, Esq.; William Wilshire, Esq.; John Currie, Esq.; William Heygate, Esq.; Thomas Nash Kemble, Esq.; and Jacob Bosanquet, Esq. The above names were the first twenty-three called from the list.

Mr. Justice Park then delivered the following charge to the Grand Jury:—

"Gentlemen of the Grand Jury—We are assembled at this unusual season of the year, under the Special Commission of his Majesty, for the purpose of trying such prisoners as may have been committed to the gaol since the last Summer Assizes. In that service it is of the greatest importance that the functionaries of the law, in the administration of criminal jurisprudence, should be supported by gentlemen of respectability, such as those whom I have now the pleasure of seeing around me. Aided by the support of such gentlemen, the administration of the laws cannot but be satisfactory, and satisfies me that his Majesty's wisdom in issuing these Commissions will never be frustrated, as frustrated it would undoubtedly be, if ever the time should come when the administration of justice was not attended by gentlemen of the first dignity, rank, and respectability, because such an event could not but lessen the administration of justice in the eyes of the common people of England. Gentlemen, the Calendar contains a considerable number of offences. I am sorry to observe a great number of crimes of various descriptions set down for trial. Notwithstanding the number, and the variety of these offences, they are not, in general, of such a nature as to render it necessary for me to address to you any particular observations. I am sorry to say, that they are for the most part such offences as you and other Magistrates are worthy, and, I am almost afraid, daily occupied in investigating; and the principles of law applicable to such cases are, probably, as well known to you as they are to my Learned Brother and myself. I need scarcely add, that if any difficulty should arise in the progress of your investigation of these cases, and you should wish to make any inquiry, my Learned Brother and myself will most cheerfully and readily afford you our assistance. But there is one case on which I must of necessity make some remarks, because it has made considerable noise in the world. For myself, I can say with truth, that, although I have read the depositions which have been handed to me, I personally know nothing of what has been published in the newspapers, not having read a line of all that has gone forth to the world through that channel. I, for one, therefore, may say, that as far as any previous opinion of the case is concerned, a more impartial person than myself never entered a court of justice. I feel it necessary to make a few preliminary observations on this case, with a view to future circumstances. The language of reproach is never pleasant to me; it is hostile to my feelings; but in administering the justice of the country, I have a duty to discharge, which is paramount to all personal considerations. The depositions handed to me appear to have been dispersed through most of the public prints, and there is one fault to which I cannot but allude—that fault originates, I have no doubt, unintentionally; (I beg not to be understood as throwing out any personal reflection on the conduct of any gentleman,) from want of reflection in the Magistrates who conducted the inquisition, and who certainly were not justified in allowing any person whatever to have access to their private apartments for the purpose of taking notes for publication. Both myself and my learned Brother hold that there is a vast difference in the inquisitorial and judicial duties of a Magistrate. Where a Magistrate is acting judicially, he is liable, like all other Judges, to be heard and judged of himself. For my own part, I may truly say, that I wish my judicial opinions to be examined with all possible freedom. I trust that I always mean to do what is right, but I am aware that I am continually in error, for no human being can doubt that he errs continually, because he is a human being. When a Magistrate, however, is inquiring into a crime, to say that all the depositions in such a case should be published generally to the world, is a proposition which cannot be listened to for a single moment. It is his duty to investigate, to inquire; and the statute law prescribes a rule for his conduct in the discharge of that duty. The Statute of Philip and Mary, which was passed upwards of two hundred and fifty years ago, requires that all examinations before Magistrates, in cases of murder and felony, shall be taken in writing, and transmitted to the Judges of Oyer and Terminer. The constant practice, with respect to these depositions, has been to transmit them directly to the Judges, and the party accused, or his advisers, have never been permitted to see them. They have been subject to the inspection of the counsel for the prosecution, and to the officer of the court, as well as to the Judges, but they have always been religiously kept from the observation of the accused. The consequence of the publication of this evidence is, that the accused party knows all that will be produced against him at his trial, and thus the object of sending the depositions to the Judges is entirely defeated. It occurred to me, while the oath was being administered to the Grand Jury, that there was another strong argument to shew the importance of reserving the depositions for the use of the Judges and the prosecutors. The Grand Juryman swears to keep the King's counsel, his fellows, and his own secret; but by the publication of the depositions, all the evidence is published before it comes to his knowledge. This never can be right under any circumstances. I have said thus much, because I am most anxious to preserve the purity of justice; and because, highly as I esteem the liberty of the press, I hold the trial by jury, as a palladium of British liberty, in still higher veneration; and I am convinced that that palladium can only be maintained in its purity as long as the administration of justice continues pure and uncorrupted. I mean not to say that the administration of justice has been affected by this proceeding, but it may be put in danger. It is a proceeding which is not only dangerous to the accusers, but it may be so to the accused. Of this I am quite sure, that it is a proceeding most injurious to the administration of justice, and calculated most materially so to impede its course. It imposes upon judges the necessity of addressing seven gentlemen of your high character in the country with unusual energy, in order to prevent any improper bias either on the one side or on the other. The publication of evidence is, upon the whole, however, more favourable to the accused than to the prosecutor; because it gives the accused a benefit which the law of England never contemplated, namely, an opportunity of knowing beforehand the points which may be brought in evidence against him on his trial. Whether this may be beneficial to one of the parties, or disadvantageous to either or both of them, I will not pretend to decide, but I am quite satisfied that such a proceeding is highly blameable. In conclusion I have no difficulty in stating my opinion to you, in the hearing of my Learned Brother—and I believe my opinion is sanctioned by the Judges of the Court of King's Bench, and by that of all the Judges who have sat on the bench during the last century—that to print evidence a priori on a criminal case, which is to form the subject of inquiry in a court of justice before a Jury, accompanied with notes and comments, is a high crime and misdemeanour, punishable, on conviction by fine and imprisonment. This is the law of the land, and, however liable I and those in my situation are to attacks, for opinions and decisions, I hold it now my duty to state it. There is also another circumstance which occurred to me during the calling over of the Grand Jury. I am afraid there is in the public mind a propriency like that of old with the Athenians for news, in the most extended and morbid sense of that term; and it may be, that the gentlemen having the conduct of newspapers find it essential to their interests to glut and satisfy the public appetite. I am also informed the confession, or what has been called the confession of one of the persons charged with being concerned in the murder, has been in almost all the papers. A very little reflection will enable people to see the mischief which must arise from the publication of such a document. A confession is, of all other things, that of which it is impossible to say, until the period of trial, whether it be or be not admissible in evidence; and nothing, therefore, could be more unadvised, independently of its illegality, than its premature publication. I shall say no more on this subject at present; but I trust that what I have said will induce gentlemen to reflect on the consequences of a practice which they have permitted, I have no doubt, with the best intentions, but from the continuance of which much mischief would arise to the administration of justice.—Gentlemen, as to the crime itself. It appears that there is a charge against a person named Thurtell, another named Hunt, and a third of the name of Probert, for being concerned in the murder of murder. A most serious and awful charge this, under any circumstances. I do not know what may be the intention of those conducting the prosecution, whether to indict all three of them as principals in the first degree, or to indict some of them as principals in the second degree, or as accessories before or after the fact. With respect to the three first descriptions of crime, as committed by principals in the first and second degree, and by accessories before the fact; although the form of stating the offences is somewhat different, the legal result to the individuals, if convicted, is the same. Although a person may not have struck the fatal blow, he may be equally guilty with him who did; for, if present, to caution or in any way aid or protect the principal, he would be a principal in the second degree. Even if not actually present, this might be the case; for if the person committing the crime has an accomplice at a distance to watch and prevent interruption, such accomplice is, in the eye of the law, a principal in the second degree. An accessory before the fact is a person not on the spot at the time of the commission of the crime, but who has assisted the principal with his previous counsel and advice. An accessory after the fact is one who with the knowledge of the commission of the crime, receives, harbours, or entertains the principal. Should the evidence contained in the depositions be substantiated, the crime charged is one of the most horrible atrocity. It will, probably, be attempted to prove it by circumstantial evidence: indeed, this is generally the case in most charges of murder; for the crime is supposed by the perpetrator to have been committed in secret, and without a living witness—forgetting, alas! that to the all-seeing eye of Providence nothing is secret or unobserved. It is an opinion well known to have been entertained by very eminent lawyers, and in which I most fully concur, that although direct and positive evidence must for the most part be taken as conclusive—the circumstantial evidence of twenty, thirty, or forty witnesses, all converging from various facts to one final point of proof, is nevertheless less liable to error, or human fallibility, than the direct and positive evidence of two or three individuals. In the case of circumstantial evidence preconcert is impossible, and if in the many links composing such a chain of evidence, not one be wanting, a fact may be safely taken as proved, even though such evidence be purely a concatenation of circumstances. There is one circumstance which I observed on reading the depositions, to which I beg leave to direct your particular attention. I understand that a person has either been removed hither, or is about to be removed hither, to give evidence on this subject before you and the Petty Jury. This person, who is a female, of the name of Probert, is stated to be the wife of one of the prisoners; I say so stated, because I cannot be supposed to know either that she is or is not so, and I beg that I may not be understood as conveying any doubt of such being the case. On this point I have not any difficulty in informing you, Gentlemen, that if the whole of the prisoners are included in one indictment, this person cannot be a witness. No woman can be called upon to give evidence that may criminate her husband; neither can she be allowed to give evidence in his behalf. I have said thus much, more for the purpose of making your minds easy, Gentlemen, than from any actual necessity for the observations. I have but now to add, that you, Gentlemen of the Grand Jury, are not the trying Jury, it is only for you to decide, whether sufficient evidence has been laid before you to authorize you to put the prisoner on his trial for the offence charged. Having addressed these few observations to you, Gentlemen, I have now only to request, that you will retire to expedite the business of the county.

The Grand Jury then retired.

Mr. Adolphus Meetkerke, Mr. Broderick, one of the Counsel for the prosecution of Thurtell and others, entered the Court, and addressed the Learned Judge:—"My Lord, I am instructed to move your Lordship for an order to carry William Probert, one of the persons charged with the murder of Mr. Weare in the month of October last, now in the custody of the gaoler of this county, before the Grand Jury, in order that he may give evidence touching the circumstances of that offence. My Lord, I do not make this application expressly on my own responsibility, but I am fortified by the opinion of a person much better able than myself to come to a right conclusion on the subject—I allude to the individual to whom the management of the prosecution has been confided."

Mr. Justice Park said, he could not object to grant the order.

Mr. Broderick then said, that the application was not made solely on his own responsibility—it was thought essential to the ends of justice that Probert should be admitted a witness for the Crown, and on that ground only the motion had been determined on. There were many circumstances which it was not then necessary to state, which rendered this course necessary.

Mr. Justice Park said, he knew nothing whatever of the circumstances of the case; but certainly, upon the application made, the order in question should be granted, and Probert should be taken before the Grand Jury.

The Clerk of the Assize then proceeded, in obedience to his Lordship's desire, to prepare an order for Probert to be carried before the Grand Jury.—This was communicated to Probert by Mr. Wilson, the gaoler, to whom the order was given. Probert was almost overpowered with joy. He was forthwith stripped of his irons, and conveyed in a post-chaise to the Court-house, preparatory to his being taken before the Grand Jury. The Bill was then taken into the Court, in which Mr. Justice Holroyd was presiding, and all the witnesses were sworn to give evidence before the Grand Jury.—The Bill was then taken before the Grand Jury by Mr. Jenkins, the solicitor for the prosecution, and the examination of the witnesses commenced. The examination lasted five hours. The Grand Jury, after examining 22 witnesses, among whom were Mrs. Probert and Probert, who were examined (separately) for a considerable time, returned at the Judge's lodgings a true bill against John Thurtell for the murder, and against Hunt as an accessory before the fact.

On Friday, Mr. Justice Park entered the Court a few minutes after eight o'clock.

John Thurtell and Joseph Hunt were then brought up to the Bar, and arraigned. The indictment upon which they were arraigned was as follows. It was read by Mr. Knapp, the Clerk of Arraigns:—

"Hertfordshire to Wit.—The Jurors of our Lord the King upon their oath present, that John Thurtell, late of the parish of Aldenham, in the county of Hertford, labourer, not having the fear of God before his eyes, but being moved and seduced by the instigation of the Devil, on the 24th day of October, in the year of our Lord 1823, with force and arms, at the parish of Aldenham aforesaid, in the county of Hertford aforesaid, in and upon William Weare, in the peace of God and our said Lord the King, then and there being, feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, did make an assault; and that the said John Thurtell, with a certain pistol of the value of ten shillings, which he the said John Thurtell held in his right hand, then and there, to wit, at the parish of Aldenham, in the county of Hertford aforesaid, had and held the said William Weare in, upon and into the left side of the head of him the said William Weare, then and there to wit, at the parish of Aldenham, in the county of Hertford aforesaid, feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, did strike, thrust, force, and penetrate; and that the said John Thurtell, by the said last mentioned striking, thrusting, forcing and penetrating the pistol last aforesaid in, upon and into the left side of the head of him the said William Weare, as last aforesaid, then and there, to wit, at the parish of Aldenham, in the county of Hertford aforesaid, feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, did give unto him the said Wm. Weare, in and upon the left side of the head of the said William Weare, one mortal fracture of the depth of two inches, and of the width of one inch; and that the said John Thurtell, with a certain knife of the value of sixpence, which the said John Thurtell, then and there, to wit, at the parish of Aldenham, in the county of Hertford aforesaid, in his right hand had and held, the said William Weare in and upon the left side of the neck of him the said William Weare, then and there, to wit, at the parish of Aldenham, in the county of Hertford aforesaid, feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, did strike, wound, cut, and penetrate, and that the said John Thurtell, by such striking, wounding, cutting, and penetrating, the said William Weare, in and upon the left side of the neck of him, the said William Weare, then and there, to wit, at the said parish of Aldenham, in the county of Hertford aforesaid, feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, did give unto him the said William Weare, in and upon the left side of the neck of him, of the said William Weare, one mortal wound of the depth of one inch, of the width of one inch, and of the length of two inches, of which said last mentioned mortal fracture, of which said mortal wound the said William Weare, did then and there, to wit, at the parish of Aldenham, in the county of Hertford aforesaid, die. And so the Jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do say, that the said John Thurtell, him the said William Weare, in manner and form of law aforesaid, feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, then and there, to wit, at the parish of Aldenham, in the county of Hertford, did kill and murder against the peace of our said Lord the King, his Crown and dignity. And the Jurors aforesaid, upon their oaths aforesaid, do further present that the said Joseph Hunt before the last mentioned felony and murder was committed by the said John Thurtell in the manner and form last mentioned, that is to say, in the same day and in the year aforesaid, with force and arms, at the parish of St. George's Hanover-square, in the county of Middlesex, to wit, at the parish of Aldenham aforesaid, in the county of Hertford aforesaid, him the said John Thurtell to do and commit the felony and murder last aforesaid, in manner and form last aforesaid, maliciously, feloniously, voluntarily, and of his malice aforethought, did stir up, move, abet, procure, command, hire, counsel, and direct, against the peace of our said Lord the King, his Crown and dignity."

Both prisoners pleaded Not Guilty in a firm voice. The indictment on the inquisition was then read; it included Probert, who pleaded Not Guilty.

Probert and Hunt were dressed in black. Thurtell wore a blue coat, fawn coloured waistcoat, and drab trowsers.

Mr. Andrews then applied to his Lordship for permission to have the irons removed from the prisoners.

His Lordship thought such an application should not have been made to him, but ordered the prisoners to be accommodated with seats.

Messrs. Jay, Fenton, Helme, and Adamthwaite, were then severally sworn to an affidavit by his Lordship's clerk, and Probert was removed from the bar. (The substance of the affidavit will be found in the speech of Mr. Andrews in moving to postpone the trial.

Mr. Andrews—My Lord, as the Counsel for John Thurtell, and upon the question whether this trial should be now proceeded in, I move that the affidavits now put in be read. Mr. Knapp then read the affidavits. The first was that of Mr. Fenton. It began by stating that on the 13th of November the deponent had an interview with Mr. Nicholson, the Under-Sheriff, who had to return the Jury, when he offered to give an immediate undertaking, and offered himself and Mr. Jay as bail for a person arrested at the suit of one Andrew Van Sandon. Mr. Nicholson observed that he knew nothing of deponent or Mr. Jay, and considered the circumstance of their being professionally engaged for the prisoner Thurtell was a sufficient objection. Deponent remonstrated with him on the impropriety of one professional man indulging in such observations upon others, and upon his calling a man a murderer before he had been tried by the laws of the country; Mr. Nicholson further stated to deponent that he was satisfied of the guilt of the prisoners, and that they ought not to complain if they were hanged without trial. Deponent has been much of late at Hertford, and has generally associated with that class of people from amongst whom the common jury is usually taken, he has found all such perfectly satisfied of the guilt of the prisoners—for which reason deponent thinks, and verily believes, that it is impossible they, the prisoners, can at this time have a fair and impartial trial in the town and county of Hertford. On the 15th November, deponent applied to the Bench of Magistrates, about 12 in number being present, for the permission he had previously required of Mr. L. That gentleman, then, in the name of all the magistrates, refused deponent access to the prisoner Thurtell, but refused to state the reasons of such refusal. Deponent, on the 19th of November, applied to the Court of King's Bench for a mandamus against the magistrates, which was granted, and on the 20th of the said month, deponent for the first time saw the prisoner Thurtell on the 22d of November, the magistrates, Messrs. Clutterbuck and Mason, went to the gaol at Hertford, having one of the witnesses who gave evidence on the inquisition with them, and whom they said they should introduce to Thurtell, in order that the depositions might be read over in the presence of that prisoner; deponent objected to this step, and was replied to, that it should be considered as an indulgence to the prisoner, as it would prevent his being taken by surprise. On the 28th November these Magistrates did actually introduce this witness to Thurtell for the purpose of identifying him, and which circumstance did altogether disturb the mind of the prisoner, and interfere with the arrangements he had made for his defence. The remainder of the affidavit of this deponent, as well as those of the other deponents, consisted of extracts from newspapers and publications, of statements respecting the murder.

(At this stage of the affidavit, Mr. Justice Park suggested whether the reading in open court extracts from papers, whose publication of such matter was now complained of, would not have the tendency of producing that prejudice, the existence of which was so much deprecated.)

Mr. Andrews, with his learned friend, had given the subject their best consideration, and they had determined on the necessity of having the extracts read, to which he wished his Lordship's attention now to be called. The reading of the affidavits was then proceeded in, and in addition to extracts from newspapers and books, referred to the placard of the performance of "The Gamblers," at the Surrey Theatre, which was put in and also read.—After the publications had been read, Mr. Andrews urged the necessity of postponing the trial, on the grounds which these affidavits disclosed, viz. that the prisoners could not have a fair trial now, the minds of the Jury being embued with prejudices arising from these publications. It was one of the privileges enjoyed in this country to have a trial by a jury of unprejudiced minds: but was it possible for any person to imagine, that after such publications had been circulated as had teemed from the pamphleteers and the public press—circulated, too, in the very town where justice was to be obtained, and where the accused stood on their lives or deaths. The Learned Gentleman then observed that the alledged murder had only been recently committed, namely, on the 24th of October—he felt convinced, in his own mind, that his client (Thurtell) could not, on the present occasion, have a fair trial—hence he implored his Lordship that his trial might be deferred, which was the object of his application to the Court.

Mr. Justice Park—To when?—My Lord, until next assizes.

The Learned Gentleman adverted to the placards, which had been stock at the corner of every street in the metropolis. Even the town of Hertford had been polluted with them. Could such things exist without creating a prejudice unfavourable to the accused? What means had he (Mr. Andrews) or his Lordship, of knowing how far the minds of the Jury might have been influenced by them?

Mr. Platt and Mr. Chitty followed on the same side.

Before commencing his address, Mr. Gurney put in an affidavit, sworn to by Thomas Nicholson, Esq. the Under Sheriff, in answer to that part of those put in by Mr. Andrews, which referred to a conversation between that gentleman and Mr. Fenton; it stated, that such conversation had reference to Thurtell, Probert, and Hunt confined in Hertford gaol, on the charge of murder, and the observation of the deponent was alleged to have been as follows:—"If the circumstances as published be true, the prisoners ought to be hanged without trial, or else not for a due consideration of the laws of England."

Mr. Gurney, for the prosecution, observed that it had been urged that Thurtell had not had time to prepare his defence. Now this he denied—the prisoner had been in custody five weeks, having been committed on the 1st of November—on the 12th he saw Mr. Jay—and, although it had been fully stated, and freely commented upon, that he had not been allowed to have an interview with Mr. Fenton, yet it had not been urged that the prisoner had, previous to the 20th ult. expressed any desire to see that gentleman, if indeed any such statement had been made he should have been prepared with a sufficient answer on affidavit. He contended that the prisoners had now as full means of defence, as far as professional assistance went, as ever they could.—An objection had been urged to the conduct of the magistrate who introduced the witness into the gaol, and this objection, unfounded as it was, had been given as an argument in favour of a postponement of the trial.

His Lordship—Mr. Gurney, on this subject I must interrupt you to express my conviction of the impropriety of the conduct of the Magistrates in question. I have no doubt that all was done with the best intention, and with a feeling of kindness; but it was very wrong.

Mr. Gurney resuming, explained that the witness was introduced into the prison—that his evidence might be given in the presence of the prisoner whose life it possibly might affect. His Lordship knew that this was necessary, as in the event of the death of the witness, his deposition would then be evidence.

His Lordship had not previously understood this to be the case; the introduction of the prisoner was certainly necessary for the object stated by Mr. Gurney. His Lordship, however, did not in the least regret having made the observations on the supposed conduct of the Magistrates, as it would show the impropriety of similar and future proceedings.

Mr. Gurney resumed—His Lordship had wisely foreborn to read the publications containing observations upon the crime with which the prisoners were charged, and he had probably done so in anticipation of his presiding at the trial of the unfortunate men.—(His Lordship said "Certainly.")—As it regarded the announcement contained in the placard of the Surrey Theatre, and the performance exhibited in that place of amusement, he thought with his learned friends, that nothing more infamous was ever attempted, and he was surprised that in this country of justice and humanity, any number of people could be collected to witness such an exhibition, unless it had been for the purpose of expressing their disgust at the unfeeling attempt of the person having the management of the theatre. An English audience should have expressed their opinion of that want of feeling by a burst of deprecation, which would have taught its possessor a necessary and useful lesson.

Mr. Andrews replied. The Learned Gentleman reiterated his former arguments, and laid great stress on the effects which must have occurred—why was the curiosity of the public thus aroused—why those crowds and that clamour on the outside of the Court where his Lordship sat—why was the Court itself crowded to suffocation—could it, he would ask, be attributed to any thing but that source of evil, on the effects of which he had dilated?

Mr. Justice Park gave his opinion on the motion submitted for his consideration. It consisted of two parts, one was, that Thurtell had not had time to prepare his defence—and secondly, that the minds of men were prejudiced on account of the publications which had been issued. With respect to the allegation that sufficient time had not been allowed, it was known to gentlemen conversant with public business, that as much time has been allowed in this case as is ordinarily allowed to other prisoners. It was not to be forgotten that when one of the foulest murders which was ever committed was perpetrated on a Monday, the murderer (alluding to Bellingham) was executed on the following Monday. A great many of the arguments urged in support of the motion were irrelevant to the case. Much had been urged as to the prejudice which had been excited, but whether the Jury had or not, before they came into Court, heard any thing of the sort, they had them in review and hearing on the present occasion—and he could not tell, if the trial was postponed, but the same prejudices (if any existed at present) would exist at that time, at least in the same degree. The circumstance of the theatrical representation had been alluded to, as well as the probable evil tendency of the publications, which they had heard partly read—and also from the reports which were sent abroad in the daily press. He had said yesterday as he said to-day—that nothing could be more pernicious in their consequences, or unjustifiable in their publication. It was the palladium of English liberty; but if that liberty was to be thus abused, the public press would, instead of upholding, prevent the operation of public justice. Under the circumstances of the case, his Lordship, anxious to allow every reasonable indulgence, would adjourn the trying of the important issue until Tuesday, the 6th day of January next, upon the understanding, that the prisoners should then abide their trials without any further application to the Crown.

Mr. Justice Park suggested that feelings of humanity towards the prisoners would preclude the publication of the affidavit read in Court. In compliance with the wish expressed by the Learned Judge, we have abstained from publishing it.

The following particulars, among many others, have been published in the daily papers:—

Thomas Thurtell arrived at the gaol on Wednesday afternoon, in the custody of Mr. Bishop, the principal turnkey of Newgate. He was lodged on the Debtors' side, and all communication with the other prisoners was prevented. At about ten o'clock on Thursday morning he was taken to the Bell Commercial Inn, to await the necessity of his attendance before the Grand Jury. He was brought down by a Habeas. While Probert was on his way to the Grand Jury Room, he passed Thomas Thurtell, with whom he shook hands in a cordial manner. It appears that he was more intimate with Thomas than John. Probert, after he had given his evidence, was reconducted to the gaol. On the information of the favourable turn which Probert's case had taken having been communicated to his wife, she evinced very little emotion. When Hunt was informed of the circumstance he was a good deal shocked. Thomas Thurtell went to the prison, and was introduced to John, who received him very coolly, and simply addressed him in an ordinary tone with the words, "Ah, Tom, how do you do?" followed by some other common-place remarks. He parted with him in a manner equally cool, and showed no extraordinary feeling whatever on the occasion. Thomas Thurtell, on coming out, expressed his surprise at the spirits and collected manner which the prisoner displayed.

Among the witnesses called before the Grand Jury were:—Mr. Weare, brother to the deceased; Mrs. Probert; Miss Noyes; Mr. Field, of the Artichoke, Elstree; Mr. Rexworthy, and Mr. Nicholls. A model of the cottage was brought to the Court House, for the inspection of the Grand Jury. It contains a representation not only of the cottage, but of the grounds, pond, outhouses, and Gill's Hill-lane, so as to form a sort of picture map of the whole neighbourhood. Mrs. Probert was the object of general attention, and the officers were frequently obliged to interfere to repress the curious crowd which incommoded her, by pressing so closely round her.

The witnesses on the back of the bill of indictment were fifty-five; they were all in attendance outside the Court door, each provided with a ticket. Mrs. Probert and Miss Noyes were dressed in blue cloth pelisses, straw bonnets, green veils, and white gowns. Mrs. Probert was in custody of the gaoler of St. Albans, but she was permitted to go at large on finding sufficient bail, which she did. At three o'clock the most of the witnesses returned to town, Miss Noyes and her brother were among them. Mrs. Probert did not return.

It is due to the High Sheriff, and to Mr. Nicholson, the Under Sheriff, to state, that they gave every accommodation to the reporters for the different papers. Mr. Nicholson, in particular, rendered every facility.

When the prisoners were removed from the Court they observed a perfect silence with respect to intercourse with each other. Thurtell was in good spirits, Probert dejected, and Hunt was greatly depressed. Thomas Thurtell saw his brother before he departed, he was brought to town in the Hertford coach, and was lodged in Newgate at eight o'clock.

WESTMINSTER REVIEW.—In projecting this New Quarterly Review, the Conductors conceive that they are about to take possession of ground entirely unoccupied by any prior Publication. The other Critical Works of the same kind are the powerful and efficient advocates of their respective parties; but it is the firm and decided determination of the Editors of the Westminster Review, to take part with no faction, to support no long of men, and to perform the duties of the office which they have undertaken, and in which they are now entered, as an unbiassed community by personal friendship. In this Publication they have organized a Critical and Political Review, whose decisions shall be formed on the basis of general principles alone, and which, even should their tone ever rise to severity, will never be polluted by the virulence of party spirit. The Editors have great satisfaction in stating, that they are the organs of an able and active society of individuals, who having seen with regret and somewhat of indignation, that the name of Criticism has been usurped with sinister views, and that the interests of literature and of a wise policy, and through them, those of the public have been sacrificed for selfish and unworthy purposes, are resolved to establish a tribunal where a fairer and more unbiassed hearing may be obtained. They are far from denying the utility of the works of this nature which already exist; on the contrary, they are willing to confess that they have produced much good, and that they still represent with zeal and ability the parties they espouse. But the Editors of the Westminster Review are of opinion, that between their narrow and conflicting systems, there is one great class of interests too often lost sight of; these are the interests of the community at large. It is their ambition to make this Review the representative of the true interests of the majority, and the firm and invariable advocate of those principles which tend to increase the happiness, and ameliorate the condition of mankind. Having said thus much of the spirit in which the work will be conducted, the Editors feel disposed, as regards the plan and execution of it, to refer to their forthcoming Number. In a short announcement like the present, it would be impossible to describe them with any precision; and under any circumstances, perhaps a specimen would be more satisfactory than a theoretic description. It will readily be seen, from a slight inspection, that the plan embraces some novelties, and it is confidently trusted, that the execution will be such as to deserve no small portion of the public attention.—The First Number will appear in January, 1824.—Printed for Longman, Hurst, Rees, Orme, Brown, and Green, Paternoster row, London.

"The Cases detailed by Mr. Curtis are 58 in number, and the Treatment appears to be judicious, simple, and successful."—Medico Chirurgical Review.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

A correspondent complains that, on Monday, when he succeeded in getting into the pit of Drury Lane, after a world of struggling, he found all the best places occupied by persons previously admitted—whether this be true or not, the managers best can tell.

The letter signed "J. Newman" is "too strong" in its present shape—we shall be happy to extract and condense, if that will suit Mr. Newman's friend.

The letter on public schools is plausible, and washing tea-cups, or fetching coals, certainly do not at the first blush appear fit employments for the sons of noblemen and gentlemen, but we would advise our correspondent to draw his information from some better sources than the reports of little boys at home for the holidays—whatever may be the trifling disadvantages of the system of fagging, or whatever the young gentleman who went to Eton from a Seminary may say, the fact of the superiority of public school education over all other modes speaks for itself—and so far from the dreadfully degrading duties of washing tea-cups, or fagging at cricket, breaking the spirit or vulgarising the mind, the air and manner of a boy educated at a public school universally speak for themselves, and they are attributes never gotten rid of. As for the advancement of men in the world who come into it from public schools, we need only refer to the Peerage and the Senate, the Ministry, and their legitimate opponents the respectable Whigs—there are many men at the bar who have not had the advantages of public education—look at them—see the difference.

A. B. will find a letter for him, as he desired, on Tuesday.

We have received the affidavits respecting Mr. Macaulay, of which we shall gladly avail ourselves. Our excellent correspondent, enclosing a pamphlet, is also sincerely thanked for his communication: his little observation is certainly gratifying.

In answer to Episcopus, we say, we have not given up the cause of the Scots Episcopal Church; but we will submit to dictation from no man, from no set of men, and before another line appears in this paper on the subject, we will ascertain what right the person who called at our office had to meddle—we take up public questions upon public grounds, and we will have an explanation of what, as it was represented to us, seems to be an uncalled for and (in the legal sense) an impertinent interference on the part of that person.

We are requested to state, that Mr. Horace Twiss is not the author of Paradise Lost, nor of Junius's Letters.

Our other friends must stand over.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, Dec. 7.

Our readers will perceive by the account of the proceedings at Hertford, which occupy a considerable space in our paper to-day, that the trial of the prisoners is postponed until the 6th of next month.

We consider it our duty to abstain from any observation upon a subject so important as that in which the lives of individuals are at stake, and shall, therefore, remain silent upon some very important points which have reached us.

We congratulate our countrywomen upon one fact, which is the absence of females from the court-house on Friday—we cannot but think an eagerness on the part of the soft sex to witness the proceedings on trials of prisoners for horrid crimes, extremely unfeminine and indelicate, and we sincerely hope that the circumstance to which we allude, arose from a proper feeling of what is due to themselves, rather than from an apprehension of too much crowding.

A catch-penny attempt has been made to delude the public by a story of the existence of Mr. Weare, and an assertion that the whole of the mysterious transactions of Gill's-hill Cottage had their origin in a wager—such speculations are ended by the events of Friday.

The only memorable part of the affair, was an application from Mr. Fenton, the attorney, to postpone the trial, on the ground that the legal proceedings had been so generally published, that a fair trial could not be expected—Mr. Fenton having given the very affidavit upon which he moved, for publication to a newspaper the night before.

We have to apologize to our readers for an unusual number of advertisements which appear in to-day's paper—calculating upon the publication of a supplementary number, we admitted many more than according to our established rule we are in the habit of admitting—the unforeseen postponement of the trial will, we hope, plead our excuse with our readers.

We have great pleasure in announcing the most honourable acquittal of Captain George Harris, C.B. of his Majesty's ship Hussar—we were perfectly satisfied as to the result of his trial (or trials) when we read the proceedings at Plymouth. Whether the blame rests with the Foreign Office or with Sir Edward Thornton, we do not pretend to decide, but as far as the finding of the court goes, the ambassador appears to be decidedly in the wrong—this is no business of ours, his Excellency was not upon his trial, and he may be privately whipped by the powerful pen of the Foreign Secretary in Downing-street, at discretion, for all we care; but it gives us great pleasure to find a gallant and distinguished officer like Captain Harris, come from the ordeal of a court-martial, not only without blame or imputation, but bringing with him in its sentence, fresh testimony of zeal and activity in time of peace, correspondent with the skill and bravery he has heretofore evinced in time of war.

Every body knows the nature of worldly friendships—Husbands and wives, fathers and children, brothers and sisters, may perhaps maintain unvarying affections, immutable attachments, but with indifferent persons how completely circumstances regulate the feelings.

Let a man be oppressed, beaten and fallen, hundreds will join the trampling party to keep him down, and dance over the ruin they delight to witness; let him rally, and let the sun shine upon him once again, those who never permitted his name to pass their lips during his obscurity and distress, shall make the world ring with his praises, extol his merits and virtues, greet him with smiles, and even condescend in the warmth of their friendship, to ask and accept favours at his hands.

We are led to these reflections by the case of poor Wilson. While in the plenitude of his popularity, covered with honourable distinctions, courted and sought (certainly not by any very respectable part of the community) a patron of dinners, a patriot, a general, and a senator, &c. &c. we opposed him tooth and nail, because (whether intentionally or not, we cannot decide) he was acting mischievously and espousing a cause in opposition to the tranquility of the country, and the best interests of society. Now we are actuated by a very different sentiment, and in the melancholy state to which he is reduced, cannot but feel the deepest compassion for him.

When we recollect Wilson, gentlemanly, good-natured, high-spirited, and loyal as he was, when, with the brightest prospects before him, he was promoted to the personal staff of the Monarch, when the sovereigns of Europe were vieing with each other to offer him marks of their esteem,—then a General in our service, who, although he had not shared in any part of the important campaigns on the continent, nor ever been in any serious engagement, still had the field open before him. When we recollect this, and find him first degraded from his English rank, (and we know the bitter pang this first blow caused him,) and then gradually deprived of every distinction he has ever received, including by the last decree of the Emperor of Austria, even the small cross of Maria Theresa, from the possession of which only he claimed the nominal distinction of knighthood.

Poor, as to pecuniary matters, this individual then, who might have been the envy and admiration of society and the service, is thrown upon the world without a pursuit, or a profession, wounded, for the first time, (fighting in a cause, the leader of which, has expiated his zeal upon a gibbett) having already tried the scheme of raising a subscription, and holding only by a frail tenure, a seat for a borough of Southwark!

We say frail tenure, for alas! we know that Wilson's parliamentary conduct on the Catholic question has greatly impaired his popularity amongst his constituents; and however amiable and exemplary the body may be which has hitherto returned him, we apprehend, that as evils seldom come alone, their rejection of his services will end the "strange eventful history" of his life; leaving his name only to be recorded as the historian of Bonaparte, and the subsequent preserver of one of his most desperate myrmidons.

It is at this juncture the full force of our reflections is felt—where is poor Wilson now—has he been received by his constituents, have banquets been given to him on his return?—do we find him associated with those dukes and earls, who were once his friends—no—we repeat that most sincerely and truly we compassionate and pity his sufferings and degradations, for however justly they have fallen upon him, and however much he may have contributed to bring them upon himself, his misconduct, in many instances, may have arisen from the errors of his head, which we really believe was oftener in fault than his heart.

We remember to have seen a jeu d'esprit, written by the once facetious Caleb Whitefoord, called "Errors of the Press," which partakes greatly of the spirit which animates the "Cross-readings," of which Whitefoord was the original inventor; but, droll as it is, it is evidently made. Now, within the last few weeks, there have actually occurred some typographical blunders, in the daily and weekly papers, beyond the power of fiction.

For instance, we are informed by one journalist that "a "young surgeon having been caught near Limehouse, was "sent to Brighton express, where His Majesty was graciously "pleased to eat part of him roasted for dinner.—This," adds the writer, "has been time out of mind a Royal dish." What the Royal College may say to this, we really do not pretend to know.

We are told, in an account of the re-opening of the Jewish Synagogue, in Duke's-place, after its recent repairs, that the usual ceremonies were performed by a Rabbit of very imposing appearance.

In a Leicestershire paper, in an account of a fox chase in Yorkshire, it is accidentally recorded, "that the hounds went "off in fine style, after a beautiful Bust"—we presume of Mr. Fox.

A provincial paper tells us, that "a prisoner was committed to Norwich Castle for horse-stealing;" and adds, "he "was sent off to Norwich in a post-chaise, in the custody of a "turkey."—In any other county the omission of the N before the K would not so much have signified—but in Norfolk it puzzles one.

One of the London papers mis-called Mrs. Bunn, of Drury Lane Theatre, in so extraordinary a manner that we cannot venture to mention the blunder; and an Irish editor has erratically denominated the late unsuccessful candidate at the India House, Mr. Muskrat, a name somewhat in mauvaise odeur amongst our oriental friends.

The Waterford or Wexford Courier, (we forget which), said a few weeks since that they were happy to announce the rapid recovery of Miss O'Reilly, of Ballymungoozle, (or some such place), from her late violent attack of a military fever, which was wholly attributable to her having conformed herself to a cooling regiment.

A periodical work in the interest of the Saints, inveighs bitterly against us for our attacks upon Mr. Wilberforce, and speaking of our charges against him, touching hypocrisy and duplicity, observes "such attacks are contemptible, we "have the greatest faith in Mr. Wilberforce, and the "purity of his intentions, and as little believe the calum"nies of John Bull, as we should, if he told us, that Mr. "Wilberforce had been detected, playing the game of "Rogue et Noir."

A reference is made in a Sunday paper of last week, for a porter to deliver messages to A.B. Lying's Inn.

In the account of the loss of a fishing boat near Torbay, we are told by a Cornish reporter that the fisherman and his two sons were luckily rescued from a watery grave, but that it was impossible to save any of their "souls."

A Dorsetshire paper of last week, unwittingly corroborating the radical attacks upon the humanity of our amiable and excellent Secretary of State for the Home Department, has the following paragraph:—

"Mr. Peel remains at Lulworth, amusing himself by shooting peasants in that neighbourhood, in which diversion the Right Hon. Gentleman has been particularly successful this season."

More ridiculous is the following announcement, which may be found by reference to a Worcestershire journal of the 22d of October last:—

"On Tuesday, at Droitwitch, Mrs. Phillips, of a son and heir."

This must be sheer mis-spelling, and cannot even be permitted to rank with the errors of the press already noticed: the following is clearly a blunder of the compositor:

"On Thursday next, and each succeeding Thursday in the present month, will be delivered in the Assembly Rooms at Taunton, by Mr. Urquhart, a Course of Lectures upon the Chemical Properties of Food. "Lecture I.—On the Alimentary qualities of Milk.

"Admission three shillings and sixpence to each lecture, or one guinea for the course.

"N. B. Every subscriber will be furnished with a syllabub!"

It is impossible to recollect the innumerable fooleries of a similar nature which we have seen, but we will mark them down as they occur.

Some of the Spanish Revolutionists arrived the other day at Cork from Gibraltar, and were received in a very different manner from that observed towards Mina at Plymouth, where we are sorry to see some officers of the garrison (whose names have been furnished us) greatly distinguished themselves.

The principal man of the set who landed at Cork is a priest of the name of Villa Nueva, a scribbler of all work, having been actually guilty of writing thirty volumes as thick as so many cheeses. He is to stay at Holland-House with that exemplary nobleman, Lady Holland. His ecclesiastical rank is that of Canon of Castile. Rogers was dining in the dampery at Kensington when the arrival of this reverend personage was mentioned.

"The Canon is come," said Lord Holland.—"What!" said my Lady.

"The Canon of Castile, my love," said the Deputy Grand Master of the House.

"Send a carriage for him, my Lord," said the Grand Master.

The Deputy Grand rang the bell.

"A Cannon of Cast Steel from Spain," said the waggish Rogers, "how serviceable he must have been during the campaign!"

This, it is needless to add, like the gunpowder shipped by Macaulay's brokers, "went off" remarkably well.

The Opposition Papers have occasionally made a sort of bluster about the Austrian loan, and have expressed, in vulgar Whig terms, their doubts whether any re-payment would ever take place. We can tell these Whigs, that no longer ago than last Wednesday, upwards of two hundred and twenty-two thousand pounds were actually paid into the hands of Government as an instalment.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE.

TO JOHN BULL.

Sir,—I have observed, with great pleasure, the call which you have made in your last Number, of Sunday the 30th November, for an explanation relative to the Charge exhibited by Mr. Jones against the Council of the Royal Society of Literature; and the terms in which you declare, "that you shall be "happy and proud to publish any Statement or Vindication of "the Society which it may think proper to put forth in answer "to this violent accusation of breach of faith."

That the Society, as a body, will deem it incumbent upon them to put forth any reply to the charge so exhibited I do not think probable; and for the reasons which I shall assign, in stating an individual opinion upon the case.

Had a Society for advancing Literature, by proposing prizes, been a newly-devised Institution in the world, I am clearly of opinion that every condition, requisite to be known in aspiring to its rewards, ought to have been distinctly expressed; for how else could the candidates be aware that, after a prize was offered it might chance that none would be awarded? But when similar societies or institutions have subsisted for ages, both at home and abroad—when the proposing, awarding, or withholding prizes is regulated on principles notorious, and sanctioned by unvarying practice; it was not to be expected, that a new Society proceeding after their example, should think it necessary to declare principles so well understood; and which academical experience and sound reason might either have taught or have suggested to every one. Mr. Jones's error consists in assuming, that when a prize is offered by a learned body for the best poem on any given subject, the best of a collection of bad poems, or, as he terms it, "the Master Thistle," is by right entitled to the adjudication of the prize. It is astonishing, that his residence at Brasenose should never have awakened the consideration, that in all similar cases there is, and must be supposed in reason to be, a discretionary power vested in the body which is to decide on the merits of the compositions; who act in trust for the donors of the prize, and whose judgment is not liable to an indiscriminate charge of breach of faith in withholding it, because it may happen, that they faithfully execute their trust in doing so. There is a point of excellence, which compositions are supposed to attain before they can be considered as qualified to compete for a prize; and a discretionary power to judge of that point, has ever been advantageously committed to a council of men of competent learning and judgment. That the principle of this practice is not only reasonable but necessary, will appear on a very short consideration.

The object of the prizes, is not to multiply verses, but to stimulate and call forth real and unequivocal genius. The Credit of the Body, no less than that of the Donor of the Prize, is inseparably connected with the object of their choice; and therefore a full discretionary faculty, in making that choice, has ever been understood to reside in that body. Thus, if the proposal of the Newdigate Prize should draw forth nothing but compositions which the judges esteemed undeserving of it, Mr. Jones might be assured, that the University would not permit the "Master Thistle" to figure in its theatre; but that the Prize would not be adjudged. When the two Buchanan prizes of 500*l.* were severally proposed at the two Universities, it was adjudged at the one, but it was not awarded at the other.* Yet, no previous, express caution to the candidates accompanied the proposal of the prize, because it was supposed, that every candidate knew the possibility of the contingency; neither was any breach of faith charged against the University by any of the disappointed aspirants. The Royal Society of Literature, instituted and conducted by united members from both those Universities, and copying their models, could not suppose it necessary to proclaim what it supposed every one to know who entered the classical lists; certainly it would not have deemed it to be necessary for one who declares himself, late of Brasenose College in Oxford.

Upon this ground, therefore, I should think that the Royal Society of Literature will consider their conduct, in the occasion arraigned by Mr. Jones, to be so perfectly unimpeachable, that they will contentedly leave its justification to the good sense and equity of the public.

But I cannot refrain from calling your consideration to the position of the accuser in this charge. He is one of the candidates. Of the others, we hear nothing, though precisely in the same position, they have issued no complaints; but from Mr. Jones we have an arraignment filled with the most virulent obloquy that has for a long time appeared before the public. Now, Sir, you are not renowned for dullness of perception; and therefore, you cannot well fail to discern in the violence of Mr. Jones's attack, the powerful action of anger, roused by the disappointment of self-approbation. And is this a sufficient cause for discharging a torrent of inflammatory obloquy against those, the delicacy of whose trust has imposed upon them, unwillingly, in their best judgments, the necessity of producing that disappointment?

It is greatly to be lamented, that Mr. Jones did not, in the first instance, coerce the irascibility of his temperament, until he had ascertained whether reason was with him or against him. He would then have had composure to receive a conviction; that the council of the Royal Society of Literature, in coming to a decision productive of a disappointment, which all will concur in regretting, but which would never have been known to them but for his own communication, have only en-honoured to discharge, conscientiously, the sacred, delicate, and arduous trust reposed in them by the munificent and Royal author of the prize.

* It would have been awarded at the other University also, had not the composition which would have obtained it (as has been acknowledged) been delivered too late.

I shall abstain from seeking any justification for the decision of the council in the composition of Mr. Jones's Poem; nor do I mean to insinuate any criticism respecting it.

I am, Sir, your obedient Servant,

MODERATOR.

Dec. 4, 1823.

In giving place to this letter, we should observe, that we have received a communication from MR. JACOB JONES, announcing that he has withdrawn the offensive attack upon the Society which he thought fit to publish with his Poems; and having cancelled the original preface, has substituted another. He has diffusely upon the subject, and encloses us a letter which he has written to some literary weekly paper, but we think the public will be best satisfied of the justness of the decision made by the ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE, by the explanation we have given above, and the disappearance of MR. JONES'S vituperative attack upon it.

We perceive by the MORNING POST of yesterday, that the long talked of novel of "PERCY MALLORY" is on the eve of publication—it is much talked of in Edinburgh as very superior to PEN OWEN, by the same author; but we believe no copies have yet reached London. MR. GALT'S SPAE-WIFE is also on the eve of publication, of which report speaks favourably, although we must admit we think MR. GALT sometimes too much—there are few master spirits like SIR WALTER who can command genius.

In redeeming the pledge which we have given to notice MR. GLEIG'S Letter to SIR EDWARD KNATCHBULL, it may not be amiss to recur to the remarks which we made last Sunday, so far as to request our readers to bear in mind the facts there stated, which, although they by no means and in no manner affect the question at issue, might otherwise be laid hold of by some of the cavillers, whom our notice of the pamphlet before us will, we have no doubt, call into action.

MR. GLEIG's aim in the little work under consideration is to disprove the imaginary advantage arising from the labours of the Missionary Society, or as it is called, the "Church Missionary Society," and we can do no better than submit certain extracts from the publication itself, in order to display the style and manner of the writer, and the ability he has evinced in the pursuit of his object.

Whatever is local, whatever is personal, we shall beg to pass over, because, as it appears to us, the valuable part of the letter to the world in general is the developement of facts relative to the Missionaries, and the observations of the writer thereon, and since we are inclined to believe that the interest excitable by the manœuvrings of MESSRS. PRATT, BICKERSTETH, LLOYD, HARKER, RICHARDS, or NOEL, would not be great, we shall confine ourselves in the mention of their names to little anecdotes illustrative of the subject, leaving all extraneous matter, all county feelings, and "parish business" out of the discussion—premising this, let MR. GLEIG speak for himself.

"The points, then, which I would desire to establish, are these. First, that the society styling itself the Church Missionary Society, is not a Church Missionary Society, if by the term church be meant the venerable and apostolic Church of England; and, consequently, that its present appellation is a palpable, though specious misnomer. Secondly, that the very ground-work of its proceedings, the very first principle upon which it acts, is in direct opposition to the distinguishing doctrine of our Church. Thirdly, that its existence as a Church Missionary Society is not required; and, fourthly, that even upon general grounds, its modes of operation are calculated to do no good, while there is every reason to suspect that they do harm."

MR. GLEIG then proceeds to shew that the Missionary Society is not a Church Missionary Society, if by Church is meant the Church of England—he denies that a society composed of churchmen can be properly called the Church Missionary Society, inasmuch as it is not upheld, nor its principles supported by the Clergy.

"The next question," (says MR. GLEIG,) "to be decided is, by what marks shall we distinguish a Church of England society from a society of individuals who outwardly conform to the established religion of the country? Now, I must confess that I see no difficulty in answering the question. The badge which distinguishes the former is so strong that a blind man might almost perceive it; whilst it is equally evident, that wherever that badge is not to be found the assumption of the title "a Church Society," is arrogant and presumptuous. That is to say, no Church Society (if by the term church be meant the venerable apostolic church of England,) which is countenanced and supported by all our Bishops, by the majority of the clergy, and by a large proportion of the laity. Its object must be, exclusively, the advancement of religion and sound morality, and it must pursue that object in strict compliance with the fundamental principles of the Church itself. There may, indeed, exist within the pale of the Church, many Christian societies, the objects of which may be different, though all are equally composed of individual members of the Church of England.—One may be one society for circulating religious tracts, another for establishing schools, a third for the suppression of vice, and a fourth for the new-pewing of churches; but because the individual members of each of these are churchmen, is each, therefore, to be styled a Church of England Society? Surely not, unless it can rank among its members, if not the whole body, at least the heads of the Church; for societies be Church of England societies which are composed of individuals who conform to the established religion of the country, our great university club is a Church of England society, and each of the colleges in Oxford is especially entitled to that honourable appellation. You will, perhaps, ask me, is there then such a society as a Church of England Society in existence? I reply, without hesitation, that there are two, namely, the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, and the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts. These are, in the strictest sense of the term, Church of England societies. They are countenanced and supported by all her clergy, by a very large majority of her Clergy, and by a vast proportion of her lay members on whom the good things of this life have been bestowed; nor will the warmest advocates of other associations refuse to them the praise which is due to pre-eminent exertions in the cause of sound Christianity."

MR. GLEIG then proceeds to support these orthodox societies against the attacks of the Hon. and Rev. MR. NOEL, and combats with great ability and success, the Honourable and Reverend Gentleman's assertion. "that the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, has not until very lately even contemplated the conversion of the heathen." MR. GLEIG sets forth both the plan laid down and the principles acted upon by the Society in question, and then proceeds to shew, that while those societies exist, the existence of the Missionary Society is not required: and proceeds to aver, that—

"Upon general grounds—that is to say, laying aside all considerations of what is due from churchmen to the constitution and principles of their church—the mode of operation adopted by the Church Missionary Society is calculated to produce no good effect; whilst there is every reason to apprehend that it is productive of evil."

"I begin my reasoning on this subject by an assertion which will no doubt startle the friends of the Church Missionary Society, especially those amongst them who, like the Rev. T. BARTLETT, are in love with the good missionary, AUGUSTINE,' and please themselves by fancying that this venerable man, and his venerable company, as they chanted their litanies, and prayed that God would avert his wrath from that city (the city of Canterbury) may have passed along the streets of their own little parishes.' My assertion is this, that christianity is not and never was meant to be the religion of men in a savage state; that its doctrines are too refined, its laws too pure, and sanctions of the wild hunter of the woods; and that those who of civilized life, are only 'casting their pearls before swine,' and fruitlessly wasting their labour. That I am borne out in this assertion by the actual failure of all attempts to convert the still savage tribes of Africa and elsewhere, a candid perusal of the reports of your own society may alone convince you. But I have much wider and surer grounds upon which to build my theory. I contend that it formed at no time a part of the divine economy that men should become spiritually religious beings as long as they continued savages; and I appeal to the history of all God's dealings with his creatures, as substantiating this opinion.

"By referring to the oldest of all known histories, the Holy Bible, you will find that our gracious Creator has dealt very differently with his creatures in different ages of the world. When the first five books of Moses were written, we know that the whole human race was sunk in utter barbarism; that in that barbarism God's chosen people fully partook; that arts were in their infancy, sciences unknown, and the boasted reason of man in a very trifling degree, if at all, elevated above brute instinct. Now view, I beseech you, the nature of the religion which was communicated by God himself, and kept alive in the minds of a people thus barbarous. In the whole Levitical code there is not so much as an allusion to a future state. The truths of God's unity, his power and omnipresence, were indeed impressed upon the minds of the people; but these impressions were made by a constant recurrence of the most splendid and striking miracles. The ten commandments to which the Israelites were required to pay obedience, were delivered to them by the voice of the Most High himself from the midst of the burning mountain; whilst every breach of these religious commands, was punished as a breach of the civil code, and obedience was uniformly rewarded by length of days and prosperity. In the infancy of the world, in short, men were treated by their Creator as children are treated by their school-master; they were constrained to perform certain duties, and to avoid certain acts, by the influence of immediate rewards and punishments; whilst a license in matters of morality was granted to them for which we cannot possibly account on any other ground than that their minds were as yet too dark to be subjected to all those restraints which a perfect system of faith and morals necessarily would impose upon them.

"In proportion as time passed, however, and arts and sciences began to flourish—in proportion as men became more and more civilized, and therefore better able to bear the light of revelations more pure, those stupendous displays of almighty power which had captivated the outward senses of their forefathers were discontinued, and truths more sublime, relating as well to the nature of the Deity as of their own present and future state, were promulgated amongst them. Thus we find the religion of the Israelites in the days of King David a very different thing from what it was in the days of Moses. No longer were the senses of the people dazzled by repeated reversions of the ordinary laws of nature; no longer were they retained in obedience to the will of God by temporal rewards and punishments unerringly administered. Their faith had become more elevated; their notions of God more correct; their religion no longer consisted entirely of external rites and ceremonies, but took up its seat in their minds, and began to actuate their secret thoughts as well as their outward proceedings.

"As the fulness of time drew near, again, these more refined religious principles received every day a greater and a greater polish. In the days of the prophets, the kingdom of Judah had become famous for its wealth and its splendour; its civil code was wise and prudent; a knowledge of the arts of agriculture and architecture, of eloquence and of poetry, was common amongst the people; they had risen, in short, gradually upon the scale of civilization, and were therefore better fitted than their ancestors had been before them, to receive fresh revelations of the will of God. Notions of a future state accordingly began to be prevalent amongst them, and they looked forward to the coming of their promised Messiah in the full expectation, not only that he would render them masters of this lower world, but also that he would thoroughly purify from all its dross the religion which they had received from their fathers.

"But it was not in the land of Judah alone that men became gradually more and more prepared to receive that perfect revelation of his will which God has conferred upon us through his Son, Christ Jesus. In Greece and Rome the mind of man received a polish as high, perhaps, as any which it is capable of receiving. This polish the Romans carried with them into all the countries which they subdued; and it may be questioned whether the world was ever in a state of more perfect civilization, than when the Son of God condescended to be born of a pure virgin, and appeared among the lowly ones of the earth. It was then, when the fulness of time had come, that the last revelation of his will was made by God to mankind; when their intellectual condition was on the aggregate, perhaps, better fitted to receive it than it has been since, or ever was before: and when the whole known world, being under the rule of a single and a highly polished people, gave the freest scope for a general circulation of the doctrines and precepts of the Gospel among men.

"The truth indeed is, that were it not essentially necessary that men should be freed from barbarism before any thing like a spiritual religion can be embraced amongst them, it is utterly impossible to account for the delay that occurred between the fall of Adam and the coming of Christ. From the instant of Adam's fall, God determined to redeem his creatures from its consequences, and to make known to them, through the medium of their Redeemer, all the duties which he, as a God of purity and holiness, should require at their hands. But we know that a Being of infinite goodness would not wantonly or capriciously keep back from his creatures, during four or five thousand years, a species of knowledge so essential to their present and future happiness, were there not some just and reasonable cause of delay; and hence we conclude, that by the phrase, 'fulness of time,' is meant the particular period at which the degree of civilization prevalent amongst men was sufficient for God's purposes; in other words, that period when men, having merged from a state of savagism into one social and refined existence, were capable of understanding and justly appreciating the pure, simple and sublime religion, to communicate which formed one of the designs of our Saviour's incarnation, and occupied the whole time of his sojourn upon earth.

"In further proof of the correctness of my theory, that the pure religion of the Gospel was not and could not be intended for men in a savage state, I beseech you to consider well the course adopted by the apostles who first promulgated it. In all their wanderings, we never once read of their visiting the wild and barbarous nations of the north. Their field of operations lay among their own countrymen, among the inhabitants of Rome, and of Greece, as well in Europe as in Asia Minor; but not one of them made his way into Scandinavia or Siberia, or so much as dreamed of directing his course thither. It has been well remarked by an anonymous writer in a late periodical work, that the conduct of St. Paul, whilst he was at Athens, differed in a very striking degree, from that pursued by him after his shipwreck on the coast of Melita. In the former place, 'being moved at the sight of the superstitions which still disgraced that celebrated seat of pagan wisdom; and being satisfied that the people were capable of feeling the force of reasoning, he addressed to them that eloquent argument for the existence, the unity, and the spirituality of God, which is contained in the seventeenth chapter of the Acts.' He found there a suitable field, and a favourable occasion to call forth his zeal in the cause of the Gospel, and to recommend it to the attention of those who wanted nothing but candour to appreciate its many excellencies.—Certain philosophers, of the Epicureans and of the Stoics, encountered him; and they took him and brought him unto Areopagus, saying, May we know what this new doctrine, whereof thou speakest, is? for thou bringest certain strange things to our ears. We would know, therefore, what these things mean.' The apostle accepted this challenge, and his eloquence and reasoning were not altogether fruitless. Dionysius, the Areopagite, and Damaris, and others with him, clave unto him and believed.

"But how different was his conduct at the island of Melita; where he was cast ashore, among a barbarous people! He made no attempt to convert them to the Christian faith. He even made no endeavour to correct their notions, though he perceived they were most egregiously in error, and had some chance of producing conviction; for whilst upon the former every appeal to the understanding would have been lost, every reference to first principles, or established authority, would have been empty sounds. He left them, therefore, as he found them, grateful, indeed, for their kindness, but without having made any effort to add them to the disciples of Christ.' But would St. Paul have thus acted, had he found the people of Melita in a fit state to receive the Gospel? I leave you to answer the question for yourself."

MR. GLEIG proceeds to expose the blunders and correct the mistakes of several of the Missionary Clergymen, and had we room we should continue our extracts from this portion of the pamphlet; but we are anxious to afford a place to some "matter-of-fact," which, with us, is always a most important part even of the most luminous discussions.

The following requires the serious attention of those who have the real interests of our EAST INDIAN possessions at heart, and while hypocritical sanctity, and jesuitical cant, have endangered, in the highest degree, our West INDIAN Colonies, it is as well (now that the Saints are evidently turning their eyes towards the DIRECTION) that the real nature and character of the opposition of the Missionaries to the established religion of millions should be perfectly understood.

"In the Journal of the REV. THOMAS NORTON, the Society's Missionary at Allepie, we have the following extraordinary detail:—'April 9.—Attended the Malabar feast, held at Ambula-poolie. Arrived at the place about half past three, P.M.

"'I began to talk with a goodly number of people that stood about 'me, who, by their fixed eyes and open mouths, seemed to consider 'me as much a curiosity as any part of the exhibitions that were 'about to be made. I began by asking what feast this was? 'In honour of KRISHNOO.' 'Who is KRISHNOO?' 'Our god.' 'What will 'he do for you for all this?' 'Grant us his favour.' 'What is his 'favour?' 'To give us all our supplies.' 'In this world or the next?' 'In this world.' 'Who is to provide for you in the next world?' Silence, except from two or three. 'We do not understand, SAHIB.' 'Do not you think that you all have souls which will live in another 'world, after your bodies are dead?' 'Yes.' What can and will 'KRISHNOO do for these souls of yours in another world?' 'We do 'not know.' This gave me an opportunity of speaking on the goodness, mercy and love of the true God; and of the love of the Lord 'Jesus Christ in dying for men.'

"'By this time my congregation was much increased. I asked if any 'could read Tamul. Found a few who could; and presented them with 'a tract or two. At first they manifested a fear of taking them, and 'wished to return them. I inquired why they feared? Two or three 'began reading, others heard and seemed much pleased, so that they 'took courage and requested some for themselves; and my little stock 'in hand was soon exhausted. Had I had a few thousands, they 'would, in a little time, have been disposed of.

"'I asked if they would like me to talk with them concerning the 'true God, of whom they were ignorant? They expressing a wish, I 'began with them on John iii. 36. stopping every now and then to ask 'if they understood me. Some answered, 'the words, but not the things.' Some remarked that they were good things, others that 'they were glorious things.'

"Now, Sir, before I proceed to extract any other quotation from this invaluable work, permit me to offer a few observations on that passage which you have just perused.

"I will venture to assert, that the above detail will be followed by no dispassionate person without exciting feelings of mingled sorrow and indignation. Had MR. NORTON possessed three grains of common sense, he must have been aware that his impertinent and unmeaning intrusion upon a ceremony, regarded as holy and sacred by those who performed it, was little likely, under any circumstances, to convert to his faith a people many degrees more enlightened, and more capable of following a chain of argument, than his auditors at Ambula-poolie appear to have been. But having thus obtruded himself upon their notice, how does he act? He plunges at once into the most abstruse doctrines of our faith; he asks them questions as to the probable fate of their souls in another world, when it is evident from their answers that they entertained no reasonable notions on the subject of the soul's immortality; nor were aware of its difference, in essence, from the body in which it was clothed. Then after having reviled and sneered at their god KRISHNOO, this judicious missionary makes no attempt to explain to them the real nature of the Creator, but begins a sermon.—Ye faculties of common reason, which appear to hold no intercourse with MR. NORTON'S brain—an actual sermon, as if he had been preaching in a parish church in England, on John iii. 36.! And what was the result?—With the greatest apparent simplicity, he tells us exactly what we might expect to hear—that the poor people understood his words, but nothing whatever of the things concerning which he spoke; in plain language, that he had been casting his pearls before swine. As to the farce of distributing tracts, it is truly ludicrous, especially when we know, upon his own authority, that only a few of those who received them were able to read.

"But this is nothing, when compared with the following exquisite specimen of missionary labours among the savages of New Zealand. MR. W. HALL has favoured us with a long journal of his movements and adventures in that country. Among other particulars we learn, that, coasting along shore, his boat was on one occasion caught in a squall, which, after wetting the crew with the spray of the sea, compelled them to land. "We met, however,' says he, 'with some very friendly natives, who invited us to their houses. We took up our residence in a large open shed, which they had for beating fern-root in. They procured us some fire-wood, and I gave them some fish-hooks for their trouble. We then made a large fire in the middle of the shed, and soon got all our wet clothes dried, and were not a little comforted. I then thought that we experienced something like what ST. PAUL did, when he said, 'They made us a fire of sticks, and the barbarous people showed us no little kindness,—(be pleased to observe that this is said by ST. LUKE, not by ST. PAUL),—and we had cause to praise God for all his mercies.'

"All this is very well, and the resemblance between MR. W. HALL, and the great apostle of the Gentiles is no doubt, so far, very accurate. But we shall see presently that their conduct towards the 'barbarous people' was widely different. Whilst the latter was satisfied to avail himself of their hospitality, and thankful for their kindness, the former proceeds to give much more substantial proof of his gratitude. Full of compassion at their degraded state, and eager to shed upon them some portion of the light which illumined his own mind, MR. W. HALL had no sooner swallowed his supper, than finding himself surrounded by a considerable party of the natives, he and his brethren proceeded to sing a hymn, after which MR. W. HALL himself read a chapter in the New Testament!! and told them his errand in coming among them—'that it was not for the sake of their potatoes and pork, as they had often said; but for the purpose of teaching them the knowledge of God and his book, which he then held in his hand—that there was plenty of potatoes and pork in England, and likewise, tea, sugar, bread, and many other good things, which they had not at New Zealand—that our God, who lives in heaven, sent his Son down to the earth to save us—that He sent his servants into all the world, to tell the people what they must do, that their souls might go to heaven, and be in light, warmth, and love, for ever and ever—that there were many good gentlemen in England who loved all the black people—that they sent preachers over all the world—that they had sent some to Otaheite, and had sent them (MR. W. HALL and his companions) to New Zealand, to tell the natives what good things there were in God's book, &c. &c. After which,' says MR. HALL, 'we knelt down to prayer; and then lay down by the fire for the night.'

"But, alas! neither MR. HALL'S prayer, nor his discourse had been of much avail; for 'in the morning, when we went down to the beach to look after our boat, we found to our great astonishment, that the natives had taken away our rudder hanging.' Why MR. W. HALL should have experienced astonishment at such an event, I really cannot understand, since it was exactly the sort of thing which might have been naturally expected to occur among savages, ignorant of the very foundation upon which a civilized state of society is erected, the sacredness of private property."

It will be evident to our readers that MR. GLEIG treats the subject all through with a view to shew the inutility of the Missionary Society—and there are innumerable anecdotes extant to prove the folly and impotency of the labours of their brethren, some of which we would quote were it not that the developement of natural character would have the effect of rendering ridiculous subjects which it is our bounden duty to hold sacred—but we go much further than MR. GLEIG with respect to the labours of the Missionaries in India—we sneer at the folly of the fanatics, but we tremble at the danger—these men, considering themselves authorised by their holy mission, have repeatedly violated the sanctity of temples which for ages have remained unprophaned; they have, poor miserable creatures as they are, dared authoratively to denounce the venerable personages whose irreproachable lives and pastoral characters have secured the affection of their followers, as heathens and sinners, and have ventured to brawl forth their unintelligible tracts during the celebration of the ceremonies of a faith held (with different variations,) by millions of those of whose territories we hold possession, because those millions have been taught to believe that their religion and customs are not to be disturbed.

Let the KINGS of Leadenhall-street look to this, and whenever these European subjects—we mean the proprietors of East India stock—perceive testimonials to a candidate's qualifications for the Direction loaded with the signatures of SAINTS, let them recollect the present state of West Indian property, the state of our colonies, and pause before they introduce men into the government of so vast an empire as British India, whose avowed supporters are the leading advocates of measures which have so deeply endangered possessions and property of a similar nature in another part of the world.

When we lay before our readers the following petition, presented to the late BISHOP of CALCUTTA, perhaps we may be excused for the use of language which might otherwise appear unnecessarily warm :—

"TO THE RIGHT REV. FATHER IN GOD, THOMAS, LORD BISHOP OF CALCUTTA.

"The humble petition of Rutton Ghose, Kantoo Doss, Needy Ram Saha, Bhyrobchund Mullick, Budhee Saha, Bokul Saha, and Gour Dhobee, for themselves, and on behalf of one hundred Christian converts :

"Sheweth, that your petitioners are by birth Hindoos, and heretofore did, as is the custom of Hindoos, perform the worship and ceremonies of their religion, as laid down in the shastras and other holy books, agreeably to the rites which have been established from time immemorial in these regions.

"That some years since certain people, denominated missionaries, arrived from Europe for the express purpose of converting the natives of this country to the Christian faith. Among these missionaries, one named WILLIAM C——, better known by the designation of Doctor C——, did, by the seductive art of persuasion, and by artful representations of the truths and efficacy of the Christian doctrines, as the only sure and certain guides to salvation, at the same time condemning the shastras, tantras, and poorauns of the Hindoos to be the works of Satan, and as such would inevitably lead their believers to damnation and eternal punishment, so operate on the minds of your petitioners, that, led by their fears on the one hand, and seduced on the other hand by the hope of support and protection which he held out to such as should embrace the religion of Christ, your petitioners were induced to forsake the religion of their ancestors, and to suffer the ritual of baptism.

"Your petitioners, placing entire reliance and confidence on the word and faith of Dr. C——; for how could they suppose that a teacher of Christian morality could be found defective to his promises?—became converts to his doctrines, and were baptized, as they were taught to think, into Christ his church. But what must be the poignancy of their feelings to discover that these flattering prospects of support and protection are as unstable and fleeting as the visionary objects of a dream? Expelled from their caste, and expatriated their homes and families, deprived of the countenance and support of those to whom they are allied by the ties of nature, and become objects of contempt and derision to their Hindoo brethren, they now, in this state of humiliation, experience the fallacy of those promises by which they were deluded. Condemned, like outcasts of society, to depend for a precarious subsistence on the lukewarm generosity and benevolence of strangers, to whom shall your petitioners, in the overwhelmings of their affliction, look up for support and protection, unless to your Lordship, who hath been selected to fill the highest and most respectable station of the episcopacy in India?

"Your petitioners, therefore, most humbly solicit your Lordship's attention to THEIR MISERABLE CONDITION, and with hopes of exciting your Lordship's commiseration, they humbly crave permission to approach your Lordship with this relation of their sufferings, and your petitioners, as in duty bound, shall ever pray.

"Calcutta, June 16, 1817."

Such a document we conclude to be unanswerable—but how will our readers (some of whom, perhaps, are contributors to this Missionary Society,) receive the following detail of the results of conversions?

"SADUTSAH, after being baptised at Serampore, went and resided in the Sunderbunds, where renouncing Christ, he set up for one who could charm wild beasts, and got his living by this means.

"DHONUKORA and his wife having been previously examined as to their faith in Christ, &c., and having given satisfactory answers to the questions proposed, were baptized. About four years after, it is said, when DHONUKORA was seized with the fits above stated, his wife, thinking they were the effect of some evil spirit, I am sorry to say, had recourse to the magic of the Rozhas.

"Another female 'attributed the severity of her pains in a long protracted illness, to the anger of the Gods whom she had left, and at 'last put an end to her own life.'

"PETGMBER JUNIOR, who, after 'giving in his experience,' was accepted, and frequently assisted in public worship, was excluded the church for 'wishing to turn away his wife's mind from Christ,' and to worship her as the representative of Kallee; she refuses, and he quarrels with her in consequence.

"'GOLOOK,' a female convert, runs away from her husband, exclaiming that 'live or die she will be Christ's.' After being baptized, sister GOLOOK is detected in an intrigue with a young man under her father's roof; and two other members of the society are found to be aiding and abetting the designs of this pious young lady, who runs away from her husband, determined 'to be Christ's.' The reader need not entertain any apprehension respecting the fate of this amiable convert, who indulged in 'unlawful intimacies,' for after being faithfully and affectionately admonished, she gave satisfactory evidence of penitence for her 'imprudencies,' and was restored.

"In some other cases, evidence of penitence seems to have been wanting. 'We have had distressing accounts from the brethren. One 'of the baptised fell into sin, and gave himself up to it till he fell into 'a state of desperation, and put an end to his life.' Several others have turned aside, and been excluded."

We find it impossible to collate more instances upon the present occasion, but we think the Church of England is greatly indebted to MR. GLEIG for his exposure of the quackery of that system which is spreading rapidly, and which, unless an unanimous effort on the part of those well-affected to the establishment be not made to resist it, bids fair to break down the institutions of the country, and the magnificent structure of the Established Church.

We cannot better conclude this article than with MR. GLEIG's words—

"And now, Sir, I have but one more observation to make. Whatever my brother churchmen may think of my general reasoning on this subject, they surely cannot deny that it is the duty of every Christian to 'do all things in order.' Our holy religion forbids us to do evil that good may ensue, and tells us very explicitly that the end in no case justifies the means. Let us not, then, be hurried, in our zeal for the conversion of the heathen, into the approval of practices entirely contrary to the principles and canons of our church. Let us always remember that our church is an episcopal church, and that we may not invade the privileges of the episcopacy without giving at the same time a mortal wound to the mother which nourishes us; because we have the very highest authority for believing that if 'a kingdom be divided against itself it cannot stand.'

"Once more, Sir, I beg to assure you of my sincere personal respect, and to subscribe myself, your faithful humble servant,

"Ash, near Wingham, Oct. 17, 1823. "G. R. GLEIG."

SPEECH OF SIR REYNOLD ALLEYNE,

In answer to Mr. Hamden,

AT A MEETING OF THE COUNCIL IN BARBADOES.

[Concluded from our last.]

SIR REYNOLD ALLEYNE then rose and addressed the Board :—

"Gentlemen,—When I reflect on the able and judicious arguments which have been used by my honourable and learned friend (MR. HAMDEN) against our adopting, in our legislative capacity, the whole of the measures recommended in my LORD BATHURST's letter to his Excellency the Governor, as a code of laws for the future government of our slaves, I feel that I cannot possibly throw any new light on this subject, nor advance any arguments so well calculated to express our gloomy forebodings, and the destructive consequences which would be the inevitable result of a bill, passed on the unqualified basis of his Lordship's recommendation. Yet the stake I hold in the country, and the interest I feel in all that is passing, will not allow me to be silent. In commenting on LORD BATHURST's letter, my honourable friend has distinctly stated, that we cannot give our consent to the passing of a bill which, in its immediate effects, would tend to seal the ruin of our property and the sacrifice of our lives; that we are still ready, in sincerity and good faith, to do all that we can to give effect to the wishes of his Majesty's Government, for ameliorating the condition of the slaves, so long as we are not called upon to submit to measures which, from local experience, we know to be inconsistent not only with the sacred rights of private property, but with our very existence. The improved condition of our slaves, the exertions we are all at this moment making for their religious instruction, are proofs of the lively interest we feel for their temporal and eternal welfare. It is not necessary for me, gentlemen, to prove to you that their condition is already greatly ameliorated; but, if there are those who disbelieve all testimony and all arguments, let them look to facts, and then decide. Let them look to the extent of our land, to the enormous population we maintain, and to its gradual increase, as exhibited in the returns of the Registry Office: then let them say if such an increase is not at once an honourable testimony in our favour, to prove the care and attention with which our slaves are treated; and is it not evident that we, who daily provide them with three full meals from our granaries in addition to a large dressed meal, and who, to accomplish these objects, are obliged to appropriate nearly one-half of the labour of our estates, cannot be disposed to appropriate nearly one-half of the labour of our estates, cannot be disposed to appropriate nearly one-half of the labour of our estates, cannot grant them the same time that is done in countries less thickly populated, and where the fertility of the soil enables the slave to feed himself, by his master's allowing him one day in the week. Mr. Secretary CANNING, in his able speech on MR. BUXTON's motion, remarks, with his usual sagacity, that the 'links which bind master to slave, are knots which may be disentangled, but must not be cut.' If all the measures recommended by my LORD BATHURST are submitted to, the knot which unites the master to the slave is that moment, and for ever, severed. A legislative enactment to the full extent of my LORD BATHURST's proposal, would destroy the bonds which unite the one to the other, and end in our ruin and misery. It is impossible, gentlemen, to look to the period when, as husbands and fathers, some of us would almost feel it a duty to imbrue our hands in the blood of our wives and daughters, to preserve them from pollution, without a deep and fearful feeling! Mr. Secretary CANNING has also said, that whilst his Majesty's Ministers are determined to resist any thing like contumacy, yet they will be ready to listen to any reasonable objections, which the local knowledge and experience of the Colonial Legislatures may induce them to urge. Far be it from me, gentlemen, to advocate a contumacious resistance to the wishes of his Majesty's Government; my duty to the Crown, my sincere attachment to the Mother-country, and to the Constitution under which I live, alike forbid such a thought; but it is, nevertheless, a duty we owe to ourselves respectfully, but firmly, to state the insurmountable objections we feel to measures fraught with so much evil. MR. CANNING has distinctly admitted, that our property, such as it is, has been sanctioned and encouraged by repeated Acts of Parliament, that by these it had been already involved in hazards and distresses—hazards which Parliament had no right to create, and distresses which it was bound to relieve. We have the solemn pledge of his Majesty's Ministers—we have the unqualified assurance of a man, whose elevation of mind and station render him indifferent to popular clamour; but should all our fair hopes and expectations be destroyed, should our arguments and complaints be alike disregarded, at least let us not, by rash concessions, have to reproach ourselves in that awful and trying moment, which then most surely awaits us. That this is not idle speculation, look to the result in Demerara, where, I am assured, that the insurrection of the Blacks was immediately consequent on the promulgation of the Order in Council, having the same purport as my LORD BATHURST's letter.

"After the solemn assurances which his Excellency has so often given us of the interest he feels in the welfare of the Colony, it is not without considerable surprise and regret, that I heard his Excellency's determination to hazard no opinion whatever on passing events. It is impossible not to see that his Excellency is placed in a most delicate situation; we must admit that it is his duty, in obedience to my LORD BATHURST's instructions, to urge on us the measures pointed out in his Lordship's Despatch; but his Excellency's obedience to such instructions is not inconsistent with the duty which he owes to the Colony over which he presides. It is his duty, I humbly conceive, to make himself acquainted with our interests and our real situation—to satisfy himself, by the information which he may have obtained, that our security is endangered by the proposed measures, and then to have endeavoured, by a representation to Ministers, to have preserved us from a measure having, in its effects, such a mischievous tendency. I must not be supposed to intend any reflection on his Excellency's conduct; but however prudent and politic may be his recent determination, yet, as I fear silence alone cannot fail to do us harm, I feel that I should not discharge the duty which I owe to my country in my legislative capacity, were I to refrain from giving my opinion on a subject of so much delicacy.

"Notwithstanding the popular clamour which has been excited against us in the mother country, by the active and persecuting measures of the African Institution, and the publication of pamphlets teeming with falsehood; though we live in awful times, and tread suppositos ignes in cinere doloso, I will not conclude without expressing my confidence in the integrity and justice of his Majesty's Ministers, to dispel those clouds of destruction which awfully threaten their unfortunate, but not guilty and offending, fellow-subjects."

"MR. P. L. HINDS then rose, and said :—

"Gentlemen—I move a vote of thanks to the honourable member (MR. HAMDEN), for his attentive and able consideration of the important subjects of EARL BATHURST's Despatch now before us. The serious attention he has devoted to these subjects, is truly evinced by the clear and comprehensive declaration of his opinions in his address just delivered to us. I most cordially coincide with him, and, so forcibly am I impressed with a belief of your general concurrence in his sentiments, as well as those of the Hon. Baronet, that I further move, that the observations of both the honourable members be adopted as the expression of the unanimous feeling of this Board."

"MR. HINDS's motion was seconded by the REV. MR. GITTENS, and carried unanimously."

THEATRES.

HIS MAJESTY was graciously pleased to visit Covent-Garden and Drury-lane Theatres during the course of the last week.

The performances commanded at the latter were, "The Hypocrite," and "Love, Law, and Physic"—at the former, "The Cabinet," and "Timour the Tartar."

To describe, to attempt to describe, the enthusiasm with which the KING was received, would be vain—we certainly shall not make the experiment: to a SOVEREIGN devoted to the best interests of his people—to a people firmly and warmly attached to their MONARCH—it must have been truly gratifying—truly cheering—truly constitutional.

One is not disposed to criticise too nicely the dramatic efforts of the players, who are, upon such occasions, more or less agitated by the presence of such an audience—we should observe that an over-anxiety for distinction when they occur, is silly. DOWTON's DOCTOR CANTWELL is as fine a piece of acting as the stage can boast—he never played it better: LISTON, in MAWWORM was, as usual, inimitable; he was encored in the sermon from the screen. If we had any remark to make, perhaps we should say, the pointed address to a particular part of the house, had an air—(most unintentional, we are sure)—of a want of sufficient respect; the audience [illegible] that a little too much liberty had been taken, and [illegible] by marked disapprobation. The more gracious the [illegible] scension, upon any occasion, from such a quarter, the [illegible] scrupulously delicate should be the consequent conduct of [illegible] honoured individual.

The Farce went off extremely ill—the part of LUBIN [illegible] is one of those in which vulgarity is thought to be essential [illegible] fun. This is a mistake; and the gross and low oaths and [illegible] clamations uttered upon the stage, little likely at any [illegible] to please an enlightened audience, could not be particularly acceptable upon the occasion in question—to excite mirth. [illegible] picture on the stage must resemble something one sees off the stage. The lusus naturæ of "Love, Law, and Physic" [illegible] not bear the smallest likeness to anything now extant. [illegible] HARLEY was execrable, and MRS. ORGER seemed, in [illegible] excess of her sprightliness, to lose sight not only of probability [illegible] (if that be at all essential to farce) but of propriety.

One cannot but be struck by the slovenliness of such [illegible] omission as this—DR. CANTWELL, in the course of the [illegible] has, as every body knows, to tear up a document—of [illegible] MR. DOWTON, who does every thing a good actor [illegible] to do—(and now and then perhaps a little more)—perfect [illegible] the tearing as it was set down for him—it will hardly be [illegible] lieved that the remnants of the paper remained on the [illegible] where he threw them not only throughout the remainder [illegible] the Play, but of the Farce also.

The Royal Box afforded—instead of the splendid spectacle [illegible] to which we have been accustomed—the appearance of a [illegible] hole, in which the figure of his MAJESTY was certainly [illegible] ther more visible than that of the noble band which [illegible] rounded him—the people, however, with difficulty save [illegible] KING, for, as if determined to add to the obscurity of a [illegible] darkened behind, the economical management had removed [illegible] the chandelier which before had been in front of it; this should [illegible] be remedied, and if his MAJESTY (as we most sincerely [illegible] and trust he will graciously condescend to do,) again [illegible] again honour this theatre with his presence this season, we [illegible] hope that MR. ELLISTON, who is at once loyal and liberal, will exert his influence in his own cabinet to give a brilliant [illegible] to the royal box, which owing to the coopering and carpentering the house has undergone to make it comfortable, we suppose cannot be placed (where we always wish to see it) in the dress circle, and allow the audience who overflow the play house to evince their affection to their MONARCH, and have a good view of the illustrious object which they anxiously and respectfully desire to see.

At Covent Garden they manage all this better—His MAJESTY was received at that Theatre by MR. C. KEMBLE MR. FAWCETT, in Court dresses, and CAPTAIN FORBES, the Royal Navy, in full uniform !!!!

We have the highest respect for the stage—we have the highest respect for the present race of actors—and, above we have the highest possible respect for MR. C. KEMBLE MR. FAWCETT—but we certainly did not expect to [illegible] see a Post Captain of the Royal Navy, IN FULL UNIFORM employed.

Speaking of uniform, we cannot but notice a letter of [illegible] Whig malice has introduced into the CHRONICLE of Tuesday wishing to know why His MAJESTY appeared in a [illegible] uniform in time of peace, when the late KING always [illegible] in the dress of an English gentleman, which he was happy assume. There are some Whig grossnesses in the letter [illegible] allude to, which we shall not repeat, but the ignorance, [illegible] and falsehood of the writer deserve to be exposed.

His late MAJESTY, who is referred to by the MORNING CHRONICLE, of all papers in the world, is said to [illegible] delighted to appear in the dress of an English gentleman when? In private perhaps;—so, we presume, does his [illegible] sent MAJESTY—but the writer in the CHRONICLE pre[illegible] does not know that when he, or any such person is permitted to see his KING in public, his MAJESTY is surrounded in Court;—everybody knows that Court-dress is full-dress everybody knows that a Military Court-dress is the most convenient, and is universally worn by every person who has a right to wear it—but that is not all. How did his late MAJESTY dress when he appeared in public?—invariably in military costume, or in the full-dress Windsor uniform, which at all events, is not the ordinary dress of English gentlemen and is worn by nobody who does not frequent the Court but his late MAJESTY's partiality for military costume notorious, and his favourite dress was the uniform of the Horse Guards. blue, in which his MAJESTY was a Captain and which, when not in a General's uniform, he almost invariably wore when in public.

We ought to apologize for noticing such low-lived ribaldry such a desperate expedient to bring something into the [illegible] against the KING at a moment when the enthusiastic love of his people had been so gloriously and so unanimously expressed, but we do it to shew the character of the desperate efforts of the Radical Whigs, great or small.

THE KING'S COURT.—On Friday at half-past three o'clock his Majesty held a Court at his Palace, in Pall-mall, which was attended by Mr. Secretary Canning, the Ambassador from the King of the Netherlands, the Portuguese Ambassador, the Saxon Minister, the Minister of State from the King of the Netherlands—Baron Fagel, the Ambassador, and Monsieur de Falck, Minister of State from the King of the Netherlands, upon a special mission, had audiences of his Majesty; and also the Baron Just, the Saxon Minister, and the Count Villa Real, Envoy Extraordinary from Portugal, had audiences. They were attended by the Right Hon. George Canning, his Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and Sir Robert Chester, Master of the Ceremonies.

His Majesty's gracious pardon was sent on Thursday to [illegible] for William Britton Dyson, convicted in September Session [illegible] murder of Elizabeth Anthony.

We understand that PERCY MALLORY, the new novel by the [illegible] of Pen Owen, was shipped a few days ago, and is hourly expected [illegible]

COURT OF KING'S BENCH.

FRIDAY.—The King v. Radford and Dover.—This was an indictment against the defendants, officers to the Sheriff of Middlesex, for exacting the sum of 3s. from Joseph Lancaster for searching the office and 1l. 6s. as the fee for assigning Lancaster to the safe custody of the officer—there was a count for a common assault. Dover had left before the prosecution was commenced.—The prosecutor swore that Radford conducted himself while he was at his lock-up-house in Carey-street in a violent manner—that he was compelled to go to Gulston's, the officer—on their way thither Radford aimed a violent blow at the prosecutor, which the latter avoided by drawing back, and the defendant struck the wall. This was the assault, on which he was found Guilty. He was acquitted on the charge of extortion.

LATEST NEWS.

Paris papers down to Friday have arrived. They are principally occupied with details of the entry of the Duke d'Angouleme into the Capital of France.

The Moniteur says:—"His Royal Highness arrived at 11 o'clock at Versailles, where Monsieur soon met him. Their interview was very affecting. At St. Cloud, Monsieur, Madame, and the Duke of Angouleme met the Duchess of Berry and the Children of France, whom the Duke embraced with the greatest tenderness. Their Royal Highnesses set out, at three-quarters past 12, in carriages for Paris; at the Gate Maillot, the Duke mounted his horse, accompanied by Marshals Duke of Reggio, Duke of Raguse, and Count Lauriston; by Lieutenant-Generals Bourdesoult, Bithesy, La Rochejacquelin, the Duke of Guise, and a numerous Staff. When his Royal Highness reached L'Etoile, where the triumphal arch was erected, and where the principal ecclesiastical, civil, and military authorities were assembled, as well as the members of various congregations, and an immense crowd of inhabitants of Paris, the Prince advanced a little before his suite, and the Marquis de Rochemere, Master of the Ceremonies, presented to him the municipal body of Paris, having at its head the Count de Chabral, Prefect of the Seine, who addressed his Royal Highness in a speech; and in conclusion observed that the whole City was eager to welcome him, and that the King was ready to crown him with laurels."

The Prince in reply, expressed his satisfaction at having fulfilled the mission which the King had given him.

On Wednesday morning at 10o'clock, the Duke arrived at the Metropolitan Church, to return thanks for the success of the French arms in the Peninsula. His Royal Highness was received at the entrance of the chapel by the Archbishop, who addressed to him a short congratulatory speech on the part of the clergy of Paris.

It is affirmed that Count Carthagena (Morillo) has demanded passports for France, and that they have been granted him. General Quesada has been appointed to succeed him as Captain General of Galicia.

The Etoile states that the musket of the centinel, (who is in custody on the charge of killing a young man on the day of the entrance of the Duke d'Angouleme into Paris) went off by accident, and that the deceased assaulted him, because he opposed his attempt to scale the wall.

We are sorry to say that the Lord Chancellor felt suddenly indisposed on Thursday, and has not since been considered able to come out. He, however, is expected to sit in Lincoln's Inn Hall to-morrow.

At the Old Bailey, yesterday, William Hay, alias James Hay, was indicted for uttering a forged 5l. Bank of England note to James Minton. There were three other indictments against the prisoner, charging him with a similar offence, by disposing of forged notes to Sarah Mills, William Bennett, and Letitia Beckett. These witnesses proved the uttering, and the Jury found him Guilty, but recommended him to mercy.

At the Middlesex Sessions, yesterday, Wm. Bymbo was indicted for libelling Mr. Carmichael Smith. The libel consisted of a bill that had been placarded about the streets, headed, "just published, the Crimes and Horrors of Kelly House." The bill and the pamphlet which were alleged to impeach Mr. Smith's character as a gentleman, were put in and read. The publication by the defendant was admitted. Mr. Cooper, for the defendant, addressed the Court at considerable length; and, after some remarks from the Chairman, the Jury returned a verdict of Not Guilty.

The Dublin Evening Mail of Wednesday last, announces in a conspicuous part of its columns, the death of Sir Henry Torrens, K.C.B., Adjutant-General, &c. &c. We have authority to contradict this statement in the most positive manner; and we are happy to add, Sir Henry was never in better health than at the present moment.

REGULATIONS OF HIS MAJESTY RESPECTING FOREIGN ORDERS.—1st. That no British subjects shall accept a foreign order, or wear its insignia, without having previously obtained a warrant under the Royal Sign Manuel, (directed to the Earl Marshal of England,) granting them his Majesty's permission to accept and wear the same.—2d. That the intention of a foreign sovereign to decorate a British subject with the insignia of such order shall be notified to his Majesty's principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, either through the King's Minister abroad, or through the accredited minister of the foreign sovereign resident at this court.—3d. That when his Majesty's principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs shall have taken his Majesty's pleasure, and obtained his consent upon the occasion, he shall then signify the same to his Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Home Department, in order that he may cause the usual warrant to be prepared for the Royal Sign Manuel, and take such other steps as may be necessary for carrying his Majesty's pleasure into effect accordingly.—4th. That when the warrant is signed by the King, it shall be announced in the Gazette in the usual manner, and registered in his Majesty's College of Arms.—5th. That no subject of his Majesty could be allowed to accept the insignia of a foreign order from any sovereign of a foreign state, except they shall be so conferred in consequence of active and distinguished services before the enemy, either at sea or in the field, or unless he shall have been actually employed in the service of such foreign sovereign.—6th. That his Majesty's licence and permission of this not authorise, and shall not be deemed or construed to authorise the assumption of any style, appellation, rank, precedence, or privilege appertaining unto a Knight Bachelor of these realms. N.B. Before the Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs takes the King's pleasure on any application for an officer in the army to be permitted to accept a foreign order, he causes the same to be referred to the commander-in-chief, through his Royal Highness's secretary, to know whether or not his Royal Highness sees any objection to his Majesty's pleasure being taken thereon.

Two regiments of infantry are to be raised immediately, to be numbered the 94th and 95th. Sir Thomas Bradford, who commands in Scotland, is to have one, and Sir Colin Halket the other. These regiments are to replace the force which it has been deemed expedient to send out as reinforcements to the West Indies. The recent augmentation of the three Veteran Battalions, and these two regiments, will be sufficient to supply the amount of force thus withdrawn from the military establishments of the United Kingdom.

RECTIFIED SPERM OIL, 4s. 6d. per gallon.—UPTON and Co. oilmen and colour manufacturers, 64, Queen street, Cheapside, most respectfully acquaint the public, that by a process entirely new, they are enabled to sell a Sperm Oil so highly rectified, as to equal in purity spirits of wine. This oil being, in the first instance, of the finest quality, and afterwards completely cleansed from every impurity, there is no waste, and its flame is equal in brilliancy to the best gas, with the superior strength and steadiness of an oil light. So unequivocal is its excellence, that it will burn well in every kind of lamp.—N. B. Other Lamp Oil, from 2s. 3d. to 3s 9d. per gallon; Linseed Oil, 2s. 6d. and Turpentine, 5s. per gallon: White Lead, 30s. per cwt. and refined Coal Tar Paint, 15s. which quantity will cover 1000 square feet.

Erratum.—In a former Number the price of White Lead was stated to be 3s. 6d. per cwt.—it should have been 36s. per cwt.

BEARS GREASE.—J. ATKINSON, Perfumer, 44, Gerrard-street, Soho-square, London, respectfully informs the Public, that he receives a supply of the above article every six or eight weeks from his correspondent in Russia, and it is put up without any admixture, only a little perfume to keep it sweet, and render it pleasant for use. The reputation this article has long held for making the hair grow, and the remark of a celebrated Lecturer on Physiology, that "Bears Grease from the animal in its native climate no doubt possesses very remarkable properties for regenerating the hair," supersedes the necessity of further remark. J. A. will only add that this is genuine as imported, and a very pleasant article for dressing the hair.—Sold by appointment by most Perfumers, in pots, price 2s., 3s. 6d., and 5s.—Caution—The daily complaints J. A. receives of deceptions, renders it necessary to inform the Public that his signature and address is always on the bill round each pot of his importation.

JAMAICA.—ST. DAVID'S, Oct. 4, 1823.

AT a numerous and respectable MEETING of the FREEHOLDERS and other INHABITANTS of this Parish, held this day at the Vestry Room, at Yallahs, called by his Honour the Custos, agreeably to a Requisition made to him for that purpose, RICHARD DICK, Esq. in the Chair.

Resolved, That at this period of unparalleled distress, we view with the most serious alarm the late discussions in the Commons' House of Parliament, connected with the internal policy of the West India Islands.

Resolved, That the persons and properties of the inhabitants of the British Colonies have been greatly endangered by the agitation of these measures, and that to them is justly attributable our present state of civil and political pertinacity, the almost total annihilation of our commerce, as well as of that confidence, on the existence of which our prosperity depends.

Resolved, That under the sanction of British laws, and admitted to a full participation in the blessings of the British Constitution, we hesitated not to vest our property under numerous disadvantages of climate, in these countries, whereby our wealth has been added to the resources of the Empire an accession of wealth, fully commensurate to that which she has derived from any equal portion of her possessions.

Resolved, That as dutiful and loyal subjects, ever having maintained our allegiance inviolate to his Majesty's Family and Government, we have, to the utmost of our ability, supported the honour of his crown and dignity, in seasons the most eventful and alarming, and on all occasions we have yielded to none in our zeal for the honour and independence of the Empire.

Resolved, That we solemnly protest against the right of the Parliament of Great Britain to legislate upon our Constitutional Prerogative, or in any wise to disturb the prevailing harmony of this and the other Islands, by any intemperate harangues in the present conduct of the nation, without having first taken into their serious consideration our just claim to indemnity (which it is admitted must secure a "as liberal as necessary") from the inevitable ruin to which such interference cannot fail to lead.

Resolved, That the known talents of the present Ministers of the Crown would lead us confidently to expect, that the recent calamity at Demerara will have the effect of guarding them against the dangerous innovations of our enemies, and further induce them to pause before they give the weight of their recommendation to the hypothetical projects of such visionary philanthropists.

Resolved, That, should the faction, alike hostile to our lives and our fortunes, and of which we have so much cause to complain, have sufficient interest to prevail against us in the House of Commons, we will still place the most firm reliance for support on the other branches of the legislature, and the justice and humanity of our King, confident that he will not fail to interfere in behalf of a class of his faithful, though oppressed subjects, who have ever been distinguished for their unbounded loyalty, and for their devoted attachment to his family and person.

Resolved, That these Resolutions be published in each of the three county papers for one month, and in The Courier, Morning Chronicle, and John Bull London papers. RICHARD DICK. Chairman.

Richard Dick, Esq. having left the Chair, and Archibald Dick, Esq. being called thereto, Resolved, That the thanks of this meeting be given to Richard Dick, Esq for his conduct in the Chair. ARCHIBALD DICK.

Resolved, That should the British Parliament proceed to legislate for us by the enactment of any laws which may have a tendency to deprive us of our just possessions, we shall conceive ourselves bound to resist their unwarranted and unjustifiable proceedings by every legitimate means in our power.

Resolved, That we confide to our Representatives in the Honourable House of Assembly the defence of our just rights and privileges, and that it be recommended to them, as the unanimous voice of this Meeting, to maintain our independence with temperance, moderation, and decision.

Resolved, That, whilst we firmly resist the violation of every Constitutional Charter, and instruct our Members to oppose every encroachment upon our established rights, we shall never be unwilling to impose upon them our entire willingness to concur in whatever prudent plans they may agree with the House in adopting, for the moral and religious well being of our negro population, in whose comfort we feel so great an interest.

Resolved, That, from the gradual dissemination of Christian principles, we look forward with peculiar pleasure to the improvement of our slaves in the scale of civilized beings; and that, from past experience, and the good effects which have already resulted from their instruction, we confidently anticipate, under Divine Providence, that we shall be enabled in due time, unaided by any interference in our Colonial policy, to render them, what must prove highly pleasing to every master, a contented and happy people.

ST. THOMAS'S IN THE EAST, Sept. 29, 1823.

AT a numerous MEETING of the FREEHOLDERS and other INHABITANTS of the Parish of St. Thomas in the East, convened in the Court-house this day by special Requisition: the Hon. PETER ROBERTSON in the Chair,

It was unanimously Resolved—That, at the present alarming crisis, when measures are in progress in the British Parliament, avowedly to despoil us of all we hold dear and valuable—our rights, our liberty, our property—our existence—we feel it our painful but imperious duty, to come forward and most solemnly declare to the world our determination to resist, by every legitimate means in our power, such flagrant injustice.

That the rights we inherit as British subjects, it is our sacred duty to defend, and transmit unsullied to posterity.

That we possess our property by rights, as legal and fully acknowledged as the land-owners of the mother country hold their estates; and that the one can no more be taken away than the other, unless good faith is at an end, and the British Statute Law a dead letter.

That we are bound to express our abhorrence of the part acted against us by the African Institution. Not only does it labour to stir up unmerited prejudices against us in the minds of our fellow subjects, by circulating the most gross misrepresentations, but to give these the more effect, religion and humanity are made subservient to the unworthy purpose of rubbing us of our rights and our property, and involving in bloodshed and misery a people at present contented and happy; and which calamity can now only be averted, under divine providence, by our firmness, and by the good sense of the British people, which has been so greatly imposed upon. If there are honest minds (for such we respect), who doubt the truth of our representations, we implore them, like the illustrious Howard, to visit the objects of their compassion, and decide between us.

That the Resolutions and memories published by the Colonial Ministers, in meeting the recent attack made on the Colonies, afford the strongest proof, that, without investigation and without evidence, they have surrendered their own better judgment, condemned us, and sacrificed the interest of the empire to the baneful influence of the African Association.

That the Minister of the Crown, after acknowledging that the "danger attended against the Colonies, which a rash word or an ardent expression might raise a flame which could only be extinguished in blood; that if principles were so broadly stated upon the question of total emancipation, they would come too late with any qualifications, and that the just interest of those were to be guarded, who, by no fault of their own, who, by inheritance or purchase, repeated acts of parliament, and the encouragement of the legislature, were induced to run greater hazards of climate and capital than could be known to persons not placed in their situation," concluded by moving Resolutions, which contain all these sound principles, and effectually compromise the fate of the colonies:—They avow a determination to persevere in discussing a question, the very agitation of which is acknowledged to be so full of peril: they admit a right to interfere with the interest of those who have exposed themselves to such hazard of climate and capital under the sacred encouragement of the legislature, and by holding up a suspicion of error, but undefined injustice, they have placed our property in such a questionable shape as reduces it to little value—the name is left us, but the substance is gone—confidence, so absolutely necessary to the very existence of a commercial country, is at an end, and no alternative is left us but to demand that our rights shall at once be re-acknowledged, or compensation granted.

That, with deep interest, we contemplate the momentous objects that will shortly occupy our House of Assembly, but with the fullest confidence that, by a firm and temperate conduct, its labours will be crowned with success, in maintaining our inalienable rights, and that the cause of good order and real humanity will triumph over wild and undefined projects, leading to anarchy and blood.

That we are ready, as we have ever been, to ameliorate the condition of our labourers in such progressive manner as their mental capabilities shall require, and as shall best promote their welfare and happiness, in which we have so deep an interest; but that any foreign interference on this most important and delicate point of our internal policy it is our bounden duty to resist to the last extremity, as equally dangerous to ourselves and those it professes to benefit.

That against the bold assertion in the House of Commons, that no improvement in the condition of our labourers can take place, or can be expected under the barbarous system of management with which we are charged, we feel it due to ourselves to state (and are gratified in doing so) the following facts:—That within the last fifteen years the great body of Negroes in this extensive parish have been converted to christianity; that during a period of about six years, upwards of one hundred couple, as appears by the parish record, have been married with the sanction of their owners; that where only one church lately stood, we have now three on the establishment and three Wesleyan chapels, all regularly and fully attended principally by the slaves, whose highly respectable appearance and general good conduct afford a striking contrast to the frightful pictures of wretchedness and misery, in which it suits the purpose of the African Society to represent them.

That the above Resolutions be published in the three County Papers and the Jamaica Journal for one month, and that they be published in the Courier, John Bull, Morning Chronicle, and Times, London papers.

That the Chairman be requested to sign these Resolutions

PETER ROBERTSON, Chairman.

The Custos having left the Chair, and Ebenezer Taylor, Esq. being called thereto, it was resolved, that the Thanks of this Meeting be given to his Honour for his attention in calling this meeting, and for his dignified conduct in the Chair.

ARTIFICIAL MINERAL TEETH.—MR. J. MASSEY, Surgeon Dentist, begs leave to announce to the Nobility, Gentry, and Public, that he has invented a new kind of Mineral Composition for Teeth, which for the most beautiful transparency, colour, and enamel, unites a degree of tenacity hitherto deemed unattainable. The decided advantages of Mineral Composition Teeth over every other artificial supply, has long been acknowledged, they being the only substitute by which the functions of mastication and articulation can be renewed, without the objection of the very unpleasant smell and taste arising from the use of bone, &c.—☞ Teeth extracted with Mr. Massey's newly invented instruments, by which they are raised perpendicularly out of the gums, and thus the operation is performed with the greatest safety, and with infinitely less pain to the patient.—60, Frith-street, Soho.

SMITHFIELD CLUB CATTLE SHEW.—The 25th Annual Exhibition of superior Fat Cattle, Sheep, and Pigs, sent in claim of the Smithfield Club's Premiums, will be held as usual at SADLER'S HEPOSITORY in Goswell street, near West Smithfield, on FRIDAY the 12th, SATURDAY the 13th, and MONDAY the 15th inst.—The place of exhibition, being entirely covered by sky-lights, is dry, clean, and unaffected by the weather, and being generally attended by a most respectable company, including often many ladies of distinction, forms altogether a most interesting scene.

Many very uncommonly fine Animals are now on their way to town from several every county within 120 miles of London; and on this shew; in spacious contiguous lofts within the yard a great number and variety of the newest and most approved Agricultural Implements and Machines will be exhibited by the most eminent makers; also assortments of Roots, Seeds, Fruits, &c. of the rarest and most useful kinds for field culture, with many other articles interesting to country Gentlemen and the public. Those Gentlemen who intend to exhibit cattle at this shew, are respectfully informed that a Public Sale of, or for, every description, will take place at the Repository on TUESDAY, the 16th instant, at 12 o'clock precisely. And, as the Exhibition will, no doubt, be numerously attended, Messrs. Sadler beg leave to intimate that it will afford a most favourable opportunity for the disposal of high bred Horses and Cattle (whether intended for Prize Exhibition or not) both by Private or Public Sale.—N.B. The Repository will be lighted up until Nine o'clock during every evening of the Exhibition.

A LIBERAL ADVERTISEMENT.—The great encouragement the advertisers (natives of Madeira) have experienced, by being favoured with orders from Royalty, and many Noblemen and Gentlemen, to whom they have the privilege of referring for the quality of their WINES, and correctness of their dealings, induces them to entreat, most earnestly, the public, to compare samples of their Wines (the product of their own estates) with others, as the best criterion to judge of their genuine and very superior quality. That no prejudices may exist against a Public Advertisement, a reasonable time (not exceeding two months), if required, will be granted to a respectable purchaser to satisfy himself, before payment, that the lot purchased corresponds with the samples to be tasted at Messrs. Fox and Co.'s, No. 3, Poland-street, Oxford-street. Letters and country orders, accompanied with a reference, duly attended to.—Prices: Madeira, 42l. per hogshead, or 42s. per dozen; Bast India ditto, 50s; Port, vintage of 1815, 46s.; of 1820, 42s. and 44s.; peculiarly fine pale Sherry, at 50s per dozen.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—To the Nobility and Gentry.—Mr. W. BEACALL, Surgeon Dentist, 13, Newman-street, Oxford-street, having in his researches to improve the method of supplying Artificial Teeth, discovered and imported one of the most beautiful substitutes ever submitted to public inspection, being far superior to human teeth in durability and retention of colour, yet cannot be distinguished from them on the most minute inspection; they possess all the advantages of mineral teeth, not being liable to the many unpleasantries attendant on all mineral compositions.—Mr. B. continues to cleanse the Teeth, if ever so discoloured, and render their whiter and beautiful, without pain or injury to the enamel. Extracting, stopping, and every operation on the Teeth and Gums. Attends at home from ten till four.

ESTABLISHED UPWARDS OF TWENTY YEARS.

For the Sale of Irish Linen by the Piece, at the Factor's price, No. 4, on the South Side of Bloomsbury-square, four doors from the top of Southampton-street, Holborn.

THE IRISH LINEN COMPANY beg leave to announce to the Public, that the above House is their only Establishment in this country where they continue to supply the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public, with warranted Grass-bleached Linen, for Shirts and Sheets, of the best fabric and colour at a price considerably lower than they can be procured through any other medium. They also engage to return the purchase-money should any fault appear. Good Irish Bills and Bank of Ireland Notes taken as usual.—Country and Town orders punctually attended to by JOHN JONGVAN, 4, Bloomsbury-square, London, } Agents.

JOHN DOYLE, 31, St. Mary's Abbey, Dublin. }

☞ Country Shopkeepers will find dealing with the above House much to their advantage, as small parcels of goods are forwarded at exactly the same price as if a round or box was ordered. For Ready Money only.

MEDICAL PUPIL.

DR. JOHN THOMSON, of Edinburgh, has a VACANCY, which presents the fairest prospect. His object is to direct the docile Student in the course of his Studies, and to save the loss of time and misapplication to which those are so generally exposed who are left in the early part of their professional studies without a guide. Elsewhere a tedious expensive apprenticeship is necessary; when this expires, the Student must repair to some medical school to complete his education; but DR. THOMSON'S pupil, in the centre of the first medical school, enters at once with undivided attention upon his proper pursuit, and long before a common apprenticeship can be finished has obtained a regular diploma for a sum not much exceeding an apprentice fee Minto House, Edinburgh.

MONEY.—Any Amount from 200l. to 7000l. may be obtained immediately on Freehold, long Leasehold, Reversions Marriage Settlements, Funded or other equivalent Property. Noblemen and Gentlemen of ample responsibility, accommodated on Personal Security.—For particulars apply to Mr. Moor, 125, Strand, (if by letter post paid,) where communications will meet with implicit confidence and attention.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST INDIA STOCK.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,

THE Election for supplying the vacancy caused by the death of your late lamented Director, Mr. Grant, being now over, I presume to bring myself to your recollection.

In April last I had the honour to inform you that I was encouraged by my friends to entertain hopes of success, in aspiring to a seat in the East India Direction.

Those hopes were founded on my having been actively employed more than 30 years in the civil service of the Company, under the Bengal Government; and of having, towards the end of that period, been selected by the Honourable Court of Directors to be a Member of the Supreme Council of Bengal. I stated to you that I had filled that high and arduous situation from October, 1812, to Feb. 1822, present prosperous state of the British dominions in India; and I expressed a willingness to have myself that the knowledge of your affairs, which I had acquired during so long a course of service, might, according to the measure of my humble ability, render me a useful servant to you in this country.

The encouragement which I have received since I came forward has justified the expectations which I indulged of being honoured with your favour and support. In June next, I shall have been in England the time required by law to qualify me as a candidate, and I trust that I am not too presumptuous in expressing myself sanguine that your countenance will enable me to present myself at the ballot upon the first vacancy which may subsequently occur.—I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen, with the greatest respect, your most obedient humble servant,

Thompson's Hotel, Cavendish-square, Dec. 1. JAMES STUART.

SAINT ANN'S, JAMAICA, 15th Sept. 1823.

AT a numerous MEETING of the MAGISTRATES, VESTRYMEN, FREEHOLDERS, and other INHABITANTS, of the Parish of ST ANN, held at the Court House this day, his Honour the CUSTOS in the Chair,

It was unanimously resolved—That the critical situation to which this Island, and the West Indies in general, have been reduced by the unjustifiable proceedings of the African Society, imperiously call for a public manifestation of our sentiments, which are impressed with no other feelings but those of grief, combined with indignation, at the unmerited wrongs under which we are suffering.

Resolved, That with the most firm reliance on our legislative body to resist the glaring infraction of our constitutional rights, we yet consider that a general affirmation of our sentiments will have the effect of strengthening and corroborating their resolves; and we entertain a fervent hope that we shall be ardently joined by every man in the island who has the interest of it at heart.

Resolved, That to our House of Assembly is committed the charge of preserving every thing that is dear to us—our properties, our rights, our liberty, and our constitution; and we confidently trust that the importance of such a trust will be duly appreciated and faithfully executed.

Resolved, That the late proceedings in the British Parliament are a violation of every constitutional charter we have enjoyed hitherto—an infraction of every compact, written and implied—a breach of the sacred trust reposed in them by the general voice of the empire, and a subversion of every legal and political obligation, having a tendency in their very discussion to produce anarchy and confusion; and, in their adoption, to inflict punishment for alleged crime only, contrary to every principle of its own Jurisprudence. We are therefore bound by every law, human and divine, to assert those rights which we have inherited in common with every British subject, and to resist, by every means in our power, interferences unwarranted by national interest or expediency.

Resolved, The British House of Commons, instead of evincing that dignified, deliberate, and magnanimous policy which should prompt them seriously to weigh every question affecting the whole, or a part of the empire, have suffered themselves to be led away by passion, and to be degraded into a hasty conformity to the overheated schemes of a set of men, who scruple not to avow their animosity towards us, and their determination of risking the lives and properties of their fellow-subjects, on schemes which have failed wherever they have been tried, as may be proved by a reference to the Island of Cayenne, and to a more neighbouring Island.

Resolved, That while our deepest indignation and abhorrence are expressed against the African Society, we yet entertain a firm hope, that the general wisdom and reflection of the British nation and Legislature will perceive, before it is too late, the evil tendency of such dark machinations: and that "there may yet remain a firmness and sound understanding, which will protect us against threatened calamities." But we cannot conceal that the importance of such a trust will be duly contrary to reason and justice, we call upon the House of Commons, to require and insist on a full and ample security, from the movers of the question, for the whole amount of the property they will then put to hazard.

Resolved, That we call on the House of Commons to observe, that the present and future discussions of the measure, are, and will be, a gross violation, of the solemn pledges, given by all parts and parties of that House in 1815, "to refrain from further interference in our local concerns on the adoption of the Registry Bill."

Resolved, That that Bill having been sanctioned by the King, was a proof of its concordance to the sentiments of Government, and the wishes of the people.

Resolved, That the property which has been acquired by our ancestors, and our own industry, under the sanction, encouragement, solicitations, and promises of the mother country, is responsible by its own laws, that we were satisfied with it, and would have remained so under all its disadvantages so long as the original compact of the British Government was respected; but now that we see it inclined to violate every established charter and moral obligation, we consider ourselves justified in calling on Parliament and the British Nation, to pay us for our possessions, or leave us at liberty to offer our allegiance, where our personal safety can be insured by the observance of legal enactments.

Resolved, That the Inhabitants of this parish, in common with those of the whole island, have been ever zealous in their loyalty and attachment to the British Throne and Government, evinced during the course of a long and unprecedented war, in which the safety of the parent state itself was threatened; and in which our exertions for repelling the common enemy brought upon us expences we have not yet recovered from.

It is lamentable to us to consider that while we were thus eager in the common cause, enemies, ten thousand times more bitter, were fostered in the body of the British Legislature itself.

Resolved, That the protection we received previous to, during, and subsequent to that period, has been most amply and exorbitantly paid for by the heavy duties with which our staple articles are burthened, and, as if those duties, amounting almost to prohibition, were not sufficient to try our patience, Great Britain appears, by the present proceedings, to separate our interests entirely from her own; for, it is clear that as long as she listens to the suggestions of the African Society, she must abandon the welfare of the West Indies, and of Jamaica.

Resolved, That this meeting has viewed, with the utmost concern, the proceedings of a certain class of persons in England, who style themselves the West India Committee. If their proceedings had been calculated to give effect to the general feelings of the Island, or to promote its interests, we might have been induced to consider them as brethren or fellows in affliction; but it is clear that their resolutions and proceedings have arisen with real grief and observe that their resolutions of which we hope from error in judgment and ignorance of our real situation, of which we hope they will soon be convinced, and join us in asserting and defending our rights.

Resolved, That Mr. Hilton, Mr. Higgin, Mr. Brown, Mr. Baffington, Mr. Rose, Mr. Parke, and Mr. Roh, be appointed a Committee, for the purpose of corresponding with the other parishes, and with the co-operation of Committees that may be there appointed, to communicate throughout the West Indies, and with the West India Proprietors in the mother country.

Resolved, That the Committee be authorized to publish these Resolutions in such English papers as they may think proper, and that the same be published in the County papers of this island for one month. HENRY COX, Custos.

Resolved, That the Thanks of this meeting be given to his Honour the Custos, for his dignified, impartial and patriotic conduct in the chair.

* Vide Lord Castlereagh's speech, 19th June, 1816.

PORTLAND, JAMAICA, Oct. 4, 1823.

AT a very numerous and respectable MEETING of the MAGISTRATES, FREEHOLDERS, and other INHABITANTS of this Parish, convened this day in the Court House, by his Honour the Custos, agreeably to a Requisition to him addressed, for the purpose of taking into consideration the state of the Island.—His Honour the Custos in the Chair,

Resolved unanimously,—That as the original settlers of this Island were freeborn subjects of Great Britain, they brought with them those rights and privileges which are inherent in Britons; and have been the birthright of that distinguished British subjects is, and ever has been, the characteristic of his Majesty's loyal subjects of Jamaica, and that every attempt to abridge or interfere with the Colonial rights of this Island has been constantly resisted, and, we trust, will never be submitted to or compromised.

That the adoption of the measures to which the British Government in the late Imperial Parliament has given its sanction, with a threat of enforcing them, is unequivocally a breach on the part of Government of the conditions under which his Majesty's subjects were induced to embark their lives and fortunes in the settlement of this island; an unconstitutional interference with its internal Government and affairs, sacrificing justice and national faith to party views and the visionary speculations of designing and self-interested enthusiasts.

That the apprehension and alarm, arising out of the late proceedings in the British Parliament, "and which must have enthralled the mind of every Colonist alive to his own safety, the safety of his family, and the security of his property," lest the very discussion of them might tend to excite anarchy and revolt, appear now but too well founded from the dire catastrophe which has occurred in the Colony of Demerara: That, therefore, we are bound by every law, human and divine, to resist, by every means in our power, interferences fraught with such, calamitous tendency, and unwarranted by any national expediency.

That, now perceiving the Mother Country disposed to invalidate every charter that we have hitherto enjoyed, and to infringe every compact, and, as it were, to dissolve our union and interests, we trust that, in the spirit of freedom so loudly boasted of, Parliament and the Nation will pay us the value of our properties, and leave us free to become subject to whatever Government we may consider likely to ensure our personal safety.

That this Island, in more fortunate days, when the circumstances of the Inhabitants were far different, and when the burthens and restrictions imposed by Great Britain were less oppressive, has never failed in shewing the strongest disposition to alleviate the situation of his Majesty's Troops most comfortable; and that, though still animated with the same disposition, they are now totally deprived of the means by the very agency of the Government.

That the grant of subsistence to the Troops was originally gratuitous and voluntary, not founded on any constitutional principle, from which the British Government could claim it as a right, but which was liberally bestowed in times when our industry was rewarded, and the labour of cultivation remunerated by fair and reasonable prices.

That, under the circumstances of acknowledged distress in which this Colony is at present involved, the unexampled depression in the prices of our staple commodities, the ruinous and oppressive War Duties which are still continued to be imposed on our produce in time of Peace, whilst an exemption therefrom has been partially granted to other portions of the Empire, render it (in the opinion of this Meeting) an imperative duty on the Representatives in Assembly of this Colony, to adopt every possible mode of retrenchment and economy.

That, under the pressure of such accumulating distress, and of calamities which must be the inevitable consequence of the measures contemplated by Government, it would be inconsistent, unjust, impracticable indeed, to raise from the impoverished inhabitants of this island contributions that were cheerfully paid in happier times.

That, deeply impressed with the justice of the maxim admitted by all governments, "that allegiance and protection should be reciprocal," and conscious of our unshaken loyalty, it is our decided opinion that the pay and subsistence hitherto granted to his Majesty's Troops stationed in this island should be no longer continued, and that our Representatives in Assembly be recommended to oppose every proposition to that effect.

That we recommend it to the serious consideration of the Legislature to revise our Militia Law, and to take measures to place our Militia in a more efficient and effective state, ready for every emergency.

That the following Gentlemen, James Clayton White, John Sutton Minot, Abraham Lindsay, Maurice Jones, Robert Mein, John P. Passley, and John Deans, Esqrs. or any three of them, be a Committee to correspond with the other Parishes in furtherance of the object contained in these Resolutions.

That the Thanks of this Meeting are eminently due, and respectfully offered, to his Honour the Custos, for convening the same, and for his very proper conduct in the Chair: That he will be pleased to sign these Resolutions, and transmit them to be published for one month in each of the following Newspapers:—In the three County Papers of this island, viz. the Royal and St. Jago de la Vega Gazettes and Cornwall Chronicle, and also the Jamaica Journal, and likewise the Courier and John Bull London Papers. THOMAS OAKLEY, Chairman.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, DEC. 8.—It is not true that General Bessieres has been exiled from Madrid, as the Constitutional affirms. The news of the disgrace of the Duke de L'Infantado is equally false: he is constantly occupied in organizing the Royal Guard, and his services are very agreeable to his Majesty.

The town of Amsterdam has been disturbed by a deplorable event: an idiot, who was diverting the people by his antics, was on the point of passing before the Hotel de Ville, when the centinel opposed his passage; the man still endeavoured to pass: this so irritated the centinel that he stabbed him with his bayonet, and he fell dead. The populace surrounded the soldier, and he was stabbed to death with their knives. The guard endeavoured to disperse the multitude. A struggle ensued; the populace threw stones, and the guard were forced to yield. A wounded soldier fell into the hands of the mob, and was murdered in the same way as the centinel. The military commandant of the town did all in his power to appease the enraged populace, who did not disperse until the town-guards were drawn up and had levelled their muskets. Three of the ringleaders have been arrested; several individuals have been grievously wounded by bayonet stabs.

Private letters from Paris say, that although the Duke of Belluno has accepted of the embassy to Vienna, a difficulty has arisen in a quarter where least expected. Prince Metternich is said to have written to M. Chateaubriand, that the title of Duc de Belluno being taken from the Austrian States, and not being recognised by the Emperor, could not be borne at his Court, and that if the Duke went to Vienna he could only be called Marshal Victor.

The Madrid Gazette of the 4th inst. has been received, and it contains four Royal Decrees of great importance. By the first Decree, his Majesty appoints as first Minister of State, the Marquis of Casa Irujo; as Minister of Grace and Justice for Spain and the Indies, Don Narciso de Heredia; as Minister of War, Major-General Don Josef de la Cruz; and as Minister of Finance, Don Luis Lopez Ballesteros. It is dated Dec. 2, and is countersigned Luis Maria Salazar, who remains as Minister of Marine. By the second Decree his Majesty appoints, as President of his Council, Don Ignacio Martinez de Villela. This place was vacant by the refusal of the Duke del Infantado to accept it. By the third Decree, Saez, the King's former Prime Minister and Confessor, is nominated to the Bishopric of Tortosa, vacant by the death of Don Manuel Dos y Medrano. At the same time that he ceases to be Minister, he ceases to be Confessor to the King. By the fourth Decree, his Majesty, "seeing the absolute necessity, for the good government of his vast monarchy, of establishing a Council of State which may unite the knowledge and the experience requsite to guide the resolutions of his sovereign authority," has nominated ten individuals, composed of persons selected from the old Council of State, existing on the 7th of March, 1820, and others, to be a Council of State. His Majesty reserves the power of adding to their number. His Majesty, as well as his two brothers, may preside at this Council. The Councillors named are—Eguia, the Duke of San Carlos, Don Juan Perez Villamil, Don Antonio Vargas Laguna, Don Antonio Gomez Calderon, Don Juan Bautista de Erro, Don Josef Garcia de la Torre, and Don Juan Antonio Rojas. The Ministers are, ex-officio, Members of this Council. This Decree is dated the 3d instant, and countersigned Casa Irujo.

MADRID, DEC. 1.—It is stated that all the Ambassadors have remitted a Note to our Government, to demand that all the capitulations concluded by the French with several corps of the Constitutionalists, and the various garrisons, shall be punctually executed. It is also said that their Excellencies expressed a wish that Spain should be a representative Government.—The Empecinado, who was arrested, has been set at liberty. It is said that the royalist army is to be disbanded. The Swiss Royal Guards do no other duty than to guard the Palace. It is said as certain that the Bishop of Osma, President of the Exregency, has received orders to quit Madrid.

Accounts from Vienna of the 27th ult. say, that Count Stahremberg has refused the post of Austrian Minister at Madrid.

STUTGARD, DEC. 3.—The opening of the States General of Wirtemberg took place on the 1st instant. The King in his speech congratulated himself on the union which reigns between him and his subjects. His Majesty acknowledges the suffering state of the agriculturists, but does not say one word of the state of foreign affairs, nor of the Holy Alliance. His Majesty alluded to the law projects to be presented. "Some," he said, "embrace important subjects of legislation; others, such as the mode of election for the Assembly, were intended to fulfil the promises which had been given in the Constitutional Act." The President, Prince Hohenlohe Ochringen, made a complimentary reply.

Extract of a letter from St. Kitts, dated the 23d of October, 1823:—"We are just organizing an effective militia, to prevent our being cannibalised by the efforts of Messrs. Wilberforce, Stephen, and Macaulay. We have hints to beware of the Ides of Christmas, and mean to be prepared. Thus it is to disturb the minds of the hitherto quietest and happiest peasantry known to exist!"

BARBADOES, BRIDGE-TOWN, SEPT. 25.—The House of Assembly met on Tuesday last, pursuant to adjournment. The first business which occupied their attention was the appointment of an Agent to represent the island in Great Britain. John Pollard Mavers and George Carrington, Esqrs. were severally proposed for the situation. The House divided, when a majority of votes appeared in favour of Mr. Carrington. An Address passed the House, and was sent up to his Excellency, in reply to his speech on the opening of the session. A communication from Earl Bathurst, sent down to the House by his Excellency the Governor, on the subject of ameliorating the condition of the slave population of the island, was read, and a respectful address sent up to his Excellency, stating that a bill was introduced and in great progress in the late house, at the time of the prorogation, for the revision and consolidation of the Slave code, in which great amelioration was proposed in the condition of the slaves, and that it would speedily be brought before the house. After some other business was transacted, the house, at a quarter past five o'clock, adjourned to that day four weeks.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

THURSDAY.—The Lord Chancellor now seems recovered from his indisposition, but he still sits in his private room behind the hall. His Lordship was taken up this day with the hearing of further arguments in the case of Nunn v. Agutter, a case which has been some days before the Court, but contains nothing to interest the public.

FRIDAY.—Mr. Montague applied for the authority of the Lord Chancellor to enable the Messenger under the Commission against Llewellyn Watkin Williams, to proceed to the Surrey Theatre and receive the emoluments arising from the entertainments exhibited there, the object was to keep the theatre open, and render it as valuable as possible to the creditors.

The Lord Chancellor—What! we have got a theatre in bankruptcy at last. I knew that theatres were oftentimes insolvent—they have been frequently in Chancery; but to get one of them into bankruptcy is a surprise to me. You may take the order.

VICE CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

THURSDAY.—Kerred v. Lawless.—Mr. Knight moved for an Injunction to restrain the defendant from disposing of, or parting with, the sixteenth of a certain lottery ticket, or from receiving the money due thereon, from a prize in the last lottery. The plaintiff, Mr. Kerred, he stated, was a batter in the Strand, and the defendant a wine-merchant in Spring Gardens; some time since, the wife of the plaintiff being in company with the defendant, she proposed to him, or rather defendant proposed to her, that they should become sharers of a sixteenth in the lottery—she consented, and paid 11s. as her share; the ticket was purchased, and no further notice taken of it. Defendant kept the ticket and registered it at the office. On the 14th February, the defendant called upon plaintiff, while in bed, very anxious to see him, and when he saw him, proposed to share in another ticket, to which he consented—and he then proposed to him, to toss up who should hold both the tickets, the plaintiff consented, and Lawless won the wager; in the course of the same day, plaintiff learnt that the lottery had been drawn the day before, and that the first ticket had come up a 20,000l. prize. The plaintiff, therefore, swore that defendant knew the ticket was drawn, as he had registered it. This application was therefore made to prevent his receiving the amount from the Receiver General's Office, and to prevent his availing himself of the possession.—The Court immediately granted the Injunction.—It was also stated, Lawless would have received the money on Friday, if the Injunction had not been granted.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH.

FRIDAY.—Majoribanks v. Boyd.—This was an action brought by the owners of the Astel East Indiaman, against the owners of the Almora, to recover a compensation in damages for the loss of the ship's best bower anchor, occasioned by the alleged unskilful navigation of the Almora, by which she ran foul of the Astel in the Madras Roads. Several witnesses were called to prove the case for the plaintiff. On the part of the defendant, witnesses proved that it was the effect of accident. The Jury found a verdict for the plaintiff.—Damages to be agreed upon out of Court.

Seabrook v. Whitlow.—The plaintiff, who is a butcher at Compton, near Guildford, brought his action to recover damages against the defendant, a brewer and publican.—Philip Danby, parish clerk, produced entry of marriage between Harry Seabrook and Harriet Smith, on the 24th of February, 1804, in the parish church of Great Bradley, in Suffolk.—James Smith, brother-in-law of the plaintiff, was present at the marriage, after which they went to reside at Kitting, in Suffolk, and subsequently came to Compton, near Guildford, in Surrey, where they lived four or five years; it is 14 miles from Guildford; witness lives near Cambridge—they seemed to live on very comfortable terms—never saw anything to the contrary—knows defendant—the plaintiff is by trade a butcher.—Cross examined—His sister-in-law's age is 41—no more than that.—Wm. Seabrook—Is son of the plaintiff—was at Saffron Walden on the 10th of June last—saw his mother set off by the coach to London at six o'clock on the morning in question—witness has six brothers and sisters—his father is a master butcher—Whitlaw, the defendant, is a publican and brewer—has a wife and several children—believes him to be a man of property.—Sarah Allen, chamber-maid at the Blue Boar Inn, Aldgate—On the 10th June remembers a lady coming by the coach about 11 o'clock in the morning—believes a gentleman had come there before, but did not see him—the lady when she first came went to look a little while, rather unwell, nobody with her—then a gentleman came and inquired for his wife—witness never saw that gentleman before—did not see that gentleman till he went to bed at night—he sent for witness to the coffee-room, and asked her to shew him to bed—showed him to a bed-room, No. 1, about half a hour after the lady.—Wm. Whittaker, the landlord of the Blue Boar, saw the defendant on the 10th of June—saw him again at Guildford, when he seemed very friendly, and shook hands—on the 10th of June he ordered a steak, saying he expected his wife to meet him—a lady afterwards came that day, by the Saffron Walden coach, and inquired for her husband. They spent the afternoon together, having tea in a little room behind the bar. The witness proved the charge against the defendant, and the Jury gave the plaintiff a verdict, with 10l. damages.

OLD BAILEY.

THURSDAY.—William Anderton, aged 24 (a soldier,) was indicted for stealing a great coat, value 12s., the property of Wm. Gilbert.—Mrs. Gilbert stated that her husband was a musician in the Duke of York's band of Royal Coldstream Guards. The prisoner called at her house, and said the Master of the Band had sent him for her husband's coat, which she readily gave him. Mr. Bailey, the Master of the Band, denied having given such orders. The possession and disposal of the coat and gold lace were traced to the prisoner. The prisoner made no defence. Verdict—Guilty.

Elizabeth Brown, aged 27, (widow,) was indicted for stealing four handkerchiefs, value 5s., the property of William Webb. The prosecutor was a linen-draper, he saw the prisoner go out of the shop, and missed four handkerchiefs, which induced him to pursue her, and he found them in her possession.—The prisoner said it was distress which drove her to the commission of the offence which was her first. Hence she hoped the Court would be merciful to her. She had been in Worcestershire to bury her child, and exhausted all her money. Verdict—Guilty.

Frederick Daley, aged 18, Chas. Sambourn, 18, waiter, and John Reedy, 17, labourer, (three decent looking lads,) were indicted for stealing 120 yards of flannel, value 7l. the property of R. Hawkes.—The prosecutor deposed that he was a linen-draper—the flannel was outside his shop, and tied to the door-post—witness missed it—in Warwick-street he saw Daley with a roll of flannel before him—it consisted of 61 yards—at that time no other person was with him—when he got up to Daley he threw the flannel at him, and tried to knock him down—a gentleman took him into custody, when Sambourn came up with a stick, and attempted to strike him, and said let him alone—he also was taken into custody—he considered the flannel safe, although outside the shop.—Sambourn said the gentleman had sworn a false oath, he denied having had a stick. The prosecutor was recalled, who stated that Daley escaped for a short time through the interference of Sambourn, but they were both pursued and apprehended.—Daley made no defence.—Sambourn said that he heard a cry of stop thief, and ran as several others did.—Reedy put in a written defence—he stated that he was at a public house, and a stranger came in and asked him if he wanted a job—he said he could find employ for twelve weeks—he brought him a roll of flannel, which he was to take for him, but he did not return—hence it was that he sold it—he denied all knowledge of the property being stolen.—The prisoners called no witnesses to character.—The Jury returned a verdict of—Guilty against all the prisoners.—Judgment—The Recorder said that it was quite evident that the prisoners were all getting their living by thieving, hence they were not fit to stop in this country—Transportation for seven years.

William Overend and Francis Skinner, soldiers in the Guards, were indicted for assaulting George Lyall on the King's highway, and stealing four handkerchiefs, a gown and other articles. George Lyall, an old man, said he lived at Kensington: that on the night of the 10th of November, he and his wife were going home from London. As they were passing by the palace gate, at Kensington, about twelve o'clock, two soldiers attacked him, and one of them seized the bundle which he had in his hand, and ran away with it into the fields towards Chelsea. He was sure that the prisoner Skinner was the man who struck him.—John Barker stated, that he was coming home from Chelsea on that night, when he met the two prisoners: they had a bundle; he followed and took Overend with the bundle in his hand, and afterwards Skinner was taken.—The Serjeant of the regiment was called to give the prisoners a character, but he had nothing to say in their favour.—The Common Sergeant observed that although the act of the prisoners, provided the Jury believed the witnesses, came within the description of a highway robbery, the indictment was not laid capitally.—The Jury found the prisoners Guilty.—The Common Sergeant told them, that had they been indicted and convicted on the capital charge, they should be made to atone for their crimes by their lives. That he should inflict on them the heaviest punishment which the law allowed him to inflict. The sentence of the Court, therefore, was, that they should be transported for life.

FRIDAY.—Eliza Hammond, late bar-maid at the Skinners Arms, Somers Town, was indicted for stealing certain monies, the property of Henry Hodson, her master. She was detected in consequence of Mr. Hodson marking some silver which was paid to her for liquor, and was afterwards found in her pocket. The Recorder, after the case had proceeded some time, discovered a flaw unfortunately in the indictment, and she was consequently acquitted.

Ann Wright, aged 32, was indicted for stealing a ring, an eye glass, and some other articles, the property of Mrs. Oscar Byrne, with whom she lived as servant, these articles were found in the prisoner's box, but two 10l. Bank notes which were stolen could not be recovered. She was found Guilty, and sentenced to be transported for seven years.

ESSEX ASSIZES.

THURSDAY.—Thomas Wakeling, upwards of sixty years of age, was indicted on the Statute of 27 Geo. II. c. 15, for feloniously sending a letter without any signature, on the 25th of March, to Thomas Poole, threatening to burn down his dwelling-house, out house, barns, and stacks, at Great Waltham. The fact of sending the letter was proved. In the summer of last year the premises of the prosecutor, at Great Waltham, had been purposely set fire to by some incendiary. Suspicion falling on the prisoner, he was apprehended and tried for that offence, but for want of sufficient evidence he was acquitted. In the month of March last, the prisoner was in confinement in the Chelmsford House of Correction for some petty offence. His term of imprisonment having expired on the 20th of the month, he was liberated. The prisoner could neither read nor write. In the prison, however, was a person named Bridge, who had been adjudged a rogue and vagabond, but was a man of some education, and had seen better days. The prisoner had employed this man to write the letter which was the subject of the indictment. The evidence of Bridge was to the following effect:—That in the beginning of this year he was confined in the Chelmsford House of Correction as a vagrant. The prisoner was also there. Witness was in the habit of writing letters for the prisoners in the House of Correction. In February or March last the prisoner asked him to write a letter for him. Witness consented. The prisoner produced a sheet of paper and pen and ink, and desired him to write the letter in the very terms that he should dictate. The letter in question was now produced and identified by the witness. The language of the letter was the prisoner's own. When witness came to the words "all round you," in the letter, he observed to the prisoner that there was no meaning in those expressions, and asked him what he meant. The prisoner replied, "Never you mind the meaning; write exactly as I tell you, and I'll give you half a loaf." Witness accordingly wrote the letter and delivered it to the prisoner. Did not know for whom the letter was intended. He never heard the name of Mr. Poole. Knew nothing of the tinder inclosed in the letter. Did not know who wrote the superscription. Mr. Neale, assistant keeper of the House of Correction, deposed that the piece of burnt rag contained in the letter produced, corresponded in texture with the linen used by the prisoners in his custody. The prisoner was discharged from the House of Correction on the 20th of March last.—The prisoner, in his defence, solemnly declared his innocence; that he knew nothing of the letter, and could not read or write. He called no witnesses. The Jury found the prisoner Guilty. He declared that he was as innocent as the child unborn.—Mr. Justice Park then addressed the prisoner, and animadverted upon the enormity of his conduct. He had subjected himself to the penalty of death in point of law, but inasmuch as the Legislature had very lately altered the punishment prescribed by the Statute, upon which this indictment was framed, by remitting the judgment of death, his Lordship said he should suffer the law to take its course. It was stated that the prisoner was an old offender. Thirty-seven years since he had received judgment of death for sheep-stealing, and since then he had been an immense number of times in prison for various charges.

FRIDAY.—John Pallet, charged on the coroner's inquisition with the murder of Mr. Mumford, was removed to Chelmsford gaol last night. On his arrival opposite the Saracen's Head Inn he expressed a desire to see Mr. Halls, who had taken up his residence there, and who conducts the prosecution. Mr. Halls went to the side of the cart in which he was secured. The prisoner then made a voluntary confession of his crime. He said that he had made three attempts, but that in the two first his heart failed him. He at last summoned resolution, and struck the fatal blow, which he repeated till the head of the deceased was completely smashed. He said that Kidman, who is to be a witness on the trial, lent him a knife to cut the stick with which the murder was committed.—The Grand Jury found "a true bill against him for the wilful murder of Mr. Mumford."—The prisoner maintains a brutal indifference to his fate.

Henry Catchfale, aged 18, and Thomas Wickers, a horse dealer, were indicted, the former for stealing, and the latter for receiving it, knowing it to be stolen, a mare, the property of Mr. Weeks, of South Lambeth. The prisoner had lived servant with Mr. Weeks, who is a builder, for a month and a few days. He then absconded, taking with him the mare, a cart and harness. The horse was traced to the possession of a butcher in the neighbourhood of Chelmsford, who had bought it of the prisoner Wickers; the prisoner Wickers having bought it of Catchfale at a very low price. Under all the circumstances, the Jury acquitted Wickers, who produced several respectable persons to speak to his character; but found Catchfale Guilty.

Mary Dane was indicted for the wilful murder of her illegitimate child, at Chadwell, in this county, on the 21st of July. The Jury acquitted the prisoner of the murder, but found her Guilty of concealing the birth of the child. The Court sentenced the prisoner to three months imprisonment.

POLICE.

BOW-STREET.—Wednesday James Stone and George Williams were charged with an attempt to rob the house of Mr. Allett, of Springgardens. A servant at a house opposite saw the prisoners, and a third man, lurking about, and in a few minutes Williams got over the area railings and into the parlour window. An alarm was given, and Williams jumped out again, but he and Stone were secured. Nothing had been removed. Several officers recognised the prisoners as reputed thieves, and they were committed to the House of Correction, there to be kept to hard labour for three months.

On Friday, William Hill, formerly a police constable at Worship-street, and subsequently an extra patrol at this office, was charged with uttering a forged 5l. note to a salesman in Holywell-street. In company with a young girl, he went into the shop to treat her with a pelisse, and while the salesman, who suspected the note to be bad, was gone to procure change, he walked off, but was secured.—He was remanded.

HATTON-GARDEN.—On Thursday Thomas Holloway was brought up for further examination, charged with wilfully and maliciously shooting his wife with a pistol loaded with powder and slugs, with intent to kill and murder her, or do her some grievous bodily harm. It was stated that the prisoner, whose occupation is somewhat connected with engineering, was out of employment, and that he and his wife (who is a bonnet-maker,) had parted early on Tuesday morning in quest of work at their respective trades; that on his return in the evening he did not find his wife at home, and went to his aunt's, residing next door, to take tea. He had scarcely entered the house, when his wife made her appearance, and upbraided him for not being at home earlier, to light a fire for her comfort. An altercation ensuing, she rushed into her own house, where she continued so to irritate the wretched man that in a fit of desperation he took down from above his chimney piece a horse pistol, loaded with slugs, (which he always kept there for the defence of his house,) and, in the act of raising it, as he alleges, to terminate his existence, it went off, and the contents lodged in the left thigh of his wife, a short distance from the knee, and shattered the bone. She was taken immediately to Middlesex Hospital, where she lies in a most dangerous state. During the night the prisoner made many attempts to destroy himself.—Mr. M'Donnell, a surgeon, was examined—he said the wound was about four inches above the knee, on the fore part of the right thigh; the wound extended obliquely downwards and inwards to the thigh bone, which was shattered to a considerable extent, and many splinters of the bone were imbedded in the soft part of the thigh; one, in particular, of considerable size was extracted. The wound did not appear to be made by a ball; the orifice was an inch in diameter, but it was much larger inside. Being so very near when the shot was fired, the clothes were singed, and the shot or slugs did not separate. I saw the prisoner afterwards; he appeared much distressed, and in great agitation. He stated that it was accidental, and that he intended the shot for himself, and that whilst in the act of raising the pistol to his own head, it exploded, and he accidentally shot his wife.—The prisoner was remanded.

DEFECT OF THE PAWNBROKERS' ACT.—A respectable lady, residing in Somers-town, appeared before the Magistrate, requesting redress in the following case:—It appeared that she had pawned the furniture of a house with a pawnbroker in that neighbourhood, 12 months ago (for which furniture she had paid 200l. and which was quite new), for 24l. On going to redeem her property, she found that it had been greatly injured—in fact, it had been hired out during the whole period of its pledge—in the case of the pawnbroker. It was of very little value now, and the pawnbroker refused giving her any compensation.—The Magistrate observed, that the Act only empowered him in such a case to order the goods being restored, without her paying either interest or principal, and inflict a penalty of 10l. As this falls far short of the loss she has sustained, she is left to the uncertain alternative of an action at law.

NAVY AND SHIPPING GENERALLY.

The Tigris, of London, Captain Fotheringham, was lost last week about 60 miles east of Trinity Castle. The Captain, his wife, and the greater part of the crew (excepting the second mate and boatswain, who were below) had just time to get into the long boat before the ship foundered. Indeed, so little time for preparation had the survivors, that they were not enabled to put into the boat a single article of provision, not a drop of water, and were obliged to cast off without rudder, mast, sails, and with only a single oar.

Loss of the Royal Oak.—On the 11th of October, the brig Royal Oak, Thos. Darnley, commander, belonging to North Shields, sailed from Quebec, bound to Hull. On the morning of the 14th, being in the vicinity of the Seven Islands, a strong gale sprung up from the N.E. which at meridian, increased with great violence, accompanied with rain and snow. The Captain, carpenter, and two boys, saved themselves by hanging on the staunchions on the weather side of the cabin; the second mate, one boy, with the cook, who were also in the cabin, were drowned. The remainder of the crew made to the main rigging. The vessel continued on her broadside about ten minutes, when the foremast going by the board, and the bowsprit separating, she righted. The Captain, carpenter, sail-maker, and two boys, made their way up the companion-ladder, and endeavoured to gain the forecastle, which the remainder of the survivors had reached, but a heavy sea striking the vessel, washed the two boys overboard, and they were drowned; the others succeeded in joining their comrades, who in the meantime got to the mate and three seamen. In this distressing situation they passed the night, and at eight A. M. reduced by debility, and exposed to the effects of the intense cold, two of the seamen dropped overboard, and were immediately washed overboard. At noon the wretched survivors were enabled to reach the main top, where they constructed a shelter with a studding-sail and some other materials, which afforded them a more secure protection than the exposed situation of the forecastle. The Captain remained a short time with the other survivors, but he then descended upon deck, but had scarcely reached it, when he was washed overboard and drowned. On the 19th they became exceedingly debilitated, the cold having seized on their limbs, which rendered them incapable of any exertion. At about four P. M. a vessel came in sight, which proved to be the Margaret, of Hull, James Creighton, master, who, on reaching the wreck, sent out boats, conveyed the survivors on board the Margaret, where they experienced every attention which their unfortunate situation demanded; and on the 25th inst. they reached Quebec.

The Canton packet, King, from Batavia, has arrived off Portsmouth.

The Company's ships Vansittart, Dalrymple, and the Warren Hastings, Rawes, bound to China, arrived off Angier the 19th August; and the Lowther Castle, Capt. Baker, on the 1st August. The Berkley, Capt. Hire, arrived off Angier the 12th July; she made the quickest passage remembered at Batavia, being only 78 days from the Lizard, and sailed again for China the 17th July.

ARRIVALS AT BATAVIA.—The Sarah, Larbery, from Cowes; the Waterloo, Banskin, from Plymouth; and the Amsterdam packet, from Amsterdam. The Lonach, Hackman, from Singapore, was to sail from Batavia for England, the 26th August.

The North Point, Sheeram, American ship, has arrived off Hastings; sailed from thence the 25th August.

The Hope, Brown, from Leghorn to Liverpool, which put into Gibraltar to repair, sailed from thence on the 24th of September, and was not since heard of.

The Isabella, Livingstone, from Trieste to Liverpool, was upset in a violent squall about the 16th ult. near Promontiro, and abandoned, but afterwards fallen in with by an Austrian vessel, and carried into Ancona.

THE ARMY AND MILITARY AFFAIRS.

We are authorized to state, that the officers, who are to be appointed to commissions in the regiments of infantry, which are now being raised, will be taken exclusively from the half-pay list.

The following undress for Officers of Infantry has met with the approval of his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief, and is to be adopted forthwith—viz. Blue frock, Prussian collar, epaulets, black cross belt, sash, &c. and cocked hat and plume. The hat to be worn on all occasions, except on parade, when the chaco is to be worn.

Tuesday afternoon, at four o'clock, his Royal Highness the Duke of York held a levee as Commander-in-Chief, at his Office in the Horse Guards, which was attended by the Earl of Cork, Viscount Bernard, Gen. Sir Charles Green, Gen. Nicols, Lieut.-Gen. Maitland, Lieut.-Gen. Wetherall, Lieut.-Gen. Sir Fitzroy Maclear, Major-Gen. Sir Charles Greville, Major-Gen. Fuller, Major-Gen. Eden, Captain Parry, R.N., and about thirty others.

The four companies belonging to the 73d Regiment of Foot, marched from Edinburgh for Glasgow on the 3d and 4th instant for Portpatrick, on their route to Ireland; the remaining four companies belonging to the same Corps, having been relieved by the 17th (Leicestershire) Regiment of Infantry, are now on their march for the same destination. It is understood that the two Regiments of Foot, which are now being raised, will be officered from the half-pay list.

The 66th Regiment marched from Fermoy on the 3d inst., on which day the 62d Regiment, on its route to Cork, marched into that place. The head-quarters of the 62d is at Templemere, and the regiment sends detachments to Thurles, Barrosoleigh, Roscrea, Littleton, New Birmingham, Burrasokain-Ninah, Fort Cameron, and Ballinacurry.

Such Surgeons and Assistant-Surgeons as are on half-pay of the cavalry of Limerick, were lately ordered to Dublin, in order that the proper authorities might ascertain their capability for active service. Such as were found fit are to be immediately placed on full pay, and attached to regiments. Three additional Veteran Battalions will be immediately formed in Ireland.—(Dublin Evening Post.)

By the present organization of the Indian army, every two regiments have but one Colonel, and each regiment of infantry is composed of two battalions, commanded by one Colonel. By the new organization, each regiment of cavalry will have its own Colonel, and each regiment of infantry will be divided into two regiments, with a Colonel to each. By this arrangement, forty Lieutenant-Colonels upon the General Establishment will obtain regiments—viz. four additional ones to the cavalry; thirty-two to the infantry; and four to the four irregular regiments of infantry.

On Tuesday night, the coach-house of Earl Ferrers, at Craven-hill, near Bayswater, was broken open, and three valuable plate glasses, value 3l. each, were stolen out of the coach windows.—A handsome chaise was stolen, on Monday night, out of the chaise-house of Mrs. Welbrey, No. 24, Paradise-row, Back-road, Islington. Several other coach-houses and stables in the neighbourhood have lately been robbed of harness, great-coats, and other articles.

On Sunday night last, two men were detected in Ongar Churchyard, Essex, taking up the body of a boy who died of an inflammation of the intestines, a short time previous; the father and uncle of the deceased, upon well-grounded suspicion, watched, and shot at the resurrection men, who immediately made their escape, leaving behind them a sack, spade, and two irons. They afterwards shot a man in the town, who lives at Ongar, as he was passing along the foot path, but is not materially injured.

On Wednesday morning, about one o'clock, a fire broke out in Colchester oil mill, Ardleigh, about two miles from Colchester, and in less than an hour it presented a complete mass of ruins. The mill had been at work only three weeks, the proprietor had neglected to insure it.

Some time since a man named North, was executed at Newgate.—He was convicted on the evidence of a boy, about 13 years of age named Isaac Wallis. Soon after this conviction the boy became in a state which left considerable doubt as to his sanity; and on Sunday last he hung himself with a pocket handkerchief to the beam of a shed at his parent's dwelling. An inquisition was held at the Ship Tavern, Shakespeare's Walk, Shadwell, this week on the body, when the Jury returned a verdict of "Lunacy."

MISCELLANEOUS.

In the Court of Common Council, on Thursday, a vote of thanks was passed to the late Lord Mayor, for his service during his Mayoralty.—The Lord Mayor addressed the Court upon the subject of the coal trade, and the high price of that requisite article, and the further progress of the business was referred to the Coal and Corn Committee.—The Committee for General Purposes presented a report, recommending a subscription of 500l. to the Marine Society, which was agreed to, and the Chamberlain ordered to pay the same. The Committee also presented a report on the present state of Blackfriars-bridge, with an estimate of properly repairing the same, which was referred to the Committee to take such measures as they should be advised, in relation to an application to Parliament for aid to effect so desirable a purpose.—A motion was made for erecting a statue to General Riego, in Moorfields. Mr. Slade proposed it, and presented a petition from a person named Turner, which stated that the petitioner had been engaged in building the Crescent at Finsbury, and was possessed of considerable property in houses there; that the property would be much improved in value (this part of the petition created a general smile) if the Corporation would allow him to erect a statue in the Circus now erecting. Mr. Favell and Mr. Galloway supported the motion. Alderman Sir C. Hunter opposed it. He did not doubt that when the arms which were still in the hands of the Spanish Committee were sold, the produce would be applied to the purpose of erecting the statue in question." Mr. Dixon said, if we must erect statues, let it be to deserving characters of our own country, and not to foreigners. There was no telling where the erection of statues would end; they would next have the statue of the Lord Mayor. (His Lordship here said, he hoped he should live the year out.) And then, said Mr. Dixon, we shall all feel the effects of your goodness. Several other members spoke against the motion, and it was lost—the previous question being carried.

RETAIL BREWING.—All doubts, if any existed on this subject, are now removed, the Hon. Commissioners of his Majesty's Board of Excise having issued a circular letter, dated the 5th inst. to the Collectors of Districts throughout the kingdom, directing them to regauge and charge the allowance on the stock of all brewers who wish to sell retail; and to grant brewers' retail licenses to all persons requiring them.

By the third section of the late Vagrant Act, "all persons imposing, or endeavouring to impose, upon any private individual, by false representation, either verbally or in writing, with a view to obtain money, or some other advantage or benefit, are to be deemed rogues and vagabonds, and may be sent to hard labour in the House of Correction for any time not exceeding three months, nor less than one."

CAMBRIDGE, Dec. 12.—At a congregation on Wednesday last, the following degrees were conferred:—Master of Arts—Rev. S. E. Batten, Pembroke Hall.—Bachelor in Civil Law—J. K. Gresham, Jesus College.—Bachelor of Arts—R. Thompson, Trinity College.—The Rev. H. Law, M.A. of St. John's college, and J. King, Esq. M.A. of Queen's college, are appointed Examiners for the Pitt Scholarship.—The Rev. J. Hind, M.A. of Sidney college, J. King, Esq. M.A. of Queen's college, the Rev. T. Chevalier, M.A. of Catherine hall, and R. Twopenny, Esq. M.A. of St. John's college, are appointed Examiners of the Questionists; and the Rev. J. Lodge, M.A. of Magdalen college, and the Rev. R. Dawes, M.A. of Downing, are appointed additional Examiners of the Seventh and Eighth Classes.

A General Meeting of the Subscribers to Lloyd's, was held on Wednesday, for the purpose of electing two gentlemen to serve as members of the General Committee, in the room of two gentlemen, who go out by rotation.

A prospectus of an undertaking for working the mines of Mexico, has this week been distributed in the City. It is to be conducted by a public company, which is of a mixed character, comprising both Mexican and European interests, and uniting the scientific and mechanical improvements of the Old World, with the already attained practice and experience of the established miners of the country where the operations will be carried on. The progress of an enterprise of this nature mainly depends on the talents and character of its principal managers; for, if well directed, it is certainly calculated to yield abundant returns from the well known riches of the Mexican territory in products of this description; and as the funds to be subscribed will be chiefly invested in materials produced or manufactured in England, it is one of those undertakings which may lead to extensive future advantages to the British empire, independent of the benefits which the individuals engaged in it may reap from the speculation. The extensive territory and large population of this portion of America will always make the cultivation of a friendly connection with it interesting to Great Britain; and there cannot be a better period for accomplishing this object, than when the independence of this new Republic is becoming consolidated. The following are the principal articles and conditions detailed in the prospectus:—"The Company is in the joint names of the managing founders, at the head of whom is Mr. Alaman, proprietor of Gold and Silver Mines, and Minister of State of the Interior and Foreign Affairs in Mexico; but at the same time it is a joint stock company on shares to bearer with respect to the share holders. The term of the Company is fixed for fifty years, and the joint stock capital at one million, two hundred thousand Mexican dollars, divided into six thousand shares of two hundred dollars each for Mexico, and forty pounds sterling for England. The interest on the capital is fixed at five per cent. per annum, payable half-yearly by the respective agents, on the 1st March and 1st Sept. in each year. A division of the yearly profits, over and above the interest, is to be declared and paid in the month of December, and the first payment will take place in December, 1824. The shares are printed in the Spanish, English, and French languages, with yearly dividend warrants for the profits, and half yearly interest warrants attached to them. The payment of the shares in London is to be made into the hands of Messrs. Hullett, Brothers, and Co. viz.:—one-third down against provisional receipts, to be exchanged for the shares on the payment of the remaining two-thirds. A reserved fund is provided for, to secure the punctual payment of the interest, to meet contingencies and unforeseen works, and to form a fund for the final repayment of the capital. Another reserved fund is also stipulated for, to be formed out of the profits of the managing founders, as a security for their correct administration, which is to be carried to an amount equal to the whole capital of the Company, and both these funds are to be invested in the public securities. Other articles provide for the appointment of a Committee to meet twice a year, on the payment of the remaining two-thirds. A reserved fund is provided for, to secure the punctual payassist the managers, audit the accounts, &c.; also to direct the mode of keeping the accounts, and of transmitting them to England annually for the information of the shareholders. These are the principal heads of a plan for extracting the precious metals from the mines of Mexico. It may prove highly beneficial to the country, and certainly shews a better security for the capital to be employed in the undertaking than most of the existing foreign paper bubbles."

On Monday night, Mr. Mumford, jun. of Widdington-hall, near Quendon, returning from London, left the Walden coach at Quendon-street, and in his way to his home, which is about half a mile from the road, was way-laid and murdered. It appears he was knocked down by some heavy instrument, his brains nearly beaten out, and his throat cut. The murderer was afterwards discovered with the body on his back, conveying it to a clay-pit, and was within a few yards of the pit when taken into custody. He turns out to be a son of one of Mr. Mumford's own workmen. It is supposed that he was incited to the diabolical act, from Mr. Mumford having impounded one of his pigs that had frequently trespassed in his garden. The fellow had been taken up on a charge of assaulting Mr. Mumford, and discharged; he afterwards threatened he would "serve him out."—On Thursday an inquest was held at the Fleur-de-lis at Widdington, on the body of Mr. Mumford. The body had been taken in a cart to this house, in company with John Pallett, who was searched, and in his pockets were found a knife and comb belonging to the deceased; footsteps were traced from the spot where the murder was committed across a piece of turnips, where the hat and coat of the deceased were found. Two witnesses proved having, about a fortnight ago, heard the prisoner say he should like to cut Jem Mumford's throat. The surgeon who examined the body stated, that all the bones in the cranium, except the frontal bone, were dashed to atoms, and the injury was produced by a blunt instrument. There was also a desperate cut under the left jaw, the wounds on the skull produced his death. The Jury found a verdict of Wilful Murder against John Pallet, and he was committed on the Coroner's warrant to take his trial at the present Assizes for the county of Essex.

Lord Suffield has had the misfortune to break the great tendon of his leg, which it is hoped will be attended with no very serious after-consequences.

A meeting took place on Hounslow Heath, on Wednesday, between a gentleman of the name of Poynter and a Captain Smith, which originated in a dispute at a coursing match, on the preceding day. The Captain received his adversary's ball above the knee, but it did not prove which left considerable doubt as to his sanity; and on Sunday last he hung himself with a pocket handkerchief to the beam of a shed at his parent's dwelling. An inquisition was held at the Ship Tavern, Shakespeare's Walk, Shadwell, this week on the body, when the Jury returned a verdict of "Lunacy."

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Mr. Ball may rely upon it, whatever line we may consider it proper to take, that his last letter shall accompany the documents in publication.

In answer to our correspondent of last week, we have the BEST AUTHORITY for stating, that no persons were admitted to the Pit of Drury Lane Theatre, previous to the opening of the doors, on the night His Majesty was pleased to honour that Theatre with his presence.

Rusticus is a bit of a twaddler—his joke about the stable has been four-stalled.

Solomon Stephenson is thanked for his enclosure—when we saw the signature we thought it was from an old friend; but the christian name cleared up the mistake—our friend Stephenson is no Solomon.

Lines to an actor, on his lying in bed all day to keep himself tall, are exquisitely droll, but the fact cannot surely be correct.

B.B. who dates his letter Ebury-street—whether there be such a street in existence or not, we cannot take upon ourselves to say—seems to have had a narrow escape of the tread-mill—private boxes are private property, and he might as well get into a man's parlour window to get out of the rain, as climb into his box to escape a squeeze—that he escaped with a whole skin appears quite marvellous—as to the guaranty of the playhouse people about room, we agree with B.B. it is a shameful imposition; but gentlemen who rent or own private boxes, and who have neither care for, nor interest in, theatrical matters, are certainly not to find places in their apartments for the victims of public trickery.

The letter from Grimsby shall have every attention.

The ingenious remarks upon the coal proprietors and their conduct will speedily be brought before the public.

We are still obliged to delay the account of the Popish publications.

The Mechanics' Institute is carefully watched, and shall forthwith be submitted to a full and impartial investigation.

We can only acknowledge the receipt of the Bishop of Chester's sermon to-day: but as it appears to us at present, we are not likely implicitly to approve the whole of it.

We are obliged to our Exeter correspondent.

We shall make enquiries about the case of the Tread Mill, at Guildford; indeed, we have no doubt Mr. Jackson will afford an explanation of what appears to us horrible barbarity.

We hear that Popery is flourishing in Norwich—it is not to be wondered at.

The pamphlets on the West Indian Colonies have been received, and are under consideration.

It will be seen by the insertion of our article on the Scots Episcopal Church, that we have received the explanation we sought—as our line upon the subject was taken without any communication with the Society or subscribers to whose names we referred in this paper, the observation was needless.

What does Anne want? We can do nothing for her—we have got a copy of amatory verses, signed M. which she might enjoy if we could get them to her—we never insert such things, because we hate affectation in all shapes, and when we see a passion so overwhelming, so engrossing, as real love, is frittered into a vanity that prompts its owner to write rhymes, we cannot choose but sneer. Anne, however, who really seems in love, shall enjoy one stanza of our correspondent's exquisite poem.—He is talking—as of what else should he talk—of his mistress, and thus he sings:—

"Oh happy days; when she was nigh,
"But brief, as sweet and quickly gone;
"My brother's grave received the sigh
"That parting said our souls are one."

That M. should bury his sighs at the moment when an affectionate brother would be most likely to have them, is not natural; but there is a delicate neatness in the way in which the poet tells us that his beloved was short and sweet, equal to any specimen of conciseness we have met with—

"she was nigh,
"But brief, as sweet," &c.

We quite agree with him as to figure, for in our notions of female beauty we are of the opinion of the poet who says,

"Man wants but little here below,
"Nor wants that little LONG."

We really apologise to M. for making a joke of his poem, but we will endeavour to recompense him by inserting the following stanza, which is as philosophical as the other we noticed was pathetic—

"Mary, I weep—but weep not thou,
"Nor of it meet the brow of scorn;
"'Tis sharp!—but say thou lov'st me now,
"I'll bide the night in hopes of morn."

There is a beautiful and rational display here, which is worthy notice—

"'Tis a long lane has no turning—
"A long night, when there's no morning."

And if all his hopes are as near realization as that of finding a morning succeed to a night, he is a lucky fellow, and may laugh at the sharp brows of scorn or anybody else—but he had better not write poetry.

We have no room for any observations in this number on Mr. Hutchinson's pamphlet on prison discipline—we return our thanks.

The lines, "To her so loved in brighter days," can answer no purpose—we have spoken our mind about amatory verses before.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, DEC. 14.

The only foreign news which is at all interesting is that which tells us of the change of the Spanish ministry; we honestly confess ourselves not sufficiently acquainted with the qualities and characters of the persons named to make any further observation upon the subject; it seems certain that Saez is not included in the arrangement.

The Morning Chronicle of Friday, in mentioning the fact of this change, observes, "We cannot hope for any amelioration in the condition of Spain under the Theocracy, but "still," &c.—That is to say, that men who believe in God must be either weak or wicked persons, and must necessarily ruin and distress the country they are called upon to govern.

The strides which the Chronicle is making towards perfection in all the higher qualities of radicalism, must be particularly agreeable to such of its patrons as happen to be politically Saints.

We have received innumerable letters on the subject of our West Indian Colonies; and amongst others, one written, as it should seem, by a person of some authority, charging us with having excited the colonists and planters to an expression of discontent and ill-will towards the existing Government, and laying down "a moderate system to be observed in our future "observations on this highly important question."

We should like extremely to be satisfied whence this letter really comes;—it assumes a tone of direction and dictation to which we most assuredly shall not submit. We agree with its writer, that our "formidable influence" has been exceedingly effective upon the occasion, and we shall continue to exercise it with the most rigid impartiality, and in the cause of truth and justice, whenever and wherever we choose, unawed by the frowns of power, or the threats of its hostility.

We lament, most certainly, the destruction of the meeting-house in Barbadoes, not only because such an act is in itself abominable and disgraceful, but because we are apprehensive that the event may be mixed up with the great question now agitating between the saints and the planters, with which, in point of fact, it has nothing to do.

It is very true, that the outrage, although arising from a separate source, may have been more readily entered into, from a feeling that much of the evil at present existing in the colonies, and all that may even hereafter arise, have their origin in that mistaken philanthropy—that unnatural sanctity—outwardly professed by the dissenters from the Church of England; but the immediate cause of the demolition of Mr. Shrewsbury's meeting-house was a feeling of personal hostility, excited by reports which he had made against the moral perfections of the population.

This, generally, is believed to be the real ground of the riot; but the secretaries of the Wesleyan Missionary Society deny the fact, and refer to something which they call their "Monthly Notices," to prove that Mr. Shrewsbury did not abuse the whites, but confined his attacks upon immorality and irreligion to the poor suffering blacks, "whilst he makes honourable mention of several excellent persons in the island, who "apply themselves to remedy those evils."

We certainly have not referred to the "Monthly Notices," but it seems very strange that a prejudice, created, as these secretaries say, three years since, should only now have burst out; they distinctly state it to be an outrage committed by the planters and persons interested in the colonies, because Mr. Shrewsbury was a missionary, and because the insurrection at Demerara was excited by missionaries.

We think, with all due and proper submission to the secretaries, that the people who pulled down the chapel refer, not to anything which appeared in print in their monthly notices, or any other published work, but to some much more recent reports made by Mr. Shrewsbury, and which were not intended for the vulgar eye. At all events, the riot and disgraceful conduct of the mob must not be charged to the account of the West India planters, or the West India question—it is violent personal revenge taken for violent personal insult, and we caution our numerous friends not to be duped into a belief that it has any connexion with the important subject which we have so much at heart.

We are sorry to perceive that a similar disturbance, attended with similar results, has occurred at Berbice, where the Meeting House of a Mr. Wray has been burnt to the ground; this riot appears beyond doubt to have had its origin in a growing hatred towards the Missionaries. We know not yet where it will all end.

Our observations upon the present state of the Episcopal Church of Scotland have called forth many communications from that part of the Empire, mostly, we are sorry to say, from violent Presbyterians, who shew the badness of their cause by that of their temper, and who talk sneeringly of Episcopal Bishops, and foolishly of their learning and humility; one person, eminently thick-headed, threatens us with leaving off our paper if we persist in the advocacy we have commenced—poor dunce!

We will use this threatener's letter for the purpose of answering those who think like its writer.—

Sir—I have long been a reader of your excellent paper, the John Bull, and am one who think you have done much good. I was very much surprised, however, to find that in your last number you had for once entirely departed from those principles which you have all along inflexibly adhered to. I regret that a friend of mine has carried off the paper for the present, and that I cannot make a more particular reference to the article with which I was much hurt; it was an article, however, in which you make some remarks on the Scotch Episcopal Bishop Low's address to the Clergy of the Diocese of Ross, and in which you, unnecessarily as I think, make some very illiberal remarks on the Established Church of Scotland. I have no wish that you or any man who conscientiously believes the Episcopalian Church to be more Apostolical than the Presbyterian, should abandon that church. Nor would I wish you who live in England where the Episcopalian Church is the establishment of the country, to dissent from it. I only wish that as you contend for the Constitution in Church and State as at present established, you would consider that by the Constitution of the country the Presbyterian religion is the establishment of Scotland, and when you write against it, or wish to encourage Episcopalian Dissenters here, you are forgetting the principles which you have always most ably advocated.

You are perhaps not aware what sort of people the Scotch Episcopalians are, the Clergy I mean—they are all Jacobites to a man, and till very lately not one of them would take the oaths of allegiance to his present Majesty. They are, too, with the exception of a very few individuals, low, uneducated men. This Bishop Low, as he calls himself, (for you will remember that by the law of the land there can be no bishop in Scotland,) is a poor creature, who never attended an university in his life, except for three years at Aberdeen, when he obtained orders in the Scotch Episcopal Church, which had no connexion with the Church of England, and by cringing to a certain peer, who is an Episcopalian, he has got himself dubbed Bishop. The Clergy in Scotland of the Established Church are as a body most loyal, and attached to the Constitution, both in Church and State—among no class in the community is your excellent paper more generally circulated. The Church of Scotland Clergy are not to be judged of by such fanatics as Irving, whom you quote as a specimen. We have Robertson, Blair, Hill, M'Knight, Campbell, &c. &c. Clergymen of our Church, to whom we refer you for a true specimen of the Scottish Clergy.

You say that you are to continue to advocate the cause of the Episcopalian Clergy in Scotland—you may with the very same propriety advocate the cause of the Presbyterians in England—the Episcopalians are as much Dissenters in Scotland as the Presbyterians are in England, and their clergy certainly neither for learning nor character superior. Some of my friends were for giving up your excellent paper, I am for continuing it—I am of opinion that you have been inadvertently led into this mistake from not attending to the distinction that takes place in the constitution of the country betwixt the Episcopalians and Presbyterians—the one being established in England and the other in Scotland.—I am your constant reader, and, with this exception, your admirer, A Member of the Presbyterian Church of Scotland.

It will be observed, that this presbyterian says he does not wish any one "who believes the Episcopalian Church"—(he means Episcopal)—"to be more apostolical than the presbyterian,"—(he means apostolic)—"to abandon that Church." Really that is what may be called particularly kind, and extremely civil, and we ought all to be very much obliged to him; and since we do happen to believe that Episcopacy was founded by the Apostles, and that Presbyterianism was not invented till more than fifteen hundred years after Christ, we shall most certainly avail ourselves of the liberal permission afforded us to support our own Church, praise it, and advocate its cause wherever we may find it, whether established or not established, whether protected by law, as in our own blessed country, and in Denmark and in Sweden, or barely tolerated, as in America and Scotland.

But it happens that we go a greater length with our liberality towards the presbyterians than the able writer upon whose excellent communication we are commenting; for since the Presbyterian Church is established in Scotland, we have no wish to touch it or meddle with its temporalties; nor do we in the smallest degree desire to wean Mr. Irving over to the Episcopal Church—God forbid—but certainly not believing that the Presbyterian Church is apostolical, however much we may respect it politically, we never would communicate in it.

The doctrine of the Presbyterian Church of Scotland is, "that those who are not elect, although they may be called "by the ministry of the word, and may have the common "operations of the spirit, yet can never truly come unto "Christ, and therefore cannot be saved!"—This is to be found in the Confession of Faith, chap. 10;—and in chap. 3, it is moreover asserted, "that by the decree of God some men "and angels are fore-ordained to everlasting death!"—The Edinburgh writer need not therefore disavow any wish of making converts, we are not likely to turn to that Church which has most bitterly persecuted our own, which held Episcopacy and Episcopalians in such abhorrence, that its divines thought it as necessary to preach against Prelacy as Popery.

To bring a similar instance, and one which indeed bears strongly upon the case in point—The Roman Catholic religion is the established religion of Italy—does the fact make it one whit a better religion than it is in Ireland?—Should we not be fully justified in making a subscription, or speaking in favour of any Protestant Bishops or Clergy who might happen to be in Italy?—and might we not do this without the smallest desire to interfere politically with the temporal authority of the Pope—nay, is not this in fact the case?

Therefore let our presbyterian threateners in Scotland, understand that, as politicians, we have not a word to utter against their church as by law established—because it is by law established; but as religionists we are bound by every tie of brotherhood and duty to support, uphold, and assist our episcopal brethen, and to cherish and serve that Episcopal Church which we believe to be apostolic; and are moreover called upon by our love of truth to exhort those members of the Church of England, who happen to reside in or pass through Scotland, to communicate with the poor and persecuted Episcopal Church which is there, instead of carelessly patronizing a presbyterian establishment.

When our PRESBYTERIAN correspondent calls the Episcopal Church a dissenting church, he falls into a most egregious blunder; for, he should know, which he evidently does not, that, at the reformation in Scotland episcopacy was still retained—the power of the Bishop was diminished, but the sacred office remained. In 1580, the general assembly, that is to say—the rebellious presbyters declared the "office of Bishop to be an unwarrantable usurpation of the freedom of God's Church"—this is quite true—but it should be recollected, that in 1585 the Bishops were restored, and in 1598 a statute ratified their sitting in Parliament.. In the rebellion—to which we should think our friend would not wish anxiously to refer for precedents—Treason, Republicanism, and Presbyterianism triumphed, and Cruelty, Fanaticism, and Intolerance were the consequences—the restoration was hailed with joy, and in 1660, Charles re-established Episcopacy.

How, then, were the temporalities of the Scots Episcopal Church lost? How became Presbyterianism the Established Church? It is easily answered: when William the Third, in 1688, applied to the Scots Bishops, and told them if they would exert their influence in his behalf he would protect and support their church—they indignantly, and unanimously, and, we think, most honourably, rejected the condition, and therefore the convention of estates which conveyed the crown to William and Mary, abolished Episcopacy as an establishment, and substituted Presbyterianism, and thus have things existed to the present moment.

Now, we grant that for political reasons the legislature of any country may protect by law, support and pay any church it pleases, Roman Catholic, Mahommedan, or idolatrous; but such support, such protection, such payment, cannot render the Episcopal church less pure, less true, less apostolic, nor is it an argument for our deserting it. Those, therefore, who adhered to the rejected church did not, could not, dissent from the established Presbyterian Church, because neither they nor their forefathers had ever belonged to it; while those who adopted the newly established Presbyterian Church were, to all intents and purposes, dissenters, because, before its invention and establishment, they, or their ancestors, undoubtedly had belonged to the Episcopal Church.

Our Presbyterian correspondent informs us that "by the "law of the land there can be no Bishop in Scotland," (we wonder he had not again said no Episcopal Bishop); we presume the Presbyterian means no Bishop with temporal rank or power.—No Scotch Bishop has ever laid claim to it—but as far as their spiritual and sacred capacity, they have twice publicly acknowledged, within the last five-and-thirty years—once in the year 1789, when Bishops Skinner, Strachan, Abernethy, and Drummond were in correspondence with the Secretary of State, a letter to whom was answered with the approval of George the Third, our gracious monarch, and when King George the Fourth was at Edinburgh, they were received at the royal levee in their episcopal capacity.

Our correspondent calls the Scotch Episcopalians jacobites,—at a time when the last remnant of the Stuarts is gone—he calls them ignorant, never having heard, we presume, of Bishop Gleig, Bishop Skinner, and Bishop Sandford, or of M'Alison, and particularly taxes Bishop Low with incapacity, because he was only three years at Aberdeen—might we ask this Presbyterian sap where the Presbyterian Divines are educated, if not at Scotch universities?

That there have been, that there are very good and wise men among the Scotch presbyterians, even with the evidence of our correspondent's absurd letter before us, we do not mean to deny; that there have been great and good men in the Roman Catholic church, and that there are at this moment, nobody can deny; but the virtues of the individuals will not render the Government, the rule of faith, nor the services of their church one jot the more apostolic or pure: so that the argument which these Presbyterians offer, ought not to deter us from assisting the poor Episcopalians; who were at one time so oppressed, that Kirkton, the Presbyterian historian of the Scotch church, confesses that he has known some profane people who thought if they committed an error over night, that if they affronted a curate, that is to say, an episcopal clergyman, on the morrow, it was a just testimony of their repentance.

Our presbyterian correspondent is stupid enough to say then, that on the same principle that we have felt it right to support the Episcopalians of Scotland, we ought to support the Presbyterians in England. Why the man is a downright ass—a dolt, who does not see the ground he takes up, nor understand the argument he relies upon. We support the Episcopal Church in Scotland as we would, and will support it anywhere, because in our hearts we believe it to be a true, holy, and Apostolic Church; and we more especially support it at this moment, because we happen to know it is in distress, and needs the assistance of its friends,—not wishing to meddle with the established Presbyterianism of the country—but here, in England, what reason, what right has a member of the Episcopal Church to uphold or countenance the Presbyterians? We deny that it is an Apostolic Church, we disbelieve its truth and holiness, and moreover it is opposed to the established religion of the country.

We are quite satisfied to be rid of our presbyterian friend as a subscriber, and he little knows us, or the spirit which animates he heart of him who writes this, if he supposes the little dge-keeping, grovelling, tradesmen-like threat of withholding pay for the paper, will have the effect of moving or warping one single inch, one single line from our purpose. We have the largest sale of any paper in the British Empire, only be- cause we are independent; and while we speak our sentiments the teeth even of the Tories, whom we love and support, they offend or displease us, it is not the croakings of a ided INFINGITE that can affect us.

We shall resume this subject next Sunday, when we shall er before our readers much interesting matter, and in the ean time we have the pleasure to announce that the LORD BISHOP of RAPHOE has contributed the sum of one hundred pounds to the subscription in support of those, and the cause, ich we humbly, but earnestly, beg to advocate.

THE name of this paper having been coupled in the law proceedings of the TIMES and COURIER, with a case of libel which went off in the absence of all evidence, on Wednesday, think it necessary to observe, that the share of this paper the affair was the publication of an advertisement, which was inserted in the common course of business, and contained no matter whatever of our own.

Such readers will perceive that a proposition made in that creditable assembly the Common Council of the City of Lon-on, to erect a statue to the late GENERAL RIEGO, was ejected in a most decisive manner, although it was much ppored of by MR. FAVELL, the slop-seller of St. Mary Axe, RIEGO's surviving brother.

MR. STADE, a very sensible person (to whom, by way, we propose, of making the affair at once interesting and respect-
MR. RIEGO addressed a letter about the late General,) so made a fine speech, with which MR. DENMAN, who, as servant of the Corporation, was obliged to read the propo-tion, or motion, or whatever they call it, appeared consirably gratified.

We have no objection to the praises of RIEGO during his e, but most assuredly (unjust as his death may be consiered,) he died in a most unheroic manner—instead of meet-g his end like a hero or a martyr, he went out of the world e a sheep-stealer—and we really think the less now said out his fortitude the better: at all events, the good folks in the y are quite satisfied with the loss they have already sustain-under the head of Spanish affairs, and have very prudently sed to squander any more money upon what MR. GAL-WAY calls a statute, which, while it perpetuated the execu-on of RIEGO, would also hand down to posterity the folly of e Corporation who subscribed a thousand pounds in aid of e principles by which the said RIEGO lost his life.

The only person who appears to have been quite candid and ait-forward in the affair is a MR. JOHN TURNER, to whom e ground spoken of, for the scite of the statue in Moorfields belongs; he petitioned that the statue or monument to be deicated to the departed patriot might be placed on this land, because—?—because—he had no doubt it would increase the value of his property. What patriotic, public-spirited people here are in the world!

IT will be remembered that we alluded to a manœuvre of MR. WILBERFORCE and his friend MR. M'GHEE, which they have been playing off at Barmouth this last summer—we have set the little community in motion.

MR. M'GHEE has been to Bangor cooking his case for the Bishop's digestion! The Bishop, it seems, had every disposition to overlook the affair, not being aware of the nature of the transaction, or of MR. M'GHEE's unwritten harangues, or their schismatical tendency, and above all, mistaking him for the brother of ARCHBISHOP MAGEE. MR. M'GHEE was so very much elated by the Bishop's mildness, that when he saw our narrative of the proceedings, he expressed an intention of writing to the curate at Barmouth to contradict the main facts of it. Whether he have done so or not we cannot say, but we do know that the curate is a conscientious and exemplary minister, and we know the opinion he has uniformly expressed amongst his friends and acquaintances of the tendency of the united campaign of Messrs. M'GHEE and WILBERFORCE at Barmouth; and, therefore, if MR. M'GHEE has really made an application to that gentleman, we should feel highly obliged if he would publish his answer; if, however, it is very disagreeable to MR. M'GHEE to do us this civility, we hope the curate himself will submit his reply to the public, and we will venture to say the world will see the whole case in perfection.

We should not be at all surprised to find MR. M'GHEE telling us some fine day, that the whole thing proceeded from a natural desire to have morning service, and he may found a precedent upon the fact, that service was at some former period performed at the inn; but that is not a case in point, because private service never was performed at Barmouth while the weather permitted one service in English to be performed in the church
—besides we hear that MR. M'GHEE actually preached in the open air, at a place called Woodhouse, and moreover that he was in treaty for the methodist chapel at Barmouth itself.

MR. M'GHEE will attempt to oppose our little observations, by telling us, perhaps, that he used sometimes to go to the church after his own service was over. This is certainly true enough—but from the hour chosen for his own service, his arrival at the regular service was always late, and consequently gave an air of disrespect to his hasty visit.

It is by such small circumstances, when they occur, that we are enabled properly to judge of the leading propensities of great personages.

A letter appeared in our paper of the 3d November, dated "Liverpool," and signed "VERITAS," in which the character of a gentleman of the name of WALKER, agent for the Crown Estates in Berbice, was spoken of in extremely ungentle terms.
We have been requested to do MR. WALKER the justice of contradicting the statements made to us in that letter; and his request has been accompanied by a work written by MR.
WALKER himself upon the subject of West Indian slavery, which most completely falsifies the charges made by our former correspondent against him.

We would most willingly make extracts from his pamphlet, but we are prevented by want of space—but should MR.
WALKER still feel desirous of any further explanation, we shall be happy to admit into our next number any statement bearing on the case which he may be desirous of publishing.

WE have frequently attracted public notice to the sytematic co-operation of every thing high and honourable which cha-racterises the productions of the radical press; but we hardly ever witnessed a more undisguised, and at the same time honoured specimen of the art, than the continuous attacks in the CHRONICLE upon MR. JUSTICE PARK, for his conduct upon the postponement of THURTELL's trial.

To defend MR. JUSTICE PARK, who, while at the bar was remarkable for integrity and sound knowledge united, and who blends in his private and public character and conduct, talent with mildness, and suavity with justice, is by no means our intention, we merely desire to shew the intentions of his assailants—they were to wound and vilify a Judge of the land —that was the sole object, and nothing certainly can more clearly shew that it was so, than the abuse lavished upon MR.
SHADWELL and MR. WETHERELL: they had no more to do with the case in point, than the BISHOP of NORWICH or the DUKE of BEDFORD, but it having been rumoured that they were about to receive the high honours of their profession it was considered quite right—it certainly was consistent—to prejudice the public mind against them, before they assumed the more exalted and graver functions of the law.

Let our readers, who are also readers of Whig literature, coolly and quietly look at the lucubrations of the Whig Radical writers, and they will find that intimately or remotely every line they put to paper, every word, nay, every syllable, is connected with the one great system, the one great object of unsettling and overturning.

THERE is a degree of ignorance on the most ordinary subjects of political speculation displayed by the people who write for the French papers, that is most astonishing. After turning over the columns of the best of them, it is absolutely refreshing (as the Cockneys would say) to take up even the Old Times. The French "gentlemen of the press" appear to know nothing whatever; and the peculiar galimathias of the French style shews off their ignorance in the most amusing way conceivable. To make our readers understand what we mean, let them just imagine a newspaper in this country, for which the DUKE of BEDFORD should supply political information and historical research, while the REV. EDWARD IRVING clothed the ideas of the learned magnate in his own language, and that will give them a notion of the tremendous ignorance and nonsense of the French press.

Of late, their speculations on South American affairs have been so valorously independent of facts and argument, that they put the best efforts of the gentlemen of Printing House-square to rout. What our opinion of revolutionary partizans in general is, we need hardly say; but it is quite evident that the case of these South American new Governments may be most easily distinguished from the exertions of the "friends of freedom" in Italy, France, Spain, and Europe in general. We hope and trust that our Government will at all times remain inexorably hostile to jacobinism, in whatever shape displayed; but we hope also that we shall never see it acting the Quixote, and interfering with disputes between colonies and their mother countries. In the present case, we may wish that Spain was able to retain her colonies, but there is nothing in her conduct of late, or in the demeanour of any of her conflicting parties, towards us, which should make us refrain from acknowledging the independence of States which have won it, without any assistance from us, and are now de facto exercising all the powers of independent governments. We cannot for the life of us see why we should leave to the North Americans all the advantages derivable from the immense commerce of their Southern neighbours, because JONATHAN has the good sense to be less squeamish than we are.

The French papers, however, are very indignant at the idea we should do so, and vapour loudly and absurdly about our interested and insular policy. As for their boasting or threats, it being obvious that both being utterly powerless, we need not "tash our thumb," as the Scotchmen phrase it, about them, but there is something peculiarly and ignorantly impertinent in their daring to blame us for acknowledging the independence of any revolted colonies. For the very fountain and origin of the whole of the jacobin revolutions with which the world has been plagued, and which we were the principal instrument in overthrowing, is to be found in the assistance given by the House of Bourbon to our revolted North American provinces. When the United States thought proper to rise against our yoke, it was said, and truly said, that a handful of our grenadiers would put down the contemptible trash of Yankee-doodle militia, raised by the ragamuffins who conducted the insurrection—but when France and Spain, out of mere jealously of our commercial greatness, which they hoped would be annihilated by the loss of our colonies, gave not—as we are doing to the Southern Americans—mere countenance to the proceedings of Congress, but real bond fide armies, Generals, arms, fleets, and money—the thing took a very different complexion. The poisoned chalice was dreadfully returned to the lips of those who had drugged it when the friend and fellow-soldier of the successful American came back to head the mass of murderers, who arose to destroy all that was before looked on as venerable by mankind, in the name of liberty and equality; but their late repentance could not undo their imprudent act.

Now, we humbly submit, that unless it be laid down as a principle, that all rebellions and revolutions tending to deprive England of her colonies, are to be fostered and cherished without at all infringing any of the doctrines contended for by the wise statists to whom we refer, while our barely acknowledging the existence of countries which have as much established their independence as Holland or the United States, is to be scouted as jacobinism, by those people who we have set on their thrones by overthrowing jacobins, the consistency of this line of argument is not very apparent. We are not giving our opinion as to the part our rulers should act on this occasion—that being quite a distinct question—but we must say that nothing but our own interests should be thought of, for it obviously is the height of assurance in those people who were the actual agents in depriving us of our colonies, to demand that we should shut our eyes to what all the world sees—the emancipation of theirs.

SUPER EXQUISITE EGOTISM.

"Fal, lal, lal, de ral, de ree," Old Song.

AT the grand ball lately given in Dublin by the Officers of the 10th Hussars to their gallant Colonel and his Lady, a certain literary Lady, whose metaphysical statistics have turned out less profitable than her novels, observing the fair MARCHIONESS of LONDONDERRY threading the mazes of the dance with the son of SIR FRANCIS BURDETT (a Captain, be it remarked, in her Lord's regiment), exclaimed, in astonishment at what her little Ladyship chose to fancy an anomaly, "Oh dear, I suppose we shall next have LORD LIVERPOOL dancing with me" !!!!!!

"How we apples swim."

THEATRES.

ON Friday evening CASIMIR DELAVIGNE'S Tragedy of "LES VEPRES SICILIENNES," translated by MRS. HEMANS, and adapted to the English stage, under the title of "THE VESPERS OF PALERMO," was produced at Covent Garden. To those who have enjoyed a hearty laugh at the "VEPRES ODEONIENNES," any attempt to be affected by this play would be vain. MR. KENNEY had translated and prepared the same Tragedy for the stage some time since, but it was then abandoned; and although the fair authoress of Friday has done her best, it would have been no misfortune if the project of getting it up had not been revived.

The curious subject for present theatrical contemplation is, the assumption of broad comedy by MR. YOUNG, who has acted with infinite success the part of SIR PERTINAX MACSYCOPHANT in MACKLIN'S "MAN OF THE WORLD." We are told by those who are acquainted with MR. YOUNG, that his aptitude in catching dialects is quite surprising, and certainly to judge by his performance of the wily Scot, the report seems well founded—he never once was betrayed into an Anglicism, and added to this scrupulous and minute attention, a power and skill in comic characteristic delineation, which we should in vain look for in this part from any other actor of the day, and least of all were led to expect in so excellent a tragedian as MR. YOUNG.

BRAHAM has been delighting his hearers with his beautiful singing of his own beautiful music in "THE CABINET"—there it is, that he really revels in harmony. MISS STEPHENS played FLORETTA, and though she looked by far too grave and simple for the part, charmed the audience with her melodious voice—indeed, an estimate of the nature of the public approbation of the vocal performances of the evening may be formed from the facts, that both of the performers we have named were called upon to sing, and actually sang, two or three of their songs three times over!

The house was extremely well attended.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE.

WE have received the following letter from MR. JACOB JONES, JUN. in reply to one which appeared in our paper last week. We give it a place, and although, in the outset, it appears somewhat inquisitive, we must admit MR. JONES the full praise of moderation, and allow that the proceedings to which he alludes are very questionable.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR,—I can by no means expect you to keep your columns open to a long controversy between "Moderator" and myself, but you will not refuse a place to a few words which are indispensable to set me right with the public.

I would first ask your correspondent, whether any Society that has had existence, has ever been known to withdraw THREE premiums, for three different subjects, at the same time? Secondly, what does he think Foreigners will say of such an occurrence? Thirdly, when in single and very rare instances a prize has been withheld, what has been done with it? Fourthly, did not the Royal Society of Literature depart from the ordinary mode of College proposals at least, by advertising, in so many words, for "the best Dissertation," &c. "the best Essay," &c. and "the best Poem," &c.? Fifthly, was not the invitation to compel a repealed or enlarged invitation? Sixthly, is there not entire novelty in the case of a Society placing itself at the head of literature, proposing premiums for the competition of the whole literary world, and would not proposals under such novel circumstances, which were calculated to enlist so many, such various, and such distant competitors, be rationally required to be observed according to their very letter and expressed import? Seventhly, could the Society venture to propose any subjects for future competition? This question will prove an invaluable touchstone of the merits of the case—if the Society's conduct be "perfectly unimpeachable," let it propose three more premiums for competition! Eighthly, had the Society no poem on the Fall of Constantinople sent into it—of the rank of University and other prize compositions; of the rank, in fact, that such an inducement as fifty guineas, and that modicum of fame which its prior and sole award taught the candidate to expect, was calculated or entitled to procure?

That I suppose my Poem, or my Dissertation, to have been respectively the best that were furnished of their kind, as a Weekly Literary Journalist had the carelessness, or malignity to assert, is an utter misrepresentation; but that, the MORNING POST, NEW TIMES, LITERARY CHRONICLE, SUNDAY TIMES, BRITISH MAGAZINE, and JOHN BULL, have already insisted either in direct or implied terms, that my poem should have been rewarded with the prize, if no other poem of superior merit was submitted to the consideration of the Society, I may be allowed to state with some little pride, as well as with a due attention to the rights of self defence. When Moderator shall have furnished answers to the foregoing questions, he may turn, with advantage, to the subjoined remarks. He says, "Mr. J. is one of the candidates, of the others we hear nothing, though precisely in the same position they have uttered no complaints." It is very dangerous to take things for granted. MR. J. is honoured with the acquaintance of a gentleman, who, like himself, wrote for the poetic premium, and who has issued the most unmeasured complaints of the conduct of the Society, another individual, whom he knows by repute, wrote for the Homeric premium, and is described to him by a mutual friend as equally indignant. If the publication in print of such complaints, were invariably coeval with their existence, from being equally expedient and available under every circumstance, then would Moderator's mode of argument tell against me; as facts are it recoils upon himself. When, again, he observes, "You cannot fail to discern in the violence of Mr. J.'s attack, the powerful action of anger, roused by the disappointment of self approbation," he most unwarrantably, in the spirit of the weekly journalist already mentioned, assumes a motive of action without producing, or being able to produce, any proof of its existence. I most distinctly and conscientiously aver, that my "anger" was absorbed in the contemplation of the wrong done by withdrawing the three prizes in toto, and that had any award been made I should never have dreamt of arraigning its propriety.

One word in conclusion, to explain what I would have inferred from my withdrawing the original preface to my poems. I did so, not because convinced of "the justness of the decision of the Royal Society of Literature," but because I was assured "the prefnce would give pain to some very estimable individuals in public life." It is not the charge against the Society, but the particular comment on that charge, which exists as entirely in the new as it did in the old preface, which is withdrawn. Now, however, it is left to the public to decide between the candidates and the Society, without the help of those notes, which it was feared might give, what they were never intended to give, viz.—personal and unmerited pain.—I am, Sir, your very obedient Servant,

Dec. 9, 1823. JACOB JONES, jun.

RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION OF SLAVES.

TO JOHN BULL.

MR. BULL,—The religious instruction of the slaves of the West Indies having lately occupied the attention of Parliament and the public, I beg leave to present to your pages a plain and unprejudiced view of the subject. The fact that we have on our estates a large mass of peasants uninstructed in the christian religion, has been made use of by our enemies to charge the circumstance to our faults, whereas, did they possess the christian feelings which they pretend to, they would commiserate what is really our misfortune. That all has been done which might have been done to conquer the Pagan superstitions of these people, and to convert them to christianity, I will not assert; but I do assert, that, when we are charged as we are, by the author of the Appeal, with "insensibility to the temporal good effects of christianity, with discouraging religion, and preventing marriage," we are assailed with the language of falsehood. A little reflection with a little charity would have suggested that there is seldom any heinous offence committed without a strong inducement, and as to this conduct we could have no inducement, nay, it is contrary to our most obvious interests, the probabilities are against this guilt. For a long series of years Great Britain continued to pour on our shores hordes of savages, which we were required to adopt as peasants,* when we remonstrated on this excess of slave trading, we were told that it was for the benefit of the nation at large; at length in 1800 this traffic was prohibited, several large commercial cities and many Peers of the Realm, conspicuous for their learning and wisdom, still declaring for its continuance; until this period of abolition no change in the condition of our negroes could be expected to commence, and if we plead that the time which has elapsed since that date is too short to have produced any great alteration, we are borne out by a comparison with the small success obtained in the conversion of heathens in all parts of the world, when undertaken either by governments or individuals. In this kingdom the Christian religion has been advanced by the aid of wealth and zeal unparalleled, and yet the number of its inhabitants who attend to no Christian worship whatever, is far from being small; when we enumerate the wholly uneducated poor, the 50,000 openly confessed prostitutes who traverse the streets of the metropolis nightly, the rest of this corps attached to all the great towns of the kingdom,† the Sceptics, Socinians, Jews, the mere pretenders without practice, and contemplate that these who do profess the Christian faith are split into endless varieties of opinion and sects without number, we may see how difficult it is to bring the mass of any population within the pale of any national church. If we turn our eyes to the sister kingdom, that recruiting field for our army and navy, and from which the statutes draw not less than three millions annually from the harvest of thirty or forty thousand of the poorest wretches on earth, you must confess that a picture is displayed of crime, wretchedness, and barbarism, not exceeded by the natives of the Wilds of Kentucky.‡ In India, that country which is raised up in opposition to us in every thing, which is to supersede our staple commodities, to shame our slavery, to be a Christian example to the world, it appears that you have done worse than nothing, instead of converting you have disgusted the Hindoos, and made them despise our religion. The Abbe du Bois, who is said in a despatch to the Court of Directors, from the Governor of Madras, to be a man of exalted character, controverts all that the Missionaries have been impressing on the public mind respecting the progress of religion and morals in India, he declares the cause of Christianity in that country to be hopeless, the conversions to be on paper only; this is also confirmed by numerous private letters, and in particular by Mr. and Mrs. Brigdon. The colonigiums on Hayti, and the toast of the London Tavern Meetings, King Henry, seems to have somewhat abated since the truth has rushed on the public that he was one of the greatest monsters that ever existed.

The praises of Sierra Leone have been sounded to us, intending to shew our comparative delinquency; but what man in his sober senses will believe that the Africans of that settlement are already good christians—regard the marriage tie, and live amiable domestic lives. To walk to church, and gabble a grace after meat does not constitute a christian. In spite of the expenditure of British treasure which is lavished on that country, I very much fear was I to meet one of these christians alone in the woods he would desire to eat me. It is not only because these are not the days of miracles that I withhold my belief in the extravagant accounts of Sierra Leone, but I have a small recollection of the detected falsehoods of the year 1791, when amidst similar declarations to those of the present day, it was proved by the respectable testimony of Dr. Thorpe, that the country was in a worse state of agriculture and morals than when under its former African rule.—If, then, the education of the native population of a country is a measure of such difficulty, that most nations have fallen short of its accomplishment, how unreasonable is it to have clamoured against the West Indians for not having made christians of that multitude of Africans which have been added to their native born subjects. Has any part of the world exhibited a case of stronger claim for aid in such an Herculean task?—and yet it will be easy to show that the colonies have received but little aid in this great and important work. The society for the propagation of the gospel in foreign parts has expended none of its funds amongst us. Until the declaration of independence by America, Mr. Boyle's charity was expended in Virginia, amongst subscriptions for aid to Ireland, Canada, to convert Jews, Hindoos, &c. We have been always overlooked; and this seems particularly neglectful, as all our men of fortune are resident in this country, where their charities are diffused and their incomes are spent, to the great injury of the colonists. In the early part of the last war, the little island of Barbadoes subscribed 22,000l. to purchase clothing for the army; presented a small frigate to Government, and upon the four and a half per cent. duty, which was granted for certain purposes which have never been complied with, this country is debtor to that little island, after deducting for the sum granted it after the hurricane of 1780, upwards of two millions.§

I now propose to show what aid we have received towards the conversion of our slaves, the importation of whom was the joint work of England and the colonies, and also what has been done by the colonists themselves.

The first source from which we have derived aid is the funds arising from the bequest of Mr. Boyle, appropriated since the declaration of independence by America; from this, one gentleman in holy orders was sent to Barbadoes, Mr. Turner, the choice was an unfortunate one; this gentleman having brought on insanity and speedy death by his passion for spirituous liquors; one was sent to Jamaica; St. Kitts next received a clergyman in 1795; in 98 Mr. Curtin was sent to Antigua; to him was added a schoolmaster. In 1805, a clergyman was sent to Nevis, and one to St. Vincent in 1810, who did not live long. The list of gentlemen acting under this charity at present is as follows:

Antigua—The Rev J. Curtin; Rev. B. Luckock; Mr. Croot, schoolmaster.
Nevis—Rev. D. G. Davis.
St. Kitts—Rev. J. B. Pemberton.
Jamaica—Rev. J. M'Intyre; Rev. J. Stainsby; Rev. J. Young; Rev. J. Jefferson. To which has been lately added, in the place of Mr. Hinds, (appointed Principal of Codrington College), the Rev. Mr. King—Barbadoes.

Nothing but the difficulty of obtaining clergymen of the Church of England to go out on this mission, has prevented many more from having been sent, as the friends of this charity, incorporated by the zeal of Bishop Porteus, in 1794, stand thus:—

The above is the total amount, to this day, from resident West India planters and merchants, at the disposal of the Governors of Mr. Boyle's charity.

The short history of what has been done in the colonies is as follows:—In the first place the parochial churches have always been open to the slaves, and their ministers have ever been ready to christen, marry, or perform any services for them, without fee or reward: more than this their general duties would not admit of. The Roman Catholics were among the first to make some converts to christianity; this religion being one of much outward shew, strikes negroes most forcibly: it has its images, its saints, its statues, which somewhat resemble their own symbols and superstitions; in the French islands almost all the negroes belong to this church. The Moravians were early received with open arms, and one voice throughout the colonies bears testimony to their zeal and virtues; but their numbers have been few, and their funds small. Great numbers of slaves in the Island of Antigua have become christians through the labours of these brethren; they were also well received in Grenada, and about the year 1800 a chapel was built for them in the parish of St. Thomas, in the Island of Barbadoes. The Methodists next visited us, and were at first badly received; they were not only distrusted on account of their connection with the African Institution, but their conduct was at one time very reprehensible; within the last few years a superior description of this body (Wesleyans) had restored confidence in them, all restrictions had been taken off their exertions, not excepting those which prohibited nocturnal meetings.* By the reports of the United Brethren, as well as the Wesleyan missionaries, the exertions of the West India proprietors for the instruction of their slaves appears to be most commendable; eight chapels are announced to be established in St. Kitts and suburbs, and contributions daily going on for more. In Barbadoes a chapel has been erected for the Wesleyan preacher, also one in Roseau Dominique, also one in St. Anne's Bay, Jamaica, and in this island, at Belmont, a commodious chapel is erecting by the kindness of Stephen Drew, Esq. To state the contributions going on in the colonies is not very practicable; they are granted in various modes, according to the judgments and discretions of different gentlemen. Some have established preachers on their estates, and others have subscribed to funds, of which the following may serve as a specimen: Sir William Ogilvie, 100l.; Joseph Weston, Esq. 100l.; S. Warner, Esq. 100l.; Sir W. H. Martin, 100l., independent of subscription to increase the Doyle charity; Tho. Clarke, Esq. 40l.; R. L. Martin, Esq. 40l.; C. Barnard, Esq. 10l. The Assembly of Jamaica having appointed twelve curates especially for the negroes, with salaries of 300l. per annum to each, on receiving a recommendation from Lord Bathurst to increase the salaries to 500l. each, they immediately granted the increase. Under the will of General Codrington, a native of Barbadoes, a catechist at a salary of 80l. per annum, is maintained on the estates left by him in trust for charitable purposes; a schoolmistress is also maintained on each estate, with a chapel on each: for the progress attained on these estates, you are referred to the report lately published by the zealous pastor, Mr. Pinder.

At the period when this philippic has been pronounced against us in such an anti-christian and ungentleman-like manner, it appears from various documents, that about one-seventh of the whole black population is under actual religious instruction. The total number of marriages entered into by slaves in the West Indies, from 1808 to 1822, appears to have been 3603, by the established clergy, and to be greatly increasing, and by the missionaries to be at the rate of about 1000 per annum. The commencement of marriage according to our established form, is a strong proof of religious impression, for as this ceremony could never be forced on them, nor be undertaken at the recommendation of their masters or overseers, the growing inclination to it evinces a different state of things. Indeed, the blacks are now well disposed to the reception of religion—the establishment of bodily comfort, abundance of food, and good medical care, is an excellent preparation for the culture of the mind, and these are established for them, whatever our enemies may say to the contrary.

The planters have been required to give up a day in the week to the slaves, for the more complete appropriation of the Sabbath to religion, and yet, should the minister come into the farmer's field here, and desire Giles to be given up to him for the day, stating that he filled the parish with bastards, beat his wife, and required exhortation, adding that the farmer must nevertheless continue his day's wages, he would probably receive the same answer that has been given in the colonies; I maintain an expensive church establishment, I pay my poor-rates, and cannot afford that my lands should remain fallow. The demand has, however, some appearance of justice, as made against Jamaica, and the colonies which cultivate on their plan; not that I assert that they do not give their negroes sufficient time to feed themselves exclusive of Sunday, but what they give them is not fixed, and ostensible, leaving their enemies no power to cavil, they will then, I believe, grant the day, or change their system, which latter would be the better plan.

In Barbadoes, where no discretion is left with the negro to feed himself—where he is subject to no casualty—where the husbandry is for the joint benefit of himself and his master, and where food is delivered out to him daily, and more than he can consume, Sunday being a day of plenty as well as any other day, the peasant has his Sabbath at his disposal as much, and more than most peasants in Europe, and in this case the day in the week cannot be claimed in justice, and will not be granted. His Majesty's Ministers must go on gradually if they mean to effect anything, and not be goaded by fanatics and designing persons into imprudent measures. Any taxation for religious instruction would immediately strangle all voluntary efforts, and compulsion is a bad substitute for zeal.

A WEST INDIAN.

* The late events in Demerara will probably confirm suspicions, and cautious measures will be declared by that body want of religion.

On Thursday the Annual General Meeting of the Society of Ship Owners of the Port of London, was held at the City of London Tavern, for the purpose of receiving the Annual Report of the Committee.

Lincolnshire Election.—This contest terminated at four o'clock on Saturday se'nnight. Final close of the poll:—For Sir Wm. Ingilby, 3816—For Sir John Thorold, 1575—Majority, 2241. Proclamation being made, declaring that Sir Wm. Amcotts Ingilby, Bart., was duly elected, Sir William Ingilby came forward, and returned thanks for the honour conferred upon him.

TO JOHN BULL.

Sir—The letter which you will find at foot, addressed to the Rev. Thomas Cooper, appeared in the Times newspaper of the 30 inst. and has been copied into other daily prints. Considering the great importance which has been attributed to the statements of Mr. Cooper, respecting the treatment of the slaves in Jamaica, the question, "An Enquirer" merit surely a reply, which I do not find they have at least inform us, whether he avows and confirms all that the author of "Negro Slavery" has (declaredly under his authority) given to the public in pages 46 to 71 of that pamphlet.

An attentive comparison of Mr. Cooper's letters in the "Monthly Repository" with the portion of that pamphlet I have referred to, will afford ground for suspicion that the pictures he drew have occasionally been coloured by the pamphleteer. Mr. Cooper has not, perhaps, been aware, that while his object was simply to impute the "blame of failure" of his mission (he knows that I use his own words) to causes which it was not in his power to control, the party, with whom he now appears to be connected, have views far more extensive. They have a compassionate regard for the slaves in the West Indies, their zeal for the religious instruction and early emancipation of the negroes are stimulated, while their fears for the total destruction of our colonies are tranquilised by the consolatory reflection, that there are other dependencies of the empire, and other commercial speculations, which may chance to prosper in exact proportion with that decline or ruin of our colonies which may result from their philanthropic experiments. They have learned so to think on things eternal as finally to forget not perhaps have been veiled to Mr. Cooper, although, if he has perused the notes to the report of the debate on Mr. Buxton's motion, or cast his eyes upon the ingenious geographical illustrations lately circulated from Liverpool, he will not doubt concerning this confusion of things profane and sacred; but if, on carefully perusing what they have made him say, he found one uncharitable, and at the same time unfounded, insinuation against the characters of those among whom he had been hospitably treated, it was his duty long ago to have expressed his dissent from, and to have recorded his protest against, the misrepresentation.

Late in the day, as it would be now to do so, he may yet think that proceeding preferable to a deliberate sanction, after this appeal, of all which the pamphleteer has put into his mouth; but if he should continue silent upon the point, I must consider his silence to indicate such deliberate sanction.

I wish Mr. Cooper to understand that I have no intention to assail him on the score of his religious opinions, be they what they may; nor, as to the enquiries before us, is it of any import whether his late employer was acquainted with those opinions, singular as they may be. It is not betwixt Mr. Hibbert and Mr. Cooper that there is now any question, but betwixt Mr. Cooper and the Island of Jamaica. He (or some one in his name) has assigned causes for the "total failure" of his mission, which are injurious to the reputation of the white inhabitants of that island—they may be able to shew other sufficient causes for that failure, and to prove the existence of those causes.

AN ENQUIRER.

"TO THE REVEREND THOMAS COOPER.

"Rev. Sir,—Your letters in the 'Monthly Repository,' and the report which it is presumed you have authorised to be made by the author of the pamphlet entitled 'Negro Slavery,' of your observations and experience in Jamaica, have excited much attention. Your statements are applauded by the pamphleteer above-mentioned in terms, which must satisfy your self-estimation; they are, he tells us, 'admirably disyassionate, display no feelings of irritation towards the planters, but, on the contrary, manifest a candour which does you honour,' &c.

"And it is very true, Reverend Sir, that you have conveyed your reprobation of Jamaica slave government in terms of plausibility, and with much semblance of candour. But let us for a moment consider your situation; you had been patronised by Mr. Hibbert—under circumstances which made it convenient to you to be so, and you have been (as on good authority I understand) treated with uniform kindness and liberality by that gentleman; you could not, therefore, in common decency, withhold the fact that he had ordered an estate, reported to him to be competent to produce an average crop of 400 hogsheads of sugar, to return him only 360 hogsheads; and it might escape you to comment on this single fact, as proving beyond all question (if your own mission did not prove it) that gentleman's efficient care of his negroes; for what could secure to them a more certain and instantaneous relief from the hardships which are imputed to a state of negro slavery than a voluntary sacrifice of one-fourth part of the produce required from their labour? I cannot, therefore, allow you all the credit which you get from the pamphleteer for your candour, knowing, as I do, that you could have reported many other instances of Mr. Hibbert's regard for his negroes besides that important one which you have considered it right to mention.

"You must now allow me to ask you a few questions, and, should you reply to them "dispassionately and candidly," the public will be able to form a better estimate than it can now do of the truth of the picture you have drawn of the general state of the slaves in the island of Jamaica.

"Did you ever report to Mr. Hibbert those instances of atrocity which you now tell us you observed upon his estate?

"I anticipate your answer—'No,' you will say, 'and for this plain reason—Mr. Hibbert told me, on my departure for his estate, that in order to render my own situation there more comfortable, by preventing my becoming an object of jealousy to the white managers, &c., he would be contented that I should not correspond directly with him, but with Mr. Wm. Frend, of Bridge-street, Blackfriars, who was on terms of intimacy with us both, and had, indeed, recommended me to Mr. Hibbert for the purpose of my mission; anything in your letters which may be of sufficient importance, Mr. Frend, (said Mr. Hibbert) will communicate to me.'

"Well then, my first question is answered; but did you report those atrocities to Mr. Wm. Frend.

"This you must answer for me—I do not anticipate your reply; but I can tell you, that although Mr. Hibbert believes that you have misrepresented and exaggerated much, yet something did reach him, or strike his representative in the island, which caused the overseer who was on the estate during your residence to be discharged—not through you, or through any representations of yours, but a considerable time before your observations upon the management of Mr. Hibbert's estate were known to that gentleman?

"Pray tell me, however, whether, on your arrival in this country, you was invited to visit Mr. Hibbert at his seat at East Hide, and whether you then intimated to him (of whose humanity you needed no proof) the abuses which you had seen committed on this estate?

"Will you say 'No!' I remembered what Mr. Hibbert had said about the jealousy of the white servants, &c.? Recollect, Rev. Sir, you had quitted Jamaica, to return thither no more; and tell me whether Mr. Hibbert did or did not at that time hold out to you language to this effect:—'Mr. Cooper, there is now no more need of reserve betwixt us; although you did not write to me, you may now freely communicate in conversation. Have you any thing interesting to say to me respecting the conduct of my estate, and the comforts and instruction of my negroes?' and was it not your reply, 'that you had nothing of that import to communicate?'

"You are reported by the pamphleteer 'not to recollect having seen a single white man in Jamaica, who showed any serious concern about religion, excepting some Missionaries.'—(Negro Slavery, p. 53.) Does the pamphleteer, in this instance, misrepresent you? If so, in how many other instances has he done the same? The assertion is a very strong one. I wish to learn whether you ever communicated with any Ministers of the Established Church, and if not, what kept you at a distance from them? But you speak only from your recollection. Tell me, then, was you not well acquainted with Mr. Samuel Vaughan (a white man, certainly, and no Missionary), a planter, residing in St. James's? Was your intimacy with that gentleman so great, as to form a striking incident during your residence in Jamaica? Did you never converse with him upon religious subjects, and upon the means of enlightening the Negroes? Did you correspond with him on those subjects, and would you choose that the public should learn the particulars of that correspondence? This, indeed, you may say, is but a single instance of your want of recollection; but your acquaintance with white men of the higher classes, no Missionaries, was perhaps not extensive; and with none more familiar than with Mr. Vaughan; and can you think it right, that either yourself, or your friend the pamphleteer, should so lightly, and I may add so falsely, insinuate a charge of irreligion upon that society, whether large or small, with which you had lived in Jamaica?

"Whether you notice these queries or not, you may possibly hear from me again; but upon the purport of your reply (should you make one), will depend what I shall have further to address to you.

LATEST NEWS.

Paris Papers down to Friday, and Bayonne papers to the 5th inst. arrived yesterday.

Bayonne, Dec. 4.—The necessity of intimidating the turbulent and ill-disposed at Madrid, and of deterring from further excesses against the French troops of the Army of Occupation, by inspiring them with a salutary terror, has induced the severe and prompt punishment of the authors or accomplices of the tumult of the 26th of last month—17 of the persons concerned in the riot have been shot. Madrid is tranquil but gloomy. The troubles in Galicia become more serious, the bands multiplying in all quarters, and Corunna is apprehensive of some blow. The situation of the French in that province and the Asturias, as well as the frontier provinces, is very delicate; travellers are not safe, since they are stopped on the very banks of the Bidassoa, and strong escorts will be henceforth necessary.

Private letters from Madrid attribute the affray which took place in the streets of that city between a post of the French garrison and a party of Spanish lancers, to political causes. At Orense, an affray of a similar nature occurred about the end of the last month. Whilst the Royalists were publicly celebrating the election of the Pope and singing airs and hymns in honour of the King, some soldiers of the Regiment of Burgos rushed upon them sword in hand and wounded seventeen. Four of the offenders had been arrested, but had not yet been tried.

The Army.—The new levies for the army will be carried into effect upon the most economical plan; as, independently of appointing the whole of the officers from the half-pay list, the men will be raised without any increase whatever of the usual rate of levy money. Men recruits not under five feet six inches in height, will be taken to the age of 30; and growing lads, not exceeding 18 years of age, will be received at the standard of five feet five inches. The bounty to a recruit for unlimited service will be 3l. 4s. and for limited service 2l. 12s. 6d.; 4s. has been added to the bounty of the recruit, as an inducement to enlist, which sum has been deducted from the allowances hitherto granted to the recruiting officer and conducting sergeant, so as to keep the total charge of levy money at the same amount as before.

Hunting.—The Earl of Derby's Stag Hounds meet on Tuesday, at Catterham Common—H. Jolliffe, Esq.'s Fox Hounds, on Wednesday, at Box Hill; Saturday, at Kennel—The Surrey Fox Hounds, to-morrow, at Riddlesdown; Thursday, at Botley Hill—The Harriers, to-morrow, Wednesday, and Saturday, at Kennel.

We have before us the Clergyman's Almanack, which does Mr. Gilbert, the compiler, great credit; we recommend it to all our clerical friends. See advertisement.

Early in the week will appear, couched in very forcible language, (in prose), Cato to Byron, on the Immorality of his Writings.

Died at his residence in Brook-street, on the 10th inst., in the 63d year of his age, Sir Eyre Coote, of West Park, (Hants), who faithfully served his King and Country in various climates for upwards of 40 years, and with distinguished merit as an officer, having received the thanks of both Houses of Parliament for his conduct; his loss will be long and deeply regretted by a most disconsolate widow, who enjoyed with him an uninterrupted happiness for 18 years, and an afflicted son, and numerous attached friends, who knew his worth, and in him the poor of his neighbourhood have been deprived of a most kind and liberal benefactor.

In the Court of King's Bench, yesterday, an action was brought to recover damages for slander, (Roberts v. Redman,) the plaintiff was a tailor, and the defendant had been in his employ. Mr. Platt, for the plaintiff, said, the slander was imputing to him dishonesty in his business, calling him a rogue, a cheat, and a swindler. He should prove special damages by the loss of business. It was well known that there is a list kept, called the Swindlers' List, for the protection of trade; and was it not a serious injury to cause the plaintiff's name to be inserted in that list, by publicly casting such an imputation on him? Mr. Chitty, for the defendant, stated, that in the absence of his client the slander was mere words spoken in anger, in consequence of the plaintiff having had some dispute about money which the plaintiff owed him—he had no hesitation in saying the defendant was sorry for the expressions, and would pay the costs of the action if this would be accepted. Mr. Platt, on behalf of the plaintiff would accept of the apology offered, and payment of costs, and accordingly a juror was withdrawn.

At the Old Bailey, yesterday, Thomas Ryder was indicted for receiving a 10l. bank note, the property of John Metcalfe, knowing it to be stolen. Mr. Metcalfe deposed that he sent his servant, John Outridge, with 18l. to his brother, Thomas Metcalfe—Outridge ran away with the money—he was taken and convicted here last Sessions. Thos. Vann proved that the prisoner was with Outridge when the latter changed the note at his house. Thomas Cook, an officer, deposed that Outridge told him that the prisoner tendered the note for him at the shop, and received the change.

By Mr. Common Sergeant—The prisoner was not present when Outridge gave this account.

Common Sergeant—Then, sir, you ought not to have mentioned it, it cannot be admitted as evidence against the prisoner—there is no case made out against the prisoner. Gentlemen, it has not been proved that the prisoner received the stolen note—the assertion of the convicted thief, in the absence of the prisoner, is neither legal or indeed moral evidence against the prisoner. The very basis of the indictment has failed, and you will of course acquit the prisoner. Verdict—Not Guilty.

A beautiful little Princess died the 6th inst. three months old. It was an unusually pretty-featured baby, had such a smiling little mouth that actually half a sovereign would have covered it, and was the child of the Russia Oil Prince.

Chelmsford.—Yesterday Mr. Justice Park entered the Court at five minutes after nine, and immediately addressed those present in the following words:—"What I am now going to say I say with great pain; and I must premise that here, as at Hertford, I have not read the detail which has appeared in a most extraordinary and unjustifiable extent, in the public papers of this day. The full particulars of the proceedings on the inquisition have appeared in all the newspapers: and although I have not read them, I am bound, as I trust I ever have and ever shall be, to restrain that prejudice, if it may be so called, which the perusal of the depositions cannot but excite; yet it is not likely to restrain that prejudice which the public prints have done all in their power to excite. I am astonished that men who are engaged on newspapers have not the feelings of men—and, although I know that what I say I do at great peril, yet I regard it not in the discharge of my duty. If it is to come to this there is no knowing where it will stop. The proceeding under a Coroner's Inquest should be secret—no person should be allowed to take a note but the Coroner, and, if the newspapers will act so unwise, all persons employed on such papers should be excluded from the Court, which is simply one of inquiry."

John Pallett was indicted for the murder of Mr. James Mumford on Monday last. The principal evidence against the prisoner were, Wm. Dillow, ostler at the Coach and Horses at Quendon—saw prisoner there on Monday last drinking—the Saffron Walden coach stopped at the Coach and Horses at about half past seven o'clock—saw James Mumford on the coach-box—prisoner was standing by the door upon a rising ground—Kidman had been drinking with the prisoner, and had a donkey—heard the deceased tell the coachman to leave his parcels in the house, which is about a mile from Quendon-gate.—The coachman called him Mr. Mumford—any body might have heard it. Deceased said he would get down at the turnpike. As soon as Mr. Mumford's name was mentioned, prisoner and Kidman proceeded on the road towards Quendon-gate—had Kidman's donkey with them, but neither of them were on it—got on the coach when it started—passed prisoner and Kidman, who were going at a foot pace, about a quarter of a mile from the Coach and Horses—they then ran on for about 20 rods as fast as the coach—lost sight of them a quarter of a mile before the coach reached the gate.—Robert Smith, a publican, at Poinder's-hill, at Birchanger, left Widdington at about half-past eight—going along the lane, about half a mile from Widdington, saw a body in the road—got off the pony and lifted deceased up—he was lying on his back in the middle of the road—he did not speak, but groaned heavily—set him up—questioned him, but receiving no answer, set him against the bank at the side of the lane—rode back to Widdington, gave the alarm, and after sending some people, ordered a cart to follow—went to Hayden, the constable, and on leaving him returned down the lane—found several people along with the deceased and prisoner, full thirty rods nearer Widdington than when the body was first found.

Re-examined—Saw the prisoner put the body in the cart—went with it to Widdington.

John Reid, a carpenter at Widdington—knew prisoner, who had worked with Mr. M. sen. as a labourer—on the alarm on Monday night, took a candle and lantern and went with three others in search of the body down the lane—hid the candle and lantern under his coat—before we got there heard some body cry halloa, and add, here's Jem Mumford—knew it to be the prisoner's voice—went up to him—he Mumford—knew it to be the prisoner's voice—went up to him—he had a dead body on his back—examined it by the light, and said it was not Mr. Mumford; the face was so swollen and disfigured that it was nothing like the deceased—prisoner said he thought it was—he had previously said he knew it was, but gave no reason—it was a very dull night—no person could have known deceased in that state without a light—met prisoner 30 rods nearer Widdington than where Mr. Smith directed him to look for the body—Mr. Smith came up when they met prisoner—returned to Widdington with cart, deceased, and prisoner—went to the Fleur-de-lis, and put deceased in the little parlour by the fire in the chair—the deceased's mother was sent for—had meanwhile looked at the flap of his shirt, and saw the name of deceased on it—the mother on her arrival recognised the body of her son.—Cross-examined—The body was dead when he first saw it—prisoner remained at the Fleur-de-lis with the other men.

George Reid confirmed the account given by the last witness.—Cross-examined—Pallet was not intoxicated.

George Knight, a constable, produced a knife which he found on the prisoner, which belonged to the deceased. Also found on him a comb and 2s. 4d. in money—received a stick from a man named Hayden, about 2½ feet long, and one inch in diameter, there was blood on the forked end of it.

Mr. John Mumford (brother of the deceased,) proved that the prisoner's shoes fitted the marks where some footsteps were traced in a wheat field, near which the body was found.

John Cook was at the Queen's Head on the 27th of November—prisoner was there and said "if he saw Mumford he would smash him, for he had made him pay for getting drunk—he would be d—d if he did not do for him." Prisoner had been that day at the Petty Sessions at the instance of deceased for getting drunk.

Susan Reid heard prisoner say a fortnight since that he should not mind hacking Jem Mumford's whistle—had no doubt he meant cutting his throat.—Mr. Hale, Clerk to the Magistrates, stated, that on Thursday evening the prisoner desired to speak to him—he was in a cart opposite the Saracen's Head, Chelmsford. Prisoner told witness that Kidman had given him the knife with which he cut the stick—witness asked him if Kidman had any thing to do with the murder?—Prisoner answered, "No! I alone did it."—Thomas Kidman was with the prisoner at the Coach and Horses, Quendon-street—they drank together for two or three hours—they had ten pints of beer, and left the place together—admitted he lent the knife to prisoner.

The prisoner on being called on for his defence, said he left it all to his counsel.

Mr. Justice Park summed up, and observed that he could say little in favour of the prisoner; the evidence of Mr. Hale he thought, without any other evidence, was sufficient proof of the prisoner's guilt.

The Jury instantly returned a verdict of "Guilty," and he was sentenced to be hung on Monday, and to be anatomized.

Christmas Presents, or New-Year's Gifts.—We think a book the very best present that can be made to a young person:—a piece of dress can merely be worn once, but a book may be read a hundred times, and at the same time, will please the eye, inform the mind, and improve the heart. This recommendation is possessed in an eminent degree by the Forget me Not for 1824, advertised in our pages. Some of the most tender of our poets have here done their best; we have the innocence of Bernard Barton, the tenderness of Montgomery, and the touching elegance of Henry Neele. The prose pieces, too, are exceedingly well-written; and the engravings (which are numerous) are first-rate.

The AID to MEMORY for 1824, being a Common-Place Book, upon a new plan, (with an Alphabetical Index, consisting of upwards of 150 Heads, such as occur in general reading; and ample room for other subjects. Suited alike to the student, the scholar, the man of pleasure, and the man of business. By J. A. Sargant, Ruled with faint Lines. Large 4to. 10s. 6d.; foolscap 4to. 6s. bd.—"As a useful book of this title, this work is designed for general usefulness; which, indeed, its excellent arrangement is calculated to promote. There is no station in which it may not be attended with essential advantage."—New Times. —W. Wetton, 21, Fleet-street.

Rectified Sperm Oil, 4s. 6d. per gallon.—UPTON and Co. oilmen and colour manufacturers, 64, Queen street, Cheapside, most respectfully acquaint the public, that by a process entirely new, they are enabled to sell a Sperm Oil so highly rectified, as to equal in purity spirits of wine. This oil burns in the first instance, of the finest quality, and afterwards completely cleansed from every impurity, there is no waste, and its flame is equal in brilliancy to the best gas, with the superior strength and steadiness of an oil light. So unequivocal is its excellence, that it will burn well in every kind of lamp.—N. B. Other Lamp Oil, from 2s. 3d. to 3s 9d. per gallon; Linseed Oil, 2s. 6d. and Turpentine, 5s. per gallon; White Lead, 36s. per cwt. and refined Coal Tar Paint, 15s. which quantity will cover 1060 square feet.

At the particular request of several Gentlemen and Breeders, the much admired WHITE BARB CHARGER of the late Napoleon Buonaparte, will be exhibited from Monday next till Christmas-day, at Mr. Sadler's Repository, Goswell-street; after which he will return to 94, Pall-mall. The superb Saddle on which the Emperor rode, with the Bridle, will also be shown.

Gprris, Grower of CHAMPAGNE, of Avize, near Epernay, France, most respectfully informs the Nobility, the Trade, his Friends, and the Public, that he has entered into a contract with Mr. CHARLES WRIGHT, Wine Merchant, of the OPERA COLONNADE, HAYMARKET, by which Mr. WRIGHT will in future have the entire and exclusive sale of his CHAMPAGNE WINES. G. PRIS takes this opportunity of returning his grateful thanks for the liberal and distinguished support he has met with since the year 1814, and he pledges himself that the same description of WINES, and if possible better, as it is his intention to superintend his vineyards personally, will be always on sale at Mr. CHARLES WRIGHT'S, Opera Colonnade, and at no other place in England or elsewhere, at the unexampled low price of 4l. 4s. per dozen.

Cadets, writers, and midshipmen to india, or Passengers generally to any part of the Globe, can be fully EQUIPPED with every requisite for the voyage and arrival at One Day's Notice, obtaining white jean and sateen jackets, medium sizes, from 6s. 9d. to 10s.; ditto waistcoats, 4s. to 6s.; ditto trowsers, 6s. to 10s.; drab ditto, 6s. 9d. to 12s.; white Marseilles waistcoats, 6s. to 10s.; black kerseymere ditto, 11s. to 14s.; black and blue coats, 52s. to 68s.; dressing gowns, 11s. to 20s.; travelling cloaks, 39s. to 49s. when made to order 10l. per cent. extra; cotton shirts, 3s. to 6s.; at SILVER and Co.'s (late Arrowsmith and Silver,) Clothiers, 9, Cornhill, removed from 3.

Westminster general dispensary school of obstetric medicine—DR. GRANVILLE'S Lectures on the Theory and Practice of Midwifery; and on the Diseases of Females and Children, which were postponed in consequence of severe indisposition, will begin on the 5th of January, 1824, at 8 o'clock in the evening.—Particulars to be had at Dr. Granville's, No. 16, Grafton-street, Berkeley-square, or at the Dispensary in Gerard street.

New fish market, 238, Oxford-street.—The remedy for an evil universally complained of (the high price of Fish) is presented to the Public in this establishment, upon the principle of affording a supply of that article at a considerable reduction. In soliciting public patronage and encouragement, JOHN MORTON pledges himself to keep none but Fish of the finest quality that can be procured, and to furnish the public on the lowest terms the markets will allow. Families and Country Dealers supplied at the shortest notice, and on the most reasonable terms.

Important improvements.—ARTIFICIAL MINERAL TEETH. To the Nobility and Gentry, Mr. J. MASSEY, Surgeon, Dentist, begs leave most respectfully to say that he is the Inventor, and only Maker, of the IMPROVED TRANSPARENT MINERAL COMPOSITION TEETH, which from a Single Tooth to a complete Set, are made so perfect as to perform the functions of mastication, articulation, &c., without pain or inconvenience to the wearer, and in replacing partial deficiencies, the transparency, colour, and enamel, is suited so exactly as to prevent the possibility of discovery, they are also easily preserved in a mouth in a constant state of cleanliness. The other kinds of Artificial Teeth, (being formed of animal substances) soon acquire a degree of unpleasantness, and retain their original colour but for a very short time. Mr. M. continues to extract teeth with his highly improved instruments, by which they are raised perpendicularly, and thus the operation is performed with the greatest safety, and with infinitely less pain to the patient. Attendance from ten to five o'clock. 60, Frith-street, Soho.

To parents and guardians.—A Lady who is educating the Daughters of two Gentlemen and her own, with the assistance of an accomplished Governess, WISHES TO RECEIVE A FEW MORE PUPILS after Christmas. Terms reasonable, which include instruction in every useful and fashionable acquirement, a separate bed for each lady, and washing for those under 12 years of age. The harp is taught by a professor at a very moderate extra charge. The residence of the advertiser is delightfully situated by pleasure grounds in a pleasant village near Croydon, and only 10 miles from London. Terms, and references of unquestionable respectability, may be obtained by addressing letters, post paid, to Y. Z., King's Arms, Croydon.

Battles of ligny, les quatre bras and waterloo, at the Great Room, Spring Gardens. Messrs. MARSHALL'S original Picturesque Panorama of Twelve Views of those ever-memorable Battles, painted on 10,000 square feet of Canvas, IS NOW OPEN. The Figures, the size of life, and accompanied by a full Military Band, produces a complete sensation of reality, and gives the most perfect idea of the progress of those Victories. From the commencement on the 16th, till the complete overthrow of the French Army on the evening of the 18th June.—Day Exhibitions, from 12 till dusk, each day. Illuminated with gas from 7 till 9 o'clock. Doors, 2s. Children, 1s. Gallery, 1s.—The French Panorama of the Shipwreck of the Medusa Frigate is also Open in the Lower Room. Admission 1s.

Mrs. sarah tunstall, deceased.—All Persons having any demand on the estate of Mrs. SARAH TUNSTALL, late of Kew, in the County of Surrey, deceased, are desired to send the particulars thereof forthwith to Mr. William Smith, Richmond, Surrey, the solicitor for the representatives.

The medical profession and Public are respectfully informed, that the publication of the two first volumes of BICHAT'S GENERAL ANATOMY, applied to Surgery and the Practice of Medicine, translated by CONSTANTINE HOFFYN, revised by Mr. GEORGE CALLEY, and which has been unexpectedly delayed, is now completed. Price of the two volumes, bound in two, II. 11s. 6d.—The publication of the other two volumes will follow after a very short interval. The proportional price payable on delivery. Subscriptions will be received at every Medical Bookseller's in London, and at Mr. L. M. Desurnes, 124, Newgate-street, and at the Translator's, 15, Brereux-court, Temple-bar.—All letters post paid.

Drawing-room, dining-room curtains, Four-post and French Beds, &c. fitted up with splendid London Chintz, Furniture, Spanish Damasks, India Stripes, &c. at little more than half the prices charged by other establishments.—MILES and EDWARDS, No. 134, Oxford-street, between Hollis-street and Old Cavendish-street.

Artificial teeth.—The rude and unskilful attempts frequently made to supply these substitutes for the masticatory organs, and the disgust which delicacy suffers from the unpleasantness attending them, were permanently fixed, have deterred many from adopting the aid and comfort they are capable of affording, independent of the assistance they may contribute to digestion and consequent health. The ingenious application of mechanical science will enable us to obviate all these inconveniences, and allow the wearer at all times to keep the mouth in a state of perfect cleanliness, and to perform the functions of mastication, articulation, &c. with decided ease and comfort.—Mr. NICHOLLES begs to state, that he is in constant attendance from ten to four, and will be happy to give ocular demonstration of the comforts derived from his efforts, under every circumstance of simple and complicated deficiency. 115, Fleet Street.

" FOR GOD, THE KING, AND THE PEOPLE!"

No. 158. SUNDAY, DECEMBER 21, 1823. Price 7d.

RICHMOND.—DR. SMITH most respectfully announces his CONCERT for Friday evening, the 16th of January, at the original Assembly Room, Castle Tavern; and that MISS STEPHENS is engaged. Signor Spagnoletti, Leader of the Band—consisting (as before) of the most eminent Performers in the Philharmonic Orchestras.—Tickets 10s. 6d. each, at Messrs. Smith's Greenside, or Sting's Library, Hill-street.

TO GERMAN FLUTE PLAYERS, &c. &c.—WM. BAINBRIDGE, 35, Holborn-hill, near the corner of Fetter-lane, respectfully informs the musical world, he has finished a variety of his patent Octave Flute Flageolets, which for their sweetness of tone and extent of compass are so universally admired. The Flute Flageolet is fingered for every note exactly the same as the German Flute; and as they require no art to sound them, those who play that instrument can play them immediately; there are few who play the German Flute, if acquainted with the merits of this little instrument as an accompaniment to the Piano forte, &c. would be without one. The Concert and Third Size are an excellent accompaniment to a lady's voice.—Mr. Bainbridge makes another kind of Octave Flageolet, which is not fingered exactly like the German Flute, but are also much admired and played on by ladies and gentlemen of the first distinction. Mr. B. the inventor, requests, to prevent mistakes, those sending from the country for the former will describe such Bainbridge's Patent Octave Flute Flageolet, the latter Bainbridge's Octave Flageolet with Patent Octave Flute Improvements.—Orders punctually attended to at his Manufactory above, where may be seen and heard a great variety of his Improved Double Flageolets, and also his Single and Double Flute Flageolet; all these Instruments are his invention, and are universally admired for their soft and sweet tone in a room.—N.B. A Book given with each of the above Instruments, by which persons may learn themselves to play.

MUSICAL CHRISTMAS PRESENT, Published by Clementi and Co. 26, Cheapside.—A Set of Twelve SENTIMENTAL and MORAL SONGS, written by W. F. COLLARD, the Music composed and adapted by J. C. CLIFTON, price 12s., separately 1s. 6d. each.

No. 1 The Sensitive Plant.	No. 7 Then ot Goodness, O! never delay the Hour.
2 My pretty Anne, good Night!	8 The dear Delights of Duty.
3 Awake, O Sleeper sweet, awake.	9 The Swan.
4 The pure Heart's cheerful Smile.	10 The Nightingale.
5 O! the Eye that's bright.	11 The Weather-Glass.
6 The Wandering Minstrel.	12 'Tis a sweet thing to wile—duet.

In the composition of this work, the objection so justly made against the subject of Passion, has been entirely avoided, the object being a cultivation of those natural, cheerful, and affectionate feelings, which are equally calculated for Musical Expression.

NEW MUSIC.—" Oh, lady, ne'er think I'll prove false to thee," composed by J. Sinclair, price 2s.; also, " And has she then deceived me," air from Rossini, arranged for the voice and piano-forte, by J. Sinclair, price 2s. 6d. sung by him with the most distinguished and unbounded applause in the Opera of the Cabinet, at the Theatre Royal Covent Garden.—Published by J. Willis, Harmonic Saloon, Dublin, and at No. 22, Southampton-street, Coventgarden, London.

In a few days will be published, the Second Number of the MINIATURE LYRICS, embellished with an elegant Portrait of J. Bayley, Esq. Author of the Poetry, composed, and arranged for the voice and piano-forte, by Messrs. Braham, Horn, Bishop Ditchfield, Sinclair, and Sir John Stevenson, price 7s. 6d.—Grand Variations on the national air Rule Britannia, by Ferd. Ries, Esq. price 6s.—Carnation and Thema, with Variations, as sung by Mad. Catalani, composed for her by W. Clements of Vienna, and arranged by N. C. Bochsa, price 3s.

NEW MUSIC, published by MAYHEW and Co. 17, Old Bond-street.—HART'S SEVENTH SET of QUADRILLES, selected from Rossini's favourite Opera, Pietro L'Eremita, containing " La Louisa," " La Theodosia," " La Julia," " La Eremita," and " La Finale," as danced at Almack's and the Grand Fêtes at Windsor and Brighton. Composed and Arranged for the Pianoforte or Harp, and respectfully dedicated to Lady Elizabeth Conyngham, by JOSEPH HART, price 4s.—The high patronage and universal reception these elegant and tasteful Quadrilles have acquired from the Nobility and Gentry's sanction, have induced unprincipled persons to offer counterfeits, the Publishers therefore feel it an imperative duty to caution the Musical World against purchasing spurious Editions, and to assure them that no Copies can be genuine but those published by Mayhew and Co. Musicsellers to the Royal Family, 17, Old Bond-street, where may be obtained,

TO THE GENTRY, CLERGY, AND FREEHOLDERS OF THE COUNTY OF LINCOLN.

BROTHER FREEHOLDERS,

I FEEL it a duty I owe to myself, the electors, and county at large, to again intrude upon you an explanation of the line of conduct I have uniformly pursued since the commencement of this extraordinary election. I am the more induced to perform this as I conceive I might not express myself so clearly on every point as I could have wished; also, that the attendance in the Castle Yard was very limited, and as I am desirous that all parties should be acquainted with every motive by which I have been actuated.

When a vacancy occurred a letter appeared in the county papers from Mr. Wells, (a gentleman whom I never saw,) declaring his resolution of nominating me, and of endeavouring to return me, whether I wished it or not, by the independent exertions of the freeholders. I did all in my power to induce him to abandon his intention, but in vain. At this stage of the business I consulted some of my friends, and determined that, should he persevere, my sentiments and objections should be stated publicly from the hustings on the day of nomination, and which was done most fully by my friend Sir Robert Heron.

Previously to that day, in consequence of a notice to the Sheriff, signed by several freeholders, Mr. Cracroft and Mr. Dealtry called upon me at Syston, to obtain my sentiments, and know what I meant to do. I most openly and explicitly stated to them, " that I had written to Mr. Wells, when he first proposed to nominate me, to express my disapprobation—that of the notice alluded to I was perfectly ignorant, and that it was my fixed resolution in no way to lend my sanction to the measure; but that I considered it the cause of the freeholders, and should they be determined to elect me (a determination impossible for me to control,) I should in that case feel myself bound to serve them to the best of my ability—and further, that Sir Robert Heron would declare my sentiments on the hustings. I also mentioned, that I had most undoubtedly promised my vote to Sir Wm. Ingilby; but that, perhaps, under the present circumstances, it would be better for all parties that I should not attend at Lincoln;" this having been assented to by one of the gentlemen, and no dissent having been expressed by the other, I concluded it was to agreed upon.

Soon after the deputation left my house, seemingly well satisfied with the explanation I had given, a hand-bill was then circulated by them, containing a part of what I had expressed, and I have only to regret that the whole did not appear in it; and also that they published their statement without previously submitting it to me. But I do not impute the slightest intention to the gentlemen of the deputation to misrepresent my sentiments, and the hurry of business might account for the omission. That stated on the hustings. Some time after the election began, I heard to my surprise that notwithstanding the agreement before mentioned, it was still expected that I should vote As soon as this reached me I set out, gave my vote to Sir Wm. Ingilby, and received his thanks in the most handsome terms. After voting I met Mr. Dashwood, who requested me to return to the hustings, and there myself state my disapprobation of being proposed. I cheerfully complied, and did state my disapprobation—I was not, nor ever had been a candidate—that I never had, directly nor indirectly solicited support from any man, and that if I had I called for that man to come forward and declare it, and that in all my answers to the numerous requests that had been made to become a candidate, I had distinctly refused it: but that if the freeholders would elect me, and no one else, I should consider it my bounden duty to obey them; and that, however inconvenient it might be to me, I would endeavour to do my duty to the best of my power.

Such has been my conduct—my only wish and intention was to pursue that line which was most upright and honourable, and that line I conscientiously believe I have pursued. But I shall always consider it as the highest honour of my life that I have been the object of so much unsolicited favour, such noble exertions, and so many independent solicitations.—I remain, Gentlemen, with every sentiment of gratitude and respect, your obedient Servant,

Syston Park, Dec 6, 1823. J. H. THOROLD.

TO THE CLERGY.—A Clergyman who is obliged, on account of the health of some of his family, to be absent from his preferment in an inland county, is desirous to undertake the CURE of a Parish for a limited time, from 1st of February next, on any part of the Coast between Margate and Plymouth. He would be happy to offer his services for the use of a moderate sized Furnished House in a healthy situation. M. PRIS, Grower of CHAMPAGNE, of Avize, near Epernay, France, most respectfully informs the Nobility, the Trade, his Friends and the Public, that he has entered into a Contract with Mr. CHARLES WRIGHT, Wine Merchant, of the OPERA COLONNADE, HAYMARKET, by which Mr. WRIGHT will in future have the entire and exclusive sale of his CHAMPAGNE WINES. G. PRIS takes this opportunity of returning his grateful thanks for the liberal and distinguished support he has met with since the year 1814, and he pledges himself that the same description of WINES, and if possible better, as it is his intention to superintend his vineyards personally, will be always on sale at Mr. CHARLES WRIGHT'S, Opera Colonnade, and at no other place in England or elsewhere, at the unexampled low price of 42s. per dozen.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, DEC. 16.—The Journal de Toulouse gives the following account of the late Ministerial Revolution in Spain:—"Don Victor Saez has just been exiled. He was allowed only 24 hours to leave Madrid. His Majesty appointed him Bishop of Tortosa. On the evening of the 3d the King summoned his Ministers to meet him, and spoke to them, it is said, in the following words:—'You occupy yourselves very little with the affairs of my kingdom, and very much with your own intrigues, your own passions, and your vengeances. The present King is not the King of former times; you shall know me. I have no need of you.' On the instant the only Minister who was retained, the Minister of the Marine, countersigned the Decree which formed the new Ministry."

General Count Guilleminot will shortly set off to fill the post of Ambassador at Constantinople. General Pozzo di Borgo left Madrid on the 10th inst. to return to Paris. The objections made by the Court of Vienna, relative to the title of the Duke of Belluno, are not so serious as they are affirmed to be by an English Journal. The Duchy de Belluno is in the Austrian States; the Emperor of Austria, it is true, has never acknowledged this title; but there is every reason to believe that this difficulty will easily be removed. The Count de Starenburg has refused to be sent as a Minister to Madrid. It is not true, as has been stated by a Journal, that the Duke de l'Infantado has quitted the command of the Guard for the Embassy of Vienna. Mr. Manners Sutton, President of the English House of Commons, has arrived in Paris.

DEC. 17.—On Monday at five o'clock their Royal Highnesses the Duke d'Angouleme, the Duchess de Berri, the Duchess d'Orleans, and their Serene Highnesses the Duke and Mademoiselle d'Orleans, assembled at the residence of Monsieur, and thence proceeded to the Hotel de Ville. The procession was composed of twelve carriages, which were preceded and closed by a detachment of the Guards of Monsieur. In the first carriage were Monsieur, accompanied by the Duke d'Angouleme, the Prince de Carignan, and the Duke d'Orleans. Madame, the Duchess de Berri, and the Duchess d'Orleans and daughter, occupied the second carriage. The ten other carriages were filled with persons of distinction in the suite of their Royal Highnesses. The carriage of Monsieur was followed by MM. the Duke de Maille, the Marquis de Riviere, and several aides-de-camp. The Prince Generalissimo had in his suite the Duke de Damas, the Duke de Conche, Generals de Bourdesoult, and the aid-de-camp who accompanied him in Spain. On arriving at the Hotel de Ville their Royal Highnesses were addressed by M. the Prefect.

MADRID, DEC. 8.—We observe, with much concern, that in certain provinces, the necessary measures, which the regeneration of Spain requires, are not adopted. At Santandar, for instance, the liberaux have obtained the re-establishment of the Municipality of 1820, and all the individuals who compose it, are more or less compromised in the revolution. The Bishop, and Chapter, and Royalist militia, have presented an appeal on the subject to General Longa, who, far from acceding to their request, is occupied in appointing to office men, whom the Royalists strenuously oppose. An Extraordinary Courier has, in consequence, been despatched to his Majesty, with a respectful representation, soliciting that the partizans of the Constitution may not be employed. Santander, it may truly be said, is a free port for Revolutionists. Here are congregated free-masons, comuneros, and monarchical enemies of all sects. The individual at the head of the police is a very supple politician; he takes off his hat to the Revolutionists, and feels no repugnance to receive them.

LISBON, DEC. 3.—The Gazette contains a law on the coinage, revoking the laws on that subject, passed by the Cortes on the 6th of March, 1822, and the Decree of the 9th of June, the same year, declaratory of that law. This new law fixes the value of the mark of gold of 22 carats made into coin, at 120 milreas. No gold shall be coined except in pieces of two and four drachms. All gold and silver, in bars or in foreign coin, may be imported as merchandize, free of duty.

Letters from Batavia, of August 2, bring the following news:—To promote the direct trade from Europe and America with the Dutch East India possessions, the Government has determined that from Sept. 1, 1823, all woollen and cotton goods manufactured in Europe, and coming from a port to the east of the Cape of Good Hope, shall pay a duty of 15 per cent. if imported in Netherland ships, and 20 per cent. in foreign ships. It is also resolved, that from the 1st of Aug. coffee exported in foreign vessels to any port not in the Netherlands, shall pay an export duty of five florins per pikel.

Letters have been received from Malta, dated on the 18th of Nov. Sir Thomas Maitland had arrived there, and Commissioners had been appointed to take a military survey of the Ionian Islands. A large naval force was likewise collecting at Malta, for the purpose of proceeding to Tunis, to demand satisfaction for an insult which that horde of pirates had committed against the British flag.

IRELAND.

BANTRY, DEC. 11.—A horrid murder was committed on Tuesday night (9th instant) in the western part of this county near the residence of R. O'Donovan, Esq. A man of the name of Mahony, canted his nephew out of a farm, and was making some arrangements previous to his taking possession of it, when the nephew, who had repeatedly expressed his determination to have revenge on any one who should take his ground, entered the house where his uncle was, and beat him on the head in the most ferocious manner, until he killed him. Two young children of Mahony's witnessed the inhuman deed, but were unable to offer any assistance to their father. T. O'Donovan, Esq. a Magistrate of the county, on learning the circumstance the morning after, called on the Police in his neighbourhood, and searched a part of the country without receiving any information which might lead to the apprehension of the murderer.—Cork Constitution.

A farmer, named Callaghan, near Limerick, who was returning from the fair of Tipperary, was butchered within a mile of the town. The persons who travelled in company with Callaghan were pelted with stones, and compelled to abandon him; and a man who rode on the horse behind him was coolly desired to withdraw. An alarm was given to the military on duty at Newmarket, county Cork, that a murder had been committed in or near that garrison. A party went out to make discoveries, but instead of a single dead body, they found four living ones in their shirts—all were taken into immediate custody.

LIMERICK, DEC. 13.—On Sunday evening last, between eight and nine o'clock, lights were perceived on the mountains near the new Barracks at Glanisheen, where a detachment of the 39th regiment is at present stationed. Several houses were searched, but without discovering any thing irregular amongst the inmates. On Monday morning the sentry perceived two or three men approaching, whom he challenged, and receiving no answer, he called the guard, who saw about twenty men running away, and getting into the large wood at Castle Oliver. It cannot be doubted that these men had it in contemplation to surprise the military, whom they supposed to be but very few in the absence of the patrol.

"CORK, DEC. 13.—Orders have been received within a few days, requiring that the proper officers should make reports of the present state of the forts and garrisons in the South West district, including a line from Bantry to Cork Harbour.

NAVY AND SHIPPING GENERALLY.

The Cambridge is ordered to be at Portsmouth by the 20th (to-morrow) to take on board all the remaining Consuls who are going out to South America.

PORTSMOUTH, Dec. 18.—We experienced a most tremendous gale last night from S.S.E. which commenced about five o'clock, and continued with unabated fury until ten o'clock, when it suddenly veered round to the westward, and became more moderate. During the gale the Helen, from London to Leghorn, drove from her anchors, and was obliged to cut away her mainmast before she could bring up; she is come into harbour to repair. His Majesty's slip Queen Charlotte drove from her moorings in the harbour, and got foul of the Brothers, Wilson, carried away her bowsprit, topmasts, stove in her sides and decks, and did other damage. The whole of the outward-bound, except the above, rode out the gale at the Motherbank, all well. The Eliza of Jersey, laden with iron, from Bristol to this port, drove from her anchors and sunk on Hamilton Bank, at the entrance of the harbour. Crew saved. Wind S.W.

Letters from the Cape of Good Hope, dated the 26th of September, announce the arrival of his Majesty's ship Larne, from Portsmouth, on her way to India, which anchored in Simon's Bay on the 21st. His Majesty's ship Delight, bound for the Mauritius, had sailed on the 24th of that month for her destination.

The Griper Brig, Capt. Clavering, arrived at Woolwich on Friday, with Capt. Sabine from Greenland and Norway, where Capt. Sabine has been making astronomical observations.

THE ARMY AND MILITARY MATTERS.

We understand that notice has been given to the Army Surgeons and Assistant-Surgeons, on half-pay, that their services are likely soon to be required.

The new levy is to be raised by beat of drum, and orders have been issued, with a view to the more expeditious raising of the men, for the officers employed to repair to those parts of the kingdom in which they may be supposed to possess the most influence.

We subjoin a copy of the oath imposed on witnesses at Courts-Martial, which, as our readers will see, is well calculated to draw forth all the information lurking in their minds. In our Courts of Justice, a witness thinks himself justified in withholding such parts of his testimony as are not extorted by interrogation; but the following oath, by requiring that all should be told, whether asked or not, enforces the disclosure of every particle of information which the witness may know or remember:—

"I A. B. do most solemnly swear, that in the evidence I shall give before the Court, respecting the present trial, I will, whether demanded of me by question or not, and whether favourable or unfavourable to the prisoner, declare the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth—So help me God."

The 2d division of the 23d (Royal Welch Fusileers) which embarked on board the Fanny transport, sailed from Cork on the 12th inst. for Gibraltar.

Two companies of the 58th (Rutlandshire) Regiment of Infantry, are now on their march from Chester to Brighton. Two companies of the 34th (or Cumberland) Regiment of Foot, have marched from Woolwich to Windsor. The head-quarters and the remainder of the same corps continue at Woolwich.

CORK, DEC. 12.—In consequence of two new regiments to be raised immediately, Captains Craig and De Barrallier, and Lieutenants Mayes and Alexander, at present belonging to the 1st Royal Veteran Battalion in garrison at Cork, but who are to raise men for those corps, paraded through the streets of the town with a party of drums and fifes, and in less than two hours twenty-five fine young men enlisted for the 94th and 95th regiments; and those officers handed them over to the recruiting staff of this district, in order to their being attested and forwarded to Kilkenny, the head-quarters of the 95th.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

FRIDAY.—His Lordship felt so much worse to-day, that he was under the necessity of again holding the Court in his private room.—He intimated, too, that it might be convenient for him to state, that he would be obliged to go away soon after two o'clock. During the time he remained, he appeared in great pain, and his right foot is greatly swollen.

Devaynes v. Noble and others.—This part-heard motion was proceeded in. It was a motion on behalf of the executors of the late Mr. Devaynes, a partner in the banking-house of Devaynes, Dawes, Noble, and Co., to prevent the division of a sum of money, which under a decree made in 1812, and an order made in 1820, was directed to be distributed among the joint creditors of the banking-house, and was in the nature of an appeal against that decree and order. The Attorney-General, Mr. Treslove, and Mr. Speece, were for the plaintiffs—Mr. Shadwell and Mr. Palmer for the defendants.—It was contended that this money should not be paid out till an account of the private estate of one of the deceased partners was taken—that that account should be taken before any distribution should be made. In answer to this it was argued, that even the lapse of time since the decree was made ought to prevent the interference of the Court to interrupt the execution of the decree—and especially because if the decreed distribution were now to take place, any sum that may be paid, and which hereafter might be found to have been improperly paid, reimbursement may be made when the accounts of Mr. Devaynes's private estate can be got in.

His Lordship thought, before the Court could interfere at all, it would be dangerous to interfere, unless upon a full discussion of all the cases and doctrines that had been discussed about a dozen years ago; and, rather than set the whole agoing again from the beginning to the end, provided the decree in 1812 was wrong, about which he would say nothing at present, it might be advisable to modify all future orders accordingly; and therefore he desired this motion to stand over to the second Seal, and then to come on with the appeal.

ADMIRALTY SESSIONS.

FRIDAY.—Adam Smith was indicted for piracy on the 7th August, 1822, in attacking and capturing the ship Victoria, off the Coast of Cuba. He was also charged with stealing the ship and cargo. There was another indictment for piracy on a vessel called the Industry. It was proved in support of the first indictment, that the boat that came alongside was manned by four men, and the prisoner had the command of her. The boat's crew then came on board the Victoria, at which time they were armed with pig knives, muskets and pistols; the men and cargo were transferred to the Industry, and the directions given to the two crews of the Victoria and Industry, who had been put into the latter vessel, to set sail. On the morning after the vessels had been captured, the crew of the schooner held a council of war on board, and one of them taking a cutlass by the point, presented it to the prisoner, who, ever after, gave orders to those on board, who paid the most exact attention to them. The prisoner told Capt. Heance that he wished to give up the vessel to him, but as all had a voice, he could not. The prisoner, in defence, stated, that he had been forced from the Zephyr trading vessel against his will by the pirates, and after the most unheard of cruelties towards him he was compelled to act as he had done. He had been lashed to the mast, fired at with muskets, surrounded with gun-powder, which was set fire to, and his clothes blown off his back before he would consent to act under the pirates, and then he did so with a view of mitigating the sufferings of his countrymen. He then called a great number of witnesses to prove the truth of his statement, amongst whom were the son of one of the owners of the vessel, the surgeon, and others. The witnesses gave the prisoner a most exemplary character, some of whom had known him many years both at sea and on shore, amongst whom were several captains and masters of vessels. The Jury, without a moment's hesitation, found him Not Guilty.

On Friday morning, between five and six o'clock, a fire broke out at the house of Mr. Legget, Assessor of the King's Taxes, on the Adelphi-terrace, which completely gutted the lofty and extensive premises before it was extinguished, besides damaging the adjoining house, notwithstanding the activity of the firemen and its contiguity to the Thames.

KENT ASSIZES.

James Taylor, a private in the Royal Marines, was indicted for stealing 25l. in money, the property of William Miles. On the night of the 1st of August, an office belonging to the pay-sergeant of the Royal Marines, was broken open, and 25l. taken out of a desk. Next day the prisoner was flush of cash, which he said he had received from his father, a baker at Bath. Whilst in custody, he wrote a letter to his sweetheart, desiring her to go to a particular field, where he had hid some money in a sand bank. The girl was taken in the act of digging out a bag containing about 20l. worth of silver. The bag was identified as being that in which the money stolen from the pay-office was contained. One witness deposed, that during the prisoner's confinement in the black hole, the latter had endeavoured to subborn him to commit perjury, and swear that he had seen a man give him a parcel containing money. To this witness the prisoner admitted that he had robbed the pay-office.—The Jury found him guilty, and he was sentenced to seven years' transportation.

James Webster was indicted for the wilful murder of Mr. James Smith, at Lewisham, on the 22d of December last, by shooting him with a loaded gun. The particulars of this case were similar to those of the case of John Coleman, who was executed last spring for the same murder. The prisoner was clearly proved to be one of the parties to the transaction. Two of the accomplices were examined to make out the case. The Jury found the prisoner Guilty, and he was ordered for execution on Monday (22d).

Joseph Bell, 19 years of age, was indicted for murdering his father at Deal, on the 16th April last, by shooting him with a loaded gun. This case stood over from last Assizes on account of the apparent imbecility of the prisoner. He was now put to the bar again. The evidence adduced on the former occasion was repeated. It was proved that though the prisoner was a person of weak intellects, yet that he was perfectly sane, and knew right from wrong. Mr. Justice Park summed up the evidence for the Jury.—The Jury found the prisoner Guilty, and he was ordered for execution on Monday (22d).

MIDDLESEX SESSIONS.

THURSDAY.—George West, a porter at the Old Bell Inn, Holborn, was indicted for obtaining, by fraudulent representation, 2s. 2d. from C. A. Horn, for the delivery of a parcel, the proper charge being only 1s. 8d. The parcel came from Canterbury, and the regular carriage and porterage of which amounted to 1s. 8d. A Mr. Gregg paid the prisoner 2s. 2d. the same being charged on his delivery ticket; but when Mr. Horn was informed of it, he called at the inn, where he was told by the book-keeper that the ticket was not the one which he had delivered to the prisoner, but was entirely filled up in the prisoner's hand-writing. The Jury found the prisoner guilty, and the Chairman observed, that the crime of the prisoner was as common as the uttering of bad money, and after the many convictions and severe punishments which had followed the commission of the offence, it was a matter of wonder that it should be still pursued. It became necessary to make examples, in order to deter others from similar fraudulent practices; and therefore the sentence of the Court upon him was, that he be imprisoned for three months in the House of Correction, and there kept to hard labour.

MISCELLANEOUS.

We are happy to learn that during the last two or three days the health of his Royal Highness the Duke of York has considerably improved.

The Duke of Wellington, accompanied by several officers who had served in the Peninsula, went a few days since to see Marshall's Battle of Ligny. His Grace expressed himself in the highest terms of admiration at the correctness of the exhibition.

Sir Philip Roche arrived at the Foreign Office on Wednesday from Madrid, with dispatches for Mr. Secretary Canning.

Mr. Secretary Canning is still confined to his bed chamber by indisposition; but we understand that persons on public business are daily admitted at Gloucester Lodge. Mr. Rush, the Envoy from the United States, was with the Right Hon. Gentleman for a considerable length of time on Wednesday.

At the annual examination of the scholars at Heston-House, last week, the prizes were awarded as follows:—The Gold Medal, for Greek and Latin, to T. E. Partridge; the Silver Medal, for Greek and Latin, to C. A. Moore; the Gold Medal, for Mathematics, to Ferd. White; the Silver Medal, for Mathematics, to George Cecil; and to the junior boys who excelled, rewards of Books.

Tuesday, the final examination of the accounts relative to the bankruptcy of the Rev. Mr. Colton took place. Several creditors proved their debts; among the number was Mr. Wheeler, wine-merchant, of Crutched Friars, 440l. He was opposed on the ground that the wines were furnished in trade, and not for private use; but Mr. Wheeler stated, that the wines had been sold the Rev. Gentleman by his clerk, and were disposed of not as an article in trade, but for private consumption; this was considered a valid debt by the Commissioners, and was entered accordingly. The Rev. Mr. Colton not appearing, he was ordered to be proclaimed at midnight in the Hall an outlaw.

On Wednesday a Court of Directors was held at the East India House, when the following Captains were sworn into the command of their respective ships, viz. Capt. J. Tween, of the Sir David Scott, for Bengal and China; and Capt. R. Clifford, of the Lady Melville, for Madras and China.

On Wednesday a Meeting was held at the City of London Tavern to investigate a project for making subterraneous roads beneath the streets of this Metropolis, for the arrangement of the gas and water pipes, to which constant communication should be provided by means of side doors. The great object is the avoiding the inconvenience of breaking up the pavement for the repair of the pipes. It was proposed to apply to Parliament for leave to form a Company. A number of Engineers and other scientific men attended. Mr. Alderman Garrett was in the Chair. Mr. Williams (the Patentee) stated the extent of the progress made towards the adoption of the plan since the last meeting. The Report stated that the Committee were of opinion that the plan was practicable at the expense of about 20,000l. per mile, and that the saving to the Pavement Trust, and the utility to the Public would be immense. After some discussion, the meeting adjourned for three months, in order that the plan may be sufficiently matured.

Mr. Banks, we are happy to hear, is pronounced by his medical attendants to be gradually recovering from his dangerous illness. The afflicting situation into which the family of this highly respected member of Parliament has been at once plunged by recent events has excited very general sympathy. Within the short space of a few weeks Mr. Banks has sustained the loss of an exemplary wife, as well as of the youngest of two amiable daughters, whilst he himself has been attacked by a dangerous complaint requiring the most prompt and efficient surgical aid. This, we find the late Mrs. Banks, regardless of her own health, hastened with him to London to procure, and it is supposed that the exertions of a rapid journey, joined to so much anxiety of mind, contributed to bring on the short illness which terminated in her death. Mrs. Banks was not less known in the fashionable circles of this metropolis than Mr. Banks is distinguished as a Member of the House of Commons; we, therefore, subjoin the following account of this regretted lady, which has been furnished us by one well acquainted with her, and which may not be uninteresting to many of our readers:—She was daughter of Wm. Woodley, Esq. Governor of the Leeward Islands, and niece of Lord Lavington. A celebrated beauty in her youth, and after her marriage living much in the world, she made more real friends there, where friendship is supposed to be most rare and artificial, by her known excellencies in private life, than enemies through the common envy of prosperity, or any of the imperfections incidental to our nature. Thus, by many of the great as well as the good is she sincerely lamented; but it is not here that her merit can be fully estimated—in the cottages around the family residence in Dorsetshire will her best praise be found. Of these the inmates will deplore her loss, and when the transient recollections of gaiety and fashion shall have fleeted by, the poor of that populous neighbourhood will long speak of the late Mrs. Bankes as of their most charitable and most useful friend. Mrs. Bankes died in the 64th year of her age, and was interred on the 29th ult. in a vault at St. Margaret's church. The funeral was private and unostentatious, but among the sons and relations of the deceased, the Duke of Wellington and the Lord Chancellor were observed to follow the coffin as chief mourners.

In the Middlesex County Court, several suits have been brought, in which Mr. Elliston was defendant, to recover money paid by persons who, when his Majesty visited Drury Lane Theatre, could not obtain seats nor even standing room. The Jury found for the plaintiffs, on the evidence that some had passed from the pit on being told by the servants of the house that there was room in the boxes, and that others had paid their money at the box door without receiving any intimation from the receiver that the house was full, or there being any board up at the time with a notice to that effect.

On Wednesday, a Quarterly Court of Proprietors was held at the East India House. The Court agreed to make a dividend of 5½ per cent. on the Company's capital stock for the half year ending the 5th of January next.—In answer to a question from Mr. D. Kinnaird, the Chairman stated, that the subject of certain recent disturbances in the College had been under the consideration of the College Committee, and that the College was going on in a very satisfactory manner.—Mr. D. Kinnaird then handed in a Requisition, requesting that a Special General Court should be called for the purpose of considering the propriety of repealing that part of the 53d of Geo. III. by which the Court of Directors are prevented from sending out any civil servant to India, unless he has previously passed four terms in the College.—The Court was afterwards occupied on a motion made by Mr. J. Smith respecting a monument, at the Company's expence, to the memory of Mr. Charles Grant, in the Church of St. George's, Bloomsbury. Mr. Smith detailed the public services of Mr. Grant from the year 1773 to the period of his death. The part Mr. Grant took in the reformation of the shipping system—on his efforts in support of an extension of education, to which was mainly to be attributed the erection of Haileybury College—and on the great exertions he made when the negotiations for renewing the Charter in 1813 were in progress. The motion was opposed by Mr. Hume, who adverted to the late negociation relative to the Charter, and contended that Mr. Grant's opposition to the opening of the India trade had given rise to the contention between the Government and the Company. He held that the erection of Haileybury College, which was set up in opposition to the College of Calcutta, could not be received as a ground for the proposed proceeding. He concluded by moving, "That the motion should be agreed to sine die." A division was called for, when the numbers were—For the motion, 54—Against it, 29—Majority in favour of the motion, 25.—The Court then adjourned.

Cambridge, Dec. 19.—The Rev. E. Irish, of Magdalen College, was on Monday last admitted Bachelor in Civil Law.—G. F. H. Greenhalgh, Esq. of Caius College, was on the same day admitted Bachelor in Physic.—The Rev. F. Le Grice, M.A. and J. Power, Esq. B.A. of Trinity Hall, were on Wednesday last elected Fellows of that Society.—The Rev. R. Temple, M.A. and the Rev. J. Hind, M.A. of Sidney Sussex, were yesterday elected Foundation Fellows of that Society; and the Rev. E. D. Rhodes, M.A. was elected Fellow, on the Tiverton foundation. At the same time, the Rev. J. Hind, M.A. was appointed one of the Tutors of that Society.

At an ordination holden by the Lord Bishop of Bristol, in the Chapel of Queen's College, in this University, on Sunday last, the following gentlemen were admitted into Holy Orders:—DEACONS—J. Dickenson, B.A. Trinity college, Oxford; J. Cubitt, B.A. Christ college; J. B. Mack, B.A., C.C.C.; R. Longe, B.A. Caius col.; E. P. Henslow, B.A. Jesus col.; A. Langton, Downing col.; F. P. Houle, B.A. Trinity col. Camb.—PRIESTS—H. Deacle, B.A. Emmanuel col. and J. Gerrard, B.A. Trinity col. Camb.

Through the giving way of some part of the supporting fastenings, a considerable portion of the large cast-iron screen in front of the choir of St. Paul's Cathedral fell down on Wednesday. One of the vergers had a narrow escape, but fortunately no person sustained any injury.

Hurricane.—On Wednesday evening the metropolis and its vicinity was visited by a storm of wind, rain, and hail, which, for the few hours that it raged, from seven till half-past eleven, was of extraordinary violence. A house at the corner of George-street, Tower-hill, had a number of chimnies blown down. On Tower-hill, a large tree opposite the Mound-about House, was blown down. The gable end of the roof of a neighbouring house fell on the house of Messrs. Wilson and Co. 63, Tower-street, near the Hill, broke through, and hurt three young men in bed, two of them so dangerously that they were conveyed to St. Thomas's Hospital. A stack of chimnies fell through the roof of the house of Mr. Hutton, in Aldersgate-lane; two children in bed received no hurt. A very heavy stack of chimnies were blown down at the house of Mr. Bowen, hat-maker, Charles-street, Blackfriars-road: it fell in, and shortly after the whole house gave way, and buried the furniture in its ruins. A stack of chimnies were blown from the roof of the house of Mr. Plank, stationer, of Blackfriars-road. An elderly lady was passing, and was struck by some of the pieces, and much hurt. Similar accidents occurred in Bear-yard, Blackfriars-road; and in the Borough and its precincts. A stack of chimnies from the Globe house, No. 14, Judd-street, fell on two houses in Cromer-street, and levelled them with the ground. In Essex-court, Temple, a range of buildings was completely unroofed. In various other parts of the town the tiles were stripped from the houses, and chimney pots blown down. A man was knocked down, and nearly killed by a chimney-pot in Piccadilly, and several other persons seriously hurt. The mischief among the shipping and the small craft on the River was also very extensive. Several vessels in the first tier off the Tower broke their anchors, and much damage was done. When the storm was at its utmost violence, several tiles were blown from the roof of the house occupied by a Mrs. Cooke, in Barrow-street, Pentonville; and the family alarmed was Mrs. Cooke (an elderly lady), that she immediately dropped and expired from excessive fright. A substantial wall, more than seventy feet in length, dividing the garden of the Castle Tavern, Richmond, was wholly blown down by the hurricane of Wednesday night.

Burglaries.—Several attempts have lately been made to break into the house of Mrs. Jordan, in Manchester-square; three fellows were observed trying the door with skeleton keys, one of them entered by the parlour window, when he was seized by one of the footmen; a struggle ensued, the ruffian attempted to draw a knife, he ultimately broke away, sprung out of the window, and with his companions, got off. About dusk on Tuesday evening, Miss Horan, of Prince's-street, St. James's, was robbed of a bundle, containing a silk dress, as she was passing through St. James's Park, by a genteel looking man. About eight o'clock on Wednesday morning, a gang of little thieves snatched a bundle of linen from a female in Orchard-street, Westminster, and ran off. The premises of Mrs. Friend, in Dog-row, Bethnal-green, were entered by false keys, and a quantity of plate, gold and silver coins, &c. stolen. Tuesday even Mr. Benjamin, Cranbourne-street, Whitechapel, went out with his family to spend the evening; on their return, and on opening the door he was knocked down by a ruffian, who rushed out with the bundle and escaped. The house had been entered by means of false keys, every thing packed up for removal, and a considerable booty in apparel, &c., and in cash, carried off.

The Middlesex Quarterly Sessions was held at Kingston last week, to receive a complaint made by Mr. Richman, deputy Coal Meter for Lieutenant Francis Bigg, Esq. his principal, for neglect and misconduct in his office. The main charges were, that Mr. Bigg obstructed Mr. Richman in his exertions to detect and prevent frauds, refused him all information and access to books, encouraging the coal meters to disobey his orders, and stigmatize him amongst them as a common informer; that Mr. Bigg declined to interfere with such misconduct and fraud were palpable, and detained meters in his office who were detected of mal-practices; that he did not keep a sufficient number of meters to perform the necessary duty; that he did not keep proper officers, nor visit the stations so frequently as he ought. The case occupied two whole days, and the Court, after an hour's deliberation, delivered the following judgment:—"They considered the complaint not sufficiently proved to justify the removal or suspension of Mr. Bigg, but they ordered more attendance there to the visitation of the stations, and the payment of the coal meters."

AFFRAY.—Montgomery, one of the excavators engaged in digging between the pitmen and others at Wren, between Hollingsworth and Kinnaresworth, on Tuesday, died on the following morning, from bruises received about the head. It has been stated that three of whom were soldiers and the others pensioners, went to Wren's Nest to take custody who had deserted in 1822. The excavators in the pit resisted the army-men, and a general battle took place with sticks and stones, when the deserter escaped, and both parties were much injured.

A desperate attack was made on a female by a ruffian on Tuesday night, in the neighbourhood of Grosvenor-square. As Miss Neviby was returning after ten o'clock, proceeding through Mount-street, on her way to her residence near Covent-garden, she was accosted by a man of fashionable appearance, who rather rudely made some approaches, and used language of the most disgusting kind. She refused to retreat, when he caught her round the waist, and stabbed her with a sharp instrument in the thigh: he was about to repeat the blow, when she screamed aloud, and the cowardly miscreant fled. The lady sunk senseless on the steps of a door. He was of middle size, dark complexion, bushy whiskers, and had an extremely foppish appearance and affected air. A gentleman perceiving Miss Neviby to be in excessive pain, had her removed by the watchman into a house, where she was found dressed by a surgeon; after which she was sent home in a coach. This is the fourth attack of the kind, and apparently by the same miscreant, within a few days.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, DEC. 21.

HIS MAJESTY continues to enjoy excellent health.

We have given place to a portion of a "Lady's Journal" to-day, which prevents our submitting to our readers a mass of intelligence received from the West Indies.—"All work and no play would make JACK a dull boy."—It is therefore necessary to vary the character of our lucubrations, and we thought, during the holidays, when every thing around us is cheering and cheerful, we might enjoy a laugh as well as our neighbours.

One piece of information, however, we cannot delay giving. It relates to the conflagration of MR. WRAY'S chapel and dwelling-house, in BERBICE. The fire which consumed those buildings, we have authority to state, was perfectly accidental.—We mention this as a fact which ought to be made known previously to the opening of a second subscription for re-building them, should such a measure be in contemplation.

WE seldom, if ever, notice the virulent abuse of papers which, as very few people read, we presume very few people can attend to, but a series of attacks gross and scurrilous, not as regards ourselves, but other persons either supposed to be connected with us, or whose principles and characters we uphold, upon principle and feeling, having appeared continuously in a provincial paper called "FLINDELL'S WESTERN LUMINARY," we feel ourselves called upon to notice an extraordinary discrepancy in the proceedings of the Editor of that paper.

It may be recollected by those who are conversant with the production in question, that MR. FLINDELL was one of the warmest and most staunch opponents of the Radical faction at the time of the fearful agitation created by QUEEN CAROLINE—that his zeal and loyalty outran his prudence or discretion, and in consequence of some strong remarks upon her Majesty, stronger indeed than any other paper ventured to put forth, he was tried by the Government for a libel, and sentenced to imprisonment and fine.

Now, we confess, it is extremely hard upon us, who have suffered lengthened imprisonment, and paid accumulated fines, to be thus vilified and traduced by a person who, mortified and irritated by the results of his labours, chooses to vent his spleen upon JOHN BULL, because he remains firm to the unbought principles he professes, and takes his line free and uncontrouled by any party or any influence.

When we see this sudden animosity rising like a phœnix out of the ashes of departing friendship, we always suspect unworthy motives. We have ever shewn our independence of party, consistently with our own feelings and principles; and while we certainly despise the tergiversation of the county journal in question, we can tell him that he never was more deceived in his life than when he calls us "hirelings" and "flatterers," and retainers of this personage or that personage. We know no personages—we know our duty, and if any man can prove to us, that there are faults and follies in those whom we politically and publicly love the best, and admire the most, we will—as we ever have done, notice and animadvert upon them, with as little ceremony as the Exeter LUMINARY is pleased to animadvert upon us, for blind partiality, and fulsome adulation.

AT a moment when it is evident that there is a general disposition to ridicule and vilify everything in the shape of judges and magistrates, it is extremely unpleasant to us, to be called upon to notice one of the most extraordinary judicial irregularities ever committed in a public court.

It is hardly necessary to say that we allude to a pitby and pertinent address of the Recorder, to a man of the name of RUTHERFORD, the other day, at the London Sessions—he was charged with stealing a quilt, evidence was called, the trial went regularly through, and the prisoner was acquitted.

Immediately after the return of this verdict the Recorder said to the man—"Now," (that is, now that you are acquitted) "I hope you will return the poor woman the quilt you STOLE FROM HER!" This called forth some observations from MR. ADOLPHUS, who had been his counsel, and the warmth with which the dialogue between that gentleman and the Recorder was carried on, we have no desire to imitate, but we do desire to know what is become of the sacred institution of a British Jury, if a man, having undergone the ordeal of a trial by his peers, and having been acquitted, not upon any professional quibble—not even upon any legal technicality, but upon the evidence adduced against him, is liable to be told publicly by the judge who tried him, that he stole the article which a BRITISH JURY upon their oaths, have just solemnly declared him innocent of stealing?

It is not because RUTHERFORD is a poor man—it is not because the quilt was a thing of small value, that the case is one bit altered—we never heard of such a circumstance, and we never could have believed that a Judge could so far forget, not only the laws of his country, but his own character, as to use the expression which it is admitted he did use.

The CHRONICLE comments strongly upon this occurrence, and adds a hint to MR. KNOWLYS that the office of RECORDER is elective—we admit that such a hint is by no means unseasonable in such a case, yet we could not conceal our surprise at finding it in a journal, so feelingly alive to the necessity of perfect independence in all our JUDGES, as the paper we have mentioned.

SCOTS EPISCOPACY.

WE have received, amongst others, the following communication on this subject, which we feel it our duty to submit to our readers:—

Runcorn on the Mersey, 16th Dec. 1823.

SIR,—I beg leave to state, for your information, and for that of your numerous readers, that Presbyterianism was established in Scotland, by Act James VI. 1592, being, if I am not mistaken, the first Statute of that year—and that Bishops were not restored till 1604, the year after King James's ascension to the Throne of England.

The mistake you have made as to dates, in your last number, is not to be sure of great importance; but I feel desirous that every statement in a paper like your's should itself be correct and unimpeachable.

Expecting from your candour an early insertion of the above, and earnestly wishing you much success in your manly, honourable, and truly independent career—I am, Sir, your most obedient servant,

A SCOTSMAN,
ATTACHED TO THE EPISCOPACY, BUT STILL MORE ATTACHED TO TRUTH.

The next is on the subject of BISHOP LOW, who has been vituperated by one of our Presbyterian correspondents.—

"This Bishop Low, as he calls himself, (for you will remember, that by the law of the land there can be no Bishop in Scotland,) is a poor creature, who never attended an university in his life, except for three years at Aberdeen, when he obtained orders in the Scotch Episcopal Church, which had no connexion with the Church of England, and by cringing to a certain Peer, who is an Episcopalian, he has got himself dubbed Bishop."

SIR—This passage is extracted from a letter published in your paper of the 14th signed "A Member of the Presbyterian Church of Scotland."

"I beg to state that I had the honour to be introduced to Bishop Low some years before he was consecrated to his present dignified office, and met him frequently at that time. His learning and piety are such as do honour to his sacred profession, and eminently to qualify him for the discharge of the high duties committed to him. His manners are those of a gentleman, a praise which few of the Clergy of the Established Church of Scotland can claim. I had the advantage of seeing Bishop Low, (then Mr. Low) in the society of persons of high rank, and I could not discover any of that cringing to which your Presbyterian correspondent ascribes his promotion. It may be new to your correspondent to learn that it is quite common with gentlemen to be perfectly independent in their department without rudeness or vulgarity. I do not believe it to be possible that the wishes of the excellent nobleman to whom I suppose your correspondent alludes, could have had any influence in the diocese over which Bishop Low is placed.

I have reason to know, and I now state that the christian virtues and amiable manners of Bishop Low have secured to him the sincere veneration and esteem of the whole of the clergy and laity over whom he presides.

It is with great regret I have seen the Scottish Episcopal Church made the subject of public discussion, and I shall be very glad when that discussion is at an end.—I remain, your most obedient servant,

A LAY MEMBER OF THE SCOTTISH EPISCOPAL CHURCH.
London, 17th Dec. 1823.

SIR,—As a member, from choice, of the Scotch Episcopalian Church, I felt grateful for your advocating the cause and support of what is, in my opinion, a church nearly approaching the primitive purity of the early Christian Church. In it we behold the spectacle, a rare one I am happy to say, in the present day, of a branch of the mother Church, flourishing, to be sure, but without any support than the attachment of its children. The Bishops of this establishment have derived in a straight line their consecration from the apostles downward, uninterrupted even by the suppression by law de facto of their order. As to our being Dissenters, if we are, we are the only ones who ring a bell for public worship by a statute of Queen Anne! One word more and I have done. BISHOP GLEIG is the same who forced a certain Rev. ANDREW THOMPSON, the inveterate foe of Episcopacy, to publicly retract every word he had written against him, in the fear of damages being awarded against him (the said Rev. A. T.) for the most unfounded allegations. Your Presbyterian friend may know MR. THOMPSON, as a violent opponent of all that is rational in the Scotch Kirk, and a leader of the men who profess exclusively (with as much truth as was in the attack of DR. GLEIG) to preach the gospel.—I am, Sir, your constant reader, A FRIEND TO THE FORM OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND, WHEREVER IT BE FOUND.
Bruton-street, Berkeley-square, Dec. 18, 1823.

TREAD MILL FOR FEMALES.

No explanation having appeared in answer to letters which have been inserted in the daily papers, on the subject of a woman in Guildford House of Correction, who was said to be working on the tread-mill in that prison, having a child to nourish, in her arms, we hope to call public attention to the following facts, which as men and Englishmen no power on earth shall induce us to conceal.

Five weeks since a woman was sent to the Cold Bath Fields tread-mill for being disorderly—she never had been in prison before. On the third day of labour she dropped off the wheel in a fainting fit—the fall seemed to recover her—her shrieks were agonizing—MR. BEVILL, and several other Magistrates, were in the yard at the time, and left it immediately after the accident, without making an enquiry.

The woman was carried to the infirmary—and there remained till her discharge, last week.

Two women above fifty years of age, are now at work on the wheel, with orders that they be worked as much as young women.

Two women have been on the wheel who have had twelve children each—one named SMITH, the other KELLY—the latter, after treading for three months, is removed to the wash-house department.

Each woman is on the wheel eighteen minutes, and off eighteen minutes—they work from nine till one, and from two till four, in winter, and till half past five in summer.

They complain of pains and achings in the limbs and loins, and of cramp in bed at night—they are also subject to swimmings in the head—the perspiration in this weather is profuse!

We find at BRIXTON that there have been mothers on the wheel, as one is described to have been at GUILDFORD, whose case appeared in the papers; a very short time was allowed for the mother to nourish the child, and if the poor innocent cried in the bitterest manner for its wretched parent, she was unable to go to it, till her time on the wheel had expired, lets its cries be as cutting and as piteous as they might; at COLD BATH FIELDS, mothers nursing, not only have extra allowance, but are not compelled to work.

We call upon the nation to stop this unnatural, un-English punishment; we relate facts, because we fondly love our country, and would wipe such a stigma from its reputation.

MRS. FRY, accompanied by a lady of the name of STEELE, has visited Cold Bath-fields, and tried the labour of the tread-mill—this is as it should be—bring home the punishment to the personal feelings and see the result—that lady declared it must be injurious to females, and disgraceful to put them to it.

As MRS. FRY is one of the warmest improvers of prison discipline, we repeat her words as highly important.

As to natural work for women in prison, we know that at Clerkenwell, where the women worked at their needles, four hundred shirts were made by thirty women per week; they received a penny or three half-pence per shirt—what was the consequence?—They worked steadily and assiduously, and only complained when one had more work given her (as a favour) than another.

As for the moral operation of the mill, it makes women sulky, sullen, and vindictive—it destroys the feelings of their nature; and as a proof of the injury it does, the women who first go to the mill as being disorderly, return after their discharge as felons, and again as disorderly—it is a rare thing for them to be absent three weeks, after having once been set to work. JANE MATTHEWS, for instance, was re-committed five times in twelve months—indeed there is scarcely a strange face in charge.

So much for the moral operation of the thing; for we think it cannot be alleged that the frequent return to it proves the lightness of the punishment—it is all abominable, and we will never rest till we have emancipated females from the dreadful toil.

WE have a due and proper reverence for compassion, humanity, charity, and humility, wherever we find them; but we have a proportionate contempt for the affectation of such virtues where they exist not.

We some time since published an article shewing the absurdity of that double-refined sensitive sensibility, which a certain class of our fellow countrymen and countrywomen are now every day avowing; and, above all, we certainly are disposed to sneer at the exquisite delicacy of feeling which induces its possessor to decline the use of sugar, because slaves are employed in its cultivation.

These persons drink tea with the greatest composure, as if WHANG, FONG, PUNG, CHING, were not just as hot, and just as tired in gathering tea, as QUASHEE and CÆSAR in cutting sugar canes. They eat bread without remorse too, as if JOHN DOBBINS and HUMPHREY GRUBB had not toiled twice as long and ten times as much, to plough, sow, harrow, and reap, as any slave in the known world ever toiled in any day's labour of his life.

Still, however, we respect the principle, and though we have seen those, who shudder at slavery, which is authorised in the Bible, drive their horses to church contrary to a commandment, without the smallest scruple; we have been greatly moved by the exquisite sympathy which could feel for a sufferring fellow creature, and reject the gratifying sweetening of the tea.

But what will be said of the extreme sensibility of MR. SMITH, the Member for NORWICH, who, in the kind and humane manner we have just described, has prohibited the use of sugar in his family altogether. What will the world say to this? What will the Saints exclaim when they know this? What will our readers say when they hear this? We cannot conceive;—but when they hear that this gentleman, whose tender feelings have prompted him to discountenance the retail consumption of sugar in his private establishment, out of compassion to the blacks, derives all his wealth and income from the sale of the same article by wholesale, we think we can anticipate what everybody will say upon the subject—such, however, is the fact.

THE CHRONICLE of yesterday says—

"It is suspected that the gift of a regiment to a notorious Imperial Ex-gaoler is suspended for the present, by the especial command of a very high personage" !!!

We would not of ourselves attempt to dispute the authority of a suspicion so important as this, because doubtlessly the information upon which it is grounded, is of the most secret and confidential nature; but we may perhaps presume to observe, that if the CHRONICLE means by the "Imperial Examiner" SIR HUDSON LOWE, the late Governor of ST. HELENA, the editor of that paper will, by a reference to the regular Army List, perceive that that General was appointed to the command of the 93d regiment at least a twelvemonth since.

TO JOHN BULL.

PARIS, DEC. 10, 1823.

MY DEAR MR. B.

The kindness with which you put in, the account of our party last year, induces my Mama to desire me to write to you again, to know if you would like to insert a journal of her travels.

My Papa has retired from business—he has left the shop in the Minories, and has taken a house in Montague Place—a beautiful street very far west, and near the British Museum, and my two younger sisters have been sent over here, to improve their education and their morals, and Mama and I came over last week to see them, and if they had got polish enough, to take them home again. Papa would not come with us, because when he was quite a youth, he got a very great alarm in Chelsea Reach, because the waterman would put up a sail, and from that time to this, he never can be prevailed upon to go to sea—so we came over under the care of MR. FULMER, the banker's son, who was coming to his family.

Mama has not devoted much of her time to the study of English, and does not understand French at all, and therefore perhaps her journal will here and there appear incorrect, but she is a great etymologist, and so fond of you, that although I believe MR. MURRAY, the great bookseller in Albemarle-street, would give her, I do not know how many thousand pounds for her book, if she published it "all in the family" as Papa says, she prefers sending it to you piecemeal, and so you will have it every now and then, as a portion of it is done. I have seen MR. FULMER laugh sometimes when she has been reading it; but I see nothing to laugh at, except the hard words she uses, and the pains she takes to find out meanings for things. She says if you do not like to print it, you may let MURRAY have it—but that, of course, she would prefer your doing it.

I enclose a portion—more shall come soon. Papa, I believe, means to ask you to dinner when we get back to town—he says you are a terrible body, and as he has two or three weak points in his character, he thinks it better to be friends with you than foes. I know of but one fault he has—yes, perhaps, two—but I will not tell you what they are till I see whether you publish Mama's journal.

Adieu—I was very angry with you for praising little MISS M. at the Lord Mayor's Dinner—I know her only by sight—we are not quite in those circles yet, but I think when we get into Montague Place we may see something of life. She is a very pretty girl, and very amiable, and that is the truth of it, for you had no business to say so, you fickle monster.—

Yours truly, LAVINIA HIGGINBOTTOM.

We proceeded, after reading this letter, to open the enclosure, and found what follows. We do not presume to alter one word, but when any trifling difficulty occurs, arising from the depth of MRS. HIGGINBOTTOM'S research, we have ventured to insert a note. The title of the manuscript is

ENGLAND AND FRANCE, BY
DOROTHEA JULIA HIGGINBOTTOM.

And thus, gentle reader it ran:—

"Having often heard travellers lament not having put down what they call the memorybillious of their journies, I was determined while I was on my tower, to keep a dairy (so called from containing the cream of one's information), and record everything which recurred to me—therefore I begin with my departure from London.

"Resolving to take time by the firelock, we left Mountague Place at seven o'clock by MR. FULMER'S pocket thermometer, and proceeded over Westminster-bridge to explode the European continent.

"I never pass Whitehall without dropping a tear to the memory of Charles the Second, who, was decimated after the rebellion of 1745 opposite the Horse-Guards—his memorable speech to ARCHBISHOP CAXON rings in my ears whenever I pass the spot—I reverted my head, and affected to look to see what o'clock it was by the dial, on the opposite side of the way.

"It is quite impossible not to notice the improvements in this part of the town; the beautiful view which one gets of Westminster Hall, and its curious roof, after which, as everybody knows, its builder was called WILLIAM ROOFUS.

"Amongst the lighter specimens of modern architecture, is ASTLEY'S Ampletheatre, on your right, as you cross the bridge, (which was built, MR. FULMER told me, by the Court of Arches and the House of Peers). In this ampletheatre there are equestrian performances, so called because they are exhibited nightly—during the season.

"It is quite impossible to quit this 'mighty maze,' as LADY MORGANS emphatically calls London, in her erudite 'Essay upon Granite,' without feeling a thousand powerful sensations—so much wealth, so much virtue, so much vice, such business as is carried on within its precincts, such influence as its inhabitants possess in every part of the civilized world—really exalts the mind from meaner things, and casts all minor considerations far behind one.

"The toll at the Marsh-gate is ris since we last come through—all was here, we were to have taken up LAVINIA'S friend, MISS SMITH, who had promised to go with us to Dover, but we found his servant instead of himself, with a billy, to say he was sorry he could not come, because his friend, Sir JOHN somebody, wished him to stay and go down to Poll at Lincoln. I have no doubt this Poll, whoever she may be, is a very respectable young woman, but mentioning her, by her christian name only, in so abrupt a manner, had a very unpleasant appearance at any rate.

"Nothing remarkable occurred till we reached the Obstacle in St. George's Fields, where our attention was arrested by those great institutions, the "School for the Indignant Blind," and the "Misanthropic Society" for making shoes, both of which claim the gratitude of the nation.

"At the corner of the lane leading to Peckham, I saw that they had removed the Dollygraph which used to stand up on the declivity to the right of the road—the dollygraphs are all to be superseded by Serampores.

"When we came to the Green Man at Blackheath we had an opportunity of noticing the errors of former travellers, for the heath is green, and the man is black; MR. FULMER encouraged to account for this, by saying, that MR. COLMAN has discovered that Moors being black, and Heaths being a kind of Moor, he looks upon the confusion of words as the cause of the mistake.

"N.B. COLMAN is the eminent Itinerary Surgeon, who constantly resides at St. Pancras.

"As we went near Woolwich we saw at a distance the artillery officers on a common, a firing away with their bombs in mortars like any thing.

"At Dartford they make gunpowder, here we changed horses, at the inn we saw a most beautiful Rhoderick Random dom in a pot, covered with flowers, it is the finest I ever saw, except those at Dropmore.—Note (Rhododendron).

"When we got to Rochester we went to the Crown Inn and had a cold collection: the charge was absorbent—I had often heard my poor dear husband talk of the influence of the Crown, and a Bill of Wrights, but I had no idea what it really meant till we had to pay one.

"As we passed near Chatham I saw several Pitts, and MR. FULMER showed me a great many buildings—I believe he near fifty of them—he also shewed us the Lines at Chatham, which I saw quite distinctly, with the clothes drying on them. Rochester was remarkable in KING CHARLES'S time, for being a very witty and dissolute place, as I have read in books.

"At Canterbury we stopped ten minutes to visit all the remarkable buildings and curiosities in it, and about its neighbourhood; the church is beautiful: when OLIVER CROMWELL conquered WILLIAM the THIRD, he perverted it into a stable—the stalls are still standing—the old Virgin who shewed us the church, wore buckskin breeches and powder—he said it was an archypiscopal sea, but I saw no sea, nor do I think it possible he could see it either, for it is at least seventeen miles off—we saw MR. THOMAS à BECKETT'S tomb—my poor husband was extremely intimate with the old gentleman, and one of his nephews, a very nice man, who lives near Golden-square, dined with us twice, I think in London—in Trinity Chapel is the monument of EAU DE COLOGNE, just as it is now exhibiting at the DIARREA in the Regent's Park.

"It was late when we got to DOVER: we walked about while our dinner was preparing, looking forward to our snug tete-à-tete of three—we went to look at the sea, so called, perhaps, from the uninterrupted view one has, when upon it—it was very curious to see the locks to keep in the water here, and the keys which are on each side of them, all ready, I suppose, to open them if they were wanted.

"MR. FULMER looked at a high place and talked of SHAKSPEARE, and said out of his own head, these beautiful lines.—

"Half way down
"Hangs one that gathers camphire, dreadful trade."
"This, I think it but right to say, I did not myself see.—
"Methinks he seems no bigger than his head,
"The fisherman that walk upon the beach
"Appear like mice."

"This, again, I cannot quite agree to, for where we stood, they looked exactly like men, only smaller, which I attribute to the effect of distance—and then MR. FULMER said this—

"And yon tall anchoring bark
"Diminished to her cock—her cock a boy!

"This latter part I do not in the least understand, nor what MR. FULMER meant by cock a boy—however, LAVINIA seemed to comprehend it all, for she turned up her eyes and said something about the immortal bird of heaven—so I suppose they were alluding to the eagles, which doubtless build their aviaries in that white mountain—(immortal bard of Avon, the lady means.)

"After dinner we read the Paris Guide, and looked over the list of all the people who had been incontinent during the season, whose names are all put down in a book at the inn, for the purpose—we went to rest, much fatigued, knowing that we should be obliged to get up early, to be ready for embrocation in the packet in the morning.

"We were, however, awake with the owl, and a walking a way before eight, we went to see the castle—which was built, the man told us, by SEIZER, so called, I conclude, from seizing whatever he could lay his hands on—the man said moreover that he had invaded Britain and conquered it, upon which I told him that if he repeated such a thing in my presence again, I should write to MR. PEEL about him.

"We saw the inn where ALEXANDER, the Autograph of all the Russias, lived when he was here, and as we were going along, we met twenty or thirty dragons mounted on horses, and the ensign who commanded them, was a friend of MR. FULMER'S—he looked at LAVINIA, and seemed pleased with her Tooting assembly—he was quite a sine qua non of a man, and wore tips on his lips, like LADY HOPKINS'S poodle.

"I heard MR. FULMER say he was a son of MARR'S; he spoke it as if every body knew his father, so I suppose he must be the son of the poor gentleman, who was so barbarously murdered some years ago, near Ratcliffe Highway: if he is, he is uncommon genteel.

"At twelve o'clock we got into a boat and rowed to the packet; it was very fine and clear for the season, and MR. FULMER said he should not dislike pulling LAVINIA about, all the morning: this I believe was a naughtycal phrase, which I did not rightly comprehend, because MR. F. never offered to talk in that way on shore, to either of us.

"The packet is not a parcel as I imagined, in which we were to be made up for exportation, but a boat of considerable size; it is called a cutter—why, I do not know, and did not like to ask. It was very curious to see how it rolled about—however I felt quite mal-apropos, and instead of exciting any of the soft sensibilities of the other sex, a great unruly man, who held the handle of the ship, bid me lay hold of a companion, and when I sought his arm for protection, he introduced me to a ladder, down which I ascended into the cabin, one of the most curious places I ever beheld, where ladies and gentlemen are put upon shelves like books in a library, and where tall men are doubled up like boot-jacks, before they can be put away at all.

"A gentleman in a hairy cap without his coat, laid me perpendicularly on a mattrass, with a basin by my side, and said that was my birth; I thought it would have been my death, for I never was so indisposed in all my life. I behaved extremely ill to a very amiable middle-aged gentleman with a bald head, who had the misfortune to be attending upon his wife, in the little hole under me.

"There was no symphony to be found among the tars, (so called from their smell) for just before we went off I heard them throw a painter overboard, and directly after, they called out to one another to hoist up an ensign. I was too ill to enquire what the poor young gentleman had done, but after I came up stairs I did not see his body hanging anywhere, so I conclude they had cut him down; I hope it was not young MR. MARR a venturing after my LAVY.

"I was quite shocked to find what democrats the sailors are—they seem to hate the nobility, and especially the law lords: the way I discovered this apathy of theirs to the nobility, was this—the very moment we lost sight of England and were close to France, they began, one and all, to swear first at the peer, and then at the bar, in such gross terms as made my very blood run cold.

"I was quite pleased to see LAVINIA sitting with MR. FULMER in the travelling carriage on the outside of the packet. But LAVINIA afforded great proofs of her good bringing up, by commanding her feelings—it is curious what could have agitated the billiary ducks of my stomach, because I took every precaution which is recommended in different books to prevent ill-disposition. I had some mutton chops at breakfast, some Scotch marmalade on bread and butter, two eggs, two cups of coffee and three of tea, besides toast, a little fried whiting, some potted charr, and a few shrimps, and after breakfast I took a glass of warm white wine negus, and a few oysters, which lasted me till we got into the boat, when I began eating gingerbread nuts, all the way to the packet, and then was persuaded to take a glass of bottled porter to keep every thing snug and comfortable."

And here ends our present communication. We are mightily obliged to MISS HIGGINBOTTOM, and shall with great pleasure continue the journal, whenever we are presented with it.

BIBLE SOCIETIES.

WE have had occasion frequently to look into the arcana of these mysterious institutions, and have witnessed with pain and disgust their quackeries and delusions; in and about the metropolis their operations have been carried on with a zeal bordering upon impropriety, if not indecency. We find that GLASGOW is at present invaded by a BRANCH, and select one from many communications we have received thence, to state the case. On Sunday next we shall call the attention of our readers once more to the subject, and in the mean time bespeak an attentive perusal of a curious and authentic narration.—

GLASGOW, Dec. 16, 1823.

DEAR BULL—The success which has attended your endeavours to redress the grievances, to put down humbug, and to amend the morals of your immediate neighbours, induces me to hope that you will not refuse your aid to remove a serious evil, which has of late broken out in this city. Time was when a man's house was his castle, but I am sorry to say that such an order of things no longer exists. In other days, when a man had got over the bustle of business, he could retire to the bosom of his family, and enjoy uninterruptedly the society of those for whom he laboured, and in whom his happiness was centered. Even in the days of radical reformers, when alarm every where existed out of doors, our women and children while they kept at home, knew nothing of the danger but by report; but the evil I complain of is of a more extensive nature and more dangerous, because more insidious, than all the attempts of all the radicals put together. Our women and children are the most exposed to it—their minds are deluded and their understandings perverted—and under the serious name of religion, our houses are invaded, and the secrets of every family laid open to the mercy of the intruders. A sort of female inquisition has been established under the auspices of a MR. DUDLEY, who lately arrived here as an agent of the Bible Society. He found no difficulty in enlisting under his banners all manner of women: young, old, middle-aged, in great numbers, flocked to his standard. Immediately the town was divided into districts—and the ladies, hunting in couples, fearlessly enter every house, demanding subscriptions; and woe be to the reputation of that man or woman who has courage enough to refuse to comply with their request.

Will any sober person believe, that the Bible Society, whose business has been hitherto conducted in the most exemplary manner by the other sex, should all at once change its agents, and employ those who must shortly bring its great emoluments to nothing? It is not to be credited—they must have some other object, which does not meet the eye. Be that as it may, some generalship has been displayed in the appointment of the fair beggars: an old hand and a young go together, and in case the brass of the junior should be easily rubbed off, the unquestionable impudence of the other may supply the defect.

Mild means, MR. BULL, have had no effect—our Papers have tried in vain to write them down. It is therefore seriously intended, as soon as Parliament meets, to apply for the benefit of a branch of the treadmill, from which, in this instance, it is humbly hoped that you will withhold all manner of opposition. The evil had unfortunately gained ground before it was thought of much consequence, as it was industriously stated that the members of the association were all spinsters, come to the age of discretion, who adopted this plan as the only feasible chance of being brought in contact with old bachelors, or other enviable personages; and as stratagems have their use in love as well as in war, this one was forgiven in favour of our aged aunts and cousins. But the business was speedily taken out of their hands—the desire of being seen could not long be confined to ladies of a certain standing. Now we have young girls just escaped from school, performing as collectors of this most inquisitorial revenue. It is lamentable to see young women of family so deluded—and in the end their minds must be contaminated by the example of vice which their daily visits must bring before their eyes. Can a delicate female investigate the arcana of a brothel without getting some new light? The thing cannot be. There is no joke in the above allusion—well-bred, and hitherto well-behaved girls, have been seen coming out of houses of such a description. Is not this a great evil?

For more information I refer you to the Glasgow Courier of Saturday the 13th, and to The Herald of the 15th inst.—Your most obedient servant, ANTI-HUMBUG.

A considerable disturbance was created last Thursday in the neighbourhood of Piccadilly, arising from a very absurd mistake committed by a French lady, who had recently arrived in London from the Continent for the purpose of having an operation performed on her tongue, by SIR ASTLEY COOPER; feeling a great aversion from commencing the course of discipline directed by the eminent surgeon, she, from day to day postponed her visit to him, and on Thursday, passing by a celebrated oil shop near St- James's, after reading a bill posted at the door, abruptly entered the shop, and requested the master, to give her his advice upon her complaint, hoping to receive relief without so much pain and difficulty as she apprehended from regular practice—vain were the protestations of the pickle-man—vain all his assurances that he knew nothing of surgery or pharmacy—vain his intreaties that she would leave his shop, which at last she was compelled to do, and quitted the position she had taken up, exclaiming that it was a gross imposition of London shopkeepers to profess in their placards, what they could not perform in their persons.

In what will our readers suppose all this anger had its origin—?—in the fact that the lady, who was ignorant of the idiom of our language, had seen an announcement in the window to this effect—"TONGUES CURED HERE."

THEATRES.

THE "Vespers of Palermo" have faded into nothingness, and all that remains to record their memory is a remarkably well-printed book of the play, published by MR. MURRAY. We could easily have anticipated the fate of this piece, for the reason we gave last week—we mean because MR. KENNY had some time since, translated the Tragedy, and subsequently abandoned the production of it. The author of "Raising the Wind," and "Sweethearts and Wives," and of twenty other "admirable fooleries," has certainly not given any proofs of his skill in tragic composition; but there is a certain tact about established play-wrights, more serviceable in constructing Dramas intended for the stage, than the more elegant accomplishments, in which such a lady as MRS. HEMANS is "passing rich." Conspiracies, plots, and assassinations, have been brought forward in endless variety; and we think the changes have at length been completely rung through; and so, we conclude, thought MR. KENNY—he considered the "Vespers of Palermo" undramatic—so did we—and so it is.

We are concerned to find that there are still bickerings and quarrellings between certain actors and certain managers, because, wherever this happens, the public is sure to be the loser. We have often referred to the economy of the French stage, where all the punctilios which agitate the monarchies of Covent Garden and Drury Lane are unknown, and the delicate distinctions between good parts and bad parts, and small letters in the bills and large letters in the bills, form no part of the hopes and fears of actors or actresses; it is as useless, however, to try to change the national character of the player and the manager, as it is to alter that of any other member of the community.

On Wednesday a most entertaining fracas took place at Drury Lane, which was carried on with considerable spirit between two persons, one of whom was a Cambridge man, and the other an officer in the East India Company's sea service—it commenced, it seems, by some observation of one of the gentlemen upon the nose of the other, which produced a defiance to the first assailant from the second to come out of the box, and try his prowess in pulling the offensive part. The opponent, first scanning his man, made up his mind that he could with ease—as SHAKSPEARE says—accepted the doughty challenge, and proceeded to operations upon the delicate promontory in question—a retaliation took place, and each gentleman possessed himself forcibly of the obtruding feature of his adversary; peace officers were called in, and as speedily knocked down; constables' staves were borne away in triumph, and all seemed to threaten war—certainly not civil war—when the combatants were overcome, and we perceive, added to the unseemly exposure of the evening, by a day-light exhibition of themselves before the Magistrates at Bow-street in the morning. Such things, be it said, to the honour of society, seldom happen in these days.

——"Nose him i' the lobby,"

We lament exceedingly to perceive that the recovery of MISS TREE from her sham illness, is by no means so decided as we could wish; she appeared to suffer considerably in the little bit of OPHELIA which we saw on Friday—we say little bit, for though we adore SHAKSPEARE and admire MISS TREE, and think YOUNG'S HAMLET excellent, we have not enough of the critic in us, to sit out the play so called, more than twice in the season.

A decision of no trifling importance has been made, as our readers will see, touching the right of managers to take money at the doors after the seats of the Theatre are entirely occupied. To a great proportion of the play-going public, whose diversion is not derivable from the stage, we conclude the nice distinction drawn makes no great difference, but it certainly is extremely just that notice should be immediately given at the entrances of the Theatre when there ceases to be such accommodation as to play-goers or ladies is indispensable, and which they most certainly intend to secure, when they pay their money.—We think that ELLISTON should be entirely exonerated from any share of blame personally, in the affair, because he seldom can have a personal surveillance of the part of the house where the alleged imposition takes place; while, on the other hand, the door-keepers themselves should also be borne harmless, for in the position where they are placed, it is of course impossible for them, to ascertain the exact state of the interior of the house. We congratulate Drury Lane upon the cause, if not the result—for we are glad to find their little law-suits arise rather from an overflow of visitors than a scantiness of them.

TO JOHN BULL.

—"quid sit turpe, quid utile, quid non."—Hor.

SIR,—Much attention was a short time ago excited, and with great justice, to a question most interesting to humanity, by the discussion of the impropriety or otherwise of subjecting female offenders to the punishment of the tread-wheel; but the details of the late tragedy in Hertfordshire, its causes and consequences, have more lately so exclusively engrossed the public mind, that opinions and feelings then very general, seem now by as general a consent, forgotten or postponed, or at best, (like so much of every thing that is laudable,) transient and fruitless. Though I do not recollect that the affirmative of this proposition has publicly met with many advocates, it is notorious that very many intelligent individuals, urge, and I believe from conviction, its propriety, and it is from this belief that I fear to see public opinion cooling on the subject—that I venture an attempt to prolong the discussion with no other ability for the task than an utter and hearty conviction of the impropriety of that punishment, and in the fear alone that silence and suffrance may eventually obtain for it that toleration which reason and humanity deny. Without professing to know anything of the physical mischief resulting from this abuse of punishment, and on which much argument has been judiciously employed, I would willingly follow for a few moments on the same side, on the broader ground of principle and the common feelings of humanity, in the hope that the expression of one more opinion, however in itself valueless, may not be wholly so if it could still excite to the discussion abler heads and hearts, as warmed by the subject as my own.

That our countrymen are deservedly celebrated for that warm feeling of respect and attachment to the female sex, which is the natural result of the intrepid manliness of their character, is a proud truth, which few Englishmen, and, to their honour, perhaps, fewer foreigners will question. Indeed of all our national virtues and vices none is more strongly and more pervadingly marked. Amongst the classes least likely to act from the influence of such feelings, among our lowest and poorest, this character is observable in many habits of considerate attention, and in a kinder adaptation of employments and duties, strikingly contrasted in this respect with the less amiable selfishness of the customs of other countries. In the higher ranks of society, amongst the well educated and the generous, still more strongly marked, it forms that high toned gallantry, that chivalrous sense of the propriety and the decorum, the respect and the attention, due to the fairest and best part of the creation, which renders English society (or that part of it yet uninfected by the poison of foreign follies) the pride of all who know how to value it. And who would wish to survive this honourable subject of national boast?—who would change the mild and moral spirit of Christian government, for the relentless stoicism of the Athenian?—Is it not enough that our statute book should find its only example in the bloody Code of Draco, without adding to that severity (questionable in policy as it may or may not be) an unnatural abuse of it hitherto unheard of. And yet such is indeed the infliction upon females of the degrading torture of the tread-wheel. For the correction and punishment of hardened offenders of my own sex, I have no imaginable objection to the change which the introduction of this machine has wrought in the discipline of our gaols, because I think it has substituted punishment for what was before its cause I think it has substituted punishment for what was before its mockery, and by increasing the fear of the consequences has proportionably diminished crime; but with respect to females, I can scarcely think that I am living in England, and advocating the non-application of the same rule. It is not many weeks since I first heard this revolting fact, that for sexes and circumstances so very different there is no distinction of punishment. I heard it, I most unaffectedly say, with utter horror, and for the first time in my life blushed for my country. Are we indeed in the nineteenth century, in the very pride of civilization and refinement, guilty of a tyrannous abuse of the forms of justice, which, as far as it extends, throws all former instances of barbarism into the shade. Cruelty in its worst exercise, with something like an instinctive assent to the common feelings of nature, has hitherto for the most part confined itself to the active and passive agency of its own author Man, and is it reserved for us to give it a feebler and a less deserving victim?—What may be the baneful effects of this injudicious system on the comparatively slight texture of the female frame, I can not estimate—they must necessarily be severe; but it is against the principle, which will shoot a shudder can for a moment contemplate it in another yet worse aspect of its complicated wretchedness that I raise my anathema, and it alone will make the picture sufficiently black.

Let us suppose a young female committed "to hard labour," driven to her wretched task, and hour after hour, and day after day wearing down, by ceaseless agony, a frame little qualified for such endurance, and by a punishment so brutalizing, and even a public exposure of her sufferings and shame, degrading past all hope of redemption a mind, which, under the influence of kindlier and more judicious correction, might have been given back to the world retrained to virtue. To add one more tint of horror to the picture. In a town like this what is the largest class of unfortunate females who tenant our prisons? Are they not those most hapless of all the children of misery, who, the victims less of their own errors than the vices of others, nightly crowd our streets and public places, and thence, often at the ferocious caprice of a constable, and the necessary indiscriminateness of a police magistrate, under the sweeping definitions of a harsh Vagrant Act, are hurried, numbers at a time, to heal a broken spirit in the rigours of a gaol, and to expiate on the tread-wheel the crime of being unfortunate. Of this, it is to be feared, too large proportion of the martyrs of this cruel system, it is notorious also, how many add to present wretchedness the unspeakable aggravation of the recollection of brighter days, and with sensibilities still fine and keener from misfortune, harrow every thought and feeling into an intensity of woe that fearfully beggars actual suffering in the remembrance of what was once its glorious and happy contrast:—this, this is the perfection of human suffering that mocks all thought and language—this is draining to the lowest dregs a draught bitter enough before—this is the "it is finished" of agony, bodily, mental, and universal—

"from whose hot throb—whose deadly aching,
"The heart hath no relief but breaking."

To these, then, most unfortunate of human beings—to these pitied victims to the heartless treachery of scoundrels who can betray in nocence and then spurn what they have made it—to these "miserable offenders," as they are called—but, in my judgment, offenders far more sinned against than sinning—the tread-mill crowded by the misused power of many a brutal zealot who, in this exercise of it, thinks he honours heaven by breaking the bruised reed, offers its asylum, and there this misery reigns at last alone: there repentance meets disgrace—misfortune is soothed by torture, shame annihilated in infamy, agony goaded to despair. And now, if the picture is complete, if it is frightful, and, above all, if it is true, up every feeling of indignant manhood and forbid the longer endurance of what has far too long already outraged and disgraced the name—the sufferings of helpless females demand redress, and where is the manly heart that can hear the appeal unmoved?

The whole system is unnaturally mistaken and harsh. If in the more laborious offices of life it excites our compassion, to see a female reversing the curse of the Creator, and eating her bread in the sweat of her brow, how revolting ought to be the idea of subjecting her to a punishment, under which the strongest manly frame sinks, and wearied and worn down confesses the severity of a discipline to which the nerve of limbs, toil-strung from their cradle, can afford no adequate resistance? The bodily pain of a state of labour so unnatural and excessive, must be excruciating, and rightly reader the combination of misery with which a female pursues her shameful task, indeed complete. And is woman to continue to bear this, and man to inflict it?—it cannot, must not be—every feeling is in arms against it—nature forbids, and heaven abhors it.

The savage rigour of the system too, is not its only fault; its absolute injustice and inadequacy, either to correction or remedy, render it as politically as it is morally objectionable. Here even the, at best, bad argument, of necessity and expediency cannot hold, for the punishment is in itself utterly disproportioned to any offence, which, generally speaking, a woman can commit, and nine-tenths of those who suffer it do so for offences which call for a very different correction. Measured even by the rigid rule of justice it is iniquitous and harsh, but tried by the standard of humanity it is revolting and merciless and monstrous;—its existence is a disgrace to every honourable distinction we claim as a nation, and belies every right feeling we pretend to cherish as men;—uselessly, and unqualifiedly barbarous, it presents the political solecism of punishment severe, without precedent, not holding forth even the possibility of the reformation, which is the only legitimate end of all punishment, but from its very nature tending to nothing but the hastened and irretrievable ruin of its victims.

I do trust, however, that we may now confidently look forward to not being much longer grieved by the existence of this crying enormity—every thing like cruelty is un-English, and this refined and unnatural species of it will soon give way before the better feelings which we all unite in. The Government itself will, I trust, lead the way in the work of charity, and willingly lend itself to the adoption of some approved change—it will gladly get rid of a charge which stains its own fairer policy and meet the wish it shares. I am very far from wishing to be understood as blaming the promoters of the tread-mill (even in the abuse of it I execrate) or the Government which has thought it (as I do) its duty to support it till it had been tried;—it has now been tried and found wanting—its severity is proved to be only equalled by its uselessness, and the result cannot but be the immediate and utter abolishment of the use of it with reference to females. Such, I venture to predict, will be the spontaneous act of the Government.—Should, however, my anticipations prove unfounded, and some mistaken motive of policy still endeavour to retain a system so reprobated, I would still predict its downfall from the for once united voice of all parties agreed, not upon a question of politics or expediency, but in the everlasting dictates of humanity and justice, demanding in the senate and entreating from the throne the restoration of the character of the nation. More willingly would I (Tory, Mr. Editor, as I am to my very heart's core) to attain such an object, for once see all distinction of contending factions lost in one loud and simultaneous and irresistible expression of a warmer and a better feeling.

Until this much-to-be-desired change take place, might we not with reason suggest to the consideration of our Police Magistrates the enviable power they possess of tempering the rigour of the present system by confining its operation to those who may be more justly amenable to it, and sparing themselves the odium and their country the disgrace of inflicting it at all upon females? I am not aware that the Vagrant Act forces upon a magistrate the painful alternative of punishing severely or not punishing at all, by intending that every commitment under its enactments must necessarily be to hard labour. On the contrary, a fair discretion, in my opinion, is left, and is meant to be left, in the breast of the Magistrate, to be used as circumstances may warrant; and even it were not so, where would be the difficulty or the danger of moderating an in terrorem kind of power (for that is the only construction that can excuse its existence) by that mercy from which it ought to be inseparable, and by preferring the spirit of the law before the letter, making "even its failings lean to virtue's side." A severer course is certainly in the power of our Magistrates, and if they even adopt it from a conviction (however erroneous) that it is necessary, I am far from blaming them; but I will add also, that I am as far from envying them.

But it is now time to have done with a subject which, however in itself interesting, I am intruding upon you at far too great a length, and with far too little ability to compensate the inconvenience. May we soon, very soon recognise the influence of a better spirit in the abolishment of the loathed system of cruelty I have endeavoured to deprecate; and to hasten and insure it, may every right and kindly feeling that our nature claims enlist itself on the side of mercy, and every where join in the support of an appeal which is "in the name of humanity charitable, and in the name of God just."—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

Hadlow-street, 5th Dec. 1823. JUVENIS.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR,—I send the following substance of a letter, received by the last Leeward Island packet, as shewing the state of feeling to which the West India planter has been driven by the late proceedings of the British Parliament.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

A WEST INDIA PROPRIETOR.

SUBSTANCE OF A LETTER FROM ANTIGUA, DATED OCTOBER 23, 1823.

IT is impossible not to contemplate with regret the impaired state to which your property here, as well as that of all West India proprietors, is reduced by inconsiderate, and to us unjust, Acts of Parliament, by which our absolute ruin is threatened; while Ministers acknowledging the injustice, shew (as you truly say) no inclination to protect or to save us. It is lamentable thus to see our best rights infringed for parliamentary influence. The union of the East India Interest with the Saints has been our bane; we are sacrificed to the popularity game of the one, and the interests of the other, that their sugars may be brought without competition, and on their own terms, to the British market, to effect which the newspapers and other periodical publications are monopolized to vilify and injure us. While a gradual reform in the condition of the slaves is their pretended sole object, they are hurrying on a general emancipation, regardless of the danger of all sudden and violent changes, and the loss of life and fortune with which we are threatened.

The unsettling of the negro mind is of itself a sufficient injury, without goading him on to freedom by troops of sectarians, as well as by new laws and regulations sent out almost monthly by Government. God knows that a tenfold evil has already been done to the cause of humanity, as well as to the great interests of the empire, by the partial abolition act alone. It is mortifying to see our once flourishing colonies precipitated to ruin, while the colonies and trade of rival nations are thus made to flourish by our own acts, in proportion to the destruction they bring upon ourselves. It is time the eyes of the nation were opened, and that Ministers should no longer be induced to sacrifice our best rights to the mistaken zeal of party and interested views of men, who seem to have sufficient influence in Parliament to procure the adoption of measures pregnant with ruin to the nation.

With a prodigious increase of sectarian schools, especially those of the Methodists, it would appear that while faith and duty to God are inculcated, all good works towards each other are omitted; and the negroes seem to be taught to read, only to make them acquainted with inflammatory productions, and dangerous chapters of the Bible, which are carefully marked out for them, such as the 8th chapter of Joshua, the 4th, 5th, and 6th of Galatians, &c. &c. Surely Government cannot expect that we should enlighten our slaves for our own destruction, thus cutting our own throats. But on this, as well as other parts of this subject, a great want of local knowledge is evident; nor will it be believed in England, that a great bulk of the coloured and black people who have been emancipated in this colony, have returned to servitude in order to get their bread; and many of both classes are employed and supported by our very slaves.

The continued exaction of our high war taxes, while those taxes have been lowered to all other classes of his Majesty's subjects, look as if they were reserved to make an easy prey of us to the benefit of the East India interest; thus taking advantage of our distress, while compensation is only held out as a blind; and it can be demonstrated that the general distress of the colonies has originated neither in misfortune from the visitations of Providence, nor in imprudence, nor the misconduct of the proprietors, but in the very acts of government. Hence, if there be any integrity in that government, or security in private property, we have a double claim to compensation. The colonies cannot be cultivated by free negroes for the benefit of the present proprietors; and God only knows what will become of the aged, the lame, the sick—what poor rates must be established to maintain them, and on whom established. The times are ominous and eventful; in this land perhaps our chief (though slender) security is, the general inability from drought to raise provisions equal to the support of the negroes.

Ere this you will have heard of the insurrection in Demerara, said to have been instigated by the Methodists, and you will hear of an expedition said to be preparing at St. Domingo for the capture and emancipation of Jamaica. The number of slaves in this colony are 31,064; free (coloured and black) 3,905; while the white inhabitants amount only to 1980, as appears by the census taken in 1821. We have in contemplation to reduce our colonial taxes, which amount now to near 40,000l. and are a heavy imposition on us; feeling that if our colonies are no longer worth the consideration of Government this expenditure may be saved; and the getting rid of these expences will in some measure indemnify us for the partial 4s per cent duty with which we are shackled.

If emancipation is indeed contemplated, it is neither liberal nor wise to keep back the nature of the compensation to be offered; and at the same time to excite the feelings of the slaves; a compensation which, to be just, may in some degree be calculated from the fact that Government now pay 60l. sterling per head, even for the raw slaves captured in Spanish vessels. But here again, a great want of local knowledge is apparent; I will venture to say that your negroes would not change their condition with the labouring classes in England notwithstanding all their boasted freedom; they have no cares, rich or well they want for nothing, and live in a state of happiness and comfort, which will cease with the boon of Emancipation. These truths, (were truths the object of the Saints) would be easily confirmed or refuted. But enough of this subject for the present, I am, &c. &c.

Extract of a letter from Demerara, dated 22d October:—

"I beg to correct an error in my letter of the 18th—For 'Domburg' read 'Bendorf.'—The buildings were entirely burned down on the night of the 7th inst. Two or three fires have happened in different parts of the colony, but nothing like contrivance has been traced.

"A considerable sensation has been occasioned in the minds of the public from the poisoning of the wife of Joe—(the man who gave the information of the revolt.)—but all that is certain is, that she died by arsenic; by whom, or how administered, is buried in the deepest obscurity. Another circumstance of an alarming nature has occurred on Leguan Plantation. Dorenbasg provided dinner for the militia guard some few days ago; the dinner, ready cooked, was sent to the guard at Bachelors' Adventure; every one who ate of the dinner (17 in number), was seized with violent vomiting about three hours afterwards. An investigation of the circumstance has taken place, and though nothing conclusive as to the guilty party has come out: there is no doubt but a foul attempt has been made to poison.

"These circumstances have tended to keep up an excitement in the colony, which was dying away, and must have an effect in prolonging the necessity for martial law, and in putting all upon their guard not to place too implicit confidence any where."

On Thursday morning, Mr. Krouse, the extra Messenger, arrived at the Foreign Office, Downing-street, with despatches from Sir William A'Court, in Spain.

The building in the King's old Palace, known as the office for the Board of Green Cloth, is about to be pulled down forthwith, to complete the new arrangements for his Majesty holding his Courts there.

On Friday, the Gentlemen appointed to be Consuls at South America received their final instructions from Mr. Planta, the Under Secretary of State, in the absence of Mr. Secretary Canning, who is confined to his house with an attack of the gout. The Gentlemen were to sail yesterday, on board his Majesty's ship Cambridge, from Portsmouth.

The Commission of Lunacy against Sir Gregory Page Turner was opened on Friday. Various acts which evidently shewed that his mind was in an unsound state were proved—such as dressing like a beggar, wearing his clothes for an unusual length of time, so that violence was necessarily resorted to for their removal from his person, and were only useful to the gardener, who nailed his trees against the wall with shreds of the cloth; he would then send for these shreds, to be preserved by him as curiosities; every shirt had holes cut in it; in the absence of scissors or knife, he would effect his purpose with his fingers; that his bed was dirty and loathsome; in short, that his conduct, in every respect, was what it could not have been in a person of sound mind. The Jury returned a verdict of Lunacy.

On Friday a labouring man was drinking at the Three Tuns public-house, Thames-street, where he received change for a sovereign, which he placed in his breeches pocket, and, being intoxicated, fell asleep; on his awaking, and not finding his money, he charged one Pugh with having robbed him, and a quarrel ensuing, a scuffle took place, when the unfortunate man staggered off the curb-stone at the moment a waggon, laden with iron, was passing, the fore-wheel of which going over his chest, crushed him in so dreadful a manner, that he died on his way to the Hospital.

On Sunday morning a fire broke out at Liverpool, which consumed the premises of Mr. Benson, grocer, the corner of Castle-street, and damaged two or three of the adjoining houses in Derby-square.

PUBLIC CHARACTERS; comprising Memoirs of all the Eminent Personages now living, who are distinguished by Rank, Fame, or Talent. By EDWARD NEWTON, Esq. Embellished with Portraits.

ADDRESS.—In our announcement of these Memoirs of Public Characters, we put it necessary to state, shortly, the leading features that will distinguish them: these are, fidelity in execution, and firm but temperate conduct in our future. To accomplish the first of these objects, much pains have been taken, and long preparation made: and for the second, our own security against unkind feelings will be the best pledge we can give for keeping within the bounds of proper but free discussion. How far the work will meet with a favourable reception from the public, must be left to time; but on our part, we shall study to deserve its favour, by devoting our best attention to the objects of it.—London: printed for A. Whellier, Mitre-court, Ely-place, Holborn; and sold by all booksellers in the united kingdom.

PROSPECTUS of a Work, to be entitled ASTRONOMICAL and OTHER TABLES; calculated and compiled for the purpose of facilitating computations in NAVIGATION and NAUTICAL ASTRONOMY. By THOMAS LYNN, Late Commander in the Service of the Honourable East India Company, and Examiner (appointed by the Honourable Court of Directors) of the officers of that Service; Author of "The Improved system of Telegraphic Communication," "Star Tables," and "Solar Tables," and Teacher of Navigation and Nautical Astronomy.

The Work will contain upwards of 900 pages royal octavo, 650 of which are already printed. The Tables will consist of about 750 pages very closely printed. The remaining pages will be occupied by a copious explanation and exemplification of the Tables. The unprecedented advantages of these Tables consist in their extension, and in the facility of their application. The proportional parts for seconds, or the converse operation, by means of sexagesimal tables and cotidianes, are thereby taken out by inspection, for the Sines, Tangents, and Secants, and for several other Tables, without the tedious necessity of calculation; whilst the logarithms retain their common form and means of application, and may be so employed when precision is not required.

In addition to the principal matter published in the "Tables Requisite to be used with the Nautical Almanac," by the late Dr. Maskelyne, Astronomer Royal, this Work will contain the following:—Tables of Refraction adapted to different states of the atmosphere—Tables of the joint corrections, on account of the Dip of the Horizon, Refraction, Semidiameter, and Parallax, to be applied to the observed altitudes of the Sun, Moon, and Stars, to obtain immediately their true or apparent altitudes at different elevations of the eye—Tables of the exact apparent time when the Sun's lower limb is observed to touch the visible horizon—Table of the true altitudes of the Sun and Stars at the 2nd, 3rd, and 4th hours from the meridian, from 60 deg. North to 60 deg. South Latitude, for the purpose of facilitating the determination of the longitude by Chronometers, as well as for obtaining the approximate time at the ship with little or no calculation—a Table of the apparent time at the ship, or hour angles of the Sun or Stars, at every even degree of Altitude from 3 deg. to 60 deg. in Latitude 51 deg. 13 min. 30 sec. N., corresponding to the parallel of Deal Castle, for the purpose of readily examining the rates of chronometers, when in sight of that station—Table of Proportional Logarithms for 12 hours, and for 24 hours, by which the corresponding proportions of the motions of the heavenly bodies, for any intermediate time, are most easily and accurately reduced from the first, second, third, or fourth—Table of Sines and Tangents to every second of the first two degrees—Tables of Half-elapsed time, Middle-time, and Rising to every second, for six hours in the first and second of these Tables, and to nine hours in the Rising, which is also extended to 12 hours for every 10 seconds above nine hours; in order to embrace the very rare but valuable case of the late Dr. Mackay, as well as those of the Rev. Dr. Brinkley, who has most kindly permitted the Author to insert them and other valuable matter in this work.

Tables VIII. and IX. of the "Requisite Tables," re-calculated (according to the new Theory of Refraction, given by Dr. Young in the Nautical Almanac,) for three different states of the atmosphere, adapted to the Temperate, Torrid, and Frigid Zones, agreeably to the Theory of the late Dr. Dunthorne—Tables for clearing the observed distance of the effect of refraction, recalculated by Mr. Lyon's Theory, and adapted to two different states of the atmosphere—Dr. Brinkley's Tables for reducing the observed distance in an elegantly concise manner, are also given for the two different states of the atmosphere, and his tables and method of finding the latitude by the altitudes of two stars, equally simple—Table of Difference of latitude and departure for every quarter point of the mariner's compass—Table of Difference of Latitude and Departure for every degree of the Arc, extended to 360 miles of distance—A General Table of Difference of Latitude and departure for degrees and quarter points, from 1 to 10,000 miles of distance—Table of Natural Versed Sines to 180 degrees, with proportional parts for seconds—Table of Meridional Parts to 90 deg., given to 100ths of a mile, to correspond with the preceding table—Table of the Computing of 61 principal fixed stars for every day of the year, with annual equations, and proportionals, to enable the navigator to take them out at one opening of the book, under any meridian for four years, which are easily adapted to future years, and afford perpetual assistance in obtaining the latitude, longitude, or variation of the compass—Table of the Meridional Altitude of the above stars of every degree of latitude, from 69° N. to 69° South, inclusive—Table of the Times when the Altitudes of Stars become observable in the twilight with the telescopes usually applied to sextants, and lately to quadrants—Table for finding the latitude by the Polar Star—Table of Equation of Equal Altitudes—Table of Equation of second differences—Tables of the Sun's Declination—Tables of the Equation of Time—Table of the Corrections of the Right Ascension of the 36 of the principal fixed stars, as given by Dr. Maskelyne, to serve for the whole century, &c. &c. A most extensive Table of the latitude and longitude of towns, harbours, capes, islands, rocks, shoals, &c. alphabetically arranged, and numbered for the convenience of ships expressing their names by telegraphic communication; with the time of high water, the number of feet it rises, and variation of the compass, principally compiled from the best authorities in the surveys of Mr. Hood, R.N., Hydrographer to the Admiralty, and of James Horsburgh, Esq. Hydrographer to the East India Company, who have kindly allowed the author to quote them. This Table is now ready for delivery, price 10s. half-bound.

The Solar Tables, the Table of Natural Sines, the Common Logarithms, the Sines and Logarithms of Angles, and the Refraction Tables for clearing the distance, with precepts and examples relating to double Altitudes, the use of the chronometer, and method of finding the true distance, (composing a part of the whole work, but distinguished therefrom by the title of "Solar Tables, &c.") will also be sold separately.

The Work has been already three years and a half in progress: the new Tables have generally been calculated by two persons, and faithfully examined by a third; the most rigid attention has been paid to avoid typographical errors; and it is humbly hoped it will be found as correct, and more extensively useful, than any work of the kind hitherto published.

As the Printing of so much Tabular Matter is very expensive, the Author has been induced to announce to his Friends, and to Navigators in general, that he will publish the Work by Subscription, Names and Subscribers to be sent to the Author. Price for the whole Work, to Subscribers, will be Thirty Shillings; excluding the Tables of Latitudes and Longitudes, One Pound; the Solar Tables, &c. as also described, Twelve Shillings,—to be paid on delivery. It will be raised to Non-Subscribers. The Author confidently hopes the Work will be ready for delivery early in the spring of 1824.

Books are now open for receiving Subscriptions, with Mr. H. Hardy, at the Bar of the Jerusalem Coffee House: Messrs. Gilberts, Opticians; at the residence of the Author, No. 148, and at Messrs. Kingsbury, Parbury, and Allen's, Booksellers, Leadenhall-Street, and R. H. Laurie, 53, Fleet-Street. Communication, by Letter or otherwise, to either place, intimating the Intention of Subscribing, with publication of Address, &c. will meet with the attention of Printed for and sold by the author, by Messrs. Kingsbury, Parbury, and Allen, and by R. H. Laurie, 53, Fleet-street. Of whom may be had, "The Star Tables of 1822 and 1823," with Annual Equations, which, by the easy application thereof, render them equally serviceable for future years. The Annual Equations for 1825 and 1826 are now at press, and will be ready for delivery in a few days. Price of the Star Tables, including Equations, 7s.

MR. LYNN is revising and altering the prefatory matter and Instructions of his Pocket Edition of the IMPROVED TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION, conformably to the late Act of Parliament, excluding the use of Pendants and the Union Jack. This little work will be found particularly convenient to commanders retiring in sight of their ships, to communicate with their officers without the use of instruments, and to assure generally. It may be used either by means of flags, or boards with numbers painted upon them, and is capable of conveying any message literally with the greatest facility. It will be ready for delivery early in January, 1824, price 10s. An Abridgment of this work will be sold for 1s. 6d.

URLING'S LACE DRESSES, 147, Strand.—Prepared for the Season an elegant and extensive variety of Tamboured and BRUSSELS DRESSES, bordered and flounced, at 50s. to 50 guineas, of splendid patterns recently imported from the Continent, also veils, scarfs, shawls, &c. with nets and laces of every kind in daily succession, which may likewise be obtained of Country Agents.—N.B. The genuine fabric, including the celebrated clear Brussels Net, is sealed with the Patentee's initials, G. F. U. and C. to detect imitations. Manufactory, Basford, Notts.

SALE by HAND, at 29, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.—Three extensive Stocks, consisting of Silk Shawls and Ribbands, the property of unfortunate manufacturers, to be sold for Cash. The quantity precludes the possibility of inserting the different prices, also to prevent the trade taking advantage; but Catalogues may be had on the premises. Unaccountable bargains may be expected—the much admired Opera Cloaks, from 5s. 6d. to 5l. The Ribbands being manufactured for the present season, are worthy any Lady's attention. A large assortment of the Bark Shawls, 2 yards wide, and 3¼ long, at 7s.—Observe, that it is 29 Henrietta-street, M. DONALD and Co.

FRENCH BEDS, CHAIRS, &c.—The increasing demand for FRENCH BEDS, has induced C. MILLS (from Messrs. Gillows) to devote particular attention to the manufacture of them; an extensive assortment are now on SALE at Regent Park House, 77, High-street, Marylebone, at 60s. to 60l.; 20 dozen chairs of the best description, 2-3rds of them covered in morocco; chairs for bed rooms from 4s. 6d.; dining tables, 15 feet long, on four legs only; library, sofa chairs, and tables, covered with morocco; several sets of tables in rosewood and zebra, which, from the peculiarity of his purchases, can offer every article at 2-3rds of the usual credit prices.

IMPROVED SPECTACLES.—G. SCOTT, Optical and Mathematical Instrument Maker, removed from Butcher Hall-lane to 98, Newgate-street, invites inspection to his extensive and superior assortment of SPECTACLES, adapted, with the greatest accuracy, to near and distant sight. Also a great variety of glasses for the assistance and protection of weak sight. Persons should observe, that using improper glasses, or neglecting their use when requisite, are both hurtful to the eyes, and equally to the absurd notion of glasses being adapted to the age of the person.—☞ A general assortment of Optical and Mathematical Instruments of the best workmanship on the lowest terms.

SMOKY FIRE PLACES REMEDIED.—W. and M. FEETHAM, No. 9, Ludgate-hill, and 296 Oxford-street, beg leave to inform the Public, that they undertake to remedy the above evil, and by long practice and attention to this important object, with experienced and careful workmen, they can effectually REMEDY every description of SMOKY ROOMS, with little or no inconvenience to the family during the process. W. and M. F. beg the Public's attention to their Warm Air Stoves, with an increased draft, for halls, large rooms, &c. Likewise Warm Baths, on a convenient and approved plan, and their Attemperating Shower Bath, by the King's Patent.

LATEST NEWS.

There were no arrivals yesterday from the continent, but a Brazil mail reached down, which contains a despatch from General de Llina e Silva, stating, that an attempt at insurrection had been made at Bahia, but it failed.

RIO DE JANEIRO, OCT. 21.—The Diario contains a despatch from Gen. I. de Lima e Silva, the Commander-in-Chief, dated from his head-quarters at Bahia, Sept. 16, in which he says that on the 4th, 5th, and 6th of that month he had been fired upon, by some evil-minded persons, to cause a revolution in that city; they had first endeavoured to excite jealousy between the troops of the country and the battalion of the Emperor. The General concerted measures with the Provisional Government, by means of which the malecontents were alarmed, seeing their evil intentions were known, and order was preserved. The General had wished the troops of the line to be sent away till they could be embarked for Rio, and proposed to lay down his command; but the Provisional Government begged him not to do, and seeing that the danger was passed, he had retained it.

THE ARMY.—A detachment belonging to the 46th regiment of foot has received orders to embark forthwith on board the Castle Forbes, in the River Thames, for York, for the purpose of conveying convicts to New South Wales. A detachment of recruits marched yesterday from the recruiting department at Westminster, for Winchester, where the head quarters of the 95th regt. (now raising) is at present stationed. A detachment of the 65th regiment has arrived at Glasgow; another detachment is expected to arrive there to-morrow.

A murder was committed last week, at Alford, in Lincolnshire, on Sarah Arrowsmith, by John Smith, servant to Mr. Ancient, a farmer. The unfortunate woman had a child by Smith three years ago, and was pregnant by him again; Smith left a bag of flour for her, in which was some arsenic: she made the flour into cakes, and ate some herself, and died in a few days. Smith has been committed for trial on the Coroner's Inquest, for Wilful Murder.

An attempt was made a few nights since to assassinate W. Jones, Esq. of Tycoch, near Carnarvon. He had left the house for the stable, about eight o'clock, when some person fired a pistol at him, which passed through his hat, and afterwards closed with him, and struck him on the head with his pistol. Mr. Jones was stunned, and then the villain attempted to stab him: in the attempt he cut Mr. Jones's finger and the breast of his coat. He made his escape.

At the Admiralty Sessions yesterday, John Castle was indicted for maliciously cutting Captain Clarke, of the George the Fourth East Indiamen. The charge was clearly proved, and the Jury found him Guilty.—But recommended him to mercy, in which they were joined by the prosecutor.

Captain Little, of the Maide, was tried for firing a loaded pistol at John Mason. The deceased and some of the other seamen had made an attack upon Capt. Little in his cabin, who fired in defence of his life; and Baron Garrow directed the Jury to acquit the prisoner.

The universal patronage of the Nobility and Gentry which Jeremy and Bragg have experienced for a series of years, has been a great excitement for them to excel in various productions of British manufacture. They beg strongly to recommend to families about to furnish, their much improved quality of Patent Merino Damask; also, their Imperial Cachmere Chintz, equal in appearance to Painted Velvet, and very little more expensive than common cotton chintz. To be seen only at 29 and 29, Southampton-street, Covent Garden.—☞ Transparent Window Blinds, of various patterns and all sizes.

BONAPARTE'S White Bach Charger is now exhibiting in Pall Mall. He is the most perfect horse, as to symmetry, blood, bone, and beauty; and by some of our first rate judges supposed to be the largest horse for his height in England. He is well known by officers who have seen him in battle; has seven discernible wounds, and a bullet in his tail. He is about 20 years of age, and as free as a five year old. The superb saddle and bridle, which the late Emperor wore are also worn, and his boots. The person who exhibits the horse is well acquainted with the movements of the late Emperor, and speaks six different languages.

RECTIFIED SPERM OIL, 4s. 6d. per gallon.—UPTON and Co. oilmen and colour manufacturers, 64, Queen street, Cheapside, most respectfully acquaint the public, that by a process entirely new, they are enabled to sell a Sperm Oil so highly rectified, as to equal in purity spirits of wine. This oil being, in the first instance, of the finest quality, and afterwards completely cleansed from every impurity, there is no waste, and its flame is equal in brilliancy to the best gas, with the superior strength and steadiness of an oil light. So unequivocal is its excellence, that it will burn well in every kind of lamp.—N. B. Other Lamp Oil, from 2s. 3d. to 3s. 9d. per gallon; Linseed Oil, 2s. 6d. and Turpentine, 5s. per gallon: White Lead, 36s. per cwt. and refined Coal Tar Paint, 15s. which quantity will cover 1000 square feet.

HIS MAJESTY'S late restoration to health is attributed to an advertised remedy, called "King's Stomach Medicine," to which, it is said, there are added certain dietetic Rules for Breakfast, Dinner, and Supper, as they have lately been observed by his Majesty with such signal success.

BURGESS'S NEW SAUCE for general purposes, having given much great approbation, and the demand for it continuing to increase JOHN BURGESS and SON beg most respectfully to offer this their first acknowledgments to the Public for their liberal patronage of the same: its utility and great convenience in all climates, has recommended it to the most distinguished foreign connexions, who have allspoken highly in its recommendation.—It is prepared by them ONLY; and for preventing disappointments to families, all possible care has been resorted to, by each bottle being sealed upon the cork with their firm and address, as well as each label having their signature, without which it cannot be genuine.

JOHN BURGESS & SON'S long established and much-esteemed ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES, continues to be prepared by them after the same manner that has given the greatest satisfaction for many years.—Warehouse, 107, Strand, corner of the Savoy-steps, London.—The original Fish-Sauce Warehouse

HOWSE and CORBETT'S ANODYNE EXPECTORANT LOZENGES, are recommended by the Faculty as a most invaluable Medicine to persons having Coughs, Colds, Asthmas, Sore Throats, &c. &c. They remove all fever attending these complaints, cause a gentle expectoration, and by lubricating the throat and fauces, take off all that irritation which excites violent coughing, consequently are very much used by persons visiting large assemblies, or places of divine worship. They are so innocent that they are frequently dissolved in warm water and given to Infants, and the Proprietors are daily receiving testimonials of their efficacy.—Prepared only, and sold Wholesale and Retail, by Howse and Corbett, Chemists, 16, Tichborne-street, Haymarket; Agents, Sayer, 150, Oxford-street; Hawkins, 11, Old Bond-street; Sutton and Co. 127, Holborn; Ward, 324, Holborn; Prout, 226, Strand; Strading, Royal Exchange; Pink, 65, High-street, Borough; and most other respectable Medicine Venders.—Boxes 13½d. each, or three in one 2s. 6d.

IMPORTANT INFORMATION.—The most invaluable discoveries are frequently opposed in their progress to celebrity by prejudice and unbelief. The amateurs of personal attraction are earnestly invited to a proof of unparalleled excellence, by the use of ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, a cosmetic of vital importance to the support of female loveliness. Powerful of effect, yet mild of influence, this admirable specific possesses balsamic properties of surprising energy. It eradicates freckles, pimples, spots, redness, and all cutaneous eruptions, gradually producing a delicately clear, soft skin; transforms even the most sallow complexion into radiant whiteness; resists the scorching rays of the sun; successfully opposes the attack of inclement weather, and renders the harsh and rough skin beautifully soft, smooth, and even; imparts to the neck, face, and arms a healthy and juvenile bloom; diffuses a pleasing coolness; and, by due perseverance in the application, it soon produces a beautiful complexion. The Kalydor is equally unsurpassed in the nursery as at the toilet. Perfectly innoxious, it may be used by the most delicate lady with the assurance of safety and efficacy. To mothers nursing their offspring imparts soothing and succour, enhances maternal pleasure in the act of administering alimentary nourishment. To gentlemen whose faces are tender after shaving; a great infelicity which attends the operation of shaving is the irritation of the skin, many gentlemen suffer greatly from this cause. Rowland's Kalydor will be found excellent beyond precedent in ameliorating and allaying that most unpleasant sensation.—This beautiful production is Patronized by the Princess Esterhazy, the Persian Ambassador, and recommended by the most eminent of the faculty.—Sold in pint bottles, at 4s. 6d. and in half pints, at 4s. 6d. each, duty included, by the sole Proprietors, A. ROWLAND and SON, No. 20, Hatton garden, Holborn, London; and, by appointment, by most perfumers and Medicine Venders, who vend their celebrated MACASSAR OIL.

Observe. None are genuine without the signature—"A. Rowland and Son."

ARTICLES FOR THE TOILET.—ATKINSON'S CONCENTRATED ESSENCE of LAVENDER, being six times the strength of the best Lavender Water, and imparting a more fragrant, permanent, and genuine perfume of that admired flower, this Essence is entirely freed from that unpleasant Empyreuma of common Lavender, and is far more economical. A pint at 10s. 6d. containing more perfume and going much farther than six pints of the best Lavender water, price 3s. 6d. 5s. 6d. and 10s. 6d. ATKINSON'S CURLING FLUID, or Vegetative Hair Oil, advised to be the most elegant article ever invented for moistening the hair in dressing, it makes the hair, however harsh, soft and glossy as silk, and keeps it in curl, in exercise, or in damp weather, price 3s. 6d. ATKINSON'S VEGETABLE DYE, changes Grey or Red Hair on the Head or Whiskers to a permanent Brown or Black, price 5s. 10s. 6d. and One Guinea. Agents for HUDSON'S ODONTANIC TOOTH POWDER and TINCTURE, which, if used regularly will entirely supersede the necessity of a dentist, they are remedies for all disorders of the mouth, they not merely cleanse and beautify the teeth, but preserve them from decay to the latest period in life, they make the teeth white, fasten such as are loose, remove the Tartar and Scurvy from the Gums, and are an infallible remedy for the Tooth-ache, price 2s. 9d. Sold by JAMES ATKINSON, Perfumer, 44, Gerrard-street, Soho-square, London, and by most perfumers, Hair-dressers, and Medicine Venders in Town and Country.—CAUTION.—As there are numerous Counterfeits, the Proprietors' signature and address is on the label.

MESSRS. SAINSBURY and Co. Literary, Clerical, Scholastic, and General Agents, impressed with gratitude for the liberal share of public patronage they enjoy, beg leave to return their thanks to the reverend the clergy, the noblemen, and gentlemen for whom they have had the honour of being employed, and also the proprietors of schools for both sexes, and to inform them that they still continue to execute every branch of respectable agency, on moderate and previously stated terms, making no charge whatever unless for services actually performed. Clerical and Scholastic Prospectuses gratis. Letters must be free of postage. No. 11, Bells-buildings, Salisbury-square, Fleet-street.

AT a MEETING of the MAGISTRATES, FREEHOLDERS, and other Inhabitants of the Parish of ST. GEORGE, held this 21st day of October, 1823, at the Court-house, at Buff Bay, the following Resolutions were unanimously adopted—ROBERT GRAY, Esq. in the Chair.

Resolved—That the present state of the Island more peremptorily calls for the serious consideration of its inhabitants than at any former period, it being now necessary to debate on matters affecting the peace, happiness, and prosperity of the Colonies, in consequence of the proceedings of a party of men in the mother country, whose objects of late, and for years, have invariably been directed in too glaring a manner to the destruction of the white population inhabiting the West Indies (though under professions of a far different nature) to be denied or mistaken.

Resolved—That we conceive it our duty to call on the Colonial Legislatures to use their best endeavours, by every Constitutional means, to open the eyes of the British Parliament and nation to the true condition of these colonies.

Resolved—That this Meeting look up with undiminished confidence to his Majesty's Government (notwithstanding the designs of the African Institution,) being well assured that its desire to keep off "a great burden from the country" will never prompt measures calculated to overwhelm any part of his Majesty's dominions with certain ruin, under any specious pretext of philanthropy, but will guard "the just interests" of those who, by no fault of their own—who by inheritance or purchase, repeated Acts of Parliament, and the encouragement of the Legislature, were induced to risque greater hazards of climate and capital than could be known to persons not placed in their situation.

Resolved—That this meeting, after serious reflection, cannot look upon the attempt to render the slaves of the Colonies (as it is pretended) a happy and industrious free peasantry by ill-digested emancipation, in any other light than as a delusion, intended to interest the people of Great Britain in the cause against the Planter.

Resolved—That we are disposed at all times to revere the wishes of our protectors, and to cement the union that allies us to them by all reasonable means in our power; that therefore no inducement or examples shall entice us to risk that good will and regard which it should be our study to cultivate, by entering into hasty or ill-timed resolutions, declaratory of threats or intentions to despise or oppose the recommendation of measures, which emanate beyond dispute from the legal and constitutional power of Parliament.

Resolved—That any attempt on the part of the Imperial Parliament to interfere with the colonial internal legislation, will be an infringement of our charter, an unconstitutional evasion of our privileges as British subjects, and will, we trust, be resisted with remonstrances, respectful but firm, by the Honourable the House of Assembly, in whose exertions and wisdom we fully confide.

Resolved—That this Meeting having an anxious desire to promote the comfort, happiness, and intelligence of the slaves, call upon the Honourable the House of Assembly, not to relax in its endeavours to attain these desirable ends, but to review, from time to time, as it has been wont so to do, our Slave Code, and to introduce such amendments as may be required therein.

Resolved—That copies of these Resolutions be delivered to our Members, and their attention requested to the consideration of them.

Resolved—That these Resolutions be published twice in the Royal and St. Jago de la Vega Gazettes, the Cornwall Chronicle; and the Courier, John Bull, and Morning Chronicle London newspapers.

Resolved—That the thanks of this Meeting be given to his Honour the Custos, for having convened the same.

Resolved—That our Chairman be requested to sign these Resolutions, and to accept our thanks for his able and impartial conduct in the Chair.

ROBERT GRAY.

ST. ELIZABETH'S, JAMAICA, Oct. 19, 1823.

AT a general MEETING of the INHABITANTS of this Parish, held this day in the Court-House, Black River, conformably to a special requisition. DUNCAN ROBERTSON, Esq. in the Chair.

It was unanimously resolved—That it is our duty, in conjunction with our fellow colonists, to avow our opinion of the hostile proceedings lately adopted towards us in the House of Commons, and thus publicly to express our fixed determination to resist by every constitutional means, any attempt that may be made to interfere with our rights.

That we view with just indignation the unmanly compromise of the Ministers of the Crown, by which our properties, nay, our lives, are put in jeopardy.

That the representations of the African Institution, which have had such weight with the House of Commons, are unfounded; the treatment of our slaves being characterised by humanity, and a paternal care, which do not forsake them, even when rendered useless by age or incurable disease.

That a progressive improvement in the morals of our slaves is evident, and that we will, at all times, willingly embrace any rational measures, civil as well as religious, for their welfare; but that we will withstand the wild efforts of enthusiasts or self-interested individuals.

That, in the House of Assembly, as composed of our Constitutional Representatives, is vested the sole right of legislating for us; and that we rely on its wisdom, energy, and firmness, to adopt such measures as will secure to us our constitution, our properties, and our rights.

That, James Daly, Hugh R. Wallace, Michael Cuff, John Salmon, jun. and David Morlice, Esqrs. be appointed a Committee for the purpose of corresponding with the other parishes; and, with the co-operation of Committees which may be there appointed, to communicate throughout the West Indies, and with the West India Proprietors in the mother-country.

That the Committee be authorised to publish these resolutions in such English papers as they may think proper, and that the same be published in the county papers of this Island for one month.

That the Chairman be requested to sign these Resolutions.

(Signed) DUNCAN ROBERTSON.

Duncan Robertson, Esq. having left the Chair, and James Daly, Esq. having been called thereto, it was resolved, That the thanks of this meeting be given to D. Robertson, Esq. for his impartial and patriotic conduct in the Chair.

ST. JAMES'S, Oct. 13, 1823.

AT a numerous and respectable MEETING of the FREEHOLDERS and other Inhabitants of the Parish of St. James, this day convened at the Court-house, Montego-Bay: the Honourable SAMUEL VAUGHAN in the Chair.

At a period unparalleled in the history of Jamaica, driven almost to ruin by the attempt of the mother country to interfere in the legislation of the internal affairs of the Colonies, threatening to deprive us of our property, and expose us to the lamentable consequences of a servile war, We, the Inhabitants of St. James's, to the lamentable consequences of a servile war, We, the Inhabitants of St. James's, feel ourselves called on to meet and publish to the world the expression which our present situation cannot fail to produce.

Resolved—That we inherit from our ancestors the rights and privileges of Britons; and when we see attempts made, both openly and covertly, to deprive us of them, it is our bounden duty to declare our determination to preserve them, and hand them down inviolate to our posterity.

Resolved—That we commit to our representatives in assembly the important charge of preserving our Constitution, granted by the Charter of King Charles charge of preserving our Constitution, granted by the British Parliament.

the Second, and subsequently confirmed by the British Parliament.

Resolved—That the proceedings which have taken place in England relative to the West India Colonies are founded in falsehood, supported by calumny, and proposed to be perfected by an unheard of act of injustice. The peril to which we are exposed by this unconstitutional interference has already been evinced, by the deplorable events which have taken place in Demerara, and while such frantic projects are pursued, we are daily liable to similar outrages in the other colonies.

Resolved—That as our constitutional rights are attempted to be violated, we feel confident that our Colonial Legislature will never commit such an act of political suicide as to accede to any measures suggested by our enemies, for the accomplishment of their long desired, but now openly avowed, purpose; but will firmly resist all such interference, unless we are previously indemnified, by receiving the value of our possessions as the progressive amelioration of our Slave Laws

Resolved—That our conduct minds, that we are sincere in wishing to be must fully prove, to unprejudiced them that is consistent with their happiness and our own security; but, while we are at all times ready to afford our negroes every instruction that can enlighten their minds, improve their manners, and bring them to a state of civilization, we deprecate all interference of persons in the mother country, who, whatever motives may actuate their conduct, shew that they are perfectly ignorant of the state of the colonies, and totally incapable of directing our internal regulations.

Resolved—That these Resolutions be published one month in each of the Montego-Bay Papers, the Royal and St. Jago Gazettes, and that Mr. Allen be requested to forward them to England, for insertion four times in the Courier, John Bull, Times, and Morning Chronicle.

SAM. VAUGHAN, Chairman.

Mr. Vaughan having left the Chair, Geo. Gordon, Esq. was requested to take the same.

Resolved—That the thanks of this Meeting be given to the Hon. S. Vaughan, for his very able and impartial conduct in the Chair.

GEO. GORDON.

WANTED, in a Surveyor's Office in the Country, an ARTICLED CLERK, who will be taken into the house, and treated as one of the family. ALSO a Clerk; neatness and dispatch.—For particulars apply to Mr. Draughtsman, who must be fully competent to execute fair plans with neatness and dispatch.—For particulars apply to Mr. J. H. Holtaway, Solicitor, No. 5, Teoke's court, Chancery-lane, London; or to Messrs. Woodrow and Newton, Norwich, (if by letter, post paid).

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

BAYONNE, Dec. 16.—The regular courier has brought letters from Madrid of the 11th. The Prelates, and all the Ecclesiastics have presented a petition to the King, for the re-establishment of the Inquisition.—The King answered, that he was not yet authorised to do it by the Powers and by the Pope, from which we might infer the desire of doing it. The Duke of San Fernando has been banished to his estates, for having refused the embassy which was offered him. The corps of Quesada is going to be disbanded. It is stated from Alicant, that though the capitulation says there shall be a French garrison, the Spanish General Sempere will command, which displeases the inhabitants. General Sempere has placed a piece of cannon at his gate, and never goes out without an escort of cavalry. Accounts from Xeres de la Fontera, of the 3d, say that the two parties are continually engaged, all over the country. The Constitutionalists arrest, plunder, and kill the Serviles, who take their revenge when they are in force; 19 patriots were lately taken out and shot, they died crying "the Constitution for ever!" The intriguing party exert all their efforts at Court, to prevent the King from issuing an amnesty, on which, however, he does not seem to think any more. The courier of the army, who comes three times a week, will henceforth come only once; so that our correspondence will be carried on in the same manner as before the war.

MADRID, Dec. 12.—The Minister of War will publish a Decree of his Majesty, by which all the officers of the army nominated by the King, and who have retired since the 7th of March, 1820, shall receive full pay; but that the officers appointed by the Constitutional Government shall have but one-third.

According to advices from Monte-Video, received by way of Buenos Ayres, a Brazilian squadron, consisting of one frigate, one corvette, two brigs, and three schooners, had arrived off the former place, for the purpose of blockading it. General Lecor, the Brazilian commander, had, in consequence, moved to be near to the town with his troops, and an united effort was about to be made for the expulsion of the Portuguese.

BERLIN, Dec. 12.—A Royal Cabinet Order decrees, that in future not only all military works and military journals, but also all passages relative to military affairs, occurring in either work, shall be subjected to a particular censorship, which is confided to the General Staff, under the direction of Baron Muffling, who is at the head of it.

UNITED STATES.—OPENING OF CONGRESS.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 1.—The first session of the Eighteenth Congress has commenced with great harmony. A large majority of the members of both houses appeared in their respective chambers this day, precisely at 12 o'clock. In the Senate, Mr. Gaillard took the chair. Messrs. Barbour and Macon were appointed on the part of the Senate, to wait upon the President, jointly, with a committee from the House of Representatives, and inform him of the organization of the two houses. In the House of Representatives, 181 members appeared in their respective seats. Mr. Clay has so long filled the Speaker's chair, and given such unusual satisfaction, that the moment it was known that his health was such as to permit him to resume the station, there was a general disposition to elect him again to the same honourable place. Accordingly, when the roll of members had been called over, Mr. Taylor, of New York, declined being considered a candidate. Mr. Lathrop, of Massachusetts, and Mr. Rankin, of Mississippi, were appointed tellers. On counting the ballots, it appeared that 181 members had voted, and that Mr. Clay had 139 votes.

A message was then sent from the President, of which the following are the leading topics. It begins with stating—

"Many important subjects will claim your attention during the present session, of which I shall endeavour to give, in aid of your deliberations, a just idea in this communication. I undertake this duty with diffidence, from the vast extent of the interests on which I have to treat, and of their great importance to every portion of our Union."

After some immaterial observations, he then says:—

"The Commissioners under the fifth article of the treaty of Ghent, having disagreed in their opinions respecting that portion of the boundary between the territories of the United States and Great Britain, the establishment of which had been submitted to them, have made their respective reports. A proposal has been made by this government, and acceded to by Great Britain, to endeavour to establish that boundary by amicable negociation. A negociation has been opened with the British Government, which it is hoped will have a satisfactory result. The Commissioners under the sixth and seventh articles of the treaty of Ghent, having successfully closed their labours in relation to the sixth, have proceeded to the discharge of those relating to the seventh. Their progress in the extensive survey required for the performance of their duties, justifies the presumption that it will be completed in the ensuing year. The negociation which had been long depending with the French Government on several important subjects, and particularly for a just indemnity for losses sustained in the late wars by the citizens of the United States, under unjustifiable seizures and confiscations of their property, has not, as yet, had the desired effect. As this claim rests on the same principle with others which have been admitted by the French Government, it is not perceived on what just grounds it can be rejected. A Minister will be immediately appointed to France, and resume the negociation on this and other subjects which may arise between the two nations. At the proposal of the Russian Imperial Government, made through the minister of the Emperor residing here, a full power and instructions have been transmitted to the Minister of the United States at St. Petersburgh, to arrange, by amicable negociation, the respective rights and interests of the two nations on the north west coast of this continent. A similar proposal has been made by his Imperial Majesty to the Government of Great Britain, which has likewise been acceded to. In the discussions to which this interest has given rise, and in the arrangements by which they may terminate, the occasion has been judged proper for asserting as a principle in which the rights and interests of the United States are involved, that the American continents, by the free and independent condition which they have assumed and maintain, are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for future colonization by any European power."

On the subject of the Slave Trade the President says: "In compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives, adopted at their last session, instructions have been given to all the ministers of the United States accredited to the powers of Europe and America, to propose the proscriptions of the African slave trade, by classing it under the denomination, and inflicting on the perpetrators the punishment of piracy. Should this proposal be acceded to, it is not doubted but this odious and criminal practice will be promptly and entirely suppressed. It is earnestly hoped that it will be acceded to, from a firm belief that it is the most effectual expedient that can be adopted for the purpose."

The message then notices the necessity of abolishing privateering, and suggests to the European Powers to put a stop to the practice. It then says, "The Minister appointed to Spain proceeded, soon after his appointment, for Cadiz, the residence of the sovereign to whom he was accredited. In approaching that port, the frigate which conveyed him was warned off by the Commander of the French squadron by which it was blockaded, and not permitted to enter, although apprized by the captain of the frigate, of the public character of the person whom he had on board, the landing of whom was the sole object of his proposed entry. This act, being considered an infringement of the rights of ambassadors and of nations, will form a just cause of complaint to the Government of France against the officer by whom it was committed. A strong hope has been entertained, founded on the heroic struggle of the Greeks, that they would succeed in their contest, and resume their equal station among the nations of the earth. It is believed that the whole civilized world take a deep interest in their favour, yet none, according to our information, has taken part against them. Their cause and their name have protected them from dangers, which might, ere this, have overwhelmed any other people. The ordinary calculations of interest, and of acquisition, with a view to aggrandisement, which mingle so much in the transactions of nations, seem to have had no effect in regard to them. From the facts which have come to our knowledge, there is good cause to believe that their enemy has lost for ever all dominion over them—that Greece will become again an independent nation. That she may obtain that rank is the object of our most ardent wishes."

With respect to the internal state of America, and the resources of its government, it states that:—"During the fourth quarter of the year, it is estimated that the receipts will, at least, equal the expenditures, and that there will remain in the Treasury, on the 1st day of January next, a surplus of nearly 9,000,000 dollars. On the 1st of January, 1825, a large amount of the war debt, and a part of the revolutionary debt, become redeemable. Additional portions of the former will continue to become redeemable annually until the year 1835. It is believed however that if the United States remain in peace, the whole of that debt may be redeemed by the ordinary revenue of those years during that period under the provision of the act of March 3rd, 1817, creating a sinking fund, and in that case the only part of the debt that will remain after the year 1835, will be seven millions of five per cent. stock subscribed to the Bank of the United States, and the three per cent. revolutionary debt, amounting to thirteen millions two hundred and ninety-six thousand and ninety-nine dollars and six cents, both of which are redeemable at the pleasure of the Government. The state of the army, in its organization and discipline, has been gradually improving for several years, and has now attained a high degree of perfection."

Reverting to the state of Cuba, it says:—"Although our expedition, co-operating with an invigorated administration of the government of the Island of Cuba, and with the corresponding active exertions of a British naval force in the same seas, have almost entirely destroyed the unlicensed piracies from that island, the success of our exertions has not been equally effectual to suppress the same crime, under other pretences and colour, in the neighbouring Island of Porto Rico. They have been committed there under the abusive issue of Spanish commissions. At an early period of the present year, remonstrances were made to the Governor of that Island, by an agent who was sent for the purpose, against those outrages on the peaceful commerce of the United States, of which many had occurred. That officer professing his own want of authority to make satisfaction for our just complaints, answered only by a reference of them to the Government of Spain. The Minister of the United States to that Court was specially instructed to urge the necessity of the immediate and effectual interposition of that Government, directing restitution and indemnity for wrongs already committed, and interdicting the repetition of them. The Minister, as has been seen, was debarred access to the Spanish Government, and in the meantime, several new cases of flagrant outrage have occurred, and citizens of the United States in the Island of Porto Rico have suffered, and others been threatened with assassination, for asserting their unquestionable rights, even before the lawful tribunals of the country. The usual orders have been given to all our public ships to seize American vessels engaged in the slave trade, and bring them in for adjudication, and I have the gratification to state, that not one so employed has been discovered, and there is good reason to believe that our flag is now seldom, if at all, disgraced by that traffic."

It then eulogizes the state of the United States Navy, and notices the different official branches of the government, and then says:—"The late events in Spain and Portugal show that Europe is still unsettled. Of this important fact, no stronger proof can be adduced, than that the Allied Powers should have thought it proper, on any principle satisfactory to themselves, to have interposed, by force, in the internal concerns of Spain. To what extent such interposition may be carried, on the same principle, is a question in which all independent powers, whose governments differ from theirs, are interested; even those most remote, and surely none more so than the United States. Our policy, in regard to Europe, which was adopted at an early stage of the wars which have so long agitated that quarter of the globe, nevertheless remains the same, which is, not to interfere in the internal concerns of any of its powers—to consider the government de facto as the legitimate government for us; to cultivate friendly relations with it, and to preserve those relations, by a frank, firm, and manly policy, meeting, in all instances, the just claims of every power; submitting to injuries from none. But, in regard to those continents circumstances are eminently and conspicuously different. It is impossible that the Allied Powers should extend their political system to any portion of either continent, without endangering our peace and happiness; nor can any one believe that our Southern brethren, if left to themselves, would adopt it of their own accord. It is equally impossible, therefore, that we should behold such interposition, in any form, with indifference. If we look to the comparative strength and resources of Spain, and those new governments, and their distance from each other, it must be obvious that she can never subdue them. It is still the true policy of the United States to leave the parties to themselves, in the hope that other powers will pursue the same course.

"If we compare the present condition of our Union, with its actual state at the close of our revolution, the history of the world furnishes no example of a progress in improvement in all the important circumstances which constitute the happiness of a nation, which bears any resemblance to it. At the first epoch, our population did not exceed 3,000,000. By the last census it amounted to about 10,000,000, and, what is more extraordinary, it is almost altogether native—for the emigration from other countries has been inconsiderable. At the first epoch, half the territory within our acknowledged limits was uninhabited and a wilderness. Since then, new territory has been acquired, of vast extent, comprising within it many rivers, particularly the Mississippi, the navigation of which, to the Ocean, was of the highest importance to the original states."

The message then concludes:—"Each Government confiding in its own strength, has less to apprehend from the other, and, in consequence, each enjoying a greater freedom of action, is rendered more efficient for all the purposes for which it was instituted. It is unnecessary to treat, here, of the vast improvement made in the system of itself, by the adoption of this constitution, and of its happy effect in elevating the character, and in protecting the rights of the nation, as well as of individuals. To what then do we owe these blessings? It is known to all, that we derive them from the excellence of our institutions. Ought we not then to adopt every measure, which may be necessary to perpetuate them?

IRELAND.

We are informed that the journeymen cotton-spinners, in a very respectable establishment, near Carrickfergus, have turned out, in order to compel the proprietor to dismiss a confidential clerk or manager from his employment. The turn out, it appears, is of so alarming a nature, that military aid has been found necessary to preserve order, and secure the safety of the premises, &c.—Belfast News Let.

KILKENNY, Dec. 20.—On Sunday last as a female was travelling in the direction of Kells, and within a field of the House of Industry, she was brutally assaulted in open day, by two miscreants, who after robbing her abused her person. The woman, who is now in the House of Correction for safety, has sworn informations of the outrage, and accurately described the persons of her assailants.—Moderator.

DUBLIN, Dec. 18.—Information was received at James's-street Police Office, that a child had been murdered in Bow-lane by its father. In consequence of which a party of police repaired to the place, and found a child named Elizabeth Mercer lying dead in a cradle, having marks of violence on its body, and one of its thighs broken. An inquest was held. After an examination of several witnesses, and on view of the body, the Jury returned the following verdict—"That the deceased, Elizabeth Mercer, came by her death in consequence of her father having twice thrown her out of bed on the floor, on the night of Friday the 12th inst.; and they also found, that the father had been in the habit of ill-using her." Information having been regularly sworn, Mercer was committed to abide his trial at the next Commission.

The Dublin Evening Post says, that in consequence of the severe frost and snow between Dublin and Waterford, on Thursday se'nnight, the Dublin mail did not arrive in that city until one o'clock; the Waterford mail for Dublin did not arrive there until five hours after its time.

NAVY AND SHIPPING GENERALLY.

Captain E. Stewart, of the Brisk, his Purser's Clerk, and four men, were drowned on Tuesday night in the Medway, on their return in a ship's boat from Chatham to Sheerness. It is supposed that she ran foul of a buoy on the pier, and instantly sunk.

On Tuesday a Court of Directors was held at the East India House, when J. H. D. Ogilvie, Esq. was appointed provisional member of Council at Madras. Capt. Montgomerie Hamilton was sworn into the command of the ship Dunira, consigned to Bombay and China.

Mr. Matches, late master of the brig Isabella, has arrived at Carmarthen, after a series of sufferings. In October, whilst the brig was on her passage from North America to Carmarthen, laden with timber, she encountered a tremendous gale, which carried away both the masts, boats, and every article above deck, with two of the crew, leaving the survivors on the water-logged hull, without provisions of any kind, and the raging sea constantly washing over them. Three of the crew soon died from exhaustion, and the master and three others remained to endure the horrors of cold and famine. They were reduced to the horrid necessity of subsisting upon the dead bodies of their comrades for five days, till fortunately they were perceived by a vessel, and taken to St. John's, Newfoundland, where they recovered their fatigues, and the Captain of the French war brig, La Nanina, gave them a passage to St. Maloes, from whence they proceeded to Guernsey and Southampton. The master speaks in the highest terms of the humane and generous treatment they experienced from the French.—(Hereford Journal.)

The ship Margaret Ann left Miramichi on the 25th Nov. last, and on Thursday the 27th, at two P.M, discovered the wreck of the Trent, of London, off Brion Island, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. A boat was sent on board, and took from the wreck the Captain, James T. Sinclair, and three men, the only survivors of the crew. They had, from the 22d of the same month, subsisted upon a dog only, and were in a most deplorable frozen state. Capt. Sinclair complained bitterly against an inhuman being, who held a responsible situation on board a brig, named the Commerce, from Quebec, which vessel, on the 23d, had passed the wreck, then water-logged, almost within hail, and might have saved all on board. Poor Captain Sinclair lingered in pain till the 7th of December, when he departed this life, and on the 8th his body was committed to the deep. The three surviving men were, on the arrival of the Margaret Ann at this port, on the 18th inst. immediately conveyed to the Infirmary, where they will have to suffer the amputation of their legs.—Liverpool Courier.

The Lady Wellington packet, Lieut. Crosbie, arrived at Falmouth, in 43 days from Jamaica, on Thursday. Royal Gazettes to the 8th ult. have been received, and the colony was at that time in a state of tranquillity. The Hyperion, Capt. G. F. Rich, had sailed for Vera Cruz; the Icarus, Capt. Graham, for the Gulph of Florida; the brigs Albion, Capt. Lowe; the Waterloo, Capt. Partridge; and the Marquis of Wellington, Capt. Gibson, for ditto; the Gloucester, 74 guns, Capt. J. Lillecrap; Niemen, 26, Capt. E. R. Sibly; Carnation, (brig) 18, Capt. E Stopford; Helicon, (ditto) 10, Capt. W. E. Dawkins; Union, (schooner) 4, Capt. R. B. Henderson; Speedwell, ditto, 4, W. F. D. Geary Arinder; Assiduous, 3, Mr. Warren, Master, and Serapis, Lieut. G. V. Jackson.

The East India Company's under-mentioned ships passed the Straits of Sunda, on their way to China, as follows, viz.—Bombay, 12th July; Lowther Castle, 1st Aug.; Warren Hastings, 19th ditto; and Vansittart, 19th ditto.

THE ARMY AND MILITARY MATTERS.

Sir Henry Torrens, the Adjutant-General, &c. &c. inspected the 3d Battalion of the Coldstream Guards, yesterday morning, in the Birdcage Walk.—The battalion executed several movements and formations according to the improved system. The formation, from open column of grand divisions the re-formation of columns of companies—the formation of close column by wings, the re-formation of open column, the formation by wings of the diamond square, and the re-formation of open column—the wheeling into line, and the advance in line, were executed with admirable celerity and precision. The retiring, from line, from the proper right of companies, and the formation, instanter, whilst in open column of march, upon the receipt of the command—"Form solid square," that most useful manœuvre, were performed in a style exceeding all praise. The battalion received the unqualified approbation of the Adjutant-General.

The 3d division of the 23d (Royal Welch Fusileers), which embarked on board the Indian Trader, transport, sailed the 16th instant, from Cork for Gibraltar.—The 73d regt. of Foot has arrived at Portpatrick, on its route to Ireland. The regiment is, on its arrival at Donaghadee, ordered to march to Belfast. The baggage of the corps has already reached its destination. In consequence of the detention of the 73d at Portpatrick, since Thursday last by contrary winds, it is understood, that in future, the troops ordered by the same route from Scotland to Ireland, and from Ireland to Scotland, will be conveyed in steam vessels.—The two companies of the 58th Foot, which were on their march from Chester to Brighton, have halted at Reigate, till further orders.

The 12th (East Suffolk) regt. of foot, which recently sailed from Portsmouth, arrived and disembarked at Gibraltar, on the 24th of November.—The 27th (Enniskillen) regt. of infantry, on being replaced by the 12th foot, embarked at, and sailed from, Gibraltar, on the 30th of November, for the West Indies.—A detachment belonging to the Royal African Colonial corps has received orders to embark at Cowes, on board the Ann, transport, for Africa.—The 1st division of the 73d regt. of infantry, consisting of four companies, arrived in Ireland from Portpatrick, on the 20th inst. They are thus stationed—three companies are quartered at Bangor, and one company at Larne.—Three companies belonging to the 58th (Rutlandshire) regt. of foot, are ordered to march to-day (viz. one company from Brighton and two from Reigate) to Portsmouth, where they are to arrive on the 30th instant.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS' COURT.

FRIDAY.—Wm. Thomas Brashier, a journeyman fishmonger, was opposed by three tailors, named Poole, Jones, and Geddes, with whom he had contracted separate debts, amounting in the whole to 127l. and this he had done within a few days. The insolvent stated he had been journeyman to a fishmonger in Lamb's Conduit-street, at wages of 20l. a year, and there contracted debts. In 1822 he became a gentleman, got acquainted with one Durrant, a tailor, who also became a gentleman, and they travelled to Holland together—he introduced this Durrant to his opposing creditors, and they gave him credit for 56l. worth of clothes. About the same time he procured credit of them for 80l. for clothes—he also purchased a piano-forte, a gold watch, and a silver mug and cup. The tailors stated that the insolvent ordered the most fashionable clothes, among the rest there was a great coat of the best cloth, finest pearl buttons, collar and cuffs covered with fur, and the coat lined throughout with silk!—The Court expressed in severe terms its opinion of the insolvent's conduct, and ordered him to be confined for twelve months within the walls of the prison of the King's Bench.

SUSSEX ASSIZES.

Edmund Bourke, Esq. Captain and Adjutant of the Sussex Local Militia, was indicted for feloniously and maliciously shooting at and wounding William Robins, at Lewes, on the 3d of October last.—[The particulars of this case have already been published.]—The prisoner, who had voluntarily surrendered to take his trial, put in a written paper, in which he stated shortly that his gun went off accidentally; that he had no intention of firing at the prosecutor; and that he would have paid the prosecutor's bill for surgical assistance, and have made him a liberal compensation; but as the prosecutor had determined to prosecute him to the death, he was resolved that the case should take its course.—Mr. Coomber was then examined. He saw nothing of the commencement of the transaction. After it was over, the prisoner seemed concerned for what had happened, which he said was merely an accident, and urged the prosecutor to go along with him immediately to get surgical aid, but the prosecutor positively refused. Several witnesses were called to contradict the prosecutor in collateral particulars. It was proved in his original deposition, he had deposed that Mr. Bourke first spoke to the two men above mentioned; that he had then described those men as his companions; and that he had been seen in their company the day before.—Dr. Blair, of Brighton, deposed that he had examined the prosecutor's wound, and in his opinion it could not have been inflicted by a gun being presented in the ordinary way, by placing the butt-end against the fleshy part of the shoulder, but must have been held lower down, as if carried in the hand. A great many witnesses were in attendance to give the prisoner the highest possible character, for humanity and kindness of disposition, when the Counsel for the prosecution interposed, and said he was instructed not to press the case further.—The Jury were therefore directed to acquit the prisoner, and a verdict of—Not Guilty was accordingly recorded.

MISCELLANEOUS.

BRIGHTON, DEC. 25.—As early as half-past nine o'clock in the morning, his Majesty received the Sacrament, in the Palace chapel. The Sacrament was also administered to the Duke of York, and the Duke and Duchess of Clarence. At noon the Morning Service in the same edifice commenced, at which time, in the centre compartment of the Royal closet, were the King, and, to his Majesty's right, the Duke of York; on his Majesty's left were the Duke and Duchess of Clarence. In immediate attendance were, the Duke of Wellington, the Duke of Dorset, Lord St. Helens, and the Lord Steward of the Royal Household.

Mr. Secretary Canning, though somewhat better in health, is still confined to his house. On Wednesday the Right Hon. Gentleman was visited by Count Lieven; and Baron Fagel and Mr. Falck, with Mr. Wynn, had another interview. Lord Granville likewise called at Gloucester Lodge, in his way to the Pavilion.

On the re-assembling of the Courts of Law, Sir Robert Gifford will take his seat as Chief Justice in the Common Pleas, and Mr. Alexander in the Court of Exchequer, as Chief Baron. The latter gentleman will receive the honour of knighthood.

An unusual quantity of specie is weekly entered for exportation at the Custom-house. On Wednesday morning, a waggon heavily laden with silver was forwarded there for the same purpose by an eminent capitalist, who has shipped an immense quantity during the month.

The Dean and Chapter of Winchester have determined to finish the splendid alterations so long contemplated in that Cathedral, and the Bishop of Winchester has, with his usual munificence, offered to contribute handsomely towards the same.

At an ordination held on Sunday last by the Bishop of Peterborough in his cathedral church, the following gentlemen were admitted to holy orders:—DEACONS—F. Folliott, A.B. St. John's coll. Oxford.

Thursday was one of the mildest Christmas days that can be remembered. The only one with which it can be compared, is that of the year before last. The thermometer, at one o'clock that day, however reached no higher than 43 degrees; whereas that day, at the same hour, it reached to 50. But what has been most remarkable in the temperature of the present Christmas, was the mildness of the preceding night. The lowest degree to which the mercury in the night thermometer sunk in the interval between sun-set and sun-rise that morning, was only 45.

The arrivals this year in the port of Liverpool alone of cotton are to the extent of 100,000 bags more than were in the same time last year, and yet last year's importation was reckoned excessive.

Letters from Demerara, dated the 29th of October, state that the Court Martial on Smith, the Missionary, had been adjourned, in order to afford him time to prepare for his defence.

It is intended that all the Irish revenue officers shall be exchanged to England after the 5th of January. No respect to patronage or eligibility will be paid. The change is to be mutual. Mr. Weston is appointed Surveyor-General of Customs for the Irish Southern District.

POLICE HOUSE PATROL.—The stations of this very serviceable body of men are now made known to the public, by a neat tablet, painted white, being affixed on the front of each house occupied by the house otters, patrol on the several roads round London, on which, in black is written "Police House Patrol Station."

J. Gregory, Esq. the new chief or resident Magistrate for Queensquare police-office, appeared on Monday in that police office for the st time.

A letter from Paris states, that some of the bankers of that capital, arge holders of the securities of the Neapolitan Government, have rejected the issuing bonds in a new form, with coupons for the payent of the dividends at Paris instead of Naples.

Monday morning, a meeting took place on Finchley Common, beeen Capt. Featherstone, of the Royal Marines, and Mr. Raymond, a ntleman of the Scotch bar. Capt. F.'s second ball perforated the bdomen; Mr. R. fell apparently lifeless. He exchanged forgiveness th his antagonist. The ball was extracted.

Wednesday morning, some bargemen on the Paddington Canal oberved the body of a dead man being floating on the surface of the water; ey got it on shore; it was the body of an athletic man, dressed as a baker, perfectly dead, and upwards of six feet in height. He appears be about 60 years of age.

On Monday evening, as Mr. Alfred Jarman, in company with a oung lady, was passing down the Albany-road, Walworth, two ruffians resented a large horse pistol at their heads, and demanded their money. hey took from Mr. J. a small silk purse containing a sovereign and a onsiderable quantity of silver, and then departed, having previously reatened to blow out their brains if they made any alarm.

On Wednesday last William Catt, of Clopton, Suffolk, farmer, was nvicted before the Magistrates, at Woodbridge, in the mitigated enalty of 40s., for evading the payment of toll to the keeper of Bredfield gate for a waggon and four horses, which were on the 8th inst., riven across the fields of Mr. Smith, of Molton, for the purpose of voiding the said gate.

The house of Mr. Payne, draper, at Great Missenden, was broken o on Saturday se'nnight, and lace and shawls to the amount of upwards of 100l. stolen. Suspicion fell on two strangers, who were in ompany with William Jennings, of that place, who subsequently gave uch information as led to their apprehension, as well as his own, and ot of the stolen property (to the amount of about 40l.) was found in eir possession. Their names are James Nicholls and John Wright. hey were committed to Aylesbury Gaol for trial.—The house of a or man, at Kingshill Common, was broken into the same evening, d about 12l. stolen.

CAUTION TO INNKEEPERS, TAVERNS, &c.—In the month of September st, a man wearing a turban, but not otherwise dressed like a Turk, d carrying a box with rhubarb and spices, called at the sign of the hite Hart, Newington next Sittingbourne, Kent, kept by the widow ett: he inquired if he could have a bed, which was complied with, d in the morning, after the other lodgers were up and gone, the landy and her daughter being the only persons in the house, he told em he had been robbed of five sovereigns and three shillings, and timately swore that the landlady came into his bed room, and took em out of his trowsers pocket that was in the chair by his bed-side. is story he persisted in, and being at Sittingbourne, told the circumstance to some humane persons, who, seeing the distressed state a man was in, determined to see him righted. The landlady and aughter consulting in their innocence, induced those persons to obin a warrant, but which was not served, they having persuaded her ay the money stated to have been stolen, rather than be taken to a agistrate, who, in all probability, if the man still swore to her as having taken the money, would commit her to gaol. She very reluctantly id the 5l. 3s. and also other expences, with the constables' fees, in l. 2s. 6d. Here the business rested until a person at Newington, out the 16th of November, taking up the paper, saw a transaction at ertford, which induced him to write to the person stated to have en imposed on, Mr. G. Warner, of the Three Blackbirds, Hertford, o stated the description of the man to be quite correct, and there is le doubt but he is the same that imposed on Mrs. Brett.

A few days ago, as Samuel Hams, a licensed hawker, was on his way m Long Sutton to Somerton, he was stopped by two men, who robd him of his box, containing jewellery of nearly 60l. value; also of m money. The box has since been found, rifled of its contents, ving been thrown over the bridge a few yards from the spot.

THE COOK'S ORACLE; containing Receipts for Plain Cookery, on the most Economical Plan, for private Families. Fifth Edition. By the Author of "The Art of Invigorating Life."—Printed for Archibald Constable and Co. 90, Cheapside, and 8, Pall-Mall, London.

"The Cook's Oracle may consider as the ne plus ultra of the science of eating, and the very acme of excellence in culinary literature. So much good sense, combined with such exquisite gourmanderie—so much plain pot information, conveyed in so truly humorous and original a style, place this work on the very eminence of the ample dome of cookery."—Monthly Review.

"We venture to prophecy, that the Cook's Oracle will be considered as the English Institute of Cookery, and may well earn for its author the proud title of Apicius Britannicus."—Edinburgh Review.

A PORTRAIT of THE COUNTESS of LIEVEN, from a Drawing by Sir Tho. Lawrence, P.R.A. Engraved by Wm. Bromley, Esq. A.R.A. and Co. 90, Cheapside, and 8, Pall-Mall.

"This is one of those rare combinations of talent, uniting the utmost grace of composition with the greatest skill in execution, in which the pencil of the artist is most happily expressed by the delicacy of the burin. There is a lightness and taste in the character of the lines, which show the looseness and freedom of a drawing without the appearance of neglect."—Literary Gazette.

A New Literary Pocket-Book and Annual Present, just published, handsomely boarded with engraved Ornamental Covers and Gilt Leaves, price 12s.

THE GRACES; or, LITERARY SOUVENIR for 1824. The principal Contents of this Volume are:—The Months, in descriptive Verse, with a Calendar of the Flower Garden, and its Cultivation attached to each. PUBLIC CHARACTERS; comprising Memoirs of all the Eminent Personages of the Time, who are distinguished by Rank, Fame, or Talent. By EDWARD NEWTON, Esq. Embellished with Portraits.

ADDRESS.—In our announcement of these Memoirs of Public Characters, we deem it necessary to state, shortly, the leading features that will distinguish them: these are, fidelity in execution, and firm but temperate conduct in our strictures. To accomplish the first of these objects, much pains have been taken and long preparation made: and for the second, our own security against wounded feelings will be the best pledge we can offer for keeping within the bounds of proper but free discussion. How far the work will meet with a favourable reception from the public, must be left to time; all we can say is, that we shall study to deserve its favour, by devoting our best attention to the objects of it.—London: printed for A. Whellier, Mitre-court, Ely-place, Holborn; and sold by all booksellers in the united kingdom.

OSMOND, A Tale. By the Author of "The Favourite of Nature." Printed for G. and W. B. Whittaker, Ave Maria-lane.

"The high reputation which the Author of 'The Favourite of Nature' acquired, by the publication of those deeply interesting volumes, will not, we are sure, suffer any diminution by the publication of 'Osmond.' The pleasure we derived from the perusal of the former work, made us look forward with some anxiety to the appearance of 'Osmond;' and we are happy to say, our expectations have not been disappointed."

"The 'History of Caroline Lascelles' is altogether beautifully told. Her misfortunes and fate are highly affecting; and the way in which they are related would not have disgraced the Author of Clarissa. What is still better than all this, is, that a spirit of the most pure and amiable feeling pervades the whole work."—Monthly Magazine, December, 1822.

They form by themselves a complete collection of never-failing gratification, while they are indispensable to every variety of library, and for purposes of study and reference.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We are requested to state, that the CAPTAIN JOHN WILLIAM DUNN, of the 6th or Inniskillen Dragoons, was not one of the plaintiffs in a trial against this Paper for a libel said to be contained in an advertisement which appeared in it some time since.

We are also requested to state, that the Letter of CATO to BYRON is not from the pen of the author of several able letters which were published some time since under the same signature in the NEW TIMES newspaper.

We are requested to enquire of MR. JACKSON, the surgeon of the Guildford House of Correction, whether it is true that a sailor, who has had a piece of bone taken out of his leg, in consequence of a wound in some naval action, is at this time at work upon the tread-wheel at that place, and whether he has or has not lost thirty-eight pounds in weight since the commencement of the punishment?—We also should be glad to know whether there are or are not two mothers, with children at the breast, also upon the wheel?

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, DEC. 28.

WE are prevented, by the length of this day's article on West Indian affairs, from going into the matter of MR. BAILLIE'S expulsion from Christ Church, but we shall next Sunday submit our view of the case, which we consider extremely important and interesting.

WE are extremely sorry to be again under the necessity of setting the Morning Chronicle right—the suspicion it entertained last week with respect to SIR HUDSON LOWE'S chance of a regiment, was not worse grounded than an attack which it made on Wednesday or Thursday, (we forget which) upon the Colonial Secretary at the Cape of Good Hope, for an illusory and deceptive speech which he made, at a meeting of a Bible Society in that Colony, at which LORD CHARLES SOMERSET (who of course comes in for his share of abuse) was present.

The article to which we allude was grounded upon a letter received from the Cape, containing an account of the meeting and of the imposition attempted to be foisted upon the audience by MR. BIRD, who gets tickled up pretty sharply by the Chronicle, for having, as Colonial Secretary, who ought to know better, and who was in all the secrets of the Government and the first civil officer in it, said that, which he knew to be false, under the sanction of his authority, &c. &c.

We agree with the Chronicle that there was a great deal of humbug in the speech, as we are very ready to admit that there is, in all such speeches at all such meetings, but we differ toto cælo with the Chronicle upon one point— we mean as to the plain fact that such a speech, or any speech at all, was delivered upon the occasion by the Colonial Secretary BIRD.

The Chronicle perhaps did not imagine that there could be two eminent personages of the same name in the same colony, but so it is, and COLONEL BIRD, who is the colonial secretary, is wholly innocent of the deception (if deception there really be) contained in the address in question, not being even remotely related to MR. BIRD, the comptroller of customs, who made the speech, and who it may be necessary to add, we believe to be a younger brother of MR. WILLIAM WILBERFORCE, having taken the name of BIRD by royal license.

We are surprized that the Chronicle should have fallen into this blunder, because its Cape correspondent repeatedly speaks of MR. WILBERFORCE BIRD, the comptroller.

A MORE disgusting or disgraceful scene never was exhibited in the City of London, than the late wardmote held before the Right Honourable LORD WAITHMAN, in St. Sepulchre's Church, last week. The grossest impiety and blasphemy were uttered, and the most outrageous profanations freely committed within its walls. MR. BUTTERWORTH, the respectable bookseller, was elected a Common Councilman, in the room of a person of the name of GALLOWAY, an avowed disciple of the late MR THOMAS PAINE.

IN the sporting intelligence inserted in the morning papers, we perceived on Monday an announcement that SIR RICHARD SUTTON'S hounds would meet at Lugsby on CHRISTMAS DAY!!! The paper we read it in was the Chronicle, but it is a circular communication and in all probability was in every other paper.

We should have supposed, had the simple date of the day in the month been given, that the 25th might have been fixed upon, accidentally, at a time, when perhaps the persons fixing it had forgotten what day it was, but we are denied the opportunity of doubting, because it is specially stated to be Christmas day—some little explanation would be satisfactory to such persons as are friends of SIR RICHARD SUTTON, and have a common sense of religion and decency into the bargain.

THE new novel of PERCY MALLORY has created more amicable disputes than any peaceable book that ever was published, not that it is political, not that it is personal, but because nobody is satisfied as to the correct way of pronouncing its title—the great doubt is whether the hero is to be called PERCY MALLÖRY, or PERCY MALLÖRY—we pronounce that it should be MALLÖRY, and whoever the author may be, we are inclined to think that he meant it so to be pronounced from the manner in which the hero's name runs in the rhythm of the prose.

There are some striking situations in the book, and the perfect knowledge of life displayed by the writer is the real cause of its great success—the admirable GRANDISON-descended family at LACY ROYAL, contrasted with the gay ease and gentlemanly freedom of the heir of the house—the testy RYCOTT, and his unimpassioned, netting, knotting wife—with the German servant in the back ground, form strong and striking groupes, while all the manœuvres of MR. DOSSITER, and the intrigues of Chancery-lane, come so home to the feelings of those, who know the infinity of littlenesses to which great men are occasionally reduced, that blended with a really deep, though somewhat intricate interest, the dashes of pure nature boldly given with a master's hand, render the work altogether, worthy of almost unqualified praise.

SOME time since, when Radicalism was at its height in Suffolk, we remember noticing a paragraph in one of the papers, which, in adducing proofs of the unhappy state of that part of the country, informed its readers, that the "Norwich Mail saw no less than five fires burning at once."

This intelligent and perceptive coach, however, (if we may trust the naval news which appeared on Friday in all the papers) has met with a formidable rival in intellectual display in His Majesty's ship JUPITER of 60 guns, which ship the Portsmouth correspondent of the London journals informs the public "was towed into the harbour on Monday by the King's steamer; she expected to be paid off on Saturday all standing and recommissioned immediately."—This is indeed an extraordinary proof of intelligence.

THE whole world—at least every body between the bottom of Pall-Mall and the top of St. James's-street, is in direful consternation—beaux hang their drooping heads, and dandies die; indeed, if a considerable portion of ostensible presentable people were not luckily in the country for Christmas, woeful would be the appearance of that civilized part of the metropolis in which alone, clubs and chairmen are to be seen.

"What is the cause—yet unexplored ?"—It must be told: an attempt at concealment is useless, and though it may seem unfeeling and unkind to blurt out anything so serious as that which has thus afflicted the London division of fine gentlemen, in an abrupt manner, likely to affect those who have departed for the holidays, yet it must be revealed.

To medical research every thing is owing—to the progressive improvements in the "healing art" have been attributable the extermination of the small-pox, the comparative harmlessness of fevers, the banishment of the dæmon gout—read the newspapers, perceive how deformities are conquered, mortal disorders cured, and irremediable ills remedied—all, all are attributable to the growing skill of the learned fraternity—now, mark!

One dreadful disorder, with which England has been singularly afflicted, is apoplexy—it is considered almost an English disease—it has been attributed to over-eating, over-drinking, peculiar habits, a particular character of constitution, a certain structure of body—the old school are all wrong, it has at length been ascertained that the prevalent and fatal evil has had its origin in nothing more nor less than a—neckcloth!

The coiling snake is not so injurious as the twisted cravat, death hides in its wrinkles and revels in its folds—indeed, a man who wears one of these pestiferous bandages, may be said already to be in the arms of death itself, clasped in muslin mortality.

Those who have not the advantage of reading the Medical Adviser will do well forthwith to procure it, and peruse the dreadful fiat issued against these formidable evils—we never saw so tremendous a denunciation—we have no doubt that the worst fears of the fashionable world will be realized, and that with the warm weather we shall find these perilous swathings utterly rejected.

ROGERS, who was told of the danger of these stiffenings round the neck, pronounced the disease producible by them to be undoubtedly a collera morbus, but HUME, who knows a thing or two, and is not to be beaten by trifles, considers the whole rumour as a jobbing affair raised in the City merely to run down the STOCKS—be it what it may, it is really worthy of consideration, and it will only be necessary for the ruling committee of taste to decide upon some new decoration for the neck before the approach of spring, to establish a new order of things which will blend tastefully with the embroidered waistcoats and coats so eagerly anticipated by the young ladies and fine gentlemen of eighteen hundred and twenty-four.

THE projected periodical publication which was to have been called the WESTMINSTER REVIEW, has, it appears, fallen to the ground for want of a publisher—our readers will recollect that it was announced to be published by the house of LONGMAN in Paternoster-row, and the name of such a firm would have been a sufficient guaranty for respectability and rectitude of principle; but it appears that when the proposed publishers saw the articles of which the first number was to be composed they immediately abandoned the work, and withdrew from any share in the dissemination of the principles which it advanced, or the doctrines which it inculcated.

We have heard that the names of the writers were kept a profound secret from MESSRS. LONGMAN, in hopes that such a firm might be surprized into the apparent advocacy of the politics and philosophy of MR. JEREMY BENTHAM and his disciples.—MR. BOWRING was to have devoted all the leisure he could spare from the laborious duties of his secretaryship to patriotic subscriptions, to edit the precious production, while a young man of the name of SOTHERN was to enact the part of Fag to MR. BOWRING—at present the said work is gone begging for a publisher, and it is suspected if it ever appear in the world, that it will make its debut under the auspices of a certain establishment which has recently sent adrift another work of a similar nature.

We are glad to find that the deception which the confederates proposed to play off upon MESSRS. LONGMAN and Co. was in time discovered—sly as he is, the FOX is sometimes outwitted.

A PARAGRAPH having appeared in the old TIMES, stating that a quantity of bread and cheese was distributed last Sunday at Paddington Church, and giving an account of the cause and origin of the donation, we are requested to say that the whole statement, from the beginning to the end, is fabulous, and without the slightest foundation.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR,—I have read with infinite satisfaction the whole of your remarks upon what is called the West Indian controversy. The light in which you have placed the exertions of MESSRS. WILBERFORCE, BUXTON, and MACAULAY, is exactly that in which the exertions of those gentlemen must be viewed by all who prefer practicable usefulness to the dreamings of enthusiasm, and a sincere love of religion to an ostentatious display of it—but you have not gone far enough. You have exposed the absurdity of saintship, and the real end of its labours, but you have offered no plan of your own for the more general diffusion of christianity among the negroes. Will you permit one who has visited Jamaica—who has observed with an eye wholly unprejudiced the condition of its inhabitants, both black and white—the general habits and mutual behaviour towards each other, to submit, through the columns of your excellent paper, to the consideration of those at the head of affairs, a few hints on this very important subject.

It is now nine years ago since the events of my life led me to pay a short visit to the shores of Jamaica. Having certain friends resident in the interior, I was enabled in visiting these to see something not only of the principal towns, but of the country places; and though my sojourn amongst them was not very extended, I endeavoured to make the most of it, and neglected no opportunity of becoming acquainted with the state of the colony. The results of these enquiries I shall now lay before you, and I pledge myself for their correctness.

As is usual in most controverted points, the saints have gone ridiculously beyond the truth in their abuse of West Indian morality, whilst (let the truth be spoken,) their opponents have given much too favourable a representation of it. In the West Indies there are numbers of settlers whose lives and opinions are beyond the reach of censure, but there are not wanting some whose notions on the score of morality and religion must be exceedingly lax. Were I, indeed, to pronounce sentence upon the white population, at least of Jamaica, I should by no means declare it the most pure in the world, and for this obvious reason, that it is made up, to a very great extent, of adventurers—of men who have come out as boys, raw, uneducated, and ill-instructed in religion, and who have risen by dint of severe labour, labour of body rather than of mind, to the office of overseers. Observe that I speak now of the white population spread over the inland estates.

In Kings-town, Spanish town, and the pens or villas around them, will be found men of liberal education and sound opinions, but in the interior such spirits are rare. But it is on these inland estates, that the white and the black come into most intimate connection with each other, and there, of course, the habits of the master bear with an encreased force upon the opinions of the slave. Of the charge of general cruelty I freely acquit the overseers. Nothing can be more groundless or more wicked; but their licentious intercourse with the other sex cannot be denied, nor I fear, may their betters be wholly acquitted on this score. All the world knows that his brown wife, as she is called, is a sort of necessary appendage to the West Indian's establishment, and that the maintenance of such a personage is accounted no bar to his admission even to the best female society in the Island. On the head of religious worship too (though the saints have really told so many falsehoods about it, that a plain man actually fears being confounded with them) it must be confessed that the great mass of the whites are not at present over-strict; whilst the slaves are too often left to be worked upon by ignorant and unauthorised missionaries, partly through carelessness on the side of their masters, and partly from the want of a sufficiently numerous and active body of clerical or lay churchmen. The consequence has been that a bastard sort of thirst for knowledge has got amongst them. They wish to become christians, not from any conscientious conviction of the truth of christianity, or because they are capable of appreciating its excellencies, or understanding its precepts; but because the terms Christianity and freedom have been employed by these self-constituted teachers as synonimous, and the slaves consequently expect that the acquisition of the one shall immediately accompany the reception of the other. Very few, depend upon it, of the negro Christians are Christians upon principle. They marry, indeed, and their children are baptized, but it is a melancholy fact, that the vices of their masters are copied as well as their religion, and are even defended by reference to their example.

Nevertheless, it must, I think, be admitted by men of all parties, that the intellectual condition of the negro slaves has at length arrived at that perilous state (precocious I freely admit, for which precocity we have to thank the friends of the African Institution,) when to keep it stationary, far more to force it back, is impossible. On the other hand, all endeavours to carry it forward must be attended with imminent danger; and if these be made too hastily, a general insurrection will assuredly be the consequence. What seems chiefly to be wanted is a plan for the gradual civilization and conversion of the slaves; for the introduction of real christianity amongst them—a religion which aimed not at the subversion of established civil relations, when first it came in all its purity from the immediate followers of its divine founder, and which is still totally unconnected with such relations. Since, then, the slaves cannot be emancipated without the commission of a flagrant act of injustice towards their masters, and since christianity in all its parts forbids such acts, let them be converted by all means, but preach not rebellion as the fruits of this conversion. Nor need it be feared that a religion thus conveyed, a religion which enjoins slaves to obey in all things their masters according to the flesh, not with eye service, as men pleasers, but in singleness of heart, as fearing God, will necessarily bring along with it a rebellious spirit.

I have said that the slaves are too often left to be worked upon by ignorant and unauthorised missionaries, and I have accounted for this on two grounds, the latter of which may seem to convey a censure upon the regular clergy of the West Indies; but I entreat that respectable body not to view the thing in a light which is far from intended. Of the clergy resident in the West Indies, the great proportion are, I well know, as zealous and as active as any of their brethren in any quarter of the globe, but it is notorious that their numbers are wholly inadequate to effect so stupendous a work as the general conversion of the negroes, encumbered, as it necessarily is by the very peculiar situation, moral and political, in which these negroes are placed. Nor shall I, I trust, be accused of uncharitableness if I venture to suggest, that probably more might be done, even by the clergy now resident, were they overlooked, as all episcopal clergymen elsewhere are, by the eye of a superior. Human nature, we well know, is the same under all circumstances, and he who shall contest that in a body so considerable as the West Indian clergy composes, there are no individuals whose zeal and activity might not be encreased by the recollection that their proceedings were narrowly watched by a legal superintendant, may entertain strange notions of the effect produced by holy ordination on the minds and views of those who receive it.

The first measure, then, which I would venture to suggest is the consecration and appointment of a Bishop for the West Indies. Let the seat of Episcopal authority be Jamaica, it being the largest and most important of the islands. To assist the Bishop in the performance of his arduous duties, let there be appointed two Archdeacons for Jamaica, and one for each of the other larger islands; the Archdeacons of the latter having the superintendence of the smaller, according to the geographical situations of these latter. Let a yacht be placed at the control of the Bishop, by means of which he may visit every part of his diocese at will; care being taken that these visitations shall take place at least once in two years. Let each Archdeacon assemble the Clergy of his Archdeaconry twice a year—on which occasions regular reports of the progress of Christianity in their respective parishes shall be made out, and forwarded to the Diocesan.

But the appointment of an hierarchy in these distant colonies, is not the only measure which their peculiar circumstances appear to demand. It is perfectly evident, that to enable the parochial Clergy to diffuse amongst the slaves a knowledge of genuine Christianity, their exertions must be aided—a way indeed must be opened for such exertions by the means of lay catechists, taken from among the negroes themselves, and properly trained up for their office. As matters now stand, it is certain that all the preaching in the world can produce little good effect upon the minds of the slaves, whilst an entire lifetime would not be sufficient to enable a single man to convey instruction to the inhabitants of even of the least populous parishes in Jamaica, in the course of his domiciliary visits.

Accordingly, it is farther proposed, that the Bishop be authorized to carry out with him a competent number of intelligent laymen and women, perfectly skilled in the national system of education; that a central school be opened at Kingstown or Spanish-town, into which be received young men and women, the children of free negroes. That these men and women be taken into public pay, and when satisfactory proof has been given of the soundness of their opinions and morality of their practice, and of their competency to teach others, that they be distributed throughout the various West Indian parishes, in each of which a school shall be opened, and the education of the young slaves conducted under the immediate eye of the parochial minister. Of course, sundry new catechisms must be compiled for their use, in which the necessity of submission to their masters, and contentment with the dispensations of providence, may be enforced; whilst the hours of instruction may be so apportioned, as in no material degree to affect the interests of the owner. Such schools would no doubt be well attended from choice; but were any reluctance shown, means could easily be adopted, and those far from harsh, to enforce attendance, till it became a pleasure. From the adoption of this part of the plan it may be safely asserted that the very best effects would ultimately follow.

But it is not enough that steps be taken for the gradual and general diffusion of salutary knowledge among the slaves. It appears a desirable thing that a school or college should be erected in Jamaica, where the children of free settlers might receive a liberal education, and be fitted for the learned professions, especially for the church. I say especially for the church, because it is but too notorious that very many of the West India parishes are at present served by men, who, knowing nothing of the habits and dispositions of the people, accept benefices there for no other reason than because they find themselves unable to procure preferment at home. Now, though of these many do their duty to the best of their ability, it is evident that they cannot prove either so active or so useful as if they had been born and educated in the country; partly because their bodily constitutions must be infinitely less adapted to the climate than those of natives, and partly, because to persons unaccustomed to converse or intermix with the black and brown population of tropical countries, such conversation and intercourse are inconceivably irksome and unpleasant. But from a seminary thus founded, an abundant supply of competent ministers might always be procured; and the number of officiating priests might speedily be multiplied, according as an increase of their numbers was found to be desirable.

Such are the general outlines of a plan upon which I have long meditated, and which might be carried into execution at much less expence than a common observer might imagine; and which, if adopted, must necessarily produce the following among many discernable advantages.

1st. This Bishop being, like the Bishop of Calcutta, second in temporal rank to the Governor alone, must, both from his temporal and spiritual authority, enjoy great influence amongst his countrymen. And as all vice and immorality would necessarily be discountenanced by him, the morals and manners of the settlers would be gradually refined and improved.—2ndly. Religious instruction would be conveyed to the negroes by those, whose interests as well as principles, would deter them from mixing up with it political dogmas, with which it has no necessary connection.—3rdly. The door would be shut against the mischievous interference of unauthorized Missionaries, to whose wicked zeal the late insurrection and disturbance in Demerara appear to be principally owing. I enumerate this among other good effects of my plan, because I proceed upon the supposition that religion shall not be offered to the slaves by any except the regularly appointed teachers. Unless this, indeed, be insisted upon, no real benefit can arise from the adoption of any plan whatsoever; because it is certain that where two or more forms of religion are publicly sanctioned, and permitted to struggle for pre-eminence, the general cause of Christianity is injured. But if such be the case elsewhere, a collusion of religious opinions among the instructors of the negroes must be ruinous, since we well know that Sectarians of all denominations seek first the overthrow of the establishment; and judging from what we have already seen them do in these parts, we may rest satisfied that they would, in case they were permitted to circulate their own creed, pursue the same end again at any risk, and by any practicable means.—4thly. The honour of the Church of England would be vindicated, by placing a Colony so extensive as the West Indies under its own Bishop.—5thly. The lay settlers would be enabled to receive confirmation at the hands of their own Bishop—they would have a new and fine field open for the exertions of talent among themselves—their sons would become permanent ministers among them, and their place of abode would be this house; above all, they would effectually prove the falsehood of all those accusations brought against them by the saints, and enjoy the satisfaction of knowing that they had adopted a plan which could not fail to render their slaves faithful to their masters, whilst at the same time the blessing of christianity was truly imparted to them. And, lastly, the hands of Government would be strengthened by placing upon a respectable footing that religious establishment, which at all times, and under all circumstances, has proved its devoted attachment to our glorious Constitution, and a firm and unshaken loyalty to the King.

As I live in a quiet, out of the way part of the country, it is very possible, Sir, that all these projects may have been started before, though I have not seen their statement. If so, of course you will make no use of my letter—if otherwise, and the thing be deemed worthy of consideration, you know my name, and you are at perfect liberty to refer any official enquirer for further details to myself—these I will readily answer to the best of my ability, and I am, Sir,

No Saint, but a friend to Religion.

TO JOHN BULL.

Montague Place, Dec. 24, 1823.

Sir—I never wished either my wife or daughter to turn authoresses, as I think ladies which write books are called, and I should have set my face against the publication of my wife's Journal of her Tour if I had been consulted, but the truth is, they seldom ask me anything as to what is to be done, until they have first done it themselves.

Now I like you, because you have done the West Indians a good turn and also because you try to put down the papishes, but there is a thing which under all the circumstances vexes me, because, as you may remember, Mr. Burke said, "anything which is worth doing is worth doing well." What I quarrel with you for, is, that you put my wife's name and my daughter's name as Mrs. and Miss Higginbottom, whereas our name is Ramsbottom, and whether it be the stupidity of your printers, or that my daughter who has been three years at an uncommon fine school at Hackney cannot write plain, I do not pretend to say, but I do not like it, because since every tub should stand on its own bottom, I think the Higginbottoms should not have the credit of doing, what the Ramsbottoms actually do.

Perhaps you will correct this little error: it hurts me, because, as I said before, I like you very much, and I have got a few cases of particular champagne, a wine which my friend Rogers tells me, you are extremely fond of, and which he says is better than all the "real pain" in the world —(nobody ever said it before) and when the women return from over the horrid sea, I hope you will come and drink some of it; so pray just make an erratum, as the booksellers say, and put our right names in your paper, by doing which you will really oblige your's

HUMPHREY RAMSBOTTOM.

P.S. My second daughter is a very fine girl, and I think as clever as Lavy, and writes a much clearer hand—you shall see her when you come to M—— Place.

BOTANY.

We insert the following extract from the Botanical Register, Vol. VIII. p. 729, and a criticism thereupon by an aggrieved personage. That we understand either the merits of the case, or the meaning of the critic, we think it quite due to ourselves to declare—it is earnestly pressed upon us, and we admit it, certainly without feeling the importance which the contending writers seem to attach to the discussion. We warn our readers that there are warm words used, and sharp expressions put forth—should any evil consequences arise between the parties, we suppose, as botanists, they will decide their scientific differences with pistils!

EXTRACT FROM THE BOTANICAL REGISTER, VOL. VIII. P. 729.

Article—"Berberris Chitria."

"We have preferred the original name to that in the Regni Veget. Syst. Nov. a work, where the universal enumeration of the vegetation of no less than our entire globe is announced, accompanied by the differential and natural characters with a full synonymy of each species; but in his wild career, the historian has stopped short at the history of not much more than a dozen of Linnæus's genera, and one of the narrowest classes of his system. The botanic world was roused with the noise of this undertaking (actually announced and opened at Geneva by the sound of drums and trumpets) nearly ten years ago, since which period two moderate octavo volumes have been ushered in among us, containing insulated accounts, without beginning or end, (or monographs, according to natural order) of a few Linnæan Genera, together with the class Tetradynamia, turned into orders, the whole entangled in a complex unmanageable machinery, by way of natural arrangement. And here we expect is the extinction of this glaring phenomenon, intended to spread durable and universal light, but which has left us in the same darkness in which we were found. For ourselves, we are not disappointed in our expectations—the work has reached as far as they ever extended—with a view, subdued by age and experience, we foresaw no other event. We might have prognosticated better success, or conceived more hope from the annunciation of a supplement to some of the Linnæan sequences beginning with Monandria and ending in Cryptogamia, such as a continuation of the invaluable and unrivalledly useful work 'Willdenow's Species Plantarum,' or even of an addition to the 'Classic Catalogue of the New Collection,' a monument of the taste and criticism of Solander and Dryander, the worthy disciples of Linnæus, and the most accomplished scholars of the age; but where, in the very title page, we see them robbed of the reward of their erudition (and we know they received no other) to give immortality and renown to vulgar ignorance, the names of native dunces being suffered to usurp the place belonging to the genius and talent of another land."

Here the reader has what our correspondent calls the bane—what follows, that correspondent considers the antidote:

"Can there be any thing virulent in the composition of this pretty looking Barberry, so as that the sagacious writer of this article, in turning it over in search of his differentia specifica, or rather in proving that he has adopted, has created a mist about himself, and so by inhaling such presumed obnoxious vapour, has found himself tinctured with its bitter qualities? It is in vain I look for any other reason; to no other source can I place this uncalled-for tirade. But on looking further into another fasciculus for the figure of the Barberry (for there appears to have been ample time for brooding over these subjects by the detention of the text two months after the publication of the figure) I find that it has prickles, and therefore I ask again, may not some of these pointed terminations have recommended themselves rather too forcibly to the sensitive nose of the writer? or, perhaps, the two circumstances may have operated together to produce the irritable feelings discoverable in the pungent remarks which he here gives vent to.

"He first begins with M. De Candolle, and because this able French botanist has undertaken an Herculean task, he is stigmatized as a presumptuous theorist for undertaking a labour that he never could expect to complete, or rather which the prognosticating genius of this sensible Editor has long ago discovered to himself could not be completed. But who does not know (except, indeed, this periodical scribbler, who has only to write or copy his eight pages per month) that the first stages of a great work are, on various accounts, always the most tedious of execution, and that it is an unfair premise, that because three years has elapsed between the appearance of the first and second volumes, that each succeeding volume will consume as much time in its production; and therefore, supposing that thirty volumes may contain this universal enumeration of the vegetation of our entire globe, the last volume cannot be expected before the year 1883. Does this sapient Editor empty his portfolio every month? or may we not rather give him credit that he has still matter in store to brood over? and may we not, in like manner, without a very great stretch of credulity, admit that M. De Candolle has ample materials of all the succeeding orders in preparation, so that by the time he has put forth his fifteenth volume, that the subject-matter of the residue will require merely collating and revising for the press, and that two or three volumes may be given to us in one season, till this great national work, of which the French may be justly proud, shall have been completed. The writer of this, verily believes this will be the case, and he speaks on this point from something more than bare supposition. As to the competency of M. De Candolle to the task which this critical Editor appears to be so much disposed to call in question, I think it is far above his contemptible criticism, and that it will not be much affected by these bare assertions of his, in the face of substantial proof to the contrary. Mr. Brown's important opinion of the work, as well as his sanction and support of it, may be seen in the very interesting communications he has enriched it with; and let any impartial botanist (clearly saving my friend any trouble) take up and compare the detail of any one genus, or say any one department of it, the synonymy for instance, and there he will find the greatest care has been taken in the correcting and selecting of these; correcting (among others) errors that have been handed down, and perpetuated from edition to edition, from the earliest species plantarum of Linne, to the latest of those now in use, not even excepting that of Willdenow, spoken of here in such unqualified terms; and selecting only such as are at all essential. Few, indeed, are the books into which errors will not creep, and especially such as take in so wide a field, where so much must be taken upon the authority of others who may not have left sufficient detail to clear up such subjects free from doubt.

"This allusion to M. de Candolle's work (unfounded as it is), is, however, in some measure justifiable (especially when viewed in connexion with the remaining abuse), as the subject of the article is to be found there; but what is there that could call for the invidious allusion to the Hortus Kewensis: "the names of those who have contributed to enrich the pages of this classic catalogue do not appear in the title," says the erudite critic: how is it, then, that my sapient friend does not follow the dictates of his own conscience? How is it that the periodical publication in which so many of his brilliant effusions are to be found, is not rendered more attractive by being graced with his name? Would he consider himself demeaned by such an exhibition? or does he fear to lose the advantage of the shades of his obscurity in dealing out these covert inuendos, which he would not fail to shrink from openly declaring?—However this may be, he should at least, before he enters upon such subjects, make himself acquainted with the various bearings of them; he would then discover (in the case in question) that it was the expressed wish of Drs. Dryander and Solander, that their names should not appear in the titles of the respective editions they have contributed to—that due acknowledgments have been made for their able assistance, and that no disposition has been evinced "to rob these learned Gentlemen of the reward of their erudition." And are not the traces of Mr. Brown's hand discoverable by the appendage of his name? And, after all, is there not an over anxiety evinced by the devotion of two pages entirely to acknowledgments of this kind? I must therefore certainly suppose that this periodical essayist, having lain so long dormant, had sprung up at length from his torpitude, and was determined to produce something spirited, but that the unfortunate asperities of the Barberry had caused an aversion to its own prickly subject, but had left all its acrimony behind, for what came first to view to charge the blank page with—might we not have had some extracts upon the irritability of some species of the genus (Berberris)? The story, though an old one, may not perhaps be so to all of his readers—or might he not have thrown some new light upon this singular contrivance of nature? Such matter would have been in point—but perhaps his nerves were not in a fit state to treat on so moving a subject! In some farther sensible observations, but in a more subdued tone (which, by the bye, would appear more in place in a prospectus or advertisement), the editor speaks of the vast advantage to be derived to science from his very extended circulation; he should also recollect the same channel which conveys these good things of his to beyond Petersburgh and Vienna, is used also for all the opprobrium he may be stimulated to send with them—so that this consideration ought to operate to deter him from lending or employing his pages to be the vehicle of exporting such ill-conceived and ill-founded abuse.

"P.S. If by the phrase 'an invention yet in embryo,' in speaking of genera, and orders of botany, the editor hints that Mr. Brown is about to favour the world with the great desideratum in botany, a Genera Plantarum, I could most freely forgive him for these abuses to which he lends his pages, and forget my feelings in the more powerful excitement occasioned by this most important piece of intelligence."

A CARD.

A traveller on the western road, presents his respectful compliments to Messieurs the Trustees or Commissioners of the said road as far as the western limit of the beautiful town of Brentford, and informs them (being persuaded that they know nothing about the matter) that near Kensington Church the breadth of the richest and most frequented road in England is only sixteen feet from curb-stone to curb-stone, with side pavements which are dangerous to foot passengers from their narrowness—this is within two miles of the metropolis.

That Kensington, part of Hammersmith and of Brentford, are paved as are the most neglected streets in London; in contempt no doubt of the modern method of road-making: that water carriage is available, particularly to Brentford.

And in return for all this information, the traveller hopes to be favoured, displayed on the face and front of John Bull, with a statement of the amount of the money received from the public, by the three first turnpikes on this road for one year, on the average of the last four.

London, Dec. 24, 1823.

It has been occasionally objected to various arguments, details and observations, connected with the great West Indian question, that most of the charges against the abolitionists are advanced only upon the authority of anonymous writers, and although the powerful allegations against some of the saints, for the mere publication of which, we are threatened with prosecution, appeared in pamphlets and works, the authors of which, at the time they were written, openly avowed themselves, we do not remember to have seen any very decided defence of the planters, any very strenuous attack upon the quackery of negro emancipation regularly avowed, until the publication of the "Official Letter from the Commissioners of Correspondence of the Bahama Islands to George Chalmers, Esq., Colonial Agent." As this paper comes before the public, signed by ten gentlemen, we consider it but just to publish so much of it, as may shew the declared feelings of the injured community of which they form a part; and when those extracts are read, we trust that those persons who are pleased to censure us, for our observations upon Mr. Wilberforce and his disciples, will admit that the feelings we have expressed, and the facts we have stated, have been well grounded, and that any hostility we may evince towards public men, upon public grounds, results from a consciousness of our duty to our King and Country, and has not its origin in private prejudice or personal animosity.

Proceed we now to submit such parts of this powerful letter as bear upon the different points under discussion.

And first, upon that very important point, the right of property which the planter has in his slave, and which, it appears, the Saints are philosophically inclined to dispute—the letter contains the following remarks:—

"It is urged that the colonists originally acquired their property in slaves by means never before recognized as legitimate by the laws of nature or nations. But although, in some instances, such may perhaps have been the case, we cannot be persuaded that it was so, by any means to the extent represented in the fables of the African Institute, or the publications and speeches of its friends. Those tales of other times, no doubt have frequently had the effect expected from them with those who allow themselves to feel only where they ought to reason also. But at this day, surely it is almost impertinent to enquire how the property in question was first obtained. Even admitting that the negroes brought from Africa were not slaves in their own country, prisoners of war, convicts, or otherwise regularly reduced to bondage—admitting that many of them were kidnapped, or carried off by fraud or force, the time is now receding out of view when those crimes are alleged to have been perpetrated. The supposed actors in those scenes have either long since passed, or are passing fast, from the stage of existence, and their successors have been left in guiltless possession of the property in question—confirmed and guaranteed to them for ever, on the faith of their country, and by the solemn enactments of its most sacred laws. Whatever sins a few individuals may have committed a century or two ago, the present proprietors of our slaves hold them as such, for the most part, by fair and lawful purchase. In the language of the Scriptures they are our money, and to divest us of them against our will, however plausible the pretext for so doing, would, in plain language, be nothing less than robbery.

"In this reasoning too, whatever our opponents may affect to think of it, there is nothing new. It is founded on one of the most ancient and necessary principles of human jurisprudence; for, if we may travel back one or two hundred years to detect a flaw in title to property, why not five centuries, or more? And under the operation of such a scrutiny, where is the inheritance, even in the fairest portions of the mother-country, whose origin might not be traced to tyranny or fraud? Some supposed incidental right of conquest, arbitrary escheat, lawless sequestrations, superstitious endowments, or some one or more of those multifarious outrages of military power or civil execution, which crowd the annals of our country, during a long succession of ages? Had not the law, therefore, going hand in hand with reason and necessity, placed some certain barriers, beyond which the rights of the innocent heir should not be affected by the crimes of his ancestor, of how little avail would any earthly possessions now be?

"We have indeed heard some idle report, of an intimation that our Slave-holders are to be allowed an adequate consideration for the property, of which they are to be deprived. Without questioning the right of the community to the use of private property at a liberal or fair price, when the public good requires the sacrifice, we have only to say, that when England is prepared to add two hundred millions more to her present national debt, it will be quite time enough to discuss the details of the project."—pp. 4, 5, 6, 7.

After discussing with judgment and temperance the scheme of suddenly attempting the emancipation of slaves—observes (p. 15,) that Mr. Wilberforce in his pamphlet—"complains, but with his usual caution when treading on ground that he has good reason to distrust, without naming either time or place, 'that even since the mitigation of slavery was lately recommended from the Throne, in consequence of addresses from Parliament,' (what recommendation and addresses are here alluded to?) 'several of the Colonial Legislatures, (how many, and which of them?) 'have for the first time imposed fines, and others have greatly augmented the fines to be paid into their treasuries, on the emancipation of slaves; so that in some Colonies they amount to nearly an entire prohibition.' (page 42.) If it be true that such unreasonable taxes are imposed in one or two of the thirteen colonies, (which, however, we confess, under all circumstances, we are strongly inclined to doubt,) surely it would have been but justice to the other eleven, to point out particularly where the blame ought to fall, and not involve the whole of the colonies in the odium of a measure, which the pressure of particular circumstances may have for a time, rendered necessary or expedient in a very few. But justice, in any shape, to any of the Colonies, is not one of the articles of Mr. Wilberforce's religion. In the Bahamas there neither is, nor ever has in fact been, any tax whatsoever on manumissions. There was an old law to that effect, we believe, of the reign of George II., but it was never acted upon; at least not a penny ever appears to have been paid into the Treasury under it, though multitudes have since been manumitted. And that law, obsolete, if we may use the expression, from the very hour of its enactment, has long since been, and still continues, repealed.

"It might have proved some trial of our temper, but of that we are relieved by a strong sense of contempt, to find our opponents still urging their old, false, stale, and often repeated position, that, were our slaves made free, they would continue to labour in our fields on wages. There are, as we believe, upwards of a thousand free blacks and people of colour within these islands, and scarcely an instance is within our recollection of their ever having so employed themselves, though the wages of hired labourers have been from 10 to 12 guineas a year, with full allowance besides of food, clothing, and all other necessaries.—'Since the dissolution of the late black corps,' says Mr. Wilberforce, 'many of the disbanded soldiers have maintained themselves by their own agricultural labours, and have manifested a degree of industry that ought to have silenced for ever all imputations on the race.' (p. 67.) In this statement we venture to assert that there is no truth:—First, because we have it only on the authority of Mr. Wilberforce, whose misinformation (to give it the mildest name) in all such matters has already been notorious, and in many instances detected and exposed. Secondly, because, as usual, we are not favoured with the when and where of the miracle: for the story is introduced, not only without date, but, what is of more importance, without even saying in which of our islands this novelty is to be found. And lastly, because it is in perfect inconsistency with every thing that we have had occasion to observe among ourselves in like cases. The disbanded black soldiers that have occasionally found their way to these islands, have uniformly been the veriest vagrants in existence, and the terror of all around them. Of the last two that found the means of living here for any length of time, one was hanged about 18 months ago for burglary, and the other saved his neck only by turning King's evidence against his companion: a precious specimen of those corps, the dissolution of which Mr. Wilberforce so deeply regrets. (p. 67.) We suspect indeed that this unhappy compliment to "the diligence" of those sooty Cincinnati is of the manufacture of Sierra Leone—a soil hitherto fertile only in fictions and fevers, and a settlement which, under the hallowed and wholesome auspices of Mr. Wilberforce and his Institute, has long been a notorious sink of nearly every disease, moral and physical, with which humanity can be infected."

This animated description of the favourite settlement of the Saints, we are inclined to think is somewhat justificatory of our gentle observation upon it, considering the character of the document we are now submitting to the public.

In proceeding to shew the fallacy and absurdity of the views of those who anticipate, or affect to anticipate, happiness and good order, social comfort and constitutional regularity, by the general emancipation, the Committee refer to settlements where the experiment has been tried, and to that island where all the inhabitants are free.

The Committee proceeds in its letter to enquire, (p. 22.)—"Does any thing in the habits of the country from which they originally came justify the expectation? Nothing; let the African Institute, and all the portfolios of Sierra Leone, pretend what they may upon the subject. Does the experience of any one island in the West Indies justify it? Not one; let Mr. Wilberforce say what he pleases about his disbanded soldiers and American deserters; or to come still closer to the point, do the present situation of St. Domingo, and the dreadful aspect of affairs in that anyss of anarchy, kept down only by arms, justify it? On the contrary, to raise a twentieth part of what once was the produce of that unfortunate island, the peasantry had to be reduced to a state of worse than military vassalage; infinitely more degrading, unjust, odious, sanguinary, and cruel, than Mr. Wilberforce himself, even under the malignant influence of one of his worst West India nightmares, could possibly be accused of finding in any portion of the western world. The cultivators of the soil in Hayti, we understand, are not like our slaves, or our soldiers and sailors, exposed to the horrors of the cat-o-nine-tails. No, they are free—and therefore they are only sabred or shot when they fail to bring the expected quantity of produce into the quondam royal, but now presidential, exchequer. Mr. Wilberforce's allusion, indeed, to the present state of St. Domingo, is most unfortunate for his cause, particularly with respect to the religious improvement likely to be the result of suddenly manumitting any large body of slaves. In that ill-fated island our missionaries, reasoning possibly with Mr. Wilberforce, calculated no doubt, on a rich harvest of grace among negroes, now no longer restrained by the chains of bondage, from the means of religious instruction. Let the mission speak for itself. While, in nearly every other part of the West Indies, the missionaries boast of increasing success and brightening prospects, the modern St. Domingo stands alone impregnable to the real truths of christianity. On the 15th Jan. 1821, the Rev. Mr. Evariste, the Missionary sent thither, writes thus:—'Every door is shut against us, and we are deprived in every possible way of liberty to act either according to the gospel or our own conscience, or the light of truth.' Again, 'This city is a burden to me, on account of the fearful and horrible things which I see; particularly the habitual and sinful violation of the Sabbath.' Again, 'We are like sheep exposed to the fury of the wolves.' Again, 'for me, I am considered by them as one deprived of reason, a fool, and enthusiast.' And again, towards the conclusion of the letter, 'the only thing that keeps me here is our dear society, which languishes like a tree planted by the side of a flaming furnace!—(See the Methodist Missionary Report of 1821, page xciv.) The melancholy fact is, that St. Domingo, once the garden, the Queen of the West Indies, is now inhabited, not exactly by savages, but by a race of beings infinitely worse, degraded, in fact, beneath what they ever were before.

"The unsophisticated denizen of the African wilds is ennobled in comparison with the wretched degradation of his Haytian brethren; not merely relapsing into barbarism, but sinking fast under an odious combination of the darkness, ferocity, vices, and superstitions of all colours and all nations; unredeemed by the virtues of any. To this state of terrific desolation it is, that Mr. Wilberforce and his friends are now finally labouring to reduce the whole of the British West Indies!!!"

The following observations, touching the lamentable ignorance of the real state of the case, under which hundreds and thousands of well-meaning dupes to designing leaders labour, are extremely pertinent and forcible, after shewing, that in one breath, Mr. Wilberforce describes the slaves as wholly demoralized "pagans and heathens," and in the next recommends them to be admitted as "evidence upon oath," the Committee say—

"It is absolutely provoking to hear Gentlemen of high pretensions to talent and integrity speaking of our Negroes, as they would of the peasantry of Yorkshire or Middlesex; and a wish has been often expressed on this side of the Atlantic, that some of our modern philanthropists at home, who have so much wealth and time at their disposal, would only favour the West Indies with an occasional visit, and judge of us and our conduct and affairs from their own observation.

"When Mr. Howard, the first philanthropist of his day, undertook the reformation of abuses in the public prisons, he did not sit at his ease in his study, building theories and suggesting plans upon the communication of Bridewell governors, gaolers, or turnkeys, or those of any pitiful gaol-birds that might escape from their cages to carry tales to his private ear. He travelled every where to the prisons himself—at the risk of health and life, at the serious sacrifice of personal comfort; he entered them, examined them throughout, collected a valuable mass of information on the spot, and did more than any man that ever lived towards the amelioration of the condition of those unhappy sufferers, whose imprudence or whose crimes condemned them to incarceration. But that sort of philanthropy is now getting entirely out of fashion. Our modern reformers, overlooking some hundreds of abuses absolutely stinking under their nostrils, close for the theatre of their philanthropy some country as far as possible beyond the range of their own physical observation. As prophets inferior even to Mahomet, they will not go to the mountain, though the mountain cannot come to them. All their information they obtain, if not by inspiration, certainly by means equally mysterious and inscrutable. And, thus informed or inspired, they calmly undertake to legislate for countries, which they never saw but with the eyes of others, whom they are for the most part ashamed to name; and to correct abuses that exist only in the calumnies of those who either have a sordid interest or take a mischievous delight in misrepresenting the actual state of the colonies."

The Committee then proceeds to repel the charges of ill-treatment of slaves, and to vindicate the slaves themselves against the charges of gross libertinism preferred against them so consistently by the very men who would give them every privilege of free men—they observe that flogging is not confined to thieving slaves, but that our soldiers and sailors are liable to the same punishment for crime—to which, we beg to add, that the Judges of England, under the sanction of British Juries, award the same punishment at the end of every Old Bailey Session.

The profligacy of the West Indies, so pertinently compared with that of civilized Christian England, in whose metropolis, —nay, in one parish of whose metropolis, there exist more prostitutes than there are slave inhabitants in the Bahamas altogether!

Mr. Wilberforce has spoken with horror of "the indecency of some of the punishments of the slaves." The Committee admit that, to children, the rod is applied as it is universally applied in England to the younger branches of the nobility, gentry, and public in general—a mode of discipline which, we should imagine, every member of both Houses of Parliament, together with all his Majesty's Ministers, and the Bench of Judges into the bargain, have, in their time, undergone.

The subsequent comparison of oriental freedom with occidental slavery, is extremely well drawn, and will require further exposition, we therefore postpone the consideration of that part of the paper before us, and of a well-written defence of the Colonial Assemblies from the attacks of the Saints, till a future, yet not far distant opportunity; and in the meantime giving the concluding paragraph of the letter as addressed to the Colonial Agent, Mr. Chalmers, and entreating our readers to add the important display of just and honourable feeling which the letter contains, to the mass of matter necessary to be accumulated in the minds of those who are as deeply interested as we are in the fair consideration of the important subject in the ensuing Session of Parliament, the letter thus concludes, and although from the nature of our publication we have been unable to give it entire, we think we have done justice to the feelings and intentions of the writers, as far as we have been able to go.

"Although this letter will be printed here for the use of the Members of this Board, there can be no objection on our part to its being reprinted with you, should such a measure appear to you advisable. On this point we leave much to your discretion. With our authority, which we now confer on you, to give it that extent and manner of publication, which, under the circumstances of the case, as they may stand at home, you may conceive most conducive to the general interest of the colonies; as well as to the defence of the character of the Bahamas particularly, against the unfounded slanders that appear to be promulgated with so much industry, and so little mercy, against us all: we have only to add one request, that, if published at all, this letter may be given entire, and as it now stands in every respect.—We remain, Sir, your most obedient servants,

THEATRES.

The annual uproar which is exhibited in the playhouses of London at this season, was performed on Friday at Covent Garden and Drury Lane with its wonted effect; for some wise reason "Jane Shore" was substituted for the ordinary exhibition of "George Barnwell:" it appeared to us as if the moralists of the playhouse felt that sufficient care had been taken of the characters of the clerks and apprentices of the metropolis, and that it became them to display the evils attendant upon a regardlessness of the strict discipline of female virtue. Whatever might have been the motive, we had "Jane Shore" at both houses, but, as we have often said before, as it was quite impossible we could be in two places at once, we are doomed to confine ourselves to a detail of the proceedings at Drury Lane.

Mr. Wallack's "green and young Hastings," as the market-gardeners phrase it, was a very animated piece of acting, and if it had been performed on any other occasion, and when the patient public listen to tragedy, would doubtless have been extremely effective; we must, however, dissent from the mode of dress which Mr. Wallack thought fit to adopt; the white surtout of melo-drame is not the proper costume for Lord Hastings; something like propriety of habit should be attended to, and such a coat as Mr. Wallack produced never was worn in England till within the last seven or eight years.

Mrs. W. West looked extremely pretty, and played the wanton very engagingly; the last scene wanted effect, but we are not surprised at it, for what would avail exertions upon such a special occasion. Mrs. Bunn played Alicia, and played it well; her dress was uncommonly handsome and effective. Mr. Terry played Dumont, and appeared to us, in the midst of the noise and confusion, to say something about the North Pole; whether it was only our fancy, or that it really was so, we cannot say—at all events it must have been an interpolation.

The play over, the awful moment approached when the young hearts of the holiday visitors beat high with anxious expectation—the overture bustled through, up rose the curtain, and displayed the wonders of theatrical magic. We have so often heard Alderman Wood called Lignum Vitæ, that we were rather disappointed when we saw a conjuror on the stage instead of simple Master Matthew; however, as to describing the progress of the pantomime, we despair of such a feat—we know there was Quereo and Malek, and half a hundred other persons with admirably constructed names, and a magical chest doing duty for a travelling carriage; great variety of changes and tricks, and some very beautiful and striking scenery: a view of Fonthill struck us as extremely pretty; and what our friend, Mrs. Ramsbottom (since that is her name) would call "a moving Diarrea," had a most agreeable and novel effect.

Taken altogether, this may be considered as a redeeming performance for Drury Lane, which never was celebrated for this particular class of entertainment: it went off with great eclat, and was received with cheers of applause at its conclusion.

Mr. Kean played one half of Richard the Third last Monday, and Mr. Wallack the other half. Mr. Kean should guard against these sudden indispositions, for his own sake; the immediate comparison of another actor with him in the same character is not at all serviceable to him. Wallack exerted himself most efficiently, and the house seemed to be rather pleased than otherwise with the unfortunate occurrence which robbed them of Mr. Kean's services. We did not ascertain the immediate cause of that inimitable personage's indisposition, but he appeared so weak as hardly to be able to stand; indeed, Mr. Bunn, the patron of Shakspeare, told the audience that Mr. Kean "could not leave his couch," which comes much to the same thing.

TO JOHN BULL.

Sir,—In your Paper of Monday, Nov. 10th, you make such honourable mention of the Episcopal Church, in Scotland, and seem so desirous to befriend her interests, that, while her Bishops and Clergy tender you their best and warmest thanks, I for one, cannot help regretting that you should have so far misunderstood their situation, as to hold them forth to "the notice of your orthodox English readers," as living "under the persecution" of the Rev. Mr. Irving's Mother Church in this country. True—the Bishop of Ross and Argyle is quoted by you as charging the establishment of Scotland with being, "if not hostile to, yet jealous of, every step which we take, or which is taken in our behalf"—but jealousy amounts not to persecution! Nor do I, with all due respect for Bishop Low's authority, and after 33 years' experience as a clergyman, apprehend the jealousy of the established Clergy, either to have been, or to be now, directed more towards dissenting communions than towards other dissenters in Scotland, from their respective numbers! On the contrary, impartial justice to that reverend and learned body of men requires, that as "the annalist of Scotch Episcopacy" from the year 1788 to the year 1816 inclusive," I should present you and your readers with an ample vindication of the established Clergy of Scotland, from the reflections which you have (inadvertently, I doubt not) thrown upon them, in your laudable zeal to serve the cause of Episcopacy.

In a letter, Sir, from the late Dr. Douglas, Bishop of Salisbury, (then of Carlisle) addressed, in the year 1790 (when the Episcopal Toleration Act for Scotland was under Parliamentary discussion), to the late Bishop Abernethy Drummond, of Edinburgh, is the following direct contradiction of what you have unwarily charged against the Scottish establishment:—"I lately put into the hands of the Archbishop of Canterbury, a letter from Dr. Campbell, of Aberdeen, in which he laments to me the fate of your last year's application, and bears the strongest testimony that the granting the indulgence you have petitioned for, will, so far from being offensive, be highly agreeable to those of the establishment in Scotland."* While, in the year 1791, the same excellent prelate, himself a Scotchman, writes to Bishop Skinner, of Aberdeen, in terms equally vindicatory:—"Dr. Robertson, of Edinburgh, having in the most liberal manner recommended your cause to me, I have forwarded his letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury, to whom I gave a copy of what Principal Campbell last year had written on the same subject."†

With principals Robertson and Campbell thus, confessedly, on our side, we run no risk of persecution or of oppression from the body to which they belonged, and who are so justly proud of calling them "brethren!" The good wishes of these eminent men were well known and gratefully acknowledged, as having been efficacious with the legislature on a former occasion—nor can they fail still to have a good effect, should it be attempted, either in or out of parliament, to charge Scottish Episcopalians with holding any article of faith or practice contrary to sound doctrine, or hostile to our establishments in either Church or State; for although on this side the Tweed we are conscientiously constrained to separate from Presbyterian discipline as Christians, we maintain no separation as good and faithful subjects.

Hoping that you will indulge me so far as to insert this letter in your constitutional columns, and feeling deeply your profer of future friendly exertion, I remain, Sir, your grateful and obliged humble Servant,

J. SKINNER.

† See "Annals," &c. p. 313.

TO JOHN BULL.

Sir—Will you admit a few facts, in answer to the rabid Presbyterian, whose letter you published, with very satisfactory comments, in the John Bull of December 15th.

Unable to vituperate the episcopal laity of Scotland, including, as it does, by far the greater portion of the rank and wealth of the country, he calls the Clergy with a few exceptions, "low, uneducated men."

I live in the united diocese of Edinburgh, Fife, and Glasgow. Of twenty-one clergymen in this diocese, seven have degrees from the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, and one from Dublin. We know, therefore, that any one of these eight must have more, both of theology and learning, in his head, than could be found in the whole General Assembly of the Kirk. Perhaps the same might safely be said of the rest of the body, but I speak only to what is certain.

The Universities, at which these Clergymen were educated, attest also their title to be named any thing but low men. I will speak for two, with whose personal friendship I am honoured. Mr. Stewart is a cadet of one of the best families in Stirlingshire; and our venerable Bishop, besides his other claims to universal respect, is second son to the late Sandford, of Sandford, in Shropshire, representative of a family, whose estates have remained in their line since the grant by William the Conqueror, who are allied to the noblest houses in the West of England, and have a well-founded claim to a very ancient peerage. Need I add that the Bishop is a D. D. of glorious old Christ Church, and married a Douglas of Kilhead?

The Scotch Kirk has a Sir Henry Moncrieff, but it wont match this in a hurry. Your constant reader,

Dec. 17, 1823. A SCOTCH EPISCOPALIAN.

TO THE REV. EDWARD IRVING.

Sir,—I had hoped that some one more competent to the task of defence than myself, would have appeared long since; but such not being the case, I am induced, from a wish to rescue the character of the profession to which I belong from the unmerited obloquy you have cast upon it, by endeavouring to stem the torrent of abuse you have thought fit to pour forth against the army in your published orations.

I can only account for the fact of such defence not being previously attempted, by concluding the very virulence of the attack to have furnished its own antidote, and that few or none of your readers, however wedded to your religious opinions, could do otherwise than reject with indignation assertions calculated not only to bring the British soldiery into contempt, but to inspire utter horror at a profession stigmatized by you with the "constant commissal of the most atrocious crimes."

How far you, Sir, or the country at large, may have benefited by the conduct and exertions of the profession you proscribe, is not for me to determine; but I may be justified in prognosticating that when the recollection of your Orations will have passed away, the remembrance of the conduct of the British soldiery (particularly in these latter times) will be held up by grateful recollections of services performed, equal at least to those produced by the lucubrations of a "young, raw, Scotch Dominie," who, with one stroke of his pen, would fain cancel from the memory of their countrymen all feeling on the score of obligation for many hard years of service, and substituting others of the most opposite nature.

Without immediate reference to those assertions, I will reply by stating a few plain facts; in mode more consonant to my habits and profession than any attempt I could make to combat with you in rhetoric, and most certainly more to the point.

You designate the army as "topers, gamesters, devourers of the seed of virtue in the land, and feeders on virginity." The last expression is of so disgusting and horrid a nature as to preclude the necessity of quoting the whole tirade you have judged it expedient to fulminate against my unfortunate profession. Assuredly, most unfortunate! from having so unwittingly fallen under "the Rev. Edward Irving's" surveillance!!!

However, such is the fact, and I imagine it will be sufficient as regulates to the expressions for a specimen of the bad taste that can call scriptural language for the purpose of application so truly christian-like and becoming the demeanour of a minister of Him whose attribute was peace, and doctrine. "Love thy neighbour as thyself."

Farther, as regards fact, I cannot attempt to deny that there may exist among the Members of so large a body as the army, many who may be termed topers, and even gamblers; but there can exist no more reason why the body corporate should be condemned spell-mell for the sake of a few, than that the clergy should be so considered for the transgressions of some of its members. And were I to address you but in half the spirit of bitterness with which you reproach the Members of the Church with crimes even worse than those quoted by you as relates to the military. I apprehend also it will not be too much to admit that the army has produced its illustrious characters as well as the Church, and that the former has on many occasions bled for the latter. If this is admitted, and I believe it impossible to avoid doing so, what apology can the Rev. E. Irving offer for his gross and unmanly attack on the profession he can have "no knowledge of but by report."

As previously stated, no attempt to combat in literature is intended, and a reply is neither expected or desired; but if it creates one atom of feeling with only one individual of his readers or hearers, in favour of the body he has so strongly calumniated, the writer will be more than repaid for the trouble he has taken.

It is sure to clear the scurf, from infancy to old age, and when dressing with it will always keep the head and hair clean and beautiful, and in curl. Will cure sores on the head and hair of children, and is the real sign of roots: Medical gentlemen of the Medical Board who have analysed Prince's Russia Oil, have published in the "Gazette of Health," No. 16, that the discovery is a great credit to the Proprietor, and is superior to any other Oil for the hair, and will do in cases of baldness and weak hair what can possibly be done in strengthening and restoring it. The medical gentlemen have also analysed another Oil, which is daily puffed in the Papers as used by Emperors, Kings, Dukes, &c. and have published in the "Gazette of Health," No. 16, that on examining the ingredients of this grand Oil, they find it contains only common Oil, coloured and perfumed: therefore it cannot be compared to the Russia Oil as a nourisher to the hair. It is no wonder that Ladies and Gentlemen have complained of late of the Russia Oil not being of service to the hair, as they have found out that unprincipled persons have sold them counterfeits. Ladies and Gentlemen will be particular, as imposition is in Great Britain, France, and other different parts of the Continent, have made the covers of the Counterfeit Russia Oil so much like the genuine, and some, more to deceive falsely, have printed on the counterfeit covers, "the original," or "genuine Russia Oil," and some even are so daring, although they know it is punishable, to put the original Proprietor's name. Therefore purchasers should be cautious, and learn of the Proprietor any respectable vender. Ask for Prince's Improved Russia Oil. The ounce bottle five shillings, a large bottle, containing five ounces, one pound, is a saving. Sold by the sole Proprietor, A. Prince, No. 9, Poland-street, Oxford-street, near the Pantheon; and by most principal Perfumers and Medicine Venders. Prince's Russia Oil has been improved with the extra ingredient since January, 1822, through which it will keep in any climate or any voyage. Several Captains who have come from the Continent have declared that whenever they landed merchandize, they have been asked if they had any of Prince's Russia Oil, therefore merchants will find an advantage in exporting it. Merchants and Captains will receive a liberal allowance for exportation. As several Ladies and Gentlemen in the country have been taken in by unprincipled persons selling them Counterfeit Russia Oil, they are will be sure to have the Genuine by sending a remittance to the Proprietor, it will be forwarded immediately by coach.

LATEST NEWS.

Paris papers down to the 26th inst. have arrived: they announce the dissolution of the French Chamber of Deputies.

MONITEUR OF THURSDAY, DEC. 25.—OFFICIAL PART.

Ordinance of the King Louis, by the grace of God, King of France and Navarre.—To all to whom these presents shall come greeting—Considering Art. 50 of the Constitutional Charter—Considering the laws of Feb. 5, 1817; March 25, 1818; June 29, 1820—Considering our Ordinances of 4th Sept. and 11th of Oct. 1820: on the report of our Minister Secretary of State for the Department of the Interior, we have ordained, and ordain as follows:—Art. I. The Chamber of Deputies is dissolved. The Electoral Colleges are convoked throughout the kingdom, they shall meet in the places assigned in the three lists annexed to these presents; those of Arrondissements and those of Departments which have but one College, on the 25th of February next, and the departmental Colleges on the 6th of March.—The Session of the Chambers of 1824 shall open on the 23d day of March next.—2. In consequence the electoral lists shall be published the 16th January, and closed on the 19th July, all reclamations having ceased to be admitted on the 16th inclusively. Their verification and their close shall be proceeded to, conformably to our Ordinance of the 4th September, 1820; and to the operations of the Colleges, conformably to our Ordinance of 11th October, of the same year.—3. Our Minister, Secretary of State for the Departments of the Interior, is charged with the execution of the present Ordinance, which shall be inserted in the Bulletin of the Laws.—Given at our Palace of the Tuileries, the 24th day of Dec., in the year of our Lord 1823, and of our reign the 29th. (Signed) LOUIS.

Jamaica papers arrived in town yesterday, to the 9th ult. They contain the speech of the Duke of Manchester, on opening the House of Assembly. His Grace recommends to the consideration of the House the condition of the slave population, with the object of ameliorating that condition. On the 5th, the House agreed to petition the King on the subject.

THE ARMY.—The 34th regiment has received orders to march to-morrow from Woolwich for Windsor; a detachment will remain at Deptford, for the dock-yard duty. The head-quarters of the 73d regiment, now on their march from Scotland for Ireland, will be at Castlebar: the head-quarters division will arrive there on the 3d of January. The 77th regiment will reach Fermoy to-morrow, on its route to Cork, to embark for Jamaica; the 31st regiment will replace the 77th regiment, in Dublin. It is reported that 300 men have already enlisted for the 95th regiment, now raising; and it is believed the same number has enlisted for the 94th regiment.

We see, by an advertisement in the front of our Paper, that a Masquerade is to take place at the Argyll Rooms to-morrow evening. From what we have heard of the arrangements made by the committee of management, we have no doubt it will be on a very splendid scale.

A comet is now visible in the mornings, two hours and a half before sun-rise, in the south-east, about 15 degrees from the horizon. The nucleus is small, but the tail is brilliant.—Morning paper.

A fellow was apprehended a few days since at Glasgow, in the act of tossing a fire-brand into the cotton-room at a mill in the neighbourhood of Johnstone; the guard fired on his accomplices, who escaped, but must have been wounded, as blood was found on the path they took.

We consider it an act of justice to give publicity to the following letter from the Colonists of New South Wales to their late Governor, eighteen months after he resigned that Government. It is, at this distance of time, a gratifying proof of the high estimation in which GENERAL MACQUARIE was held by those who had the best opportunities of appreciating his public and private character:—

Sydney, New South Wales, April 21, 1823.

DEAR SIR.—It having been unanimously agreed on and determined at a public meeting of the colonists of New South Wales, that "a Gold Cup of the value of five hundred pounds, with an appropriate inscription, should be presented to your Excellency on your retirement from the situation of Governor in Chief of this territory, in order to mark the high esteem and veneration in which your character was held by the inhabitants of the colony," I have now the pleasure to transmit to you the first of Bills of Exchange to the amount of 500l. sterling, (particulars of which are inserted at the foot of this letter,) and to convey to you the wishes of the Colonists that you will be pleased to have a Cup or Vase made of the most modern taste, and in workmanship corresponding with the value of the article, with this inscription:—

The Colonists of New South Wales
Present this Vase,
To their late venerated Governor,
MAJOR GENERAL LACHLAN MACQUARIE;
In testimony of Respect, Gratitude and Affection,
For the Wisdom, the Equity, and Humanity, which distinguished his Government of that Colony, and its Dependencies, during an active and prosperous Administration of Twelve Years.
1822.

I have to request that you will accept my assurances of continued esteem and regard for yourself and family, to whom I beg you will most kindly remember me, and believe me to be, dear Sir, your most faithful and devoted Servant,

(Signed) D. WENTWORTH.

MAJOR-GEN. MACQUARIE, &c. &c. &c.

STOCK EXCHANGE.

So many Holidays have been this week on the Stock Exchange, that there is but little to notice in either the British or Foreign Markets.—The former evinces a tendency to advance, Consols for Account being on Wednesday at 86¼ ⅝, since which day the Market has been shut.—On the Foreign Exchange, Spanish were 26¼ on Wednesday, and some private bargains have since that day been doing at the same price, though not to any extent. Colombian have been at 59¼, but in any other Stock there is nothing to notice.

The demand for the splendid work called NATURE DISPLAYED, has, to this time, exceeded the power of the publishers to prepare them fast enough to meet the demand. The rapid sale of the six volumes, and also of the superb Atlas of Nature, proves that a taste for the solid Studies of Nature is still maintained through the community.

RECTIFIED SPERM OIL, 4s. 6d. per gallon.—UPTON and Co. oilmen and colour manufacturers, 64, Queen street, Cheapside, most respectfully acquaint the public, that by a process entirely new, they are enabled to sell a Sperm Oil so highly rectified, as to equal in purity spirits of wine. This oil being, in the first instance, of the finest quality, and afterwards completely cleansed from every impurity, there is no waste, and its flame is equal in brilliancy to the best gas, with the superior strength and steadiness of an oil light. So unequivocal is its excellence, that it will burn well in every kind of lamp.—N. B. Other Lamp Oil, from 2s. 3d. to 3s 9d. per gallon; Linseed Oil, 2s. 6d. and Turpentine, 5s. per gallon: White Lead, 36s. per cwt. and refined Coal Tar Paint, 15s. which quantity will cover 1000 square feet.

TO Commemorate (the so near) Final Close of Lotteries, Government have given the immense Number of Seven of £20,000! THE BRITISH GUARDIAN; or, Protestant Advocate; LONDON WEEKLY NEWSPAPER. Price Seven-pence.

Nolumus leges Angliæ mutari.

More than 200 years have now elapsed since the awfully desperate attempt was made to annihilate the cause of civil and religious liberty in this country by the secret and sudden explosion of the whole British Parliament then assembled. This sanguinary conspiracy; which, by the blessing of Almighty God, was most happily frustrated, has always been termed the Popish Plot. It must be obvious to every man of common sense and candour, that this designation is not a misnomer; yet the posterity of those who were doomed to be the victims of the dreadful carnage would have forgiven it, if the principles and spirit which originated the abortive enterprise had perished with it. So far, however, from this having been the case, the experience of the last century, and of the present times more especially, ought to convince the most sceptical, that the same spirit, far from being dead, cannot die whilst the system lives!—And as the Constitution of England is essentially Protestant, it is a matter of great regret that notwithstanding the insidious, the persevering, and the too successful designs of its Papistical enemies, no paper at present exists as the professed and ostensible Guardian of the Protestant Cause.

Urged by a consciousness of the necessity and importance of such an undertaking, and animated by numerous assurances of support from the most respectable and highest quarters, the Conductors of THE BRITISH GUARDIAN beg leave to announce to the Public, the appearance of the First Number, on WEDNESDAY EVENING, JAN. 7, 1824. This Paper will contain Foreign News; Parliamentary Intelligence; Law Reports; Ecclesiastical, Military, and Naval Information: in short, every subject usually introduced into respectable Newspapers, will find a place in THE BRITISH GUARDIAN; and the vital support of the Protestant Constitution of this Country, in Church and State, will constitute its distinguishing Character. From its columns shall studiously be excluded all details offensive to the ear, or calculated to vitiate the heart: it will thus become a Journal which may safely be introduced to every family, without exciting the apprehension of the most cautious parent. In this Paper will be found the London Gazettes of Saturday and Tuesday: correct statements of the Markets; and an account of the proceedings of the Stock Exchange. Particular attention will also be paid to Ecclesiastical and University Intelligence.

ADVERTISEMENTS.—In this department of "THE BRITISH GUARDIAN" will be found to possess advantages rarely to be met with in other Journals. From peculiar circumstances, the circulation of this Paper will extend to every city and great town, and even to most villages in England, Wales, Ireland, Scotland, and to all the British Settlements. The terms for Advertisements will be the same as those of other respectable Newspapers. It will be printed on the largest paper allowed by law, folded in Quarto, containing Twenty-four closely printed Columns, in a clear type, and published every Wednesday Evening.—Communications to be addressed (post-paid) to the Publisher, at THE BRITISH GUARDIAN OFFICE, No. 1, Wellington-street, Strand, London; where Orders and Advertisements are also received; and by the Clerks of the Roads, the Postmasters, and all News-venders and Agents in Town or Country. Orders received in Dublin at the Office of Sir A. B. King, Bart., his Majesty's Stationer, by Alderman—C. P. Archer, Dame-street, and by Messrs. Leet and DeJoncourt, General Post Office.
