PRIVATE PUPIL.—A Married and Beneficed Clergyman, resident within a morning's ride of London, and accustomed for many years to receive a few Pupils into his House, has now a VACANCY.—The most satisfactory references can be given to Noblemen and Gentlemen, whose sons he has educated.—Letters to be directed for the Rev. C. J. Mr. Jeffery's, bookseller, 4, Pall-Mall, London.

THE Advertiser would be glad to ENGAGE his ATTENDANCE at a SCHOOL, to assist in TEACHING the French and rudiments of the Latin and Greek Languages.—Letters will be received for the Advertiser, post-paid, addressed to A. B., at the office of this Paper, or at No. 2, Robert-street, City-road.

A MEDICAL MAN, in the Country, who has had the successful experience of some years in the care of MENTAL DISEASES, has to require seclusion from their Friends on account of MENTAL ALIENATION, has a VACANCY for two. The situation of the house is pleasant, and perfectly secluded, and the greatest attention is paid to every circumstance that may conduce to the comfort of the patients. Humane and kind treatment is uniformly adopted.—Mail every day, and coach to and from London three times a week.—For further particulars apply to Messrs. Clode and Richards, Crispin-street, 50 and 51.

GUY'S HOSPITAL.—MEDICAL SCHOOL.—The Spring Course of LECTURES will COMMENCE FEBRUARY 3d, on the Practice of Medicine, and on the Theory of Medicine, and Materia Medica, by Dr. Cholmeley and Dr. Back, Physicians of the Hospital; on Chemistry, by Mr. Allen, Dr. Bostock, and Mr. Aikens; and on Midwifery and Physiology, or Laws of the Animal Œconomy, by Dr. Haighton and Dr. Blundell.

N.B. Lectures on Anatomy and Surgery, by Sir Astley Cooper, Bart. and Mr. Green, will commence on January 20th, at the adjoining Hospital of St. Thomas.

CORONATION.—HENRY ASTON BARKER'S PANORAMA, Leicester-square.—Now Open, a Grand Representation of the CORONATION PROCESSION, with Portraits of His MAJESTY, GEORGE the FOURTH, the ROYAL DUKES, and several others; particularly of the late Marquis of LONDONDERRY, in the full Habits of the Order of the Garter. The Panorama exhibits at least Thirty Thousand Figures!!!—A VIEW of LAUSANNE, with the LAKE of GENEVA, is also open.—Admittance to each Painting, 1s.

ANNUITY.—WANTED TO PURCHASE, from £70 to £100 per Annum, for the Life of a Widow Lady, aged about 60, well secured on Freehold or Long Leasehold Property, in or within 15 miles of Middlesex.—Apply to Mr. Rosser, Solicitor, 29, Red Lion-square; Principals or their Solicitors only; and if by letter, post paid.

THE LONDON WINE COMPANY, 141, FLEET-STREET, conducted on an extensive scale hitherto unknown in this country, and established for the sale of Genuine Wines of superior qualities, give a general invitation to the Public to inspect their Cellars, in which will be found confessedly the largest, and they trust the finest stock of Wines in the world.—It is not their intention to enter into competition as to Prices with some advertising houses, who are at this moment addressing the Public, and tempting consumers to purchase on low terms, than which nothing can be more deceptive, because the facility with which Wines are not only reduced in quality, but mixed with inferior as well as Cape Wines is too notorious, and must convince the most unwary, that purchases of this description will invariably prove dear at almost any price, especially when sold in bottles of the smallest size.

The London Wine Company repeat their assurance that Cape Wines will never, under any circumstances, be admitted into their Cellars, and feel confident, from the magnitude and respectability of the patronage already experienced, that they have only to pursue the line of conduct they have hitherto done, to ensure universal satisfaction. Gentlemen, therefore, favouring the London Wine Company with their commands, may depend upon being most honourably treated, and should not the Wines, &c. give the highest satisfaction, the money will be cheerfully returned.—ALL ORDERS SENT FREE OF CARRIAGE.

The present being the season for laying down Ports, this Establishment is bottling upwards of 500 Pipes, at 40s. 42s. 44s. and 46s. per Dozen, the qualities of which will bear the London Wine Company out against all competition.

Very fine Crusted Port 54s. to 72s.—Fine old Sherry 48s.—Teneriffes 42s. to 46s.—Madeiras 50s. &c. &c. Every description of Spirits, of the finest flavours, and on equally favourable terms, for ready Money only.

TWELFTH CAKES, &c.—JARRIN, ITALIAN CONFECTIONER, No. 123, New Bond-street, having enlarged his premises, and made considerable additions to his establishment, invites the Public to view his extensive collection of TWELFTH CAKES, and other pastes adapted to the season.—Jarrin can, with confidence, recommend his Cakes as equal, at least, in quality to those of any other house in town; and he persuades himself that a single trial will prove that they are cheaper, being decorated in an elegant and novel style, for which no charge is made.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—The rude and unskilful attempts constantly made to supply these substitutes for the masticatory organ, and the disgust which delicacy suffers from the unpleasantry attending them when permanently fixed, have deterred many from adopting the aid and comfort they are capable of affording, independent of the assistance they may contribute to digestion and consequent health. The ingenious application of mechanical science will enable us to obviate all these inconveniences, and allow the wearer at all times to keep the mouth in a state of perfect cleanliness, and to perform the functions of mastication, articulation, &c. with decided ease and comfort.—Mr. NICHOLLES begs to state, that he is in constant attendance from ten to four, and will be happy to give ocular demonstration of the comforts derived from his efforts, under every circumstance of simple and complicated deficiency.—115, Fleet-str.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, DEC. 30.—By a Decree dated the 24th inst. the Chamber of Accusation of the Royal Court of Orleans has sent before the Court of Assize five persons charged with a conspiracy to overturn the King's Government; one charged as an accomplice; one with having made propositions to the same purport; and another with having attempted to enlist persons for the purpose of insuring, by force of arms, the success of the plot.

DEC. 31.—Yesterday, after Mass, which the King heard in his apartment, his Majesty presided at a Council of Ministers.

M. the Count d'Escars died yesterday at one o'clock.

" Et jamais not.e Rome

" N'a connu plus grand cœur, ni vu plus honnête homme."

Amongst the personages who are mentioned as about to occupy the post of Ambassador at London, M. le Duke de Fitz-James is particularly designated.

It appears certain that there was yesterday a Council of Ministers at M. Lauriston's, at which M. Chateaubriand assisted: and at which it was decided that the present Ministry shall remain in office until the meeting of the Chambers, which is fixed for the 28th January.

The Gazette de France says:—We have received, by an extraordinary conveyance, the Madrid Journals of the 24th December. The Sitting of the Cortes, on the 23d, was occupied with the adjourned discussion respecting the economical organization of the provincial Administrations, a question which excites no interest.—According to a letter from the Political Chief of Ciudad Real, it would appear, that an action has taken place against the corps of the partizan Locho, who lost some men.—The Brigadier Sancho has been nominated Governor of Carthagena; several other nominations to military posts, have taken place.—The reports of Mina, up to the 30th Nov. have been published. They are dated from Puycerda.—Madrid continues tranquil; but the Sittings of the Landaburian Society are turbulent.

The Moniteur of Tuesday contains an Ordonnance convoking the Chambers for the 28th of this month, which is above a week earlier than they were expected to assemble.

PERPIGNAN, DEC. 21.—The snow has not ceased falling since Thursday, which has rendered the roads impassable.

BAYONNE, DEC. 22.—General Torrijos, with three thousand men coming from Pampeluna, has struck terror into the Army of the Faith, which was reported to be on our frontiers; but on their arriving at Lombiers, they received orders to march for Arragon to join the remains of the army of Baron d'Erolles.—O'Donnel, abandoned by most of his men, who have returned home again, has himself quitted all the positions he occupied in Navarre, dividing his few remaining troops into small parties.

BERLIN, DEC. 24.—A courier has arrived from Rome, with news that the King had returned to that city on the 8th from Naples, and intended to set out on the 11th, on his journey home by way of Florence, where he would stay only a few days, so that his Majesty may be expected here in the beginning of January.—A great quantity of false copper coin, made in England, has been seized at Coblentz, which, when melted down, lost 72½ per cent.; it was a speculation of some Jews from Holland. Large quantities of this base coin have been seized also at Cologne and Bielefeld, (in the latter place alone 23 cwt.)

Letters from Berlin, dated the 17th, state that the King of Prussia has conferred the functions of the late Chancellor of State, Prince Hardenburgh, on M. de Voss, Minister of State.

STUTGARD, DEC. 24.—Their Majesties the King and Queen, accompanied by her Royal Highness the Princess Charlotte of Wirtemberg, bride of the Grand Duke Michael, set out yesterday morning for Mittelwald, near Insprucck, where they are invited by the Emperor of Russia to meet him on his return from Verona.

SMALIN, DEC. 12.—Letters from Janina, of the 27th ult. announce that the Albanians are in a state of revolt; and that they have raised the grandson of Ali Pacha to the dignity of Pacha.

IONIAN ISLANDS.—(Extract of a private letter).—Chourschid Pacha, suspected of having squandered the treasure of the famous Ali Tebelen, Pacha of Janine, has just paid the forfeit of his head in consequence of the accusation, true or false, brought against him. According to some he poisoned himself immediately after the Capidgi Bachi. Others pretend that the latter cut off his head and carried it to Constantinople, taking with him the treasurer of Chourschid, after whose death all his army dispersed.

New York papers of the 5th of December contain the President's message to Congress. The message adverts to the reciprocal commercial relaxations which have been adopted, since the close of the last Session of Congress, between the United States, and the Governments of France and England, the former relating to the tonnage duty which was imposed on French ships, the latter to the restrictions which had been enforced on the trade between our colonies in the West Indies and the ports of the Union. Informs the Congress of his having suspended the operation of the American laws, upon receiving satisfactory proof that the Governments of Great Britain and France had modified their respective acts in the way required by the United States; & declaims against the hostile and further legislative provisions as will be necessary to give full effect to the existing amicable arrangements. With respect to Finances, it states, "the receipts into the Treasury, during the three first quarters of the year, have exceeded the sum of 14,745,000 dollars; the payments 12,279,000 dollars; leaving in the Treasury, on the 30th day of September last, a sum exceeding 4,128,000 dollars." It then states that the most beneficial effects have resulted from the efforts made by the United States to suppress piracy in the West Indies. It goes on to state, with reference to Foreign politics, that "a strong hope was entertained that peace would, ere this, have been concluded between Spain and the Independent Governments south of the United States in this hemisphere. Long experience having evinced the competency of those Governments to maintain the independence which they had declared, it was presumed, that the considerations which induced their recognition by the United States would have had equal weight with other Powers, and that Spain herself, yielding to those magnaninious feelings of which her history furnishes so many examples, would have terminated, on that basis, a controversy so unavailing, and at the same time so destructive. We still cherish the hope that the result will not long be postponed." The message then notices the unsettled state of Europe, and concludes with recommending a state of preparation to meet any exigency.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS, JAN. 2.—This day, at two o'clock, their Lordships met, pursuant to the prorogation from November last. The Duke of Montrose, the Lord High Chancellor, and Viscount Melville took their seats before the throne, being robed, when the Yeoman Usher of the Black Rod was directed to require the attendance of the Commons in this House. Whereupon John Henry Ley, Esq. the Chief Clerk, attended by the Officers of the House of Commons, came to their Lordships' Bar, when the Royal Commission for the further prorogation of Parliament was read by Mr. Currey, Esq. the additional Clerk Assistant. The Speaker, in the usual style, then declared, that the Parliament had been prorogued to Tuesday the 4th of February next, then to sit for the dispatch of business; and that, accordingly, this present Parliament stood prorogued till the aforesaid day.

IRELAND.

DUBLIN.—His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, attended Divine Service, at the Cathedral of Christ Church, on Christmas Day, and attracted an elegant and numerous congregation. The line of road was crowded on either side, and the shouts and acclamations were truly gratifying. His Excellency was in his state carriage, drawn by six horses, richly caparisoned, the servants all in the state uniforms. His Excellency was attired in a superb blue and gold uniform, with his several orders, &c.; and appeared in the full enjoyment of health and spirits.

A variety of Addresses have been presented to the Lord Lieutenant, congratulating his Excellency on escaping from the late outrage. Among these Addresses was one from Clergy of the Established Church, presented by a deputation: there were present the Archbishop of Dublin, the Bishop of Kildare, and Dean of St. Patrick's (Deans of the two Cathedrals), the Clergy of the two Chapters, and many others of the Clergy of Dublin and its vicinity. The Parochial Addresses were from the parishes of St. Andeon, St. James, and St. Thomas. Public Meetings to address his Excellency have been held at Kilkenny and Belfast.

The three persons charged with a riot in the theatre have been enlarged on bail, themselves in 200l. and two sureties in 100l. each, for each of the persons accused. It is said that informations have been taken against several other persons who were engaged in this nefarious transaction. Report states, that a distinguished Catholic Barrister, of great legal abilities and attainments, and much political celebrity, has been retained, on a fee of 100 guineas, as leading Counsel for the prisoners accused of a conspiracy to assassinate the Lord Lieutenant.

On Wednesday evening, between nine and ten o'clock, five soldiers, of the 5th and 6th Dragoons, passing through New-street, Dublin, quarrelled with some of the inhabitants; a row ensued, the soldiers with drawn swords, and the mob with stones, attacked each other. The mob, after an engagement of some minutes, retreated towards the Horse Police Barracks. The Police sallied out, and endeavoured to make prisoners on both sides; the soldiers, in resisting the police and the mob, inflicted a desperate wound on the peace-officer Dixon, and two of the mob, named M'Cormick and Kirwan. Dixon's right cheek is cut down from the top of the cheekbone to the chin; M'Cormick's skull is dreadfully fractured, and Kirwan is severely wounded. The affair is now undergoing a military investigation.—Dublin Paper.

On Friday night last, a very drunken and fatal fracas occurred at Farmacaffy, near Armagh, at the house of John Quin, a farmer. Quin, a female servant, named Mary Maguire, and Thomas Canovan, who worked for him, assembled in Quin's house, where they drank three bottles of whiskey. In liquor, Canovan was a man of great violence and bad conduct; he seized two iron crooks with which he beat a servant boy of Quin's, named Cullen, after which he broke in a door of a room, into which Quin and the woman retired for safety; he attacked Quin, when the woman seized a loaded gun, and fired at Canovan, who received the contents in his chest and lungs, and caused his death in a few minutes. An inquest was held on Saturday morning. Verdict—"Self-defence."—Quin and the woman have been committed to gaol.—Armagh Volunteer.

CLONMEL, DEC. 28.—On Monday evening, a party of ten armed miscreants came to the house of John O'Ryan, Esq. of Mullogh, county of Tipperary, struck his servant man at the door, and compelled him to go into the house with them to look for candles, in order that they might search for arms. A girl saw the armed party at his door, and alarmed the neighbours, who hastened to the spot, armed with weapons, and though fired upon by a fellow stationed outside the door, as sentinel, pressed forward to the house; on which the marauders fled, and effected their escape.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH.

THURSDAY.—The King v. John Stourges.—This was an indictment against the defendant, described of Coleman-street, for indecently exposing himself in the public-street, Moorfields, to one Ann Burt, aged 12 years, and to other young females.—The Solicitor-General said, the Court would have a very unpleasant duty to discharge in this case. It was unnecessary to detail those circumstances which would be laid before the Jury. Several persons passing observed the conduct of the defendant, who was apprehended and carried before the Lord Mayor. Whilst in the hands of the constable, the defendant offered him any money to let him escape.—John. Blutt, Wm. Gregory, Stephen Creed, and Benjamin Ingham, proved the case against the defendant.—John Judd, constable and keeper of Moorfields, was applied to by Benjamin Ingham to apprehend the gentleman.—The Lord Chief Justice—You need not call him a gentleman.—Witness followed and took him on Cornhill; addressing the defendant witness said, "I believe you have been in Moorfields; he said, "No;" Blutt spoke first, saying to him, "I will swear you have been there;" defendant made no answer; and witness then said, "You must go to the Mansion-house;" in going there the defendant said, "For God's sake don't take me before the Lord Mayor, for I shall be a ruined man, and my family likewise; I will give you any thing to let me go;" witness said, "that won't do."—Ann Burt, apparently about thirteen years of age, examined by the Solicitor-General—remembered being at the Mansion house and Moorfields on the 16th May.—Solicitor-General—That is all I ask.—Mr. Adolphus addressed the Jury for the defendant, and said, as this case had turned out in evidence, he did not think he could do him any service at present, and therefore declined making any defence for him—The Lord Chief Justice observed, it was impossible the Counsel for the defendant could make any defence for his client, unless he could show that these witnesses in what they had sworn were wilfully and corruptly perjured.—Guilty.

Ester v. Hiatt—This action was brought by Elizabeth Ester, against Wm. Hiatt, to recover a compensation in damages for breach of promise of marriage. The plaintiff's father held the situation of clerk in a brewery. Defendant was sent from America to England for education, and put to school in Bethnal-green. James Ester, father of the plaintiff, stated that the defendant, while at school, saw his daughter from time to time. On one occasion he begged his acceptance of 10l. and said, "I will take care of you and pay your rent. You shall never want for any thing whilst I live." The defendant made a promise of marriage to the plaintiff in the presence of the family. The marriage was broken off without any reason assigned. The plaintiff's age was 40; he took the defendant to be 36. The plaintiff and defendant were cousins. The defendant's wife was also related to him in the same degree. Miss Mary Ester, sister of the plaintiff, remembered the defendant coming to her father's house when he was at school, where he remained some years, and then went to Liverpool. She saw him again at her father's house after he had been shipwrecked. They rendered him all the assistance in their power. He paid her sister every attention. He went to America on the death of his father; before he went, he said to witness, "Mary, you are to be witness; if Betsy keeps herself single till I return, I will marry her." The plaintiff promised to keep herself single. The defendant returned in 1820, when he said he should marry her at the earliest opportunity. Her sister said she was quite willing to marry. The defendant, some time after, said he had altered his mind, and should remain single. Her sister was much affected; she fell ill, and a physician attended; she was in a low nervous state, and had never been the same person in point of health since. The defendant gave no reason for breaking off the marriage. In November following he married. He said he would give the plaintiff 300l. to put her in business, and allow her father and mother 30l. a-year. The witness received 20l. from him for her sister. Mr. Thompson proved that the defendant received from his property in the Bank, a dividend of 1,300. Mrs. Fiendhal heard defendant say he had 28 or 20,000l. property in the Bank of England.—The Solicitor-General addressed the Jury for the defendant, and contended that 300l. which the plaintiff had considered sufficient compensation, was the utmost they ought to give. The Lord Chief Justice said, the Jury were not bound in law to confine themselves to 300l. They might consider what would be satisfaction for the injury. Verdict for the plaintiff—800l.

HOME CIRCUIT.

KINGSTON.—MONDAY.—The Commission for this County was o this morning before the Hon. Mr. Baron Graham, at the Se House, Horsemonger-lane, after which the Learned Judge adjo to this town for the more convenient dispatch of business, there no accommodation at Newington for the sitting of the other Jud

Mr. Baron Graham delivered a very short address to the Jury. He observed, many intelligent and excellent persons ha gested the expediency of a gaol delivery at this season of the ye consequence of which His Majesty's Government had directed a circuit. Those persons would now have an opportunity of form judgment as to the wisdom of such a measure. His Lordship, ever, could not help observing, that however advisable it might respected public justice, the season chosen for this experiment not but be deemed inconvenient to many persons whose attend was requisite. This was a season observed throughout all Christe by thanksgiving and joy, and was ill suited to the duties whic proceeding imposed upon the gentry and yeomanry of the country Lordship would say no more upon this subject; and, after short verting to the principal cases in the calendar, he dismissed the G Jury to their room.

Robert Fryett was convicted of stealing, at St. George, South eight penny pieces, and other monies, the property of James W and sentenced to four months' imprisonment.

John Fairborne was indicted for a burglary in the dwelling hou Wm. Wadge, of 13, Waterloo-road, in the night of the 12th of De ber, and stealing a metal watch, his property. The property found in the possession of the prisoner the day after the robbery was proved that the house was broken open; but there being no how it was broken, the Jury found the prisoner—Not Guilty.

TUESDAY.—Thomas Wilson, Edward Rush, and Thomas Br were indicted for breaking and entering the dwelling-house of Tim Bentley, in Camberwell, and stealing six silver tea-spoons, and articles of plate, the property of Margaret Meller Bull. The br ing, entering, and stealing were proved, and when the prosec was called to prove the loss of her property, she admitted, in examination, that she had been married to a man named Conde, having heard that he had been married to another woman, sh him, and resumed her maiden name, by which she was describe the indictment. The prisoners' Counsel then objected that the secutor should have been described in the indictment by the na Conde, there being no legal evidence that she was not properly ried to Conde. Mr. Baron Graham thought the objection, for the fendants offered, was well founded, and ordered an acquittal. The J found the prisoners Not Guilty; but they were detained for the b lary, without regard to the charge of stealing.

Frederick King was indicted for stealing from the person of derick Stephen Smith, on the 13th of November, at Kingston his watch-chain, seals, and key. The case being made out, the soner was found Guilty, and he was sentenced to be confined in House of Correction, and kept to hard labour, for four months.

Joseph Milkin and John Jones were indicted for stealing, at Egh on the 19th of September, a watch-chain, and 23l. in money, from person of Wm. Glazier. The prisoners were found Guilty, and s tenced to be transported for life.

John Howell was indicted for stealing in the dwelling house of J Davis, 35 sovereigns and eleven pounds in silver. The prosecuto a publican in the Borough. On the day in question he had 35 s reigns and 11l. in silver, in a bag. A woman asked for change of a vereign. He took down the bag, which he had placed on a shelf, her the change, and replaced the bag in its former situation. prisoner saw what passed. Shortly afterwards the prosecutor out, leaving his wife in the bar. The latter fell asleep, upon wh the prisoner despatched Jones, a waiter, upon some errand, with kept him out of the way. When the prosecutor's wife awoke, asked the prisoner whether her husband had taken away any th from the bar. The prisoner replied, that her husband had gone with a young man, and had taken away something from the s When the prosecutor returned, he found his money gone, and the soner fled. In the morning of the robbery the prisoner declared had but fourpence in the world, but in the evening he changed vereign at another public-house in the Borough. He appeared great hurry; asked for only two shillings then, and said he would for the remainder of the change another time. The Jury found prisoner—Guilty—Death.

WEDNESDAY.—James Sparks, a miller and farmer at Shalford, Guildford, was indicted for maliciously shooting at Henry Harri a boy about 12 years of age. Mary Harrison, the mother of the b deposed to having gone into a barley-field belonging to the priso about two o'clock on the 15th of August last; she was accompanied her son, and a woman of the name of Briggs; witness saw the priso go across the adjoining barley-field, towards his house; witness went into the barley-field, and had not been there when she he her son cry out, and at the same time heard the report of a gun; ness ran to the assistance of her son, who was bleeding very much the right eye. Witness went up to prisoner, collared him, and cha him with having shot the boy. Prisoner replied, "I wish it had you." The little boy was also wounded in the left leg. Henry H rison and Mary Briggs confirmed the foregoing evidence. Ja Steadman, a surgeon, was sent for to attend the boy, in the afternoon of the 15th of Aug.; he met the prisoner, who said he had had a m unlucky accident; he then told him to pay every attention to the bo the lad had a bruise near the right temple, it had the appearance of small shot having passed into the skin; the bruise was considerable and as the shot had hit a vein there was a considerable effusion blood; witness did not think it necessary to extract the shot as the was of a very scrofulous habit; there was a similar wound on the s of the left leg, from which witness extracted a shot; witness went see the boy the next day, but he was gone to the Magistrate's; w again on the day following, and found him playing; witness has kn the prisoner for 15 years, he always thought him a humane and fee man.—The several witnesses for the prosecution were cross-examin but the only important fact elicited from them was, that the prise was known to have forbidden the gleaners to go upon his groun In his defence the prisoner said, that he did not mean to shoot boy; he did not know the gun was loaded, nor did he put the but his shoulder; he fired it loosely, and, in consequence of its re prisoner's finger was wounded.—James Barshaw, a servant in the ploy of the prisoner, saw his master take his gun out of the house, followed him to see the gleaners, and when the gun was fired; prise did not shoulder the fowling-piece, nor take aim, in consequence not doing so he wounded his finger severely. John Sparks, son to prisoner, said, that about a fortnight before the 15th of August loaded the gun with powder and shot, for the purpose of shooting bits, but not meeting with any, he did not fire off the gun, but h it up loaded in the kitchen. The daughter of the prisoner depose the circumstance of her father having wounded his finger—wit dressed it on his return home with some Friar's balsam. Seven witnesses deposed to the uniform humanity and kindness of the soner, from his childhood to the present time. The Learned Ju summed up the evidence, and the Jury returned a verdict of—Guilty, the prisoner not knowing the gun was loaded with shot at time he fired it off. His Lordship said, that it was highly satisfac to know grounds upon which the Jury had arrived at the conclu expressed in their verdict.

THURSDAY.—George Smith and George Perring were indicte having, on the 14th of December, feloniously assaulted Stephen ter on the King's highway, put him in fear, and taken from his p 2s. his property. The prisoners met the prosecutor, a labouring about two miles from Titsey; Smith drew a clasp knife, and threat to take his life if he did not give up his money quietly; he then one of his hands to his mouth, whilst he took the property fro pocket with the other; on finding the booty so limited Perring they would do for him another night. Verdict—Guilty—Death.

Wm. Anderson was indicted for having, on the 4th of Septem feloniously stolen from the dwelling house of Richard Sweet, in parish of Lambeth, a purse, containing 20 sovereigns, his prop The prosecutor was the landlord of the Crown and Cushion, in Ma gate, Lambeth. At about ten o'clock in the evening of the 4th of tember, the prosecutor went up stairs, and on entering his bed found the prisoner there; a scuffle ensued, and the prisoner ran of the house, but was subsequently taken. Four gentlemen came ward to speak to the prisoner's character.—Guilty—Death. Lordship said, that in consequence of the very good character he sooner had hitherto borne, he need be under no fear of the extre severity of the law.

On Christmas-day, a number of the poor of the city of Chester tended at the Bishop's Palace, when the venerable Dignitary ga each person one shilling, a piece of beef, flour, and a proportio quantity of fruit to make a plum-pudding.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Duke of York arrived at the Pavilion on Wednesday in time to dine with His Majesty. The dinner party, beyond the Royal suite, had no additional increase. The evening party, however, included the Marquis of Bath, the Marquis of Graham, the Earl and Countess of Warwick, Lord W. Thynne, Lady Louisa Thynne, Lord W. Paulett, and a few others of the Nobility, and several officers of the Royal Equileers and Life Guards. The Duke of Wellington and Earl Chatham took leave of His Majesty, and returned to town on Monday.

Dispatches have this week been forwarded from our Government to the English Ministers at Petersburgh and Madrid.

The Sovereigns and Diplomatists have all left Verona. The Emperors Francis and Alexander, and King of Naples, proceeded to Venice, where they attended the Opera, and viewed whatever was worthy of remark in that city.

Lord Amherst and suite will embark in the Jupiter, 60, Captain Westphall, at Plymouth, at the latter end of January, for India.

The Spanish courier, who arrived in London on the night of the 24th ult. with dispatches from Sir William A'Court, our Minister at Madrid, left town on Sunday, with Mr. Canning's answer to them.

We observe, among other entertaining articles in the number published yesterday of that highly popular work, the Literary Register, the commencement of a series on the origin and remote history of the chief towns in England. We know of few subjects so generally interesting, and these sketches will save the antiquarian the labour of wading through many a weary tome of county history and topographical research.—We learn also, from a curious print, accompanied with a description, in the same publication, that we are indebted to the Chinese for that useful instrument in the accomplishment of radical reform—the TREAD-MILL.

THE ARMY.—A detachment of the 4th (Queen's own) Light Dragoons, embarked at Gravesend on the 28th ult. on board the Hon. East India Company's ship Inglis, for Bombay.—One troop of the 14th (or the Duchess of York's own) Light Dragoons, Gen. J. W. Earl of Bridgewater, Col. has marched from Coventry for Abergavenny, where it will arrive to-morrow. One troop is ordered to march from Abergavenny for Birmingham, where it will arrive on the 10th; and a third troop has received orders to march on Friday, the 10th, from Birmingham to Coventry.—The 13th regiment of Foot, General E. Morrison, Colonel, has received orders to embark for India, and relieve the 17th regt. of Foot, Gen. J. Champagne, Colonel, ordered home; the 6th Drag. Gen. G. Earl of Pembroke, K. B. Colonel, has marched from New-bridge to Dublin; the 7th Light Dragoons, Gen. Marquis of Anglesey, K. G. and G. C. B. Colonel, has marched from Dublin to Newbridge; the 65th regt. of Foot, Gen. T. Grosvenor, M. P. Colonel, is daily expected to arrive in England from India, having been relieved by the 20th regt. of Foot, Lieut.-Gen. Sir W. Houstoun, K. C. B. Col. 550 men belonging to the East India Company's service, have embarked from Chatham for India, to join their respective corps in that country.

It is said that it is not intended to train the militia in regiments in future, but to assemble the men in classes, at those periods of the year when they are less likely to find employment, for the purpose of being drilled, under the adjutant, and such non-commissioned officers as may be deemed sufficient to retain on permanent pay for that purpose.

TRADE.—The gun-makers of this town are exceedingly busy in their preparations, under the expectation of bearing of something to their advantage from abroad; some orders have actually been received.—Birmingham Chronicle.

The cotton trade is most flourishing in Lancashire—in several places new factories are building.

Several counterfeit sovereigns have been attempted to be passed lately. They are easily distinguishable by their lightness and ring, though tolerably well executed.

A letter from Plymouth states, that the Britannia of 120 guns, and the Impregnable of 104 guns, are in dock, and fitting for immediate service. The latter is cutting down to a 74. The Windsor Castle, 74, was to be docked next week. The Superb, 78, and the Bulwark, 76, guard-ships, are to be got ready for Channel service. The Gloucester, 74; Phæton, 46; Valorous, 20; Eden, 20; and Bellette, 18 guns, have sailed from Plymouth, for the West Indies.

At Lamberhurst Church, on Sunday, the Clergyman gave notice he was about to read the Act, and hoped whoever left the Church would leave it quietly; the whole congregation then departed, with the exception of three.

The Corporation of Winchester have ordered 1000 bushels of coals to be distributed among the poor of the city and suburbs.

The Archdeacon of Northumberland has established lending libraries in almost every parish in his Archdeaconry, and contributed, at his sole expence, 1800 volumes of proper works. These libraries are under the care of the Minister and Churchwardens, and the books are lent to any parishioner who may apply for them.

It is a remarkable fact, that the press which Voltaire employed in printing his blasphemies against the Scriptures, at Geneva, is now employed in disseminating the truths of the Gospel.

The construction of the new bridge at Weymouth is entirely novel. It is built of stone, with elliptical arches, with a draw-bridge centre, upon the principle of Perronet, for the river Neva, at St. Petersburgh.

A list of the population of the principal towns in Great Britain has been published in many of the public papers, which contains an incorrect statement of the population of Sheffield. It is stated at 42,157; but this is only the population of the township—the parish containing 65,275. Leeds is stated to contain 83,746; this respects both the town of Leeds and also its out-townships—the population of the former being 48,603; that of the latter, 35,143.—Sheffield Iris.

On Monday morning, a wild bullock made its escape from Smithfield, followed by an immense concourse of idle and disorderly fellows, who hooted and bellowed after the irritated beast, until it was excited to an alarming degree of madness; when it reached Broad-street, St. Giles's, it tossed several persons, and gored them dreadfully. On its arrival in the Seven Dials, a street-keeper, named Kendrick, was endeavouring to stop his progress, when it made a run at him, and with great force threw him up into the air; he fell with violence on the stones, where he lay insensible, weltering in blood, for some time. The beast then went down East-street, and at length it was driven into the yard of Coombe and Delafield's brewhouse, where it was kept until it was slaughtered. Kendrick was carried away for assistance in a dangerous condition, having received some dreadful injuries.

ROBBERY OF A RECTORY HOUSE DURING DIVINE SERVICE.—On Sunday morning last, a robbery was committed in the Rectory House, St. Luke's, Middlesex, the residence of the Curate of the parish, while the family were all at church, and the Curate engaged in the duties of divine service. The robbers, finding the door of a chamber leading into a small study locked, cut out a pannel of the door to obtain an entrance; they found there, two large chests and a tin box, containing only papers, letters, and manuscripts; some linen, shirts, sheets, &c. They broke them open, and strewed their contents on the floor; carrying off with them six silver tea-spoons, two shillings and sevenpence in money, a hat nearly new, several silk handkerchiefs, some linen, and various portable articles of dress and ornaments belonging to a daughter of the Curate, who had been spending a few days with her father, and was gone into Sussex to visit some friends there. The whole would be but of small value to the thieves, to re-place which, will cost 10 or 15l. To this may be added, the amount of repairing the damage done by the violence of the robbers, and the mischief of the total derangement of papers and manuscripts, nearly forty years accumulating.

On Saturday se'nnight, at noon, as the postilion of a stable-keeper in Bond-street was conveying a gentleman on the Croydon-road to Brighton, he imprudently ran on the wrong side to pass a heavy cart, which brought him instantly under the wheel. His knee was dreadfully bruised, his shoulder dislocated, and two of his ribs were broken.

Two brothers, named Sewell, one 16 years old, and the other 13, were drowned in a pond at Bassilton, near Stanmore, on Thursday se'nnight. The eldest was skating, when the ice broke in nine feet of water. The younger went to his assistance, fell into the hole, and both went down.

Lord Robert Manners had nearly lost his life on Welby Fishpond, Melton Mowbray, on Friday se'nnight; he was skating with Mr. R, and Mr. J. Norman, when he broke through the ice, and sunk in very deep water. Assistance being procured, he after struggling some time, grasped a ladder which was passed and sprung out. Lord Robert is now recovering, and has presented 50l. to the mistress of the house from which assistance was rendered, and 10l. each to five other persons who were instrumental in extricating him from the water.

Robert Hartley, for attempting to assassinate Captain Owen, was executed at Penenden Heath, near Maidstone, on Thursday.

PUBLIC-HOUSES.—The Magistrates at Bow-street, after some deliberation, determined that licensed victuallers in the parishes within their district should be allowed to keep open their houses until 12 o'clock on Saturday nights, and until half-past eleven on every other night; and that on Sundays their houses must be closed—in the morning from 11 to one; and in the afternoon from three to four, or they will be liable to the penalties, which the Magistrates will be very rigorous in inflicting.

A frigate is ordered to carry out Lord William Bentinck immediately to St. Andero, or some port in the Bay, on a special mission to Madrid.

James Baines, carrying on the business of a horse-dealer at Lewisham, was charged before the Magistrates at Greenwich with passing counterfeit sovereigns. He had passed one to a farmer at Plumstead, in part payment for a blood horse which he purchased, and another to a butcher at Lewisham for a joint of meat; in a drawer in a looking-glass at his house were found three counterfeit sovereigns, separately enclosed in tissue paper. He was committed for want of sureties.

Manners, to the Tyne; J. Puckford, and A. Brown, to the Valorous; J. Adams (A) to the Windsor Castle.

PROVINCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

AYR.—On the 20th ult. James Burtnay, aged 22, was executed here for a rape. He was dressed in a suit of decent mourning, and was more corpulent, robust, and healthy in appearance, than is usually the case with persons in his situation. On arriving at the steps of the scaffold, he was so weak as to require assistance in ascending, and seemed to suffer much mental agony. He was born in Ireland, but came to Scotland when very young, with his father, and wrought at a colliery. He could not write, and read very imperiectly. His ignorance, and an excessive and unrestrained indulgence in the worst of passions, led to this sad catastrophe. Immediately after Burtnay was thrown off, a young fellow, after making three unsuccessful attempts at pocket-picking in the crowd, was apprehended, and lodged in gaol.

BURY.—On Sunday last, an Inquisition was taken at the Bell Inn, on the body of Robert Hovell, five years of age, whose clothes caught fire, and he was so dreadfully burnt that he in a short time after expired. The child, in company with another, was playing on the Saturday evening, and by venturing too near the fire met with the melancholy catastrophe. The Jury returned a verdict of—Accidental Death.—A few days since, an industrious woman, nearly 80 years of age, was robbed of one sovereign, two half-guineas, eight crown pieces, (of past reigns) twelve half-crowns, and a quantity of smaller coin, amounting in all to ten pounds, which the poor old creature had been saving for her declining years.

BIRMINGHAM.—Many very severe and fatal accidents have occurred to children, chiefly by their clothes taking fire, in this town, during the late severe weather. The following are admitted at the hospital: Sophia Sharp, Thomas Collins, Charles Lilly, Emma Maslwood (since dead), Richard Wager (not likely to recover), Sarah Bent, (since dead), Ellen Price, Benj. Rabone, Emma Maxfield (since dead), and Ann Horton. At the Worcester Wharf, a young man, whilst in the act of raising some timber by means of a crane, the chain broke, and the tree fell upon him, which caused his almost instantaneous death.—Between three and four o'clock in the afternoon of Christmas day, the inhabitants of Handsworth were thrown into considerable alarm and consternation, owing to the ice having given way, on which a number of people were sliding, at a mill-pond; a great many people fell in, seven of whom were drowned, two girls and five boys.

CHELMSFORD.—A respite has been received for Benj. Cooper, who robbed Mrs. Stock, of Thaxted, of 17s1. and who, but for this extension of the royal mercy, would have been executed. The two persons apprehended on the information of Cooper, as being concerned in the robbery, when before the Magistrates on Tuesday last, proved an alibi, and have been discharged. The father of Cooper has, however, been committed for trial, charged with being an accessory after the robbery.

LEICESTER.—On Monday se'nnight, about noon, as seven youths, of about 11 years of age each, were sliding on a pond in a brick-yard, the ice broke at one end of the slide, when the whole were precipitated into the water. One of the boys escaped, and gave an alarm; four were taken out dead, and the other two were conveyed to the Infirmary with hopes of their recovery.

LINCOLN.—On Thursday se'nnight some incendiary or incendiaries set fire to all the corn stacks (consisting of wheat and oats) grown on about 40 acres of land, on a farm belonging to Mr. J. Holden, of Revesby. The fire was discovered about four o'clock in the morning by some of the inhabitants. The people were only just in time to release several valuable beasts in the yard adjoining from the devouring element. Mr. Holden, in November last, prosecuted an old offender on suspicion of slaughtering and taking away a sheep from his farm, in Wesville, or being confederate in secreting the same, and he is now confined in Lincoln Castle for trial at the ensuing Assizes for that offence.

LOTHIAN.—On Friday se'nnight, about five o'clock, as a gamekeeper of the Marquis of Lothian's was returning home to Newbattle Abbey, having been out in search of poachers, he observed three men busily working at a new-made grave in Newbattle church-yard, the tenant of which had been recently interred. They had removed all the earth from the coffin, and were lifting it, when he discharged the contents of his fowling-piece at them; which must have taken effect, as loud cries of "Murder! murder!" were heard, and traces of blood seen in the direction in which they effected their escape.

MAIDSTONE.—A reprieve arrived at the County Prison on Saturday morning (28th ult.) for the burglars, Lewis and Oliver, who were left for execution at the late Assizes. On the happy intelligence being communicated to these unfortunate men, their feelings were so overcome that they fell on their knees and remained speechless for some moments. Their conduct while under sentence of death was most exemplary, and they evinced the greatest penitence and contrition.

SHEFFIELD.—A few Sundays since, while the Rev. W. Bull was at Church, on his duty, some villains broke into the Vicarage, and after ransacking many drawers, carried off silver spoons, and other plate, to the value of 25l. A pocket-book had been searched, but a five pound note in one of the pockets escaped the scrutiny of the robbers.

VARGAS; a Tale of Spain.

"It is deserving of much more attention than even new-a-days is commonly bestowed on works of this species. It evinces an accurate knowledge of old Spanish manners and feelings, and characters; and although the author displays little skill in the structure of a fable, he writes with a spirit that carries one through his volumes with unflagging interest. In a word, had this book appeared ten years ago it must have produced a sensation.——We have no hesitation in saying, that it is an imitation of the Waverley Novels: but it possesses merits of its own—such as call for a degree of notice very different from what we, or indeed any other Reviewer, have ever thought it worth while to bestow on the clumsy and crude attempts at imitation of that author's manner with which the press is continually loaded. The scene is laid on a fresh and fertile soil—the characters are strongly drawn—and the style is clear, nervous, and muscular—above all, quite free from that sickening excess of fine words, amidst the music of which, too many of our present writers of prose fiction seem to think they may disguise the poverty of their conceptions.—After giving two long extracts from the work, the Reviewer adds—"We trust, the episodic passages are enough to excite any ordinary reader's curiosity to have a sight of the lock in which they occur. We assure the author, that we ourselves shall look, with no small interest, to the appearance of his next work."—Blackwood's Mag. Dec. 1822.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We wish to correct an error in our last. It was said that the Lady B. we alluded to in a former Number was NOT a Countess—the fact is, she IS a Countess, and the correction arose from the ignorance of the person who made it of the facts, which are as notorious in every Club in London as SEFTON'S mildness or CREEVEY'S vulgarity.

We will make enquiries about the indecency at Brighton.

The Norfolk Meeting took place too late for our notice this week.

Our other correspondents must stand over.

PRICE OF STOCKS AT THE CLOSE, SATURDAY.

At the close of the Market Consols for Account were 81 sellers.

We have noticed in another part of our paper that erroneous statements are made by some of the daily papers, which materially affect the state of our public funds. A statement appeared in the Morning Chronicle, in the month of October, of this description, which had the effect of depressing the 4 per Cents. considerably below their value—the statement was, "that the Minister would pay off that stock in the ensuing year." Now, it is obvious that such a measure would be impracticable, unless the Three and half per Cents. were considerably above par—the present price is 92. There is no probability of the old being paid off before the new, consequently both stocks are equal in value, with this exception, that there will always be one per cent. more interest due on one than on the other alternately, as the Dividends become due. The new are due on the 5th of January and the 5th of July; the old on the 5th of April and the 10th of October. It is clear, therefore, that the interest of proprietors would be best promoted by consulting their brokers early, as the change will be made on much better terms now than by deferring it till the time approaches for shutting, as the Stock always advances when the Dividend is nearly due, and by making a change now the Dividend would become payable in three months. If we understand the subject correctly, a profit of from two to two and a half per cent. may be made by the exchange.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, JANUARY 5.

IF we have not of late touched upon continental politics, it is because—we are compelled to acknowledge the fact—we knew little or nothing about them. We are not so destitute of resources, however, as our readers may at first sight imagine, for we have had offers, upon very "fair and reasonable terms," from more than one gentleman, who would have supplied us with correspondence from every Capital in Europe, at a fixed price per sheet. We disclaim any regard to economy, in declining these offers of service; but we really conceived that we were equally ingenious, and fully as competent, to carry on the war, as these professional gentlemen from the neighbourhood of the Strand; and who never travel beyond the sound of Bow-bell. How they would have found leisure to exercise their ingenuity for us, considering their constant occupation through the week, we cannot take upon us to say, for we never had any further communication than was necessary,—politely to decline their offers.

That such persons are most useful in their vocation, cannot reasonably be denied, by any man who can afford sevenpence per diem, and insists upon having four closely printed folio pages of NEWS, every day in the year, for his money. That they are most ingenious, must also be granted; and the power which they exercise over the wills and actions of mankind, from the shores of Hindoostan to the banks of the Wolga, and throughout the known—and, indeed, terra incognita of the world, is as edifying as it is miraculous. The Project of Momus, for which he was refused a patent, on a well-known occasion, was mere child's play to the modern mode of peeping into the hearts of men. An honest artificer in this mystery, shall sit himself down, at any given moment, in a blind alley in Fleet-street or Blackfriars, and extract the very quintessence of every secret of the hermetically sealed Councils of the PORTE, or inform you, to the minutest angle, in what direction the eyes of the Imperial ALEXANDER were cast, when a specific OFF or ONOSKI has whispered a measure of State expediency into his ear.

It is true, that these gentlemen do not always concur in their reports, and it has happened, that when two or more have agreed to peep at the same moment into the Court of Madrid, or of Naples, or of Paris, their accounts of things contemplated—and things going on therein, which, when they come to be compared with each other, have differed as widely as black and white. Perhaps they take their observations through different MEDIA; but this is of secondary importance, because all questions—setting aside the intervening lights and shades—logically admit of a direct affirmative and negative, so that in the end, one of the gentlemen is pretty sure of being nearly right. This is no small consideration, taking in all the difficulties, which to a common reader must appear to be insuperable. Nearer home, indeed, the matter is more simple—and the ease and facility with which these gentlemen ascertain what is going forward in the breasts of our Ministers, and even in the most hidden thoughts of Majesty itself, may be considered as the results of fixed data—and observations taken from their particular gait and demeanour—a turn of the countenance, or by the age—even the hours of going to bed, or rising in the morning.

The fashionable world supplies its own materials, and pays, instead of being paid, for having its minutest actions exposed to public view. Of certain politicians, we say nothing—they are said "to pay through the nose," to conceal what they have most at heart!

Perhaps we shall be deemed too fastidious in declining such auxiliaries, but although we might be satisfied with alleging that Sunday is not the day for hashing all the state meat of the week,—we think it more honest to acknowledge our strong suspicion of there being considerable HUMBUG in all this, to which our readers have long ago perceived, we have a most inveterate antipathy. Some rash people, have even ventured so far, as to charge the crime of Stock-jobbing upon certain of these general Correspondents, and, unquestionably, have produced instances, where a convenient letter, from the "Banks of the Elbe," has made things "look up" or "down," according to the prognostics of certain speculators at home; but these, we have no doubt, were the result of some strange coincidence, and the Blackfriars Correspondents guilty of nothing beyond the innocent exercise of their creative talents. At all events, the MORNING CHRONICLE may always be depended upon, for there are few connected with its patrons who have any thing to do with the Funds; and every fact of importance, is prefaced by an assurance of its being upon the "BEST AUTHORITY," which, if it should afterwards require contradiction—and this will happen, sometimes, in the best regulated Journals, the contradiction or qualification is supported by the same accredited testimony, which a man must be very scrupulous, indeed, to doubt, when he sees it in print.

Self-excluded, then, from these prolific sources of general information, we content ourselves from time to time with noticing the signs of the times, and with reasoning upon plain and obvious facts, when they approximate to any thing in the shape of British interests. In truth, we have quite enough to do in watching those interests at home, which are infinitely less likely to be affected by continental policy than the "Unholy Alliance," which is seeking to set us by the ears—and to root up the principles and maxims which have placed us on a height that commands rather than awaits the decision of surrounding nations.

We think war between France and Spain inevitable, if either power acts consistently with its own avowed principles. War—unless certain concessions are made by the Spanish Jacobins—was determined upon by the Congress of the Continental Powers. Those concessions comprise the system, and consequently the abettors of it—who, without the usurped power they now possess, must stand on the footing of traitors and malefactors. Such men cannot be expected to vacillate between an attempt to retain that power which is at present sovereign—and the alternative of the GALLOWS! They are neither in a temper nor in a situation to hesitate upon such a question. War, then, is inevitable—if it depend upon their answer to the manifesto put forth by France. Our daily papers have been fighting manfully, with their missions from correspondents, and their own speculations upon the terms and character of this state paper, as if the passions and feelings of a country were pourtrayed in any document it might be necessary to send forth to the world. Word it as you please, in plain English or in plain French, it tells the Spanish rebels, that, if they do not retrace their steps, France will at least attempt to make them do so. They can't—they won't do it—and war, we again repeat, is inevitable.

The policy of the war is another question, and this being of an abstract nature, is fairly open to speculative discussion. We should certainly be disposed to declare against it—not upon any of the grounds set up by those "lovers of peace," who would fraternise with the disciples of ROBESPIERRE to "let loose the dogs of war" upon civil and domestic life—not because we acknowledge the principle that the internal affairs of a country are never to be subject to external interference, but because we are firmly persuaded that the Spanish Radicals, if left to themselves, would, by their tyranny and abuse of power, speedily fall under the vengeance of their countrymen; whilst the public spirit and sense of common danger excited by hostile invasion, will, on the contrary, give them a stimulus, and at least a temporary accession of power, to prolong their reign of tyranny and terror over the Spanish people.

The policy adopted by MR. PITT, in the revolutionary war, was induced by the necessity of preventing the spread of a contagion which threatened our existence as a nation. We were not prepared to meet the plague on our own shores, and it was necessary to shut our gates against it. But the times are altered, and a very different policy, in our view of the case, is called for on the part of France towards Spain. The latter cannot create an army, and nothing will enable her to do so effectually but the spirit which foreign invasion will excite among the people. In the mean time, persevering in the system of watching them on the very confines of the country, and leaving the very general sentiment of hatred and disgust, which really exists against these usurping demagogues, to work its own way, we have no doubt of the ultimate triumph of the Constitutional Royalists.

Jacobins are Jacobins wherever they exist, whether under the denomination of Radicals, Carbonari, or Landaburians. The total abandonment of all the principles of faith, morals, and humanity, which is a necessary qualification for the sect, excludes all confidence even in the most necessary union of interests. Traitors at heart, they invariably become traitors to each other, and what we see every day going forward among the apes of jacobinism in this country—the petty squabbles and "shewings up"—the mutual exposures and rancorous recriminations which here serve only to awaken a spirit of contempt, afford an epitome of the history of jacobinism when in the ascendant. It has been said that "there is honour among thieves,"—among JACOBINS and RADICALS there is none. They think no more of a brother than a KING, if he stand in their way.

Naturam expellas, &c. &c.—The MORNING CHRONICLE received its cue to take an ultra tone of indignation at the insult offered to the Representative of Majesty in the person of the MARQUESS of WELLESLEY,—only because the culprits might, by implication, be supposed to be attached to a loyal party in the State. What would these worthies have said, to a Tory who should have implicated LORD GREY and the Whigs, in the conspiracy of THISTLEWOOD, merely because the love of LIBERTY was the rallying word of both! No matter. The CHRONICLE felt so awkward in its new vocation, and had been so trained to treat, as a "good joke," any thing like kingly assassination, or jacobinical aggression, that in laughing at his own hypocrisy, the veil dropt from his face, and out popt the following Jeu-d'Esprit on Tuesday last, upon what, for a week previously, he had been gravely assuring the public, was the most atrocious and bloody attempt of a party, which ought to be put down BY ACT OF PARLIAMENT!

THE BOTTLE.

"In Ireland, they vow they ne'er saw such a Head,
"Or of pushing about 'the dear Cratur' such dread;
"And PAT says, 'By Jasus! he's not fit for us,
"Who for cracking a bottle can make such a fuss!"

Oh, what a glorious thing is consistency!

RADICALISM AND THE MORNING CHRONICLE.

WE have not unfrequently been taxed by certain good easy men, who call themselves moderate Whigs, with a want of candour in confounding Whiggery with Radicalism; and of misrepresenting the views and policy of those who have nothing so much at heart as the peace and happiness of the country, although they watch with a jealous eye the measures of government. We have, in answer to the whimpering appeals of such simpletons, satisfied ourselves with recording our determination to expose HUMBUG wherever we found it dabbling with the public interests—and to hold up to merited contempt that mock liberality of the present day, as the completest and most dangerous of all HUMBUGS hitherto practised upon the gullibility of mankind. The MODERN WHIG is, in fact, JESUIT; he never means what he says—nor ever speaks without a mental reservation. We of course are speaking of the "GENERALS OF THE ORDER," and it is only by watching them through their several disguises, and pursuing with perseverance their tortuous course, that we can finally discover what they would be at.

We noticed last week the burthen imposed by its masters upon the CHRONICLE, of puffing the Edinburgh Review, in order to keep the tottering veteran upon its legs. Whiggery is no longer the monopolist of Edinburgh literature, or Scotch readers. It is beaten out of its strong holds—and MR. JEFFREY cannot, as formerly, proclaim ex Cathedrâ—his political and moral Dogmata, ad Caterwam Togatorum, in the parliament close. The policy of "the Parent Society" in London, therefore, is obvious, and in the common course of Whig practice, is in the regular course of business; but, as usual, there is a latent object, which, it was hoped, might be attained without attracting the public attention to its motives—and which it is our duty to expose.

We are egregiously misinformed—which is very seldom the case on these matters—if we could not name the very date and circumstances at HOLLAND HOUSE, when "A REVIEW," to be opportunely published towards the close of the year, upon "MR. CANNING'S Reform Speeches," was resolved upon and DONE!—The difficulties which have arisen from the unlooked-for depression of Radical feelings among the lower orders of the people, have rendered the business more urgent, and made it necessary to combine all the scattered resources of the party in this direction. There is no time to be lost—the fourth of February is a short day, and "all hands must be piped up!" MR. CANNING has contributed more than any man to unmask the humbug of REFORM. A new crop of sophistries, therefore, which he could have no opportunity of exposing, was to be supplied by a particular day, and the Edinburgh Reviewer completed his order in due time. Unfortunately nobody noticed it. This was not to be borne, and the CHRONICLE is summoned to his post, to attest that it has been most "virulently attacked by the Government Papers." The truth of which assertion may be ascertained by any gentleman who chooses to take the trouble of simply referring to what are called the Government Papers during the last week!

With the Review itself we have nothing to do. MR. CANNING'S opinions, which it professes to analyze and combat, have anticipated and answered all that these metaphysical blockheads could or can say upon the subject. It contains merely what HUNT would utter in plainer and more intelligible terms, and JEREMY BENTHAM in incomprehensible ones, and so far JEREMY is the safest political guide of the three. HUNT, however, is, at all events, by far the most honest. He thinks he sees a harvest ripe before him, and tries to put in his sickle at once; whilst the Whigs beckon him back, like the Cornish Parson on the news of a wreck, in order that they may "all start fair." It is true he is honest in proportion to his weakness; and if we give the others credit for "all the talents" they still boast, their honesty may be ascertained by the same ratio. But the bluntness of this man injured the cause, by an avowal of its real and ultimate objects, and it is now found expedient to drive him forth out of the camp as a SCAPE GOAT!

"MR. HUNT," we are told, "called himself a REFORMER, wore (actually) A WHITE HAT, and liked to be followed by a rabble!"—Mark, gentle reader, this is the advertised description of a Radical Reformer by an ORTHODOX WHIG. In order to let him down as quietly as possible, for "auld acquaintance" sake, it is added—"moreover the character of some of his followers was not always calculated to stand the test of inquiry!"

So much for MR. HUNT—he has THE MARK fixed on him, and is conducted to the limits of whiggery, with all those of his compatriots, who have not characters "to stand the test of inquiry," with a WHITE HAT, and a disposition "to be followed by the rabble!"

Will our readers just take the trouble to refer to certain speeches of certain great men during the last Session of Parliament, touching this same WHITE HATTED REFORMER, which cost the country 40,000l.?—Will they do us the favour to refreshen their memories by a recurrence to "the associations" in which the BROUGHAMS, the BENNETS, the BURDETTS, and the HUNTS sat "cheek by jowl," and "hail, fellow, well met, on hustings and at board," with this so cruelly reprobated WHITE HAT, in order to ascertain those nice and beautiful shades of distinction, which the Whigs, in a sudden fit of coquetry, have just now discovered?

But this is a mere matter of speculative amusement, which, in a leisure hour, may be added to the folio catalogue of Whig consistencies, and opened indiscriminately, with the other games of the season, such as "forfeits," "beggar my neighbour," or "beat knave out of doors." The only fact we have at present to do with is, that for certain purposes, MR. HUNT is positively and officially Gazetted out of the corps. He is, in simple terms, a REFORMER—neither WHIG-RADICAL nor RADICAL-WHIG. And what are the signs by which we are to know such an one? We are told that they are—first, SELF-ACKNOWLEDGMENT of the fact; secondly, A WHITE HAT; and thirdly, A DISPOSITION TO COURT THE RABBLE!

Truly, we do much fear, that some confusion may arise out of this description—definition is a bothering business at best; and we cannot but anticipate the sad consequences of a blunder upon so important a question! My LORD GREY himself "professes to be a Reformer"—"wears a white hat;" and if we may credit all we hear, (which we are very far from professing to do) is uncommonly fond of talking to, and being followed by, that description of persons, whom the CHRONICLE (why or wherefore, we are at a loss to understand) just now rather uncourteously calls the "RABBLE;" ditto MR. BROUGHAM; ditto SIR FRANCIS; ditto my LORD HOLLAND; ditto MR. HUME; ditto my LORD FITZWILLIAM; ditto MR. HONE; ditto my LORD DUNCANNON; and ditto others, "whose characters, moreover, are not always calculated to stand the test of enquiry!"

MR. HUNT avows a sort of independence: so, it may be said, do the others; but no—it is a very different sort of independence; indeed, all the difference between profession and practice. He—like a tinker turned Methodist preacher—has set up for himself; and finding no preferment ready for him, in a party which has appropriated all the good things to itself before it has got them, chooses to form his own congregation, ho are ready to cater for themselves. He is a bold DISSENTER; and an ORTHODOX WHIG has no mercy or toleration for those who do not swallow all his dogmas with as little ruple as his Holy Catholic allies do the words of my LORD ETER!

That men have been scared out of their principles by MR. UNT'S WHITE HAT—and that even their own Members, ring the last Session, trembled on the Opposition benches, hen Ministers even hinted or leered towards this WHITE UARD against the inclemency of the weather! No wonder en, that the disposal of THIS HAT has occasioned as much eat and ferment in the Whig Cabinet, as in a conclave of ardinals. It was like the little old man on the shoulders of INDAD, the sailor; it clung—it stuck to them; it impeded eir movements. LORD GREY could not bear it—HUME uld not beat it—BENNET whimpered at it; but it required, cording to SIR FRANCIS, "a strong pull, a long pull, and a ll altogether," to rid them of this "extrinsic" symbol, hich, strange to say, induced men to believe, that it was another word for Whig principles, fairly understood; and that those who did not embrace its principles, were not genuine Whigs."

So, at least, says the CHRONICLE; and it is really refreshg to observe with what infinite naiveté they appear just ow to have discovered that the country has laboured under is delusion! and with what a profundity of ratiocination ey seek to undeceive the good people of England, by provg, beyond the power of contradiction, that the difference, d the WHOLE difference (for we may omit "professions," d "liking to be followed by the rabble," as things in comon,) between a WHIG and a RADICAL is—A WHITE HAT!!! But what is the immediate result?—Why, that MR. UNT, with his WHITE HAT on his head, is only a REFORMER, and that a TRUE RADICAL is a TRUE WHIG, proded he be duly enrolled by MR. CREEVEY, or my LORD UNCANNON, in the PARTY. This, indeed, we have always ntured to affirm, in the face of this very MR. HUNT, who constantly denied this honourable distinction to the PARTY Whigs!—Hinc illæ Lachrymæ.

Do not let them suppose we are bantering—we will call the parties onselves into Court to give their evidence to the fact, previously oposing, as a "riddle-me-ree," (we cannot forget the merry-making ound us,) the amount of debt said to be due from the country to "THE LUSTRIOUS HOUSE OF RUSSELL," by MR. CHRONICLE and his assesrs. Take it in their own words:—

"THE DUKE OF BEDFORD, to whom the country OWES SO MUCH!! is PARTICULARLY deserving of its gratitude for the COURAGE with which he came forward at a County Meeting, about eight months ago, and said, 'I OWN MYSELF A RADICAL!!!'"—Now, really, to his Grace justice, setting apart his undecided claims upon the untry, it did require COURAGE—and COURAGE bordering upon what e are too delicate to name in a nobleman, to make such an avowal, anding, as his Grace did, before hundreds, or thousands, as their porters always say, of men, who certainly preferred their own interests to those of himself! Revelling in property, which nothing but cophancy and subserviency to the will of the most lawless monarch ho ever sat upon the throne of these realms could have secured to s family and himself, his Grace's discretion was at least equal to his urage in avowing principles which (recollect by their own admission, nce the Whigs have deemed it expedient to expel the WHITE HAT,) e directly to subvert the Government, to overthrow the Monarchy, to range the Laws, and to redeem into the hands of the "rabble" what ey are told is their legitimate birth-right!

So much for his Grace's "COURAGE." As to the amount of the debt gratitude due for this display of it, we must leave the public to calate it for themselves. We believe it would even puzzle JOSEPH UME himself to make it out in "dittal!" But that public is yet to e informed, and perhaps to be a little surprised, at the important esults of this magnanimous act on the part of his Grace; for he is to nderstand that it has acted like a talisman, and, with all the properes of a charm about it, has actually been working upon us for several onths past, without our being in the smallest degree sensible of it; ungrateful do we acknowledge ourselves to be, that we fear we ust have omitted all mention of "the instance" at the important eriod;—we plead decidedly guilty to having forgotten it until the resent flapper from the parties themselves. What, therefore, must e our astonishment to find the following extensive and overbearing etail of its consequences.

"After this,"—that is, after the short and pithy speech which his race seems to have uttered without once being obliged to sit down, "After this, there was nothing more to be said."—Certainly not; ll parties must agree in this. "Even the most devoted of the Clerical Magistrates felt that the charm was dissolved."—This is surely a is-print, for it seems it was just beginning to operate—"and began to display a prudent reserve in 'the use of the term.'" Does MR. HRONICLE mean to insinuate that the FELLOWES's, the CRESWELLS, the HEPHERDS, and the BATHURSTS were ashamed of it as soon as his race adopted it? For shame, Sirs; "call you this backing your iends?" "It lost its dyslogistic properties for ever;" to use the phraeology of MR. BENTHAM.—And a very pretty phraseology it is.—A RADICAL DUKE! What a DUKE may be any man may be!"—hat is to say, we presume, a Duke may be guillotined, and so may ny man. This is indeed a pure instance of EQUALITY! "beheading," ccording to our old-fashioned notions, makes all the difference.

We have so far endeavoured to help our readers over the difficulties ith which this laboured manifesto abounds; but we confess ourselves loss to fix the precise meaning intended by the authors to the following additional specimen of high-toned principle and sound moality. "When respectable men become JESUITS, the term Jesuitical will no longer be a reproach!" Do they mean to say, that if his race of BEDFORD had declared himself a JESUIT, it would have been o term of reproach to call the WHIGS JESUITS? How unfortunate that is Grace should prefer being a RADICAL at that particular crisis; since e might otherwise, without fear of impeachment, have called so many "respectable men" by a title to which we have long ago considered them as having a very just and legitimate claim. But now omes the pith—the precious drop, congealed within this nucleus of Whig policy, for which the doubting Whig has been thus ingeniously repared. "The various County and District Meetings SINCE—when? where?—we shall find ourselves standing upon our heads presently without knowing it)—have completed the triumph."—If so, the hing is done, and there must surely be the end on't. The halcyon ays of Liberty and Equality have beamed upon us without our aving the smallest perception of them. Such a victory, gained by he Duke's prowess in uttering five words without stopping, and laboured by such a triumph, can go no farther, it might be supposed. ut read on, gentle reader, and learn that "the MEETINGS about to be held—(aye, there's the rub)—will afford a further exemplification of the unavailingness of THIS WORD as a bugbear."

One single extract more. "JACOBINISM," it tells us, "had its day; and at one time, woe to the man who had the misfortune to be called JACOBIN. The RED CAP haunted him in his solitary walks, and even in his dreams. But it was made too free with!"—So that JACOBINISM, which has no meaning or acceptation, but as representing REGICIDE, MURDER, RAPINE, PLUNDER, and CONFISCATION, when adopted by respectable men," like the Whigs, prevents JACOBIN ever after from having held a "term of REPROACH!"

We have by chance laid our hands upon the following paragraph, om the TIMES newspaper of Monday last, which affords no uninteesting comment upon the foregoing communication:—

"A few days since, LORD HOLLAND and the DUKE of BEDFORD visited Westminster Abbey, for the purpose of viewing the monument to the memory of the late MR. FOX, which has lately been placed at the outside of the choir, nearly opposite to the great north entrance. After inspecting the monument for some time, these Noblemen gave orders for the removal of the cap of liberty, which had been placed near the bust of the deceased. The cap has accordingly been removed!!!"

These noble patriots had omitted to inform Mr. Editor, of their intention; and, indeed, considering their former instructions, they could ardly have suspected him of committing so egregious a blunder, as o make mention of the RED CAP, in the same breath which was designed for ever to blast the pretensions of the WHITE HAT!

A NEW SONG.

Addressed to the FREE and INDEPENDENT Electors of PETERBOROUGH, on hearing that the celebrated MR. THE LOVES OF THE ANGELS.

THERE is a convivial good nature and perpetual pleasantry about little MOORE which never fail to win those with whom he associates; the pretty manner in which he accompanies his own trifles on the piano forte, and the adroitness with which he manages the little voice he has for the amusement of the ladies, entitle him indisputably to the pre-eminence he holds amongst the entertaining people of the day. These claims and attractions, however, (admitted and acknowledged as they are) must not blind us to faults and follies, the exposure and censure of which are but acts of friendship towards an author, and of justice towards the public.

MOORE has, in the character of a deceased friend, made such of our women as have read him blush, at least—perhaps do worse. As THOMAS BROWN, the younger, he alarmed every well-regulated person for the gratification of the WHIGS, and in the true spirit of SIR CHARLES HANBURY WILLIAMS (that splendid example of delicacy and pure taste, furnished to the present generation by the exertions of the Junta at HOLLAND HOUSE) attacked all that was great or good, male and female, and especially the latter, making inroads into private life never before attempted, and setting an example of grossness, which it required an antidote, partaking even, in some degree, of its own nature, to repel.

In his own proper person he has put forth sundry ideas and principles, in rhyme, and little anecdotes of sun-dials and cupids, and Rosa, and Fanny, together with certain lists of lovers, and modes of kissing, and histories of what lovers did in groves, and what they "did not," with which fathers and husbands have quietly suffered their wives and daughters to amuse themselves; admitting into their circles details of circumstances and avowals of feelings at which they would have been actually horrified had they been spoken, but which ceased to be indelicacies when sung to pretty tunes.

Yet, with all these sins, and with LALLA ROOKH, and the Lyceum Opera of M. P. or the Blue Stocking, at their backs, we must admit, that in every thing he has hitherto produced, we have caught a flash of genius here and there, a bright though laboured thought, or a pretty redeeming passage. But it is a painful truth to tell, that in the "Loves of the Angels," of which we are about to speak, we have in vain searched, "with microscopic eye," for those miniature gems which heretofore were wont to sparkle in the midst of his wilderness of words.

MOORE'S "LOVES OF THE ANGELS" was announced, some weeks since, in the CHRONICLE, as "exceeding in thickness LALLA ROOKH." At the time, we noticed this recommendation as somewhat equivocal, but as we perceive, in point of fact, the last poem does not contain an equal quantity of matter to one-fourth part of LALLA ROOKH, we discover, either that the CHRONICLE was as well informed upon this subject as it appears to be upon those of greater importance, or that it meant by thickness a sneer upon the quality of the present production.

The first great leading feature in the character of Whig and Radical writers is a love of misrepresentation. It is only a fortnight since that we had the resolution to read forty-seven pages of a play, by LORD JOHNNY RUSSELL, founded upon a whole string of historical misrepresentation. Here we have a poem avowedly originating in an exploded mis-interpretation of the Holy Scripture, on a subject of the most sacred nature. The misinterpretation we allude to is that which has formed the subject of many controversial works, and occurs in the 2 v. of the vi. chap. of GENESIS—

"And the sons of GOD saw the daughters of men, that they were fair, and they took them wives of all which they chose."

DR. MANT and the BISHOP of KILDARE coincide upon this verse in thinking, that by the sons of GOD (interpreted in the Book of ENOCH as angels) is meant the posterity of SETH, while, by the daughters of men, are designated the race of CAIN.

BISHOP HORNE appears to throw over all doubt as to the real interpretation, and says,

"These daughters of CAIN proved to the sons of SETH what the Moabitish women were afterwards to the children of Israel, and what women of bad character always will be to men of good ones, who are no wiser than to contract alliances with them in a state of error and delusion."

STACKHOUSE also laments the credulity of those interpreters, who, led away by the authority of the Septuagint, supposed that wicked and apostate angels assumed human bodies, and became the fathers of a race of giants upon earth, and amongst others, thus deluded, ST. AUSTIN himself appears one of the most positive.

Upon the subject of the creation of angels, although they are not expressly mentioned by MOSES, in the 1st of GENESIS, BERRINGTON attributes the silence of the sacred historian to a proneness of the Gentile world, and of the Jews themselves, to Idolatry, as does indeed, SEVERIANUS, treating of the same matter; but in the "Annotations" upon GENESIS, a better reason still is given;—

"That the first history was purposely and principally for information concerning the visible world, the invisible of which we know, but in part being reserved for a better life."

The period at which the angels were created is, in some measure, important to the conduct of MOORE'S poem; and as every body knows, is a point upon which many great men have differed. BISHOP HOPKINS tells us, that the Socinians held it to have been within the six days' creation; while, on the other hand, some divines consider, that the words of JOB—

militate against that supposition. Here, as the reader will perceive, the difficulty about the specific words again arises; yet, not only CARYL, but DR. LIGHTFOOT, admitting this to refer literally to angels, see no difficulty in the passage; indeed, DR. LIGHTFOOT is of opinion that the angels were created on the first day.

The erudite GILL, in discussing this point, says, that although angels have no bodies, yet, as they are creatures, they must have an ubi; and it is, therefore, reasonable, to suppose that GOD made the heavens first, and then the angels to dwell therein. We are sorry that we have not room to follow up this subject, so vitally connected, as it is, with the propriety of MR. MOORE'S poem, nor indeed, to trace the proximity of the MAHOMETAN doctrine to that adopted by the lively bard upon the authority of a notorious blunder; but we must find a place for the following conclusion, to which MR. MOORE has been pleased to come: having previously admitted that the whole of his work is founded upon error—he says—

"The foundation of my story, therefore, has as little to do with Holy Writ, as have the dreams of the later Platonists, or the reveries of the Jewish divines; and in appropriating the notion thus to the uses of the poetry, I have done no more than establish it in that region of fiction, to which the opinions of the most rational Fathers, and of all other Christian theologians have long ago consigned it."

Here we pause for a moment. MR. MOORE takes the present means of mixing up the fiction, which has been overturned by all Christian theologians, with HOLY TRUTHS, which neither the flippant versification, nor the glowing figurativeness of MR. MOORE, can undermine or shake. He brings before our eyes the fanciful fallen angels of fiction, in contact with the ALMIGHTY; nay, the chere amie of one of GOD'S angels becomes herself an angel, by the personal interference of the Supreme Being, upon the repetition of some countersign, given in heaven to her lover, and she is accordingly carried up from his arms and our eyes, in that state of beatification.

If, then, MR. MOORE admits, as he cannot fail to admit, the history of these fallen angels, and of their conduct, to have no foundation, except in his little finite mind, and that they are themselves the creatures of his humble imagination, how durst MR. MOORE presume to associate these visions of poetry with an acknowledged—an adored DIVINITY?—how durst he, we ask, venture to mix up exploded errors with received truths; and presuming upon the authority of that which he knows to be false, impugn, or at least deteriorate from the pure excellence of that which, in charity, we hope he believes to be true?

Having given an opinion as to the design of this work, we shall proceed to consider its execution; and we confess, that we had much pleasure in finding, as we read through the stories of the three angels, that the whole affair is perfectly harmless; its innate and intrinsic absurdity disarms it of the power of doing mischief, further than that which arises from a familiar mention of the Supreme Being, and his attributes; and which, considering the general state of decent society, will rather excite a disgust towards all that is prophane, than a contempt for what is sacred.

The poem opens with an account of three angels sitting upon a hill; and, as the whole action rests on a misrepresentation, so it opens with a blunder. We are told, that—

"When the world was in its prime,
"When the fresh stars had just begun
"Their race of glory; and young Time
"Told his first birth-days by the Sun;
"When in the light of Nature's dawn
"Rejoicing MEN and Angels met
"On the high hill," &c.

This, too, was before sorrow came; in short, it was in the beginning of the world. And this being admitted, who the men were, who rejoiced with the angels, we are at a loss to discover, as we are, indeed, who the "mortals" might have been, who ——"Saw without surprise,

"In the mid-air, ungelic eyes
"Gazing upon the world below."

The author seems equally puzzled with ourselves, and therefore we pass over what appears to us a glorious incongruity, merely because we have no disposition to cavil at trifles.

At this period, however, (whenever it is intended to be) three angels were sitting in the sunshine, on a hill, talking of heaven till, as is not unusual with persons of minor importance, they agreed to tell each his own story, for the amusement of his companions.

The first of these angels—MR. THOMAS MOORE'S angels, the creatures of his imagination, with whom he has an undoubted right to take what liberties he pleases, is described as one—

"Who, even in HEAVEN, was not of those "Nearest the throne, but held a place
"Far off, among those shining rows
"That circle out through endless space,
"And o'er whose wings the light from HIM
"In the great centre falls most dim."

The second, the "unheavenliest one," is a much wickeder, and, as we find, naturally, a much more agreeable angel than the first—

——"O'er whose brow not love alone
"A blight had in his transit sent,
"But other earthlier joys had gone,
"And left their foot-prints as they went."

What disorder the angel had incurred, by his imprudence, or what the marks it had left, we are not informed; we are inclined to imagine, that it must have been drinking, to which, in addition to love, MR. MOORE'S angel must have been addicted; which, as many Whigs of eminence both dead and alive well know, very ordinarily leaves its marks.

Memory has the honour, in the next line, to be compared to a resurrection man, "lifting each shroud;" and having invoked her aid, the first angel tells his history, and a most admirable history it is. It begins thus:—

"'Twas in a land, that far away
"Into the golden orient lies."

Which may be exceedingly good Angel tongue or Irish grammar, but which sounds oddly to our "unaccustomed ears." In this land, however, the angel, while "taking a fly" in the air, perceives the beautiful but "fatal sight" of a young woman washing herself in a pond, who "moved in a light of her own making;" he descends slowly to catch a nearer look of her, and he says,

"The tremble of my wings all o'er
"(For through each plume I felt the thrill)
"Startled her!"——

And we are not much surprised that it did, considering all things. She immediately gets out of the water and takes root on the bank, and looks like what?—a sun-flower! And the angel, ashamed at finding her quite undressed, informs us, that,

"In pity to the wondering maid,
"Though loth from such a vision turning!
"Downward I bent, beneath the shade
"Of my spread wings, to hide the burning
"Of glances," &c. &c.

When he pokes his head out from his wings, shortly after, with a "side-long look," the girl is gone. It is unnecessary to observe, that when the young lady jumped out of the pond, the angel fell into love, and from that time he is perpetually worrying himself about her, and hunting all over the neighbourhood till he finds out where she lives; he then calls upon her, and hearing her sing, he is very much pleased, and discovers, moreover, that her name is LEA. She was, however, mighty chilling; she appeared whiter than lilies, and was colder than ice. For one look, the angel says, for ——"One stray desire

"I would have torn the wings, that hung
"Fivrled at my back, and o'er that fire
"Unnamed in Heaven their fragments flung."

It is, however, all in vain: and her passions, about this period, take a most extraordinary turn, for instead of any of those earthly common jog-trot feelings which the angel expected to find in her, she spends her whole days and nights in

"Wishing for wings, that she might go "Out of this shadowy world below,
"To that free glorious element."

This unconquerable propensity for flying increases, and moreover, she wishes to be the spirit of a "beauteous star,"

"Dwelling UP THERE in purity."

"UP THERE," meaning colloquially "HEAVEN." The four following lines are, we consider, too blasphemous for repetition.

At page 14 we have the same mode of designating HEAVEN resorted to; the hero calls himself

"A creature born up there."

At this point of the history the angel finds out that, by his wicked ways on earth, he has considerably weakened the power of a spell which he received (as this abominable story goes) from the DIVINITY!!! to be used whenever he wished to rise to heaven, and, says the angel,

"Once too was so nearly spoken,
"That my spread plumage, in the ray
"And breeze of heaven, began to play,
"When my heart failed—the spell was broken—
"The word unfinished died away,
"And my checked plumes, ready to soar,
"Fell stuck and lifeless as before."

His reason for refusing to return to heaven has in it much of that morality which distinguishes all the writers of the same school.

"No matter where my wanderings were,
"So there she looked, moved, breathed about;
"WOE, RUIN, DEATH, more sweet with her
"THAN ALL HEAVEN'S PROUDEST JOYS WITHOUT!"

These words are not put into the mouth of a sighing mortal lover, who, in an extacy of passion, might utter words quite as nonsensical and almost as prophane, but into the mouth of one of GOD'S angels, who has had the blissful happiness to dwell IN HEAVEN, and who is made here to compare, after knowing its nature, and comparing, to give a preference to the indulgence of a libertine passion on earth to the proudest joys of eternal life in the world to come.

He proceeds in an edifying description of his passion, its rise and progress; and then, following the fashion of more modern lovers, takes to drinking, turns his head till fancies get into his brain, which are described to be ——"Like wild-fires,

"That walk this earth when day retires."

He pursues his object most indefatigably, and recurring to the former estimate of the blessings of heaven, he says—

"Then be it so—if back to Heaven
"I must unloved, unpitied fly,
"Without one blest memorial given
"To sooth me in that lonely sky!"
"One look like those the young and fond "Give when they're parting—which would be,
"E'en in remembrance, far beyond

We are then favoured with the "thrilling touches of lips," and a desire on the angel's part to put "cheek to cheek" with MISS LEA, to which he urges her, observing, that his ——"Plumes have stirred,

"And tremble for their home on high."

Upon which she enquires what the word is he is to use to get up by, and he, not being so wise as the Freemason who gave his wife "salt beef and carrots" as the magic words upon which the whole mystery of the craft depends, tells her; upon which she, with a sharpness quite consonant with her prudence, uses it herself, and the moment she cries it out, what will our readers fancy happens?—

"At her back I saw unclose
"Two wings, magnificent as those "That sparkle round the Eternal Throne."

And sans ceremonie up she goes, surrounded by light, while he tries in vain, much after the manner of one of old COKE'S over-fattened turkies, to fly after her, flapping his wings, which stood him in no stead, but lay dead

——"As they have lain
"Since that sad hour, and will remain—
"So wills the offended GOD—for ever!!!"

The moral of this extraordinary jumble of the mystical and allegorical with sacred and prophane appears to be, that the heroine was saved at a very critical moment by her curiosity, and perhaps her faith. For our parts, we most strenuously advise the young ladies of the present day, for whose edification the poem is evidently written, to trust neither to the strength of their disposition for research, nor to that "wit" which served MR. MOORE'S Miss LEA "at a pinch." If modern girls (who, doubtlessly, will be allowed to read this moral book) should happen to put a reliance, in the hope that at a certain defineable and defined minute, when they have gone quite as far as they possibly can go without imminent danger, a great pair of wings will bud out of their shoulders, and carry them away from their presuming lovers, we are inclined to fear that they will be somewhat disappointed; and, in the sequel, may discover that gentlemen of the present day can fly without wings as "fatally fast" from them subsequently, as in the pure undated times of MR. THOMAS MOORE'S Angels, the lady ascended from her well fledged enamorato—

"With golden crowns, and wreaths of heavenly flowers."—POPE.

With this extraordinary flight of poetry and Miss LEA, this most absurd story of the first Angel concludes, and here, till next week, we must conclude also; and we will ask, whether, as far as we have gone, we have not justified our unqualified expression of detestation for the abominable mixture of the most sacred subjects with mundane matters and earthly passions, and for that daring and sacrilegious introduction of GOD and HIS HEAVENLY KINGDOM into a story, which, to take MR. MOORE'S own published view of it, and upon which he grounds his only excuse for having written it, has "as little to do with the Holy Writ, as have the dreams of the later Platonists, or the reveries of the Jewish divines?"

AT the request of several correspondents, we publish the following official account of the EARTHQUAKES IN SYRIA.

"To the Right Worshipful the Company of Merchants of England trading into the Levant Seas, London.

"Near the Ruins of Antioch, 13th Sept. 1823.

"RIGHT WORSHIPFUL SIRS—It has fallen to my lot to relate to your Worships the particulars of an event that has thrown most of the families of this part of Syria into sorrow and mourning, and all into the greatest difficulties and distress.

"On the 13th August, at half-past nine in the evening, Aleppo, Antioch, Idlib, Riha, Gisser Shogr, Darcoush, Armenas, every village, and every detached cottage, in this Pachalic, and some towns in the adjoining ones, were in ten or twelve seconds entirely ruined by an Earthquake, and are become heaps of stones and rubbish, in which, at the lowest computation, twenty thousand human beings, about a tenth of the population, were destroyed, and an equal number maimed or wounded. The extreme points where this terrible phenomenon was violent enough to destroy the edifices, seem to be Diabekir and Merkab (twelve leagues south of Latachia,) Aleppo and Scanderoon, Killis and Kahn Shekoon. All within those points have suffered so nearly equally, except Orfa and Latachia, which have not suffered much, that it is impossible to fix on a central point. The shock was sensibly felt at Damascus, Adeno, and Cyprus. To the east of Diabekir, and north of Killis, I am not well informed how far the effect extended in those radii of the circle. The shock was felt at sea so violently within two leagues of Cyprus, that it was thought the ship had grounded. Flashes of volcanic fire were perceived at various times throughout the night, resembling the light of the full moon; but at no place, to my knowledge, has it left a chasm of any extent; although in the low grounds slight crevices are every where to be seen, and out of many of them water issued, but soon after subsided.

"There was nothing remarkable in the weather, or state of the atmosphere. Edifices on the summits of the highest mountains were not safer than buildings situated on the banks of rivers, or on the beach of the sea.

"Although slight shocks of Earthquakes had been from time to time felt in this country, it is certain that for several centuries none had done any material damage, except one twenty-seven years ago, when a single town, Latachia, was partially thrown down. In 1755 an Earthquake was felt at Aleppo and Antioch, which so alarmed the inhabitants, that they all abandoned their houses for forty days, but very little injury was sustained, and no lives lost.

"The appearance of some very ancient edifices render it probable that this country has not suffered from Earthquakes since the memorable one recorded by Gibbon, about sixteen centuries ago (I speak from a very bad memory), in which one-third of the inhabitants of Antioch perished, when that celebrated city was supposed to contain a population of seven hundred thousand to eight hundred thousand souls.

"It is impossible to convey an adequate idea of the scenes of horror that were simultaneously passing in the night of the 13th August. Here hundreds of decrepid parents, half buried in the ruins, were imploring the succour of their sons, not always willing to risk their own lives by giving their assistance.

"There distracted mothers were franticly lifting heavy stones from heaps that covered the bodies of their lifeless infants. The awful darkness of the night, the continuance of the most violent shocks, at short intervals, the crash of falling walls, the shrieks, the groans, the accents of agony and despair of that long night, cannot be described.

"When at length the morning dawned, and the return of light permitted the people to quit the spot on which they had been providentially saved, a most affecting scene ensued. You might have seen many, unaccustomed to pray, some prostrate, some on their knees, adoring their Maker. Others there were running into one another's arms, rejoicing in their existence! An air of cheerfulness and brotherly love animated every countenance.

"In a public calamity, in which the Turk, the Jew, the Christian, the Idolator, were indiscriminate victims, or objects of the care of an impartial Providence, every one forgot, for a time, his religious animosities, and, what was a still more universal feeling, in that joyful moment, every one looked upon the heaviest losses with the greatest indifference. But as the sun's rays increased in intensity, they were gradually reminded of the natural wants of shelter and of food, and became at length alive to the full extent of the dreary prospect before them, for a greater mass of human misery has not been often produced by any of the awful convulsions of nature. A month has now elapsed, and the shocks continue to be felt, and to strike terror into every breast, night and day. The fear that they may not cease, before the rainy season commences, has induced those whose business cannot allow of their quitting the ruins of their towns, instead of rebuilding their houses, to construct temporary hovels of wood without the walls; and many families, who thought themselves, before this calamity, straitly lodged in a dozen of apartments, now exult at the prospect of passing the winter in a single room, twenty feet square.

"The spacious mansion, that has been the residence of the British Consul at Aleppo for two hundred and thirty years, is completely ruined, although not entirely fallen, and would require £10,000 to repair it.

"The houses of all the other public agents and private European individuals at Aleppo, have been likewise entirely ruined. At Aleppo the Jews suffered the most, on account of their quarter being badly built, with narrow lanes. Out of a population of less than three thousand souls, six hundred lives were lost. Of the Europeans only one person of note, Signor Esdra de Picciotto, Austrian Consul General, and ten or twelve women and children, perished; but the greater part are now suffering from ophthalmia and dysenteries, occasioned by their being exposed to the excessive heats of the day and the cold dews of the night. When it is considered, that two-thirds of the families in Aleppo have neither the means of making a long journey, to remove to a town out of the effect of the earthquake, nor of building a shed to keep off the rain, it is impossible to conceive all the misery to which they are doomed the ensuing winter, or ever to find more deserving objects of the compassion and charity of the opulent, whom it has pleased God to place in happier regions of the globe.

"Here planks and fuel are cheap, and the people have the resource of tiles, which they were taught to make by the crusaders, in their long residence at Antioch; but in Aleppo, where wood is very dear, they have no contrivance to keep out rain but freestone walls, and flat roofs, made of a very expensive cement.

"The roof of the vaulted room in which the voluminous archives of the British Cancellaria in Aleppo are kept, has not fallen in, and it is hoped it may preserve them from wet till the spring, when it will necessary to remove them.

"In the mean time, your Worships will be pleased to inform what is your wish should be done with these books and papers.

WE lay before our readers the copy of a Petition against New Marriage Act, which has been prepared at Bath.

To the Honourable the Commons of Great Britain and Irelan Parliament Assembled; the humble Petition of the Inhabitan the Parish of Walcot, in the County of Somerset.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR HONOURABLE HOUSE,

WE, the Inhabitants of the Parish of Walcot aforesaid, humbly proach your Honourable House, to submit to your consideratio grievances to which all ranks of persons have been of late subject in consequence of certain provisions contained in an Act passed in third year of his present Majesty, intitled "An Act to amend cer provisions of the Twenty-sixth of George the Second, for the be preventing of Clandestine Marriages." Those grievances affect s as seek marriage by licence, and such also as seek it by banns; their consequences tend greatly to the increase of immorality and v in all conditions of people. The difficulties which the 8th Claus the Act, places in the way of those who seek to be married by licer consist—first, in the necessity for identifying, in the manner ther appointed, the person seeking the licence, with him to whom the tract from the baptismal register relates; for in such cases, it has b necessary to bring persons from very great distances, to th great expence, as well as manifest loss of time, and hindrance of bu ness, in order to prove such identity;—secondly, in the necessity n imposed, for proving the full age of persons, where it cannot be qu tioned; such as those who have filled offices during several yea which offices they could not have filled originally, had they not been of the full age of twenty-one years; and of this, instances frequently occurred, to the great inconvenience of the parties thirdly, in the obligation layed in Clause 8, on widowers, as w as others, who shall be of full age, to prove their birth by an attest certificate, and the oath of a witness to their identity; while widowe who shall be under age, are virtually exempted from that same nece sity, by the exception, "not being a widower or widow," in the 9 Clause.

The consequence of these impediments has been, in regard to t class of persons who would seek marriage by licence (in this parish that they have, in many instances, gone to Ireland and to Scotland procure marriage, in order to avoid the trouble and inconvenie arising from those enactments, to which they are encouraged by t last Clause in the Act, so that it has proved rather an encouragem than a prevention of clandestine marriages. And the many difficul which are presented to them previous to marriage, all of which m be eluded by a false oath, offer a fearful temptation to the commis of wilful perjury. With regard to such persons as seek marriage banns the difficulties are equally great. The objection, which v generally prevails, against the exposure of their names on the chu door, may, perhaps, be deemed unreasonable; and yet, when i considered that such objection has actually produced the effect of m ing the parties openly declare, that they would "take each oth word," (which is to say, that they would prefer illegal and sinful habitation, before marriage) and act upon such declaration; i humbly conceived to be not unworthy of the attention of the legis ture. But an evil yet greater, consists in the expence of the affida which must be made in proof of the necessary residence, according the 16th Clause. To many—very many of the poor, the sum of shillings, which must be paid for the stamp, is more than they by any means command, in consequence of the present low rate wages for daily labour, together with the necessary maintenance themselves. That this is a great and crying evil, your Honoura House will find, if enquiry be made into the matter: to your Pe tioners, it is manifest, since there are at this day four persons, kno to the officers of this parish, who refuse to marry women now w child by them, merely because they cannot afford to pay for t affidavit; if that objection were removed, they profess their re dinate to marry the future mothers of their own children. The consequence must be a great increase of vice, since such children not likely to be brought up in virtuous and honest habits, and the b tidening of parishes with bastards. Nor can it be doubted, that t same objection daily operates in the same manner in very many ca which escape observation. The multiplicity and frequency of oa required by this Act, must, it is to be feared, tend to diminish in t minds of the common people in particular, that awful reverence w which so solemn an appeal to the Almighty ought always to be garded; and thus induce them to think more lightly of the heavy cri of perjury, not only in these cases, but in those also wherein the li and properties of their fellows shall depend on the veracity of th oath. The difficulties which occur in regard to the matters to proved before marriage, (all of which may be done away by fa swearing, and that, in most cases, with every prospect of impuni afford a very alarming temptation to that crime; more especi when coupled with the assurance which is felt, that the marria however viciously obtained, cannot be set aside when once it s have been solemnized. That such perjuries will in most cases p with impunity is manifest, from the refusal of individuals, in most stances, to prosecute, where felonies have been committed to t injury, on account of the heavy expences attendant upon that cour And in the case of the poor, among whom the offences will probably of most frequent occurrence, it is certain that the offenders will rare if ever, be brought to punishment; because the officers of paris commonly balance the expences of the particular prosecution aga the advantages which the parish may expect to derive from it, and ; side accordingly on the course which they will pursue. Lastly, Y Petitioners humbly represent to your Honourable House, the gr offence and scandal which has arisen from the general feeling pressed in the Church of this parish, (and as is reported in many oth also,) on occasion of the reading of this Act during divine service, the departure of very many of the congregation, with much noise, disgraceful symptoms of disgust, to the dishonour of the Church of Religion, and to the great offence of Almighty God. For th reasons, and moved by these considerations, your Petitioners hum approach your Honourable House, and pray that such parts and p tions of the said Act to which they have now referred, and which contained in the 8th, 9th, 10th, and last clauses of the same may be pealed, or otherwise amended, as your Honourable House in its dom shall think fitting, so as to prevent the evils, and remove mischievous effects above mentioned, by which your petitioners themselves to be aggrieved, and the interests of religion and mora to be very materially endangered.

Signed by order of the Vestry.
C. A. MOYSEY, Chairman

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR—Your paper is sometimes devoted to the exposure of chicane if you think these remarks worthy public attention, be so kind a insert them.

Some persons have heard with pleasure, a late decision in the C of King's Bench, which they think will be of very beneficial portance to the community, in the administration of the criminal of this country, especially in this great metropolis; and they ar opinion, that decision cannot be too widely spread and made know town and country.

any thing; whilst the real well-wisher to his country, the man of sense and deliberation, watches the favourable moment to attain so desirable an object, after any public grievance has been duly considered by those in authority who are competent to decide. The remarks made in this letter, are occasioned by the subject matter having been decided by the venerable Judges of the land, who have settled the point of law, in a clear and undisputed opinion.

About the 15th of November last, an action for damages was tried in that Court, Coxe v. Coleridge.—The plaintiff an attorney, who sued a Magistrate of the county of Lincoln, in damages, for an assault. It appeared in evidence, a charge of felony had been preferred against a man, before the Magistrate, and the attorney employed by the person charged, insisted, for the purpose of examining witnesses, and producing opposite testimony, to be present in the Justice Room; but the Magistrate, thinking his presence might be dispensed with, as it would better serve the ends of justice, not only prevented him from speaking, but turned him out of the Justice Room. The question before the Court was, whether, in examinations before Justices of the Peace, on charges of felony and misdemeanour, a party accused has a right to demand the assistance of a lawyer?

The Counsel for the Magistrate, among other objections, stated a case that daily occurs at the Police Offices, and in this point of view many persons think the subject of great importance; he supposed, one of a gang of thieves being apprehended, the attorney present at the hearing, might convey information of what passed at the examination, to other of the gang, against whom evidence had been offered, whereby their apprehension might be prevented, who would, in all probability abscond from justice.

The Court saw the force of this objection, that great mischief might arise in such a case, and gave their opinion, that a Magistrate has a right to prevent an attorney interfering, and a right also of turning him out of the Justice-room; for great mischief might arise should the attorney be present. Can there be any doubt that the daily practice of permitting the pettyfogging part of the profession to give their assistance to the numerous gangs of thieves in and about this city, is one great cause of their increase?—Is there any doubt of this fact?

So alert are the thieves of the present day, and so numerous the gangs, so widely extended are their operations, that no sooner is a robbery committed, and the thief apprehended, than one of his associates runs to an attorney; by the time the delinquent is placed at the bar the attorney is brought forward, and supports him. Does not the legal assistance so quickly obtained encourage and harden the juvenile offender? If no such assistance could be obtained, and an immediate examination take place on apprehension, he might be induced to confess his guilt, and impeach his more guilty and experienced associates. This practice of permitting attornies to be present causes delay, and protracts by legal quibbling the fair and impartial administration of justice.

Every Magistrate is, or ought to be, a judge of evidence, and ought to know how far the law agrees with matters of fact brought before him; in 19 cases out of 20 it is easy to determine.

The constant study of many a pettyfogging attorney is to attain a knowledge of chicanery; they know all the quibbles that will protect the rogue in evading the law; they are constantly called in by the gang; and being adepts in their profession, puzzle and confound the honest prosecutor. They are so crafty as not to commit themselves as Jonathan Wylde did, by being an adviser before the commission of an offence, but lay still till called in after it has been done.

To counteract this baneful practice, the Magistrates may, by this decision, exercise a discretionary power, and forbid these men advocating the cause of so many abandoned characters. Do not the public prints announce robberies daringly committed both by day and by night, so that the honest and industrious part of the community scarcely know how to protect their persons and property? They require protection at the examination of the rogue, when supported by the legal aid of these vermin; and it may be fairly asked, would not many a gang of thieves be broke up if it was known legal assistance could not be so easily obtained in the first instance?

This decision does not infringe the sacred right the most abandoned culprit has to the protection of the law. The committal by the Magistrate is only evidence that the Magistrate thinks he has received sufficient to put the offender on his trial; then he may have all the assistance the law gives, by counsel and by attorney, in making his defence. But in the first instance to afford him this assistance, is not consonant to reason and justice, and not the law of the country.

Dec. 24, 1822. EQUITAS.

TO JOHN BULL.

Sir,—Having been for some time abroad, I had not, until recently, an opportunity of seeing the inside of Westminster Abbey in its renovated state. A few days ago, however, I attempted to enter by the door at Poets' Corner, but found a large chain fixed across the doorway. One of the Abbey showmen soon made his appearance, and informed me, that, if I wanted to see the interior of the whole building, I must pay two shillings. I said I should only look at Poets' Corner, which used, I believe, to be always open to the public, without payment for admission. "You must pay ninepence," said the guide, "for seeing that part of the building." Well, I paid my ninepence, and expected that at least some important improvement should appear. This I looked for in vain. The monuments, indeed, were cleared of their ancient venerable dust, well burnished, and whitened: but, in doing this, they have defaced much of the inscriptions, many of which are at present totally illegible. The old monuments look now as fresh and gay as the erections of the present day; and certainly much of the solemnity and venerable appearance of the Poets' Corner (and I presume the rest of the Abbey is in a similar state) has been brushed away in these recent proceedings. At all events, is it just to charge every individual ninepence for the admission into that place?—You, Sir, have so often, and so properly turned your mind to these subjects, that I hope you will excuse this intrusion from a constant reader.

These Silks being purchased entirely out of the ordinary way, induces the Proprietors to make a public offer of them, added to a select Stock of Levantines and Durape Silks, which are exclusively of their own Manufacture, must give to the Fashionable World an advantage never before offered, there being made to distinction; a single Dress length being sold at the same price per yard as 20 pieces; rich single Gros de Naples, 2s. 6d. to 2s. 9d.; double do. the most pleasing shades, superior to French, 3s. 6d. to 4s. 6d.; rich Ducapes, 3 quarters wide, 4s. to 4s. 9d.; 668 pieces of choice colours, in Levantines, French width, 4s. to 4s. 6d.; Fancy Stripe Silks, 2s. 2d. to 2s. 6d.; ditto, Persian Silks, every shade, for linings, 1s. 4. to 1s. 7d.; 60 pieces all-wide Silk Gauzes, every colour, 11d. and 1s.; ditto, Gossamer Gauzes, for turbans, 1s. 2d. per yard, commonly sold at 2s. 6d.; the remainder part of a manufacturer's stock of Gauze Dresses and Scarfs, at half-prices: rich Scarfs, 3-yards long, with embroidered ends, 7s. and 8s.; rich Gauze Dresses, 15s. 16s. and 17s. commonly sold at 30s. and 2 guineas; 20 pieces of black and white Sattins for slips, 2s. 6d. per yard; very stout ditto, for dresses, 3s. and 3s. and 4s.; 60 bales of India Long Cloths, got up entirely free from dress, measuring 25 yards, for 15s. 6d. the piece; a beautiful article, in real Madras cloth, 25 yards, for 20s.; these cloths are particularly suited for families going abroad, especially for the East or West Indies; DAMASK TABLE CLOTHS AND NAPKINS, this is an article which ought to claim more than ordinary attention, as SEWELL and CROSS, take upon themselves to say, that Four Thousand Pounds Stock of Table Linen, purchased of an unfortunate manufacturer, will be sold at little more than half-price, or TWENTY-FIVE PER CENT UNDER ITS ORIGINAL COST; Irish and Russia Sheetings, from one yard-wide, to the widest size, which prevents the necessity of a seam, much recommended to families: 400 piece of coloured Moreens, for curtains, (a great bargain) every colour, 1s. 3d. per yard, and 200 of the best double quality, every shade, 1s. 5½., commonly sold at 2s. 2d. at SEWELL and CROSS'S, 42, Frith-street, Corner of Old Compton-street, Soho-square.—Families taking the Advertisement with them, may depend, with satisfaction to themselves, of having any article at the prices advertised, which is contrary to the unpleasant mode so frequently adopted in the West part of London

IN SIX EASY LESSONS OF ONE HOUR EACH.—MR. BRADBURY, Private Tutor at Westminster School, solicits the attention of Ladies and Gentlemen to his unrivalled and infallible system of beautiful PENMANSHIP, whereby he pledges himself to teach persons of all ages to write with ease, elegance, and expedition, (whatever may be the deformity of their present writing) in six; progressive Lessons. This system, as it equally promotes the attainment of a rapid and masculine hand, calculated for business, and of a light and graceful manuscript adapted to Ladies; also secures to the Pupil the certainty of writing straight, without lines, with wonderful dispatch and accuracy, and, moreover, will steady the hand of the most tremulous writer. Upwards of 2000 specimens, and numerous recommendatory letters may be seen, and references given to persons of the first distinction, some of whom are upwards of 50 years of age, Private tuition at home. Ladies and Gentlemen attended at their own residences. A new and practical system of Short Hand, taught in a few lessons, so as to enable the writer to decipher what he has written with inconceivable ease.—Apply, (or direct, post paid) at the Academy, 464, Strand, near Charing Cross.

MERINO DAMASK FURNITURE, that superior article for durability and elegance, is now to be obtained at a very reduced rate at MITCHELL'S Chintz Furniture, Moreen, Blanket, &c. Warehouse, at the corner of Leadenhall and Bishopsgate Streets.—T. Mitchell is now supplying his Friends and the Public with Merino Damask of the most splendid colours and Quality, at a price that will induce Families who study economy to prefer them to any other kind of Furniture. His Warehouse has been patronized for many years by a highly respectable connection, for a very extensive variety of Chintz Furnitures, Grecian Stripes, Moreens, Taboreens, embossed and plain Callicoes for Linings, &c. In claiming public preference, he submits that arrangements in Business must accord with times and circumstances: Economy being now the prevailing Science, he has this Season completed a Stock of the most fashionable Patterns and Colours, on such advantageous Terms as will enable him to compete with any Establishment in the Trade, also for Novel and Superior Articles. Societies and Families purchasing Blankets for the Poor may be supplied with any quantity, at a lower price than at any former period.

BROCKSOPP'S PATENT SUGAR MILL, No. 99, Fore-street, Cripplegate, London.—This MILL is used by all the most respectable GROCERS. The Patentee has permission from the first House in London, to inform the Grocers of England they not only use them, but so much approve of the Mill as to be desirous of recommending them to general use; they are complete in regulating the qualities of a Hogshead of Sugar, which may be passed through it in one hour, leaving the quality one and the same, every lump broken, and the grain not injured: it is presumed no Grocer would be without so useful an article, were he acquainted with its real merits. Price 5l. 5s. with Iron Frame. They are completely portable, and stand in the compass of a Twankay Chest. The Patentee has been favoured with orders from NORTH and Co. and One Hundred Grocers in London; he has also been favoured with orders, post paid, from most of the principal Cities and Towns in the Kingdom.

HALL'S PATENT STARCH, for getting up Lace, Muslin, Lines, &c. of a beautiful colour, and preventing their turning yellow.—This new and superior article forms a striking contrast, on comparison with every other kind of Starch, by its brilliant whiteness, and when prepared for use, according to the Directions, is considerably stronger, and, consequently, more economical. Its greatest excellency consists in being very thin and transparent, (notwithstanding its superior strength), resembling a thin solution of the Gum Arabic, thus divested of the thick and paste qualities of common Starch. It is worthy of remark, that the Patentee is so defective in colour, &c. that the manufacturer usually adds a portion of blue to it, in order to disguise such imperfitles: but this expedient is not required with the Patent Article.—Sold in convenient Packages, wholesale and retail, 131, Wood-street, Cheapside; and 147, Strand, London, warranted genuine; and may be obtained of every respectable Dealer in Starch in Town and Country.

"PULMONARY COMPLAINTS."

MR. HUGH VENABLES, Proprietor of the newly-discovered Medicine denominated VENABLES' INDIAN SYRUP, has the honour to acknowledge the justice and liberality with which numerous Families have expressed their satisfaction of the eminent efficacy of his Indian Syrup, in the cure and relief of Asthma, Consumptions, and all Complaints of the Lungs, Sore Throat, Spitting of Blood, Nervous Debility, &c. Mr. Venables embraces this opportunity of announcing to the Public, that, in order to extend, as widely as possible, the benefit of his Indian Syrup, he has appointed Messrs. Barclay and Sons, of Fleet-market, London, his sole Agents for the sale thereof. Most respectable names will be given by Mr. Hugh Venables, of Lewisham-lane, Greenwich, or Messrs. Barclay and Sons, of persons who are living testimonies of the extraordinary virtues of this Medicine; and Parents will henceforth be rejoiced to find that so valuable, at the same time so palatable, a Remedy has been discovered for the Hooping Cough, which, in the mildest manner, it eradicates in a very short period.—Sold wholesale only, by Barclay and Sons, Fleet-market, and retail by all Venders of Medicine throughout the United Kingdom. Price 4s. 6d. the half-pint bottle, with proper directions for use.—N.B. The label on every bottle is signed by Mr. Hugh Venables, the Proprietor.

FOR INDIGESTION, JAUNDICE, LOSS of APPETITE, and other Disorders dependent on a deranged State of the LIVER, and of the BILIARY and DIGESTIVE ORGANS,

SMITH'S Genuine LEAMINGTON SALTS, are confidently offered to the Public under the recommendation of

Dr. Kerr, Northampton	Dr. Thackeray, Cambridge
Dr. Thackeray, Chester	Dr. Luard, Warwick
Dr. Wake, Warwick	Dr. Weatherhead, Henley, Oxon.
Dr. Middleton, Leamington

The peculiar efficacy of the Leamington Waters in the cure of the above-named, and many other Disorders, having been so generally acknowledged, renders it almost unnecessary to observe, that the Medicinal Salts procured from them are in addition in any thing in favour of those Salts, except that they have been satisfactorily proved, both by chemical analysis and medical experience, to possess all the Tonic Aperient, and other native properties of the Waters; so that those persons who have been hitherto prevented, by distance or other causes, from availing themselves of the curative powers of these celebrated Springs, may now be supplied with a substitute, possessing all their beneficial qualities. These Salts are prepared, that is to say, dried from the Water in the original Baths, Leamington.—Sold in bottles, price 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. each, duty included, wholesale and retail, by Mr. Smith, the Proprietor, at his Pump Room; Mr. Gossage, at the Depot, Bath-street, Leamington; and by Messrs. Barclay and Sons, Fleet-market; and retail by Mr. Sauzer, Oxford-street; Mr. Straddling and Mr. Nix, Royal Exchange, London; and by all Medicine Venders.

COCKLE'S REMEDY for CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, HOOPING COUGH, &c.—We are happy to find, that a Medicine has at length been discovered for the Relief and Cure of PULMONARY AFFECTIONS. This formidable class of diseases seem to have, hitherto, resisted the ameliorating power of Medicine. A commiserate sense of the unfortunate of our fellow-creatures who are visited by afflictions of this nature; and we rejoice, as they must assuredly will do, to learn, that, the sufferings they have endured, without any reasonable indulgence of hope, may now be materially alleviated, if not entirely removed, by the invaluable Remedy lately introduced to public notice under the above denomination.—It is prepared by MR. COCKLE, Apothecary, 6, Speldhurst-street, Burton-crescent, London, and Sold by all respectable Venders, in bottles, at 1s. 6d.; 2s. 6d.; and 11s.—For the Hooping Cough, in small size, at 2s. 9d.—Of the same Venders, may be had Cockle's Compound Antibilious Pills.

ROWLAND'S ALSANA EXTRACT, for immediately relieving the most violent Tooth-ache, and preserving, strengthening, and beautifying the Teeth and Gums. This admirable specific is recommended by the first physicians, and its properties are truly invaluable. In the anguish of excruciating pain, it affords instantaneous mitigation. It creates, cleanses, and preserves renovating the Teeth with pristine beauty; eradicating from the mouth unpleasant taste and fetid effluvia, and rendering the breath sweet and delightful. It firmly consolidates the scurry, restores the gums to the fulness of health, and gives them an additional firmness of adhesion, by which means the Teeth are powerfully rooted to their sockets. It is besides perfectly innoxious, and an excellent stomachic in all cases of flatulency and depression of spirits; finally, it cleanses Artificial Teeth, and prevents their changing colour. But the necessity of resorting to Artificial Teeth may be entirely precluded by the Alsana Extract, which, if constantly used, will preserve the Teeth sound, healthy, and free from pain, to the latest period of existence. By the decay of the Teeth mastication is impeded, and female beauty loses an attractive ornament. To preserve the one, and retain unimpaire d the powers of the other, are "consummations devoutly to be wished," and by no existing specific in the universe can these most desirable attainments be more readily insured than by the use of ROWLAND'S ALSANA EXTRACT.—Sold in bottles, at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 10s. 6d. each, duty included, by A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden, Holborn, London, and by all the respectable Medicine Venders in Town and Country.

CONSOLATION to the TREMULOUS WRITER.—The Public may look to this most singular and unique Invention with confidence as an inestimable source of comfort to those who experience any difficulties in the command of the pen, occasioned by tremour in nervous affection, heat of climate, agitation of spirits, excess or over-exertion, weakness from age or otherwise, injury of the thumb or fingers by sprain or otherwise, even to the loss of part. This happy relief exists in a little INSTRUMENT, the appearance of which, when in use, escapes observation, is capable of giving firmness, and freedom, and cannot fail to assist the declining powers of a good penman, and materially improve the performance of a bad one. It is honoured by the patronage and recommendation of Sir Astley Cooper, and other highly respectable professional Gentlemen. A few minutes practice will prove its efficacy, and it has this advantage over all medicine, its power increases by use, and one prescription will last for life. Made in elastic gold, price 26s. each.—Sold for the Patentee, by T. Pearce and Co. No. 268, facing the front of St. Clement's Church, Strand. Letters from any part of the country, post paid, will be promptly attended to.

BURGESS'S ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES.—Warehouse, 170, Strand, corner of the Savoy-steps, London.—John Burgess and Son, being apprized of the numerous endeavours made by many persons to impose a spurious article for their make, feel it incumbent upon them to request the attention of the Public, in purchasing what they conceive to be the Original, to observe the Name and Address as entered with the above: the general appearance of the spurious descriptions will deceive the unguarded, and for their detection, J. B. and Son submit the following cautions,—some are in appearance at first sight, "The Genuine," but without any name or address:—some "Burgess's Essence of Anchovies;"—others—"Burgess's,"—and many more without Address.

John Burgess and Son having been many years honoured with such distinguished support, which has increased in proportion as regards the Public, respectfully solicit them to inspect the Labels previous to their purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments.

BURGESS'S NEW SAUCE for general purposes, having given such great satisfaction, continues to be prepared by them, and is recommended as a most useful and convenient Sauce: will keep good in all climates.

Warehouse, 170, Strand, corner of the Savoy-steps, London.—(The original Fish-sauce Warehouse.)

TO THE AFFLICTED WITH HERNIA.—SALMON, ODY, and CO. 302, STRAND, most respectfully caution the afflicted against the many bungling and imitative Trusses, now offered for Sale by persons who have not the least mechanical knowledge or pretensions to invention; from such bunglers the afflicted will find no relief. The under-mentioned Trusses are made by SALMON, ODY, and Co. upon scientific and mathematical principles, the only REAL inventors and Patentees, of the Improved Patent SELF-ADJUSTING TRUSSES, which have given such universal satisfaction, and continue to be recommended by the most eminent surgeons in town and country, in consequence of which, upwards of 50,000 have been made. Also Salmon's Royal Artificial Abdomens, and Salmon's New Patent Oval and Round Spring Trusses, which are light, cheap, and durable. The Patentees have the honour to supply the Army and Navy; the Naval and Military Hospitals; the Duke Yards and Ordnance; the Honourable East India Company; the Honourable East India Company's the City of London Truss Society; the Mary-le-bonne, Wivelliscombe, Bristol, and Denbigh Infirmaries; the Windsor General Dispensary; the Middlesex and St. George's Hospital; Parochial Establishments, &c. &c.—Manufactory, 302, Strand.

LEEMING'S SHOULDER MIXTURE, for Sore Shoulders and Swellings, Galls of the Collar or Saddle, &c. Price 1s. per bottle.

LEEMING'S BALSAM, for all Fresh or Old Wounds in Horses. Price 1s. per bottle.

OBSERVE:—None of these Medicines can be genuine, unless the Names of "Barclay and Sons, Fleet-market, London," are affixed; they having purchased the Original Recipes from the Executors of George Bolt, of Nottingham.

PARSONS' HOOPING COUGH POWDERS

FEW Diseases have been found more perplexing than the Hooping Cough, and the Medicines usually administered for this alarming Complaint having proved totally ineffectual, Mr. PARSONS is induced, after several years experience of its efficacy, to offer his Medicine to the Public as a safe and certain Remedy. The Patient will soon be relieved from this most painful affection termed Hooping; and by persevering strictly according to the Directions, two or three Packets have almost invariably been found sufficient to effect a certain Cure. It may be administered with perfect safety to Children of the most tender age, as well as to those at a more advanced period.—Prepared by Mr Parsons, Surgeon, West Malling, Kent, and sold in Packets, at 2s. 9d. each, by Messrs. Butler, Chemists, No. 4, Cheapside, St. Paul's, and 229, Regent-street, (near the Argyll Rooms); Prout, 229, Strand, London; 30, Princes-street, Edinburgh; and 34, Sackville-street, Dublin, and by the principal Medicine Venders throughout the United Kingdom. N.B. Be careful to ask for Parsons' Hooping Cough Powders.

FLUID EXTRACT OF SARSAPARILLA.

IN this Preparation are concentrated all the Medicinal Properties of the Sarsaparilla Root, even to a perfect saturation of the Menstrum with which it is prepared. To such persons, therefore, who, from various causes, would experience great inconvenience, or with whom it would be utterly impossible to prepare the Decoction, the Fluid Extract, which possesses the advantages of portability and keeping for any climate, will be found a most desirable mode of employing this much esteemed Medicine. The Diseases in which it has proved most beneficial are those of the Skin, such as the Scorbutic Affections, Eruptive Diseases, Secondary Symptoms, &c. arising from a diseased state of the System at large. It may be taken either alone or combined with water, rendering it of the same strength as the Decoction.—Prepared and sold by Butlers, Chemists, No. 4, Cheapside, St. Paul's, and 229, Regent-street, (near the Argyll Rooms); Prout, 229, Strand, London; 30, Princes-street, Edinburgh; and 34, Sackville-street, Dublin; and by the principal Medicine Venders throughout the United Kingdom, in bottles at 4s. 6d. and 7s. 6d.—Be careful to ask for "Butler's Fluid Extract of Sarsaparilla."

WALSH'S ANTIPODAGRA, or GOUT and RHEUMATISM DESTROYER:—After numerous trials in different climates, by several eminent Members of the Medical Profession, the ANTIPODAGRA is confidently offered to the Public as a certain preventative and effectual cure of those afflicting maladies the Gout and Rheumatism. Uninfluenced by the motives which actuate the generality of the venders of patent medicines, the Proprietors of the Antipodagra have taken the precaution to ascertain the invaluable qualities of this remedy, before making it public; and it was not until the repeated experiments of Gentlemen of the most scientific acquirements and profound integrity had demonstrated its positive infallibility, and its certain effects, that the Proprietors felt themselves justified in submitting it to the test of public practice and, consequently, encountering the stigma of public exposure, should subsequent experience prove this to be incorrect. In their present circumstances, Prepared and sold by the Proprietor, J. Perryman, late Walsh, 100, Strand, and by his appointment at all the respectable Medicine Venders in Town and Country.—Of whom also may be had WALSH'S PATENT GINGER SEEDS, the effects of which have astonished the Profession. In all cases of debility of the Stomach, in Heartburn, Flatulence, and Bilious Affections these Seeds are of immediate relief, and in many instances have effected their celebrity; and while the Proprietors daily witness the failure of infallible remedies, it is not only a source of congratulation to themselves, that their Medicine is rapidly rising in public estimation, but a strong inducement to them to pay the most strict attention to its manufacture.

PRINCE'S CELEBRATED RUSSIA OIL is so improved with an extra valuable ingredient, through which it has made the Russia Oil the greatest nourisher and preserver to the hair in the Universe, will make it grow thick and long, and prevent its falling off or ever turning grey, and is unrivalled in its power to clear the head of the dandriff, that it will again turn grey, with restore it again to its natural colour, and if used often it will never turn grey again, and is sure to clear the scurf, from infancy to old age, and when dressing with it, will always keep the Head and Hair clean and beautiful. Gentlemen who have lost their hair, and have the least sign of roots of hair remaining, by using regularly, for a few months, Prince's Improved Russia Oil, with the extra valuable ingredient, will be sure to restore it, and produce a fine head of hair, which has never been equalled.

It is no wonder that Ladies and Gentlemen have complained of late of the Russia Oil not being of service to the hair, as they have found out that unprincipled persons have sold them counterfeits.

Ladies and Gentlemen will be particular, as impostors in Great Britain, France, and other different parts of the Continent, have made the covers of the Counterfeit Russia Oil so much like the genuine, and some, more to deceive, falsely have printed on their counterfeit covers "the original," or "genuine Russia Oil," and some even are so daring, although they know it is punishable, to put the Original Proprietor's Name. Therefore purchasers should be cautious, and have it of the Proprietor, or of respectable Venders.

Ask for Prince's Improved Russia Oil, with the extra ingredient, and observe "Prince" on the wrapper and seals, and his address, "A. Prince, No. 9, Poland-street, Oxford-street," on the cover of each bottle; without it is not genuine, and cannot answer the purpose. The cheapest is five shillings, or a large bottle, containing five ounces, one pound, which is a saving.

Sold by the sole Proprietor, A. Prince, No. 9, Poland-street, Oxford-street, near the Pantheon; and by Mr. Smyth, Perfumer to His Majesty, New Bond-street; Hendrie, Tichborne-street; and by most principal Perfumers and Medicine Venders.

Caution.—There are persons who, finding they cannot now impose by selling counterfeit Russia Oil, it being now well known that Prince's is the original and genuine; so there are several Hair-dressers and others who pretend to sell Bears' Grease; but it is well known in Russia that Bears' Grease alone is too harsh for the Hair, and makes the Hair fall off; the truth of this is well known to every one who knows the Emperor Alexander, as he lost his hair at an early age; but Prince's celebrated Russia Oil, particularly with the extra ingredient, is a mixture of oils, and is always like a jelly; and it is proved by everyone who has given it a fair trial, has found it the only article that actually preserves and promotes the hair in the universe.

LATEST NEWS.

Paris papers of Wednesday and Thursday have arrived. The answer to the communication from the Government to the Court of Madrid had not been received at Paris. Their contents were not of any great interest.

Frankfort papers to the 29th ult. contain accounts of the disasters of the Turkish fleet, and the fate of the Sultan's late favourite, Haleb Effendi, whose head was planted on the walls of the Seraglio.—On the 28th of Nov. the Turkish Capital was comparatively tranquil. The heads, the Director of Customs, the Capitan Bey, and others, had also arrived. Haleb-Effendi's two Bankers, the one a Jew and the other a Greek, had been sent to prison to be put to the torture, in order to obtain from them an account of their master's treasures. The triumph of the Janissaries was therefore complete.

A Lisbon Mail also arrived, bringing papers to the 19th ult. In the Sitting of the Cortes on the 14th, the Regency was appointed; the Archbishop of Brazil is the President; the residence of the Regency to be at Brazil. In the Sitting of the 16th, they debated the recruiting of the army. The militia are to be incorporated with the line.

Jamaica papers to the 19th November state, that several very serious disturbances had occurred at Mexico, which, however, were speedily subdued, and several of the leaders as well as deputies put in confinement. It was generally believed that Iturbide would not maintain himself on his throne.

Yesterday the dispatches were closed at the East India House, and delivered to the pursers of the following ships—Gen. Kyd, Capt. Nairne; Kent, Capt. H. Cobb, for Bengal and China; Herefordshire, Capt. Hope; Inglis, Capt. S. Serle, and Farquharson, Capt. W. Cruickshank, for Bombay and China; Repulse, Capt. J. Paterson, for St. Helena, Bencoolen, and China.

In the King's Bench yesterday, an indictment was tried (the King v. Poynder the elder) against the defendant, for refusing to serve as overseer of the parish of St. Anne's, Blackfriars. The defence was, not being actually a resident, and 70 years old.—A verdict of Guilty was taken, subject to the opinion of the Court.

HUNTING INTELLIGENCE.—Surrey foxhounds meet to-morrow, at Worms Heath; Thursday, at Godstone; Saturday, at Keston. Lord Derby's hounds to-morrow, at Home. H. Jolliffe, Esq.'s fox-hounds on Wednesday, at Shellwood; Saturday, at Windmill, Walton-heath. The harriers to-morrow, Wednesday, and Saturday, at Kennel.

A meeting of the county of Norfolk was held on Friday at St. Andrew's Hall, Norwich, for the purpose of petitioning both Houses of Parliament for the adoption of measures calculated to relieve the agricultural classes. Resolutions were proposed, and a petition moved for a reduction of taxation, &c. Cobbett then made his appearance, and offered a counter-petition, which struck at once at the interest of the debt—at the revenues of the Church—which called on the House to restrain landlords from distressing their tenants for one year, and the clergy from all proceedings to recover tithes for the same period, and to put a stop to the effect of mortgages on land. This petition, after considerable tumult and very violent opposition, was carried. Mr. Coke was present.

It should be generally known to farmers, housekeepers, &c. &c. that on the 5th of this month the reduction in the tax on salt takes place.

The Galway Advertiser says, that a duel took place on Thursday se'nnight between Mr. P. Blake, of Holly-park and Mr. W. Burke, of Strangford. At the first shot Mr. Blake was wounded in the hip, but obtaining fresh pistols, Mr. Burke was shot dead on the spot.

The Dublin Commission was opened on the 1st inst. Forbes, Henry Handwich, and George Graham were to be indicted for riot only, at the theatre. The capital charge of high treason was withdrawn.

Recollect!—MARSHALL is the only Publisher in the Kingdom that sells the New Year's Gift-edge Pocket Books at 2s. containing six select Views, List of Members of Parliament, &c. Marshall's Ladies' Fashionable Repository, and Elegant Souvenir, each contains full-length portraits of ladies of distinction in the newest Parisian costume; four engraved pages of original music; eight picturesque views, &c. and may be had with Jan Almanack. W. Marshall's other publications are—the Gentleman's Pocket Book—the Royal Cobourg Cabinet—the Missionary Pocket Book—the Improved Commercial Pocket Book, with a fine engraving of the new Custom-house, London, contains a correct list of the House of Peers, House of Commons, Baronets, &c. &c. and is useful to all parts of the kingdom, list of Army and Navy, a plain and concise method of keeping accounts, comprised in 112 pages, &c. &c. elegantly bound, gilt edges, 4s.; may be had with an Almanack, calculated for the desk or pocket. Marshall's Improved Historical Almanack, with a fine engraving of the King landing at Leith, containing every necessary pianetary calculation. Marshall's New Pocket Repository, at one half less than the usual price, embellished with engravings which have cost the Publisher upwards of one hundred guineas, comprising a view of the Chamber de Deputes at Place Louis XV, at Paris; twelve views of noblemen's and gentlemen's seats; and contains the list of sovereigns of Europe, both Houses of Parliament, Officers of State, Army and Navy, Baronets, &c. &c. price only 3s. 6d. gilt edges; may be had with an Almanack, in elegant Russia and Morocco bindings.—Published by W. Marshall, No. 1, Holborn Bars, London.—Sold by all Country Booksellers.

MILES and EDWARDS'S superb Stock of London Chintzes, Merino Damasks, Tabborets, &c. surpasses in brilliancy and extent, any thing of the kind ever before submitted for sale: the plan they commenced upon, of selling only the most superior articles, and at such an amazing reduction from the prices obtained by long established Houses, they are determined to pursue; and in fitting up Drawing and Dining Room Curtains, Four-post and French Beds, &c. they are enabled, and will engage to effect, a saving of at least one-third. In justice to themselves, M. and E. beg to state, they are not at all connected with any other Concern.—No. 134, Oxford street, (between Holles-street and Old Cavendish-street.)

ELEGANT GLASSES, FURNITURE, &c.—The Nobility and Gentry are invited to inspect the Warerooms of Cooper and Son, 93, Bishopsgate-street Within, where is exhibited a large Assortment of new and second-hand Plate Glasses, admirably suited to every description of drawing or dining-rooms. In the furniture department is comprised every new and elegant article of upholstery, cabinet, and chair work, the prices of which are reduced to such a scale of economy as to attract and secure the patronage of rank and fashion.

The attention of youth of both sexes is particularly directed to that inestimable ornament the Human Hair, as that attended to in youth is a sure preservation, and fixes a stamina for a beautiful Head of Hair. The only article that really possesses nutricious virtues for promoting a luxuriant growth of Hair is Rowlands' Macassar Oil, which eradicates the scurf easy and pleasant, prevents the hair falling off or turning grey, strengthens and produces beautiful flowing Curls, and renders Hair that is harsh and dry, as soft, smooth, and glossy as silk. As imposters purchase the empty bottles, and offer for sale a pernicious composition instead of the genuine, it is indispensably necessary to ask for "Rowlands'," and observe the prices are 3s. 6d.—7s.—10s. 6d. and 21s. and each genuine bottle is wrapped in a book, signed on the outside in red, "A. Rowland and Son."

WINDSOR SOAP.—J. Atkinson, 44, Gerrard-street, Soho-square, London, respectfully informs the Public that his Double Refined Windsor Soap will be found a Soap of a very superior kind, in the best sense of the word, and freed from the caustic properties contained in most Soaps, and which acts so injuriously to a delicate skin; its perfume is a complete bouquet; it is gently detergent, emollient in use, very durable, and sold at the price of the commonest articles; it is highly valuable in the nursery, and where the skin of adults have got hard, rough, or uneven, it gradually, but with certainty, corrects such imperfections, and makes the skin luxuriously soft, white, and even. Half-pound packages, 1s. 2d.; pounds, 2s. by taking a dozen, 1s. 6d.—Sold by most Perfumers, but the genuine has the Proprietor's signature and address on the label.

BEAR'S GREASE.—At the request of several gentlemen, J. Atkinson, Perfumer, 44, Gerrard-street, Soho-square, has formed an agency with a house in Norway for a supply of the above article to any extent; and he has just received a supply of a very fine quality, which is potted for use, in pots from 1s. 6d. to 7s. 6d. each. The great Linnæus, and also a celebrated Lecturer on Physiology, of the present day, have alluded to this article, when treating on the nature of the hair; and when we consider the hairiness of the Bear, and much reason for the very general opinion long held that Bear's grease possesses some very extraordinary properties for making the hair grow. J. A. has appointed most hair dressers to sell the article, but none are of his importation unless his name and figure of the Bear is printed on the pot, and a bill wrapt round the pot, with his name and address.

A candid examination of unprofessional pretensions is only to be feared by those who are conscious of incapacity. Messrs. Goss and Co. Members of the Royal College of Surgeons, confine their studies to the treatment of such disorders as arise from nervous debility. Their work. "The Ægis of Life." in full explanation of these subjects, may be had at No. 20, Paternoster-row, or, at any Booksellers. Medicines can be forwarded to any part, however distant, on receiving a Bank note.—84, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street, and 7, Jermyn-str. St. James's, London.

MORRIS'S GOLDEN ANTIBILIOUS or FAMILY PILLS.—The Recipe for these Pills was given to the Proprietor by a late most eminent Physician to the Royal Family, at Windsor, and administered in private practice for upwards of Thirty Years, as one of the most efficacious Medicines for Bilious Complaints, Indigestion, Flatulence, Heartburn, Costiveness, Spasms, Head-Aches, Affection of the Liver, &c. &c.—They will prove so desirable a Family Medicine for both sexes, that the Proprietor can offer them with the full assurance of success in every complaint they are recommended for.—Prepared, by George Morris, Chemist, &c. to the Royal Family, High-street, Kensington, (Proprietor of the Royal Brunswick Cora Plaister), to be had at most Druggists, Booksellers, and Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom, in Boxes of 1s. 1½d.

THE ART of EMPLOYING TIME to the greatest Advantage. —The true Source of Happiness.

"Dost thou love life—then do not squander time, for that is the stuff life is made of."—FRANKLIN.

We have the author's authority for stating that several persons have already practisedthis method of regulating the employment of time, for some years, with unvaried success. It is particularly adapted to young people of the age of fifteen or sixteen years to twenty-five, but it is also calculated to confer advantages on persons of all ages and professions—in all classes of society, and in all circumstances of life. It tends to form the heart, the judgment, the mind, the standing, the style and the memory, to preserve health, to neutralize or give a beneficial direction to the passions, in short to make man more virtuous, more enlightened and more happy.—Printed for Henry Colburn and Co. Conduit-street.

ARCHITECTURA ECCLESIASTICA LONDINI, being a Graphical Survey of the Churches, including the Cathedral, Westminster Abbey, in London, Southwark, and Westminster, as they present themselves at this Period; accompanied with an Historical Account of their earliest Foundation, and other Memorabilia, drawn from the most Authentic Records, prefaced by Considerations on the Rise and Progress of early English Architecture. By CHARLES FRARK, Esq. F.S.A.

A few Copies are printed on Imperial folio, price 25l. 4s., which range either with the Antiquarian Vetusta Monumenta, or Dugdale's Monasticon, to either of which this Work offers itself as an interesting, if not necessary appendage.

During the comparatively short time this Work has been in progress through the hands of the Artists and the Press, it has already to record several material alterations in exterior forms, in one instance the object no longer exists, with an important feature of recording exclusively the removal in situation of that remarkable Antiquity, the London Stone, in Watling-street; when a few years may have passed, these considerations, it must be evident, either in an Antiquarian, or Historical point of view, become important.

Sold by John Booth, Duke-street, Portland-place, and all Booksellers.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—The rude and unskilful attempts constantly made to supply these substitutes for the masticatory organ, and the disgust which delicacy suffers from the unpleasantry attending them when permanently fixed, have deterred many from adopting the aid and comfort they are capable of affording, independent of the assistance they may contribute to digestion and consequent health. The ingenious application of mechanical science will enable us to obviate all these inconveniences, and allow the wearer at all times to keep the mouth in a state of perfect cleanliness, and to perform the functions of mastication, articulation, &c. with decided ease and comfort.—Mr. NICHOLLS begs to state, that he is in constant attendance from ten to four, and will be happy to give ocular demonstration of the comforts derived from his efforts, under every circumstance of simple and complicated deficiency.—115, Fleet-st.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, JAN. 5.—Yesterday the King transacted business with the Count de Villele.—It is announced, in a letter from Madrid, that official intelligence had been received in that capital, of the entry of a Royalist division into Seville, which had penetrated the Lower Andalusia, without the least interruption.—Several of the Royalist corps have, according to the same advices, shewn themselves in the environs of Madrid. The inhabitants of La Mancha, who had assembled under resolute Chiefs, were only four leagues off. Torrijos was at Puenta-la-Reina on the 20th of December, where he levied a contribution to the amount of 10,000 douros, under the pretence that the inhabitants had neglected to apprize him of the passage of General O'Donnel, when, at this very time, the General was at Santa Fe de Campezo, in the direction of Vittoria.

JAN. 7.—It seems to be generally believed, that the instructions sent by the Courts of Russia, Austria, and Prussia, to their Ambassadors, were of a nature that left no room for negociation, except upon the preliminary admission of certain demands which are not likely to be granted. Various reports upon this subject prevailed in Paris on Monday.

According to intelligence from the frontiers of Spain, the Royalists are again making head against their opponents.—On the 28th ult. the Royalist Chief Joseph Mosto took possession of Balaguer, which was occupied by the Constitutionalists, and defended by fourteen pieces of artillery, which were also captured.

M. the Duke de San Lorenzo, the Spanish Ambassador, has complied with the requisite formalities in the suit which he has instituted against M.M. Ouvrard and Rougemont de Lowenberg, for an offence offered to his Majesty, King Ferdinand VII. by presuming the legal existence of the Regency of Urgel.—Journal des Debats.

To the above statement, the Journal de Paris adds:—"It is said that the Regency of Urgel will be a party in the trial."

It is announced, that the Ministry has caused 17,000 horses to be purchased in Hanover and Germany; that ten new regiments of cavalry are to be organised, viz. six of dragoons or chasseurs, two of hussars, and two of cuirassiers; and that the present law respecting recruiting and military promotion, will be modified in the Chambers in the ensuing Session.—Constitutionnel.

MADRID, Dec. 25.—The King continues in a most pitiable situation. The torments which he endures are more easily imagined than described. They who surround him, and exercise his authority, continually threaten to abandon him; and are constantly representing the danger to which he exposes himself, if he does not frankly and unreservedly entrench himself in the revolution. The Queen is still in a state of extreme suffering.—In the course of last week, a detachment of artillery and cavalry left Madrid on a secret expedition.—The last sitting of the Landaburian Society was wholly occupied with the speech of the Ex-Fiscal Paredes; he violently attacked the Ministers, and especially M. de San Miguel. The Deputy Galiano daily loses influence with the club, where he has been denounced as a Pusterero.—Gazette de France.

A letter from Para states that the Prince of Brazil, or rather the Emperor, has sent an express to Lord Cochrane to come round and take command of the Brazilian navy.

An article from Odessa of the 10th ult. gives the following, as the inscription affixed to the head of Constantine Negri, when it was exposed at Constantinople:—"This is the dirty head of Constantine Negri, brother of Theodoroki Negri, late Cacinacun of Wallachia, who was connected with the rebels, and did not cease to do evil. This being fully confirmed by the papers found on him, he has received this reward as an example to others."

FRANKFORT, DEC. 29.—On the 25th Anniversary of the Accession of the King of Prussia to the throne, his Majesty remitted to the Students who were condemned to several years' imprisonment for having joined in secret association, the remainder of their punishment, and at the same time declared them admissible to public offices, from which their sentence excluded them.—Brussels paper.

INSURRECTION AT MARTINIQUE.—ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S, OCT. 26.—For some time past, there has been a number of sudden deaths among the planters of Martinique, as also among the cattle, &c. belonging to the Colony, which naturally created a suspicion that all was not as it should be; and after a diligent inquiry, it was discovered that these deaths originated in poison, and that its administration was confined to about 40 negroes, who had been in the habit of this vile practice for a length of time. They were immediately arrested for punishment. The news being carried to the different plantations where they belonged, three plantations revolted, and committed several atrocious murders, not only on the white male inhabitants, but on innocent females. The Mulattoes suffered also; and it is worthy of remark, that the negroes directed their fury as much against the coloured people as the whites. It is said, two Mulatto companies of infantry have shewn themselves very active in the suppression of this affair. The last accounts from Martinique left the Regulars and Militia pursuing the fugitives in the mountains. About two hundred have been ordered for execution; that is to say, to be burnt.—St. Eustatia is almost in a state of starvation, and has sent here for supplies; but as they have nor forwarded money, they will get nothing.

A letter from Malta, Oct. 25, says, "his Majesty's brig Chanticleer arrived this morning from Corfu. She brings intelligence that a most violent storm has done considerable damage to the shipping, and particularly to his Majesty's ships of war then lying in the harbour.

We regret to state, that his Grace, the Lord Primate, has been confined by an attack of the gout in his hand.—Armagh Volunteer.

IRELAND.

The Commission was opened at the Sessions House, in Dublin, on Wednesday se'night, Mr. Justice Moore, and Mr. Justice Burton presiding.

RIOT IN THE THEATRE.—Mr. John Sealy Townsend, Counsel for the Crown, addressing their Lordships, intimated that Government had no intention of preferring bills of indictment on the capital charge under which the two Handwicks and Mr. Forbes, had been committed to Newgate, viz. for conspiring to kill and murder his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant; but they would be proceeded against, nevertheless, and bills would be sent to the Grand Jury, charging them with "conspiracy" and "riot" in the theatre, on the 14th of December, 1822.

Mr. Justice Moore then remarked, that as such was the determination, the whole tenor of the charge which he intended to deliver must be altered. Then, addressing the Grand Jurors for the City and County, he commented on the candid manner in which the Crown had now, in a capital shape, determined on not prosecuting a certain transaction in a capital shape. "Riot (said his Lordship) is the union of a plurality of persons assembled to disturb the public peace, and to resist, if necessary, those who may be assembled for the purposes of public order; it may be by previous concert, or the riot may arise without any sudden excitement; it must be deemed, however, to be an aggravated riot, if it be the result of any previous concert or conspiration. After explaining at considerable length, the law, as bearing on the charges submitted to them, his Lordship impressingly concluded as follows:—"Gentlemen, you have an important duty to fulfil, the public peace perhaps, but most assuredly, the public honour is most materially concerned.—Your country expects the most rigid, and strict impartiality; at the same time that you are not to impute the act alluded to, to the prisoners, on vernacular rumours, much less are you to be influenced against them by the great public excitement this notorious affair has occasioned. You will duly apply the legal principles which I have laid down, and then pause on the evidence brought before you; from that source, and that source only, you will derive all your impressions. It would be allegation to deny that every one in the land has not heard of the transaction; but, Gentlemen, you are called upon to dismiss from your minds resembled a sheet of paper without speck or stain, and such, I am sure, they are. If this be not the course you will pursue, I have no hesitation in saying, that the laws of the land will receive a vital tarnish. Your decision will, I fervently trust, have the effect of allaying the present agitation and ferment—of stilling the storm, which I grieve to say, exists—and of assuaging all the ebullitions of party spirit. Whatever may have been the visitations, divisions, and misfortunes of this land, let us still shew, that the pure stream of justice remains unpolluted, and that every man shall have a fair trial, free from favour, free from fear, and free from affection."

About three o'clock on Thursday, the Grand Jury sent down bills against Henry Handwick and George Graham, for a riot, and ignored the bills preferred against the other parties in the indictment. On the announcement of this result, the Attorney-General expressed his determination to proceed forthwith ex-officio, against the several persons who had been sent up to the Grand Jury.

A strong and considerable sensation has been produced throughout the metropolis on this occasion.

JANUARY 3.—This day, about one o'clock, the Attorney-General stated, that he attended in consequence of a notion seized by the prisoners, Forbes, Handwick, and Graham, that an application would be made for their discharge.

Mr. Driscoll (K.C.), having moved for the discharge of Henry Handwick and George Graham; Mr. Robert Johnston (K.C.) for that of James Forbes, and the arguments of those two Gentlemen having been followed by addresses in support of them by Mr. Scriven and Mr. Blackburne (K.C.)

The Attorney-General said, he was not sure whether he had understood the nature of the application made by his Learned Friends. If it were that the prisoners, Handwick and Graham, should be discharged upon giving bail for their appearance on the proceedings intended to be instituted against them, he should not object to it, but if the application was for the discharge of the three prisoners from further liability or bail, he should feel it his duty to resist it. He had adopted the mitigated course of sending up bills for the minor offences only, and though he had no doubt of their guilt, he felt reluctant to give a latitude to his feelings, when it was not expedient to call upon a Jury to entertain the capital charge; he preferred that the legal proceedings should be criticised for their lenity, rather than their rigour; for, never were the laws so speedily triumphant as when applied with mercy, and administered with temper. He confessed he was not a little surprised to hear his Learned Friend, Mr. Blackburn, make light of an offence that would be an eternal stain on the country, an offence which fastens the character of ferocious assassins on the people of Ireland. Was hurling a bottle and a piece of wood at the Lord Lieutenant's head a light offence? Mr. Blackburn had called upon him to conjecture what were the probable grounds for the Grand Jury having thrown out the bills. He was entirely unable to form an idea upon the subject; but this he would say, that during his professional life, and in all his readings, he never knew of a case where the informations established so great a share of the deepest criminality as against Mr. Blackburn's client, and he would repeat what he had said the day before, that the Grand Jury had discharged their functions in the presence of God, under the sanction of a solemn oath, taken in the face of their country, and to that country and their God are they accountable; no human tribunal can give judgment upon them; it is between themselves and a higher power. Having stated what his intention was for the Jury to have ignored the bills, unless they disbelieved all the witnesses—about thirty in number. In his opinion, the informations contained precise and distinct charges of a conspiracy, and he would not impute to the Jury so gross a violation of their duty as to trample down the law by considering the evidence not sufficient to establish a conspiracy. Their objection must have been to the credit of the witnesses, for, in his charge, he told them, unless they disbelieved the evidence, the facts deposed to were sufficient to call for a finding of the bills, and for sending the prisoners before a petty Jury. His Lordship declared, that his astonishment at the finding of the Grand Jury was such that had his Majesty's law officers not been in Court, he would have sent for the Jury, and inquired from them the grounds upon which they came to their decision, and whether there was any point of law upon which they had their doubts, or required information. After that he would have sent them back to their room, and told them to reconsider their finding. If they had any other grounds for rejecting the bills but the credit of witnesses, it was their duty, as conscientious men, to have come into Court, and require explanation from the Judge before they adopted the course of ignoring the bills for a riot and conspiracy to create a riot, when it was deposed that several persons were seen with bludgeons committing a breach of the peace; using inflammatory expressions, and when a union of action between the parties was sworn to. The laws should not have been rendered abortive by persons sworn to discharge the functions of Grand Jurors. Unless they had good grounds for disbelieving the witnesses, the bills should have been found. The public, the country, justice, and the law, required to be satisfied, and there was no good subject but must desire to see the transaction which had taken place probed to the bottom. The Learned Judge sincerely regretted that the consciences of the Grand Jurors did not permit them to send the question to a Jury, before whom such facts must come out, as would no longer leave the world ignorant of the machinations of the factious. At present the public were ignorant upon what grounds the Grand Jury had formed their decision, and it was due to the prisoners themselves, if they had any respect for their characters, that the affair should undergo a solemn investigation, in order that, if innocent, it might clearly and satisfactorily appear that they were so.

It was then ordered that Mr. Forbes be bailed, himself in one thousand pounds, and two sureties five hundred pounds each, to abide the result of a criminal information to be filed against him by the Attorney-General, in the Court of King's Bench, in the next Term; the other five persons accused to find bail, themselves in two hundred pounds, and two sureties in one hundred pounds each, for the purpose.

On Tuesday, the Judges Moore and Burton being on the Bench of the Grand Jury, by their Foreman, Sir George Whitford, read a written paper some observations, in reply to those of the Bench, on their ignoring the bills against the rioters at the theatre.—"My Lords —We have learned with deep regret, that the discharge of our duties, as to certain Bills of Indictment, has been made the animadversion by his Majesty's Attorney-General, and has been pronounced by the authority of this High Court to be a matter of s We have that neither the Court, nor with its sanction, his principal Law Officers, intended to convey any intimation judgment has been influenced by fear, by favour, or affec charge of such a nature, without adverting to the enormi guilt which it would impute, would be essentially unjust; for of secrecy which we have taken forbids a disclosure, which th cation of that judgment, and if necessary the satisfactory refu such a charge would impose. It must be recollected, that to clusively is the evidence known upon which our judgment was ed; and we therefore trust that this High Court will receive claration new unanimously and solemnly made by us, that our was the result of a laborious investigation of the evidence, a tions consideration of its weight, and a sincere desire to adhere Charge of the Learned Judge, who so fully detailed to us the of our duties, and the nature of the principle upon which we a to discharge them."—Mr. Justice Moore observed to them: tlemen, I shall say nothing further than this—that the Attor neral, in what has been communicated to you, has been, I will unjustly merely, but most shamefully misrepresented. In my or in that of my brother Judge, he not only did not cast any upon the Grand Jury, but expressly guarded himself against suspicion. He said that no man could dare to arraign a Gran for their decision in the exercise of their constitutional privile Gentlemen, leaving to you all the privileges which by law b you, and which you have a right to claim. You have stated Court expressed surprise. I did say that I was, and I am Gentlemen, I am sure, have acted according to your cons but I did and do express my surprise, after reading the bod dence, that it was not calculated to obtain the character of from the Jury. I also said, in answer to an observation from (and I say so still), that you had no right, by law, to try what tuted a conspiracy—and that your only business was, to whether you believed the facts. I said, and say again, that sworn informations which I had, there is a full conspiracy s point of law, if the facts are believed. I also said that the Gra had no right to try the cause, but only to put it into a course of said that upon the informations there appeared a manifest con —prepared circumstances—placards distributed—calls under intentions shewn by some parties or other to disturb the public If you had decided that these facts did not prove a conspira would have decided a question of law. But if the point of law cision was, that there was not credible evidence of the facts, said I had nothing to do with that, and that I must presume that was the ground of your determination."

Thomas Hughes, for administering wicked, malicious, and ful oaths, on the 1st of January, 1822, was put on his trial; indictment there were nine counts, one of them charged the p with administering illegal oaths to compel sundry persons to co rules of an illegal commander. The Attorney General stated to the Jury, and the circumstances being so similar to those deve on the trial of Keenan and others, that we feel justified in omitt the Right Hon. Gentleman's speech to it—most prominent pass After explaining the law, as bearing on the charge against the soner, he proceeded:—"From the evidence you will know that and regret, that a set of men are in existence, who have been enough, foolish and wicked enough, to blaspheme the Great Creator; of wretches daring and impious enough to deg great and reverend name of the living God, for purposes so bas will have proof that these people have entered into a hellish plot faning every thing sacred, and prostituting every thing valua the purpose of making inroads on the solemn reverence due t and with the absurd hope of overturning the Government of th pire itself. No man in the land has a right to bind himself in association, which may enable him to meddle with the laws, or ment on, or interfere in the administration of the country; if takes a private oath, for illegal purposes, no matter what the no matter what the purposes, such act is, according to the co law of the land, a crime, for such conduct is subversive of g vernment, and totally inconsistent with the well-being of ever The prisoner is a ship carpenter. I question very much if, ind ciety to which I have been adverting, there can be found one dual of higher rank or greater respectability. Good Heaven, G mer, can you have a more melancholy proof of the folly of the classes in this country? Can you have a stronger demonstrati before you, how far the unfortunate, the deluded people of Ir may be misled, duped, and gulled! How monstrous! that this a ship carpenter, and those influenced by such men, could a to upset the United Empire, and the Protestant religion. There to know that the Protestant establishment is the solemn and soli of the land, as durable and as fixed as the laws and ordinances of land—as long as the British Empire lasts, that religion must co —no kingdom's laws and that Religion have existed—have sto gether—they must fall together. The more mischievous as they is, I can scarcely believe that the whole body of this associatio tained the absurd notion, or the criminal purpose of attempti subvert the Protestant religion; but that some of them have ente the notion to one another there can be no doubt. It is most gra Gentlemen, to know, that among the more respectable, or the order of Roman Catholic Gentry, none have stained their cha by participation in this association, any more even than their re protestant fellow countrymen. I am glad to avail myself of this opportunity of making the assertion, and of doing an act of jus the Roman Catholics. The Roman Catholic Gentry, their gent and the respectable Roman Catholic citizens of Ireland, have lo the conspiracy with regret; it has been deprecated by every member of that persuasion, and no Roman Catholic of higher than the prisoner, a ship carpenter, has been concerned in it."

P. Devoy said he knew the prisoner, who is a ship carpenter had met him at a public house in the Broadstone; the prisone he could give him some words that would be of service to him ness received a paper from him, which he put into his pocket read the following day; the succeeding night he was taken in tody while drunk, and put into a watchhouse in Newmarket Coombe. He identified the following paper, as the one he re ceived from the prisoner.

The master's words—"May we be able to trace deception source."—The reply was, "Yes, and have the fortitude to against the knave." This was the master's pass. Then o members—"All things are reasonable."—Reply, "We have son to complain," "we've got more than we expected."—Reply Lord is always merciful."—The "quarrelling words" were— sorry to see you (in argument) gentlemen;" the Irish were for a fight.—Reply—"It is all a misunderstanding."—Several nesses corroborated the foregoing.

Mr. Justice Burton charged the Jury, who, about half past o'clock, returned a verdict of Guilty.—The prisoner was sente transportation for life.

On Saturday (4th inst.) Jas. Forbes and H. Handwick were b into Court bail might be taken for their appearance to an i information to be filed against them by the Right Hon. the At General. DUBLIN, JAN. 6.—The indisposition of our illustrious Viceroy has aused much anxiety to the public. The following Bulletin was issued st night:—

"Phœnix Park, Sunday Evening, Jan. 5.

"His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant is better to-day, but is still confined to his room. R. HUNTER, M.D."

Mr. Spring Rice presented a requisition, signed by himself and 17 her persons, to the Mayor of Limerick, to convene a meeting for the urpose of considering the propriety of addressing the Legislature on e subject of the local burthens of Limerick, the misappropriation of the orporate Revenues, and the admissions to all Corporate Offices and anchises. The Mayor refused to call the meeting. The requiionists called a meeting of their own. Mr. Vereker having taken e Chair, Resolutions were proposed by Lord Viscount Gort, and seconded by Capt. O'Grady, P.M. The Resolutions being put, amidst e greatest tumult and disorder that ever was seen at a public assembly, the Chairman announced that they were adopted by the Meeting, and that the business of the day was over. On his retiring from e chair, Capt. Drought appeared, and stated that he had received formation that the peace of the city was likely to be disturbed, and nmanded them in his Majesty's name to disperse immediately, hich, if not complied with, he should read the Riot Act, and disperse em with force. This not being at once complied with, the Police peared in a few minutes, and turned every person, indiscriminately, t of the room. Lord Gort and his friends retired to Swinburn's.

Monday (30th ult.), at a Council of the Corporation of this city, an ddress to our most respected Viceroy, the most Noble the Marquess ellesley, was unanimously agreed to be presented to his Excellency, the outrage at the theatre. The Council also unanimously voted e freedom of this city, in a gold box, to the Lord Lieutenant, as a ail token of admiration of the estimable and liberal feeling displayed his Excellency in relieving the distresses in the south of Ireland in e past year.—Limerick Chron.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

THURSDAY.—Exparte Sir C. Long, in the matter of Brothers and ith, bankrupts.—The question was to stay the bankrupts' certificate, d for liberty to the Treasurer of Woolwich Hospital to prove a debt. His Lordship thought that the Hospital should be at liberty to prove e debt in question, and as a difficulty arose as to ascertaining the mount of the debt, he would direct that the bankrupts should be exained with their books, to enable the Hospital to know the amount e to it from the bankrupts, as agents to whom monies had been reitted from military individuals abroad; and that Sir C. Long, or a rson authorised by him, should be at liberty to prove to the amount ade out, with a view to signing the certificate.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH.

THURSDAY.—Samuel v. Machin.—An action for damages for a malicious arrest. The defendant was an auctioneer, who was selling, mong other things, watches—one of which, knocked down for sale, as missing; when he charged Mr. Samuel, in a public room, with aving stolen the watch, and, seizing him by the collar, insisted on archinig.—Bernard Soleau was present at the auction room of the efendant, in King-street, Covent-garden; witness was the purhaser of the lot then put up, and a watch was missing; witness's lot onsisted of 10 watches, out of which was the one missing; witness nted the defendant to pay him for it. Machin said I suppose dy in the room has any objection to be searched, and he ordered the ors to be made fast; he immediately picked out the plaintiff from e crowd of people; the plaintiff was not within 10 feet of where witss was; defendant did not assign any reason for searching the plainf, who said he would not be searched unless there was an officer. Bow-street officer appeared, the plaintiff got upon the counter, and lled off his coat, when the officer searched him, but no watch was und; witness got paid by the auctioneer next morning.—For the deendant, Abraham Costello, a Bow-street officer, examined: Mr. achin said he would commence the search where the property was nd, and Samuel was there at the time; plaintiff said he would not be arched without an officer, when witness came forward; Samuel got on the table, and pulled off his things, so that witness thought he ne going to pull his shirt off. There were two suspicious characters the room, whom witness searched; but Machin did not touch plainf. It was the unanimous cry of the room to search him. In consee of his being the only one that refused.—W. B. Staff and other tnesses gave evidence to a similar effect.—The Lord Chief Justice served, that he did not think there was any ground to sustain the uest for imprisonment. The question was as to the assault; this deended on the credit due to the witnesses for the plaintiff or defendant. e next question was, whether if the search was by authority of the fendant: his Lordship observed, that if they found for the plaintiff, e damages would be very small, as no reasonable man, under the cumstances, would have refused to be searched.—Verdict for the fendant.—Lord Chief Justice—I think, Gentlemen, you have found rectly right.

Chambers v. Hooper.—Mr. Scarlett stated, that this was an action ought by Chambers, the bankers, against Dr. Hooper, upon a letter guarantee for the payment of 1000l. advanced by the plaintiff to Mr. rper. The Doctor wrote a letter to Mr. Chambers, refusing to re Mr. Harper in a security by bill, but concluded with saying, Dr. Hooper has no objection to guarantee the payment of it at six onths, provided Mr. Harper has it not in his power to take it up." ated March 22, 1817. This was the guarantee on which this action is brought. The next letter from defendant put in, referred to an plication to the defendant to renew the guarantee, the promissory te not having been taken up, in which the defendant says, "I am her surprised the money has not been paid by Mr. Harper; I am eatly obliged by your kindness to my friend Mr. Harper, but I have pressed my determination not to renew the guarantee. This does t arise from any misconduct of his, but from some family transcns, which I need not explain." The Lord Chief Justice said, the estion was, whether the plaintiffs had so dealt with this note as to e Dr. Hooper reason to think he never meant to call upon him, for n the defendant was discharged. His Lordship thought the fair nstruction of the guarantee was, if the 1000l. is not paid at the end six months call on me, and I will pay it; but, then he has no notice it it is not paid. But here, by a subsequent letter, was not only a sual to renew, but a declaration that he (the plaintiff) considered nself no longer liable. The plaintiff had not taken measures to reer against Harper, by arresting him, which he had a right to exe.—Here Mr. Scarlett stated that the plaintiff was so well satisfied h his Lordship's judgment he consented to be nonsuited.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS' COURT.

On Wednesday, William Cole, a horse dealer, was opposed on behalf of a creditor named Henderford, who having a bill for 129l. on Sir orge Alderson and Co., intrusted it to the insolvent to get discounted. The insolvent got cash for the bill, but paid sundry small ms to Henderford, from time to time, on account of it, putting him with various excuses, and at length appropriated upwards of 60l. of the proceeds of the bill to his own use. The next ground of opposition was a concealment of property.—A broker, named Davy, stated that the insolvent, before he went to prison, applied to the witness, and stated that he owed upwards of 500l., but he had got more than 600l. in gold in his possession. He did not, however, intend to pay any body, but meant to go to quod and get white-washed. He then asked witness the best way to set about it, witness himself having been discharged under the Act. Witness undertook to secret a part of his furniture; for his assistance he was to have received 10*l*. The insolvent was unable to pay the 10*l*., and the witness therefore seized the property intrusted to him, and sold part of it to pay himself the 10*l*. The rest of the insolvent's property was taken off the premises for the purpose of being secreted by a named man Flight, and other persons whom the insolvent called "Davy's Gang."—Upon the examination of the opposing creditor himself, he admitted that he was a distant relation of the insolvent. Since the insolvent had spent the money for the bill, he and the witness had been good friends; indeed, since that time the insolvent had been bail for witness in a criminal matter (for receiving stolen goods) in the sum of 400*l*.—Upon the witness Davy being cross-examined, several questions were put to him as to whether he had never been indicted for felony? his answers were, "that he had been in a great many prisons."—The Court said that the insolvent's Counsel had properly represented this case when he said it was, from beginning to end, tainted with iniquity. The parties complaining were certainly not entitled to any protection from the Court; and the conduct of Davy was most reprehensible; nevertheless, the Court could not believe that the insolvent was that harmless, credulous, and easy man, which his Counsel represented him. In delivering its judgment, the Court did not wish to protect the complaining parties, but merely to give time for the insolvent's other creditors to look into his affairs. They therefore adjudged him to remain in custody six months from the date of his petition.—Mr. Commissioner Harris then observed, that all the parties who had appeared against the insolvent richly deserved the same punishment: and he hoped that some of the creditors would have spirit enough to prosecute them, as the Legislature had given them power to do so.

BOARD OF EXCISE.

Samuel Bartram and Robert White were charged upon information with having carried on an illicit still. Two officers went, on the 17th Sept. last, to a house in Jacob-street, Dockhead, where they found a large still at work, and a compact apparatus. The two defendants were on the premises, and Bartram acknowledged that the still was his, and White that he was in partnership with Bartram. The defence set up by both the defendants was, that they had been unfortunate in trade, and that they had been tempted to establish an illicit still to support their wives and families.—The Board passed judgment against both the defendants, and sentenced them to the full penalties of 100*l*. each, and the forfeiture of the apparatus, &c.

A man named Dudley was charged with having had in his possession two gallons of raw British spirits, for which duty had been paid. On the 22d Oct. two officers of the Excise saw him, with a basket in his hand, enter the shop of Mr. Sykes, a chemist, in Holborn, in a manner as if he wished to escape observation. They went into the shop, and examined his basket, which they found contained two gallons of raw spirits in bladders, which they seized. They believed him to be the regular agent of some illicit distillery, and that he got his living by supplying chemists and doctors with spirits to put their subjects "in preserve."—He was sentenced to pay the fine of 100*l*.

THE LITERARY GAZETTE.

THIS Weekly Journal of LITERATURE, SCIENCE, and the ARTS, is stated by the Editors, in the Address to the Readers at the close of the Year, to have gradually attained a higher circulation than any Literary periodical in Britain, except the two great Reviews, and more geographically extended, perhaps, than even these. The Publishers, in making these facts more generally known by advertisement, invite attention to the following. Besides Reviews in the form of Epitomes, or of Critical Sketches (with copious Extracts, so as to enable every Reader to judge for himself) of all new Works of Value, the Literary Gazette contains in its closely and handsomely printed Columns, the original correspondence on interesting subjects of many very distinguished Writers at home and abroad; a complete Abstract of scientific Discoveries and Improvements, with original Notices and Lectures condensed from the best Authorities;—the Proceedings of Learned Bodies, with papers of a high or entertaining literary Character, Antiquarian Researches, &c.;—Notices and Criticisms on the Fine Arts, including Descriptions of all Exhibitions, important Works in Sculpture, Painting, or Virtu, and Curiosities, whether ancient or modern;—in Poetry the Literary Gazette has fortunately been able to give a constant succession of Original Productions; though the assistance of many popular pens, overpowering one of the greatest Difficulties in periodical Literature, occasional Biographies of eminent Persons, when the Material can be depended upon, as neither eulogies nor satires;—amusing Essays under the Title of Sketches of Society, illustrative of Manners, &c. the quality of which may be gathered from the great popularity which has afterwards attended them in separate Publications; acute and regular Criticisms on the Drama; Letters from Paris, giving a View of the Literature and Chit-chat of that Capital; Varieties, consisting of Anecdotes, Jeux d'Esprits, Notices, &c. &c. and a meteorological Table, complete this general outline. From the unstinted means which success enables the Literary Gazette to employ, and from the reaction of its circulation over the whole globe, it is fearlessly asserted, that for priority, universality, and importance of information, no Journal ever published, purporting to give a general View of the Literature, &c. of the Age, has so completely fulfilled its design. To enrich the volume of 1823 (now on delivery) more than 20,000 pages of New Books have been abridged, and many of them first made known; Letters from the farthest north of Europe to the farthest south of India have been inserted; contributions from the greatest Authors of the period have appeared; and in the less important departments every diligence and constant industry have been employed. Departments certain to attract have been made for the Volume commencing with the New Year; but early orders are requested, to prevent disappointments.—Published, in Weekly Numbers, by W. A. Scripps, 362 (Exeter Change,) Strand, London, and to be had of all Booksellers, Newsmen, and Postmasters throughout the Kingdom, price 8*d*., or 1*s*. stamped for country circulation, by post.

of a temple, which had been quite invisible through a certain number of hours of sunshine, we do not exactly know—perhaps it may be in that village in Ireland, where the echo replies, "Pretty well, I thank you," to a man who says, "How d'ye do, Paddy?" If it be not, and MR. MOORE fondly imagines the moon likely to reveal that which is concealed in the day, we would just hint to him a fact, with which he appears at present unacquainted, which is, that, in the present order of things, wherever the moon shines at night, the sun generally has previously shone in the day.

Putting, however, the clumsiness of execution out of the question, the whole principle and design of the first part of the story is abominable. The second part is a plagiarism from the heathen history of JUPITER and SEMELE; and one cannot, in turning over the pages of palling absurdity which it contains, but lament that talents, which, if properly applied, would always be respectable, and, in some cases, transcend mediocrity, should be so terribly perverted as they are in this feeble and flimsy attempt to meddle with subjects far, far above their possessor's "ken."

The chief occupation of MR. MOORE'S Angel, in the early part of his career, is "star-hunting"—a sport he pursues with all the ardour of a Melton dandy; and the following description of the "view hollow" of a new world is in our poet's happiest style—"I," says MR. MOORE'S Angel,

"——— Well remember how I SUNG
"Exulting out, when on my sight
"New worlds of stars, all fresh and young,
"As if just born of darkness sprung."

The notion of an Angel hunting, and "singing out," is ingeniously conveyed; and though "sprung" is here equally incorrect with the former instance, as it jingles with "young" and "sung," it is quite excusable in a rhymester hard run.

We consider the history of the progress of the Angel's love for his mistress, and the description of the means by which he eventually carries his point, and obtains possession of her, to be precisely of the nature of those examinations on trials, at the commencement of which all women and children are ordered out of court; our readers will therefore excuse our entering into details. We may, perhaps, be permitted to mention, that, after having inflamed her mind by dreams, &c. he assails her personally in her bower, and fearing that he might completely upset her if he appeared in all the dazzling brightness of his Angelic character, he ties up his wings behind his back, and hangs his crown upon a star, as coolly as DOCTOR LENITIVE, in the farce, stuck his hat upon a peg. Lest our readers should be incredulous we quote the passage:

"——— My crown
"Of flowers, too radiant for this world,
"Left hanging on yon starry steep,
"My wings shut up, like banners furled!"
&c. &c.

Suffice it to say, that as the mistress of the first angel spent her time in wishing for wings, so the "chere amie" of the second passed her days in endeavouring to obtain universal knowledge: and after the angel had secured her to himself, "without any ceremony," she incessantly pestered him, day after day, to let her into every sort of secret, with which (as MR. MOORE'S book runs) he had been entrusted by the Supreme Being himself.

Like many other impassioned persons, however, whose names we must decline mentioning at present, MR. MOORE'S angel, after he has lived in retirement with his chere amie for some months, begins to repent, and thinks he has sacrificed too large a proportion of his rank and dignity in the connexion. The description of his remorseful feelings almost amounts to nonsense, and, at all events, admits of the existence of a state which the Protestant rejects, together with the rest of the blasphemous absurdities of Roman Catholic doctrines.

He says, speaking of his grief, that its throbs—

"——— Came like gleams of hell,
"In agonizing cross-light given,
"Athwart the glimpses, they, who dwell
"IN PURGATORY, catch of heaven."

No man, we suppose, would waste his time in seriously arguing points of faith with MR. MOORE, who, in one of his songs, has recorded the following orthodox opinion:—

"I devoutly believe there's a heaven on earth,
"And believe that that heaven's in thee!"

Nor should we think it necessary to endeavour to discover, from his literary productions, what his creed actually is; but we must be permitted to wonder, when we find lines like those which follow, given to the world by publishers so eminently respectable as the LONGMANS.

The Angel's mistress, after having lived with him some time, becomes doubly assiduous in her inquiries into "things in general," and is so liberally gratified by her hen-pecked love, that at length—

"——— Earth itself seemed left behind,
"And her proud fancy unconfin'd,
"Already saw heaven's gate a-jar!"

Her enthusiasm goes on in spite of a "double-fronted sorrow," which haunts the angel, and at last she prevails upon her submissive protector to appear in all his glorious brightness. He, after some scruples, consents, and she immediately breaks out in a blaze,

"And vanishes all in a flame of fire."

She is, in fact, reduced to ashes, and moreover, burns the angel in the middle of his forehead, which scar, in addition to the marks left on his face by the foot-prints of his other indiscretions before-mentioned by the poet, must, in some degree, have taken off from the beauty which dazzled his LILIS, or which ladies in these days would consider to be angelic.

We are truly sick of his trash, the only very decided object of which, is to aid in the general attack making upon every thing which men and Christians have been taught to respect and venerate.

LORD BYRON has published the first part of a mystery on the same subject, in the second number of his Magazine, which, so far as it goes, has much more of interest and contrivance in it, than the collection of platitudes we have just waded through; but we put no more faith in his LORDSHIP'S beginning, than we did in MR. MOORE'S prefatory professions in the LOVES OF THE ANGELS. We see LORD BYRON'S poem printed in that mass of blasphemy and sedition which, under the sanction of his name, has obtained a partial circulation. We know what LORD BYRON has done—we know what he is capable of doing; and we are quite prepared to find the second part of HEAVEN AND EARTH as much at variance with the affected piety of the first, as MR. MOORE'S sickening blasphemy is with the professions of propriety contained in his preface.

LIVERPOOL CONCENTRIC SOCIETY.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR,—As the TIMES, and other organs of the Whig Radical faction, have given a pompous account of the recent proceedings of the "Liverpool Concentric Society." I beg leave to state that it chiefly consisted of an Unitarian parson (one Sheppard,) Mr. Williams, a Huntite Justice of the Peace, and a few inveterate Radicals of the old Revolutionary school. The modest Unitarian, according to custom, loudly declaimed against the opponents of Reform, although he candidly confessed that if MR. CANNING would join them he should be received with the utmost cordiality!!! And it must be admitted that they are "heinously unprovided" with men of learning and talent, so as to render such an acquisition of the greatest importance! Those redoubtable adventurers of "injured innocence" and useless places, BROUGHAM and CERRY, belong to this renowned club, and DOCTOR JOSEPH HUME, "the wonderful calculator," enjoys a similar honour!

I am, Sir, your humble Servant,
DETECTOR.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR,—In your Paper of last Sunday you have stated that a Correspondent informed you, "that Poyais is situated on the Mesquito Shore, and is an immense swamp, highly favourable to the most prolific breed of Mosquitoes, and is considered more unhealthy than even Porto Bello."

In answer to the first part of these remarks, I shall content myself with the following extract from CAPT. STRANGEWAY'S Book of the Mesquito Shore:—

"This country, it is generally supposed, derives its name from a cluster of small islands or banks—situated near the coast, and called the Mosquitoes. Some geographers have designated it Mosquitia; which is a more elegant appellation than that of Mesquito Shore, conveying, to a stranger ignorant of its derivation, the idea of a country infested with moschetos, which would be a very unjust conclusion, as there are, perhaps, few countries under the tropics so little troubled with these disagreeable insects."

In answer to the second part, I beg to give an extract from the Memoir of CAPT. WRIGHT, of the Royal Navy, presented to LORD CASTLEREAGH, as Secretary of State, in 1808.

"From a personal knowledge of the Mesquito Shore, together with my reading and reflections on the subject, corroborated with many a long and prolix conversation with aged natives, I do firmly believe, and feel no hesitation in pronouncing it capable, under the impression of English money, perseverance, and influence, to supply the whole world with rum, sugar, coffee, cotton, cocoa and molasses, in one hundred years after the next settlement that may be judged expedient to be formed there, and I know it to be the best poor man's country I ever saw or read of.

"Innumerable other advantages very naturally suggest themselves to me as connected with this important subject, but I will waive narrating them,—first, because I am anxious to avoid spinning out my memoir to a tedious length—and, secondly, because I am confident the sketch I have given will bring home with irresistible force to the intelligent and reflecting mind, this positive and incontrovertible fact, viz. that the Mesquito territory, on account of the richness of the soil, the luxuriance of the woods, the great salubrity of its air, the remarkable excellency of its water and provisions, with the almost unrivalled harbours for shipping with which the shore abounds, is excelled by no country that I know of under the influence of British dominion."

In addition to the above extract, I beg to observe, that COLONEL HODGSON, who was Commander-in-Chief of the Mesquito Shore in 1757, states, that "The soil of the woody lands is the best, and every where excellent, being either a deep black mould, or rich brick-clay; what low woody-land is dispersed among the lawns is not so good. The Savannah lands are the worst. The soil is light sand, mixed with some rich mould, and might be greatly improved and made very useful. At present they are used for pasturage; and the chief articles of natural uncultivated produce, are cocoa, cotton, and indigo. The cocoa is better than that of Carpenter River. The indigo, the same as that which grows in the back settlement of Guatemala, which is esteemed the best in the world. Of the cotton there are three species, one of which is a light red, and looks as fine as silk. The land is high, almost to the sea side, the hills rising gently like the swell of the sea."

Every person acquainted with the province of Honduras, reckon Poyais country healthy, and its climate is considered not so like that of Porto Bello, as it is like the climate of the Mauritius! The King of the Mosquito country, has granted to GENERAL M'GREGOR the Poyais territory; and this grant being a good one, gives him the right to sell the lands, and to grant securities upon them for a loan. The produce of which loan is applied to the colonization of the country, and the civilization of its inhabitants. The King of Mosquito has also granted him the power of enacting laws, and of raising a revenue.

There are several commercial men from America settled at Black River, and a MR. ELLICE carries on a successful distillery on the Bluefield River, and there is every reason to hope and believe, that Poyais will prove a comfortable settlement for the emigrants from Scotland; and a lucrative field for such men as may settle there either as traders or agriculturists, with small capitals; and it is the opinion of a most respectable gentleman, lately returned from the British Settlement in Honduras, that emigration will take place from that Settlement to Poyais.

A Scotch Ministerial paper informs us, on authority of a private letter from Madrid, that that Court had acknowledged GENERAL M'GREGOR as Cazique of Poyais; he, therefore, cares little, whether your correspondent designates him as "Buccaneer," or "Grand Cazique."

I am, Sir, your obedient Servant,
London, January 4, 1823. ANOTHER CORRESPONDENT.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR—I have read, with no little astonishment, the quotations in your last paper from FRIAR HAYES'S Sermons. It appears to me, that the belief of a Christian in the doctrine of the Trinity, &c., rests upon very different grounds from his belief in Transubstantiation. In the one case, we have the plain declaration of holy writ, without any thing to contradict it, whereas in the other we find our Saviour's words explained by his declaration in a subsequent verse, wherein he mentions, "Whosoever shall eat this BREAD," &c.; and besides, we have the evidence of our senses, that no change has taken place, because every one who partakes of the Sacrament of the Supper, knows and feels that he is partaking of nothing but bread and wine.

Query:—What does FRIAR HAYES say for withholding the cup from the Laity? Where in Scripture does he find our Saviour making a distinction between the Clergy and Laity?

I am, Sir, your humble Servant,
Kirkcaldy, Dec. 31, 1822. A SCOTTISH EPISCOPALIAN.

The Stamford paper says:—On Tuesday the 7th instant, one of the Manchester coaches, in consequence of the rim of one of the wheels coming off, broke down within a few miles of Manchester, when it is said that two persons were killed, and several others received very serious injury.—On the morning of Tuesday the 7th inst. about three o'clock, the neighbourhood of St. George's-road, Manchester, was alarmed by the cries of "murder" issuing from a house in Pilling's-buildings. On the watchmen and others entering, they found two persons dead, and four others struggling in the agonies of death. Medical assistance was procured as soon as possible, but two more died in a short time; the remaining two it is expected will recover, though they are now in a very languishing state from the poison. The inmates of the house were a man, his wife, and their son, with a young man and three women lodgers. The poison is supposed to have been mixed with the water used for culinary purposes, as all who partook of the water experienced its effects. One lodger only was well (a female), and she is now in custody on suspicion of having administered the deadly dose.

Melton Abbey, Dorsetshire, the seat of Lady Caroline Damer, has recently been plundered of all its costly services of gold and silver plate. The robbery was not discovered till Thursday last, during her Ladyship's absence in town, when one of the servants perceived a loose stone in the wall of the room wherein the plate had been deposited; and upon this stone being removed, a hole was found large enough to admit a boy.

The boundless variety of novelties, in India Chintzes, Merino and Silk Damasks, Tabborets, &c. just produced by MILES and EDWARDS, for the present season, at such unprecedented low prices, fully entitles them to the extraordinary encouragement they have received from the principal Nobility and Gentry in the Kingdom. If the introduction of a continued succession of rich and elegant designs, so considerably below the prices obtained by other Houses, will be an inducement to families to inspect this splendid Stock, we believe they will find it easy to effect a most important saving in fitting up their town or country residences.

PROVINCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

BERWICK.—On Saturday se'nnight, while Mr. Ralph Laidler, Cuthbert's, farmer, was returning home, accompanied by his cousin, he suddenly fell from his horse to the ground and expired of an apoplectic fit.

BURY.—On Thursday se'nnight, about ten o'clock, the Marquis of Blandford, on his way to Garboldisham, stopped at the Angel Inn in this town. The coachman requested a man, whom he considered one of the ostlers, to look to his horses a few minutes, while he took some refreshment, but he had not been gone many minutes, when the coachguard began plundering the coach. The Marquis accidentally made his appearance at the moment, and seized the fellow in the act. He was given in charge to a constable, and has been fully committed.

DEVIZES.—On Sunday se'nnight, an attempt was made by five prisoners confined in the Old Bridewell, to effect their escape; but the gaoler took the necessary precautions, and as soon as they commenced their operations they were secured. The magistrates have since ordered them into solitary confinement. Their names are Wm. Mines, Samuel Collett, Olliff Richmond, Joseph Bailey, and Richard Salter.

DORSET.—The following Inquests have been taken—at Blandford on Mary, on the body of Grace Sheppard, who was seized with an apoplectic fit whilst in bed with her husband, and immediately expired.—At Toolber, on the 16th ult. on the body of Robert Baker of that place, who on the Sunday preceding, whilst attending divine service, dropped down in an apoplectic fit, and expired.—At Fiehead Magdalen, on the body of William Blackmore, labourer, who complained to his master whilst at work of a severe pain in his stomach, and soon after expired.—Verdicts, "Visitation of God."—At Stalbridge, on the body of John Green, saddler of that town, found hanging in the hay-loft adjoining his dwelling house. The deceased had been for some time in a despondng way—a verdict of "Lunacy," was returned.—At Shaftesbury, on the body of Thomas Focke, an infant 2 years and a half old, left in a room with two other children, when his clothes caught fire, and he was so dreadfully burnt as to cause his death in a few hours. Verdict, "Accidental Death."—On Monday se'nnight as a person was shooting small birds on Vearse Farm, near Bridport, the wadding of the charge lodged on a hay rick, which set it on fire, and it was quickly consumed. The rick, containing 15 acres of hay, was valued at 200*l*.

DROITWICH.—On Sunday night as the Birmingham and Bristol mail was approaching this town, the coachman was precipitated from the box, but not materially hurt, by the mail being upset. Lieutenant Folliott, of the 85th regiment, who was inside, owing to the pressure of his fellow passenger, had his hand forced out of the window, and the coach falling upon it, it was lacerated in a dreadful manner: immediate amputation was found necessary. The other inside passenger was not hurt. The guard received several severe bruises.

DURHAM.—A few days ago, some millers and flour-dealers, in Durham, were convicted in the mitigated penalty of 40*s.* each, for not delivering to the corn inspector, returns of the quantities of corn they had bought, agreeably to the statute.—At the Petty Sessions, held at Stockton on Tuesday last, John Appleton of that place, innkeeper, was committed for one month, on a second conviction, for suffering tippling in his house, and for keeping his doors open at improper hours.

EDINBURGH.—On Saturday se'nnight, the watchmen stationed near the Gibbet Toll, stopped a person driving a gig suspiciously loaded, coming from the southward. It contained the bodies of two females, one of them very old, and without teeth. The watchman took the driver and his whole charge into custody.

FORDINGTON.—Lately, the following fatal event took place here. Samuel Taylor having invited a few friends to spend the evening with him; his wife, in endeavouring to warm a little beer, observed the liquor in a blaze, and as she was taking it off the fire the flame caught her gown, and burnt her so dreadfully that she died after lingering a few hours. Taylor, in his efforts to save his wife, was severely burnt. The deceased was far advanced in pregnancy.

HEREFORD.—On Wednesday, Jos. Hartland, the waggoner of T. Hales, Esq. of Coddington, was committed to gaol for one month, for gross misconduct in beating his master's horses with a pike, whereby he so seriously injured one of them that it died in seven days. Hartland concealed the business from his master, and continued working the horse until it became too ill to labour.

HULL.—Last week, the stable of Mr. Walker, at Park-lane, near Hatfield, was set on fire, in consequence of the lads incautiously using lighted straw for singeing the horses legs, the flames communicating with the litter, the place was almost instantly in a blaze. Three horses were burnt to death.

LANCASTER.—On Wednesday se'nnight, a number of persons ventured on the ice on the river Lune; a youth about 20 years of age, named Septimus Tebay, was skating, a little above the Aqueduct, when the ice gave way, and he was drowned.—Mr. John Robinson, of the Lodge, at Clifton-Hill, near this town, was drowned in the Canal, near that place.—On Monday se'nnight, as a boy, about 15 years of age, of the name of Warriner, was sliding on the Canal Basin, near Kendal, he fell into a hole which was broken for the convenience of taking up water, and was drowned.

LIVERPOOL.—The tread wheel now erecting in the new prison at Kirkdale, is on a large scale, and will work a corn-mill of considerable size. There are now nearly 500 prisoners in this receptacle, and, of course, a sufficient force is provided to put this vast machine in motion as soon as it is completed, which will take place in a very short time.

NORTH SHIELDS.—In the night of Tuesday se'nnight, the shop of Mr. Philip Young, grocer, a little below the Bull Ring, was broken into, and plundered of every article except the fixtures.

RUTHERGLEN.—On Wednesday se'nnight, a woman, after snuffing a candle, threw the ashes behind her into a small barrel of gun-powder, which instantly exploded, and scorched the poor woman, a servant girl, and a man who happened to be in the shop, very severely. The two lower windows were blown out, the house considerably rent, and the hearth-stone lifted from the flat above, by the explosion.

TAUNO.—Last week a Coroner's Inquest was held on the body of a new-born infant, found in an ore sack secreted in the hedge of a meadow, at Gadless, in the parish of St. Gluvias, but in such a putrid state, that it could not be ascertained whether it had been born alive or not.

TYNEMOUTH.—The body of a man, name unknown, found on the Sands, supposed to be one of the crew of three persons belonging to a sloop wrecked in the late gale on this coast, was interred in Tynemouth Church-yard last week.

WORCESTER.—A few evenings since, as the Carmarthen coach was coming down Malvern Hill it was upset; several of the passengers were slightly bruised (among whom was Sir W. de Crespigny, Bart.) but none seriously injured.

Mrs. Cunningham, aged 80, living in Goodman's-fields, was burnt to death on Thursday evening, by her clothes taking fire.

Two notorious offenders, named Head and Johnson, are now in Ely Gaol, on charges of burglary; on examination, it was found they belonged to a gang of housebreakers in Bedfordshire, who had recently committed 17 burglaries in that quarter. Head has once been under sentence of death for sheep-stealing.

Captain Mack, of the India service, and two seamen, met a watery grave on the 20th July last, off Bombay. The captain had conducted the Company's ship Buckinghamshire well on her passage to sea, but on taking to the pilot-boat, a high sea overwhelmed it, and the captain and two men were drowned.

PRISONS MADE PALACES!—A few days ago, the discharge of a debtor, named Cutliford, reached Dorchester gaol; but the man was so attached to the place, that the Governor was obliged to employ a peace officer and the whole force of the prison to eject him!—Lincoln Mercury.

A man named Foster, whose occupation is that of a rat-catcher, while employed at Trulegh Farm last week, had his thigh pierced by a rat-spear, and in that state was conveyed to Nuthurst, a distance of 12 miles, where the instrument, which is a gagged one, was extracted by a surgeon of Horsham, but notwithstanding his humane and skilful efforts he died two days afterwards.—Brighton Gazette.

On Tuesday the Duke of York, Commander-in-Chief, held a Levee at his Office in the Horse Guards, which was attended by Sir Edward Kerrison, General F. Maitland, General Mawbey, Sir K. Grant, Sir T. Ormsby, the Hon. Colonel King, and a number of other officers.

THE NEW GENERAL TURNPIKE ACT,—Which began to operate with the new year, has roused all the takers of tolls, whose contracts extend beyond that period. It would seem, that in such cases of extended contract, the act is imperative in advancing the tolls upon narrow wheels according to the rate or scale by which the tolls are now collected. This will make a very serious advance upon all narrow-wheeled waggons and carts, but, as we have stated, the law is imperative, and evidently so, with the intention of bringing broad wheels alone into general use.

White Flowered Gros de Naples Dresses are still at their reduced prices, and some new Spring Patterns just purchased for ready money will be sold at the same reduction. K. and Co. take this opportunity of informing their present friends and those who may in future honour them with their commands, that they have, extended their Business by adding to it the general Haberdashery, Silk Mercery, Glove and Silk Hosiery departments, which they pledge themselves to offer upon the lowest possible terms, and to sell articles of the best manufacture. A person employed upon all purchases amounting to 1l. and upwards, at Kinning and Co. 59, Oxford-street.

SPITALFIELDS SILKS.—7,000 Pieces of Rich Gros de Naples Silk; of the most superb and pleasing shades that can possibly be thought of. These Silks being purchased entirely out of the ordinary way, induces the Proprietors to make a public offer of them, and added to a select Stock of Levantine and Drapes de Chine, which are exclusively of their own Manufacture, must give to the Fashionable World an advantage never before offered, there being made no distinction; a single Dress Length being sold at the same price per yard as 20 pieces: rich single Gros de Naples, 2s. 6d. to 2s. 9d.; double do the most pleasing shades, superior to French, 3s. 6d. to 4s. 6d.; rich Ducapes, 3 quarters wide, 4s. to 4s. 9d.; 500 pieces of choice colours, in Levantines, French width, 4s. to 4s. 6d.; Fancy Stripe Silks, 2s. 3d. to 3s. 6d.; rich Satin Stripe Persians, for furnishings, 4s. 4d. to 5s. 9d.; 500 pieces all-wide Silk Gauzes, every colour, 11½d. and 1s.; ditto, Gossamer Gauzes, for turbans, 1s. 2d. per yard, commonly sold at 2s. 6d.; the remaining part of a manufacturer's stock of Gauze Dresses and Scarfs, at half prices: rich Scarfs, 2-yards long, with embroidered ends, 7s. and 8s.; rich Gauze Dresses, 15s. 16s. and 17s. commonly sold at 30s. and 2 guineas; 20 pieces of black and white Sattins for slips, 2s. 6d. usually very stout silks, for dresses, 3s. and 3s. 6d.; 40 pieces of India Long Cloths, of an entirely new fine dress, measuring 26 yards, for 15s. 6d. the piece; a beautiful article, in real Madras cloth, 25 yards, for 26s.; these cloths are particularly suited for families going abroad, especially to the East or West Indies; DAMASK TABLE CLOTHS AND NAPKINS, this is an article which ought to claim more than ordinary attention, as SEWELL and CROSS, take upon themselves to say, that Four Thousand Pounds' worth of Linen, purchased at an unfashionable advantage, will be sold at little more than half-price, or TWENTY-FIVE PER CENT UNDER ITS ORIGINAL COST; Irish and Russia Sheetings, from one yard-wide, to the widest made, which prevents the necessity of a seam, much recommended to families; 400 pieces of coloured Morcens, for curtains, (a great bargain) every colour, 1s. 3d. per yard, and 200 of the best double quality, every shade, 1s. 8d., commonly sold at 2s. 9d.; at SEWELL and CROSS', 42, Fetter-street, corner of Old Compton-street, Soho-square.—Families taking Mourning will receive them, may depend, with satisfaction to themselves, of having any article at the prices advertised which is contrary to the unpleasant mode so frequently adopted in the West part of London.

ALE, STOUT, CIDER, &c.—THOMAS FIELD and SON beg to acquaint their Friends and the Public, that their genuine Burton, Edinburgh, Taunton, and Welsh Ales, Dorchester Beer, Brown Stout, Cider, Perry, &c. are in fine order for use. They have also a very superior Stock of Foreign Wines, Cape Madeira, Brandy, Rum, Hollands, Geneva, and Orange Shrub; and they have been enabled to make a considerable reduction in the prices of several articles.—22 Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

EASE and COMFORT in SHAVING.—To those Gentlemen who experience inconvenience in Shaving from a tender face or strong beard J. T. RIGGE must particularly recommend his celebrated MAGNETIC RAZOR TABLET, which, with its late improvement, he engages will produce as keen an edge as to supersede all grinding, honing, &c. and render the operation of shaving as easy and agreeable as it was the reverse before applied and painful. In 4s. 6d. cases complete, at 2s. 6d. each; and J. T. Rigge's Aromatic Shaving Soap will also be found an invaluable addition. Manufactory, 65 Cheapside and 52, Park-street, Grosvenor-square.

A. ROWLAND and SON, sole Proprietors of the Original and Genuine MACASSAR OIL, which has for many years been universally admired, and acknowledged to be superior to all other Preparations for improving the growth and beautifying the Human Hair from Infancy to the latest period of life, respectfully inform the Nobility, Gentry, and Public at large, they have REMOVED to No. 20, HATTON GARDEN; and also beg to CAUTION, that Impostors are travelling the Country with a spurious Article under this name; they therefore take the liberty humbly to advise the Public with spurious Macassar Oil, composed of injurious ingredients, offering it for sale at a lower price, and without the label; and others sign "Rowlandson," imitating the signature, which renders it necessary, on purchasing, to ask for ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, and strictly to observe, that none are genuine without the little book inside the wrapper; and the label is signed on the out side, in Red, "A. Rowland and Son"—The prices are 3s. 6d. 7s. 10s. 6d. and 21s. per bottle.—All other imitations.—The genuine has the address on the label, "No. 20, Hatton-garden."

Also, RED WHISKERS, GREY WHISKERS, EYE-BROWS, Hair on the Head, effectually changed to Brown or Black, by the use of ROWLANDS ESSENCE of TYRE. By merely wetting the Hair, it immediately produces a perfect change. Price 4s. 7s. 6d. and 10s. 6d. per bottle.

Sold by the Proprietors, A. Rowland and Son, No. 20, Hatton garden, Holborn, London; and by appointment, by most respectable Perfumers and Medicine Venders throughout the Globe.

WALSH'S ANTIPODAGRIA, or GOUT and RHEUMATISM DESTROYER.—After numerous trials in different climates, by several eminent Members of the Medical Profession, the ANTIPODAGRIA is confidently offered to the Public as a certain preventative and effectual cure of those afflicting maladies the Gout and Rheumatism. Unintluenced by the motives which actuate the greater number of the venders of exclusive medicine, the Proprietors of the Antipodagra have taken the precaution to ascertain the invaluable qualities of this remedy, before making it public; and it was not until the repeated and unanimous testimony of cases of the most scientific acquirements had proved satisfactory had demonstrated its positive infallibility, and its certain effects, that the Proprietors felt themselves justified in submitting it to the test of public practice and, consequently, encountering the stigma of public exposure, should subsequent experience prove this to be incorrect in their present assertions.—Prepared and sold by the Proprietor, J. Perryman, late Walsh, 160, Strand, and by his appointment at the respectable Medicine Warehouse in Town and Country.—Of whom also may be had WALSH'S PATENT GINGER-SEEDS, the effects of which have astonished the Profession. In all cases of debility of the Stomach, in Heartburn, Flatulence, and Bilious Affections these Seeds are of immediate service. For 50 years they have maintained their celebrity; and while the Proprietors daily witness the failure of infallible remedies, it is not only a source of congratulation to themselves, that their Medicine is rapidly rising in public estimation, but a strong inducement to them to pay the most strict attention to its manufacture.

COCKLE'S REMEDY for CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, and other DISEASES of the LUNGS.—A Remedy for these dangerous and afflicting Disorders is now offered to the Public by Mr. COCKLE, Apothecary, 6, Southampton-street, Bloomsbury-square, London.—The Proprietor feels that he is fully authorised in recommending this Medicine to general notice, from the unprecedented success with which its use has been attended in private practice. If applied to in the earlier stages of these disorders, a well-grounded confidence may be entertained of a speedy and effectual cure; nor, need the same happy result be despaired of, even though the disease may, apparently, have taken a firm hold on the constitution.—Sold in bottles, at 4s. 6d. 7s. 6d. and 11s. by all respectable Venders.

The properties of this Medicine are peculiarly adapted to severe cases of HOOPING COUGH, and may be administered to Infants with the greatest safety. Numerous cases have occurred, where the little sufferers have obtained permanent and almost instant relief. For the convenience of this class of patients, it may be had in small bottles, at 2s. 9d. which are denominated "Cockle's Remedy for the Hooping Cough." Of the same Venders may be had, "Cockle's Compound Antibilious Pills."

BATH AND OTHER WRITING PAPERS.

JACKSON and MACFARREN, 87, Strand, opposite Southampton-street, respectfully submit to the Public their Superior Bath and other Writing Papers, at the following low prices:—Bath or Post, 9d. and 10d. the quire, or 18s. 6d. 14s. and 16s. the ream; Superfine Ditto, 10½d. the quire, or 17s. 8d. the ream; Ditto, Hot-pressed, 1s. the quire, or 20s. the ream; good Foolscap, 1s. and 14d. the quire; Superfine Ditto, 16d. the quire, or 26s the ream; excellent Copy, 7d. the quire, or 11s. the ream; Ruled Music Paper, Royal, 2s. the quire, or 35s. the ream. Whatman's Superfine Drawing Paper, and every other article of Stationery on proportionably low terms.

BY THE KING'S ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.—THE ECONOMICAL AND UNIVERSAL LAMP.—The Patentee assures the Public, that in this Invention the grand essentials, brilliancy, sweetness, certainty, economy, and simplicity, are brought to the utmost perfection, and the principle alike applicable to Lamps for every use, and light in any degree nicely suited to the occasion. The Chamber Lamp gives a brilliant and invariable light for any time required, bearing a swift motion, infinitely superior to a bed candle, and the expense in Oil not half that of a rushlight. The price, neat Japan Stands, 10s.; and in elegant bronze, suited to the chambers of the affluent, 15s. to 21s. including wick (an auxiliary to the patent), for seven years' consumption. Equally perfect are all the other minor lights for servants' uses, in the kitchen, nursery, laundry, or to convey about the house: a valuable acquisition in families, particularly in large establishments.) The nobility and affluent, possessing mansions of great value, will feel the comforts and security from fire in the use of these Lamps. The Study Lamps are worthy the attention of Clerical and other professional Gentlemen, whose time is much occupied in writing or reading, or Ladies to work at the needle, by being light and very portable, free from smoke or smell, and will burn a long evening, without trimming. Clubs like this advantage. They are adapted to all other pedestals, varying in form and elegance, and giving the light of from four to nine candles, for the dining-table, sideboard, bracket, mantle-piece, sun-light, &c.; and the glass Grecian hanging lamps for the Hall, Staircase, Passage, Conservatory, Drawing-room, &c. In all which, the small chambers necessary to contain the oil leave a latitude for superior lightness and elegance.

Sold for the Patentee, by J. PEARCE and Co. 268, facing the front of St. Clement's Church in the Strand, who, to secure their reputation from the effects of adulterated or inferior oil, are bound to sell none but pure spermaceti.—Letters, (post paid) from any part of the kingdom, will be promptly attended to.

LOOKING GLASSES and FURNITURE.—Several large SECOND-HAND PLATES, are now on Sale, at COOPER & SON'S Manufactory, 93, Bishopsgate-street, Within.—Some of the larger sizes are admirably adapted for large dining rooms and elegant drawing-rooms. A large assortment of rich finished Chimney, Pier, and Cheval frames, with New Glasses of superior colour and brilliancy, the prices reduced beyond all former precedent. Plate Glass for Windows, Carriages, &c.—This article may also be manufactured as high as 130 by 72 inches, 120 by 80, or to any given dimension. Noblemen, Gentlemen, Surveyors, Proprietors of Hotels, and others, will find this Warehouse deserving attention, from its extensive Variety of excellent Cabinet and Chair Work. The upholstery arrangements display some new specimens of peculiar neatness and elegance, with the still greater advantage of economy in the charge. Furniture delivered to any part of the country, without risk of injury, or expence of packing.

BURGESS'S NEW SAUCE for general purposes, having given such great approbation, and the demand for it continuing to increase JOHN BURGESS and SON beg most respectfully to inform their friends, acknowledgments to the Public for their liberal patronage of the same; its utility and great convenience in all climates, has recommended it to the most distinguished foreign connexions, who have all spoken highly in its recommendation.—It is prepared by them ONLY; and for preventing disappointments to families, all possible care has been resorted to, by each bottle being sealed upon the cork with their firm and address, as well as each label having their signature, without which it cannot be genuine.

JOHN BURGESS & SON'S long established and much-esteemed ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES, continues to be prepared by them after the same manner that has given the greatest satisfaction for many years.—Warehouse, 107, Strand, corner of the Savoy-steps, London.—The original Fish-Sauce Warehouse.

HALL'S PATENT STARCH, for getting up Lace, Muslin, Linen, &c. of a beautiful colour, and preventing their turning yellow. This new and superior article forms a striking contrast, on comparison with every other kind of Starch, by its brilliant whiteness, and when prepared for use, according to the Directions, is considerably stronger, and, consequently, more economical. Its greatest excellency consists in being very fine and transparent, (notwithstanding its superior strength), resembling a thin solution of fine Gum Arabic, thus divested of the thick and pasty quality of common Starch. It is worthy of remark, that the latter is so defective in colour, &c. that the manufacturer usually adds a portion of blue to it, in order to disguise such impurities; but this expedient is not required with the Patent Article.—Sold in convenient Packages, wholesale and retail, 131, Wood-street, Cheapside; and 147, Strand, London, warranted genuine; and may be obtained of every respectable Dealer in Starch in Town and Country.

EVERY ONE HIS OWN DENTIST.

THE celebrated Sieur MERELLI'S TINCTURE, from Tuscany, the only Remedy yet known which prevents and cures those prevalent Disorders the Scurvy in the Gums, Tooth-ache, Pain in the Ear, and every Complaint in the Teeth and Gums are effectually cured, thereby rendering the Teeth sound to the latest period. It has been approved and recommended by all the principal Colleges in Europe, and has been in use above a Century, all over the Continent.—☞ The first trial will evince its superior efficacy, and that it needs no other recommendation.

The above valuable Remedy is now the sole property of, and is prepared ONLY by, Barclay and Sons, No. 95, Fleet-market; and the Public are particularly requested to ask for Merelli's Tincture, as none can possibly be genuine unless their Names are engraved on the Stamp affixed to each bottle.—Sold by all Venders of Medicine in Town and Country. Price 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. each bottle.

FOR COLDS, COUGHS, ASTHMAS, &c.

THE PECTORAL ELIXIR. Experience during a very long period has incontestably proved the superior efficacy of this Medicine, in all cases of Colds, Coughs, and Asthmatic Affections. By promoting gentle expectoration, it very shortly relieves the patient of a slight or recent Cold, and a few doses are generally sufficient to remove those which neglect has rendered more confirmed and obstinate, and which are accompanied with Cough, Spitting of Blood, and other serious symptoms. The Pectoral balsamic powers tend to heal soreness, and allay the irritation of the Lungs, in cases of Cough; and in Asthmatic affections it assists and gives freedom to the Breath.—Sold in bottles, at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. by Butlers', Chemists, 4, Cheapside, St. Paul's, and 220, Regent-street, (near the Argyle Rooms), London; 29, Waterloo-place, Edinburgh; 34, Sackville-street, Dublin; and by the principal Medicine Venders throughout the Kingdom.

N.B. Be careful to ask for Butlers' Pectoral Elixir, and to observe the Government Stamp has the words "Butler, 4, Cheapside," engraved on it.

TOOTH-ACHE AND EAR-ACHE.

PERRY'S ESSENCE has received the sanction and support of the most distinguished personages in the kingdom, together with the united testimony of the first Physicians in Europe, and numerous favourable comments in highly respectable Medical Journals, where it has been declared to be the best thing ever discovered for the Tooth-Ache and Ear-Ache. Its instantaneously relieving and effectually extirpating pain, preserves the Teeth sound and firm, prevents further decay, effectually cures the Scurvy in the Gums, fastens loose Teeth, and renders them firm and serviceable to the latest period, and effectually prevents the Tooth-Ache.—Sold in bottles, at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by Butler's, Chemists, No. 4, Cheapside, St. Paul's, 220, Regent-street, (near the Argyll Rooms,) London; 29, Waterloo-place, Edinburgh, and 34, Sackville-street, Dublin; and by the principal Medicine-Venders in the United Kingdom.

PRINCE'S CELEBRATED RUSSIA OIL is so improved with an extra valuable ingredient, through which it has made the Russia Oil the greatest nourisher and preserver to the hair in the Universe, will make it grow thick and long, and prevent its falling off or ever turning grey, and is such a nourisher to the roots of the hair, that if it even has begun to turn grey, with one trial will restore it to its natural colour, and if used when it will not turn grey again, and is sure to clear the scurf, from infancy to old age, and when dressing with it, will always keep the Head and Hair clean and beautiful. Gentlemen who have lost their hair, and have the least sign of roots of hair remaining, by using regularly, for a few months, Prince's Improved Russia Oil, with the extra valuable ingredient, will be sure to restore it, and produce a fine head of hair, as they have a variety of testimonials to prove.

It is no wonder that Ladies and Gentlemen have complained of late of the Russia Oil not being of service to the hair, as they have found it unprincipled persons have sold them counterfeits.

Ladies and Gentlemen will be particular, as impostors in Great Britain, France, and other different parts of the Continent, have made the covers of the Counterfeit Russia Oil so much like the genuine, and some more to deceive, falsely have printed on their counterfeit covers "the original," or "the genuine Russia Oil," and some even are so daring, although they know it is punishable, to put the Original Proprietor's Name. Therefore purchasers should be cautious, and have it of the Proprietor, or of respectable Venders.

Ask for Prince's Improved Russia Oil, with the extra ingredient, and observe "Prince" on the wrapper and seals, and his address, "A. Prince, No. 9, Poland-street, Oxford-street, London." It is on the covers of each bottle; without it is not genuine, and cannot answer the purpose. The ounce bottle five shillings, or a large bottle, containing five ounces, one pound, which is a saving.

Sold by the sole Proprietor, A. Prince, No. 9, Poland-street, Oxford-street near the Pantheon; and by Mr. Smyth, Perfumer to His Majesty, New Bond-street: Hendrie, Tichborne-street; and by most principal Perfumers and Medicine Venders.

Caution.—There are persons who, finding they cannot now impose by selling counterfeit Russia Oil, it being now well known that Prince's is the original and genuine; so there are several Hair-dressers and others who pretend to sell Bears' Grease; but it is well known in Russia that Bears' Grease alone is too harsh for the Hair, and makes the Hair fall off; the truth of this is well known to every one who knows the Emperor Alexander, as he lost his hair at an early age; but Prince's celebrated Russia Oil, particularly with the extra ingredient, is a mixture of oils, and is always like a jelly; and it is proved by every one who has given it a fair trial, has found it the only article that actually preserves and promotes the hair in the universe.

LATEST NEWS.

Paris papers down to Friday arrived yesterday by express. The Moniteur contains a contradiction of the following article:—"We read in the Quotidienne of the 17th Dec. that M. the Marschal de Camp, Vasserot, commanding the third brigade of the division of the Eastern Pyrenees, received the congratulations of Mina, which were conveyed to him by an aide-de-camp, and that having afterwards met Mina one day in the principal street of Bourg-Madame, General Vasserot said to the officers of his suite, that that was not the moment to return the compliments he had received."

The contradiction is in these terms. "We have now lying before us the most direct and manifest proofs of the falsehood of all these circumstances. We feel it to be both a duty and a pleasure to deny them thus publicly, and to render justice to a brave and loyal officer, who faithfully serves his King and country."

The Journal des Debats mentions a somewhat curious circumstance, viz. that at a grand dinner given by M. Pozzo di Borgo, to all the diplomatic characters in Paris, no invitation was sent to M. the Duke de San Lorenzo, the Spanish Ambassador.

Letters from Madrid, dated Dec. 18, state, that all the Gazettes of that day announce war, and that the government is preparing a manifesto to make known to the nation that the French only desire to occupy the Spanish territory with pacific views, and to insure the tranquility of Spain.—Another letter of the 22d of the same month states, that the Gazette of yesterday says:—"We are assured that only 50,000 men will enter, if they receive them as friends; in the contrary case, 150,000 men will enter to execute what has been resolved upon at Congress."

BAYONNE, Dec. 31.—No courier from Spain. It is true that the weather is dreadful; during six days past it has thawed, accompanied with abundant rain.

ST. GIRONS, Jan. 1.—The army of Mina is in want of every thing; and, far from receiving the reinforcements he asked for, and of which he is in such need, he sees his army weakened by desertion daily.—To form an idea of the public spirit of the Arragonese, it will be sufficient to state, that they call the Royalists los sueetros, and treat as enemies the Constitutionalists.

Mr. Secretary Peel on Friday transacted business at the Home Department.

The last accounts from the West Indies mention that the Tyne has captured several pirates near Matanzas.

In the Court of King's Bench, yesterday, the Rev. Mr. Harris was indicted by the Rev. Mr. Masters for perjury. The defendant is lessee under the Crown of a chapel in Spring Gardens, and the prosecutor holds an under lease from him. Some disputes arose between them, and when the first half year's rent became due Mr. Harris demanded 106l., and Mr. Masters contended that only 92l. 2s. 6d. was due, which sum, it was alledged, was tendered. Mr. Harris made an affidavit of the debt, in which he swore that no tender of the sum due to him had been made, and that the sum of 106l. was due to him. Upon this affidavit Mr. Masters was arrested; and as it is a part of the Christian's profession to forgive injuries, Mr. Masters, to shew that he not only professed but practised his creed, preferred an indictment against Mr. Harris for perjury. After hearing the evidence in support of the indictment, the Jury found the defendant—Not Guilty.

MR. HENRY NUGENT BELL.—This gentleman, who was an eminent Barrister at the Irish Bar, soon obtained an unusual degree of reputation for his early years, by reason of having given up a most successfully, a vast portion of his time to researches in Heraldry, by which he succeeded to an extent quite extraordinary, in recovering dormant and possessed Peerages. The case of the Huntingdon Peerage will be a proud record of what can be accomplished by persevering attention, aided by rare and almost exclusive talent in this branch of the profession. The fame he acquired during this tedious process, insured him (if his life had fortunately been spared) a splendid income, inasmuch as every doubtful Peerage was placed under his parental controul; that of Crauford and Lindsay had occupied him for 2 years, and the next Session of Parliament would in all human probability have consummated his wishes, and repaid him for all his labours; but alas! Death stepped in, and we lament to hear, that he has left an amiable wife and large family, unprovided for. He had just purchased and fitted up, in a style of great splendour, a house in Whitehall-place, contiguous to the Attorney-General's; this, with its valuable contents, are consigned to the manuscr of Mr. George Robins. The Auction commences on Thursday. His Royal Highness the Duke of York was at the private view yesterday. To-morrow it will be open to the public generally.

PIDDING and Co. No. 1, Cornhill, remind the public that the last day of drawing the present Lottery will be Next Wednesday, January 15, on which day must be determined no less than 52 Capitals, including the largest, viz. £20,000, £10,000, £10,000, £2,000, £1,000, &c. &c. &c. Pidding and Co. on the last day of drawing, distributed No. 12,694, a prize of £5,000 also No. 3,936, a prize of £300, and both actually sold in whole tickets: it is to be hoped they are only the forerunners of some of the above, which may now be obtained at the Lucky Corner, No. 1, Cornhill.

CARROLL'S luck in the present Lottery has been prodigious!!! Nos. 3425, and 16552, the only two prizes of £20,000, that have been drawn this Lottery, were both sold by him in shares, at his fortunate offices, No. 19, Cornhill, and 26, Oxford-street. The last day of drawing is close at hand, the public therefore have no time to lose, as on Wednesday next, the fate of Fifty-two Capitals will be decided amongst which are One of £20,000, Two of £10,000, One of £2,000 Four of £1,000, &c. &c.

The Memoirs of the late Queen of France, Marie Antoinette, are on the eve of appearance, written by the celebrated Madame Campan. This publication will comprise a history of, and most curious anecdotes relating to, all the personages who figured in the Court of Louis the 16th. Much light will, by this work, be thrown upon transactions, the origin of which has hitherto been buried in obscurity. No work has appeared since the Memoirs of the Margravine of Bareith so well calculated to shew the interior of a Court.

The abstract of the last Enumeration has not long been put forth, and is, from its bulk, (a thick folio) too large for general reference. We have now, however, to announce to our readers the publication of a single sheet, by Mr. E. Wilson, of the Royal Exchange, in which will be found all the most valuable information contained therein, with much other intelligence, which could not possibly come within the scope of that official document. Both as a work of art, and from its intrinsic merit, we consider this as the most useful publication of the kind that has ever issued from the press, and by which all those who feel interested on the important subject of our national strength, from the number of inhabitants, cannot fail of becoming highly gratified.

THE humidity of atmosphere, change of climate, study, anxiety, fevers, accouchements, &c. often causes the human hair to fall off, become grey, and total baldness, which may be prevented by using Rowland's Macassar Oil—the greatest auxiliary in nourishing the hair and preventing its being injured—preserves it to the latest period of life—promotes a luxuriant growth on the baldest places. The wonderful properties of this Oil not only nescitrate the growth, but render hair that is harsh and dry as soft as silk, and adds a beautiful gloss: in fine, it gives the most fascinating and rectable appearance to the hair of Ladies, Gentlemen, and Children. It also produces Whiskers, Eye-brows, &c.—The sole Proprietors, A. Rowland and Son, 20, Hatton-garden, have just supplied their Agents, in Town and Country, with a valuable quantity of that admired article.

BEAR'S GREASE.—At the request of several gentlemen, J. Atkinson, Perfumer, 44, Gerrard-street, Soho-square, has formed an agency with a house in Norway for a supply of the above article to any extent; and he has just received a supply of a very fine quality, which is potted for use, in pots from 1s. 6d. to 7s. 6d. each. The great Linnæus, and also a celebrated Lecturer on Physiology, of the present day, have alluded to this article, when treating on the nature of the hair; and when we consider the hairiness of the Bear we find much reason for the very general opinion long held that Bear's grease possesses some very extraordinary properties for making the hair grow. J. A. has appointed most hair dressers to sell the article, but none are of his importation unless his name and figure of the Bear is printed on the pot, and a bill wrapt round the pot, with his name and address.

A candid examination of professional pretensions is only to be feared by those who are conscious of incapacity. Messrs. Goss and Co. Members of the Royal College of Surgeons, confine their studies to the treatment of such disorders as arise from nervous debility. Their work, "The Ægis of Life," in full explanation of these subjects, may be had at No 20, Paternoster-row, or, at any Booksellers. Medicines can be forwarded to any part, however distant, on receiving a Bank note.—N.B. Bouverie-street, Fleet street and 7, Jermyn-str. St. James's London.

BROCKSOPP'S PATENT SUGAR MILL, No. 99, Fore-Street, Cripplegate, London.—This MILL is used by all the most respectable GROCERS. The Patentee has permission from the first Houses in London, to inform the Grocers of England they not only use them, but so much approve of the Mill as to be desirous of recommending them to general use; they are complete in regulating the qualities of a Hogshead of Sugar, which may be passed through in one hour, leaving the quality one and the same, every lump broken, and the grain not injured: it is presumed no Grocer would be without so useful an article, were he acquainted with its real merits. Price only Nine Pounds. They are extremely durable, and stand in the compass of a Twankay Chest. The Patentee has been favoured with orders from NORTH and Co. and One Hundred Grocers in London; he has also been favoured with orders, post paid, from most of the principal Cities and Towns in the Kingdom.

77, OXFORD-STREET, NEARLY OPPOSITE THE PANTHEON.

AS the Affairs of the late MR. T. CRAIG, Linen-Draper, Silk-Mercer, Hosier, &c. were obliged to be settled at Christmas, J. POOLEY, who has lived in the above house upwards of seven years, begs to inform his Friends, the Nobility, Country, and Public in general, that he has purchased a Share in the business, which will in future be carried on for the joint benefit of the widow and family of the deceased and himself, under the firm of CRAIG and D'OYLY; and as J. D. has the advantage of a large capital, he is enabled at at all times to purchase his goods for ready cash; the advantage of which, in the present distressed state of the manufacturing districts, is past description, and being determined to sell for a very small profit, in order to secure a liberal share of favours of a generous public, who have for so many years honoured the above establishment with a decided preference. C. and D. also beg to observe that the remaining part of the old Stock, consisting of every article in useful Linen Drapery, Silk Mercery, Hosiery, &c. they are resolved to clear off immediately, at such prices as must, at sight, convince the purchaser of their decided cheapness. Full yard wide Russia Shirting 9½d. worth 15d.; Do. Irish, 16d.; very fine, 19d.; a few pieces of full yd. and half wide Scotch Manks and German Hollands; elt-wide Long Cloths, 6d. a yd; quite undressed do 7½d. a yd.; power loom do. 9½d.; yd. wide Cambric Muslins, 10s. 9d. the piece, containing 12 yards, worth 14s 6d.; do. yd. and half wide, 17s. 6d. worth 24s.; yd. wide Jaconet, 3d.; yd. and half wide do. 12d.; very fine do. 15d.; with a large Assortment of Irish Linens, Lawns, French Cambrics, Muslins, Stuffs, Blankets, Counterpanes, Flannels, Fulsse Cloths, Bath Cloaking, Cotton and Silk Hose, Plain and Figured Gros de Naples, French width Sarsnets, Poplins, Norwich Crapes, Bombasins, &c. &c; with a large stock of Damask Table Cloths, of every size, from 1¼ to 8 yds long.—C. and D. beg it may be particularly observed that they have no connection with the next house, or any other in London.—77, Oxford-street, nearly opposite the Pantheon.

TO THE NOBILITY, GENTRY, and PUBLIC.—The following List will be found of great advantage, being the duplicate of a Stock not only valuable, but decidedly cheap, the owner of which, having recently taken in stock, and having also a quantity of looms at work, is determined to sell those on hand at considerably reduced prices, viz.—Irish Lawntines, French width, 3s. 3d. to 5s.; wide Gros de Naples, same price; new and beautiful figured Silks, 3s. 3d. to 5s.; Ducapes and half-ell Gros de Naples, same price; about 30 pieces of wide plain and twilled Sarsnets, 3s. to 3s. 3d.; Persians, 10d. to 2s. plain Poplins, 2s to 2s. 4d.; Irish, 3s. to 3s. 6d.; figured, 2s. 2d. to 2s. 6d.; Norwich Crapes, 16d.; full ¾ wide, 1s. 6d. to 2s.; Cashmere Crapes and Cyprus Dresses, Bombazines, 1s. to 1s. 4d.; a well selected stock of Blacks, from 1s. to 2s. 6d.; Italian Nets, 1s.; a very superb assortment of French Dresses, from 60s. to 200s.; also an extensive and exceedingly cheap stock of Laces, consisting of Brussels Point Dresses, do Scarfs and Veils, Collars, Cuffs, &c.; 7 8 and and 4 4 Irish Linens, a little soiled, in consequence of which they will be sold considerably under cost price; Braganza Shawls, 9s. 6d. to 12s. 6d.; Imitation India equally cheap; Ruffs, Tippets, and Fur Trimmings, 20 per cent. less than they can now possibly be purchased.—J. ARMSTRONG, 32, Oxford-street, opposite Dean-street, Soho.

SIR R. JEBB'S STOMACHIC APERIENT PILLS, for the Cure of BILIOUS and LIVER COMPLAINTS, violent Head-ache, Indigestion, &c. (prepared only by G. WATTS and Co. Chemists, No. 478, Strand, opposite Catherine-street). These highly-estimated Aperient Pills of the late Sir R. Jebb, Physician Extraordinary to the late King, are eminent in removing all indispositions of the stomach and bowels, arising from an excess of bile, indigestion, flatulency, &c. &c. Their action upon the stomach is mild and pleasant, and are extremely cooling. They are particularly calculated for preventing habitual costiveness, and will be found to possess those sanative qualities that will remove a long series of diseases which ultimately result from a confined state of the bowels; they correct a bad digestion, create an appetite, and are of distinguished excellence in removing giddiness, head-ache, and sickness, occasioned by biliary derangements, or by too free a mode of living.—Sold also, by their appointment, at Messrs. Sutton and Co.'s, Bow Church yard; by Mr. Edwards, St. Paul's Church-yard; Mr. Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; and Messrs. Newbery and Sons, St. Paul's Church-yard, in boxes at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. and 10s. 6d., duty included. There is ample allowance on the large sizes. These Pills are greatly approved of in the Eastand West Indies, where liver complaints are so prevalent and fatal. ☞ Where may be had the Effervescent Seidlitz Powders, possessing all the medicinal qualities of the Seidlitz Spring, in Germany, 4s. 6d. and 2s. 6d. per box.

BEACON FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY, No. 8, Cl[ar]ace, Blackfriars.—The above Company offers the following advantages—1st. Insurances may be effected during the whole year for a stated period.—4th. The payment of Rent may be insured during the same period.—5th. Also, a weekly allowance to Tradesmen and others for Loss of Business, during the same period.—6th. Five per cent. is paid on the amount of Claims within one week after the fire takes place, and the remainder as soon as the Loss can be ascertained.—Directors meet every Thursday, at No. 8, Chatham-place, Blackfriars.—Prospectuses may be had on applying to the office as above.

THE LAST DAY.

SWIFT and CO. beg leave to remind the Public that the last day of the Lottery will end on WEDNESDAY NEXT, 15th inst. on which the following Capitals must be drawn, viz.—1 of £2,000; 2 of £1,000; 2 of £500; 9 of £300; 9 of £200; &c. &c. Also 1 of £2,000; 4 of £1,000; 9 of £300; 9 of £200; and 26 of £200, &c. &c. Capitals already drawn were Shared and Sold by Swift and Co. who have Sale undrawn Tickets and Shares, at their old and fortunate Office, Poultry; 12, Charing Cross; and 31, Aldgate High street.

WEDNESDAY NEXT, JANUARY 15; for which the Wheel is extremely rich, containing 1 of £20,000; 2 of £10,000; 4 of £1,000, and 44 other Capitals. All must then be Drawn every other Prize.—J. and J. SIVEWRIGHT having on Sale a few Tickets and Shares for the above rich Wheel, recommend to their Friends the Public an early purchase, for fear of disappointment. They have the pleasure of distributing to them a considerable portion of the Capitals having already Sold in this Lottery, viz. 2 of £2,000, £2,000, and many others And in their last Contract all the Prizes of £20,000, at their Old Office, Cornhill, 11, Chatham, 38, Haymarket, and by their Agents.

NEXT WEDNESDAY.—The Lords of the Treasury have ordered the Drawing of the State Lottery to be finished Next Wednesday the 15th instant, that day will be one of great interest; for the whole of the Capitals now in the Wheel must then, of course be Drawn; and such a number as 52 Capitals in one day was never before known in the Lottery annals; persons who have previously bought would do well to examine their Tickets and if drawn to re-purchase; and those who have not bought have a fair opportunity of advantageously with the unprecedented chance of 52 Capitals decided all in one hour.—A few warranted undrawn Tickets and Shares on sale at BISH'S Offices, 4, Cornhill and 9, Charing Cross, London, and Agents in the country.—BISH has already paid 18 Capitals in the present Lottery.

LIBERAL ADVERTISEMENT.—Fine Old Madeira at hogshead, or 42s. per dozen, bottled in a fair equitable size, the product of the advertiser's own estate. His connections in England are small and his stock very extensive, he resorts to the medium of a public advertisement: but trusts the prejudices existing against it will be removed, when he assures the public he will cheerfully stand or fall to a responsible purchaser's being able time to satisfy himself, previous to payment, that the lot purchased corresponds with the sample.—To be tasted in the Docks, or at No. 3, Poland-street, Oxford-street; or samples sent to any part. Orders, per post, addressed to him and Co. duly attended to INTERESTING SALE.—The Conductress of the Matrimonial Establishment being obliged to visit Paris for the ensuing Spring, merely waits to DISPOSE of the STOCK left from the last Season, to observe will be made; all will be sold at the lowest prices ever thought of, to dispatch the object. The Conductress hopes to finish this knowing assistance of Ladies fond of bargains before the end of the week. Theses Skirts, Habit Shirts, Flounces, Bodies, Capes, Caps, in all sorts of Muslin front the cause of dirty to the merely tumbled. It is respectfully suggested Ladies purchasing Babies' Robes or Caps can hardly be suited but in this institution; or Ladies' Caps, the superb Moravian Dresses for Wedding Work of any kind, especially desirable for Ladies going to either India or Grosvenor street.

TO THE FASHIONABLE WORLD.—DISON, WILLSON and CO. respectfully invite Ladies, patronesses of taste and fashion to inspection of their new, costly and extensive Stock of FOREIGN and DOMESTIC LACE, which they, with confidence, advise to exceed any hitherto offered. From correspondents at Paris, Brussels, &c. they are supplied with the newest designs of foreign taste, thus forming in one mart the unique selection of the continental and the chaste originals of British costume. From the advertisements of fictitious manufactures, professing to sell imitations of Brussels fabrics considerably lower than any badly executed imitation, they assured the superiority of texture and uniform correctness of pattern will be apparent on inspection, and a single trial will establish their durability. They have just received from their manufactory a splendid collection of Point and Brussels dresses, squares, scarfs, veils, mantillas, caps, &c. an assortment of Blonde, Mechlin, and Valenciennes laces, which, in addition to an immense stock of every article in the British Grassed Lace, (commonly by the name of Urling's Lace) they are determined to sell at the one ensuing season, peculiar to this house, viz. the Verona Tiquet, for Opera or Dress; Robes la Diane and Zephyrine; Coiffe Parisienne; Sleeves; Quadrille Sashes; Aprons; Reticules; Purses, &c. as culated for the Month of Almack's, Willis's, &c.—N.B. SOCIETY of GUARDIANS, for the PROTECTION of TRADE, against SWINDLERS and SHARPERS.
RICHARD CLARK, Esq. Chamberlain of London, President.
GEORGE BRIDGES, Esq. Alderman and M. P. Vice-President.
Messrs. WILLIAM FRADD and JOHN CLARK, Treasurers.

At the present January Westminster Sessions, George Smith was convicted for fraudulently obtaining Goods from Messrs. Roberts, Griffiths and Crick, Members of this Society, by falsely pretending that he was the servant of Messrs. Harding, Ashby, and Co. also Members of this Society.

This Society has been established Forty-Seven years. Its Object is indicated by its Name; it is an Association of Merchants, Bankers, and Traders, to protect themselves from the fraudulent practices of Swindlers and Sharpers, and from Robbery of every kind. The mode in which that "Protection" is afforded, is—First, by mutual information:—This is effected by each Subscriber sending the earliest intimation of the existence of certain Firms, and of the circulation of certain Bills, to the Secretaries, who, by order of the Committees, communicate the information so given to every Member of the Society.

At the end of the year a List of all those Names, arranged in alphabetical order, is sent to each Member. —To every New Member a List of the Names noticed for the Ten previous Years is given on his election.

Secondly—By bringing the Offenders to Justice:—When a Member is Defrauded, the Offender is prosecuted by and at the expence of the Society.—Thirdly—Every Member is entitled to the payment of a certain Sum for his Expences in all Prosecutions for Robbery of any description.

The Annual Subscription is only One Guinea.—By order of the Committee, FOSS and SON, Secretaries, 35, Essex-street, Strand.

Recommendatory Letters for the Election of new Members, may be had by application to the Secretaries.—Jan. 1823.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—The rude and unskilful attempts constantly made to supply these substitutes for the masticatory organ, and the disgust which delicacy suffers from the unpleasantry attending them when permanently fixed, have deterred many from adopting the first and most important aid they are capable of affording, independent of the assistance they may contribute to digestion and consequent health. The ingenious application of mechanical science will enable us to obviate all these inconveniences, and allow the wearer at all times to keep the mouth in a state of perfect cleanliness, and to perform the functions of mastication, articulation, &c. with decided ease and comfort.—Mr. NICHOLLES begs to state, that he is in constant attendance from ten to four, and will be happy to give ocular demonstration of the comforts derived from his efforts, under every circumstance of simple and complicated deficiency.—115, Fleet-str.

BIRCHIN-LANE, CORNHILL.

CORPORATION of the LONDON ASSURANCE of HOUSES and GOODS from FIRE. Established by Royal Charter, in the Year 1720, for making Assurances against Loss or Damage by Fire, and for Assuring Lives.

The Public are hereby informed, that in conformity with the Plan lately adopted, Tables are prepared and now ready for delivery at this Office, for Life Assurances, the payments to be completed in short periods, according to the convenience of the Assured.—The Rates upon Life Assurances are considerably reduced, and the bonus is will be extended to the Old Policies, in respect to their future payments.—Persons Insured will have leave to pass in Steam or other decked Vessels (during peace) between any parts of the United Kingdom, and also between Great Britain and any Ports of the Continent, or Islands in the Channel, within the limits of the Texel and Brest, without the necessity of applying for special permission as heretofore required.—Fire Insurances continue to be effected with this Corporation on the most moderate terms; and a deduction of one year's premium and duty, is made upon Insurances for seven years; a discount of five per cent. is allowed on the fire premiums upon shipping.

N. B. A liberal Allowance to Professional Men, and others, introducing Insurances.

IMPERIAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, Sun Court, Cornhill, and St. James's Street.—Capital £750,000.

Lives insured with this Company are allowed to pass by sea from one part of the United Kingdom to another; and also in time of peace to pass in King's Ships and Packets or other decked Vessels, between British Ports and such Foreign Ports as lie between Ostend and Havre de Grace, both included, without extra Premium, and without being subjected to the inconvenience of applying for the special leave of the Directors, as heretofore required by the usual conditions of Life Policies.

By Order of the Board,
JOHN GREY, Actuary.

Persons insured for the whole term of Life will participate periodically in Two-third Parts of the Profits of the Company, by additions to the sums insured. Rates and Conditions may be had by applying at either of the Company's Offices. A liberal Agency is allowed to professional men effecting Insurances.

GENERAL BENEFIT INSURANCE OFFICE, 129, Aldersgate-street.—Insurance on Lives for Weekly Allowances, with Medical Attendance and Medicine in Sickness; Annuities, present and deferred, and Endowments for Children, are effected upon the most just and equitable terms. —It is peculiar to this Office to receive Premiums for such species of Insurance monthly or quarterly, instead of annually, an accommodation well suited to the means of small traders, clerks, servants, and the working classes, who feel interested in providing the means of a comfortable subsistence in sickness and old age, independent of charitable or parochial aid.—Full particulars are contained in prospectuses, which are distributed gratis at the office, daily, from 10 to 3 and 6 to 9.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, JAN. 13.—Lord Fitzroy Somerset reached Paris on the 10th, and left it on the 11th on his way to Madrid. The Journal des Debats says that his Lordship has no particular mission from our Government, but is "simply attached to Sir Wm. A'Court's legation;" and that "the positive information which he acquired during a long residence in Spain, respecting the men who are temporarily at the head of affairs in that country, may prove, under present circumstances, of great facility to Sir Wm. A'Court."—The notes of M. de Villele and of the Austrian, Russian, and Prussian Cabinets have been presented to the Spanish Ministry, and by them referred to the Council of State. No answer will be returned until the matter has been well considered.

The Journal des Debats disposes of the question of the violation of territory in the following manner:—"The rumours which have been in circulation respecting the entrance of the Spanish troops on a part of the French territory, seem to be explained away by the following article in the Memorial Bearnais.

"PAU, JAN. 5.—A detachment of the Constitutional army of Spain entered, on the 29th of December, the territory common to both nations, in the portion occupied by several inhabitants of the Commune of the Aldudes. It was commanded by Col. Assura, who took that direction to surprise the village of Valcarlos. He availed for guides in order to find his way, and it is difficult to conceive how the Adjunct, who acted for the absent Mayor, could have the weakness to yield to such an invitation, especially as he ought to have recollected the firm and honourable conduct of the Mayor in a circumstance nearly similar but still more arduous."

The Minister for Foreign Affairs, Viscount de Chateaubriand, gave a grand Diplomatic dinner on Sunday last, to which the Spanish and Portuguese Ambassadors were invited.

A letter from Paris, dated the 11th inst. states, on authority which is said to be unimpeachable, that the Spanish Government has come to a definitive resolution of being guided implicitly by the Councils of England, on whom Spain now rests for the preservation of her independence, and deliverance from foreign aggression.

AX, JAN. 6.—One hundred and fifty men, from the fort of Urgel, have lately made a sortie to cut wood. The Constitutional troops cut off their return to the fort. They immediately threw themselves into the valley of Andorre, and returned in very good order into Spain, to endeavour to regain the fort of Urgel: should the thing be found impossible, they will unite with the other Royalist corps which traverse the Spanish frontiers.

PERPIGNAN, JAN. 4.—In the memory of man there has not been known such a season as in the latter days of December. To-day I learn from an inhabitant of Saint Laurent, that in Fort Pedrona, and as far as Arles, there had fallen such a quantity of snow, that they were forced to clear the roads by manual labour, to convey bread to the soldiers in cantonments. The same thing had happened on the side of Soredo. Endeavours are making to organise a regiment of all the soldiers of the Faith. A great many have already been enrolled.

A letter from Bayonne, dated Jan. 5, says:—"Since the Descamisados think that France will not go to war with Spain, they, in the Fandanguian meetings, indulge in the most insolent and scandalous declamations against the Congress of the Holy Alliance. In order to ridicule the allied Sovereigns, they have caused to be stamped a caricature of the most outrageous description, and which is publicly exhibited in all the shops of Madrid. If it agree with the high policy of the Minister of the Descamisados (San Miguel) that the power of a single Monarch may sometimes be insulted with impunity, he may, however, have just motives to dread the resentment of a whole Congress, towards whom his Excellency tolerates, not to say permits, an insult of so revolting a character.—L'Etoile.

Some changes in the French Diplomatic Corps are talked of; it was, it is said, in contemplation to begin with M. de Caraman, Ambassador at Vienna, with whom the present Minister of Foreign Affairs appears to have had some differences (d'etiquette) at Verona; but it appears that this change is postponed in consequence of an observation made to the French Minister, that his removal would not be personally agreeable to the Emperor of Austria.—Constitutionnel.

HAVANNAH, NOV. 28.—A denunciation was lodged with the Governor a few days ago of a conspiracy being formed by some natives to proclaim the independence of the Island of Cuba; but Col. Vendenfand treated it with contempt, because it appeared to be without foundation. The rumour of the conspiracy, however, caused some alarm, and many yet think there is something in it. The only circumstance that annoys us is the swarm of pirates that infest our coasts, which, if not checked, will cut up all our trade; and the Government of Cuba is undoubtedly to be blamed for its lachesse and apathy in this respect.

It is announced that Mina was carrying on the siege of the Seo d'Urgel with vigour, and that the reported capture of Balaguer by a party of Insurgents was unfounded. The Royalist General, O'Donnel, is said to have escaped to Bayonne with a frost-bitten foot, which it was thought would require amputation. Other accounts state, that he was run away from his own troops, who had risen against him.

The Austrian Observer asserts, on the authority of the paper published at Smyrna under the protection of the Turks, that the latter had obtained some successes in Attica, and had relieved Corinth.

Accounts have been received from Aleppo to the 19th of November, at which time the shocks of the earthquake were still frequent, and some of them violent. The damage that has been sustained is incalculable.

A letter, dated Caraccas, Oct. 24, says—"The treaty between Colombia, Peru, Chili, and Buenos Ayres, will have a most important effect in Europe. Affairs in this quarter are assuming a better aspect; in a few months, with energy, the war may be terminated."—Letters dated the 22d of October, state, that for the last day or two, a very heavy firing had been heard in the direction of the two armies—that of Portugal and that of Brazil. It was concluded, therefore, that an engagement had taken place, and the utmost alarm prevailed in consequence in Bahia, and the inhabitants were shipping all their valuables on board the vessels in the harbour. His Majesty's ship Creole was lying there, and the British inhabitants had put their treasures on board, under the protection of the captain.

CONSTANTINOPLE, DEC. 10.—The Capitan Pacha had much difficulty in escaping from Tenedos. He was himself the first to cry out, Sauve qui peut! A vessel of the line, having on board the staff, the money for the payment of the fleet, and a division of troops, blew up. From the time this occurred, the Greeks have been masters of the Archipelago.

CONSTADT, DEC. 11 (23).—On the 8th, it blew a violent gale of wind from the westward, which broke up all the ice below; and the next day a Russian galliot, supposed to be the Alexander, forced her way into it, and anchored three or four vessels from the mole.

A letter of the same date says—"Dispatches have this day been received from Persia, which communicate some alarming important intelligence. It is stated in them that the cholera morbus, which has been ravaging India, has made its appearance in Persia with considerable severity, and that it was within a few days of Aleppo."

IRELAND.

A fox was found a few days since by Capt. Hedge's hounds, at Sirmount; he ran through Scronagea, Castlelinchy, from thence to Hawkmount, through Knockancinore, and fried the Ovens' earth, the hounds pressing him desperately. He crossed the river for Inisearra-wood, from thence, south, through Coolroe, Greenfield, and Ballincolig, where the old earth was also shut; he changed his course to the westward through Ballyburden Glen, Ballinguilla, Grange-glen, to Milane, and on the Ballygroman, where the old earth was also shut against him, the hounds running rank at him; he then ran for the Ovens again, and through Sirmount: he then tried a new course, running direct west, through Sreelane, Clasanure, Springville, Farcen, and to Aglis, where every horse in the field at finding, was brought to a walk, some not able to move. Thus ended a chase of full twenty miles, which left three Nimrods to deplore the loss of three good hunters.—Cork Southern Reporter.

The following, signed John Rock, was posted at Kildinn, on Tuesday night last, and taken down next morning, by Constable George Latchford:—"Take notice, any purse proud rascal, that is so ambitious, so as to unhinge any poor man of his ground, will suffer in the severest manner possible by so doing; you may say to yourself, 'the severest manner possible by so doing; you may say to yourself, 'the enemy is near me, John Rock is gone away,' and so on, but take care, life is sweet, don't meddle with any man's ground; you would not like to be thrown out on the road-side, yourself and family, consider that for another: if you don't, by the King of Kings, you will suffer sooner or later. Rock is still alive, don't disturb him; leave him as he is, in a state of tranquility; if you don't, the consequence will be murder."

About six o'clock on Monday evening, six well-armed fellows robbed the house of a farmer named Wall, at Mount Bolton, in the county of Waterford, on the banks of the Suir, about three miles at this side of Carrick, of 25 guineas—the house of a poor woman at the gate of Mount Bolton of 25 ten-pennies, and a roll of tobacco—and a neighbouring house (where no money was found) of some clothes. They passed off through Ballyhoura-wood into Carrick.—On Sunday last, a man named John Harty, upwards of 70 years old, was murdered in the parish of Ardmore, county of Waterford, by a neighbour, named Crowley, within two or three fields of his own residence. Jealousy is the motive assigned for the horrible act.—A smuggled stone and offices, belonging to a respectable farmer, named John Kelly, at Ballyquin, in the parish of Ardmore, was burnt a few nights back. Kelly took this farm from W. G. Paul, Esq. twelve months last March. It is said that Kelly values his loss at about 300l. There being about 160l. in cash lost—and states that the burning was a malicious one.—We understand that Fitzgerald, the murderer of a peaceable man, Callaghan M'Carthy, whose arrest at Fermoy we lately announced, endeavoured to effect his escape from the police who fired and wounded him in the thigh. He was lodged in Cork-gaol, from which he is daily expected to be transmitted to the gaol of this county. Waterford Paper.

On the night of New Year's day last, a farmer, named Caven, residing in the neighbourhood of Castledawson, having been in the fair of that town, selling cattle, became so much intoxicated as to be unable to conduct himself home. His way home lay by the banks of the river, which being swelled at the time with heavy rains, and very rapid, it is apprehended he must have fallen into the water and perished. It is said he had about 50l. in his pocket when lost. It is rather a singular coincidence that Caven's father was lost in the same river on the night of New Year's Day, 29 years before. His body was not found till eight days after; and the present unfortunate victim of intemperance has been heard to say, that he should die the same death his father had done.—Belfast News Letter.

Whiteboy notices have been posted at Mathea and Grenagh: that the latter place specifies the names of several persons who had lately taken lands, and requiring them to surrender their holdings. Those parishes are in the vicinity of this city.—Several horses, saddles, &c. were taken from farmers near Six Mile Water, in the parish of Whitechurch, and arms demanded by parties of Whiteboys, from W. Mulcahy, P. Collins, and others in the parish of Dunbollog. The house of Mr. Higgins has been again visited, and a threatening message left with his wife.—A party went to the house of the steward of Miss Dillon, Lisavorah, and demanded arms from him and several farmers at Reenageehy. Horns were heard sounding near Carryclovane on Saturday se'nnight.—On Wednesday se'nnight a farm-house, &c. belonging to a man, named Lyons, at Grenagh, was entirely consumed. The country people assume as the cause for it, that Lyons had taken a farm over the heads of some of the old tenantry, and that notice to surrender had been affixed at the Chapel gate on the preceding Sunday, which not having been attended to, the consequences have been as stated.—In consequence of the outrages which have lately occurred in that district, the Magistrates, who assembled at Blarney on Tuesday se'nnight, have issued printed notices that "after Sunday next, they will put the provisions of the Insurrection Act strictly in force.—Cork Paper.

On Monday week last an inquest was held on the body of John Tate, who was murdered at Madden. Several witnesses were examined, and a great deal of hard swearing on both sides; for in this case, as in most others of violence, the spirit of party predominated, and even the sacred obligation of an oath was contemned. The Jury returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against Peter Carbery.—An inquest was also held on Edward Smythe, a boy, who was the leader of a blind man named Oswald Walsh, who went about that part of the country, pretending he was a Revenue Officer, and extorting money from ignorant persons who sold whiskey and other exciseable commodities. On Sunday evening his leader complaining much of the cold, went into a house to get himself warmed, and placed himself near the fire; his blind master followed him in a very angry mood, and made him return to his party. Soon after quitting the house, several persons heard screams and blows, and in a short time after the blind man went into a cabin with the lifeless body of his guide on his back. The Jury brought in a verdict of Wilful Murder against Oswald Walsh, who was committed to the jail of Dundalk.

LIMERICK, JAN. 8.—On Saturday night, Capt. Dumas, with a detachment of the county constables from Hospital, pursued a party of ruffians who had seized a young woman, and were taking her off in order to force her to marry one of their associates. He recovered the girl, and secured two of the party, the rest having fled from his approach.

CLONMEL, JAN. 1.—Yesterday evening was committed to Clonmel gaol, John Bryan, of Mullinahone, charged on oath of Mary Burke, spinster, with being the principal of a party who forcibly carried her away from the house of Mr. James Ryan, of Ballyvadly, farmer, with intent to marry her.

Two young men of the names of Bentham and Burtenshaw, were skaiting on a pond or rather pool of the Thames at Pudley, below Windsor, on Wednesday, when the ice gave way with the former, and Burtenshaw, in attempting to rescue his companion, made the break larger, and both were drowned.—A youth of the name of Sanders was drowned in the Thames, above Chiswick, on the same day, by going off a slide into the river.

NEW SOUTH WALES.—At a General Court Martial, holden at Sydney, New South Wales, on the 10th January, 1822, and continued by adjournments to April 21, 1822. Capt. W. N. Watkins was arraigned on the following Charges, viz.:—First—For having addressed a letter to his Excellency Governor Macquarie, exhibiting charges against Lieut.-Col. Erskine, without coming through the Commanding Officer, such conduct being un-officer-like, and a breach of military discipline.—Second—For having, in a letter addressed to his Excellency Governor Macquarie, dated George Town, November 21, 1821, endeavoured to asperse the character of Lieut.-Col. Erskine, his Commanding Officer, in the most serious manner, by accusing him of the most palpable, malicious, and vindictive perjury, with a variety of other expressions and observations contained in the said letter highly improper; such conduct being un-gentleman-like, un-officer like, insubordinate, and in breach of the Articles of War.—Third—For having addressed a letter to the Captains and Subalterns of the 48th Regiment, enclosing a copy of a letter, of the 24th June, 1821, to his Excellency Governor Macquarie, written in the most inflammatory and insubordinate style, reflecting strongly upon the character of Lieut.-Col. Erskine, his Commanding Officer; such conduct being un-officer-like, insubordinate, inflammatory, subversive of all military order, and in breach of the Articles of War.—The Court having maturely and deliberately considered the evidence produced in support of the charges preferred, as also that adduced and what has been alleged in defence by the prisoner, have and do adjudge that the prisoner, as to and in respect of the first and second charges respectively, is Guilty.—And as to and in respect of the third charge, that the prisoner is Not Guilty.—And the Court in respect of such judgment have and do adjudge further, in sentence, that the prisoner be placed at the bottom of the list of Captains of his Majesty's 48th Regiment, and that he lose three years rank in the Army.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

THURSDAY.—Chambers v. ——.—The Attorney-General said, he had to make a motion in this case, which he had mentioned on a former occasion, and which was appointed to come on to-day; but he was informed on coming into Court, that Mr. Hart, who was on the other side, had lost his brief (with several others) in a hackney-coach last night, and therefore it would again have to stand over.—Mr. Hart stated, that he intended to employ last evening usefully in reading his bag full of briefs at his house, which he took with him for that purpose in a hackney-coach, but when he got home he forgot to take them up with him, and the coach drove off, since which he has not been able to hear any thing of it.—His Lordship thought it was a very fortunate occurrence, as it must have saved the learned Gentleman a great deal of trouble.

VICE-CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

THURSDAY.—Mellish v. Mellish.—The defendant in this cause, Wm. Mellish, late member for the county of Middlesex, and the plaintiff is Miss Catherine Mellish, to whom he and his two brothers, Thomas and the Rev. Edward Mellish, had been guardians under their father's will during her minority. Mr. Wetherell moved for an injunction to prevent the defendant from proceeding in an action at law for the recovery of 22,000l. and upwards, part of which the defendant alledged had been disbursed by him for the plaintiff's use after she had come of age, while the remaining part of the debt had been incurred during her minority. Miss Mellish had come of age in 1817, and had been an infant of two years old on the death of her father. By his will an estate in Hertfordshire, called Hamells, devolved upon her, the defendant being the residuary legatee under the certain express provisions. On the testator's death the will was proved, and it was discovered he had borrowed from the trustees of his marriage settlement a sum of 18,000l. for which he had given a mortgage on the estate in question. The Learned Counsel then went on to show that the property of the plaintiff had been constantly accumulating during her minority, yet, instead of there being a large balance in her favour, it might naturally be supposed, the defendant, her uncle, exhibited a claim against her of 13,194l. 9s. 4d. for expenses while she was under age, which sum had since been reduced by an amended account to 11,370l. 3s. 6d. A sum of 9,000l. had been expended on her maintenance and education while a minor, and 14,000l. had been laid out in lands which lay immediately contiguous to the estate in Hertfordshire. To these items he meant to offer no objection whatever, but looking at the balance of the account, it would be found that the guardians of the infant had received, during her minority, a sum amounting to 57,558l. 7s. 9d. and he therefore could not help thinking that they had shown a want of prudence and economy in the management of her property. Mr. Bell maintained that the guardians, so far from acting to the prejudice of the plaintiff, had done every thing to improve her property. At the time of her father's decease, in 1798, the gross amount of yearly income was only 2,733l. whereas it was now, by the prudent management, 8,000l. at least. The Vice-Chancellor was of opinion that this was a case which came strictly under equitable jurisdiction. He therefore decided that the injunction should be granted upon the payment into Court of the sum of 11,480l. to which, as has been paid to the plaintiff after she had come of age, the defendant seemed to have a fair claim; for, although upon future investigation there might be found an equitable set off against it, still there was no objection to payment being made at present. It was then agreed, on both sides, that the money should be paid into Court within six weeks from this day.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH.

MONDAY.—Bewley v. Sparling.—An action to recover 47l. was sworn by Richard Bewley, brother of the plaintiff (who is a tobacconist in the Strand,) that on the 29th of May, 1821, the defendant asked his brother to lend him 100l. The plaintiff replied he could lend him no more than 70l. 10s. Plaintiff afterwards lent him 70l. The defendant subsequently applied to plaintiff to lend him 10l. and he accepted a bill drawn by defendant. In the following October plaintiff asked defendant if he could pay any part of the money lent. Defendant, in reply, said that he had no occasion to grumble, for if he had not won back what he had lost at play, he would have owed him. He said he would pay the two first loans when he got in his Christmas bills. On the part of the defendant it was stated, that the sums mentioned as having been given to the plaintiff, were to compromise a sum of 800l. lost by the plaintiff to the defendant at play. The parties were invited to dine by a Mr. Hodgson, who kept the Piazza Tavern, Covent Garden. After dinner they played at cards, and the defendant won from the plaintiff 100l. He afterwards won 50l. at Hodgson's. The parties met again at Hodgson's Chambers, they resumed the play, and plaintiff lost to defendant 400l. more. The plaintiff was so sensible of his proper conduct that he promised to make him a present of the best snuff-box in his shop for his unresisting to receive 50l. when he might have had 800l. Lieutenant Cooper, of the East Kent Militia, proved these facts, and the Jury returned a verdict for the defendant.

TUESDAY.—Hunter v. Shinke.—An action upon a bond for 2000l to assess the damages. The plaintiff is a surgeon and apothecary residing in Tower-street, and the defendant is his nephew. In the year 1810, the apprenticeship of the defendant having expired, the uncle proposed to take him as an assistant at a salary of 50l. for the first year, to be increased 10l. per annum until it should amount to 100l. per annum, and articles to that effect were entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant. In these articles there was a clause prohibiting the defendant (if at the expiration of seven years he should not wish to remain with his uncle,) from being a "practitioner in physic" within two miles of Tower-hill, for five years after the year 1817, under a penalty of 2000l.; and the defendant executed a bond for the payment of that sum provided he should commit a breach of the contract. In July 1820, the plaintiff proposed to the defendant to become a partner upon terms which the defendant rejected. The defendant then left the service of the plaintiff, set up business as a surgeon, in Hart-street, Crutched-friars, and the plaintiff brought his action on the 6th of November, 1820, for the amount of the bond. The Jury assessed the damages at 50l.

WEDNESDAY.—Rhode, Assignee, v. Proctor, Assignee.—The Solicitor-General stated that this was an issue from the Vice-Chancellor's Court, to try whether certain bills of exchange, drawn upon Rains and Co. bankrupts, were well constituted, and whether the plaintiffs were entitled to recover against the assignees. The bills, seven in number, were for 1000l., 820l., and 750l. George Chancellor proved the hand-writing of drawer and acceptor. Rhode carried on business at No. 80, London-wall; witness was clerk, and got his banker's book with the Bank of England made up. He gave witness a check for 15l. or 20., which was about the amount of his balance. Witness got the money and gave it to Mr. Rains; he has absconded, and witness has never seen him since. For the defendant it was contended, that the question was, whether the notice of dishonour was given to the drawer so as to entitle the holder to recover against his estate, for even a bankrupt drawer was entitled to notice. The Solicitor-General gave evidence that Rains was not to be found when those bills became due. No attempt was shown to have been made to find Rains at this time, or to give notice of the dishonour to the assignees; and thirdly, whether certain transactions on bills arising out of shipments of goods, were bona fide on the part of Sayer and Co. or whether they were founded in colourable usury, as affecting the original transaction between them and Rains the bankrupt. The Jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff.

THURSDAY.—Pendarvis v. Glynn—The plaintiff went formerly by the name of Stackhouse, entering into partnership with others in the North Cornwall Bank: each partner was to supply a certain quantity of stock. The plaintiff supplied his part, but the defendant and other partners failed to comply with a bond given for that purpose; and upon which this action was brought to recover the penalty therein set forth of 12,490l. and advances amounting to 5,155l. which was secured to the plaintiffs by the bond in question. These facts were proved, and the Lord Chief Justice referred the parties to a bill in Chancery, as all this Court could do, was to look at the issues joined, by which it appeared that 5,245l. was unsatisfied, for which the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict, according to the tenor of the bond. Verdict for the plaintiff—Damages 5,245l. and costs.

FRIDAY.—Tyler v. Jones, Gentleman.—The Solicitor-General stated that the plaintiff is a gentleman advanced in life, who sought to recover a compensation in damages for the negligent and unskilful conduct of the defendant in his profession of attorney, in that of taking invalid and insufficient security in a transaction of annuity, wherein he was retained and employed on behalf of Mr. Tyler, the plaintiff.—For the defendant, it was proposed the matter in dispute should be referred to some gentlemen out of Court.—This being consented to, the Jury found for the plaintiff—Damages 1,000l. subject to a reference.

OLD BAILEY.

WEDNESDAY.—William Pearce stood indicted with having, on the 10th of December, feloniously stolen thirteen pieces of silver, value 3l. the property of the moneyers of his Majesty's Mint.—Henry Wm. Atkinson, the senior moneyer, had discovered considerable deficiencies in uncoined metals anterior to November last. On the 10th of Dec. silver coin was being worked; prisoner, on the above day, was employed in cutting the silver into blanks, ready to be stamped; the practice in the Mint is, to weigh the gold or silver when given out for work in the morning, and to weigh it at night when it was returned; witness was present when the prisoner was searched; a tin box fell from his person, containing a skeleton key, and another key in preparation for being made of a similar description; 13 crown blanks were also found upon the prisoner; the business of the day was over, and the prisoner was on his way home; the blanks weighed full 11 ounces, and were worth at least 3l.—Other witnesses spoke to the same effect.—Mr. Powell, solicitor to the Mint, was present at the examination of the prisoner before the Magistrate. Prisoner said "Sam Marlow gave me the keys, for the purpose of opening the strong holds."—The Lord Chief Baron charged the Jury at considerable length, and they returned a verdict of Guilty.

Mary Markland Lowe stood indicted with having, on the 4th of Oct. stolen two sheets and other articles, value 23s. 6d. the property of Rt. Turner.—The prisoner lodged in the house of the prosecutor, and the property she pledged at several pawnbrokers' shops; but it appearing that she had been committed by a Magistrate at Hatton-garden Police Office, under the pawnbrokers' Act, and that she had consequently suffered an imprisonment of three months for illegally pledging the articles she was charged with having stolen, Mr. Justice Holroyd charged the Jury, that under these circumstances, the Learned Counsel for the prosecution could not proceed with his case.—The Jury, therefore, returned a verdict of Not Guilty.

THURSDAY.—Thomas Clifford was indicted for stealing a silver tea urn, and some other silver articles, the property of Montague Levyson, a jeweller and silversmith, of Pall Mall.—The prisoner was a journeyman working silversmith, employed by the prosecutor. He was intrusted with a valuable silver tea service and other goods, to complete the workmanship at his own lodgings, as was his custom. The work having been detained much longer than the regular time, it was found that he had absconded, and taken with him the whole of the property. None of the plate was recovered.—Mr. Levyson was cross-examined, in the course of which the following questions were put:—Are you of the Jewish persuasion?

Mr. Levyson—I have a thorough belief in the Supreme Being.

Were your parents Jews?—They were.

Do you believe in the Old or New Testament?—I consider myself equally bound to my MAKER, by swearing either upon the Old or New Testament.

Do you believe in both, then?—There are parts in both of them in which I do not believe.

Have you ever renounced the religion you were educated in?—No; but I partly believe in both.

Do you believe in the Revelation made by GOD to man?—I have my doubts of that.

Do you believe in a future state?—I have my doubts of that also; but I believe that man is accountable to his MAKER for his good or bad actions.

If you have doubts of a future state, how do you suppose yourself accountable for your actions?—I have no settled opinion respecting the Revelation made by GOD to man; but I do believe that man will be rewarded or punished according to his actions.

The Recorder—Then that is the substance of all true Religion!—Mr. Levyson was then sworn to the truth of his statement on the Bible, having before been sworn on the New Testament.—In addition to Mr. Levyson, other witnesses were examined, who corroborated his evidence in the principal facts of the case.—The Jury found the prisoner Guilty, and the Court sentenced him to seven years' transportation.

Ann Williams was indicted capitally, for stealing four sovereigns, some silver, and a quantity of wearing apparel.—The prisoner had been taken into the house of Mr. Harrison, the prosecutor, living in Bloomsbury, in a state of the most abject distress, and received from him and his wife every assistance which her situation required. Being at the time destitute of clothing, she having given her box to a friend, in pledge for favours received, Mrs. Harrison consented to use her influence to procure for her, from that friend, such articles as she was most in need of, and for that purpose several appointments were made. The prisoner, however, made various frivolous excuses, and Mrs. Harrison accused her of having some sclemn agitation. This remonstrance determined the prisoner, for she shortly afterwards absconded from the house, having first wrenched open a tea-caddy, and taken from it 4l. 18s. 6d., the whole stock of ready cash of her humane benefactors, taking also a bundle of linen.—Guilty—Death.

Jane Moore was capitally indicted for stealing in a dwelling house a number of articles, the property of her master, Capt. Samuel Roberts, and also for stealing a purse, two sovereigns, and a quantity of wearing apparel, the property of Letitia Roberts, spinster.—The prisoner had been in the Captain's service only fourteen days. When she left, articles were missed, and upon searching her lodgings many of them were found concealed there.—The prisoner in defence said she must have taken the things by mistake in the hurry of leaving her place.—Mr. Justice Burrough charged the Jury that the capital part of the indictment was not legally supported by evidence.—The Jury found the prisoner Guilty of stealing to the value of 39s.

John Thomas, a man of colour, aged 22, was indicted for burglariously breaking and entering the dwelling-house of George Pawson, and stealing four pounds in copper, four half crowns, and other monies, his property.—Dorothy Pawson stated, that her husband is landlord of the Angel public-house, in Back-lane, Shadwell. On the night of the 11th of December, on entering the parlour, she discovered the prisoner lying on the table. She asked what he was doing there. He replied, "I am asleep, and very sick, don't disturb me." She told him it was time to go to bed, and desired he would go away. After some hesitation, he went away. She fastened the door after him, saw every thing secure, and went to bed. On coming down stairs on the next morning, she found the bar door open, the till forced, and its contents carried off. A pane of glass had been cut out of the wash-house window, and was sufficiently large to admit the entrance of a man. In the course of the day, she was informed of the prisoner having been stopped by a watchman, with the property in question.—The Jury found the prisoner Guilty. The wife of the prosecutor recommended him to mercy, on the ground of no violence having been offered the inmates. This the Learned Judge said should be attended to.

Elizabeth Steward, aged 17, was indicted, capitally, for stealing in the dwelling-house of her master, Silvanius Underwood, 26 sovereigns, 7l. in silver, and various articles of wearing apparel. There was no evidence to prove the capital charge, and the Jury found her Guilty of stealing to the value of 39s.

Mary Tickson, aged 15, stood indicted for stealing a pocket-book, containing a 10l. note, four sovereigns, and some silver, the property of E. W. Bishop.—The Jury found her Guilty. She was recommended to mercy by the prosecutor on account of her youth.

FRIDAY.—Timothy White was indicted for the murder of Michael Flood, by striking him a violent blow on the head with a stump arm.—John Walker, butcher, stated, that on Sunday, the 6th of October, he was standing in his shop, and saw Flood bleeding from the face and the prisoner striking him. A woman endeavoured to prevent him from giving him more blows, and the deceased got away; the prisoner ran after Flood and knocked him down. Flood, after the affray, called on witness; his face appeared dreadfully cut, but he was able to walk about; before the Magistrates the prisoner was ordered to find bail, but on saying he could not, the deceased said he would make it up; an observation was then made respecting what money he would give the old man, and the prisoner said he had only 2s.; the Magistrate said he must find 10s. or go to prison; a person was then sent to get the money, and the Magistrate told witness he would not be wanted; the prisoner was after that at large; they appeared to be well acquainted.—John T. Manner, surgeon of St. George's Hospital, deposed, that the deceased was brought to the above place on the 14th of October. He had a wound over the left eye, which was bleeding. Witness examined the wound, and found a coagulum of blood, the further effusion of that fluid was then stopped. In a day or two he became rather delirious, and afterwards there was more bleeding. On the 20th his delirium increased, and he died the next day. After his death witness examined the wound minutely, and found a bone displaced; the membranes of the brain were inflamed, and there was a little pus. The inflammation was occasioned by a blow. The vital parts of the body were quite sound. The witness in continuation said, "I consider the blow was the cause of his death—if he had had proper medical assistance at the first, I think he might have been saved."—The Jury pronounced the prisoner "Guilty of Manslaughter."

POLICE.

MANSION-HOUSE.—On Wednesday, Sergeant, the guard of the Birmingham Balloon Coach, which was robbed of Bank-notes to the amount of nearly 8,000l. on the 12th of December, was brought before the Lord Mayor, together with two other men, the one named Clifford, the other Clarke, for examination, on suspicion of having been concerned in the robbery. Two parcels, containing the notes, were stolen out of the coach, in the yard of the Swan-with-two-Necks, Lad-lane, the guard having, according to his own account, incautiously laid them on the seat of the coach.—The Lord Mayor sent back the prisoners for further examination, in order that opportunity should be afforded of ascertaining the facts connected with the case.

On Thursday, Wm. Thomas, a person of very decent appearance, but some time known to the police, was charged with having robbed the Exeter Subscription coach of a parcel of Bank notes, to the amount of upwards of 1,100l. on the 6th of December. An officer apprehended him at a public-house in Tash-street, Gray's-inn-lane. A witness, named Dennis, stated, that on the 6th of December, between six and seven in the evening, as he was going with work to Broad-street, St. Giles's, he saw the prisoner with three other men near the Old Bell and Crown in Holborn, and knowing them to be bad characters watched their movements, and at Cheadle saw them about the Exeter coach. The prisoner ran to the off-side of the coach, while his two friends seemed to be handing a lady out at the pavement side. The guard held a light in his hand, and was looking over some boxes which lay on the pavement by the hind wheel. The prisoner, at that instant, seemed to be on his knees looking about the coach. He then went to the door of it and brought away something like a parcel, which he held to his breast. He was immediately joined by his two companions, and the three walked on towards Berkely-street. T. Rowe, a ticket-porter, stated that on the 7th of December, at between ten and eleven in the morning, prisoner came up to him, gave him five 5l. notes of Hanbury, Taylor, and Lloyd's; told him to get cash for them, and that he would wait in Angel-court, Throgmorton-street, to receive the money. Witness got sovereigns for the notes, according to order, and delivered them to the prisoner. The prisoner then gave him six 5l. notes, saying, "You may as well get me these six 5l. notes at Hoare and Co.'s." Witness remembered the latter notes were of the Tavistock Bank. He got cash for these, and brought them to the prisoner, who paid him a couple of shillings for his trouble. The prisoner was remanded.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Magistrates of counties, cities, and boroughs, have a power to fix the price salt shall be sold at in their respective districts.

Mr. Vickery has been elected Governor of the House of Correction.

THE ARMY.—Detachments from the 13th Light Dragoons, the 30th, 41st, 46th, 54th, 69th, and 89th regiments of Foot have received orders to march from Maidstone, Portsmouth, and Albany barracks for Gravesend, to embark about the middle of next month on board the Kellie and Atlas for Madras.—The Depôt of the 13th Reg. of Foot commenced its March on Monday last, from Chatham, for Albany Barracks, where it will arrive on Tuesday; Detachments belonging to the 11th Dragoons, and the 16th Lancers, are on their march from Maidstone to Chatham, preparatory to their embarkation at Gravesend for Bengal; the Depôt of the 65th Foot commenced its march on the 13th inst. from Portsmouth for Chatham, where it will arrive tomorrow; one troop of the 1st Royal Dragoons has marched from Ipswich to Norwich; another troop of the same corps has marched from Canterbury to Deal.

LAW.—Sittings appointed in Middlesex and London, before the Right Hon. Sir Robert Dallas, Knight, Lord Chief Justice of His Majesty's Court of Common Pleas, at Westminster, in and after Hilary Term, 1823.—IN TERM.—Middlesex—Friday, Jan. 14, Wednesday, Jan. 29, and Thursday, Feb. 6.—London—Saturday, Jan. 26, Friday, Jan. 31, and Friday, Feb. 7.—AFTER TERM.—Middlesex—Thursday, Feb 13.—London—Friday, Feb. 14.

A meeting for the county of Dublin was held on Friday se'nnight, at which resolutions were passed, highly expressive of indignation at the late outrage on the Lord Lieutenant. The High Sheriffs of two Counties, those of Wexford and Carlow, have refused to convene public meetings for the purpose of addressing the Lord Lieutenant upon the subject of the recent outrage offered to his Excellency in the Dublin Theatre.

As an instance of the improvement in the trade of Sheffield, the diminished assessments in support of the parochial poor, for the year 1820, amounted to 37,467. 7s. 8½d. while that for the year just closed was only 20,141. 2s. In the space, therefore, of two years, the assessment has undergone a reduction of upwards of Seventeen Thousand Pounds!

It is said that there have been 360 cases of cancer in the city of Canterbury alone, since the fashion of females wearing steel busks in their stays first commenced. These, by pressing on the bosom, the physicians are of opinion, have occasioned many cancers, and numerous distressing and fatal cases.

DOVER, JAN. 14.—Yesterday morning the Badger, whilst cruising, fell in with a suspicious sail between Boulogne and Etables, about three leagues from the land; made all sail in chase; at the same time firing a gun to bring her to, and hoisting the ensign and pendant. The cutter finding the Badger gain on her, fired her stern chaser. The action then became general, and lasted from half past seven A. M. until half past one P. M., and after a running fight of six hours and a half, the cutter struck about six leagues from Dieppe. Upon boarding her she proved to be the Three Brothers, sailing from Flushing to the Faro Isles, having a valuable cargo of tea, tobacco, and spirits, on board, intended for illicit importation, and carrying twenty-seven men, four six-pound carronades, besides swivels and an immense quantity of fire-arms. On board the smuggler, the Captain and one man were killed and seven wounded, two mortally, one of whom died this morning. On board the Badger, Mr. Collum, Deputation Officer, much respected in this town, was killed; Lieutenant Nazer, her commander, the second Mate, and three seamen, wounded. A more desperate action has not been fought between a revenue cruizer and a smuggler for some time.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We have received the packet from BELFAST. The information contained in it is extremely important, and we have submitted the whole of the affair, together with MR. BURSON'S paper and handbills, to Counsel. Our friends will perceive that we must decline noticing the matter here, further than to assure them most solemnly, which assseveration all parties concerned in BULL are most ready to substantiate by oath, that from the first establishment of this Paper to the present moment, no person of the name of HOOKEN has ever been directly or indirectly connected with it—that no such person is known to, or in communication with any individual of our establishment—and that the whole of the implications and statements in which that person's name has been associated with BULL, are utterly FALSE AND GROUNDLESS.

We have no room for answers to our numerous friends in general; but, as the subject appears important to our correspondent at Perth, we think it right to say, that DOCTOR MACKENZIE'S Lectures to Young Women have been published, but are out of print, and not likely to go to a second edition.

We are compelled to decline the office of commenting upon the REV. GEORGE GLOVER'S Lecture to the Archbishops and Bishops of England. The thing is a commentary upon itself, and we cannot spare room even for a laugh at a fiddling parson, professing to drill the Bench of his Governors into Protestants "of the Roman Catholic persuasion."

We are much obliged to Y. Z. for his friendly communication.

PRICE OF STOCKS AT THE CLOSE, SATURDAY.

The settlement of the Account on Friday passed without any event worth noticing having occurred, and the new Account was done on that day at 79¾. To-day the opening price of the Consols for the Account was 79¾ ⅜, and at that price the market was heavy. Towards the middle of the day it was strongly reported on the Stock Exchange that the Ambassadors of the Holy Alliance had left the Spanish capital in consequence of the non-compliance of the Government with the notes of the Allied Powers. This intelligence had a considerable effect on the Money Market, the Consols for the Account falling immediately to 79 sellers. At the close they were 79¾.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, JANUARY 19.

WE rejoice to state, that the KING is rapidly recovering from the indisposition under which His Majesty was last week labouring.

WE have daily proofs obtruded upon our observation of the injury sustained by the cause of LIBERTY from the forced sentiments and speculative exaggerations foisted upon the world in its name—and we will venture to affirm, that however imperceptible in its progress, the horrors of the French revolution—the partial adoption of its principles, and its general advocacy by the prostituted press throughout Europe for so many years, have engendered in the minds of the most liberally endowed men such a portion of sensitive antipathy to hazard new experiments, as may be inimical not only to progressive improvement, but in the long run tend also to encourage sentiments in some degree hostile to LIBERTY itself! It is the nature of the human mind to fly for remedies in the extreme direction from the evil to be apprehended. The unconditional restoration of CHARLES II. is a case in point—it is all in the natural course of human events—a man is never so much disposed to analyse his own religious sentiments as when he retires from the ceremonial mummeries of the Vatican, or is disgusted with the blasphemous ravings of the Conventicle. He asks himself in trembling, "can the source be pure from which such corruption flows?" If he be a weak man he may probably become an infidel—a wise one only will see where the error in the inference lies, and wise men are not to be counted as MR. CREEVY counts noses. We know but one man, indeed, to whom even the WHIGS have assigned "Absolute Wisdom," and—as limited to the party—the worthy gentleman so distinguished may be considered to have earned it, as he has all the merit of originating the "GREAT HUMBUG," in which the rest only joined after they found, to their utter astonishment, it was likely to prove successful.

Our readers must pardon this foolish digression from a very serious subject—but it is scarcely possible to be grave when our eyes or attention are diverted towards the antics and trickeries of Whiggism.

It is the evil attendant upon every species of exaggeration, that even virtue is degraded by the APERY of it among men whose lives and conduct are openly at war with it. We hear the Whigs PROFESS loyalty to the King—devotion to the Constitution, and reverence for religion—we SEE them dive into the privacies of royalty, to exercise the odious talent of base and malignant insinuation—we find them trading with regicides and rebels, as with counters to play the game of speculation for power—and trampling upon the feelings of the country, by direct and systematic attacks upon the Church. Are not these, in themselves, sufficient indications of an hypocritical spirit; and are we to be surprised, that peaceable men should learn to sit down content, even under oppression itself, as long as it does not interfere with their daily comforts, rather than encounter—

"——— His they know not of,"

under such an aspect—and in such a state of opinions. That there is no disposition on the part of our present Governors to avail themselves of this sentiment, is nothing to the question. As a judgment upon the country, the WHIGS, at some future period, may force their way into office—and the men, who are now joining in the cry to compel a CROWN OFFICER (once a Whig, too) to institute ex officio proceedings in the case of certain individuals charged with State crimes, against whom, after the examination of thirty witnesses, a GRAND JURY cannot find a bill:—who pursue, by every trick and chicane of law, those of their opponents whom they cannot destroy by the calumnies of their press—are of a character little likely to be withholden from the pursuit of their primary objects by any over-scrupulous adherence to principles in PRACTICE, which they have already shaken to their base, in THEORY.

We have received volumes of letters upon the grand effort made in the last EDINBURGH REVIEW; and some evidently from the parties themselves, in the hope, no doubt, of bringing the thing more into notice. And we have no objection to contribute our endeavours to give as much publicity as possible to this melange of bitterness and folly, excited by its undisguised antipathy to Monarchy, to the Church, and to the Constitution.

Our friend, PAUL POTTER, has, we find, entered somewhat into detail, upon this subject; we shall, therefore, only treat the matter generally, as illustrative of the opinions we have invariably entertained of the WHIG CONSPIRACY to destroy the Constitution of our fathers, through the sides of LIBERTY, and strike at CHRISTIANITY, under the arm of the ESTABLISHED CHURCH.

The public can have no notion of the labour, contrivance, and art, with which this Review has been got up, as a general measure, by the party. We heard of it months before its appearance. It was to be a death-blow to Tory principles, and the Io PÆAN to the expected triumph of county meetings; and their march into St. Stephen's at the approaching meeting of Parliament. A long laboured article upon the old story of the partition of Poland—as remarkable at least for its dulness and incorrectness, as for its length, is revived, and destined to lay prostrate the MONARCHICAL CHARACTER at the feet of the rabble: and lest the simple folks, to whom it is particularly addressed, should be apt to draw a line between Russian AUTOCRATS, and the Constitutional MONARCH of these realms—a running comment, in the shape of notes, is appended, whereby the application cannot fail of being understood, or the policy of this country for the last half century being involved in all that is odious, weak, and corrupt, both at home and abroad. May SIR JAMES remain too intensely occupied with Whiggery and Pedagogy, ever to incur the sin of writing a History of England! No less than THREE long articles are directly and indistinguishably devoted to the most virulent, false, and ignorant attacks upon the BISHOPS and CLERGY of England—whilst ANOTHER is occupied in a puny, but not therefore the less evil-minded and cold-blooded, attack upon the aristocratical and executive portion of the constituted estates of the realm.

There is not a sentiment—a line of old English growth, assumed even to cover the gross form of revolutionary innovation. The leaven of infidelity and hatred to monarchical institutions sworn in the hall of the French convention by regicides and atheists, spreads through and seasons every part of this un-English mass. There is throughout a BIGOTRY and superstitious devotion to the desecrating creed of the "RED CAPS," which we have no words in our language to describe, but such as have been conventionally applied to the intolerant spirit of Rome in the zenith of papal power—and in the propagation of monstrous tenets under the influence of its anathemas. But we must postpone our remarks upon the nature of the arguments employed upon this occasion, which are found necessary, because a stronger mode of enforcing their principles is yet beyond their reach. These, if they partake little of the force with which truth makes its way to our conviction, are distinguishable at least by that second-hand wisdom, which once placed the power and dominion of Europe in the grasp of AN ORDER, whose casuistry could, like HANNIBAL'S "vinegar cruet," dissolve all impediments to the march of their own dark and ambitious influence.

Setting aside all graver matter, we cannot resist quoting one of the minor instances of Whig egotism, which on higher topics is calculated only to awaken our contempt—HERE it really affords something sufficiently comical to excite a laugh. The Reviewer affects to be playful—but a Whig cannot hide the "cloven foot"—he never smiles without looking grim. Speaking of that very amiable and interesting writer from America—and who is interesting to the party only as being a Republican—in the review of "Bracebridge Hall," MR. JEFFREY, for we believe he is chief secretary for the American department—expresses his regret in "set terms" at not being at liberty to find fault with his author, although he feels a "little secret spite lingering within him at his author's universal affability." He—good candid soul—set about questioning himself—we really wonder where was the puzzle to so experienced a Reviewer—and at last he traces this "secret spite" to "an eager desire to see so powerful a pen and such great "popularity employed in demolishing those errors and abuses. "to which WE had (that is THE WHIGS) been accustomed to "refer most of the unhappiness of our country!!"

So, because WE, the WHIGS, have been accustomed to refer what they choose to call "THE UNHAPPINESS" of their country to the absence of their own councils, a foreigner is to fly in the face of public opinion, and outrage the feelings of every nine out of ten honourable beings who have patronized his talents, to curry favour with A PARTY, which, as a Republican at home, he evidently despises as REPUBLICAN under a free Monarchy!—But it is not worthy a comment; we only select the passage connected with what follows, to afford the promised laugh to our readers.

"Being WHIGS ourselves, for example"—the reviewer goes on—"we could not but take it a little amiss that ONE, born "and bred A REPUBLICAN, and writing largely on the present "condition of England, should make so little distinction be-"tween THAT PARTY and its opponents, and should even "choose to attach himself to a Tory family, as the proper type "and emblem of the OLD ENGLISH FAMILY!"—We pass over the direct and unequivocal admission of WHIG and REPUBLICAN being convertible terms; but it is rather hard upon poor MR. WASHINGTON IRVINE that he should be condemned for trusting his own eyes, without thinking it necessary to borrow a pair of Whig spectacles! Perhaps—we speak under correction—he could not discover a WHIG family of such simple, pious, and old-fashioned habits, as appear to have attracted him to Bracebridge-Hall. He might not have had so happy an occasion of shewing how RADICALS are treated by sober-minded country people, who will be content, and believe themselves to be happy, in spite of what the WHIGS "have been accustomed to call the unhappiness o "the country!"

A few words more, and we retire to wash our hands. "Nor could we," continues the reviewer, "well acquit him "of being PIGEON LIVERED, and LACKING GALL, when w "found that nothing could provoke him to give a palpable hi "at the Ministry, or even to employ his pure and powerfu "eloquence in reproving the SHAMEFUL SCURRILITIES "the MINISTERIAL PRESS!"

Could not the Reviewer discover the reason? We will in form him. Mr. IRVINE wished to preserve his eloquence PURE, which he could not have done had he dipped his pen i the inimixed gall which the WHIG PRESS for the last twenty years has been so assiduous in manufacturing. He could hav found no "shameful scurrilities" in the Ministerial press which have not been drawn forth, and hence, perhaps, necessarily partaken, in some degree, the nature of the GROSS AN BLUSHING SCURRILITIES of the WHIGS, who revelled long, and so long abused the MONOPOLY of the PRESS He must have looked to the cause and origin of this "shameful scurrilities" of the Ministerial press—and have traced them to A SOURCE teeming with all the foul and pu trid materials of revolutionary excitation, and open, like th lion's mouth at Venice, to every anonymous denunciation against an offending opponent, or envied rival. He would have found the ready-prepared poison for individuals of public bodies, with apportioned doses in TWO-PENNY POST-BAGS, in MORRISIAN and MOORISH LYRICS—i CHRONICLES and EXAMINERS, for retail, up to the WHOLE SALE HEAVY ARTICLE, manufactured quarterly IN EDIN BURGH!! He might, indeed, have improved his eloquence "dans L'Ecole des Halles;" but its PURITY, even with a DA VY'S Safety Lamp, must have exploded amid the pestilential vapours of WHIG RADICALISM!

We have said thus much, for what is called the "Ministerial Press," although we are perfectly aware the clause is mean and intended to include, if not exclusively to apply to our selves. We are not WHIGS, and therefore obtrude OURSELVES as little as possible upon the public; but if these valiant an high-toned spirits of Whiggism were really as unconnected with the patronage, aid, support, and contribution of its leaders—as we are of ALL MINISTERIAL INFLUENCE WHA EVER, they might indeed boast of their INDEPENDENCE.

Such men cannot conceive any thing like patriotism or di interestedness in combination—they have not hearts to b lieve that men can be honest and zealous without a mercenar motive, or we would tell them—and repeat it to the world, a SOLEMN TRUTH before Heaven, that we never have direct or indirectly, had a single communication from the commence ment of our career with THE GOVERNMENT of the country and that we are, at this moment, as free to support LOR GREY, if ever it were possible he could merit it, as a friend to his country, as to defend LORD LIVERPOOL and his measures as long as they continue to be—what they have been.

POLITICAL DISTRESS.

THE country is particularly indebted to the manly straightforward conduct of MR. COBBETT at the Norfolk county meeting, for having thrown overboard the mean and half-measured address of the WHIGS, and substituted a plain and intelligible statement of the requests, or rather the demands of the people upon the Government.

MR. COBBETT may be truly called an independent man—the having nothing to depend upon can entitle him to such a distinction. MR. COKE has yet something to lose, and with the prudence of a person just married, and starting in life for the second time, with the cares of a young family upon his hea that gentleman hesitated to tell us the plain truths, which COBBETT, whose philosophy equals his consistency, and who cares for nobody but the PEOPLE, has laid before us in a most masterly and perspicuous manner.

To him, then, are we indebted for the knowledge that perfect peace, the repeal of nearly twenty millions worth of war taxes, the reduction of our army and navy, the extreme cheapness of provisions, the unprecedented briskness of trade and the activity of our manufactories, are the existing cause of the direful distress which has, during this once cheerful season of the year, displayed its horrors all over this unhappy country.

But a most striking circumstance which has come to our knowledge induces us to believe that in some societies th distress (vainly supposed to be confined to the agricultural interests,) rages with much greater violence than those wh are the most interested wish us to imagine. The following advertisement, which has been circulated amongst the selec induces us to fancy that political distress is more severely fe at the present moment than any other distress in the empire

To MR. EDWARD ELLICE, whose disposition to stand we with all parties is pretty notorious, we believe ourselves in debted for the subjoined paper, which we received only ye terday afternoon.

SALE BY AUCTION.

To be sold, without any reserve, to the highest bidder, Tuesday, the 4th of February, 1823, at the Great Rooms, no Palace Yard, Westminster, to which place they will be r moved from ST. JAMES'S-STREET, for the convenience sale,

The bond fide property of Noblemen and Gentlemen, who a induced, by the difficulties of the times, to submit them public notice.

The Sale to commence at 3 o'clock for 4 precisely. Cat logues may be had of MESSRS. COWPER, ROSE, and Co. MESSRS. LEY, RICKMAN, and Co.—MR. DEBRETT, M STOCKDALE, and all publishers of Court Kalendars, Pocke books, &c.

Amongst the striking articles for sale the following are s lected for particular attention:—

Lot 1.—An old stiff WIG—the hair nearly worn off—e tremely rough towards the CROWN—originally FOXY, b now entirely GREY; this lot may be had a bargain.

His Grace the DUKE of BEDFORD and LORD HOLLAND recommend Lot 7, consisting of two Red Night Caps, whi they formerly wore as Wigs, but which, for reasons best know to themselves, they are now extremely anxious to dispose o particularly large about the head, and not keeping well in with the TEMPLES.

Lot 8—is a full-bottomed Wig, belonging to LORD NUGE

Lot 12.—A Coachman's curly, coming entirely over the shoulders—the undoubted property of the EARL of SEFTON.

Lot 14 is particularly recommended by ALDERMAN WOOD, being a second-hand black WIG, late the property of an illustrious personage, deceased.

Nothing but urgent distress would induce the worthy Alderman to part with this lot, which is the only souvenir of his late great friend which he possesses, and which was left by her one night at his house by accident.

Lot 16.—The Bishop of Norwich ventures to submit a full-sized Buz Wig.

This Wig appears never to have had a cast.—N.B. Colour high blue.

MR. BROUGHAM offers Lot 18 to notice, being an old scratch made out of a BIRD'S-NEST.

Lot 21—is a Weeping Billy, the property of the Honourable HENRY GREY BENNETT.

Lot 23.—An old CAXTON, belonging to the EARL SPENCER.

Lot 31.—MR. THOMAS COKE, of HOLKHAM, has an excellent crop to dispose of.

The sun and air have had a wonderful effect upon this WIG, which got its last dressing at the late County Meeting in Norfolk.

Lot 34—is a Scarlett Wig, worn at Cambridge during the last election, but which came too low down upon the poll to please the wearer.

N.B. This Wig, upon closer inspection, is not so deep red as it appears at a distance.

Lot 40.—A Cur-tailed Wig, belonging to DOCTOR HUME—considerably the worse for wear.

Lot 41.—A Frenchified Wig, the property of Ex-General WILSON—originally a military BOB, but now cut down to a TYBURN TOP.—This WIG was lost in a mob, attending the funeral of the late QUEEN CAROLINE, and was nearly spoiled by too copious applications of HONEY-water.

Lot 43.—MR. LAMBTON has to offer a COAL black Wig, suitable to yellow complexions.

Lot 45.—MESSRS. WHITBREADS, CREEVEY, DAVIES, FYSHE PALMER, W. WILLIAMS, &c. &c. &c.—a parcel of Blocks of sizes.

N.B. This sale will be by inch of candle, the old system of the PULPIT being particularly objectionable to the Proprietors.

Persons coming to view are requested not to touch the Lots, as at the sale last year two or three Welch Wigs were stolen from the advertizers, and have not since been returned.

P.S. No Tics are observable in these Wigs—but, for the convenience of retail purchasers, a small collection of PERRY-WIGS, the property of the same parties, are kept continually on sale by private contract, at the Office of the Morning Chronicle newspaper.

FURTHER SCHISM IN THE SANCTUARY!

THE CHRONICLE has, by some unaccountable process, discovered, and announced its discovery publicly, that THOMAS COKE, Esq. of Holkham, the great patriot and feeder, turns out to be—yes—to be a NORFOLK TURKEY!!! "Think of that MASTER BROOK." It is true, we had previously ventured upon a different similitude; but as we are less removed from CHRISTMAS than from MICHAELMAS, we do not quarrel with so seasonable a distinction. We conclude, in the course of a week, he will be called a BUSTARD, in order that he may be turned out, like HUNT'S WHITE HAT, for general sport. It will be impossible to make GAME of him—he is of the true home breed.

THE people of England cannot fail to recollect the terms applied by the WHIGS, and their active partisans, the RADICALS, to the policy and modes pursued by Ministers in bringing the late QUEEN CAROLINE to trial. They adjured the country to rise up in insurrection against the Government for such cruel and arbitrary proceedings against injured Majesty, and declared her to be innocent, in spite of the irrefragable proofs of guilt, because the form of trial or proceeding through which it was elicited, was an outrage upon justice. Thank GOD their factious efforts were vain and ineffectual; the people of England recovered their good sense in time to be saved. But we were told that Europe stood appalled at the iniquity of the persecution; that every liberal mind throughout the world was excited against us, and revolted at the injustice of those proceedings. No man of sense or experience believed all this, it must be confessed; but our namesake JOHNNY is over-credulous, and too apt to take for Gospel what the DEVIL indites; and facts are always useful when they can be had.

The Liberales of PORTUGAL, who have done what their brethren wished to do in this country—and we are ready to confess, the question, in one place, admits of a very different construction in the other—and have made the KING a puppet, and themselves every thing, find THEIR QUEEN somewhat refractory; or at least honest enough to decline swearing she is heart and soul attached to that, for which she naturally can have no great relish. She declines the oath that robs her of all her privileges, and is therefore to be banished; not upon any old standing law, but upon some liberal statute, of some year or eighteen months standing. But they wish to give a legal air and form to these proceedings, and can find none that, by its lenient and primâ facie justice, presents so fair a precedent as that afforded by the authority of the very measures and forms prescribed by the British Ministry in bringing to trial a QUEEN charged with high treason and adultery. They propose to adopt it, not from any asserted or even implied necessity—for when every thing is new, it is easy to add or qualify a law or two when expedient—but as a mode most conducive to the ends of justice, and marked by its lenity and indulgence to the party accused. We only refer our readers to the debates of the Portuguese reformed, or new-created Parliament, (to give it an English name) where all this is explicitly stated, and unhesitatingly avowed.

But this is not all; in an extract from the accounts received last week from Portugal will be found the following paragraph, which, after speaking of the "noble, majestic, and "entirely pacific career of their Revolution," expresses high indignation at the course which the Queen is pursuing, and tells us that "the proposals lately made to the Cortes on this "affair, have caused some disquietude and inspired some "fear"—even to liberal and successful Reformers—"of seeing "POLITICAL INTRIGUERS conceive the criminal project of "making the QUEEN of PORTUGAL a RALLYING POINT FOR "THE FACTIOUS, as the late QUEEN of ENGLAND was, though "IN AN OPPOSITE SENSE!!!"

What have the WHIGS to say to this? What becomes of DUKE RADICAL and DUKE CANDLESTICK?—What is become of the sense of Europe expressed upon the wisdom and purity of the great ENGLISH WHIG HUMBUG?—Poor devils, even their friends and abettors cannot help proclaiming their contempt of them, and afford them a foretaste of what they have to expect from the successful efforts even of their domestic allies! They give them some credit for political trickery, but turn from them, as a reader does from the perusal of TURPIN'S exploits or BARRINGTON'S adventures, with disgust and contempt.

But a Whig is a most incorrigible animal. Other men, when a fact is proved against them, have the decency at least to be silent; it is only the most hardened and depraved among mankind who persist in falsehood at the foot of the scaffold. The Edinburgh Review drags MR. WORDSWORTH through all the filthy ordeal of a Scotch court of criticism because he was not a Queenite; and upon his return from a continental tour, when he certainly could estimate the general feeling abroad rather better than MR. JEFFREY, upon the "great events which then occupied the whole country, and "indeed every part of the world to which the news pene-"trated;"—NOT, as the latter gentleman says, as a "triumph "over unparalleled oppression," but as a stigma upon the national character—as a credulous besotted dupe to the intrigues of men who asserted and upheld A FALSEHOOD, knowing it to be such, and recorded as such by their own most solemn testimony. MR. WORDSWORTH is proved guilty of two heinous and unpardonable offences: he is a loyal and a pious poet, and he has accepted what was bestowed as a reward for his talents—not his services—an office under Government!—The reviewer thinks "the poetry and the politics" of the following lines "nearly on a level." If TRUTH be the test of either, what we have just recorded with respect to the Portugal Liberales, will give them a stamp rather beyond that which the said reviewer would set upon them:—

"Where be the noisy followers of the game
"Which faction breeds? the turmoil where? that past
"Through Europe, echoing from the newsman's blast,
"And filled our hearts with grief for ENGLAND'S SHAME!"

We take, and thank MR. JEFFREY for, the citation, which he did wisely not to extend.

THE COMMISSION GRAND JURY FOR THE CITY OF DUBLIN.

IT is but justice to the parties concerned that every publicity be given to the following remonstrance against one of the most unprecedented attacks, we conceive ever officially made upon the character and functions of a Grand Jury.

"About half-past 2 o'clock on Monday, Sir Geo. Whiteford, Foreman, followed by the remainder of the Jury, appeared in the body of the Court. Sir George said,

"'My Lords—The Grand Jury wish to make a communication to the Court.'

"Their names were then called over, and after they had repaired to their Jury box, the Foreman read the following:—

"My Lords—We, the Commission Grand Jury of Oyer and Terminer of the County of the City of Dublin, have learned with deep regret, that the discharge of our official duties, with respect to certain bills of indictment, has been made a subject of animadversion by his Majesty's Attorney-General, and has been pronounced by this High Court to have been a matter of surprise. We hope, that neither the Court, nor with its sanction, his Majesty's first Law Officer intended to convey an imputation that our judgment was influenced by fear, favour, or affection. A charge of such a nature, without adverting to the enormity of the crime which it would impute, would be essentially unjust, for our oath of secresy, which forbids the disclosure of the grounds of our judgment, would render the vindication of that judgment, and of necessity, the satisfactory refutation of such a charge impossible. It must be recollected, that to us, exclusively, is the evidence known on which our judgment was founded, and we therefore trust that this High Court will receive the declaration, which we now solemnly and unanimously make, that our decision was the result of a laborious scrutiny of the evidence, of a conscientious consideration of its weight, and of a sincere anxiety to adhere to the direction of the Learned Judge, who so fully and clearly detailed to us the nature of our duties, and the principles by which we were bound to be regulated in discharging them."

We do not feel ourselves in a temper of mind to enter into any comment upon the manner in which the Judge received this address. Men of honour must not be precluded from wiping off the stain even of insinuation, by an over-scrupulous submission to official etiquette on the fastidious observance of mere technical forms.

IRISH ATROCITIES—NOT OF ORANGEMEN!

THE public has seen with what persevering LOYALTY the demagogues and Roman Catholic supporters have pushed their town and county meetings, in order to express their sensitive abhorrence at the insult offered to the throne in the person of his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, and the charitable implication in their speeches of the theatrical rioters, with the whole body of men—whose only crime, in their eyes, is the real feeling, and not the temporary EXPRESSION of Loyalty towards the throne.

It is a pity that so much zeal—so much eloquence, and so many square yards of pathetic sympathy should be confined to one single act of atrocity. We, therefore, beg leave to furnish these ultra-Royalists with a new topic, on which their newly-awakened zeal may find ample employment. We trust this zeal is divested of one of its too frequent attributes—BLINDNESS—at all events the public will not be infected by it.

"A Protestant woman of the name of MOFFITT, who lived about a mile from this town, had been ill for some time; and her husband thinking her dissolution to be drawing near, thought it necessary that the Minister of the parish should visit her, which he did; and on the 1st inst. administered to her the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper—however, her son-in-law, who is a bigoted Roman Catholic, concerned, no doubt, for the salvation of her soul; and conceiving her liable to eternal misery, if not anointed by the Priest, made known his wishes to MR. HOLTON, the R. C. Curate of this town, who, on the 2d instant, repaired to MOFFITT'S house, accompanied by a mob of 2 or 300 persons. When the Priest entered the house, MOFFITT, who was sitting on the bedside with his wife, told the Priest that, he and his wife were Protestants, and that her own Clergyman had given her the Sacrament the day before. The Priest said that he was told she wanted him, and that he would await her in spite of him—upon which MOFFITT declared he would resist him; at these words the Priest went out, and ordered the mob to take her out. In an instant several persons rushed in, and knocked down MOFFITT and his nephew, beat them severely, and carried the dying woman, almost naked, to a cabin at a considerable distance, where the Priest anointed her.

"Great praise is due to JOSEPH M. DALY, Esq. Magistrate, who immediately repaired to the spot and took old MOFFITT'S informations; and to MR. ALEWORTHY, Chief Constable of Police, for his prompt and active exertions in securing several of the offenders, who are now in prison.

"The Priest has been admitted to bail—as old MOFFITT'S life is now considered out of danger." (The Mayo Constitution.)

If this be not sufficient—we beg leave to strengthen the dose for them.

"We notice with considerable regret, the perpetration of a most flagitious outrage, involving an extensive destruction of property, at the Heath, in this County, in the night between the 2d and 3d instant, when some incendiaries set fire to the hay-yard and out-offices of MR. FAIR. The consequence was, that nineteen large stacks of oats, the property of his son, MR. R. FAIR, Portville, and two ricks of hay, containing upwards of 50 tons, belonging to himself, were consumed to ashes, as were also a barn and potatoe house, in which there were about twenty barrels of potatoes, and twenty sacks of oats. In the morning a Notice was discovered, precisely in the words and letters following, nailed to MR. FAIR'S hall-door:—

"'Unless you leave this country, you will soon have a coarps coming 'to your door. Believe me as a friend.

'Signed, by GENERAL ROCK'S command.

'Burnin to-night, murder next week.

'To the Loyal ROBT. FAIR, Fortville, and

'ROBERT FAIR, of the Heath as yet.' (Mayo Constitution.)

"A Correspondent from the County Tyrone, has communicated to us the following threatening and cautionary notice of a novel character, and illustrating the adage that 'The Devil can quote Scripture 'to answer his own purposes.'—GRIMSEY is a tenant of MR. GOFFE, who, we understand, is taking most prompt and vigorous measures on the occasion:—

"JOHN GRIMSEY,

"'As a friend and a well-wishing neighbour, I give you timeous 'warning to leave this kingdom and not you only but all Protestants, 'as we Catholicks claims it for our right and our property, and you are 'known to be an expert man and very active in handling a firelock, 'and an old soldier, and for these reasons you are most in danger, and 'if you will not take warning your blood be on your own head, and I, 'as a watchman free my own soul.—Ezekiel the 3d verse and 33d chap-'ter.—December 19th, 1822." (The Warder, Jan. 11, 1823.)

POTTER'S POUND—(No. 11.)
FOR STRAY WHIGS AND WHIGGERIES.

IF we have been silent for some weeks, heaven knows it has not been from want of matter; for is there a day—an hour in any passing week, in which the WHIGS and their COADJUTORS are not guilty of "A STRAY" upon all that is great and honourable in feeling or in principle, connected with the interests of the country?

The Edinburgh Review, the great battering ram of liberality and whiggery, has of late been as ominously conspicuous for its dulness as its malignity. The usual manœuvre of county meetings, which the falling off of RADICALISM rendered somewhat problematical, required some desperate effort; and in order to give it effect, the original stock of ir/effect employed in fabricating this party engine was summoned to the field, to infuse something like vigour, and to prove at least that the inveterate hatred entertained against our national establishments, which has of late shewn itself rather in a pitiful sort of lamentation over our "fallen state," has lost none of its native inveteracy, nor deprived itself of those honourable means of displaying it, which marked the career of its first parents, the boasted successors of the FRENCH ENCYCLOPEDISTS, and disciples of HUME and VOLTAIRE!

It appears that MR. BROUGHAM was called upon to review his own speeches, and annihilate those of MR. CANNING—that MR. SIDNEY SMITH was roused from his slumber on the bed of roses "ecclesiastic," furnished during the short reign of the Whigs—(who, pure souls, shudder at the corrupt practice of rewarding journalists or partisans)—and, unfortunately for himself, as it has proved, to resume his theological incubrations, and to furnish Greek and Latin quotations, having had the advantage over his coadjutors of a classical education. We do not perceive, upon the present occasion, however, that the Rev. Gentleman has ventured upon a single quotation from PINDAR; and it appears that the liberal principles of MR. PAYNE KNIGHT have at length secured him from any further imputations of writing "BAD GREEK!"

SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH was called off from contemplating the criminal law, to apply the lex talionis to his opponents of the press, and his zeal has been marvellously invigorated by "the new character" which MR. JEFFREY gave him on his presentation to one of the few sinecures under immediate Whig patronage. It is honorary, however, and therefore gratefully appreciated, and acknowledged in kind. MR. JEFFREY himself has had to work "double tides;" for, besides softening the acerbities of one, steadying the flippancies of another, and softening the apostacies of a third, he had to supply original matter, and render all the mass of instructions from the junto at Kensington into what the Scotch call pure English.

But, with all this preparation, they were still compelled to resort to other means to give due circulation to the "manufactured article," and the success of MESSRS. SOLOMON and BISH, in their several departments of LOTTERY and MEDICINE, suggested the readiest, and indeed the most appropriate that could be devised. The following appears in the MORNING CHRONICLE of the 10th of this month, written by a correspondent, whose style may be traced in more than one article of the last Edinburgh.

"Sir—I hope the readers of your liberal and enlightened" —(through some loop-hole in the gable of the editor's attic, it is to be presumed)—"enlightened Journal, are also periodical "or occasional"—(a modest plea, like COBBETT'S, for a penny subscription)—"readers of the Edinburgh Review! if they "are not, I would strongly recommend them to become pur-"chasers of it!!!"—"There is no time to lose," writes the rival candidate for public credulity, "in purchasing a ticket "at the lucky office, as the drawing begins," &c. &c. &c. But, to do the gentlemen of the wheel justice, they have really something tangible to hold out; there are prizes to be drawn; the only HUMBUG is the inference they would more than insinuate that they alone are destined to sell them. But what do our readers suppose is held out to the public as the advantage of reading periodically or occasionally the Edinburgh Review, published by ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE and Company, &c. price six shillings!! "The good which this Critical Journal "is working is immense, and in nothing is its practical utility "more apparent than in the independent tone of feeling which "it communicates as to the existing abuses in CHURCH and "STATE." The puffer, if his modesty had not checked him, might have added, "and in the poetic talent of invention!"—The strictest part of the injunction, it should be observed, is, to purchase "the last number, which relates to clerical abuses "and the charge of the Bishop of London." This is the pith of the whole, although, to secure as many purchasers as possible, the Radicals are promised a feast in the pledge of the editor to cut up MR. CANNING'S notions of reform by the root —that is, no doubt, to destroy them RADICALLY!

Now, there is one little secret, which we must let out, for BULL is not sworn to any of the mysteries of the trade; and which is intended simply to enlighten such of our readers as may chance to be in the dark respecting them. We are credibly informed, that in hunting after FACTS, (by far the most difficult part of the reviewer's task) to fix, or imply, disgrace or dishonour upon the clerical character, in this pregnant review, ONE connected with the dismissal of a Curate from Stepney Church, arrived at the "Blue and Yellow" depository some days too late for insertion. This was lamentable; because it would have gone down with all the accompanying reflections upon the Church and churchmen, without the possibility of carrying its refutation with it; and have been, whether true or false, a happy illustration of the reviewer's equal justice, in fitting his laws to the case in point. The only resource left was, to form it into a sort of postscript, and to insert it in the journal of their London agent—which has accordingly been done; and it appears as a corollary to the puff-general, in the form borrowed from their great exemplars, who refer to "A. B." for a list of cures; or, to certain lucky individuals, who live in the neighbourhood of C—, or in the town of W—.

Of the fact itself, we know nothing; but we know enough of WHIG FACTS to be assured, that it is either mis-stated, or distorted—or discoloured; and we are the more confirmed in this inference, because we are all acquainted with the name of the individual intended to be traduced, and know him to be, not only one of the most learned and enlightened advocates of Christianity in our Church, but a man marked with every distinguishing feature of the Christian character—pure, honourable, and upright, in every relation of social life. MR. LE BAS will feel himself thus placed in a line with the BISHOP OF LONDON, and DR. PHILPOTTS, (to vary an expression of the latter)—to be "sullied only by THE PRAISES "of such writers as these."

But we must leave his Lordship and MR. LE BAS, for the present, to fight their own battles; and, if unshackled by superior duties, and free to exercise their energies, and grapple with such philosophists as BROUGHAM and JEFFREY, Lord have mercy upon the "Blue and Yellow" champions of LIBERALITY and REFORM! We should desire no better sport. But the blockheads are aware of this—they are like scavengers throwing mud at a well-dressed gentleman—they have all the materials to themselves; and only desist from assaults, when they see one approach, who, reckless of himself, is prepared to duck them in their own element, merely to abate a public nuisance.

Thus these miserable libellers are always at hand to insult the Throne, lampoon the Monarch, and slander Bishops; whilst—again to borrow an expression from DR. PHILPOTTS—(and we shall hope to do so again and again)—"They would "rather forego half the profits of their unhallowed trade, than "dare to launch against any one," who is at liberty to meet them on equal grounds, "the smallest part of the scurrility "which they feel no scruple in circulating"—against all that is good, and venerable, and amiable in life.

They have, however, for once miscalculated in their reckoning. Secure in the contempt their fabrications and calumnies had spread like a halo around them, they charged their wooden horse to the very nostrils, with volunteers from Kensington and the Parliament Close, even down to the mutable establishments of WADDINGTON and CARLILE; and hoped, under the insinuating address of the Scotch SINON, to pass the teeming monster within our very walls. But a single arm, roused from slumber by the yells of approaching triumph, was sufficient to check their career, and to tear from their filthy hold, the miserable hirelings, who had vaunted the overthrow of "another Troy!"

DR. PHILPOTTS, too well known in the Church, and in the literary world, to need any introduction from us, has, in thirty-nine octavo pages, as completely overwhelmed the whole host of these modern Philistines, as if he had put an extinguisher upon them. We are not likely to be suspected of aiding Whig puffs; but we do, seriously and earnestly, (in the words of the advertisement—assured of the safety of the prescription) recommend our readers to purchase or borrow, if they have not read, the last number of the Edinburgh Review—for the mere satisfaction of taking DR. PHILPOTTS' ANTIDOTE after it. There never was so complete a defeat of the redoubted "LEGION,"—the WE of the "Blue and Yellow "cover!"—To be malignant is too often the assumed prerogative of unchastised wit; but to be saucy and dogmatical, and magisterial, in the midst of ignorance that would disgrace a TYRO in a country grammar school, is so insufferable, that nothing short of public duty could warrant even exultation at its exposure.

The reader shall judge for himself, of the pithy mode DR. PHILPOTTS adopts in disposing of a long, prosing, theological discussion, ex Cathedrâ, which was intended to tear up the very foundations of our poor old Mother Church:—

"But first I shall beg leave to dispose very summarily of the theological matter introduced by this Reviewer. No man, who respects himself, will contend on such subjects with an opponent of so very slender qualifications; with one, who thinks the Church of England only half-reformed, because its Catechism for the instruction of children contains no express denial of the Transubstantiation of the Sacramental Elements;—who can talk with the most edifying gravity of the 'distinct and unequivocal repudiation of the real presence, which we find in the Thirty-nine Articles,' where every one of us knows who is meant by the real presence (a very different thing from the corporal presence,) knows alas! that it is distinctly and unequivocally affirmed: who, because 'the power of giving absolution' is claimed both by the English and the Roman Church, can speak of it, therefore, as if it were claimed by both in the same meaning and extent, though it is notorious that the Church of Rome has pronounced an Anathema against all who do not admit the absolving power of its Priesthood to be higher, even in kind, than the highest claim ever advanced in our Church;—who can talk of the 'Assumption of this power by the English Clergy,' of 'this Assumption being undeniable' (and yet, as it should seem, of its being denied by divers approved authors, without knowing, that whether the power be assumed, or disclaimed, and the assumption admitted or denied, depends on the manner in which the power itself, never once defined by him, is understood:—lastly, who can close his learned lecture on this point, with asserting that 'the primitive Church never pretended to have any absolving power; see on one side HAMMOND and MARSHALL,—WHEATLEY contra:' whereas all these three writers (whatever be their difference on a collateral question) and all others of any reputation amongst us, agree in affirming, what this dreamer fancies that half of them deny.

"These, and blunders such as these, place his theological dogmas beyond the reach of controversy. Perhaps, too, on similar grounds, he might claim in some other points as good a right to the undisputed possession of the field. For instance; can a writer expect to be answered, who will seriously quote BISHOP BURNET for a recommendation and authority to the Episcopal Bench of our days, to live 'abstracted from courts, from cabals, and from parties?'—scenes, in which that good Bishop bore a busier part, than the most secular of our Prelates for a century past, and where by his zealous support of Whig principles he raised himself to that eminent station, which, together with his numerous virtues, would ensure to him, if he were now living, a full share in the invectives of his present panegyrist.

"Still, our low estimate of this writer's intellectual qualifications must not prevent us from exposing those of his moral delinquencies, which derive importance from the mischievous cause they are intended to promote. It is notorious, that a design is systematically, and almost avowedly, pursued by many of the Reformers of the present day, to bring the Established Church into contempt, and to draw down the hatred of the people on its Ministers; and that in furtherance of this design, every expedient of every kind, the meanest artifice and the most daring falsehoods, are resorted to without scruple or restraint. Instances of both these descriptions we shall find in the Review before us."

It is to be recollected that DR. PHILPOTTS is not entering the lists generally with these men. Such a degradation never shadowed his imagination; he is merely proving upon them half a dozen direct and unqualified falsehoods respecting himself and his friends, and only incidentally as it were throws off "the slime and venom" in which the reptiles had endeavoured to obscure them. He is compelled also to lift the veil of their ignorance, in order to disclose the more hideous features of calumny and malignity. We do not, therefore, feel half that fulness of gratitude which would be due from the public to DR. PHILPOTTS, if having broken the charm he had voluntarily inflicted upon himself, the "distasteful task," as he feelingly calls it, of dissecting and exposing the pestilent state of each component part—the false reasoning—the imbecility of each component part—the false reasoning—the imbecility —the depravity, and the malignant ignorance which characterises all and every thing contained in THE SYSTEM. It is necessary for the public good—for the public SAFETY, that the designs of these men should be laid open and naked before the world, and no one is more capable of doing it than this gentleman, whose castigation warmed even LORD GREY into a paroxysm of indignation, and has now dispersed the whole phalanx from Kensington Turnpike to Holyrood House.

Every thing dear and honourable in existence is threatened, whilst these men are permitted to cover Atheism and treason under the high sounding terms of LIBERALITY and TOLERATION—their poison is penetrating to our very vitals. JOHN BULL has done more to bring back words to their original meaning, and has effected more in clearing away the mystification of State quackery, than any other journal in existence; but to render its effects more general and complete, writers in every department of literature should take the same manly tone, and grapple with the monster under all the protean forms which it assumes to betray and absorb the high tone of British feeling and principle. The Edinburgh Review is nothing but a triple distillation of the materials which HONE and CARLILE supply—the MORNING CHRONICLE—nay the whole Whig press is only once removed—and in general scarcely distinguishable from the libellous trash of COBBETT and LEIGH HUNT. The DUKE of BEDFORD is a very weak man—but he is still by a blind fatality a Duke, and boasts that he is a RADICAL. HUNT boasts no more, and HUNT is a greater fool than we take him for if he do not make the most of this sympathy of feeling. We should feel no more for the fall of the DUKE of BEDFORD than for that of the DUKE of ORLEANS—but we should deeply feel any blow upon the aristocratical part of our Constitution through his sides, which is always, and naturally so, among the first delenda of Radical Reformers. It is to avert this that every man who can wield a pen and write plain English, should be active and industrious in counteracting the vulgar errors with which a malignant and revolutionary faction is labouring to inoculate the people of England—it is to avert this, which involves our King, our Constitution, our homes, and our altars, that men of superior intellectual attainments should sedulously watch, and unravel the tissel sophisms of a race of men who look forward to a scramble in which their vanity suggests their talents would obtain the ascendant.

We argue for the sake of the blockheads themselves, who, like their arch-archetypes LA FAYETTE, CONDORCET, BAILLE, &c. are only labouring to open the jaws of the lion, which will make them his first prey. We do not attempt to reason with fanatics—but we must provide for their safety, because something more valuable—our lives, our property, and our honour, are mixed up with it.

One word more. It is unnecessary to remind the public, that the Church is, at the present moment, the particular object of Whig acrimony. It is the part of our bulwarks, against which they are secure of a strong disposable force of malcontents—and whether raised by HUNTINGDON, the coal-heaver —or by CARLILE, the convict, it is to them a matter of equal indifference.

The CHRONICLE, for months past, has been as indefatigable in its labours, as it has been unscrupulous in the sources it has drawn upon for instruments of attack upon our Ecclesiastical Establishments. The "full charged" Edinburgh, as we have before stated, was ordered to bring up the rear—and makes no less than three distinct assaults upon THE BENCH, and THE CHURCH. The fitness of these men for the office, we have already shewn in the extract from DR. PHILPOTTS' Extinguisher upon MR. JEFFREY—their honesty—their sincerity, and their fair dealing, may be calculated from what follows. The main attack is upon the Clergy of Durham, and especially for their prosecution of a newspaper Editor, for "one of the grossest libels which the licentiousness of the press, even in these days, has yet produced." This the Reviewer thus describes:—"A newspaper of merely local circu- "lation"—(it is the one set up by the LAMBTONS and GREY- "ITES)—"had published a few remarks upon the factious "spirit of the Durham Clergy, in ordering the bells not to toll "at Her Majesty's decease, a mark of respect INVARIABLY "SHEWN TO ALL THE MEMBERS OF THE ROYAL FAMILY." This is the SPECIFIC CHARGE—upon which not only the libel containing "a few Remarks" upon such conduct rendering the very name of our established Clergy odious, till it stinks in our nostrils,"—but upon which the Reviewer repeats the libel through thirty-eight closely printed pages, to confirm to its readers, that the Church Establishment is "at war with "the spirit of the age, as well as with JUSTICE and REASON; "and that the BEETLES who crawl about amidst its holes and "crevices, act as if they were striving to provoke and accelerate THE BLOW, which, sooner or later, will inevitably crush "the WHOLE FABRIC, and level it with the dust." Hear, then, and judge for yourselves, people of England, the REASON and JUSTICE of the Charge, and consequently of the Commentaries upon it:—"Of the three propositions expressed or "implied in this statement," says DR. PHILPOTTS, "the first "is a WILFUL concealment of THE TRUTH, &c.—"The two "other propositions are DIRECT FALSEHOODS."—"It is "FALSE that the Clergy of Durham ordered that the bells "should not toll at Her Majesty's decease. It is also FALSE, "that the tolling of the bells is a mark of respect invariably "shewn to all the Members of the Royal Family!"

A comment—a word—would disturb the repose of the picture. Every one who runs may read—and every one who reads, must understand.

PAUL POTTER.

DROPS OF COMFORT IN COLD WEATHER.

WE hear of Distresses, of County Meetings, of pro Governments, and blundering Ministers; we are, in sh we trust to the Radicals, in a bad way. Just as a New gift, we beg to offer a few drops of comfort, which once cheer the heart and benefit the Constitution:—

FROM PLYMOUTH.

It is observable by all men here, who do not look c crooked mediums, that the condition of our three tow improved and is improving, from the depth of distre which the sudden transition from war circumstances had sunk them. The cluster of commercial shipping waiting here, till the wind came in to the northwa eastward, and the fitting out of a naval squadron wh lowed, have given new life to our great port and pe neighbourhood.

FROM YORK.

We understand that the glove trade was never in so fl ing a state in York as it is at present. The demand great, that the glovers cannot meet with hands suffic execute their orders.

FROM LANCASHIRE.

PRICE OF BUTCHERS' MEAT.—The Overseers of th have contracted for the supply of beef to the workho Preston, for the current quarter, at a fraction below two halfpenny per pound.

DITTO.

As a proof of the flourishing state of the cotton tra need only state that W. Fielden, Esq. has contracted building of a factory in Blackburn, which, it is said, wi tain about 56,000 spindles; and Messrs. Livesey and Co also determined upon erecting another spinning f capable of holding about 20,000 spindles.

FROM DEWSBURY.

The requisition to the High Sheriff, to call a meeti Reform is now lying for signatures in that town. The bourhood has been elegantly and expensively placarde after a week, the requisition has only obtained four signa viz. three partners in one house, and an obscure indi whose father has lately returned from London throug Insolvent Debtors' Court.

NORTHERN EXPEDITION.—A paragraph having appeared i morning papers of Tuesday last, relating to the Northern Dis ships, which expressed anxious wishes for their safety and ul success, and proposing various plans towards ascertaining the gress or position, and affording them every assistance in case it be found requisite, it is necessary to state, that one probability o success in obtaining a passage through some inlet on the north of Hudson's Bay, towards the Polar Sea, is from their not having heard of by any of the traders from that part of the world. A probability is, if the Archipelago or Islands continues from Y Island towards Behring's Straits, so as to have kept back the po of the Polar ice towards the south upon the northern parts of Am it may have afforded a sailing passage. As all canoe traffic is ne circumscribed, and if islands, sheets, or circumstances kept more off land, there was but little chance of Capt. Franklin h of them; yet, at all the points he had visited, or from whence could learn, there was at the time he was on the coast a clear sea. Again, if they cannot succeed the first year in finding a p to the pacific, they naturally would (rather than by discovera any apparently temporary impediment) pass another season where they were thus stopped. Their vessels are constructed the strongest principles, having been expressly built for, and h carried each an 18 inch mortar at the battle of Algiers; they a addition, strengthened by having above six feet of solid timber bolted in their bows, which are well fended with the best ro iron; and an outward defence all round their sides, above and their water-mark, of a line of strong planks a foot thick, to resi concussion and pressure of the ice. Besides their original compl of every possible necessary, the Nautilus transport, which a panied them as far as the ice at the entrance of Hudson's Straits, delivered to them above 20 additional chaldrons of coals, with n rous bullocks, sheep, and hogs. At the frozen season, the deer other animals come in great quantities towards the sea; and the water is open, there are the finest fish all along the coasts; opportunities of gaining fresh supplies must be of the greatest a tage to their health.—We make these statements to allay those ap hensions which the want of intelligence from the expedition nat turally create.

The following inquests have been taken during the week:—B Coronation, in Charles-street, Somers-town, on the body of Southey, aged 25, lately a patient in the Mad-house, Hetlmal G the deceased died the day after Christmas day; his body was con to his father's house in Charles-street, but in consequence of need taking place in the appearance of the countenance, it was suppos was in a trance, and his relations kept him above ground for fou days; at length several medical men were called in, who w opinion the body was dead; they opened it, and one of the sur declared that he died of a rupture of a blood-vessel in the head. dict—"Died of Apoplexy."—At the King's Arms, Chelsea, o body of John Hutchinson, who had been fighting with a young and in the conflict received a blow, of which he died. Verdict—" tifiable Homicide."—At the Crown, in St. Martin's-lane, on the of a woman, name unknown, who died in St. Martin's Work having been taken up by the watchmen in a senseless state, fr the pavement near the corner of Orange-street; she was taken workhouse, where she expired at one o'clock in the morning dict—"Died from the inclemency of the night."—At the Three Hackney, on the body of Mr. John Varvell, late of Twickenham aged 50, who was found in the Regent's Canal, with his throa Verdict—"Temporary mental derangement."—At Guy's Hos on the body of James Brown, aged 24, servant at the White Ha the Borough Market; on Saturday night about ten o'clock, a burst in his leg; his master advised him to go to a surgeon, but he had gone five doors he fell down, and was conveyed to St. The Hospital; all this time the blood flowed profusely. Verdict—" the deceased died from the bursting of a blood-vessel in his leg exhaustion."—At the King's Arms, Burton-crescent, Tavi square, on the body of John Le Hereux, aged 45, a teacher o languages, residing in the above house. The deceased of late h very much embarrassed and low spirited, and on Tuesday morning he was found in his bed-room suspended by his neck-handkerchief the bed-post, quite dead. Verdict—"Insanity."—At the Ma Wellesley, Cromer-street, Brunswick-square, on the body of Cresswell, 33 years of age, who committed suicide; he made s dreadful gashes in his arms, a deep incision on his neck with a likewise another in his right side. Deceased's wife stated th husband was a wheelwright; but had been unable to procure work April last, in consequence of which she was obliged to go to work had lived with a lady as servant about a fortnight. Twice he made an attempt upon his life, once by attempting to strangle self, and at another time took oxalic acid. The waiter at the M Wellesley, stated deceased frequented their house, and had been very much addicted to drinking. Verdict—"Cut his throat ing at the time in a state of temporary mental derangement." quests have been held on the bodies of Wm. Cullum, late de mariner of the Badger revenue-cutter, and on three persons, names are unknown, part of the late crew of the Three Brothers ter, brought in to Dover by the Badger, who were killed in the between the two vessels, and, after an investigation of five hours Jury returned a verdict of "Wilful murder against some person o sons unknown," in the case of Cullum, and a verdict of "Justi homicide," in the case of the three men. It appeared, that afte smuggler had called to the revenue officers for quarter, which granted, that the former fired into the Badger, by which the dece Wm. Cullum, was killed.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—Mr. W. BEACALL, Surgeon-Dentist, 6, Greek-street, Soho-square, having long, with unremitting diligence, made the Science of Artificial Teeth, which in its various branches is requisite, his peculiar study, he continues to supply the loss of Teeth with Natural or Artificial, in a superior manner, without the least pain, from a single Tooth to a complete Set, at little more than one half the regular prices. Teeth cleaned if ever so discoloured, and rendered white and beautiful, without pain or injury to the enamel. Decayed Teeth or Stumps extracted with the utmost care and safety, or stopped to prevent irritation on the nerve. Every operation on the Teeth and Gums. Attendance at home from ten till four.

BROCKSOPP'S PATENT SUGAR MILL, No. 99, Fore-street, Cripplegate, London.—This MILL is used by all the most respectable SUGAR REFINERS. The Patentee has permission from the first Houses in London, to inform the Grocers of England that they not only use them, but so much approve of the Mill as to be desirous of recommending them to general use; they are complete in regulating the qualities of a Hogshead of Sugar, which may be passed through in one hour, leaving the quality one and the same, every lump broken, and the grain not injured: it is presumed no Grocer would be without so useful an article, were he acquainted with its real merits. Price only Nine Pounds. They are extremely durable, and stand in the compass of a Twenty Gallon Chest. The Patentee has been favoured with orders from NORTH and Co. and One Hundred Grocers in London; he has also been favoured with orders, post paid, from most of the principal Cities and Towns in the Kingdom.

TURKEY CARPETS.—A large assortment, warranted free from damage, and of a superior quality, having been carefully selected by the Importers' agents, from the best manufactories at Uschack in Natolia, and from the principal Carpet Warehouses at Smyrna, are now on sale at the Levant Warehouse, St. Helen's-place, Bishopsgate street, where printed lists are to be had, containing the dimensions and price of 184 carpets.—Orders addressed to W. Tomlinson, will be duly attended to.

77, OXFORD-STREET, NEARLY OPPOSITE THE PANTHEON.

AS the Affairs of the late MR. T. CRAIG, Linen-Draper, Silk-Mercer, Hosier, &c. were obliged to be settled at Christmas, J. D'OYLY, who has lived in the above house upwards of seven years, begs to inform his Friends, the Nobility, Gentry, and General Public in general, that he has purchased a Share of the business, which will in future be carried on for the joint benefit of the widow and family of the deceased and himself, under the firm of CRAIG and D'OYLY; and as J. D. has the advantage of a large capital, he is enabled at all times to purchase his goods for ready cash; the advantage of which, in the present distressed state of the manufacturing districts, is past description, and being determined to sell for a very small profit, in order to secure a liberal share of the favours of his numerous public, which for many years he has enjoyed the above establishment with a decided preference. C. and D. also beg to observe that the remaining part of the old Stock, consisting of every article in useful Linen Drapery, Silk Mercery, Hosiery, &c. they are resolved to clear off immediately, at such prices as must, at sight, convince the purchaser of their decided cheapness. Full yard wide Russia Shirting 8½d. a yd; yd. and ¼ wide, 15d.; Do. Irish, 16d.; very good, 19d.; a few pieces of Yd. wide Scotch Manks and Cambrics, 10d. a yard; wide Long Cloths, 6d. a yd.; quite undressed, 7½d. a yd.; power loom do. 9½d.; yd. wide Cambric Muslins, 10s. 9d. the piece, containing 12 yards, worth 14s 6d.; do. yd. and half wide, 17s. 6d. worth 24s.; yd. wide Jaconet, 8d.; yd. and half wide do. 12d.; very fine do. 15d.; with a large assortment of Irish Linens, Lawns, French Cambrics, Prints, Stuffs, Blankets, Counterpanes, Flannels, Pelisse Cloths, Bath Checking, Cotton and Silk Hose, Plain and Figured Gros de Naples, French Bath Sarsnets, Poplins, Norwich Crapes, Bombazines, &c. &c. The entire stock of Mourning Silk Goods, of every texture, from 1½ to 8 yds long.—C. and D. beg it may be particularly observed, that they have no connection with the next house, or any other in London.—77, Oxford-street, nearly opposite the Pantheon.

A BEAUTIFUL MATERIAL, called TARTARIAN CACHEMERE, for Ladies' Dresses, in all colours, has met with most decided approbation from many Ladies of the highest rank. Its warmth and durability, though soft and light in texture, renders it more pleasant than silk; never creases, and is highly suitable for Ladies of every age: price 30s. the dress, at the Proprietor's, HUBBARDS, 12, Henrietta-street, Covent garden, who has to offer many GREAT BARGAINS in Winter Silks, for ready money, in full-sized dresses, the fashionable French Stripe, Lustrings, Satins, real Irish Poplins, Lutestrings, Velvet Satins, Tartan Silks, Sarsnets, elegant Gauze Robes and Dresses, Norwich Crapes, Angolas, Crapes, Net, Muslin, Barege, Canton Crapes, Taffetas, Ducapes, figured Silks and Poplins. Beautiful warm Shawls of every kind. An immense quantity of handsome Furs, in Muffs and Tippets of very rare quality, full 15 per cent. under Furriers' prices. No patterns cut.

BLANKETS, COUNTERPANES, SHEETINGS, DAMASK TABLE LINEN, Welsh Flannel, Long Cloth, Irish Linen, French Cambric, and General Linen Drapery, Haberdashery, and Silk Mercery Warehouse, 59, Oxford-street, next door to Binter's old established Fur Warehouse.—KINNING and CO. now offer to the Nobility and Families in general a new and select Stock in the above branches of business, not at half price, as advertisements generally puff, but at such low prices as K. and Co. can with confidence assert will meet their entire approbation, and ensure to them their future commands.—Real Witney Blankets at the following low prices, proved only by inspection—1¼ yds long, 4s. 9d.; 2 yds do. 5s. 6d.; 2¼ yds 7s. 6d.; 2½ yds 7s. 6d.; 2¾ do. 14s. 6d.; 3 yds do. 17s. and in proportion to four yds; Counterpanes, 2 yds square, 6s.; 2¼ yds do. 7s.; 2½ yds do. 8s. 6d.; 2¾ yds do. 10s.; 3 yds do. 12s. 6d.; Marseilles Quilts, 2¼ yds square, 13s. 6d.; 2½ do. 15s.; 3 yds do. 18s.; 3½ yds do. 18s. 6d.; all warranted to measure as stated above; Servants' Sheetings, 8d. per yd; the best made, 1s.; 3qr. wide Russia, 11d. per yard; 1¼ wide do. 1s. 2d.; 1½ wide do. 1s. 4d.; 1¾ do. 1s. 6d.; 2 yds do. very fine, 1s. 8d.; Table Cloths, perfectly free from dress 12d. and the finest made 1s. 3d. per yard. Several boxes of French Cambric Handkerchiefs, the largest size 24s. per dozen; fine Irish sheetings, one yard and a quarter wide, 1s. 6d. with every other article in Linens for household purposes. Their Stock of plain, figured, and striped Gros de Naples are now offered to the public at a great reduction in price; purchasers of these articles will find a rich and elegant Silk, well adapted for Dresses. White Flounced Dresses of every description are still at their reduced prices; and some new Spring Patterns just purchased for ready money will be sold at the same reduction. K. and Co. take this opportunity of informing their present friends and those who may in future honour them with their commands, that they have extended their Business by adding to it the general Haberdashery, Silk Mercery, Glove and Hosiery departments, which they pledge themselves to offer upon the most reasonable terms, and to sell articles of the best manufacture. A percentage allowed upon all purchases amounting to 10l. and upwards, at Kinning and Co. 59, Oxford-street.

TO THE NOBILITY, GENTRY, and PUBLIC.—The following List will be found of great advantage, being the duplicate of a Stock not only valuable, but decidedly cheap, the owner of which having recently taken in stock, and having also a quantity of looms at work, is determined to sell those on hand at considerably reduce prices, viz.—rich Levantines, French width, 3s. 3d. to 5s.; wide Gros de Naples, same price; new and beautiful figured Silks, 3s. 3d. to 5s.; Ducapes and half-ell Gros de Naples, same price: about 30 pieces of wide plain and twilled Sarsnets, 2s. to 3s. 3d.; Persians, 15d. to 2s.; plain Poplins, 2s. to 2s. 6d.; Irish, 3s. to 3s. 6d.; figured, 3s. 3d. to 4s. 6d.; Norwich Crapes, 16d.; full ¾ wide, 18d. to 2s.; Cashmere Crapes and Cypress Dresses; Bombazine, 1s. to 1s. 4d.; a well selected stock of Blacks, from 1s. to 2s. 6d.; Italian Nets, 1s.; a very superb assortment of French Dresses, from 6s. to 20s.; also an extensive and exceedingly cheap stock of Laces, consisting of Brussels Point Dresses, do. Scarfs and Veils, Collars, Cuffs, &c.; 7 8 and 4-4 Irish Linens, a little soiled, in consequence of which they will be sold considerably under cost price; Bragganza Shawls, 9s. 6d. to 12s. 6d.; Imitation India equally cheap; Muffs, Tippets, and Fur Trimmings, 20 per cent. less than they can now possibly be purchased.—J. ARMSTRONG, 93, Oxford-street, opposite Dean-street, Soho.

EASE and COMFORT in SHAVING.—To those Gentlemen who experience inconvenience in Shaving from a tender face or strong beard, J. T. RIGUE most particularly recommends his celebrated MAGNETIC RAZOR TABLET, which, with its late improvement, he engages will produce so keen a edge as to supersede all grinding, honing, &c. and render the operation of shaving as easy and agreeable as it was before unpleasant and painful: its use is simple, its effect certain; price 7s. 6d. J. T. Rigue's Aromatic Shaving Soap will also be found an invaluable addition. Manufactory, 65 Cheapside and 52, Park-street, Grosvenor-square

LATEST NEWS.

Paris papers down to Friday arrived by express yesterday. Letters were said to have been received on Thursday from Madrid, stating, that the Austrian, Prussian, and Prussian Ambassadors had left that capital.—A Grand Council of the French Ministers had been convoked for Thursday evening.

The Moniteur contains the three notes addressed by Russia, Austria, and Prussia, to their respective Ministers at Madrid. They are more detailed than M. de Villele's note, and are drawn up with great force. The King of Spain's restoration to his real freedom is insisted upon, the re-establishment of an order of things which shall put an end to the designs of the Revolutionists.

There are other articles of importance in these papers, the Austrian troops are not to quit Italy. They are, it is said, to form an army of 50,000 men, on the frontiers of Saxony and France.—Russia is reported to have insisted upon her former demands upon Turkey.

MADRID, Jan. 7.—The decision unanimously adopted by Congress upon the proposition of Arguelles is about to set in motion a force of 90,000 very good troops. This force is to be added to the 90,000 active militia and other corps.

PARIS, Jan. 16.—Yesterday the King presided at a Court of Ministers, which lasted from noon to a quarter before two o'clock. After the Council the Minister for Foreign Affairs transacted business with his Majesty. The Ministers met afterwards at the Marquis of Lauriston's.

An extraordinary courier from Spain arrived last night, at the Minister for Foreign Affairs. It is believed that he is the bearer of very important dispatches.

In the Court of King's Bench, yesterday, an indictment was tried against Knatchbull, Fowel, and Partridge, for a conspiracy. It has been once before tried before the Chief Justice, when the defendants were found guilty. A new trial was granted on the application of the defendants. The charge against the defendants was, that they had represented Knatchbull to be entitled to certain legacies under the will of his deceased father, Sir Edward Knatchbull, but which were kept from him by his brother, the present Sir Edward, and thereby prevailing on Messrs. Stonehouse and Norkholds, wine-merchants, to take an assignment of a legacy of 300l. in satisfaction of certain acceptances of Charles Knatchbull, which they held, and which had become over due. Charles Knatchbull having previously received those legacies from his brother, Sir Edward, and the other defendants, Fowel and Partridge, well knowing the same, they being his solicitors. A mass of evidence was called in support of the charge, but the Jury found the defendants Not Guilty.

At the Middlesex Sessions yesterday Moses Miller, a coal-heaver, was found guilty of assaulting Mary Parish, a child ten years old, in a most indelicate manner. He was sentenced to six months' hard labour in the Tread-Mill, at the House of Correction.

At the Old Bailey yesterday Jeremiah James Reading was indicted for stealing two gold watches, the property of James Oaston and two others. The prisoner obtained the watches under pretence that they were for a nobleman. The Jury, after retiring for twenty minutes, pronounced a verdict of Not Guilty.

From the Bills already circulated respecting the first Oratorio, it bids fair to be one of the most splendid musical entertainments ever offered to an English audience. Its effect in the new Drury-lane Theatre must be grand in the extreme. The selections for the 30th, (King Charles's Martyrdom) is appropriate to that solemn occasion, and does credit to the talent of the able director of those concerts.

In the Lottery which finished Drawing last Wednesday, the following Capital Prizes were Sold and Shared by J. and J. SIVEWRIGHT. No. 14,315, £10,000; 2,612, £2,000; 11,291, £1,600; 12,944, £500; 17,746, £400; 4,878, £300; 15,220, £200; 8,147, £200; 18,836, £200; 1,603, £200; 401, £200.—The Fortunate Holders may receive their Money on Demand, 37, Cornhill; 38, Haymarket; or 11, Holborn.—Tickets and Shares for the New Lottery to be all Drawn in one Day, 25th February, will be on Sale in a few days.

Wednesday the Lottery finished, when No. 2,154 was drawn a Prize of £20,000, and Sold in Shares by SWIFT and CO. 11, Poultry, 12, Charing Cross; and 31, Aldgate High-street; who Sold also Nine other Capitals in the Lottery just ended.

ELEGANT GRASSES, FERNITURES, &c.—The Nobility and Gentry are invited to inspect the Warerooms of Cooper and Son, 83, Bishopsgate-street Within, where is exhibited a large Assortment of new and second-hand Plate Glasses, admirably suited to every description of drawing or dining-rooms. In the furniture department is comprised every new and elegant article of upholstery, cabinet, and chair work, the prices of which are reduced to such a scale of economy as to attract and ensure the patronage of rank and fashion.

The attention of youth of both sexes is particularly directed to that inestimable ornament the Human Hair, as that attended to in youth is a sure preservation, and fixes a stamina for a beautiful head of hair. The only article that really possesses nutricious virtues for promoting a luxuriant growth of Hair is Rowlands' Macassar Oil, which eradicates the scurf easy and pleasant, prevents the Hair falling off or turning grey, strengthens and produces beautiful flowing Curls, and renders Hair that is harsh and dry, as soft, smooth, and glossy as silk. As impostors purchase the empty bottles, and offer for sale a pernicious composition in imitation, it is therefore indispensably necessary to ask for "Rowlands'," and observe the prices are 3s. 6d.—7s.—10s. 6d., and 21s. and each genuine bottle is wrapped is a book, signed on the outside in red, "A. Rowland and Son."

WINDSOR SOAP.—J. Atkinson, 41, Gerrard-street, Soho-square, London, respectfully informs the Public that his Double Refined Windsor Soap will be found a Soap of a very superior kind; it is made of the best materials, and freed from the caustic properties contained in most Soaps, and which acts so injuriously to a delicate skin; its perfume is a complete bouquet; it is gentle in detergent, emollient in use, very durable, and sold at the price of the commonest articles; it is highly valuable in the nursery, and where the skin of adults have got hard, rough, or uneven, it gradually, but with certainty, corrects such imperfections, and makes the skin luxuriously soft, white, and even. Half-pound packages, 1s. 2d.; pounds, 2s. by a Queen, 1s. 9d.—Sold by most Perfumers, but the genuine has the Proprietor's signature and address on the label.

PARTICULARLY TO THE LADIES.—A Dissolution of Partnership having taken place between CANDY and BOND, the whole of their extensive Stock of Linen Drapery, &c. is selling off considerably under prime cost, (preparatory to the business being continued by CHARLES CANDY only) and includes an unrivalled collection of British Shawls, imitated so artfully from the original India as to have excited universal admiration from the most experienced judges of Cashmeres. A splendid variety of Zetlands, Scotland, and Braganza Shawls, the new and graceful Verona Fold, comfortably adapted for the season; a few of the lately introduced French Blouses; Morning Dresses; Cyprus Crapes; the newest Robes à negligé; Sicil'an Gauses, &c. The purchases of Irish Linens, Sheetings, Table Linens, &c. at the reduced prices will prove highly advantageous, as no Goods have been selected but such as CANDY and BOND could fully depend would give the utmost satisfaction to the numerous families who have honoured them with their support and patronage.—No. 17, Ludgate Street, three doors from St. Paul's.

TO THE FASHIONABLE WORLD.—DISON, WILLSON, and CO. respectfully invite Ladies, patronesses of taste and fashion, to an inspection of their new, costly and extensive Stock of FOREIGN and BRITISH LACE, which they, with confidence, affirm to exceed any hitherto offered. From correspondents at Paris, Brussels, &c. they are supplied with the newest designs of foreign taste, thus forming in one mart the unique productions of continental with the chaste originals of British costume. From the delusive advertisements of fictitious manufacturers, purfeited in their Point Lace at low prices, D. W. and Co. hold it their duty to apprize ladies that, having a Manufactory at Brussels, they can and will offer their real Point à l'Aiguille and Brussels fabrics considerably lower than any badly executed imitations, fully assured the superiority of texture and uniform correctness of design will be apparent on inspection, and a single trial will establish their durability in wear. They have just received from their manufactory a splendid collection of real Point and Brussels dresses, squares, scarfs, veils, mantellas, caps, &c.; also a assortment of Blonde, Machlin, and Valenciennes laces, which, in addition to an immense stock of every article in the British Gassed Lace, (commonly known by the name of Urling's Lace) they are determined to sell at the lowest prices. D. W. and Co. beg leave to submit to ladies' attention several novelties for the season, peculiar to their house, viz. the Verona Tippet, for Opera and evening costume; Robes a la Diane and Zephyrine; Coifs Parisienne; Sleeves Dejeune; Quadrille Sashes; Aprons; Reticules; Purses, &c. calculated for the frequenters of Almack's, Willis's, &c.—N.B. Lace Dresses from 2l. 10s. to 75 guineas.—No. 237, Regent-street, facing the Argyle Rooms.

OLD PORT 36s. Superior SHERRY 36s. and CAPE MADEIRA 18s. per dozen.—One dozen of each of the above Wines, Bottles, Hamper, &c. included; will be forwarded by a remittance of 5l.; or one dozen Port, and one dozen Sherry, Bottles, &c. for 4l.; or two dozen Cape Madeira, Bottles, &c. 2l.—Champaignes, just landed, sparkling, creaming, Red and White, (Pris, Soleau, Avize, growers,) 4l. 4s. per dozen.—Madeira, Teneriffe, Lisbon, Vidonia, Calcavella, 40s. per dozen.—Old Cognac Brandy (Otard and Hennesie), 23s. 6d. per gall.—Particular Old Rum, 15s. 6d. per gall.—Old Cordial Gin and Shrub, 12s. per gall.—CHARLES WRIGHT, Wine Merchant to his Royal Highness the Duke of Clarence, next to the King's, and opposite the Haymarket, Theatre, Opera Colonnade, Haymarket, London, who pledges his honour and reputation that the above Wines are genuine as imported.—Fresh emptied Wine Pipes, 17s. each.—Postage to be paid.

The following are in the press, and will be published in the course of the present and early in the ensuing month, by G. and W. B. WHITTAKER, Ave-Maria lane.

NEW NOVEL.—Just published, price 21s. boards,

THE SCHOOL FOR MOTHERS; or, The Politics of a Village. In 3 Volumes, 12mo.—Printed for G. and W. B. Whittaker, Ave-Maria-lane.

"It is a work of unexceptionable morals, every lesson being pointed to a good end. We may add, without hesitation, that the application of every part is so unlforedly praiseworthy, that, instead of being called the School for Mothers, this book might justly be entitled the School for all Ranks and Descriptions of Mankind."—Literary Gazette, Nov. 30, 1822.

VALPERGA; or, The LIFE and ADVENTURES of CASTRUCCIO, PRINCE of LUCCA. By the Author of FRANKENSTEIN. In Three Volumes, 12mo.

NEW NOVEL.—Just published, price 21s. boards,

OSMOND, a Tale. In Three Volumes, 12mo. By the Author of "The Favourite of Nature." Printed for G. and W. B. Whittaker, Ave-Maria-lane.

"The high reputation which the Author of 'The Favourite of Nature' acquired, by the publication of those deeply interesting Volumes, will not, we are sure, suffer any diminution by the publication of 'Osmond.' The pleasure we derived from the perusal of the former work, made us look forward with some anxiety to the appearance of 'Osmond;' and, we are happy to say, our expectations have not been disappointed."—Monthly Magazine, Dec. 1822.

"Caroline's death is truly affecting; and the after-meeting between Osmond and his angelic wife, and their parting interview, we cannot speak in terms of too high praise. We yield the amiable Author our unqualified eulogy for the religious tendency of the book; and, as a parting word, we consider 'Osmond' one of the most successful Novels of that class which undertake to wean us from strong passions, and teach us the philosophy of virtue."—Literary Register, Nov. 9, 1822.

PUBLIC EDUCATION.—Just published, in 8vo. price 7s. 6d. boards,

PLANS for the GOVERNMENT and Liberal INSTRUCTION of BOYS in large Numbers; drawn from experience.—Printed for G. and W. B. Whittaker, Ave-Maria-lane.

"Had such plans as these prevailed in Cowper's time, he would not have had occasion to exclaim, as he did in his Tyrocinium, the wickedness and evils of great schools.—We trust that this book will be generally read, and we should feel happy if we could flatter ourselves that its principles would be as generally adopted."—Monthly Magazine, July, 1822.

"It is quite impossible for us to enter into a minute analysis of the present volume; the multiplicity of its details, and the variety of the subjects to which they refer, call for a frequently learnt and by a reference to the book itself.—We have Constables, Juries, Attornies-General, Judges, arranged before us, and considerable pains seem to have been taken to render the offices efficient, and to guard against the operation of improper motives and feelings."—Eclectic Rev.

THE LIFE of a BOY. By the Author of "Panorama of Youth."

—"And he shall be like a tree planted by the river side, that shall bring forth its fruit in due season."

"The incidents of the story are simple, but sufficiently varied to support the necessary degree of interest: and the instructive portion of the work, which is by no means the least, is so mixed up with the lighter parts, as to give the whole a pleasing and interesting character. It is written in a clear and easy style, and we can safely recommend it as affording a very suitable and unexceptionable addition to the youthful library."—Monthly Mag. February, 1822.

THE LIFE and OPINIONS of SIR RICHARD MALTRAVERS, an English Gentleman of the Seventeenth Century.

"This is a philosophical romance, in which the author (Lord Dillon) launches into speculations on all subjects, moral, political, civil, and religious. It is a compound of ancient prejudice and modern philosophy, combining a great veneration for the æra of chivalry and the domination of the old feudal barons, with a qualified predilection for popular rights and public freedom. The original tone of thinking of these volumes cannot but cause them to be much read."—Monthly Magazine.

A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY.—All those who are afflicted with RHEUMATISM or GOUT may find a sweet relief, and a Cure for a Guinea, by applying to W. W. 5, Wine-office court, upon the principle of one pay.

PRINCE'S CELEBRATED RUSSIA OIL is an important and an extra valuable ingredient, through which it has made the Oil the greatest nourisher and preserver to the hair in the Universe, as it grow thick and long, and prevent its falling off or ever turning grey, is such a nourisher to the roots of the hair, that if it even has begun to turn grey, will restore it again to its natural colour, and if used often it will never grey again, and is sure to clear the scurf, from infants to old age, even dressing with it is found always to keep the hair in a most beautiful manner. Gentlemen who have lost their hair, and have the least sign of roots remaining, by using regularly, for a few months, Prince's Improved Russia Oil with the extra valuable ingredient, will be sure to restore it, and produce a good head of hair, which hundreds have experienced.

It is no wonder that Ladies and Gentlemen have complained of late that Russia Oil not being of service to the hair, as they have found out the principled persons have sold by the name of Russia Oil.

Ladies and Gentlemen will be particular, as impostors in Great Britain, France, and other different parts of the Continent, have made the most Counterfeit Russia Oil so much like the genuine, and some, more falsely have printed on their counterfeit covers "the original," or "the Russia Oil," and some even are so daring, although they know it is poison, to put the Original Proprietor's Name. Therefore purchasers should be cautious, and have it of the Proprietor, or of respectable Venders.

Ask for Prince's Improved Russia Oil, with the extra ingredient, called "Prince" on the wrapper and seals, and his address, "A. Prince, No. 8, Poland-street, Oxford-street, London," is on the cover of each bottle; without it is not genuine, and cannot answer the purpose. The ounce bottle five shillings, large bottle, containing five ounces, one pound, which is a saving.

Sold by the sole Proprietor, A. Prince, No. 9, Poland-street, Oxford-street near the Pantheon; and by Mr. Smyth, Perfumer to his Majesty, Bond-street; Hendrie, Tichbourne-street; and by most principal Perfumers and Medicine Venders.

Caution.—There are persons who, finding they cannot now impose the counterfeit Russia Oil, it being now well known that Prince's is the real and genuine; so there are several Hair-dressers and others who pretend Bears' Grease sale; but it is well known in Russia that Bears' Grease is too harsh for the Hair, and makes it fall off, and is the truest advice to every one who knows the Emperor Alexander, as he lost his hair at an age; but Prince's celebrated Russia Oil, particularly with the extra ingredient is a mixture of oils, and is always like a jelly; and it is proved by everyone has given it a fair trial, has found it the only article that actually prevents and promotes the hair in the universe.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—The rude and unskilful attempts constantly made to supply these substitutes for the masticatory organ, and the disgust which delicacy suffers from the unpleasantry attending them when permanently fixed, have deterred many from adopting the aid and comfort they are capable of affording, independent of the assistance they may contribute to digestion and consequent health. The ingenious application of mechanical science will enable us to obviate all these inconveniences, and allow the wearer at all times to keep the mouth in a state of perfect cleanliness, and to perform the functions of mastication, articulation, &c. with decided ease and comfort.—Mr. NICHOLLES begs to state, that he is in constant attendance from ten to four, and will be happy to give ocular demonstration of the comforts derived from his efforts, under every circumstance of simple and complicated deficiency.—115, Fleet-str.

A NEW DICTIONARY of the SPANISH and ENGLISH LANGUAGES. By HENRY NEUMAN and JOSEPH BARETTI, very greatly extended and improved.

☞ Although modestly given as a new edition, this might with more propriety be announced as a new work, it being the first time the labours of Neuman and Baretti are united. Every article in the original has undergone the most careful revision and correction, and the new words added, amounting to no less a number than 15,000, including all the terms used in the Arts, Sciences, Manufactures, Mercantile and Navigation, and Trade of both Nations. From the very great labour and attention that have been bestowed, the proprietors presume to offer these volumes to public notice, not merely as the most perfect Spanish Dictionary, but also as more copious and correct than any other Dictionary of Two Languages extant.—London: printed for Harding, Mavor, and Lepard; T. Cadell; J. Scatcherd; Longman, Hurst, and Co.; Boosey and Sons; J. Nunn; J. Cuthell; John Richardson; J. M. Richardson; Baldwin, Cradock, and Joy; J. Mawman; J. Booker; G. and W. B. FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, JAN. 19.—M. the Count de Lagarde is recalled from Madrid. Last night a courier was sent off from the office of Foreign Affairs to Madrid The Russian Ambassador sent off a courier extraordinary to Petersburgh.

The Sitting of the Landuburian club drew, on the 11th, a great concourse of spectators. M. Moreno Guera occupied the tribune during almost the whole evening. He read the note addressed to Count de Lagarde, and commented upon it, phrase by phrase. He reproached that Minister with having favoured the factious, and particularly the events of July, and expressed his wish that Government would send him his passports.—He proposed 1st, to settle speedily the claims of England. 2. To conclude a new alliance with Portugal. 3. To unite more closely with the United States, who would furnish a great number of privateers. 4. To conclude with South America a truce of six years, during which peace may be made on the best terms.

All the advices received from Madrid, prove that revolutionary ferment is at its height. Arguelles has been paraded in triumph, and the city illuminated.

The Russian army assembled in Poland is 100,000 strong.

JAN. 21.—Yesterday, at noon, the King transacted business with the Viscount de Chateaubriand, Minister of Foreign Affairs, and the Count de Villele, President of the Council.

"On the faith of an evening Journal, we yesterday announced that M. the Marquis de Vence, who commands a brigade of the Army of Observation, had arrived in Paris the day before yesterday. Not only has this General not quitted his post, but no event has transpired which could necessitate such a step. The whole Army of Observation is animated with the best spirit; and we have this very instant learned that a hundred of the Spanish Constitutional soldiers having, for the third time, been audacious enough to enter the French territory, have been disarmed by our troops."—Journal des Debats.

Yesterday couriers for the several Courts of Europe were dispatched from the Department for Foreign Affairs. The one who was expedited to Madrid is, it is said, bearer of an order to the Count de Lagarde, to quit that capital forthwith. Last night, a courier with dispatches from Madrid, arrived at the Hotel of Foreign Affairs.

It is affirmed that the Ambassadors of Russia, Prussia, and Austria, demanded their passports from San Miguel, on the 11th instant, which were sent to them on the following day, accompanied with a very unceremonious letter. Their Excellencies quitted Madrid on the 13th inst.

It is no longer doubted that France has finally rejected the mediation of England, which has been successively tendered by the Duke of Wellington and Sir William A'Court.

The arrival of the Ambassadors of Austria, Russia, and Prussia, from Madrid, is expected within three days. We are assured that they will recognize the Spanish Regency.—At Warsaw they expect the Emperor of Russia on the 12th. He will be at Petersburgh on the 29th.

In the Breslau Gazette a difference of opinion between Austria and Russia is noticed as to the reinstatement of Poland under Saxony.—It is also rumoured, that 30,000 Prussians will enter Poland to replace the Polish army in the event of war with Turkey, and a position on the Danube will be taken by an Austrian army.

BRUSSELS, JAN. 19.—Letters from Cambray, dated the 17th in the evening, have the following statement:—It is affirmed that 15 or 16,000 men, consisting of troops of every description, are going to be drawn from the garrisons in the northern frontiers, which extends from Strasburg to Dunkirk, and that they are destined to reinforce the Army of Observation.

BAYONNE, JAN. 9.—We hear that an order has arrived to make five millions of cartridges. The garrisons of Vittoria and Bilboa are in motion for Navarre.

An article from Hanover of the 2d inst. says—"It is thought that the States of the kingdom will assemble at the beginning of next month. It is reported that a general survey of all the estates in the kingdom will soon be commenced, for the purpose of establishing, in the sequel, a sure basis for the land-tax."

MADRID, JAN. 10.—The city is perfectly calm; and what took place yesterday in the Cortes did not produce a moment's agitation. The Charges d'Affaires of Austria, Russia, and Prussia, are preparing to depart; they have received their passports, and expect to set out about the 13th or 14th inst.—The Sitting of the Cortes yesterday may be considered as one of the most interesting that ever occupied a Legislative Body. When the Minister of State began to read the notes from the Allied Cabinets, the most profound silence reigned in the hall and in the galleries; but no sooner was there heard an expression offensive to the Spanish nation, or to its Government, than might be seen indignation painted on the countenances of the Deputies, and of the strangers who were present.

LISBON, JAN. 3.—Letters have been received from Bahia, bearing date the latter end of November, which convey the intelligence of an attack having been made on the army besieging Bahia, by General Madeira at the head of the garrison, which terminated in the entire defeat of the Brazilians, and the capture of considerable supplies of provisions and cattle. The loss of the Portuguese is reported to have been very small. General Madeira had directed two vessels of war to blockade the port of Rio Janeiro, and it was expected that he would speedily send some troops in the same direction.

A letter from St. Petersburgh says—"The corps of Guards of the interior (a kind of Gendarmerie) of which Count Kamarowsky is the Chief, amounts to 120,000, of whom from 50 to 60 are in the chief town of every circle. In the capitals of the Governments there is always a whole battalion.

Intelligence from Colombia of a recent date has been received. The Bogota Gazette of the 8th of September, contains an account of a meeting between General San Martin and the Protector Bolivar, at Guyaquil, on the 26th of July. Bolivar went out in person to meet the Protector of Peru, whose reception was most enthusiastic.

MADRAS, AUG. 3.—By letters lately received from Bencoolen, we learn that a Padrie war is expected shortly to take place. The Padries are a certain sect of fanatic priests, natives of the interior of Padang, on the west coast of Sumatra, who are in the yearly habit of propagating the tenets of their sect by compulsory measures, and when they meet with resistance, of stopping the commercial intercourse between the interior and the coast. They are a very formidable tribe, and frequently require the interference of the European powers to keep them down.

One of the most peculiarly interesting and useful books of reference ever printed in England, will be published next week. It consists of Accounts of 3,000 Living Cotemporaries, or Public Characters of all Nations, English, French, German, Spanish, Italian, Russian, American, and other countries, with above 150 engraved portraits. It is printed as a companion to the Peerages, and is in truth, a general Peerage of Nature and Talent.

John Buggles, a carrier, from Borrington, Essex, arrived in town on Wednesday morning, with three bales of wove silk, and put up at the Three Nuns, Aldgate. Having occasion to go to Newgate Market, he left the property exposed in the inn yard, and during his absence a thief carried off one of the bales, value about 100l.

IRELAND.

On Sunday night, 12th inst. at the early hour of eight o'clock, a party of villains broke into the house of an old couple within three miles of Mitchels-town, and in the most brutal manner murdered their son, and beat the poor old people to such a degree, that their lives are despaired of. A young woman, one of the family, with a child in her arms, had the good fortune to secret herself, and through that means saved both their lives—for the fury of the villains seemed directed against the whole family. Shortly after leaving the house they (as it is supposed) recollecting the female, again returned—but she fortunately made her escape, and hid herself a second time in an adjoining field. The only cause assigned for this deed of blood, is a suspicion entertained that the young man had given information against some of the private stills, so numerous in that part of the country. A man of bad character was taken up next day on suspicion, who has since been fully identified as one of the party.—Cork Advertiser.

We understand that a man was taken into custody yesterday evening, for striking the Lord Mayor, as his Lordship was about to enter the theatre. He was lodged in College-street Police Office. We have heard that he is a baker; the matter is to undergo investigation this day.—Dublin Morning Post of Tuesday.

DUBLIN, JAN. 21.—We regret much to state that the accounts from the country, as appears by the provincial prints received this morning, are of a complexion which bespeaks an insurrectionary spirit. ing, are of a complexion which bespeaks an insurrectionary spirit. In the disturbed counties, Limerick, Clare, &c. the miscreants continue to commit acts of violence and outrage.—Dublin Journal.

On Monday night two fellows, with their faces blackened, entered the house of a man of the name of Tobin, near Abbey Athassel, close to Golden, from whom they took a gun, the property of Mr. John Scully.—A few nights back the house of Michael Bradshaw, in the parish of Glankeen, was attacked and entered by two armed men, who robbed the said Bradshaw of 5l. which he had received at the market of Boris-Heigh. They succeeded in gaining admission at the house of Dan Ryan, of Upperchurch, which they plundered of 2l. On Sunday night last, Mr. Carroll, chief constable, proceeded, on information, to the lands of Rossetown, where he succeeded in apprehending a man named Edward Gaber, for being concerned in the above transactions.—Saturday night last, a person on horseback left a notice, signed Captain Rock, at the house of Mr. Lambley, at Tubberahenea, near Clonmel, ordering him to reduce his rent and discharge a workman from his employment, otherwise certain ruin would follow him.—Clonmel Paper.

On Friday evening an armed party of ruffians entered the house of Mr. Fitzgerald, at Cannigh, county of Kerry, and after beating the family, robbed the house of fire-arms, and a considerable sum of money. Mr. F. having alarmed his neighbours, a pursuit was set up after the fellows, who made a desperate resistance, but Mr. F. and his friends succeeded in taking two of the men, who are from the county of Wexford.—Limerick Paper.

We are this day enabled to communicate a piece of intelligence to our readers of more importance to the tranquillity of Ireland than any that has appeared since the publication of the Paternal Admonition of his Majesty on leaving the Irish shore. By order of our gracious King a circular has issued from the War Office to the officers commanding regiments in Ireland, requiring information on the following topics, viz.—Whether there be any Orangemen in their respective battalions? If any, what number, and of what rank? And whether any of the men have been recently tampered with by Orangemen, with a view to induce them to become members of Orange Lodges? We can also state, that the commanding officers who have been enabled to report that their corps are free from "the accursed thing," have received letters of thanks; while answers of a very different kind have been sent to the officers of the infected regiments.—Kilkenny Paper.

Lieut. Thos. Cowen, late adjutant of the 79th, and Superintendent of Police at Clara, in the King's County, shot himself on Wednesday last. He has left a wife and several children.—Cork Southern Reporter.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

VICE-CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

THURSDAY.—The Earl of Strathmore v. Fortune—A motion for an injunction to restrain the defendant from proceeding in an action on a bond for 500l. and on several bills of exchange accepted by the Noble Earl. The defendant had been employed at a salary of 500 guineas per annum to procure cash for the Noble Earl, to settle with his creditors, and to get bills discounted. It was alleged that the defendant had obtained a valuable picture and bills, for which he had not accounted to his employer. Mr. Fortune, in answer to these allegations, denied the truth of them, and accounted for the transactions, and retorted upon his Lordship.—The Vice-Chancellor saw no necessity for granting the injunction; nothing had been shewn to induce his Honour to restrain the defendant from proceeding on his securities.—The motion was therefore refused.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH.

MONDAY.—The King v. Tunbridge.—The Solicitor-General stated, that this was a prosecution for a blasphemous libel, against the defendant, one of Carlile's shopmen. The Learned Gentleman referred to the machinery by which these publications were covertly sold, in the case of Waddington, &c. The publication by the defendant took place in a similar way.—William Smith, a Bow-st officer, went to No. 5, Water-lane, Fleet-street, on the 30th of August last, saw the defendant at the door, asked him for a copy of the "Black Dwarf," which he received, price 6d.; he then asked for "Palmer's Principles of Nature," when defendant, pointing to a dial with the names and prices of books affixed, said—"You can get it there." The defendant went from behind the counter, into the passage behind the partition. Witness saw upon the list, before defendant went out of the shop, the name of "Palmer's Principles of Nature," the number and the price. The dial was against a partition. He then went to the hand, and moved the number next the book, put the money in, and then the book came down the spout through the partition, from a back room, not through the ceiling. Witness put into the spout two half-crowns, which was the price of the book.

Defendant—You say you purchased it of me, and I told you where you would get it?

Witness answered in the affirmative; purchased it because he knew that there was a conviction on it before; will not swear that the defendant sold it him, but that he told him where to get it; does not know the defendant would have sold it, if he had known him to be a police-officer; has read "Palmer's Principles," page 24.

Defendant—Did it induce you to feel contempt for the Holy Scriptures?

Witness—It certainly did.

Defendant—Did it cause you to break the public peace?

Witness—No.

The defendant addressed the Jury at some length. He defended the publication upon this ground, that "Palmer's Principles" was a book free from every immoral inference or motive. He would show that the Attorney-General, and not he, was the evil disposed person who should have been set out in this information. He called on the Jury to look for proofs that he was the evil disposed person, and contended that in the absence of such evidence, the verdict of guilty against him would amount to direct perjury. He then read the book, until the Lord Chief Justice observed, the only object of the defendant's reading this publication, was visibly for the purpose of defaming the Christian Religion, which it was his Lordship's duty to prevent. One of the Jury rejoined, that as the evident object of the defendant in reading the libel was to defame the Christian Religion, their minds were sufficiently made up. The defendant persisted in going on with the reading, contending it was the essential ground of his defence, and that it was impossible he could have a fair trial if the Jury refused to hear him out.—The Lord Chief Justice said, that unless the defendant refrained from the course of defence which he had adopted, after what had fallen from the Jury, his duty would be to order him to stand committed.—The Jury, without hesitation, pronounced the defendant Guilty.—The Lord Chief Justice ordered him immediately to be taken out of Court in custody.

THURSDAY.—This being the first day of Hilary Term, the Judges met at the Westminster Sessions House, and took their seats with the usual formality. A Report respecting the state of the Prisoners, and management of the Penitentiary, Millbank, was presented.

Wayte v. Carr.—This was an action to recover damages for negligent driving on the part of Lady Carr's coachman, by which the plaintiff and his wife were overturned in their chaise. The verdict was found for the defendant.—Mr. Gurney moved to set it aside on the ground that the weight of evidence proved negligence. The mischief for which the plaintiff sought compensation happened in the Regent's Circus, Piccadilly. Mr. Wayte was driving up Regent-street, and crossing the Circus—there was a hackney-coach driving at the same time, from the Strand; the pleasure drove before it, and Lady Carr's carriage coming upon him by surprise on the near side of the hackney-coach, overturned his chaise. A special rule in driving was this; one carriage crossing another ought to pass on the off side; and by the neglect of the defendant's coachman, in failing to observe this rule, the accident happened.—Mr. Justice Hayley—It may happen that a man is obliged to step on the near side.—Mr. Gurney—That was not the case here. The coachman had not to stop, and might have gone on the off side. All the indifferent spectators of the accident gave evidence that the coachman was in fault.—The Court was not disposed to consider the rule laid down by Mr. Gurney an established invariable rule, and believing that the question of negligence had been properly left to the Jury, they did not see any ground for disturbing the verdict.—Rule refused.

FRIDAY.—Steel v. Lucas.—Mr. Adolphus moved to exhibit articles of the peace on behalf of Francis Steel, of Oxford-street, and George Steel, his shopman, against the defendants, Phillip and John Lucas, timber-dealers, for obstructing exhibitant's right of way through certain wooden gates—assaulting, abusing, and threatening him with personal violence—taking exhibitant and shopman to the watch-house, and occasioning alarming mobs to collect in front of exhibitant's shop-door, with the aid and assistance of a watchman of the parish of Marylebone—striking exhibitant with an iron bar—cutting his nose to bleed and giving him a black eye, with divers other bodily injuries and personal wrongs—waylaying exhibitant at a late hour at night, after having threatened to do for exhibitant, &c. &c. on the night of the 11th of January inst. Mr. Adolphus stated, that this was a possession of premises by the family of defendant, to the annoyance of every other neighbour adjoining. That an indictment had been preferred by other complainants against these defendants, who having been convicted, still went on; to offer these acts of violence in defiance of the law. The Court permitted the articles to be filed.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

FRIDAY.—Cooke v. White.—An action of damages for false imprisonment. On the night of the 24th of Aug. last, the defendant called at the house of the plaintiff's mother, and gave plaintiff in charge of a watchman, for having been concerned in a burglary, shortly before committed on the premises of the defendant. The plaintiff was accordingly carried to the watch-house, and there detained until the following morning; when, being taken before the Sitting Magistrate at Union-Hall, he was immediately discharged, there not having been the slightest pretence for the charge preferred by the defendant against him.—The Jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, with 30l. damages.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS' COURT.

TUESDAY.—John H. Jackson was opposed (on the ground of fraud) by the Metropolitan Society for opposing fraudulent debtors, on the part of Messrs. Barnard, Hollier, and Co.—The insolvent, who had just attained the age of 25, had been for some time in partnership with a Mr. Woodcock, as coal-merchants in Cannon-street. He was examined at some length. Being called upon to explain from what documents he formed the exact sum of 583l. 16s. 4d. as the amount of his profits for a certain given period, he explained that he made his calculation in a great measure from memory, but more especially from the quantity of coals he had sold during the time; and the reason of his making a statement from such a source was, because he had lost his books, and did not know what had become of them! On being very rigidly pressed on this head, he said he purchased some regular bill-books and a journal in May, 1820, but scarcely made any entries in them. His previous entries, viz. from the preceding August, being made in an old waste book of his father's, and from which book the journal delivered into Court was compiled. When called on to explain particulars relative to certain deliveries, he replied in a very equivocal manner; and on being further interrogated relative to his book, he admitted with reluctance that it was partly made up in the King's Bench prison.—Mr. Woodcock was examined: Witness stated that he had seen a variety of books of account in the custody of the insolvent, the description of which he gave with great precision, but professed not to know the nature of the recent entries they contained.—The Chief Commissioner observed, that withholding books and making false entries in those produced to the Court, were specifically mentioned, and in the judgment of the Court this case fell under each of these allusions. It was quite clear the insolvent had concealed documents which must have recently been in his possession. As to the second point, relative to false entries, it was quite clear that instead of delivering in the book which contained continuous entries of daily transactions, another was put in its stead, which neither corresponded in character or description with that daily journal. Had any instance been proved of false receipts being made, as in a recent case, the Court would have gone to the whole extent of punishment the act had empowered it to award; but under all the circumstances the judgment was, that he be remanded at the suit of his opposing creditors for the space of 18 months, for fraudulently concealing his books. Mr. Commissioner Harris perfectly concurred in the judgment delivered, and observed that he hoped it would so operate on the public mind, that if the present was the first, it would be the last and only case wherein much fraud had been used and imposture detected.

POLICE.

MANSION-HOUSE.—On Thursday, Sergeant, the guard of the Birmingham Balloon Coach, and Clarke, and Clifford, the two men apprehended on suspicion of being parties in the robbery of the bankers' parcels, containing nearly 8,000l. in notes, were finally examined. Clarke and Clifford not being identified were discharged, and Sergeant was held to bail in his own recognizance of 100l. to appear when called on.

William Thomas was finally examined, charged with stealing 1,100l. in bankers' notes, contained in a parcel sent by the Exeter Subscription Coach, and fully committed for trial.

Thomas Clarke, porter at Flint's, on Fish-street-hill, was charged with having robbed the premises, in conjunction with his brother Richard Clarke, who had formerly been in the service of Mr. Flint. The latter was charged with being the receiver. Mr. Flint stated that Richard Clarke had lived as porter in the house for three years, and then left the service on pretence of ill health. Witness took the brother, Thomas Clarke, into the situation, and had reason to believe that both had robbed him to a considerable amount, the facilities being rendered very great by the fact of the brothers being well acquainted with every part of the concern. Some property was found in the possession of the prisoners. They were committed for trial.

GUILDHALL.—The noted Bill Soames, who, from his extensive practice and his very fashionable and expensive dress and appearance, was formerly designated the Prince of Pickpockets, was brought up on Thursday on suspicion of being engaged in his old tricks, and exhibited a miserable personification of age, poverty, and disease. The proof against him was, however, too slight to warrant his committal, and he was again set at liberty.

HATTON-GARDEN.—On Thursday, John Dyall, a miserable looking old man, in a wretched state of nakedness, who rendered himself so conspicuous at the Spa Fields and other meetings, by his harangues to the mob, and who was known by the name of the "green-coated orator," from his wearing an old green coat, was taken into custody in Hatton Wall, where he was surrounded by a mob of between 50 and 60 persons, whom he was striving to stir up to riot and rebellion, by holding forth language of the most seditious and treasonable nature against his Majesty, the government, and magistrates. During the time the officer was making his charge, the prisoner kept shrugging up his shoulders, rubbing his hands, scraping with his right foot, and making bows to the Magistrate. On being asked what he had to say to the charge, he began a very long incoherent speech, which the Magistrate had not patience to listen to, and the prisoner in default of bail was committed to prison.

UNION-HALL.—On Wednesday, one of the grave-diggers employed at the Burial Ground, Rotherhithe, was charged with an assault, originating in the following circumstances:—A Lighterman had buried his wife in the said ground about ten days ago, and on Thursday he had to inter his child in the same grave; when circumstances induced him to suspect that the body of his wife had been stolen, and he desired the grave-digger to unscrew the coffin lid, which request the latter refused to comply with, when he took off the lid himself, and found that the body of his wife was gone. An altercation took place between him and the prisoner, whom he suspected to be concerned in stealing the body, when the assault complained of took place.—The Magistrate expressed his opinion that the prisoner was connected with the resurrection-men, and told him, that in future he will be sharply looked after by the constables; but there was not sufficient proof in the present case, and of that accusation he must be acquitted. An assault upon the complainant, however, evidently had taken place, and for that he must find bail.

OLD BAILEY.

WEDNESDAY.—Isaac Bateman was indicted for stealing a bundle, containing three pocket handkerchiefs, and other articles, the property of Joseph Bromley. The prosecutor is a private in the 14th regiment of Light Dragoons, and had taken a place on the Isleworth coach to go to his quarters. The bundle was placed on the roof by his side. The prisoner was also a passenger. The coach stopped at Turnham Green, and the prosecutor got off a few minutes, leaving the prisoner and his bundle on the coach. On his return he found that the prisoner had gone off and taken his bundle with him. A patrol belonging to Bow-street stopped the prisoner about a quarter of a mile from the place where the coach had stopped; but on prisoner's telling where he lived, he suffered him to proceed. A few minutes afterwards the coach drove up, and enquired of him if he had seen a person with a bundle, and on learning that he had either taken it away in mistake or stolen it, he went to the house where the prisoner said he resided, and found him. He was very much intoxicated, and had left a box belonging to himself in the coach. The prisoner, in his defence, declared that he had no intention of stealing the property, and that he took it away by mistake. He also received a good character from some persons who had known him for upwards of three years, and who were on the coach at the time, The Jury acquitted him.

John Savory was indicted for stealing a quantity of type, two books, and a quantity of paper, the property of Mr. Moyes, printer.—The prisoner was in the employ of the prosecutor, and from time to time stole the above property, until it accumulated to a considerable amount.

The Jury found him Guilty.—The prosecutor recommended him to mercy, in consequence of his having a wife and child; but the Recorder told him that the Court could not attend to his recommendation, for the practice of servants robbing their masters had become of late so very frequent, that it was absolutely necessary to inflict the severest punishment; the least punishment, therefore, that could be inflicted on the prisoner would be 14 years transportation.

THURSDAY.—The whole of the trials having been gone through, the Recorder passed sentence of Death on the following prisoners:—John Buckley, George Marshall, Thomas Beswick, James Thomas, and John Robinson, for burglary—William Pearce, Neil Moran, Ann Williams, Mary Tickton, James Cress, Hannah Ford, and Elizabeth Ford, for stealing in a dwelling house.

Henry Wheatley and William Smith to be transported for life.—Elizabeth Stewart and William Barnard Collins for fourteen years.—John Reed, John Connor, John Barnes, George Seabrook, George Clay, John Smith, Thomas Moore, William Furlock, Mary Meredith, Jane Kemp, Richard Humphreys, John Battle, Maria Rix, Thomas Newman, Martha Eales, Henry Smith, Thomas Wescot, Mark Noble, Martha Williams, Elizabeth Price, Robert Beddoes, William Haines, James Cooper, Sarah Freeman, Wm. Brown, John Siberi, G. Lloyd, George Brown, William Adams, George Bartley, and two others, to seven years.

The Court then adjourned by proclamation to Wednesday, the 19th of February.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE DUKE OF YORK.—When his Royal Highness left London on Sunday se'nnight, on a visit to the Earl of Bridgewater, in Hertfordshire, he was then afflicted with a slight cold, which, we regret to say, so increased as to induce his Royal Highness to return to London on Monday for the purpose of taking the advice of his medical attendants. On Wednesday his Royal Highness was pronounced "a little better." Mr. Secretary Peel and most of the Cabinet Ministers called at York House to make inquiries. Sir Herbert Taylor, Military Secretary, attended for a considerable time at York House during the morning, to transact military business with his Royal Highness.—The answer to the enquiries on Friday were "His Royal Highness is a little better."

Prince Leopold landed at Dover on Tuesday, and proceeded immediately for Claremont, his seat in Surrey, where his Royal Highness arrived on Thursday.

On Tuesday night, Mr. Jackson arrived at the Foreign Office from Madrid; and Mr. Hunter, the King's Messenger, left town with dispatches for Vienna.

On Thursday, at two o'clock, a Cabinet Council was held at the Foreign Office, Downing-street, which was attended by the Earl of Harrowby, the Earl of Westmoreland, the Earl of Liverpool, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Lord Maryborough, Viscount Sidmouth, Earl Bathurst, Mr. Peel, Mr. Secretary Canning, Mr. Robinson, &c. The Council sat in deliberation about an hour and a half.

On Wednesday, the Earl of Liverpool, as Premier, gave the first Cabinet dinner for the season at Liverpool House, Whitehall.

Mr. Vansittart retires from the office of Chancellor of the Exchequer, and is to be succeeded by Mr. Frederick Robinson; Mr. Huskisson is to succeed Mr. Robinson as President of the Board of Trade, and is to be succeeded by the Right Hon. C. Arbuthnot in the office of Woods and Forests. Mr. Lushington takes Mr. Arbuthnot's situation at the Treasury, and Mr. Herries is to be appointed to the Secretaryship which Mr. Lushington held.

A deputation of Gentlemen interested in Colombian bonds on Wednesday accompanied a Committee to Mr. Canning, with whom they had a long and satisfactory interview on the subject of the Colombian loan.

The Lord Mayor has called a Court of Common Council for Wednesday next, to consider the propriety of presenting a petition to Parliament for Reform in the Representation.

THE ARMY.—Two companies of Royal Sappers and Miners have received orders to hold themselves in readiness to embark for foreign service, viz:—Captain Stanway's at Chatham, for Gibraltar, to relieve another on that station coming to England; and Captain Cardew's at Portsmouth, to succeed Captain Haigh's, ordered home.—A detachment belonging to the Royal African Colonial Corps embarked, on the 19th inst. at Cowes, on board the Louisa transport, to be conveyed to Cape Coast Castle.—A detachment of the 46th Regt. of Foot, consisting of 175 men, to march from Portsmouth for Chatham.—A detachment belonging to the 19th Regt. of Foot has marched from Albany barracks for Chatham.—A detachment belonging to the 13th Light Dragoons has received orders to march on the 31st inst. from Maidstone for Chatham.—One troop of the 1st Royal Drag. marched, on the 18th, from Deal to Canterbury.

On Wednesday, a Court of Directors was held at the East India House, when Richard Thomas Goodwin, Esq. was appointed to a seat in Council at Bombay, in the room of Guy Lenox Prendergast, Esq.; and James Joseph Sparrow, Esq. was appointed a Provisional Member of Council of Bombay.

The East India Company's outward-bound ship Thame, was in lat. 36 deg. 1 min. S. long. 7 deg. 2 min. E. on the 1st Nov. all well. The Regent was to leave Angier Roads for China, on the 17th Sept.

Commissioner Woolley is appointed to Chatham Dock-yard, to succeed Sir R. Barlow, superannuated.

Accident at the Seat of Lord Viscount Granville.—At Whersted Lodge, in Suffolk, lately, the Noble Lord had a large party of friends, to enjoy the sports of the field. On Thursday se'nnight they were out scouring a wood. The morning was hazy, and the Duke of Wellington was so intent on his game, that he lost sight of the party, and in firing his double-barrel gun, he lodged a part of the contents in the face of his Noble host; seven swan shot entered the cheeks, and one in the nose. His Grace, hearing an exclamation of "I am shot," threw down his piece, and hurried to the spot, where he found his friend leaning against a tree, his face streaming with blood. A surgeon, in less than an hour, extracted the shot. His Lordship is now perfectly recovered, and returned to town.

The inhabitants of Weybridge have erected a monument to the memory of the Duchess of York. It consists of a simple column of considerable elevation, and records on its tablet the virtues and great benefits the village derived from the superintending care of her Royal Highness.

Thursday morning, about seven o'clock, a fire broke out in the conservatory of Mrs. Fitzherbert, at Battersea, which seemed to threaten the total destruction of that beautiful villa. The progress of the flames was only arrested by pulling down that part of the conservatory next the house.

Monday morning, Giles East, aged 16 years, was executed pursuant to his sentence, on the top of the Lodge of Horsemonger-lane Gaol. This unfortunate boy was convicted at the late Kingston Assizes, of a rape upon a child named Porter.

SUDDEN DEATHS.—On Sunday, Mr. Pitt, a young gentleman, living in Jermyn-street, St. James's, who was in perfect health, went into his bed-room, when he was suddenly seized with giddiness, and dropped down dead on the floor.—Mrs. New, residing in Chapel-street, Westminster, a few days ago, was found dead in her bed-room. She had been in perfect health only a few minutes before.—Wednesday, Mrs. Cavanagh, of Husband-street, St. James's, died suddenly, whilst sitting in her chair by the fire.—On Thursday, Mr. Stonestreet, pawnbroker, in Oxford-street, after partaking of a hearty breakfast, whilst transacting business in his shop, fell down, and expired instantly.—Mr. Brooks, linen-draper, in Duke-street, Manchester-square, also, whilst engaged in his business, was seized in a fit, and died upon the spot.

The following inquests have been taken during the week:—At St. Thomas's Hospital, on the body of Thomas Thorne, aged 66, who put a period to his existence, by cutting his throat. The Jury returned a verdict of—"Mental derangement."—At the Cock Inn, Holloway, before Mr. Stirling, the Coroner, on view of the body of Mr. Thomas Rodbard, who was killed, in consequence of being thrown out of his chaise. Deceased was in Cock-lane, riding in a one horse chaise alone, very much intoxicated, and reeling backwards and forwards several times, on turning short round the corner, he gave a reel in the chaise, and pitched over the off-wheel on his head. A surgeon of Holloway, stated that deceased died in consequence of apoplexy, occasioned by a rupture of a blood vessel on the brain, which had occasioned a great effusion of blood, induced by excessive intoxication and a violent blow on the head. Verdict—"Died in consequence of an accidental fall from a chaise."—On the body of Susannah Keys, aged 27, who died in consequence of a spark flying on her clothes, which set them in a blaze, on Sunday last. Verdict—"Accidental Death."—At the Grave Maurice, Whitechapel, on the bodies of two children who died in the London Hospital, in consequence of their clothes taking fire; the one aged five years, son of Mr. Collins, of Elgers-place, St. George's in the East; the other, a girl, named Sharp, aged seven, whose parents live in Philip-street, Cornwall-street. Verdict in both cases—"Accidental Death."

HUNTING INTELLIGENCE.—H. Jolliffe, Esq.'s Fox Hounds meet on Wednesday, at Capel Village; Saturday, at Somer-street.—The Surrey Fox Hounds, Thursday, at Rose and Crown, Riddlesdown; Saturday, at Westerham.—The Sanderstead Harriers, Wednesday and Saturday, at kennel.—The Somerset Subscription fox-hounds on Tuesday, at Half Cleave; Friday, at Nettlecombe.—The Worcestershire fox-hounds on Tuesday, at Fox on Shipley Common; Thursday, at Highgate; Saturday, at Chittington.

PROVINCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

ALRESFORD.—A young man of genteel appearance and address, being in the travellers' room, at the Black Swan Inn, Winchester, on Sunday evening, observed a gentleman inclosing a remittance in a letter, which was afterwards given to a lad for delivery at the post office. The man quitted the room, and obtained the letter, undertaking to convey it to the post; instead of which he turned back, and went to the White Hart Inn, whence he set out in a post chaise in the direction for London. He was pursued in a chaise and four, and overtaken at Mattenly Gate, and the property, amounting to 520l. recovered. He has been fully committed for trial.

ASHBURTON.—Some inhuman wretch had the barbarity to leave a new born female child in the snow, near Ashburton, on Wednesday last. The little innocent was picked up before the vital spark was extinct, and appears likely to do well. It has been christened by the appropriate name of Mary Ann Snow.

A horde of gypsies have been very lately encamped at the foot of Woodbury-hill, where they cut off the tails and manes of every horse they could catch; several horses have also been stolen.

BURY.—On Thursday morning (the 16th inst.) a poor woman, named Wymock, was found in an out-house, attached to her cottage, with her throat cut, quite dead. She had for several months laboured under derangement, and had been watched, as she had expressed a fear that she should destroy herself, and once before attempted it. An inquest was held at the Plough Inn. Verdict—"Insanity."

CHICHESTER.—As a lad named Cole was driving some horses at harrow, on Cockham Farm, in the parish of East Wittering, the animals, being alarmed, the boy was unfortunately beaten down, and the harrow passing over him, caused his immediate death. Verdict accordingly.

A travelling man advanced in years, was found dead near a hovel, on the Old Broyle, on Monday morning. Verdict—"Died from the inclemency of the weather."

DERBY.—On Tuesday se'nnight, an inquest was held on the body of Sarah Barker, an infant, who died in her mother's arms on Monday morning, in coming to Derby, from Nottingham, on the Nelson coach. Verdict, "Died by the visitation of God."

DURHAM.—As the Exmouth coach, belonging to Messrs. Horner and Co. approached this city from the south, it was thrown over in descending the hill towards the New Inn, in consequence of the horses running away. A Mr. Dean was pitched to a considerable distance, and very severely hurt, and many other passengers were more or less bruised. The coach being righted proceeded on its journey, as did also the Highflyer and the other Exmouth coach, which was immediately behind; but Mr. Dean was left lying upon the road perfectly insensible. Lord Mansfield, in his carriage, came up shortly afterwards, and his Lordship, perceiving Mr. Dean, alighted, and placed him in his carriage, and brought him to the New Inn. Mr. D. is now in a state of recovery.

EDINBURGH.—The unfortunate young man Simpson, who, along with Robertson, is at present under sentence of death for the robbery at Inverness of the porter of the Caledonian coach, is the person of that name who was in Dumfries jail at the time when David Haggart murdered the turnkey; and who, upon Haggart's trial, was the principal witness for the prosecution.—On the forenoon of Tuesday se'nnight, Mr. Aaron Young, of Loanend, in the parish of Norham, farmer, and his servant, Elliott, a lad about 17 years of age, were drowned in the Whitadder, at Bluestoneford.

GLASGOW.—The London mail, which was due on Thursday se'nnight, at half past ten o'clock, did not arrive till a quarter before six the following night. It was impeded in its progress by the snow in several parts of England, and when it approached Moffat, the roads became altogether impassable. Coach, passengers, and parcels were left behind, and the guard brought the mail forward a stage on horseback. In some low-lying places the snow had drifted to such a depth that the tops of the hedges on the way side were barely observable. Men were set to work to clear the road as soon as circumstances would permit.

HARROGATE.—The following inhabitants of Harrogate were lately convicted by the Knaresbrough Magistrates, for offences against the Excise Laws, in the under-mentioned mitigated penalties:—Joseph Binns, boarding-house keeper, for supplying his boarders with porter, he being unlicensed, in 25l. John Garth and John Pearson, for keeping silversmiths' shops without a proper licence, the former in 5l. and the latter in 6l.; and Mary Ann Pulleyne, toy-woman, in 5l. for selling a silver trinket above the weight of five penny weights without a silversmith's licence.

HULL.—A most iniquitous system of depredation has for some time past been pursued on several estates in the neighbourhood of Dewsbury. On Thursday night last, six sheep belonging to the Rev. W. Wood, of Tingley Hall, were killed in one of the fields adjoining the house, and the bodies and skins of the animals were left on the spot, with the exception of the tallow. A short time previously, Mr. Wooler, of House Mill, lost five sheep in the same way; many other individuals have suffered from similar acts of villany.

KENDAL.—On Sunday last, Mr. Parkin, with his two brothers, went to dine with their parents in the country, a short distance from the Reservoir, and after dinner the three brothers went to skait, the ice not being sufficiently strong, the two younger brothers fell in. Mr. Parkin used every exertion to extricate them, but in vain; Mr. P. had a narrow escape for his life.

LEEDS.—On Wednesday se'nnight, an inquest was held upon the body of George Tripleton, who fell from the window of the Griffin inn, Mill Hill, Leeds, on the morning of Sunday week, and died at the Infirmary, on Wednesday se'nnight. The deceased, who was much in liquor, had requested to remain all night at the Griffin, and was shown to bed. It is supposed that he got up in the night and had fallen out of the window, as he was found by the patrol, lying in the street on Sunday morning, his watch being on the ground. Verdict—"Accidental Death."

NEWPORT PAGNELL.—An inquest was taken on the body of Richard Mott, a pauper, aged upwards of 90 years, who, on the Tuesday preceding, hanged himself in a barn adjoining his house.—The premises which he occupied had been lately sold, and the idea of having a new landlord had so much affected him, his intellects likewise being impaired by age, that the Jury gave a verdict of—Lunacy.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, JANUARY 26.

THE KING, we rejoice to state, is so far recovered from the attack of the gout, that the answer to the numerous enquiries is, "HIS MAJESTY is better." Within the last few days HIS MAJESTY has been enabled to remove into another apartment to take dinner; and, we trust, will very shortly be reinstated in perfect health.

WE are sick to death of public dinners, and public meetings, sick to death of all Whigs, and more especially of Scotch Whigs. This, we say, in order to account for not giving a mere elaborate detail of the Edinburgh FOX Dinner, of last week.

We are old enough to remember a good many FOX anniversaries, and amongst others, that of the year 1798, when the late DUKE OF NORFOLK made the following observation from the Chair:—

"We are met in a moment of difficulty to celebrate the birth of a man dear to the friends of freedom. I shall only recall to your memory, that not twenty years ago, the illustrious GEORGE WASHINGTON, had not more than two thousand men to rally round him when his country was attacked. AMERICA is now free—this day, full two thousand men are assembled in this place (the Crown and Anchor.)—I leave you to make the application."

It is worthy of remark, en passant, that a FOX Dinner of two thousand persons is a sight not likely to be seen in these days; indeed, every body knows how the crowd was collected on the occasion, which happened to be the first regular union of those two constitutional assemblies, the WHIG CLUB and the CORRESPONDING Society. Let us, however, look at the toasts which were then drunk, and compare their affected moderation with the hypocritical liberality of those given in our times

They were as follows:—

"Constitutional redress for the wrongs of the People."

"A speedy and effectual Reform in the Representation of the People in Parliament."

"The genuine principles of the British Constitution."

After which, the DUKE OF NORFOLK called upon the company to drink "our Sovereign's health—"

"The MAJESTY of the PEOPLE!"

These were the proceedings of a FOX Dinner five and twenty years ago—of a celebration of CHARLES FOX'S birth-day—of that independent, pure, high-spirited Whig's birth-day—of that independent, pure, high-spirited Whig's birth-day, who, after traducing, vilifying, and calumniating LORD NORTH and his measures for fourteen years, joined him in office; who, after having been the popular candidate for Westminster, went to Covent Garden in the year 1782, and used all his official weight to influence the election!

However, with MR. FOX we have nothing now to do—but we cannot fail to remark that five and twenty years ago men of the same principles, adherents of the same party, drank together with the same toasts; one certainly more declaratory of their real feelings, views, and wishes than any given at EDINBURGH on the late anniversary—but which we must infer is equally dear, and cherished with those which the Scotch Whiglings had the courage to publish to the world.

To be sure "Confusion to the Holy Alliance" was given, which, as a proof of the pacific views of the Whigs, is somewhat amusing, but, most assuredly, not the most amusing part of the performances of the day.

SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH—"he that hath thrice turned"—was in the chair, supported by the EARLS of ROSSLYN and MINTO, and matters went on much in the usual way of drinking and speechifying, till MR. COCKBURN, a lawyer, got up, and proposed the health of JOSEPH HUME, and in the speech wherein he introduced this toast, expressed his hope that the said HUME would "extend his medico-political practice to "Scotland, and would feel the pulses of the Scotch pensioners "and sinecurists."

This allusion to JOSEPH'S old profession was strange enough from a person professing to be his political admirer—but, will it be believed—this MR. COCKBURN belongs to a family which is glutted with pensions?

MR. COCKBURN'S mother has a pension!
MR. COCKBURN'S eldest sister has a pension!!
MR. COCKBURN'S second sister has a pension!!!
MR. COCKBURN'S third sister has a pension!!!!
ALL MR. COCKBURN'S sisters have pensions!!!!!

—So that, if DOCTOR HUME is to feel all their pulses, his practice will be pretty considerable.

This is not the best of the joke. To whom did MR. COCKBURN address his extraordinary speech? To SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH, who has an enormous pension—to LORD ROSSLYN, who has an enormous SINECURE—to LORD MINTO, whose rise is owing entirely to Tory measures, whose title was bestowed by a Tory Administration, and whose brother holds, at this moment, one of the most notorious sinecures in all Scotland!!!

If DOCTOR HUME had had his fingers on the wrists of any of these three worthies while MR. COCKBURN was thus attacking pensions and sinecures, we fancy he would have had no difficulty in perceiving a strong acceleration of the pulse.

To the patriot LORD ROSSLYN'S office, and his conduct therein (for it is only a sinecure as regards the public,) we shall, on a future day, call the attention of our readers, contenting ourselves at present with observing, that if any thing could have added to the piquante character of MR. COCKBURN'S oration, it would have been that the exemplary widow of the economical and independent Statesman, whose memory they were then celebrating, had been endowed with an enormous pension, bestowed upon her by no less pure a person than her husband.

THE Herefordshire Whigs, having more time to make preparations, have out-manœuvred old COBBETT—and whilst their geese, better domesticated than MR. COKE'S, HISSED the veteran sinner out of the county, they waddled after their decoys as if the victory over one MIS-LEADER were a guarantee against their being ultimately TAKEN IN! Poor simpletons, who could be made to believe that there was any substantial difference of sentiment in the address carried by MR. LECHMERE CHARLTON, and the petition—the "Crambe repetita" of the Norfolk farmers, under the dictation of the discarded itinerant.

The Spartans would never have disgusted their children with drunkenness had they made their helots only "half seas over." It is only by exhibiting the full effects of a poison that we can hope to deter people from the folly of sipping it. WHIG PRINCIPLES (such we mean as they are represented in the present day,) can only be thoroughly understood by being displayed in their true colours—and men like HUNT and COBBETT are the best commentators to whom we can resort for their plain and unequivocal illustration. MR. LECHMERE CHARLTON, a man of some celebrity in his way, and who, we believe, challenged the horse-whip at Newmarket some time since, contrived to substitute an address instead of the plain, simple propositions of MR. PATTESHALL, which the gregarious multitude carried by acclamation, as being directly opposed, like "black and white," to the revolutionary petition of COBBETT! The latter boldly says, "take a slice from the fundholders"—the former affects to be horror stricken at such a NOTION, and gets the proposer hooted out of the county in order himself to propose a PARTIAL TAX, that is, an EXCLUSIVE TAX upon the FUNDS THEMSELVES!—a nice distinction, my worthy masters!

A MR. DAVIES, who seconded this more covert scheme of doing precisely what COBBETT put in plain terms, expresses, in a high tone, his indignation at that man's open attempt at SPOLIATION—"he," (MR. DAVIES,) "was no Radical," (as if any man cared a pin what he was,) "HE held such an imputation to be as opprobrious as if he were called MR. COBBETT!" Very well, MR. DAVIES—in order that we may know why it would be opprobrious to call him MR. COBBETT, tells the gaping farmers, that "he wished to see the people fully and fairly represented in Parliament as they were entitled to be from their GROWING WEALTH and intelligence." A curious reason in a meeting called for the purpose of representing the overwhelming poverty of the same people—but a slip from a Whig is nothing. Nevertheless, taking the sentiment, and the principle upon which it is founded, we assure MR. DAVIES that we can produce, from the works of COBBETT himself, FIFTY instances of the same opinion, and half as many in the self same form of words.

HUNT, who is not so glib at elocution, has hackneyed phrase at every meeting for the last ten years, which MR. DAVIES is so proud of appropriating to himself in contradistinction to the "opprobrious imputation" of being like COBBETT! This gentleman goes on to another article of creed: "He wished to see the growing influence of THE CROWN diminished, and the duration of Parliaments shortened." Is not this been the wish expressed as the watch-word of party, and the principle acted upon from the moment COBBETT ceased to be a government pensioner—and has learned to spout sedition? But we waste time upon the RURAL WHIGS—all we desire to impress upon the minds of our countrymen is, that RADICALISM or JACOBINISM WHIGGERY are ONE and the SAME disease, only in different stages of the ERUPTION. It is true the one set of quacks suppose they can stop its progress when the patient has quite submitted to their nostrum—whilst the others are indifferent whether the patient dies or not, so that they can gain and possession of the body! The only question for us is, which the patient had not better remain under the hands of the regular practitioners of the OLD COLLEGE than submit to the KNIFE and CAUTERY of advertising empirics, who, in the scramble for their fees, would drug him to the throat—care not a sixpence for his CONSTITUTION!

There is something laughable in the very impudence of these men—we mean both WHIGS and RADICALS, (who for the present, struggling for the mastery,) and the gravity with which COBBETT answered the question of the Lord Lieutenant touching his freehold in the county—together with the silent acquiescence of the meeting upon his affirmation of the fact, prove practically, that whatever legal fictions may be imputed to our corrupt Parliament, the REFORMERS do not perform even their little jobs without having recourse to them. It was the boast of one of the greatest arithmeticians the political history of the country, that he possessed a freehold in every county of England, and COBBETT may very soon be able to affirm the same—but the Aristocrat and the Radical stand exactly in the relative position of a fair dealer and a SMUGGLER. A man of the name of WALTER PALMER may be supposed he is of the true "Norfolk breed"—could a small quantity of land on the evening previous to the meeting, in order to qualify the itinerant weathercock for his appearance on the stage, for which the attorney (NO DOUBT) brought in a bill of TWELVE POUNDS!!

FASHIONABLE ARRIVALS.

THE following Noblemen and Gentlemen have arrived in London, preparatory to the opening of Parliament, and have taken up their residences in the several parts of town mentioned below.

MR. MABERLY, Leather Lane.
MR. HUME, BOAR'S HEAD, East-CHEAP.
LORD HOLLAND, PETTICOAT Lane.
MR. MOSES BERNAL, DUKE'S Place.

A large party of Opposition Gentlemen wished to have themselves in Downing-street, but not being able to get place unoccupied, they have returned to their old apartments in Lumber-court.

A LITTLE bit of sincerity in a Whig newspaper is a jewel of inestimable value. Our readers may tolerably well appreciate the present state of Reform Meetings by the following paragraph, extracted from Monday's CHRONICLE:—

"We regret exceedingly that the County Meetings have hitherto taken so unfavourable a turn. If the Meetings confine themselves to Economy and Reform, the country generally will second the aspirations; but otherwise Ministers will be sure to triumph."

The same paper, of the same day, informs us, that COURIERS, the King's Messenger, had been sent post-haste to catch LORD G. SEYMOUR at PARIS, who had left town on Foreign Mission. We are quite sure that LORD GEORGE SEYMOUR would most efficiently conduct any negociation which might be entrusted to his care; but as it is not usual to select the Chairman of the Board of Excise for such a special purpose, we are inclined to imagine that the WHIG oracle may for once be mistaken.

The CHRONICLE also, a few days since, observed that LORD FRANCIS CONYNGHAME had been spoken of as likely to be appointed Under Secretary of State; but that they totally discredited the report, although they firmly believed another, for which there was no foundation. It may not be unserviceable to the CHRONICLE to mention that LORD FRANCIS CONYNGHAME was actually appointed on the day in which the leading Whig journal was pleased to express the doubts we have just ventured to quote.

ROYAL MUNIFICENCE.

"HIS MAJESTY is said to have given the Royal Library, collected by the late KING, to the British Museum. This splendid gift is said to have been accompanied with an autograph letter to the EARL of LIVERPOOL, in his character of trustee of this national establishment. The library consists of 90,000 volumes: the historical and geographical part (especially the Atlases) is particularly valuable. When the late KING came to the Throne, there was not a single volume; he bought the whole 90,000 out of his privy purse."

We extract the above from the MORNING CHRONICLE; not as an instance of its liberality, but as a proof of the brazen impudence with which WHIGS, and all who are dependant upon them, swallow their own words without a blush, and publish their own falsehoods to the world, without even an attempt at palliation, or explanation. Those who are too much disgusted with Whig principles to read their journals, will scarcely believe us, when we assure them that this very journal—this MORNING CHRONICLE, attempted to amuse its readers a short time since, with the most insidious and malignant insinuations against HIS MAJESTY, because the library in question was to be sold out of the country. We do not profess to be so well acquainted with HIS MAJESTY'S intentions as the worthy conductors of the CHRONICLE; but of this we are sure, that the CHRONICLE, as its own interpreter, has given itself the LIE DIRECT; and we are sure, still further, that in whatever manner HIS MAJESTY may be disposed to act upon the occasion, he will be consistent with himself; and afford to his people, at every step, some fresh confutation of the miserable and dishonourable shifts to which the REJECTED WHIGS resort, in order to vent their petty malignity and slip-slop policy.

OF all the puzzles which have come under our consideration, the most intricate is the approaching PETERBOROUGH election. The state of parties stands thus:—

LAWYER SCARLETT having been seized with an ambitious fit, and deluded by the promises of a very weak party at Cambridge, cuts the PETERBOROUGH people, takes the Chiltern Hundreds, leaves the unhappy PETERBORONIANS unrepresented, and offers himself to the University. At the close of the poll he is immeasurably below his successful antagonist, although not only his son voted for him, but he voted for himself! Ousted with considerable contempt from the seat of learning, the Lawyer falls back upon his former representatives, and being an ardent and valuable Parliamentary Reformer, relies on his Noble Friend at WENTWORTH to re-seat him.

LOCKE says, "Would it not be insufferable for a learned "professor, and that which his SCARLET would blush at, to "have his authority of forty years standing in an instant over-"turned?"—Certainly it would; and as my LORD FITZWILLIAM is a professor of Parliamentary purity, the overturning of his authority at Peterborough would be extremely unpleasant to him and his SCARLETT; and yet, if the electors of PETERBOROUGH have the spirit of Tom-tits, they will spurn from them the man who has not disguised his opinion of them, and who would merely use their suffrage as a matter of convenience.

The question is, what choice has the herd of voters?—A brother Lawyer, in the first place, opposes SCARLETT—MR. WELLS, of Huntingdon; a gentleman, who, when noses were counted in a certain assembly, would go for nothing. MR. SAMUEL WELLS offers himself. But there is another, and another yet—poor SIR CHARLES WOLSELEY; and, over and above all, MR. WILLIAM CORBETT.

Wretched PETERBOROUGH, what a party to make a selection from!—Why does not some young TORY go down and give the people a chance of becoming respectable?

ECONOMICAL REFORM.

We extract the following information from the latest accounts of the Landaburian debates in Madrid. It may supply a Commentary to the Whig and Radical speeches upon Ministerial rapacity, under the present system, and the pledges given by our political monitors of the economical Reforms, which a Parliament established upon liberal principles would bring with it.

"The Sitting of the 9th was of still more alarming character. Property and persons were formally menaced. The revolutionary measures which were proposed, must alarm all sober minds. The illustrious citizen, Megia, editor of the Zurriago (the Scourge) ascended the tribune, and said—'this is the moment for recognizing true patriots. The nation wants money; the necessities of the public treasury are urgent; the half of property must be given up: every means must be enforced; an army is required on the frontier, and in a country poor, as ours is, it must be paid by those who are interested in its preservation and honour. The indifferent, who are good for nothing, will be compelled to announce, in front of their houses—I have such a sum when the country shall need it. Woe to him who conceals a doit!' "

THE preparations for a new campaign at Westminster are going on with the greatest activity, and amongst other "signs of the times," the Whigs and Radicals hail with unqualified satisfaction the fact that MR. and MRS. MICHAEL ANGELO TAYLOR have engaged an extra-cook for the season.

It may be considered hard upon MR. MICHAEL ANGELO TAYLOR that we should draw public attention to his private affairs; and we own, that if his residence had not already been established in society as the "WHIG RADICAL ORDINARY," we should not attempt to dabble in his domestic concerns. The man is in himself harmless enough, but like the trumpeter in the fable he does incalculable mischief in his pacific capacity; as the one incited the troops to arms with his breath, so the other stirs the Whigs to action with his broth; and, therefore, he, being the latent cause of all those brilliant speeches which shake the House from the Opposition Benches, and all those patriotic and high toned motions which are annually lost after long debates without divisions, merits the particular attention of the hostile party.

One thing, as we have often said, gives respectability to any man not positively at variance with the Laws and Constitution of the country, and that one thing is CONSISTENCY. We do not mean to say that a man should entirely blind himself to the failings of his party, or that upon a conviction of their weakness or wickedness, every individual has not a right, judging for himself, to leave those in whose support, before he really knew them, he had been warm, strenuous, and active; but we mean to say, that until we happened to stumble upon the following probationary Ode, we had no conception that our excellent little Whig, in Privy Gardens, was originally a most excellent little Tory. It may not be unamusing to quote the Ode, not to vex poor MR. TAYLOR, but merely to shew what was thought of him at the time by the WHIG party, which—he afterwards so good naturedly joined.

ON THE BIRTH-DAY.

By MICHAEL ANGELO TAYLOR, ESQ. M.P. only Son of SIR ROBERT TAYLOR, KT. and late Sheriff; also Sub-Deputy, Vice-Chairman to the Irish Committee; WELCH JUDGE Elect, &c. &c.

HAIL, all hail, thou natal day!
Hail, the very half-hour, I say,
On which great GEORGE was born!
Tho' scarcely fledged I'll try my wing;
And tho', alas! I cannot sing,
I'll crow on this illustrious morn!
Sweet bird, that chirpst the note of folly
So pleasantly, so drolly!
Thee, oft the stable-yards among,
I woo, and emulate thy song!
Thee for my emblem still I chuse!
O with thy voice inspire a chicken muse!

Thee, too, my fluttering muse invokes,
Thy guardian aid I beg,
Thou great assessor, famed for jokes,
For jokes of face and leg!*
So may I oft thy stage-box grace,
(The first in beauty as in place),
And smile responsive to thy changeful face!
For, say, renowned mimic, say,
Did e'er a merrier crowd obey
Thy laugh-provoking summons,
Than with fond glee, enraptured sit,
Whene'er with wadesigning wit
I entertain the Commons?†
Lo! how I shine St. Stephen's boast,
There, first of chicks, I rule the roast!
There I appear PITT'S Chanticleer!!!
The Bantam Cock to oppositions!
Or, like a Hen,
With watchful ken,
Sit close, and hatch the Irish propositions!

Behold, for this great day of pomp and pleasure,
The House adjourns, and I'm at leisure!
If thou art so, come, muse of sport,
With a few rhymes
Delight the times,
And coax the critic BUFFO, and enchant the Court!
By heaven, she comes!—more swift than prose,
At her command, my metre flows!
Hence ye weak warblers of the rival lays!
Avaunt, ye Wrens, ye Goslings, and ye PIES!
The CHICK of LAW shall win the prize—
The CHICK of LAW shall peck the bays!
So, when again the State demands our care,
Fierce in my laurel'd pride I'll take the Chair.
GILBERT, I catch thy bright invention,
With somewhat more profound retention!
But never, never on thy prose I'll border—
Verse, lofty sounding verse, shall "call to order!"
Come, sacred Nine, come one and all,
Attend your fav'rite Chairman's call.
Oh! if I well have chirp'd your brood among,
Point my keen eye, and tune my brazen tongue.
And, hark! with elegiac graces,
"I beg that gentlemen may take their places!"
Didactic muse, with measured state,
Be thine to harmonize debate!
Thine, mighty CLIO, to resound from far—
"The door, the door!—the bar, the bar!"
Stout PEARSON dawns around, at his dread word,
"Sit down," cries CLEMENTSON, and grasps his silver sword!

But, lo! when PITT appears to move,
Some new resolve of hard digestion!
Wake, then, my muse, thy gentler notes of love,
And in persuasive numbers "put the question."
The question's gain'd—the Treasury Bench rejoice!
"All hail, thou LEAST OF MEN (they cry) with mightiest voice!"
Blest sounds—my ravished eye surveys
IDEAL ERMINES, FANCIED BAYS!!!
Rapt in St. Stephen's future scenes,
I sit perpetual Chairman of the Ways and Means.
Cease, cease, ye brick layer crew, MY SIRE to praise,
His mightier offspring claims impartial lays!
The father climb'd the ladder with a hod—
The son, like GENERAL JACKOO, jumps alone, by GOD!

* DELPINI, the famous clown,—a particular favourite at the time with MR. TAYLOR.

† Not substantially, as he does at present.

It may be necessary once more to impress upon the minds of such of our readers as happen never to have seen the above poem, that it is WHIG WIT, working the TORY TAYLOR.

As we certainly claim no share of its merits, we may be excused for merely observing, in explanation of the last lines of the Ode, that the father of MR. TAYLOR was an architect, and that he (MR. TAYLOR) was brought up to the same profession, and christened MICHAEL ANGELO, in hopes that there might be something in a name. MICHAEL ANGELO soon found he had not talents for the trade, and left it, intending to be, perhaps, Prime-Minister, or, at least, SPEAKER of the HOUSE OF COMMONS.

AIDS FOR POLITICAL READERS OF NEWSPAPERS

TOUCHING SPAIN.

SPANISH PARTIES.—Perses, or Persians.—This term is applied to the 72 Deputies of the Cortes, who, on the return of Ferdinand "the Beloved," signed the address which was got up to afford that amiable Monarch a pretext for abolishing the Constitution. They are called Perses, because their address began with the following words—"It was a custom among the Persians," &c.

Absolutistas.—Persons who hold the same opinions as the Perses, and wish to restore the King to the possession of absolute power.

Pasteleros, or Pastry-cooks.—Modifications proposed to be made in the Constitution have been called a pastel, which means a pie, or any kind of pastry; hence those who are supposed to wish to make such modifications are named Pasteleros. The term has, however, been differently applied and diverted from its original use. The last Ministers, who were suspected of a design to alter the Constitution, had the epithet Pasteleros applied to them, as had all members of the Cortes who voted for them. These Deputies were also called Arguellistas, because the celebrated ARGUELLES was the leader of their party. The present Ministers are in their turn called Pasteleros by the Zurriaguistas and *Landuburianistas. Thus the word has at length ceased to be a term of reproach. One of the Paris journals has stated, Pastelero means the same as the French Ventru; but no reason is assigned for this application.

Anilleros, or the Ring-men.—There is a society or club called the Anillo, or the Ring, the members of which are understood to be decided partisans for the establishment of a Chamber of Peers. All persons who concur in opinion with this club in the necessity of a House of Peers, or who wish to have the Cortes divided into two Chambers, are described by the general term Camaristas.

* These terms are well known. The former is applied to the persons who adopt the violent principles of the journal called Zurriago, or Scourge. The latter are the members of the Landaburian Club, which derives its name from Captain LANDABURU, the Officer of the Guard who was killed in endeavouring to suppress the mutiny of that corps.

TOUCHING THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

The following propositions were lately under the consideration of the American House of Representatives, and every one of them negatived by large majorities:—

"That no member shall sit with his hat on."—As the British Commons sit covered, it was thought that the American Commons would be yielding the point of dignity were they to do otherwise. Thus it is that two great nations rival each other in the march of civilization!

"That no member shall write or read private letters in his seat, while business is going on."—The English public are not perhaps aware, that, in the American House of Representatives, every member has a desk before him, for the convenience of writing, and that frequently, while one is speaking, all the rest seem like so many clerks, busy writing and folding up letters, to be in time for the post. There is a lordly ease in this, far beyond any thing to which our Commons, with all their ancient pretensions, have yet been able to attain.

"That no member shall smoke a segar in the body of the Hall."—What a contrast, again, to the rigid manners of the Commoners of England! How delightful to be thus at liberty to turn to smoking, when you are tired with writing, and thus in all cases to shew your utter indifference to what is going on! Happy people, to be so represented!

"That no member shall be allowed to speak more than an hour at a time, without special leave of the house."—It was alledged, in support of this regulation, that there were some members of Congress, who, like our BURKE,—

"—— Too deep for their hearers, still went on refining,
"And thought of convincing, while they thought of dining."

But a sentiment of national pride again interfered to prevent any deviation from old use and wont. In that mother country of despotism, Old England, as was pithily remarked, it is the custom of Members of Parliament to speak till they are tired; and strange would it seem were free-born Republicans not to be at liberty to do the same.—Hail, Columbia!

TOUCHING OURSELVES.

By a close calculation, the political state of the House of Commons is said to be as follows:—"Out of the 658 Members, 37 have given no votes for some time past, and cannot therefore be accurately known. The 621 Members remaining may be divided into three classes—Members constantly supporting Ministers—Members constantly opposing Ministers—and Members voting occasionally on either side, so that neither can calculate upon them. Of the first class, or Ministerial Members, there are only 205—of these 41 sit for counties, 85 for boroughs, containing more than 100 voters—and 79 for boroughs containing less than 100 voters. In the opposition class there are 221 Members; of these 59 sit for counties—119 for boroughs exceeding 100 voters; and 43 for smaller boroughs. The neutral class consists of 195 Members—69 of these are county members—78 sit for larger boroughs, and 48 for smaller ones. It is therefore obvious, that as the Ministry have of staunch partizans, less by sixteen than the opposition, they owe their majorities and their continuance in office entirely to those neutral Members, who, generally supporting, do still vote against them whenever they think fit. On a motion, for instance, in 1821, which went to a direct censure of Ministers, the majority in their favour was 146. In this number there were 116 Members, who, on other occasions, showed their independence by voting against Ministers. Had only seventy of that number declared in favour of the motion, a change must have been the immediate consequence."

And this, gentle reader, is the base, corrupt House of Commons which MESSRS. BROUGHAM, HOBHOUSE, HUNT CREEVY, HUME, COBBETT, BENNETT, CARLILE, HONE FYSHE PALMER, LORD JOHN RUSSELL, DR. WATSON, LORD GREY, MR. WADDINGTON, and, indeed, all the Whigs and Radicals (for united they are, and united must be,) wish so earnestly and disinterestedly to REFORM.

THEATRICALS.

In considering the subject of theatrical amusements in BULL, we have always treated it as one of very little importance; this, we admit, has excited no small astonishment in the actors, scene-shifters, play-writers, lamp-lighters, figurantes, dress-makers, and other retainers of the public places in and about London, who are of opinion, that more importance attaches to their calling, than is either afforded, or is due, to any other profession in the country.

The art and mystery of holding "the mirror up to nature," appears to these mighty personages, and their immediate creatures, far beyond all others which are practised in Courts or Councils. Cabinets or Conclaves; and an actor, or actress, what with the feelings of extraordinary merit, the unequalled sensitiveness of evil and oppression, the rapture at popular applause, and the feverish apprehension of popular disapprobation, appears to himself or herself, one of the most distinguished personages in the nation.

We have always taken a different view of the subject—we have always considered ENGLAND to be an untheatrical nation, and LONDON of that untheatrical nation decidedly the most untheatrical part. We have been strengthened in that opinion, by finding a marked indifference towards plays and play-houses in the higher circles of society, which even has appeared to us to increase every year. This we attributed, as indeed we have said, to the difficulty of accommodating the general hour of dining to that of play-going—to the almost universal adoption of ruinurbical residences by merchants and tradesmen—to the variety of amusements provided for the higher classes; and lastly, though certainly not the least, to an alteration in popular taste.

That we have lamented this change, we most readily confess, but that we have felt it, we cannot affect to deny. The charm of private boxes, which brings the play-houses on a parallel of comfort with the opera, has its effect; but from the nature and construction of our winter-houses, its potency can be felt but by few. The fatigues, the bustle, the disarrangement of family regulations, incurred by a visit to the public part of the theatre, at an hour considerably earlier than that usually appropriated to dinner, are, by the institution of such snuggeries, avoided; and the delightful satisfaction of having ones own party, ones own chit-chat, and, if the truth must out—ones own flirtation for the evening, without fear of interruption, secured. This last object, may to some of the belles passes, who have yet no daughters to get off, appear of minor importance, but we would ask any of those dowagers who are an fait at match-making, whether there have not been more husbands caught in the dark dusty pigeon-holes of the King's Theatre, than in any other traps which have ever been set in the metropolis. We answer, unhesitatingly, yes; and their utility is now even greater than ever, for since cards have been banished, and mamas remain in ball-rooms—since English country-dances, which were formerly made up of standing still and talking, have given place to quadrilles, where the whole time and attention of the performers are occupied in "doing the figure," it has been observed that marriages, in certain circles, are events of much rarer occurrence than heretofore. Waltzing, however, has its share of the blame; for waltzing is by no means likely to make wives, inasmuch as we "should write him down an ass" who made a wife of a waltzer!

To return to our present subject, we would have it understood that, feeling as we have candidly confessed we felt, about plays, players, and play-houses, we were less assiduous in watching the stage, than, under different circumstances, we should have been, and the event to which, a few weeks since, we alluded, having broken in upon our play-going habits, we had as much forgotten the affairs of the drama, as if it had been one continued passion week, when the public places are all closed.

Judge, then, our surprize when we received letters innumerable, enquiring first, what we thought of MRS. OGILBY? our real opinion of MISS, Covent Garden, KELLY? which pantomime was the best, the first COVENT GARDEN, or the second DRURY LANE? whether NASMYTH'S scenery was superior to "ROOKER?" And one in particular requesting to know whether FARREN'S SIR PETER TEAZLE was better than YOUNG'S IAGO!—the age of MISS CHESTER? the merits of SIMPSON AND CO.? the character of AUGUSTA? and the general success of MAID MARIAN and a new opera at the rival theatre.

The interest seriously expressed by the writers of all these letters goes to convince us either that we have miscalculated upon the influence of the stage, or that being right till now, the public has recently changed its tone with respect to it; we have no hesitation in saying that the exertions of both houses during the present season richly deserve encouragement, and we shall rejoice to find that they meet it.

As to our opinion of the pantomimes, it would come now like a new year's gift at Lady-day. Covent Garden, as long as the present race of play-goers can remember, has surpassed all rivalry in this particular branch of the drama, and certainly in the instance of this season has maintained its superiority most triumphantly.

The first Drury Lane pantomime was invented by no less a person than MR. T. DIBDIN, the author of the incomparable MOTHER GOOSE; and, one would have thought, knowing his readiness, his drollery, and his application, that "what was sauce for the goose might have been sauce for the gander," and that an excellent thing would have appeared—but no—the GOG and MAGOG of Drury were as heavy as their namesakes in the city, and neither gay decorations nor beautiful scenery could keep their worships afloat.

As to "NASMYTH'S scenery," we have been always accustomed to regard MR. NASMYTH as an artist of eminence in much higher walks of the profession, and look at his beautiful specimens of theatrical landscape rather as the disportings of genius than the drudgery of scene-painting. It appeared to us that there was a carelessness in lighting the stage, which marred some of the best effects.

As for SIMPSON AND Co. it is a clever little piece, written by a clever little man, and acted in a manner certain of securing approbation to a "comedy" (as it is called) with half its merit. Of the Drury Lane opera we say nothing—"de mortuis," &c.—and there is an end of it. Augusta, in which pretty MRS. WEST acts so sweetly, is a second edition of an Opera by MORTON, under the same title produced many years ago, in which MRS. H. JOHNSON played the heroine.

As to the innumerable ladies who have appeared at Covent Garden we are really terribly troubled what to say—we own that we are particularly pleased that we did not take order by the gentlemen of the press, and be-puff and be-praise MISS KELLY up to the skies merely because she came from the same place as MISS O'NEIL. We hate and detest humbug, and, in point of fact, it never succeeds—we saw the young lady play Juliet—and we said there was promise about her—but promising and performing are, as all the world knows, totally different things.

In noticing MISS CHESTER'S LADY TEAZLE, we cannot but compliment CHARLES KEMBLE on the manner in which the SCHOOL FOR SCANDAL was presented to the public. FARREN'S SIR PETER is the perfection of the art; MACREADY'S JOSEPH, though under-acted (from indisposition, perhaps) was masterly; KEMBLE'S CHARLES admirable; and JONES, BLANCHARD, and YATES contributed, by the strenuous exertion of their talent, to make every part tell.

MISS CHESTER'S LADY TEAZLE was the novelty, and she acquitted herself ably. The charming MRS. GIBBS was herself, and MARIA never looked more lovely or was more interesting than when represented by MISS FOOTE—as a fat man who sat next us observed, "Dear heart, dear heart, there "are but few MISS FEET in this world!"

MAID MARIAN and her JOLLY FRIAR have been eminently successful; and it appears by the newspapers that a gentleman of the name of PLANK has received more money by half for adapting the novel to the stage, than the original author got for his novel. If MR. TERRY could stipulate for terms in a similar proportion for dramatizing SIR WALTER SCOTT'S works, we would advise him to try his hand for ELLISTON forthwith.

It is with great pleasure, speaking of ELLISTON, that we find he is so much recovered from his late serious illness; as an actor in comedy he is of the first class, and as a caterer for public amusement quite unrivalled. His merits are certainly duly appreciated, from his having succeeded that extremely dull and absurd person MR. PETER MOORE in the management of the concern.

Since, however, we find that our theatrical criticisms are called for by some of our best friends, we certainly shall give more attention to the subject than we have been in the habit of giving; and as we are as free and independent in this branch of our paper as in every other, we shall speak fairly and justly—

"Nothing extenuate nor aught set down in malice."

So, dances, look out!

DROPS OF COMFORT IN COLD WEATHER.

THE Macclesfield Courier communicates the following gratifying intelligence:—"We are happy to announce to that portion of the public who reside at a distance from Macclesfield, but who are interested in her prosperity, that an enormous increase has taken place in the trade and extent of this ancient town. Two considerable villages have risen within the year 1822, upon the estates of John Ryle and Thomas Smyth, Esqrs.; whilst six extensive silk factories have been finished, and four more are in a state of rapid progress towards completion. Our numerous and daily increasing population are in the enjoyment of that steady and ample employment which secures to them the possession of all the comforts and many of the luxuries of life; and we have often been gratified by the admiration expressed by strangers, at the sight of those crowds of healthy young men and beautiful women, who pour from our gigantic factories in the intervals of labour. It is inexpressibly pleasing to us to be able to add, that a stranger may find in the moral and religious conduct as much to admire, as in the personal appearance of our 'townspeople;' and we are proud to be able to afford our testimony to the peace, good order, and mutual benevolence, which prevail among all classes of the inhabitants of Macclesfield."

A very useful document has for the last two or three years appeared in the public prints about this period, under the title of "State of Crime in the Metropolis," which consisted of various statements made up by Mr. Brown, the late Governor of Newgate, shewing the number of persons of both sexes, distinguishing their ages and crimes, committed to that gaol in the previous year, and the manner in which they have been disposed of. By these statements it appeared that the number of criminals committed to Newgate had decreased in the year 1821, compared to the previous year, by 236; the number committed in 1820 being 2,360, and in 1821 only 2,124.—No similar statement for the year 1822 will, it is understood, make its appearance. The present Governor of Newgate, Mr. Wontner, amidst his various occupations in entering upon his new situation, has omitted to collect together the necessary materials from time to time, and the opportunity is now most probably gone by.

As Newgate is the gaol of the county as well as the city, the numbers above quoted included the Middlesex in addition to the London committals. The want, therefore, of a return for 1822 prevents further inquiry respecting the decrease of crime for the present. But it may be pursued with regard to the City of London alone, from the information contained in the accounts annually made up by Mr. Teague, the Governor of the Giltspur-street Compter; the sum total of his returns for the last three years is as follows:—

PRISONERS CHARGED AT THE MANSION-HOUSE.

In the Years	1820.	1821.	1822.
Felony	560	413	362
Assault	189	184	146
Disorderly	453	454	538
Vagrants	809	596	219
Total	2,011	1,647	1,286

AT THE GUILDHALL JUSTICE ROOM.

In the Years	1820.	1821.	1822.
Felony	921	533	526
Assault	462	517	629
Disorderly	1,125	1,422	1,431
Vagrants	178	101	134
	2,386	2,573	2,720
Mansion House	2,011	1,647	1,286
Grand Total	4,397	4220	4,006

From these statements it will be observed, that there has been upon the average of the last two years, a decrease annually in the number of persons, charged with offences in the City of London, of about 200.

SALT DUTY.—On Monday last, according to Act of Parliament, the duty on salt was reduced from 15s. to 2s. per bushel, being a reduction of 13s. In London, in consequence of a recommendation from the retailers of salt, that under existing circumstances, another shilling should be taken from the selling price, the Lord Mayor ordered the selling price of the bushel of salt to be reduced from 20s. to 6s.; half do. to 3s.; the peck to 1s. 6d.; the pound to 1½d.; the half do. the quarter ditto, to a ½d.

FROM IRELAND.

A private letter from Cork says "that during the mas holidays, the best turkeys in that market have be at 1s. 6d. each; and all sorts of meat proportionably

FROM STOCKPORT.

GOOD OLD TIMES.—The reduction of the duty on be most sensibly felt by our poor inhabitants, and indu other class. This useful article, which has been re 4d. per lb. is now selling by the dealers in this town and though this reduction will leave the same profit sold at the former price, yet we are informed that s the Manchester dealers have been endeavouring to pe the shop-keepers here to retail it at 1½d.; in this happy to say, they have not succeeded. Very large have been received, and one of our principal dealers Brownhill, in the Market-place, is determined to s 1d. per pound.

FROM PLYMOUTH.

It is the custom among the peasants of this country a pig well fattened and fit for the salt-tub prepare Christmas-day; but the 5th of January, the day on wh salt-duty was repealed, falling so shortly after "pig day," the custom was this year postponed, and on last, many hundred persons, welcomed by the ringing church bells, came into this town to purchase salt at duced price; added to these, the town threw in such demands upon the dealers in salt, that such a day of b was never known. Nothing can exceed the manifeste joy and gratitude among all families and persons. Sal selling here in our market as low as 1d. per pound, the shops generally for 1½d.

FROM THE NORTH.

GRETNA.—At this far-famed temple of Hymen, Mr. Elliot, one of the officiating priests, has married no le 162 couple since new year's day, 1822.

FROM SOUTHAMPTON.

The improvements which have taken place in this during the last twelve months, are surprising. One houses have been built, and most of them occupied; line of the canal from Hanover-buildings, has been fi and converted into gardens, houses, or for mercantile poses; trees have been planted, to give the environs an able shade in summer, and we anticipate further imp ments.

FROM YORKSHIRE.

As an instance of the improvement which the trade of town (Sheffield) has latterly attained, we may refer to diminished assessments in support of our parochial poor. expenditure for the year 1820 amounted to 37,467l. 7s. while that for the year just closed was only 20,411l. 4s. the space, therefore, of two years, the assessment for the of the poor in the township of Sheffield has undergone duction of upwards of seventeen thousand pounds!

FROM CHESHIRE.

REDUCTION OF THE SALT TAX.—We congratulate readers, and more especially our farming friends, on th lition of the greater part of the duty on Salt. This essential," which was as high as 15s. per bushel, is now 3s. 6d.—thus enabling it to be retailed at one penny per and under. We know that on many farms in the imm neighbourhood of Chester, this reduction will take off a then from the tenant of from 20l. to 40l. per annum, some instances more; a most seasonable relief, therefore, it be to the agriculturist in the present state of his a Happily, however, the prospect generally brightens, and hope a short period will restore the farming interest to rank it ought to hold in society.

And so on indeed ad infinitum.—Poor wretched ENGL what is to be done for you?

At the Buckingham Sessions, William Harris and John Gra were put to the bar for violently assaulting William Bateman, keeper to the Duke of Buckingham, in the parish of Stowe. night of the 30th Nov. Bateman was watching a preserve near Mill Spiney, accompanied by two men named Varney and Lau He saw nets placed on a gate, and near them the prisoners and who was admitted evidence. They were armed with bludgeons had a terrier dog with them. He asked what they were about Harris said, "We want nothing, let us go about our business, an go about yours;" but Bateman told him that would not do for The prisoners said, "Well, we are not going to be frightened;" Harris struck at him, but missed his blow; he grappled with and threw him on his back, and then called for his assistants they were met by Lewis, and knocked down several times, and in a dangerous state on the ground; they then returned to Bat who was holding him on the ground; they knocked him off, and beating him with their bludgeons or sticks; Bateman said, murder me." The prisoners told him if he would go and lie do the side of Varney and Laurence they would not; he did so, and out a pocket pistol, which they took from him. The pistol was duced, and sworn to by Bateman; it was found in a brook no spot where the transaction took place. Lewis said they called o and asked him to go with them, and said they would "learn him and he should share their game. Guilty—seven years transporta

At the Durham Sessions, on Tuesday se'nnight, a true bi found against John Forsyth, Thomas French, Henry Hawks Thomas Elsender, keelmen, for a riot at Stella, on the 3d of last, to which they all pleaded guilty. In the present instance, had been a most tumultuous and riotous assembly of these men the premeditated purpose of preventing the keelmen of To Main colliery, belonging to Messrs. Dunn, from resuming their Forsyth and French had been particularly violent; Hawkes had a somewhat less prominent part; and Elsender was not pro have committed any distinct act of violence, but he was one of individuals composing this mob. It appeared from the testimony Dunn, that the conduct of the mob of keelmen, both in langua gestures, had been violent in the extreme; that they had resis of defiance even to the armed seamen and marines who had been under the command of Lieut. Stewart, and drawn up on the sh support the civil power, and that the reading of the Riot Act ha duced no other effect than an increase of the tumult. On the ing day, the prisoners were sentenced to be confined to hard for different terms, from 6 to 18 months.

At the Devon Sessions, Robert Potter, an apprentice boy, dicted for stealing some money, the property of a servant livi the same master, in the parish of Colleigh, near Honiton. I case of suspicion only, as no money was found on the boy, there any other fact to prove his being the thief. After three other means had been resorted to, the parish constable, name rows, was sent for, who was guilty of the following atrocious to extort a confession: he tied small cords round the thumbs boy, by which he suspended him to a peg in the wall, with h just touching the ground; and whilst in this state the day Christmas day, he poured cold water down the boy's sleeves wrists, so as to run over his person. Under this torture he ex some sort of confession, and the boy was committed to prison; course this could not avail in a Court of Justice, and there other evidence. The boy was instantly acquitted, and in his tu about to be the prosecutor, but the matter was compromised constable paying him thirteen pounds.

PRINCE'S CELEBRATED RUSSIA OIL is so improved with an extra valuable ingredient, through which it has made the Russia Oil the greatest nourisher and preserver to the hair in the Universe, will make it grow thick and long, and prevent its falling off or ever turning grey, and is such a nourisher to the roots of the hair, that if it even has begun to turn grey, will restore it again to its natural colour, and if used often it will never turn grey again. It is sure to clear the scurf, from infancy to old age, and when pressing with it, will always keep the Head and Hair clean and beautiful. Gentlemen who have lost their hair, and have the least sign of roots of hair remaining, by using regularly, for a few months, Prince's Improved Russia Oil, with the extra valuable ingredient, will be sure to restore it, and produce a fine head of hair, which hundreds have experienced.

It is no wonder that Ladies and Gentlemen have complained of late of the Russia Oil not being of service to the hair, as they have found out that unprincipled persons have sold them counterfeits.

Ladies and Gentlemen will be particular, as Impostors in Great Britain, France, and other different parts of the Continent, have made the covers of the Counterfeit Russia Oil so much like the genuine, and some, more to deceive, falsely have printed on their counterfeit covers "the original," or "and when Russia Oil," and some are so daring, although they know it is punishable, to put the Original Proprietor's Name. Therefore purchasers should be cautious, and have it of the Proprietor, or of respectable Venders.

Ask for Prince's Improved Russia Oil, with the extra Ingredient, and observe "Prince" on the wrapper and seals, and his address, "A. Prince, No. 9, Poland-street, Oxford-street, London," is on the cover of each bottle; without it is not genuine, and cannot answer the purpose. The cost is but five shillings, or a large bottle containing five ounces, one pound, which is a saving.

Sold by the sole Proprietor, A. Prince, No. 9, Poland-street, Oxford-street near the Pantheon; and by Mr. Smyth, Perfumer to His Majesty, New Bond-street; Hendrie, Titchborne-street; and by most principal Perfumers and Medicine Venders.

Caution.—There are persons who, finding they cannot now impose by selling counterfeit Russia Oil, it being now well known that Prince's is the original and genuine, are there are several Hair-dressers and others who pretend to sell Bears' Grease; but it is well known in Russia that Bears' Grease alone is too harsh for the Hair, and makes the Hair fall off; the truth of this is well known to every one who knows the Emperor Alexander, as he lost his hair at an early age; but Prince's celebrated Russia Oil, particularly with the extra Ingredient, is a mixture of oils, and is always like a jelly; and it is proved by every one who has given it a fair trial, has found it the only article that actually preserves and promotes the hair in the universe.

LATEST NEWS.

An express arrived from Paris yesterday bringing private letters, dated Thursday, in which is stated, that after a Cabinet Council held at the Thuilleries, on Wednesday, couriers were dispatched to all the principal courts of Europe, announcing, it is said, the determination of his most Christian Majesty to declare war against Spain. Three regiments of infantry of the Royal Guards, nearly 7,000 strong, and the same number of cavalry, about 2,000 strong, have received orders to march in a few days to the Spanish frontier.—The Spanish Ambassador the Duke de San Lorenzo had sent out invitations to a grand ball: the preparations have been countermanded, and the Duke is said to have demanded his passports.

In the sitting of the 12th, the Deputation of the Cortes proceeded from that assembly to wait on his Majesty with the message. On their return, General Riego, who was the President of the Deputation, stated that his Majesty had received the message with the greatest pleasure and satisfaction. The Secretary of State rose and said, that the Government had already declared to the Charge d'Affaires of Vienna, Berlin, and Petersburgh, that it would explain its sentiments and principles to all Europe. The Government would fulfil its promise, and he would say more—it was now employed in executing it.

In our second page we stated that the Austrian, Russian, and Prussian Ambassadors at Madrid had demanded their passports from the Spanish Secretary San Miguel. The answer to the Russian demand was in these terms:—"I have received the very insolent note which your Excellency transmitted to me yesterday the 10th inst. and limiting myself, for my sole reply, to stating that you have shamefully abused (perhaps through ignorance) the law of nations, which is always respectable in the eyes of the Spanish Government, I transmit, by order of his Majesty, the passports you desire, hoping that your Excellency will be pleased to leave this capital with as little delay as possible."—To Austria the reply is less resentful, but expressing, in plain language, defiance:—"I have received the note which your Excellency was pleased to remit to me, dated yesterday, the 9th, and having now only to say the Government of his Catholic Majesty is indifferent whether it maintains relations or not with the Court of Vienna. I send you by royal order the passports which you have required.—I am, &c."

In the Court of King's Bench, yesterday, Mr. Walford made an application on behalf of Moses Martin, who is charged with felony, to have his client admitted to bail under the following circumstances: Martin is a confectioner, and on one occasion called at the prosecutor's house with some of his puffs and sweets, of which the prosecutor's wife became a purchaser to the amount of 3l. In about a month after he called again in hopes of another order, when the prosecutor's wife charged him with having stolen twenty shillings at his last visit. The Justice dismissed the prisoner. The prosecutor preferred his bill before the Grand Jury, when a true bill was found; and Martin attended at the sessions to take his trial. A friend hinted to him that the prosecutor was about to apply to the Court to postpone the trial for a time, and to have him committed in the interim. To avoid this he withdrew, and now applied to their Lordships to interpose, and to prevent the prosecutor in his object, namely, inclosing the unfortunate pastry-cook in the county gaol of Surrey. The Court granted the Learned Counsel's application.

Some of our cotemporaries have of late inserted statements of increased exertions in our Naval Arsenals, which have a tendency to excite apprehensions of hostility being expected by His Majesty's Government; we are authorised distinctly to state, that there has been no such increase of exertion, and that there has not been the smallest tendency to warlike preparations at any of the Dock-yards. —Courier.

Meetings to petition for Parliamentary Reform have been held at Hereford, in Somersetshire, York, &c. Other meetings are in agitation preparatory to the opening of Parliament.

Among other attractive novelties in the "New Monthly Magazine," are a Series of Papers giving a description of the principal Galleries of Art in the British Metropolis. The Number for February will contain an interesting account of the Marquis of Stafford's Gallery, at Cleveland House.

A candid examination of professional pretensions is only to be feared by those who are conscious of incapacity. Messrs. Goss and Co. Members of the Royal College of Surgeons, confine their studies to the treatment of such disorders as arise from nervous debility. Their work "The Ægis of Life," in full explanation of these subjects, may be had at No. 20, Paternoster-row, or, at any Booksellers. Medicines can be forwarded to any part, however distant, on receiving a Bank note.—3, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street, and 7, Jermyn-str. St. James's, London.

BY THE KING'S ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.—THE ECONOMICAL AND UNIVERSAL LAMP.—The Patentee assures the Public, that in this Invention the grand essentials, brilliancy, sweetness, certainty, economy, and simplicity, are brought to the utmost perfection, and the principle alike applicable to Lamps for every use, and light in any degree nicely suited to the occasion. The Chamber Lamp gives a brilliant and invariable light for any time required, bearing a swift motion. Infinitely superior to a bed candle, and the expense is only that of a twilight. The price, on neat Japan Stands, 10s.; and in elegant bronze, suited to the chambers of the affluent, 15s. to 21s. Including wick (an auxiliary to the patent), for seven years' consumption. Equally perfect are all the other minor lights for servants' uses in the kitchen, nursery, laundry, or to convey about the house: a valuable acquisition in all families (particularly in large establishments.) The nobility and affluent, possessing mansions of great value, will feel the comfort of security from fire in the use of these Lamps. The Study Lamps are worthy the attention of Clerical and other professional Gentlemen, whose time is much occupied in writing or reading, or Ladies to work at the needle, by being light and very portable, free from smoke or smell, and will burn a long evening, without trimming. With the like advantages, they are adapted to all other pedestals, varying in form and elegance, and giving the light of from one to six candles, for the dining-table, sideboard, bracket, mantle-piece, sun-light, &c.; and in glass Grecian hanging lamps for the Hall, Staircase, Passage, Conservatory, Drawing-room, &c. In all which, the small chambers necessary to contain the oil leave a latitude for superior lightness and elegance.

Sold for the Patentee, by T. PEARCE and Co. 269, facing the front of St. Clement's Church, in the Strand, who, to secure the reputation from the effects of adulterated or inferior oil, are bound to sell none but pure spermaceti.—Letters, (post paid) from any part of the kingdom, will be promptly attended to

77, OXFORD-STREET, NEARLY OPPOSITE THE PANTHEON.

AS the Affairs of the late MR. T. CRAIG, Linen-Draper, Silk-Mercer, Hosier, &c. were obliged to be settled at Christmas, J. D'OYLY, who has lived in the above house upwards of seven years, begs to inform his Friends, the Nobility, Gentry, and Public in general, that he has purchased a Share in the business, which will in future be carried on for the joint benefit of the widow and family of the deceased and himself, under the firm of CRAIG and D'OYLY; and as J. D. has the advantage of a large capital, he is enabled at at all times to purchase his goods for ready cash; the advantage of which, in the present distressed state of the manufacturing districts, is past description, and being determined to sell for a very small profit, in order to secure a liberal share of the favours of the public, which have been so many years honoured the above establishment with a decided preference. C. and D. also beg to observe that the remaining part of the old Stock, consisting of every article in plain Linen Drapery, Silk Mercery, Hosiery, &c. they are resolved to clear off immediately, at such prices as must, at sight, convince the purchaser of their decided cheapness. Full yard wide Russia Sheeting 8½d a yd; yd. and qr. wide, 15d.; Fo. Irish, 15d.; very good, 13d.; new pieces of half yd. and half wide Scotch Manks and German Hollands; ell-wide Long Cloths, 6d. a yd; quite unbleached do 7½d. a yd.; power loom do. 9½d.; yd. wide Cambric Muslins, 10s. 9d. the piece, containing 12 yards, worth 14s 6d.; do. yd. and half wide, 17s. 6d. worth 24s.; yd. wide Jaconet, 8d.; yd. and half wide do. 12d.; very fine do. 15d.; with a large assortment of Irish Linens, Lawns, French Cambrics, Prints, Stuffs, Blankets, Counterpanes, Flannels, Pelisse Cloths, Bath Cloaking, Cotton and Silk Hose, Plain and Figured Gros de Naples, French width Sarsnets, Poplins, Norwich Crapes, Bombasins, &c. &c.; with a large stock of Damask Table Cloths every size, from 1¼ to 9 yds long.—C and D. beg it may be particularly observed that they have no connection with the next house, or any other in London.—77, Oxford-street, nearly opposite the Pantheon.

AN ENTIRELY NEW SYSTEM OF FURNISHING, patronized by the principal Nobility and Gentry in the Kingdom, whereby a Drawing Room, Dining Room, or Library may be furnished, from the most simple to the most costly and superb style, at not more than half the prices many Houses are now obtaining. MILES and EDWARDS being Manufacturers of Town Chintzes, Merino Tabberets, Damasks, and Moreens, private Families have not only the opportunity of making their selections from a new and matchless Stock, but of saving all intermediate profits, and likewise of purchasing such articles as are warranted of the very best qualities and colours.—For POST-POST and TENT BED FURNITURE they challenge England to produce so complete an Assortment, consisting of the most beautiful Tea, Buff, and Blue ground Chintzes, at nearly half their original prices; and,—For FRENCH BEDS, M. and E. have manufactured a particular description of Furniture, which, for simplicity of style and durability of colours, cannot be equalled.—For the DRAWING ROOM, LIBRARY, DINING ROOM, BOUDOIR, &c. they undertake to supply the public with Damasks, Merino Tabberets, Moreens, London printed Chintzes, &c. on such terms and in such immense variety as no other Establishment in the Kingdom can boast of.—MILES and EDWARDS think it may be better to state, that they have no connexion whatever with any other House.—No. 134, Oxford street (between Hollies-street, and Cavendish-street.)

BEACON FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY, No. 8, Chatham-place, Blackfriars.—A DIVIDEND, at the rate of 5 per Cent. up to the 31st of December last, is now in the course of PAYMENT to the Proprietors of Shares in the above Company, and may be received either at the above Office, or from any of their respective agents.

IMPERIAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, Sun Court, Cornhill, and St. James's Street.—Capital £750,000.

Lives insured with this Company are allowed to pass by sea from one part of the United Kingdom to another; and also in time of peace to pass in King's Ships and Packets or other decked Vessels, between British Ports and such Foreign Ports as lie between Ostend and Havre de Grace, both included, without extra Premium, and without being subjected to the inconvenience of applying for the special leave of the Directors, as heretofore required by the usual conditions of Life Policies.

By Order of the Board,
JOHN GREY, Actuary.

Persons insured for the whole term of Life will participate periodically in Two-third Parts of the Profits of the Company, by additions to the sums insured. Rates and Conditions may be had by applying at either of the Company's Offices. A liberal Agency is allowed to professional men effecting Insurances.

NORWICH UNION.—The ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of the NORWICH UNION FIRE INSURANCE SOCIETY, was held on the 14th inst. at the Office, in Surrey Street, Norwich, at which it appeared that the affairs of the Society were in a most satisfactory state; and that the property insured amounted to more than forty millions, which places the Society third in the List of Fire Insurance Offices in the United Kingdom.

The Norwich Union Fire Insurance Society has its head Office in Surrey-street, Norwich, and transacts business in London at 16, Waterloo-place, Pall Mall, and 21, Birchin-lane, Cornhill.

It has no connection with an Office advertised under the same name at 38 Bridge-street, Blackfriars.

EYRE and KEENE respectfully acquaint the Nobility and Gentry, they have just published their List of Articles for CHARITABLE PURPOSES, which are too numerous for an advertisement; the price of each Article is stated in the List, and may be had by appyling at their Warehouse 111, New Bond-street.—N. B. A great variety of Ladies and Gentlemens, Cloaks, Hats, or unlined, of Gambroons, Camlets, and Scotch Plaids of all the different Clans.

TO THE FASHIONABLE WORLD.—DISON, WILLSON, and CO. respectfully invite Ladies, patronesses of taste and fashion, to an inspection of their new, costly and extensive Stock of FOREIGN and BRITISH LACE, which, for elegance and variety, is not to exceed any hitherto offered. From correspondents at Paris, Brussels, &c. they are supplied with the newest designs of foreign taste, thus forming in one mart the unique productions of continental with the chaste originals of British costume. From the delusive advertisements of fictitious manufacturers, professing to sell imitation Lace at low prices, D. W. and Co. hold it their duty to apprize ladies that, having a Manufactory in Brussels, they can and will offer real Point à l'Aiguille and Brussels fabrics considerably lower than any badly executed imitations, fully assured the superiority of texture and uniform correctness of design will be apparent on inspection, and a single trial will establish their durability in wear. They have just received from their manufactory a splendid collection of real Point and Brussels dresses, squares, scarfs, veils, mantellas, caps, &c.; a large assortment of Blonde, Mechlin, and Valenciennes laces, which, in addition to an immense variety of article in the British Gossamer Laces, (commonly known by the name of Urling's Lace) they are determined to sell at the lowest prices. D. W. and Co. beg leave to submit to ladies' attention several novelties for the season, peculiar to their house, viz. the Verona Tippet, for Opera and evening costume: Robes a la Diane and Zephyrine; Coifs Parisienne; Sleeves Dejeune; Quadrille Sashes; Aprons; Reticules; Purses, &c. calculated for the frequenters of Almack's, Willis's, &c.—N.B. Lace Dresses from 21. 10s. to 75 guineas.—No. 237, Regent-street, facing the Argyle Rooms.

SILKS SELLING OFF.—ANSELM SHEARS, gratefully impressed with the favours which for 14 years he has received from the Royal Family, Nobility, and Gentry, respectfully informs them, that, in consequence of the Lease of his House having expired at Christmas last, he is compelled to SELL OFF the whole of his valuable Stock, comprising not only an immense variety of Fashionable Silks, Poplins, Cashmeres, Norwich Crapes, Gros de Naples, Ducapes, Florence Silks, Shaded Sarsnets, Shawls, Scarfs, &c. but those new and beautiful Patterns at present weaving in the Looms, all of which must be SOLD without the least RESERVE. The Looms contain several Thousand Yards of Striped Silk Tabarets for Dressing-rooms Curtains and Furniture at 8s. 3d. per yd. usual price 11s. 6d. No Parcel can be sent, or Patterns cut.—All Persons indebted to the Concern are solicited to make their payments. —Anselm Shears, No. 11, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden.

PARLIAMENT ASSEMBLED—It has ever been our study to provide novelties for that approaching period, for the invitation of families, who may be now about returning to town, to the inspection of an immense stock of FASHIONABLE SILKS, superior in choice to that of any former year, in the most exquisite splendour of modern colours. Rich single Gros de Naples, 2s. 6d. to 2s. 9d. a yd; double do. the most pleasing shades, superior to French, 3s. 6d. to 4s. 6d.; rich Ducapes, 3 quarters wide, 3s. 9d. to 4s. 9d.; 600 pieces of very rich Levantine Silk, French width, at 2s. 6d. to 3s. 6d. SEWELL and CROSS beg to observe that these Silks are not Sarsnets called Gros de Naples and Levantines; they are the real Gros de Naples, made entirely of double Silks, got up under their own immediate inspection, an article which must ever be dear to the British manufactory; with 300 pieces of rich Stripe Sarsnets, purchased of a Lutestring maker, 2s. 2d. to 2s. 6d.: ditto, Persian Silks, for linings, every shade, 1s. 4d. to 1s. 7d.; 90 pieces of wide Silk Gauzes, every colour, 11½d. and 1s.: ditto, Gossamer Gauzes, for turbans, 1s. 2d. per yard, commonly sold at 2s. 6d.; 80 pieces of black and white Sattins for slips, 2s. 6½d. per yard; very stout ditto, for dresses, 3s. and 3s. and 4d.; 80 bales of ell-wide Bath Long Cloths, got up entirely free from dress, measuring 25 yards, for 15s. 6d. the piece; a beautiful fine article, in real Madras cloth, 25 yards, for 20s.; these cloths are particularly suited for family use, and much recommended to ladies going to the East or West Indies; 30 boxes of French Cambric Handkerchiefs, of the improved bleach, (a great bargain) beginning at 20s. the dozen to the finest quality, made at 21. A discount of 5 per cent. allowed to the trade by purchasing an entire box, which contains 25 dozen; 200 dozen of Angola and Persia tippets, all at 2s. each; and 400 Braganza Shawls, 8s. and 8s. 6d.; 20 bales of Russia Sheetings, measuring 3 yds wide, which prevents the necessity of a seam, 2s. 10d. and 3s. with an endless variety of Damask Table Cloths and Napkins, for family use; 200 pieces of coloured Moreens, for furnitures, 2s. 2d. at SEWELL and CROSS'S, 42, Frith-street, Corner of Old Compton-street, Soho-square.—Ladies bringing the Advertisement with them, may depend on having every article at the prices advertised, which is contrary to the unpleasant mode so frequently adopted in the West part of London

DIED.

On Thursday night, the 16th inst. in Hill-street, Berkeley-square, deeply lamented, Maria Isabella, the wife of James Cornwallis Mann, Esq. of Place, in Kent. Her pure, religious, and strict piety were most exemplary; charitable disposition endeared her to all around her; her conduct as a wife virtuous, affectionate, and correct, and her attentions and her care of her and religious principles, and the sensible education of her children, were unremitting; while her well-informed mind, her elegant manners, and many talents and accomplishments, rendered her an ornament to the society with whom she resided.

In a few days will be published, in post 8vo.

THE ORLANDO INAMORATO; abridged in Prose, from the Italian of Berni; and interspersed with Stanzas in the same metre as the original. By WM. STEWART ROSE.

☞ It is curious that the Orlando Inamorato, though necessary to the understanding of the story of the Orlando Furioso, which is a continuation of it, has never been translated into English; if we except a mere outline of the main action, which gives little notion of its innumerable episodes, and none of its poetry, or the spirit in which it is conceived. The present translation is an attempt to supply such a deficiency.

Printed for Wm. Blackwood, Edinburgh; and T. Cadell, Strand, London.

On the 1st of March will be published, in one volume post 8vo.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—The rude and unskilful attempts constantly made to supply those substitutes for the masticatory organ, and the disgust which delicacy suffers from the unpleasantry attending them when permanently fixed, have deterred many from adopting the aid and comfort they are capable of affording, independently of the assistance they may contribute to digestion and consequent health. The ingenious application of mechanical science will enable us to obviate all these inconveniences, and allow the wearer at all times to keep the mouth in a state of perfect cleanliness, and to perform the functions of mastication, articulation, &c. with decided ease and comfort.—Mr. NICHOLLS begs to state, that he is in constant attendance from ten to four, and will be happy to give ocular demonstration of the comforts derived from his system, under every circumstance of simple and complicated deficiency.—15 Fleet-street.

POYAIS, NORTH AMERICA.

BY immediate application at any of the Land Offices, GRANTS of LAND in the above territory may still be obtained at 4s. per acre; but NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that upon the 10th of next month, the price will be advanced to four shillings and eightpence per acre, and a progressive advance will be continued.

The aspect of Poyais is mountainous, the "land is high, almost to the sea side, the hills rising gently like the swell of the sea,"—the soil of the woody lands is every where excellent, being a deep black mould, or rich brick clay." The low land, savannahs, or open lawns, instead of being unhealthy or swampy, generally consist of a mixture of light sand and rich mould. "Mosquitoes (or gnats) and sand flies are in general scarce, large insects being without either." The climate is mild and salubrious, and Europeans generally retain their health and activity to a good old age. Horses, black cattle, pigs, poultry, &c. are very numerous, and may at present be bought for stock at a very moderate price. Every information as to the title-deeds, the security of purchasers, &c. may be obtained by applying personally, or by letter (post paid) to the Land Agents in London, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Inverness, Stirling, or Hamburgh.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, JAN. 25.—Yesterday morning, several Cabinet couriers were sent off from the English, Russian, and Austrian Embassies. At noon, one was dispatched by his Excellency the Minister for Foreign relations. It is said that all the colonels of regiments, and of the first Major, who are in Paris, had, yesterday morning, a conference with the Minister at War, who had appointed an interview with them. Strong detachments of regiments in the capital have quitted Paris today. The 3d battalions of each regiment of the Royal Guard, have, it is said, received orders to hold themselves in readiness for their departure. Three regiments of cavalry have received similar orders.—The clerks in the different offices of the Minister at War, and particularly of the artillery, were employed the day before yesterday and yesterday till very late at night.

The different corps of the Royal Guard are now engaged in completing the detachments which are to repair to the Arrayof Observation. Count de Bulgari, the late Russian Ambassador in Spain, arrived on Saturday last in Paris, and soon after called upon the Russian Minister, Count Pozzo di Borgo.

"We (Journal des Debats) gave, on the 24th inst. the three letters of the Charges d'Affaires of Russia, Prussia, and Austria to M. San Miguel, the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Spanish Government, as well as the answer of that Minister. The following is a new document to add to those official Notes:—

Copy of the Letter addressed by the Count de Bulgari, the Russian Charge d'Affaires, to M. San Miguel, dated Madrid, Jan. 13.

"SIR—I have received the Note which your Excellency transmitted to me, dated the day before yesterday. The respect which I owe to the forms and principles admitted and consecrated by all civilized nations, prevents me not only from replying to that Note, but even from making its contents known to my Government. I hasten, therefore, to send it back to your Excellency, for the eyes of the Emperor, my master, must not be disgusted by the perusal of a production which I abstain from characterizing, and in which his Imperial Majesty and Europe would look in vain for the slightest evidence of a Government which knows how to respect itself.—I have the honour to be, &c."

JAN. 28.—The Minister for Foreign Affairs has written to M. de San Lorenzo to inform him that his passports are ready. The Duke de San Lorenzo, the Spanish Ambassador, was not present at the opening of the Session of the Chamber. When the case of the Duke de San Lorenzo was called on this morning, the King's Advocate read a letter from the Keeper of the Seals, which declared that all bonds of amity having been broken between the Governments of France and Spain, the cause could not be pleaded. It was urged by the Duke's Counsel that this communication ought to come from the Minister for Foreign Affairs. The President declared this pretension unusual and improper, and the cause was passed over.

ROYAL SITTING, FOR THE OPENING OF THE SESSION OF 1823.

At ten o'clock the gates were opened to the public, and in a moment the upper galleries and benches reserved for the ladies, behind the places exclusively appropriated to the Peers of France and the Deputies, were full. At one his Majesty took his seat, having Monsieur on his right, the Duke d'Angoulême on his left, and the Duke of Orleans at a little distance. M. Cambray (Chancellor of France), the Prince Talleyrand (Grand Chamberlain), and the other Great Officers of the Household, occupied chairs appropriated to them. The Duchesses d'Angouleme and Berri, and the Duchess of Orleans, were seated in the richly decorated gallery assigned for them.—The whole assembly stood up, uncovered. His Majesty invited the Peers to be seated, and the Chancellor, in his name, conveyed the same invitation to the Deputies. His Majesty, after uncovering for a moment, and bowing to the assembly, delivered the following speech:—

"GENTLEMEN,—The duration of the two last Sessions, the little time which they have left you at liberty, would have made me desire to be able to retard the opening of the present, but the regular vote of the expenses of the State is an advantage of which you have felt the whole value, and I have naturally depended on the same devotedness to preserve it, which had been necessary to me to obtain it.—The internal situation of the kingdom is improved; the action of justice faithfully (loyalement) exercised by the Juries, wisely and courageously directed by the Magistrates, has put an end to the plots and attempts at revolt which the hope of impunity emboldened.—I have terminated with the Holy See the convention necessary for the circumscription of the new dioceses, the establishment of which was authorised by the law. All the churches are going to be furnished with their pastors; and the clergy of France, completely organised, will contribute to call down on us the blessings of Providence. I have provided by ordinances for what was required, by economy in the expenses, and order in keeping the accounts. My Ministers will submit to the sanction of the law the amount of the expences of 1821. They will furnish you with a statement of the receipts and expenses of 1822, and that of the presumed wants and resources of 1824. It results from these documents that all the anterior expenses being paid, including even those which the military preparations have hitherto rendered necessary, we enter on the exercise of 1823 with 40,000,000 beyond the credit opened for the year, and that the Budget of 1824 may present the balance of the receipt with the expenditure without requiring the employment of this reserve.—France owed to Europe the example of a prosperity which nations can only obtain from a return to religion, to legitimacy, to order, to true liberty; this salutary example she now gives. But Divine Justice permits, that after having for a long time made other nations experience the terrible effects of our discords, we shall be ourselves exposed to the dangers which similar calamities produce in a neighbouring nation. I have tried every thing to guarantee the security of my people, and to preserve Spain herself from extreme misfortunes (des derniers malheurs.) The infatuation with which the representations made at Madrid have been rejected, leave little hope of preserving peace. I have ordered the recall of my Minister. A hundred thousand French, commanded by a Prince of my family, by him whom my heart takes pleasure in calling my Son, are ready to march, invoking the God of St. Louis to preserve the Throne of Spain to a descendant of Henry IV. to preserve that fine kingdom from its ruin, and to reconcile it with Europe.—Our stations are going to be reinforced in the places where our maritime commerce has need of this protection. Squadrons will be appointed to cruize where our arrivals might be disturbed.—If war is inevitable, I shall exert all my care to narrow its limits and to shorten its duration. It will be undertaken only to conquer peace, which the state of Spain would render impossible. Let Ferdinand VII. be free to give to his people the institutions which they can receive only from him, and which in assuring their repose, would dispel the just apprehensions of France; from that moment hostilities will cease; I take before you, gentlemen, the solemn engagement to this effect.—It was my duty to place before you the state of our affairs abroad. It was for me to deliberate—I have done so maturely —I have consulted the dignity of my Crown—the honour and the safety of France. We are Frenchmen, Gentlemen—we shall always be agreed to defend such interests."

A private letter from Bayonne, dated the 23d inst. states, that all the Ambassadors of the Northern Powers were in that town on that day. In the course of their journey from Madrid they were several times insulted by the Descamisados. A Spanish Colonel, sent by his Government, passed through Bayonne, on the evening of the 22d, for Paris.—Gazette de France.

The 7th regiment of infantry leaves Paris this day for the Army of Observation. On the 3d inst. the 2d regiment of Cuirassiers, and the regiment of the Dragoons of the Guard, will march for Bayonne.—The Marquis de Lauriston is making preparations for his departure for the army.

On Monday night the English Ambassador dispatched couriers for London, Madrid, Vienna, Frankfort, and Amsterdam.

BAYONNE, JAN. 18.—The Patriarch of Lisbon has at length, it is said, found a suitable retreat for the unfortunate Queen of Portugal. It is said, that a merchant has made an offer of his fine country house, situated some distance from Bayonne. This confirms the report already spread, that the unfortunate Queen means definitively to fix her residence in France.—Journal des Debats.

MADRID, JAN. 10.—The plan of a Decree has been presented to the Cortes for the regulation of the Spanish clergy. The Report of the Committee to which the subject was referred, proposes that there shall be a Bishop for every civil province, and an Archbishop for every judicial province, which will make 14 Archbishops, and 51 Bishops, with a corresponding number of Curates, Priests, Deacons, and Sub-Deacons, as the inferior dignitaries of the hierarchy.

JAN. 16.—It is asserted that the Minister of War will soon present to the Cortes, a project for the organization of two foreign legions; the first under the name of the French Legion, and the other under that of the Italian Legion. It is also said that there is a talk of fortifying Madrid with entrenchments, but such a project would be at least ridiculous. If the danger should reach as far as the capital, the army will retire behind the Sierra-Morena, to carry on a Guerilla warfare.

IRELAND.

LIMERICK, JAN. 18.—On Thursday night last, two houses and a quantity of hay and oats, the produce of forty acres, belonging to Edmund and Patrick Merrane, were burned on the lands of Garrycurra, barony of Bunratty, county Clare, part of the estate of Lord George Quin. The fire, it is supposed, was malicious.—Scarcely a night passes, that fellows are not perambulating the roads in the neighbourhood of Edwardstown, in this county, and breaking into the houses of peaceable inhabitants, who will not conform to their illegal regulations.—On Friday evening, an armed party entered the house of Mr. Fitzgerald, at Cannigh, county Kerry, and after beating the family, robbed the house of five guns, and a considerable sum of money. Mr. F. having alarmed his neighbours, a pursuit was set up after the fellows, who made a desperate resistance, but Mr. F. and his friends succeeded in taking two of them, who are from the County Wexford—the gang had arrangements made for attacking several other houses in Kerry.—On Friday last, between the hours of six and seven o'clock, as the postboy was carrying the mail from Kilmalock to Kildorrery, he was met at Fanningtown-cross, near Ardpatrick, by three armed men, who demanded his arms and mail-bags, and presented a case of pistols at him —the boy was pulled off his horse, and searched for arms; fortunately he had none, they being taken by the insurgents last winter; they then took the bag off the horse, and swore the boy not to make any alarm, and made off towards the demesne of Castle Oliver.—On the night of Wednesday, a large party of well armed insurgents attacked the house of Mr. Hutchinson, a respectable farmer, near Castle Harrison, within a mile of Charleville, eight of whom entered, demanding arms—they carried fire into his bed-room, where he was lying very ill, threatened to burn the house if he did not give them a gun, and swore him if he had any; on curing them he had none, they went to the haggard of Mr. David Hierlihy, at the opposite side of the road, and set fire to his corn, hay, and straw, by which two large stacks of hay and one stack of straw were totally consumed.—On Saturday night, a large quantity of corn, belonging to Mr. Henry Gubbins, was burned on a farm near Buttevant. A few armed men went into the herdsman's house, and stated that Sir John Rock had given directions to have the corn and a new barn burned, which they instantly did. A house and some corn, the property of a steward to Thos. W. Foot, Esq. on the lands of Shanballymore, was consumed on the same night, by an armed party, who told the family that they were sent by Sir John to do so, and to take their furniture out, which was immediately carried into effect, and the houses, offices, &c. burned.—Twelve men have been apprehended by the police under Major Stuart, at Garristown, and five by Mr. Armstrong, Chief Constable at Drogheda, on strong suspicion of being concerned in the late desperate attack and robbery of the Belfast Mail.

The High Sheriff's writ has been issued for the election of a Representative in Parliament for the county of Dublin, and the election is fixed for the 3d of February.

In the Court of King's Bench, Dublin, on the 22d of January; Mr. Townshend moved that the several persons who had entered into recognizances to appear to informations filed against them in that Court by the Attorney-General, should be called. After some legal objections were taken by Counsel for the parties, the following persons were called—Henry Handwich, Matthew Handwich, George Graham, William Graham, James Forbes, and William Brownlow. They answered severally, by attorney.—Mr. Townshend inquired if their appearances were taken to both the conspiracy and the riot? and was answered in the affirmative.—In the latter part of the day, Henry Handwich and George Graham appeared in the gallery.

JAN. 24.—The law argument which occupied this Court yesterday, in the case of the King v. James Forbes, Matthew Handwich, Henry Handwich, George Graham, William Brownlow, and Wm. Graham, against whom the Attorney-General filed ex officio informations, came on again this day, when the Attorney-General moved, that as the parties did not make their appearance, their recognizances should be forfeited. He was interrupted by the Lord Chief Justice, who said, that the Court had decided that the parties must make an appearance. —Mr. Perrin then rose and stated, on the part of James Forbes, that he appeared now in Court, and moved that his personal attendance be recorded.—Mr. Forbes then entered the Court.—Mr. North, Mr. Driscoll, and the other Counsel on the same side, had the appearance of William Graham, Matthew Handwich, Henry Handwich, George Graham, and William Brownlow, entered before the Court, in the persons of their Attornies, as yesterday.—The Attorney-General then addressed the Court, stating his intention, on the fourth day, of having as early a day appointed, for bringing the traversers to trial at the bar of the Court, as will best suit the ends of public justice.

We have just heard that an order has been served upon six other persons, connected with the late outrage offered to his Excellency, to abide their trial.—Dublin Journal.

We have reason to believe that the papers belonging to one or more of the Orange Lodges have been seized, and are now before the Privy Council.—Dublin Evening Post.

Last week a serjeant-major of the 7th Hussars, at present quartered at Newbridge, in the County Kildare, drowned himself in the Liffey. A Coroner's Inquest returned a verdict of "Insanity. He was buried in the neighbouring church-yard, but without military honours. A night or two afterwards, the body was disinterred, and with the coffin placed at the minister's door, with a notice, stating, that if the deceased really was insane at the time he committed the dreadful act, he should have been buried with military honours, and if not, as with-holding them seemed to imply, he was not entitled to Christian burial. The body was of course reconsigned to the grave, over which a guard has been placed ever since. Our informant states, that the country people still threaten to remove it from the consecrated ground the moment the guard is taken off.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

TUESDAY.—Beer v. Ward.—This was a motion for the purpose of an issue directed by the Court, to ascertain whether William Cotton, a lunatic, who died in Nov. 1819, was the legitimate son of Cotton, Esq. This gentleman became lunatic in the year 1[illegible], continued so down to the period of his death. The Lord Chancellor after alluding to the previous proceedings in the case, said the question now comes to this; whether, under the circumstances of the case, and the deceit which has been practised upon the Court, it would hold one trial (whatever my opinion of it may be) sufficient to set the matter at rest. The evidence shows, that the lunatic was the son of a William Cotton, who was the son of Rowland Cotton, a gentleman of ancient and respectable family in Shropshire. He married a lady of the name of Rebecca Webster. A register had been produced of the marriage between these persons, in 1742. The lunatic was born in 1740; it followed, therefore, that if this was the fact, he must be illegitimate. There is no doubt in my mind that the marriage of these parties is proved, and although it is not obligatory on a man once married should he married again, yet it must be a strong one, if reasons might have existed to induce them to such a course. After having commented on the affidavits, his Lordship directed that the issue of trial should be had in the Court of King's Bench, and that the Secretary of Lunacy, and a person from the Masters Office should attend with all the proceedings, and produce them if they shall be required.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH.

TUESDAY.—The Court granted a rule to shew cause why a mandamus should not be granted in the case of M'Pherson v. Lowe, in which a verdict went for the plaintiff, with 500l. damages, for a breach of promise of marriage. The ground, as stated by the Counsel who moved was, that the damages were excessive, and that he had affidavits to shew that the plaintiff's character was not the most respectable.

A writ of Habeas Corpus was issued at the instance of two persons confined on board the Severn Tender, to ascertain the cause of the charge on which they were detained—suspecting that the alledged charge for detention, but the Captain of the Tender had no warrant authorizing him to detain them.

Mr. Pearson obtained a rule to shew cause why an Attorney residing in the county of Stafford, should not be struck off the rolls for commencing a process at law whilst he was a prisoner in the County Gaol. The Statute of the 2d of Geo. II. enacts, that attorney committed to Gaol shall bring any suit or action in any Court of Law or Equity.

WEDNESDAY.—Benbow appeared in Court, and pleaded guilty to an indictment preferred against him by the Society for the suppression of Vice.

A rule to shew cause was granted why Nettlefold and Rigby committed to the gaol of the county of Norfolk, on a conviction of conspiracy, should not be brought up to be discharged. The prisoners having failed to move for judgment on the prisoners.

ADMIRALTY COURT.

TUESDAY.—Dr. Phillimore moved that a motion might be made against the Governors and Treasurers of Greenwich Hospital to compel them to shew cause why they did not pay a share of the money for the capture of Genoa to the Sicilian transports, which the British, were engaged in that enterprize. The Court granted the motion.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS' COURT.

THURSDAY.—Joseph Gould, a silk-weaver, lately residing in Spitalfields, came up for judgment, which was postponed from the last day. Mr. Fowler deposed, on the original examination, that he had purchased the insolvent raw silk for a considerable length of time, and that his failure in 1818, when witness was a creditor for 300l. he gave credit; some time after this suspension he opened an account with the insolvent again, on the condition that bills were drawn by Wise, and by him accepted, and further indorsed by a Mr. Hill, which arrangement being made, he, with the consent of his partner, continued business being only agent as to part of the dealing delivered goods, and the bills being regularly paid, confidence became established, the recollection of the former failure almost obliterated. Subsequent he applied to witness and requested to have an account, stating that he was very troublesome to Messrs. Hill, in applying so frequently for their hard-earned cash; this proposal, however, witness refused, when it was said if it must be so, it must." Some time after one of the bills returned, when he made application to the insolvent, who promised payment should be made, and received for answer, through medium of the grandson, that on the following Tuesday all right; but it turned out that the bills were for goods, and addition to Wise and Hill, the insolvent said his son, who had gone to France, drew the bills, and Mr. Fowler saw it knew that the bills belonged to his son. In general terms he then denied the truth the insolvent's statement, still denying any knowledge of the action beyond that his son purchased silk of Mr. F.—Mr. Heath the insolvent addressed the Court, and remarked on the conduct insolvent had pursued, which was a complete proof that he did consider himself liable, as he had not put the bills of Mr. F. into his schedule. Beyond this he had subpœned Mr. Fowler witness, and to produce his books. Was this the conduct conscious of guilt, which seldom challenged inquiry?—Mr. then said, that if the Court would allow the case to stand would be in a condition to falsify the pretended insolvent. The Court acceded to the proposal, and Mr. Fowler ward his man this day, who proved that the insolvent took part in the dealings, and only bore out the prior statements opposing creditor.—Remanded for eighteen months, for uttering cated bills, wherron he obtained credit of Mr. Fowler.

John Herbert was opposed for making incorrect returns of the perty and receipts. He described himself as a silversmith, dealer in copper and marine stores. Two of his apprentices that he was in the practice of purchasing copper having the mark upon it, which they were ordered to efface. He was remanded for six months.

James Francis Rigaud, a Lieutenant on half-pay, was opposed two creditors, one of whom proved that he purchased some knives forks, and soon after sold them at half price. He was also remanded for six months.

Stephen Thomas Brice was also remanded for six months for tiously defending a suit brought against him by one of his creditors.

FRIDAY.—Abraham Saunders, the younger, commonly called "Young Saunders," came up on his petition to be discharged. opposition was entered against him, but the opposing creditor did not appear. The Court asked several questions of the insolvent as to manner in which he had disposed of his horses, with which they have been long familiar, to which he answered, that they were sold and sold under an execution for rent, and of all the favourite dark and cream-coloured, and dappled dancing-horses, not a hoof remained behind, nor a wreck of the scenery which used to adorn his wife's amphitheatre. He was discharged, but the Court cautioned him to come there again with another petition.

ROYAL COURT, JERSEY.

The King v. Thomas Dumaresq and Peter Coutanceau, alias Francis Peyre.—The Attorney-General read the accusation against the prisoners, the principal counts of which were:—"That since the 1st of January, 1820, they had entered into partnership with Messrs. Joshua Lerrier and John Dupre, in October, 1820, they had been guilty of the crimes of felony, robbery, swindling, and breach of confidence." Among the charges were these:—That they had counterfeited, under fictitious names, several bills of exchange to a large amount, which they had discounted at the bank of Messrs. Lerrier and Co.; that many bills entered in the books of the said bank, as having been drawn on Mr. Poingdestre of London, for 40l. 45l. and 60l. sterling each, had in reality been changed by Dumaresq, into 400l. 450l. and 600l. sterling each; that in forging the signatures of "Ph. Duval," and "John Coutanceau," they had further defrauded the said bank of 2,000l. sterling. They were found guilty, and sentenced to be exposed in the pillory in the Royal Square, two successive Saturdays from twelve till one o'clock on the second Saturday, to be flogged by the executioner, in the customary manner, and then banished for ever from the Island.—On the 18th inst. they were put in the pillory, the square was excessively crowded, as well as the windows and roofs of the surrounding houses, and from twelve till one in the afternoon, the unhappy criminals were exposed to an incessant shower of snow-balls, the severity of which appeared to be directed principally against Coutanceau, who had suffered dreadfully in consequence. His mouth, ears, and cheeks were severely lacerated, some of the snow-balls being so hard that they bounded violently from the pillory. His eyes were blackened, and a severe blow which he received in the groin occasioned a temporary strangury, which continued until eleven o'clock at night. He became delirious from the severity of his punishment.

Mrs. B. occupied a house belonging to Harvey, who is a publican. He broke open the door with a crow-bar after ten o'clock at night, forced her into the street, and took possession of the premises. He was found guilty, and sentenced to pay a fine of 20*l.* and to enter into his own recognizances to keep the peace towards Mrs. Bunce.

At the Manchester Quarter Sessions, a Mrs. Sigley, aged 20, was tried for stealing a piece of lace, value 5*l.* The prisoner is the daughter of an independent gentleman, and the wife of a druggist in Charlton-row, to whom she had been married but a short time; she went into the shop of Mr. Watts, linen-draper, in Deansgate, under pretence of buying lace. Whilst attending to her, Mr. Watts missed a piece, and felt confident that she had secreted it. It was found in her basket. She was carried before the Magistrates, who, in consideration of her family, admitted her to bail. Last Thursday she surrendered herself, and was put to the bar, where she pleaded guilty. The Court sentenced her to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour, in the House of Correction for the space of six months. The prisoner, who appeared to be far advanced in a state of pregnancy, and wept incessantly whilst she was at the bar, then retired.

At the Warwick Sessions, Mr. R. Johnson, auctioneer, of Bursiem, appealed against a fine of 10*l.* levied under the Hawkers' and Pedlars' Act upon Mr. Tomlinson, stationer, of Stone, who sent a parcel of books into the Potteries, in the month of October last, which were partly sold by auction, on three successive days at Shelton, by Mr. Johnson, under the expectation that he was to be paid his regular charge as an auctioneer. The Court were of opinion that the act proved did not constitute trading, as required by law, and the conviction was accordingly quashed.

At the late Quarter Sessions for Gloucester, Thomas Bush, a common informer, pleaded guilty to an indictment for extorting money from a farmer at Edgworth, to compound an offence alleged to have been committed by the latter, under the general Highway Act, in suffering his cart to be drawn by more than the usual number of horses. The Court sentenced Bush to be committed to Horseley Bridewell for one month.

The Earl of Lonsdale has again met with a serious accident at his seat, Cottesmere, Lincolnshire, by his horse falling with him. The concussion has occasioned very acute pains in his Lordship's side, so severely injured by the accident which befel him in the park last year.

On the same morning, between four and five o'clock, a fire broke out in a part of the house of Mr. Penny, wine-merchant, Watling-street, which was occupied by lodgers. No water could be obtained in consequence of the frost; and the fire extending itself to the warehouse containing the spirits, occasioned such explosions and conflagration, as rendered all assistance utterly impracticable. It communicated to three houses contiguous, and, notwithstanding that a supply of water was by this time procured, they were, in less than so many hours, completely demolished and levelled with the ground. On Monday morning the fire again broke out on the premises of Messrs. Thompson and Son, but there being a plentiful supply of water, the flames were soon subdued. The following is a correct list of the houses destroyed:—Mr. Penny, wine-merchant; Mr. Williams, warehouseman; Jones, Russell, and Co. ditto; Marryatt, Rane, and Co. ditto; Thompson and Son, silk-manufacturers; Proffit and Lowndes.

Francis Williams, late Cashier of the New South Wales Banks has been sentenced to 14 years transportation, on his own confession, for embezzling from the Bank no less than 21,975*l.*

The following inquests have been taken during the week:—At the Coach and Horses, in Conduit-street, on the body of Mr. Peter Bailey, editor of a periodical work, who expired in a hackney-coach on their way to the Opera-house, whither he was going to criticize the performances. He was accompanied by his wife. The surgeon who examined the body said, his dissolution was occasioned by the bursting of an aneurism of the aorta in his inside, from which an effusion of nearly two pints of blood had lodged in the chest. He understood he had laboured under the disease for some time, and the least exertion would produce the effects that caused his death. He was informed that he had sung an Italian air in the coach just before he expired, and that he ejaculated "Oh Mary!" and then fell dead in the arms of his wife. Verdict—"Died by the visitation of God."—At the Pitt's Head Tavern, Tyson-street, Bethnal-green, on Mr. Joseph Moses, a stockbroker. The deceased was of the Jewish persuasion, and had done considerable business in the Spanish Funds, the fall in the prices of which had greatly embarrassed him, and in a state of mental distraction he put a period to his existence. Verdict—"Insanity."—At the Grave Maurice, Whitechapel-road, on the body of James Coke, a carman, who, during the frost, slipped down and fractured his head, and died in consequence, at the London Hospital.—At the same place, on the body of William Henshaw, who fell down stairs and fractured his thigh, and died in consequence, at the same Hospital. Verdicts—"Accidental death."—At the King's Head, James-street, Westminster, on the body of Thomas Roney; the deceased had been Serjeant in the 76th regiment of foot, but was latterly a pensioner, at 1*s.* 2*d.* a day. He lodged with another man in Snow's-rents, York-street, and about eight o'clock on the preceding morning, during the absence of his fellow-lodger, he cut his throat with a razor. He was carried to the infirmary, where he died in a few minutes. Verdict "Insanity."

HULL.—Mr. Marshall, of Inholmes, lost seven head of cattle on Monday last, occasioned by their having eaten of two yew trees, in a plantation into which they had strayed. A heifer was seized with madness from the same cause, and can only be fed from a hole in the wall, no one daring to approach her.

IPSWICH.—An inquisition was taken on the 21st inst. on the body of Elizabeth Abbott, a child about four years of age, who, reaching to place something on the chimney-piece, set fire to her clothes, which occasioned her death. Verdict—"Died from the injury received by burning."—And on the 22d inst. on the body of James Manning, a servant of Mr. Chandler's, of Felixtow, who returning from Ipswich with a waggon and four horses, slipped down in the road, when the wheels of the waggon passing over his head, occasioned instant death. Verdict—"Accidentally killed by the near wheels of the waggon," on which the Jury set a deodand of 2*s.* 6*d.*

MACCLESFIELD.—Some days since, Thomas Berrisford, a boy of 11 years, whilst washing himself in a reservoir belonging to a steam-engine, fell in, and was literally scalded to death. One of the persons invited to the funeral, excused himself, alleging that his own funeral would speedily take place. In less than an hour he was taken ill, died the same day, and was interred on the day that the boy was carried to his grave.

PLYMOUTH.—On Wednesday last two ladies of great respectability named Slade, members of the Society of Friends, who came to this town in the Subscription coach, proceeded on to Truro by the Falmouth mail; and although particularly solicited to take inside places, they preferred going on the outside of the coach. One sister was taken ill from the effects of the cold, and died the next day; and the other now lies in a very dangerous state.

PERTH.—On Wednesday se'nnight, at the Police Court, an unprincipled fellow was charged with several instances of barbarity and cruelty towards his wife, only "three weeks after marriage," after having dissipated the sum of 19*l.* sterling, the hard-earned stock of his unfortunate partner. The poor woman attended as a witness, and delivered a most dolorous tale of her "honey moon," which was fully authenticated by some neighbours. The sitting Magistrate declared it to be the most aggravated case of the kind that had ever come under his observation, and the culprit was sentenced to 60 days' imprisonment.

SALISBURY.—A poor man, named Haskell, on Saturday se'nnight, went into the stable of the Sun Inn, Fisherton, and on the following morning was found frozen to death. Another poor man, named Milligan; aged eighty-four years, perished from the excessive cold weather while working in the forest, Newport.

FAMILY SHAKSPEARE, ON LARGE TYPE.

Just published, in 8 vols. 8vo. price 1*l.* 14*s.* 6*d.* boards, the Third Edition, of

THE FAMILY SHAKSPEARE; in which nothing is added to the original Text; but those Words and Expressions are omitted which cannot with propriety be read aloud in a family. By THOMAS BOWDLER, Esq. F.R.S. and S.A.

"We are of opinion, that it requires nothing more than a notice, to bring this very meritorious publication into general circulation. It is quite undeniable, that there are many passages, in Shakspeare, which a father could not read aloud to his children; a brother to his sister; or a gentleman to a lady. Mr. Bowdler has only effaced those gross indecencies which every one must have felt as blemishes, and by the removal of which no imaginable excellence can be effected. So far from being missed on their removal, the work generally appears more natural and harmonious without them."—Edinb. Rev. No. 71.

CONVERSATIONS on MINERALOGY, with Plates, engraved by Mr. and Mrs. Lowry, from original drawings, comprising upwards of 400 figures of Minerals, including 12 beautifully coloured specimens.—Printed for Longman, Hurst, Rees, Orme, and Brown, Paternoster-row; and sold by J. Mawe, 149, Strand.

"The plan of these Conversations is happily conceived, and, it is executed with ability and taste. The author has studiously avoided all unnecessary parade of technical diction, has rendered the doctrines of Crystallography more familiar than heretofore to the tyro in mineralogy, and has included some of the most recently discovered substances. We may, therefore, unhesitatingly characterize this work as one of the most desirable text books that have issued from the British press."—Monthly Review, Dec. 1822.

MEMOIRS OF BENVENUTO CELLINI. Written by Himself. Edited, with Notes from the last Milan Edition. By THOMAS ROSCOE, ESQ.

"This is perhaps the most perfect piece of Auto-biography that ever was written, whether considered with reference to the candour and veracity of the author, the spirit of the incidents, or the breathing vitality of the narrative. It has also the recommendation of having been written at a very interesting period of literary history, and of recording some curious particulars relative to the private character of the great men of the time. We never, in the whole course of our life, read a book of a more engaging description."—Retrospective Review.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

The opening of Parliament being so near at hand, we feel it necessary to reply, as far as in us lies, to the numerous correspondents whose communications, for the last two or three weeks, have remained unanswered, in order that we may have as much space as possible for the reports of Parliamentary proceedings.

Any communication PHILO-JUSTITIÆ may make on the subject will be thankfully received, and eventually applied to the object he has so justly in view.

We are not quite certain what the letter is to which AMICUS VERITATIS alludes.

We do not exactly know where to procure the book to which T.S.B. refers us.

A correspondent wishes to know why LORD BLESSINGTON'S eye is like a note of interrogation?—We cannot guess, unless indeed it be because it is a QUEER EYE—(Query).

If B. should happen to be in town, and will apply at the Office of BULL, every possible assistance will be afforded him in completing his set.

We are always obliged to E.S. but we have not always an opportunity of inserting his favors.

We have no doubt but that the Act which annoys Q. so much will be very shortly repealed.

It is quite impossible to enter into details about such people as the MR. HICCOMB of whom a Liverpuan writes.

We cannot meddle with the subject noticed by a TRUE CHURCHMAN.

The parody upon

"Go to JANE CLOVER,
"And tell her I love her,"

is extremely personal—besides which, we are extremely anxious not to believe the fact.

The song from BURNS is out of date.

If MR. HENRY GREY BENNET was in arrears at Cambridge, of course he could not vote for any body. We can hardly believe, however, that sixty pounds would have been an object under the circumstances.

We know as little of the society C. alludes to as himself—we have directed enquiries to be made about it.

We have remarked the language of the TIMES when speaking of CORBETT. It is clear the TIMES is sore, and in a passion; but we trust after the specimens of style with which that paper has recently favoured us, we shall not be sickened with any affected squeamishness at grossness or invective from the leading journal.

It was not from any partiality that we selected the letter we published on the subject of the Poyais country from amongst several which we received, but merely because it arrived first at the Office, and indeed was sent to press before any of the others reached us.

We keep the particulars relative to MR. B. in store, lest he should press the subject of his grievances upon public notice.

A correspondent complains of the incorrectness of a publication called the MARKET LETTER—we merely mention the circumstance, as not knowing any thing of the work or its faults, to call the attention of the publishers to the accusation.

H.J.L. shall be answered at our first leisure moment.

We have made free with "An Ode to Liberty."

HECTOR is our next.

We have to apologise to BERTRAM—the case shall be investigated.

We can take no further notice of the author of "The Address" to the East India Proprietors, than to acknowledge the receipt of his pamphlet. We never favour humbug of any description; and if we did not even possess more certain authority, we should guess the author from his evident interests in the question.

PROCION is received; he may rest assured we shall keep our eye upon right times and seasons; no greater injury can be done to a good cause than hackneying it in the public eye. The same view will occur to a preceding correspondent, CANTABRIGIENSIS, respecting what he suggests, and the enclosure with which he favoured us.

Any communications from BOD on the subject he mentions will be thankfully received.

PHILOLETHES is also requested to favour us.

We are sorry that we are not able to make BULL an Appendix to the MORNING POST, as our reverend friend, who sends us the corrections of a letter published in that paper, seems to wish.

B.B. shall be attended to.

TAURIFORMIS is a blockhead, who cannot distinguish the blunder of a printer from the mistake of a writer. Gentlemen who thus mercenaries would do well to keep their discoveries to themselves—this particularly applies to MR. E.

PHILOTAUR *is thanked—*ST. IVES *is indelicate—*BILLY BULL'S letters have, as is our custom, been burned.

IL. communication come to hand—two. He has our best thanks.

IL.'s communication come to hand—two. He has our last thanks.

AMICUS—A VERY OLD SUBSCRIBER—SCAN-MAG—A FRIEND TO THE PUBLIC—SCARRON—A SUBSCRIBER AB INITIO—A MOLE-CATCHER—PHILO-MONARCHICUS—CONSTANT READER (Pimlico)—DITTO (Sheffield)—JAMES BULL—Lines on CORBETT—A LOOKER-ON—SQUIB—A.B.—PANCRAS—DIABOLUS REGINÆ—AN AMATEUR—W.T.F.G.—and all the rest of our friends, must still stand over.

PRICE OF STOCKS AT THE CLOSE, SATURDAY.

The past week has been one of the most important in the Money Market ever remembered, and the fluctuations have been very great. The receipt of the French King's speech produced a great decline in all the securities, and in the Spanish more particularly. This Stock was done on Friday as low as 34½, but it subsequently recovered, and this morning found purchasers at 36, being a fall of 5 per Cent from Monday last. In consequence of Mr. Mocatta's failure, many will be sufferers, as the defalcation is to an immense extent. Consols for the Account at one time were done at 74¾. They subsequently recovered themselves, and opened to-day at 75⅛. During the day they fluctuated about ⅛ per Cent. inclining downwards, and at the final close were 75⅛ buyers.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 2.

OUR readers will recollect that, without entering into any discussion of the various assurances of peace on one hand, and war on the other, both from sources of "unquestionable authority" and which, curiously enough, always "squared mathematically" with the previous political creeds of the several parties, WE ventured to give our opinion upon a general view of the question, without any mysterious or mystical correspondence at all, and stated our full conviction, that after a certain period—that is from the return of the DUKE DE MONTMORENCY to Paris, WAR WITH SPAIN was inevitable. The speech of LOUIS XVIII. on opening the Chambers, has set the matter at rest. The sword may be said to be drawn from the scabbard—what may happen before it is returned to it, none but the omniscient correspondents of such luminous vehicles of political illumination as the MORNING CHRONICLE, and its daily and weekly assessors, will venture to prognosticate.

WHIG COUNTY MEETINGS.

THERE are circumstances connected with the Reform Meeting at York, which tend to redeem it from the contempt which those "FARCES."—as the DUKE of WELLINGTON is falsely charged with calling them, but which we prefer to designate as PANTOMIMES,—are calculated to engender in our minds. We have seen a Minister hard pressed in the House of Commons by popular clamour, but he has at least found among his colleagues hands and heads able and ready to parry the tricks and manœuvres of the old Foxes in opposition. We have at times beheld our gallant captains engaged at long odds with the enemies of their country, but they have had as gallant coadjutors to second their efforts and render their desperate bravery effectual. It was left to the WHIG REFORMERS, in the late York Meeting, to call forth and display before a grateful country one of those rare and noble instances of magnanimity and disinterested self-devotion which do honour to the age we live in, and stamp the indelible character of HONOUR upon the principles which are—if any thing can do it—to save us from the grasp of INFAMY and REVOLUTION.

If we were called upon by a foreigner to comprise in an individual the characteristics of an English gentleman and a British patriot, of which we profess to be so proud, we should not hesitate to point out MR. STUART WORTLEY as "the man." There is something so gallant—there is something so manly and exalted in the conduct of this gentleman, in facing what professed to be a meeting of his constituents, and there, single handed, not to blacken or abuse his opponents—not to mislead or cajole an ideotic rabble—not to avail himself of the different shades of opinion to set them at loggerheads among themselves—but to meet and repel all the sophistry and trickery of faction, by a powerful display of argumentative reasoning and historical evidence, and to stand upon his individual character, as a counterbalance to the whole weight and influence that could be mustered in the vast county of YORK against him—a combination which for months had been forming under the active agency of the richest and most powerful of the WHIG FACTION, in every part and quarter of the Ridings.

Let the country look to the result; let it decide upon whose head all the honours of the day have fallen! Surely not upon the half-witted sons of faction, who compounded the meeting, for the purpose of displaying their oratory, and recording their own praises—surely not on those who, for the basest purposes of party, condescended to "pander" to the ignorant and easily excited passions of a mob!—for in both they were defeated and thwarted. Whose was the glory?—who formed the prominent object of the meeting?—who but MR. STUART WORTLEY!

After such an instance of self-devotion to the interests of his country, we are sure that true gentleman and real patriot will pardon us for coupling his name in one single sentence with that of the Radical Deputy WOOLER; but to those individuals are the Whigs ALONE indebted for the suffrages which enabled them to cover their retreat under the appearance of a victory, which MR. WORTLEY would not deign to parley upon, and MR. WOOLER, through negociation, was prevailed upon not to snatch from them. Had MR. WORTLEY required numbers to support him—had his views been narrowed to the empty applauses of the multitude, do my LORD MILTON and his assessors really suppose he could not have brought into the field, by the same means employed by themselves, thousands for their hundreds to cheer and swell his personal vanity?—Why, more than two-thirds of the meeting, [illegible] was actually packed, consisted of handicraftsmen and labourers belonging to the city of York; and there were [illegible] ten out of the whole number (always saving and excepting THE WHIGS themselves) who would not have voted for a thing that MR. WOOLER might have thought proper to propose for their adoption. Talk of the dictatorial power of Government—talk of the six Bills, and the oppressive laws which restrain the freedom of speech!—what are they? what would be such restrictions, did they exist any where, but in the ingenious misconstruction of these men, when compared to the undisputed power of an individual?—a [illegible] vender of political libels, who owes his existence to the fiction aid of seditious contributors, to whom the whole body of WHIG ARISTOCRACY of the county of YORK bend in gratitude and load with fulsome panegyric, for his QUALIFIED PERMISSION that THEIR OWN ADDRESS SHOULD BE QUARTERED pro forma!!!

Admiration at the intrepid tone and powerful appeal of MR. WORTLEY had awakened something like the true ancient spirit of John Bull among his auditors, and were assured from obvious symptoms at the moment, which [illegible] the Whigs "tremble in their shoes," a disposition was beginning to shew itself, which was not unequivocal, during the speech of their boy baiting MR. something BEVERLEY, certainly not favourable to the "cap in hand" candidates for popular applause.

We do not mean to say, that had MR. WORTLEY proposed to negative the original propositions, he could have so far prevailed with the mob assembled on the occasion as to have counteracted the matured arrangements of the opposing faction; but he had nearly convinced even the mob, that the whole was a political intrigue for the purposes of a party, and they would have voted for any ultra measure, however absurd had WOOLER persevered in what he and WOLSELEY purposely went down to do—namely, to play over again the [illegible] wich pantomime, in which the part of FOOL was to have been transferred from the NORFOLK to the YORKSHIRE WHIG Member!

Really there is something so sickening and disgusting in the shameless and barefaced hypocrisy of Whig professions that we turn from it with loathing—what would LORD MILTON have felt had MR. STUART WORTLEY, instead of opposing false principles, opposed FACTS to PROFESSIONS, and called upon the people to look at what is AT THIS VERY MOMENT GOING FORWARD AT PETERBOROUGH under the direction of the openly avowed and declared "FITZWILLIAM INFLUENCE?" Recollect, good readers, that Peterborough is what is called a Rotten Borough. The people might be [illegible] well left to themselves to vote for whom they please—but the active, persevering, and indefatigable agents of the Noble Lord's reforming principles are from year's end to year's end at work to keep up and maintain an INFLUENCE that shall direct and enforce the votes of the electors!

We only desire any one of our readers who may be travelling the north road—our readers in the neighbourhood actually informed upon the subject—just to turn into the said city of Peterborough for one night—let him walk through the streets and talk indifferently to any two or three of the shopkeepers and tradesmen of the place, and if he do not discover what SYSTEMATIC corruption dwells, we shall be ready to admit that we have all along mistaken what our reformers mean by the word, and that it must be something else than a reform Parliament which has called forth the indignant reprobation of my LORD MILTON and other noble converts to reform. What!—we scarcely dare breathe it—what if the compromise at YORK should have been effected by the sacrifice of Mr. SCARLETT!—what—if the forbearance of Sir CHARLES WOLSELEY and the bibliopole WOOLER should have withdrawn their troops in the moment of anticipated victory from the plains of York in return for the surrender of the "good old town" of Peterborough. What! traffic in seats?—impossible—nous verrons. Let Lawyer WELLS look to it—it is his business, not ours—but we confess we see no reason why CORBETT may not represent the Fitzwilliam interest at Peterborough as well as MR. COKE'S at Norwich. They are near neighbours, and, in sober truth, we do not believe there is much difference among the WEB-FOOTED inhabitants either. Of this we feel convinced, if a man, bearing any resemblance to MR. STUART WORTLEY, in character or principle, were to offer himself—he would beat both interests out of the field.

The only difficulty with honest men is to find a respectable rallying point. MR. STUART WORTLEY may be almost literally said to be a "HOST in himself." We wish he would bite a few of his friends—we might not then have to blush, as we did most grievously, at the poor, wretched appearance of men who have been wont to carry "a better front" in the worst of times—but who, at the WELLS meeting, bowed, flattered, and submitted to the contumelies of a HUNT, without daring to avow a single principle in the face of a daring attempt to overturn every existing institution of the country. Who the deuce cared for MR. DICKINSON'S accommodating politics—or SIR THOMAS LETHBRIDGE'S light houses?

It was their duty to stand upon public grounds and constitutional principles, as the representatives of a great and respectable county, which they know to a man, amongst the honourable and thinking classes of their constituents, despised and reprobated the principles and practices of the Hebes Gaol Bird; and would, in their higher sphere, have not seconded any stand they had made against him, although they formed no part of the rabble which a rogue is always sure to have at his heels. They ought to have known HUNT is an uncompromising fellow—whatever WOOLER may be. All their "booing" and scraping, and liberality of concession was as useless as an appeal to a highwayman with a pistol at your breast, to save your purse. They ought—as they had supporters to boot—to have acted as MR. STUART WORTLEY has done, and their defeat would have reflected honour, rather than disgrace upon the county of Somerset.

We had almost forgotten the notice taken of JOHN BULL by my LORD MILTON, in his address to the York mob; and indeed, should we think it worthy of notice, were it not simply to direct the powerful indignation of this very great Lord towards writings, which, to our knowledge, have afforded himself, as well as his venerable father, infinite amusement at various periods of their political career. We will not put upon his recollection the "Probationary Odes," the "Criticisms on the Rolliad," the classic decencies of HALL STEVENSON, the weekly and daily libels upon the most elevated and distinguished characters, male and FEMALE, written and gloried in by the leading and witty Members of Ex-Cabinets of WHIGS, for the last thirty years; but we will content ourselves with referring to the file of the MORNING CHRONICLE for only the last ten, for the regular contributions of the same WHIG wits, to bring into contempt every thing connected with the character of royalty—to the personal caricatures and satirical lampoons upon the very virtues of our late venerable KING and his illustrious Consort—to the coarse and unmanly invectives against all who were connected with the public employments of the State—the daring inroads made into the privacy for family anecdotes—unprovoked by the officious obtrusions of the individuals themselves, and the gross and indecent libels upon WOMEN of virtue and unimpeached honour!

We would recommend to this new censor of the public press, which is only libellous where it is unwhigged, the writings of the WHIG Laureat—his Twopenny Postbags—his Fudge Family, and his political Lyrics; and, above all, the republication, for the edification of the present generation, by my LORD HOLLAND, of the works of the ARCH WHIG and ARCH BLASPHEMER, HANBURY WILLIAMS, which ought to have been left, where only until this liberal epoch they were to be found—in the brothel, or the stews of filth and iniquity!

Why will such weak men as my LORD MILTON provoke us to speak out. By the Lord Harry! if they goad us, we shall out with something more than they will be well pleased to see in print! There is actually no standing the impudence of the hacknied Whigs prating about libels and the licentiousness of the press. God knows it is bad enough—but WHO MADE IT SO?

THE public are respectfully informed that the NEW NATIONAL THEATRE will open for the Season on Tuesday next, the 4th of February; and that the Managers, actuated by the same public spirit which has always distinguished them, have in their usual liberal manner endeavoured to strengthen their Company by the accession of several of the most popular performers of the day. They lament that their unremitting efforts to obtain possession of THE THEATRE ROYAL should have hitherto proved unsuccessful, but they trust that their attempts to amuse the public will not be equally futile; and they confidently trust that the novelties which they have prepared will, if they do not meet with universal approbation, at least help to wile away a few weary hours, and promote occasional mirth.—The Season will commence with

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING:

And an entirely new Democratic Pantomime, entitled,

HARLEQUIN HUMBUG,

Or, The Genius of the Whigs.

PHAETON, afterwards Harlequin, by LORD SEFTON, who, in the course of the evening, in the character of a Cod's Head and Shoulders, will sing the celebrated air of "We're a' noddin;" and also a new bang-up song, after the manner of a hackney-coachman.

BOMBASTES FURIOSO, afterwards Columbine, by LORD NUGENT.

TIMOTHY BONNYCASTLE, afterwards Clown, DR. HUME. After a long and tedious calculation, this performer discovered that the sum tottle of his talents was not sufficient for a Clown!!! but has kindly consented to undertake the part, on condition that he is well stuffed by MR. MICHAEL ANGELO TAYLOR.—In the temporary character of an Indian Juggler he will convert several sacks of oatmeal and gram into bank-notes—prove that two and two make five!!!—and dissect the body of a friend without giving him the least pain!

HARRY LONGLEGS, afterwards Pantaloon, MR. BROUGHAM, who will perform several wonderful feats of agility, such as balancing a hot potatoe on the tip of his nose, &c.

OWLET, a malicious Zephyr, Genius of the Whigs, by LORD HOLLAND, who has borrowed some wings for the occasion from one of TOMMY MOORE'S Angels;—but this being his Lordship's debut as a Zephyr, the audience must pardon him should he be seen to bend

> "Beneath the shade
> Of" his "spread wings to hide the burning
> Of glances," &c.

DUTCH FOOTMAN, afterwards PUNCH, MR. P. MOORE.

GAMBOOGE, King of the Coalheavers, a Necromancer, MR. LAMBTON.

Sprites, Genii, Figurantes, and auxiliaries of all sorts, by MESSRS. TAYLOR, GREY, DENMAN, CARNARVON, DAVIES, WADDINGTON, BURDETT, HUNT, &c.

Stage-manager, MR. TIERNEY.—Scene-shifter, MR. SCARLETT.—Mechanist, MR. COKE.

In the course of the Pantomime, the following scenes will be presented:—

London—A distant view of the Treasury—Helter Skelter—Door fast—Disappointment—Harlequin's agility—Slapdash—Change to BROOKES'S—Blinds drawn—Whigs in motion—Pas de deux—HARLEQUIN and COLUMBINE—LORDS SEFTON and NUGENT—heavy weights—Hard run—Devil take the hindmost.

Interior of MR. M. A. TAYLOR'S HOUSE——Song—"MICHAEL'S DINNER"—A soldier I am for the ladies—All in the dumps—Early division—Shut out—King of the coal heavers at tea.

BONNYCASTLE'S Country House—Figures in the wrong places—Dot and carry one—Haggis—Fool's head—with many other novelties.

The whole to conclude with a splendid scene of the TEMPLE of HUMBUG, brilliantly illuminated with gas.

MR. WILBERFORCE having expressed his disapprobation of the custom of Columbines in shewing their legs, Bombastes Furioso will be dressed in nankeen pantaloons.

MR M. A. TAYLOR will furnish refreshments during the season. Vivant Rex et REGINA.

WE have at great length given our opinion upon the late county meeting at YORK—and we feel it quite impossible to do justice in this Number to the various assemblies which have been held under pretences similar to those assigned for that congregation of lords and labourers. We shall not, however, lose sight of them.

In the Common Council MR. WAITHMAN measured out a most prodigious speech, in which he repeated (as he had taken the trouble to learn by heart,) all the calculations which had been made in all the independent publications of the last century, touching the representation of the people, and corruption and rotten boroughs, forgetting only, we conclude, that all the purest and most independent supporters of reform are seated by the very means he so much deprecated.

It really appears useless to criticise the proceedings of an assembly in which—and we quote the CHRONICLE for a report—such a speech as that which follows was seriously delivered and gravely attended to:—

"MR. J. WELCH said he should be worse than useless if he did not shew to his constituents the desire he had of stating his opinion. He compared the people of the country to a tesselated table of blue and white and the King to a beautiful column growing out of the bottom of the same. The House of Commons he thought had a great resemblance to the workhouse of the city of London. He thought that the Reformers differed only in shades; that spiders, cobwebs, rats, and other reptiles had taken possession of the fair habitation of the people; and that all who wish well to the country, should join their hands and hearts like a bundle of sticks. He concluded by describing the opposition to reform as a "quibbling CANDLESTICK SORT OF A THING."

The only thing observable in the business of the day is, that when members offered arguments irresistibly strong against Radicalism, they were invariably coughed down—the sneaking way of getting rid of an antagonist in another place, is moving to count a thin house just as he begins to speak. The city fashion is the more open of the two, and therefore preferable.

In SOMERSETSHIRE the same manœuvres have been resorted to, and MR. HUNT and the WHIGS were in great force—we cannot, as we before said, examine the proceedings this week, but a fair estimate of the nature of the thing may be made when we mention that LIAR—and BULLY—and SCOUNDREL, and words of similar import, were bandied about with the greatest liberality.

The conclusion of the day is worth notice, because the intentions of the petitioners is fully and openly avowed.

"MR. HUNT—He intended to move a Petition by way of Amendment, couched in language such as no man could oppose who did not live upon the taxes. With regard to the Whigs, they were ten times more corrupt than the Tories. They had more Borough influence, and had always done more, when they had an opportunity, to abridge the liberties and the means of the people. Look at the DUKE OF BEDFORD, with all his Church Lands and Crown Lands. What was this but the property of the people?—(Shouts of applause.)—Look at LORD GROSVENOR. Almost all the property he possessed was of the same class. These were two of the Whigs. They were not better, nor worse than the others, only that they were hypocrites, who pretended to make the people free; whereas they in reality would make them as much or more slaves as the Tories. The people had been deluded for a number of years, by the corrupt part of the press and by the landed proprietors; and when he went to try to open their eyes, what did they do? They put him into prison. All the evils of which they had to complain had been made worse and aggravated by the local Magistracy. Had the people justice?—(No, no.)—Then he would ask them—Would they take the measures of the Magistrates instead of his, who never had received a farthing of the public money, and never would, so help him God?—(Great cheering.)—The Magistrates had led them as they liked formerly, and now they wanted to dictate to them as usual.

"MR. SANDFORD—'It is you who would dictate.'

"MR. GOLDING—'You are a public bully, and your conduct is disgraceful.'

"MR. HUNT proceeded—'Let those men who called you rabble,' said he, 'come forward now and tell you so.'

"A Gentleman from the window of the Assize Hall—'They are rabble.'

"MR. HOPE—'The Requisition was for a Meeting of the Freeholders.'

"Another Gentleman—'Yes; and there is not one in ten of them a Freeholder.'"

SIR THOMAS LETHBRIDGE, who, while he was a TORY, was the constant theme of ridicule for the WHIGS, and whose "hair stood on end" at Radical atrocities, read his political recantation—said, he thought HUNT'S an English heart, and expressed himself "ready and happy to say ANY THING which agreed with the opinions of his constituents."

SIR THOMAS LETHBRIDGE must really be a greater fool than the Whigs ever called him, to be frightened into talking such stuff—the opinions of his constituents. Was the man dreaming? Does he know the people who have hitherto returned him so ill, as to fancy they were standing in the puddles of mud, at WELLS, to listen to him there? He was sent to Parliament upon a high constitutional interest, as GODFREY WEBSTER was returned for SUSSEX. WEBSTER had not strength of mind to resist popularity, became a Radical, and was ousted at the very first subsequent election. SIR THOMAS LETHBRIDGE did as much in Parliament as SIR GODFREY WEBSTER, and SIR GODFREY WEBSTER as much as SIR THOMAS LETHBRIDGE, (if we except the affair of BURDETT'S commitment,) and we just mention to the county Member in the present instance, that if he confounds the nonsense of the rabble with the sense of the electors, he will find himself most woefully mistaken.

AT ABINGDON there has been a meeting scantily attended, and remarkable for the absence of all personal scurrility towards the Monarch. Several new performers tried their hands, and the old orators were silent, till, it being clear that the Congress would make no kind of noise if somebody did not make a noise at it, that excellent person, the LORD VISCOUNT FOLKESTONE, the fidus achates of a man of the name of WARDLE, who, our friends may recollect was, a few years ago, as popular as HUME, HUNT, and DAVIES are now, proceeded to make a speech, evidently prepared, as a defence against objections to the system proposed. No opposition being made, his Lordship converted his negatives into affirmatives, and wasted his breath and time in advocating a cause which nobody thought it worth while to attack.

That upright person, MR. MARSH, of READING, and also MR. FYSHE PALMER, were present. This affair, however, terminated more lamely than any of the exhibitions which have lately been made.

We copy the following from DODSLEY'S Annual Register, for the year 1793, page 40, CHRONICLE:—

"At Perth, MR. FISCHE PALMER has been found guilty of "writing a seditious hand bill;—his sentence was seven years' "transportation!!!"

IN the year 1788, at a meeting of the WHIG CLUB, more than a thousand pounds was subscribed by the company present, to erect a column sacred to liberty on Runymede—a curious old gentleman, who was of the party, and who contributed his share to the national monument, never having heard any thing more upon the subject, has requested us to enquire where the money went, and to what particular service it was applied. We only answer, that, "as near as we can guess we cannot say," but that we certainly do recollect a subscription having been raised for the purchase of plate for her late Majesty Queen CAROLINE (of which we have not lately been in the habit of hearing,) and which, like that collected for the Runymede Trophy, has most certainly not been applied to the specific purpose for which it was received.

Perhaps SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH would undertake to enquire and set us right as to the disposition of all the Whig subscriptions which have come under his observation during his connexion with the party—for information upon the subject during the time he was a Tory we will apply elsewhere.

ALMACK'S.

A VACANCY having occurred in the direction of ALMACK'S, we have been solicited to give a place to the following

ADVERTISEMENT.

Wanted, for the ensuing season, at ALMACK'S, as Patroness, a person of undeniable character, quick parts, good address, and well known in the fashionable world. She must possess a good memory, be complete mistress of the Peerage, write a good running hand, and be sufficiently grounded in the rudiments of arithmetic to understand the extent of the numbers to be admitted in her books. Her manners must be decided, so that she be always capable of giving evasive answers, or positive denials, according to the situation of those from whom she receives applications.

She must possess great tact, will be expected to be able to practice with precision the different degrees of the art of cutting, which last qualification must be a positive sine qua non, previous to any attempt in entering as candidate.

And whereas many extraordinary looking persons, whose faces were unknown, have occasionally been suffered to appear at ALMACK'S, more especially during Easter week; it is hereby specified, that none can be considered candidates for the office, who are in any way connected with any singular looking persons of either sex. The above regulation will be strictly attended to, as, owing to the Lady Patroness's desire of obliging, the Committee might find themselves placed in disagreeable circumstances. No very good natured person need apply, as it takes much time to get rid of this quality.

N. B. The situation is particularly adapted for widows. The inconvenience of disobliging persons of respectability who come from the country (who of necessity are among the proscrit) having led to serious consequences in county elections.

Apply to any of the Lady Patronesses for further information.

ORIGINAL POETRY.

PIBROCH OF DONALD DHU.

AIR—"Probair of Dhonuil Duibh."
BY SIR WALTER SCOTT, BART.

Pibroch of Donuil Dhu,
Pibroch of Donuil,
Wake thy wild voice anew,
Summon Clan-Conuil.
Come away, come away,
Hark to the summons!
Come in your war array,
Gentles and commons.

Come from the deep glen, and
From mountain so rocky,
The war-pipe and pennon
Are at Inverlocky:
Come every hill-plaid, and
True heart that wears one,
Come ev'ry steel blade, and Strong hand that bears one.

Leave un'tended the herd,
The flock without shelter,
Leave the corpse uninterr'd,
The bride at the altar;
Leave the deer, leave the steer,
Leave nets and barges;
Come with your fighting gear,
Broad swords and targes.

Come as the winds come, when Forests are rended—
Come as the waves come, when Navies are stranded;
Faster come, faster come,
Faster and faster,
Chief, vassal, page, and groom,
Tenant and master.

Fast they come, fast they come,
See how they gather!
Wide waves the eagle plume
Blended with heather.
Cast your plaids, draw your blades,
Forward each man set!
Pibroch of Donuil Dhu,
Knell for the onset.

SUMMONS OF ROBERT QUARME.

To be performed on Tuesday next.

Sweet voice of ROBERT QUARME,
Sweet voice of BOBBY—
Sound at the door, th' alarm
Sound through the lobby;
"Come away, come away,
"Hark to the summons!"
Come to the Speech to day,
GENTLEMEN COMMONS.

Come from each hiding-place,
Club-house, or stable,
Speaker and Gold-mace
Are both at the table.
Come ev'ry great Whig, and Small Whig who treats one,
Come ev'ry poor Whig, and Rich Whig who seats one.

Leave uncounted the mobs,
The poor without shelter,
Leave unfinished your jobs,
Leave the throne and the altar,
Leave the deer, for this year,
Leave red-caps and white caps,
Come in your voting-gear,
Great-coats, and night-caps.

Come, as good Whigs, come, whose Speeches are longest,
Run, as the dogs run, when
Scent lies the strongest:
Faster come, faster come,
SEFTON, DUNCANNON,
COKE, LAMBTON, WARRE, and BROUGHAM,
FYSHE, and CONCANNON.

Fast they come, fast they come,
See how they gather;
WOOD walks with JOSEPH HUME,
WILL with his father.
Throng the streets, take your seats,
Forward each man set,
BLACK ROD and ROBERT QUARME
Call to the onset.

TO JOHN BULL.

MR. BULL—Can you inform me what right W. B. COLLYER, D.D. LL.D. F.A.S. has to appear, in the chapels where he officiates, in the dress of a D.D. of the English Universities, and to wear, usually, a shovel hat with rosette, the ordinary badge of a Dignitary of the Establishment. The Doctor's degrees are understood to be from Scotland and America. Now, in the robes of the Universities from which he derives his degrees, there can be no objection to his making his appearance; but I apprehend his present dress, in and out of the pulpit, to be neither more nor less than an impertinent assumption. I know there are many Dissenting Ministers who wear what is called the preaching gown, but the Doctor appears with cassock and scarf, to which he has as much claim as you and I have to the uniform of the DUKE of WELLINGTON'S regiment.

Lately, Sir, a chapel called Craven Chapel, near Great Marlborough-street, was opened. Mr. Barder, M.A. of Glasgow, and Mr. Bogue, of Gosport, took parts in the business of the day, in plain clothes, when forth came the Doctor, fully robed.

But the scarf amuses me most. I am told, he wears it as a Chaplain to a Royal Personage. A Dissenting Minister a Chaplain!!! Pray, Sir, enlighten me on this point. T. P.

THE following description of MR. BROUGHAM is quoted from an American writer upon this country:—

"MR. BROUGHAM, ATTORNEY-GENERAL TO THE QUEEN OF ENGLAND.—This acute, learned, and eloquent advocate, who may perhaps in a few years become Lord Chancellor (??!) is a mean-looking figure, as lean as a broomstick, yellow, and fallen away, with a flat nose, a wide mouth, and unpleasing contour; but he has large sparkling eyes, which flash fire, and as soon as he begins to speak, his countenance is lighted up with a degree of animation, understanding, and self-possession, the effect of which is not weakened by a bad habit, (perhaps a nervous affection) of every moment stretching the nostrils, distorting the closed mouth on both sides, and at the same time winking with the eyes. The charm of his eloquence is irresistible to an unprejudiced person, and there is in his manner something which the English call GENTLEMAN-LIKE, by which he is very favourably distinguished from the violent fury of his colleague MR. DENMAN, the QUEEN'S Solicitor-General, who with a terrible bass voice roars in the hall, at the same time thumping on the bar."

THEATRICALS.

It is with regret we perceive that Covent-garden Theatre is disturbed with cabals and intrigues, and bickerings and jealousies—coolnesses between actors and managers, squabbles between singers and proprietors—and, in short, a "bad understanding" of things in general.

Mr. Macready, it seems, considers himself ill-used because he has not more leading stock characters assigned to him. Mr. C. Kemble, whose interest in the prosperity of the concern is greater than any indifferent performer, considers that the purposes for which theatres are opened will be better answered by playing these leading characters himself. That Mr. Macready should enter into this feeling is not to be expected by any body who knows of what touchy stuff an actor is made. Charles Kemble, however, has played second characters to Macready, and has been remarked upon in so doing as following an excellent example in his own theatre, which it must be confessed was afforded by Drury-lane.

We have endeavoured, under this head of our paper, to shew how these things are "managed in France," where actors change parts, and in turn, perhaps, personate every character in a drama. We admit, as we have already admitted, that on our stage, where the lines of acting are more strongly marked, and the parts more decidedly opposed to each other, that this system cannot be maintained with equal success; but we must also admit, that the characters of the Countess and Susan, in Figaro, are not so widely different but that they might be exchanged at will between Miss Tree and Miss Paton.

We have almost unwittingly touched upon this extremely delicate subject—a subject to which the fair ladies are as sensitively alive as ladies can be to any thing in which the heart is not actually concerned. We shall not venture to give an opinion of a case of the merits of which we are not masters; but, as a hint to Miss Tree, we would merely say, that she ought to feel the impossibility of her suffering in any way, by allowing Miss Paton the full exercise of her "will and power." They are both very charming singers, and we wish them all the success they so eminently deserve; and we trust the cloud which impends will blow over, and that (as it should be in such an affair) harmony will be the order of the day.

A correspondent informs us, that the name of the gentleman who made up the Opera of Maid Marian is Plancue, and not Plank. We are extremely sorry for such a blunder. And a third correspondent tells us, that Mr. Morton never wrote an Opera called Augusta—to which we reply, we know that; but he wrote an Opera called the "Blind Girl," which was the second title of Augusta; and the main incident, and the whole interest of it, are precisely the same as those of the Drury-lane novelty.

At Covent-Garden, a gentleman of the name of Bennett favoured a select audience of his own friends with a very to'erable imitation of Cooke and Macready, interspersed with fragments of Kean. In his attempt to give effect to the latter his voice cracked, and a sound was produced closely resembling the first effort of a young beginner on the French-horn. This appeared to give great offence to the gallery, who considered it a vile caricature of their favourite at Drury-lane; and when the new performer, whose name is Bennett, had puffed and thumped, and pushed and cut, and hacked and chopped with the most rigorous zeal at Mr. Abbott, who appeared by no means to relish the display of strength, (for since that gentleman had his eye knocked out in the Two Gentlemen of Verona, he does not come to the scratch on the stage so kindly as heretofore), he died; and upon the appeal of Mr. Abbott subsequently to the house for their verdict, a wag in the gallery cried out, "Justifiable Homicide." Into the spirit of which verdict upon the gentleman, as far as his theatrical life goes, we fully enter. And yet we would say one word upon the subject of the performance, which we think in justice is due. In any thing but a first-rate character Mr. Bennett might be very respectable; that he should have appeared in Richard is a proof only of his own vanity, and the proprietors' extreme good-nature. In subordinate parts such persons would be very useful; but the mischief is, that these "new hands" will be at the top of the tree at once without climbing. The consequence is, that when they get to the highest branch, they cannot keep their footing—a breeze comes, and either the branch cracks from beneath their feet, or grown giddy, and unable to let themselves down easy, they topple head over heels, and hurt themselves greatly by the tumble. We shall be glad to see Mr. Bennett, not the worse for wear when he recovers from the shock of Tuesday, trying some less extravagant flight.

If, however, we are disposed to hope all this for the actor of Tuesday, we are much less inclined to do so in regard to the author of Wednesday, who, not contented with merely murdering poor Sir Walter Scott, in two or three acts, tortures his unequalled genius through five.

A play, founded on Nigel, attributed to Mr. Horace Twiss, the author of the "Carib Chief," was produced, with all the aid of magnificent scenery and decoration, at Covent Garden, from which the spirit of the original has been suffered entirely to escape, and the most absurd and improbable situations, together with the most obscene and nasty allusions, substituted. Mr. Twiss denies the play, which is natural enough; but the great attention which has been paid to it, we own, savours a little of family affection. However, of one thing we are quite certain, which is, that neither decoration nor music, puffing nor scenery, nor acting itself, will warm it into life or favour.

We regret this, because great exertions have been made, and great hopes entertained, of its success: it was tolerably well received, till the fourth act, when the audience manifested their opinion most unequivocally, and till the conclusion little more was heard with any patience or attention.

Mrs. Chatterley restored a temporary quiet, while she was addressing an Epilogue to the house, but its conclusion was the signal for renewal of hostilities, and the unfortunate play was given out in dumb shew.

The house was crowded to excess.

At Drury Lane, Liston appeared, for the first time, as Tony Lumpkin, and was received with the most unqualified marks of approbation. Terry was substitute for Munden, in Hardcastle, and when we say he gave us no cause to lament the change, we think our readers will be satisfied that he played the part excellently.

The house was by no means full,

IRELAND.

The following circumstances have occurred, which appear well worthy of notice:—

COURT OF KING'S BENCH, Jan. 23.

Criminal Information.—After the Grand Jury were sworn, Mr. Justice Jebb intimated that there was no particular subject that called for observation from the Bench; he therefore requested that they would proceed to the ordinary discharge of their duties. Shortly afterwards the Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Burton and Vandeleur took their seats.

Mr. Geold rose to move for a conditional order for a criminal information, at the prosecution of the Attorney-General, against Thomas Hamilton, of Roscrea. The grounds for granting this information would be found in a letter dated the 3d of January, 1823. It was signed Thomas Hamilton; it bore the initials of that person on the superscription; the hand-writing would be proved by the affidavit of Alderman Darley. With the permission of the Court, he would read the affidavits on which the motion was grounded, and which contained, more explicitly than he could convey, reasons to induce the Court to grant the present application for a conditional order.

The Right Hon. Wm. Conyngham Plunkett, of Stephen's-green, in the City of Dublin, his Majesty's Attorney-General of Ireland, maketh oath and saith, that on or about the 4th day of January inst. he received by post a letter signed "Thomas Hamilton," in the words and figures following:—

"Roscrea, Jan. 3, 1823.

"Sir—The last number of the Evening Post reports that you applied the following words to the Orangemen:—'Unintimidated by that gang, which have formed themselves to beard the King's Government—to overturn the laws of the country—and even to insult and outrage the very person of the King's Representative in Ireland.'—As an Orangeman, I feel myself bound to say, that if you uttered such words, they are false as hell—nor would you dare to use them to any individual of that body. Would you venture to apply such language to Lord O'Neil, Lord Enniskillen, or General Archdall? And because I am the son of an Orangeman, who has distinguished himself by his attachment to the fixed principles of the Constitution, you have done me all the harm in your power; and have prevented me from obtaining a situation, to which my high recommendation and my acknowledged competence entitled me, and have thus, perhaps, destroyed my prospects in life; and you have also made Dr. Magee my father's enemy. If you imagine I can ever be forgetful of these serious injuries, you mistake very much.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

T. HAMILTON.

"To the Right Hon. Wm. Conyngham Plunkett," &c.

The Right Hon. Wm. C. Plunkett, M.P. Stephen's-green, Dublin.—This deponent saith, he believes that the said letter referred to deponent's conduct in the discharge of his official duty at the late commission. This deponent saith, that the observation which deponent made on that occasion with respect to the gang who had associated themselves to beard the King's Government, were applied solely to the persons engaged in the conspiracy, which was the subject of the prosecution then depending; and the principal object of which conspiracy this deponent believes, was to mark to the public and to the government, that there existed in this country a power too strong for the laws, and with which it would be dangerous for the King's Representative to contend. This deponent saith, he made the same observations without any intention of giving offence to any individual, and in strict discharge of what he conceived to be his public duty. This deponent saith, that he is a total stranger to the writer of the said letter, and that until the receipt of the said letter he did not know that any such person was in existence.—This deponent saith, that he is a total stranger to the father of the said Hamilton, and that he never in any instance intended, or attempted to do any injury to the said Hamilton, or to his father; nor does this deponent know to what the said letter in that respect refers. This deponent further saith, that he never made any attempt to make Dr. Magee the enemy of the father of the said Hamilton, or to prejudice him in the opinion of the said Dr. Magee; nor has this deponent any recollection of ever having mentioned the name of the father of the said Hamilton to Dr. Magee, (by whom this deponent supposes the said Hamilton means his Grace the Archbishop of Dublin,) until after the receipt of the said letter. And this deponent further saith, he believes the said letter was written and sent by the said Hamilton, for the purpose of insulting and intimidating this deponent in the discharge of his official duties.

The Learned Counsel next proceeded to read the affidavit of Alderman Darley, which was to the following effect:—Frederick Darley, of William-street, in the city of Dublin, Esq. one of the aldermen of the said city, this day came before me and made oath that he has read a letter bearing date the 3d of Jan. 1823, subscribed T. Hamilton, and addressed to the Right Hon. William Conyngham Plunkett, M.P. Stephen's-green, Dublin, and deponent has marked the said letter with the initials of his name. Deponent saith he is well acquainted with Thomas Hamilton of Roscrea, in the county of Tipperary, and also with the character or manner of his hand-writing, he, this deponent having often seen the said Thomas Hamilton write; and this deponent saith that the whole body and contents of the said letter, and the name T. Hamilton thereto subscribed, and the superscription thereon, is all of the proper hand-writing of the said Thomas Hamilton, as this deponent verily believes.

After Mr. Goold had read the affidavits of the Right Hon. the Attorney General and Alderman Darley, on several passages of which he dwelt with much emphasis, he concluded by stating that, never, perhaps, was more ample and sufficient grounds laid for a criminal information. The masterly manner in which the principal affidavit was drawn up, left no scope for him to improve it by any observations he might offer. A principle of public duty could alone actuate the Attorney General in bringing forward the present prosecution, and he was sure the Court of King's Bench would protect that honourable gentleman in vindicating the violated law of the land.—Chief Justice—Take a conditional order.

POPERY.

We have been requested to publish the following correspondence:—

CORRESPONDENCE RELATIVE TO THE NOTES ON THE RHEMISH TESTAMENT.

DECLARATION OF DOCTOR TROY.

Having seen a new edition of the Rhemish Testament with annotations, published by Coyne, Dublin, and Keating, &c. London, 1816, said to be revised, and corrected, and approved by me—I think it necessary to declare, that I never approved or meant to approve of any edition of the Old or New Testament, which was not entirely conformable, as well in notes as in text, to that which was edited by R. Cross, Dublin, 1791, containing the usual and prescribed formula of my approbation, and which has served as an exemplar to the several editions that have since been published with my sanction.

As in the said new edition the notes vary essentially from those of the last mentioned editions, which, exclusively, I have sanctioned for publication, I should think that circumstance alone, fully sufficient to induce me to withhold every kind of approbation from it; but having read, and now for the first time considered these notes, I not only do not sanction them, but solemnly declare, that I utterly reject them, generally, as harsh and irritating in expression, some of them as false and absurd in reasoning, and many of them as uncharitable in sentiment. They further appear to countenance opinions and doctrines, which, in common with the other Roman Catholics of the Empire, I have solemnly disclaimed on oath.

Under these circumstances, and with these impressions on my mind, I feel it an imperious duty to admonish that portion of the Catholic Body that is entrusted to my charge, of the dangers of reading or paying any attention to the notes or comments of the said new edition of the Testament; and I enjoin the R. C. Clergy of this Diocese to discourage and prevent, by every means in their power, the circulation, amongst Catholics, of a work tending to lead the faithful astray, and much better fitted to engender and promote, amongst Christians, hostility, bitterness, and strife, than (what should be the object of every such production,) to cultivate the genuine spirit of the Gospel—that is, the spirit of meekness, charity and peace.

Dublin, 14th Oct. 1817. J. T. TROY.

TO HIS GRACE THE MOST REV. DR. TROY.

Most Honoured Lord—It is with pain and difficulty that I am obliged to controvert any statement coming from your Grace; but the character which I have earned and maintained for these fifteen years Ireland, as the only publisher and bookseller in the kingdom of works exclusively Catholic puts me under the indispensable necessity of addressing your Grace in public. The Declaration which your Grace has published, leaves no other alternative, but that of either submitting to the imputations which it fastens upon me, or of giving, as I now do, a simple statement of facts, for the truth of which, I appeal to your Grace's candour—and which shall, I trust, substantially remove the impression that your Grace's Declaration is calculated to produce on the public mind, with regard to me.

On Monday, the 13th instant, your Grace sent me a message by your servant, requesting to see me at Cavendish-row, at the hour of two o'clock. I had scarcely entered your apartment, when the Rev. Dr. Hamill, your Grace's Vicar-General, and the Rev. Dr. Kenney, of Clongowes College, appeared. Your Grace then produced and read a paper, purporting to be an extract from The British Critic, and containing animadversions on the Notes of a late edition of the Catholic Bible, bearing on the title page the approbation of your Grace. You then observed, that you were sure I had no bad intention in putting your Grace's name to the work; but that very bad consequences had followed; that, finding its way into England, it had armed our enemies against us, and this at a time, when we were seeking Emancipation. Upon these remarks, I asked, Did not your Grace approve and sanction the publication of a Bible by a Mr. M'Namara, of Cork? Your Grace replied, "I did." I then asked, Did not your Grace depute the Rev. Mr. P. A. Walsh, of Denmark-street Chapel, to revise, correct, and approve for publication, in your Grace's name, the said Bible of Mr. M'Namara? Your Grace answered, "I did." Then, my Lord, said I, that is the Bible, now in your hand.—"I never authorised," replied your Grace, "the Rev. Mr. Walsh to approve a Bible with Rhemish Notes." Of any private understanding between your Grace and Mr. Walsh, I know nothing; but this I know, that Mr. Walsh is accountable for your Grace's approbation, which is now in the title page. But, said his Grace, are not you the person who published this Bible—it bears your name? No, my Lord, said I, I am neither printer nor publisher; and I shall now relate to your Grace how it comes to bear my name:—Mr. M'Namara, the publisher of the Bible, to which your Grace gave you sanction, became a Bankrupt before the work was completed. Mr. John Cumming, of Ormond-quay, Assignee to the Bankrupt, purchased the unfinished part, and to cover his own loss, resolved on perfecting the publication. Having called upon and requested of me to allow him to put my name to the work, I refused, except upon the condition, that the Clergyman, deputed by your Grace, continued to correct the unfinished part. This I did, without any interest whatever in the transaction. Mr. Cumming accordingly applied to the Rev. Mr. Walsh, to whom he paid 20*l.* on completing his revision of the work, and took his receipt for the amount. When I had finished this narrative, your Grace, in the presence of Dr. Hamill and the Rev. Mr. Kenney, acquitted me, in the most unequivocal terms, of having any thing to do with the publication. I then remarked, that your Grace having, in different conversations, disclaimed your approbation; and certain individuals having, in consequence, denounced me as the forger of it, I should, in my own defence, publish the whole transaction; upon which your Grace promised me to take every opportunity of undeceiving those to whom you had spoken on the subject.—To the truth of what I have now related, touching the interview of Monday, the 13th instant, I appeal to your Grace, to Dr. Hamill, and the Rev. Mr. Kenney.

Did I not afterwards send your Grace the numbers of this said Rhemish Testament, on the covers of which are printed these words:—"Now publishing by M'Namara, the Catholic Bible . . . . To render it the more complete, the elegant, copious, and instructive Notes, or Annotations, of the Rhemish Testament will be inserted . . . . By permission of his Grace Dr. J. Troy, Catholic Lord Primate of Ireland . . . . This work is carefully revising by the Rev. P. A. Walsh, of Denmark-street . . . . Printed by Cumming, Dublin."—Moreover, did I not accompany these numbers with a letter, calling on your Grace to make good your promise of clearing my character from the imputations it had lain under from your Grace's misconception of facts? This letter, my Lord, I suppress, from the same motives of delicacy which have kept me silent, until your Grace's declaration forced me thus to state the facts; nor shall I add one single comment; but leave the public to draw their own conclusions.—I am, most honoured Lord, your Grace's very humble and most obedient servant, RICHARD COYNE.

Parliament-street, October 26, 1817.

AMERICA.

The following is by no means unworthy of the attention of our readers:—

MATRIMONIAL SQUIBBING.

The following advertisements are copied from an American paper:—

"Adieu!—But, when time has divested thee of those gaudy trappings, with which, at my expense, thou hast decorated thyself, and restored thee to that threadbare state from which a mistaken confidence rescued you—then may reflection, like the gnawings of that worm which 'never dies,' render thy existence doubly irksome by contrasting wretchedness and want with opulence and ease. All persons are forbid trusting my wife Eliza, on my account, as I will pay no debts of her contracting after this date. BOSTWICK HURD."

"Huntington, October 2, 1822.

"TO MR. BOSTWICK HURD.

"Scarcely another man, and I am sure no woman could be found, of mind sufficiently comprehensive, of thought sufficiently dignified, and of sensibility sufficiently tender, nice, and delicate, to reach the sublimity and 'pompous inanity' of your public notice of me. Your depth of intellect, the effulgence of your ideas, the brilliance, radiance, and splendour of their combinations, the sweet suavity and decorum of your style, the diarrhœa of your words, the exuberance and display of your fancy, the glowing effervescence of your imagination, are indeed surpassing, wonderful, and interesting. Panegyric is fulsome, 'but praise is comely,' and is a tributary meed justly due to merit. With all this good opinion of you, I think no earthly being could be found who, as you have done, would address an innocent woman, unless the 'dark and benighted corners of his soul' were inspired by pestiferous whispers of some fiend-like messenger from the regions of malice, within the breast of whose inhabitants festering, rankle hate and spite, and every baneful and deleterious passion, and 'where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched,' most of all which you say is, to 'pray that irksome reflection may at rest me;' and to imprecate no, not even with the semblance of wrong, except the unfortunate and much regretted, and sincerely repented criminality of giving her young and tender hand, matrimonially, to the paw of a barbarian of nearly twice her years, and of participating in his ignorance 'opulence.' For this I own I have no apology, but that indiscretion, not unfrequently found in females with the experience only of years less than sixteen—the urgency of friends, and the prevalent intercession and solicitation of Mr. H.'s great native talents aided by superior cultivation, and cursed with an unconquerable perseverance. You 'pray,' after I shall have worn out my present apparel, at the expense of your 'opulence,' a sum indeed vast and cumbrous, the aggregate of six or eight hundred dollars, for which you have, for aught I know, been obliged to sell the numerous acres, or expansive pittance of your patrimonial estates, that of the least impropriety of conduct, or the smallest indiscretion, must be black indeed. Moreover, if you will settle accounts, and honestly pay for washing, knitting, sowing, spinning, and mother for weaving, there will be a sufficient balance to buy me at least one suit more of rich, fine, variegated, and beautiful calico at 12 1-2 to 18 cents per yard, which will daily with the "brilliant decorations" you name at the expence of your "opulent" treasury.

Go, miscreant, go!
Dost bid "Adieu!" thou silly Elf!
Echo replies, same to yourself.
A sweet farewell—a long "Adieu!"
Poor Bostwick Hurd, I bid to you;
But wish thee well, whate'er thy course is,
Be blessings thine, but never curses.

Who would live with a man without any brains, whose thick hollow skull on a rap would ring like an empty gill cup, if his coat, vest, and pantaloons were lined with all the bank-bills of all the banks in Christendom, and his coffers stored with all the gold coin, dollars, dimes, and cents in all their vaults? Notwithstanding all your cruel imprecations of curses causeless upon me, without the challenge of the least thing incorrect on my part, from the respect I have to decency, though with infinite regret and mortification I associate yours, and subscribe myself,

"Huntington, Dec. 5." ELIZA HURD."

MEMOIRS of GEORGE HERIOT, Jeweller to King James VI. With an Historical Account of the Hospital founded by him at Edinburgh.—Printed for Burst, Robinson, and Co. 90, Cheapside, and 8, Pall-mall, London: and Archibald Constable and Co. Edinburgh.
This work contains accounts and vouchers, from a very curious volume of original papers, relative to Jewels furnished to Anne of Denmark, Queen of James VI. from the year to 1605 to 1615, by Heriot, who forms such a prominent and interesting character in the Romance of the "Fortunes of Nivel, by the Author of Waverley." It is illustrated with fac-similes of the hand-writing of Queen Anne and Heriot, with a portrait of the latter, and other engravings.

BRITISH BOTANY.
Just published, in royal 8vo. with coloured plates, price 4s. No. 8, of the SCOTTISH CRYPTOGAMIC FLORA; or, Coloured Figures and Descriptions of Cryptogamic Plants found in Scotland, belonging chiefly to the order Fungi, and intended to serve as a continuation of English Botany. By R. K. GREVILLE, ESQ. F.R.S. &c. &c.—This Work appears in Monthly Numbers, each of which contains Five Plates. The Figures are all drawn by the Author, engraved under his inspection, and coloured in a very superior manner by an artist of the first eminence. In consequence of the sale the publication has met with, the regular continuation of it may be depended upon.—Printed for M'Lachlan, and Stewart, Edinburgh; and Baldwin, Cradock, and Joy, London.

Just published, price 9s. the Twelfth Part, completing the Work, of

A UNIVERSAL TECHNOLOGICAL DICTIONARY; or Familiar Explanation of the Terms used in all Arts and Sciences; containing definitions drawn from original sources, and illustrated by sixty plates, and very numerous wood-cuts of diagrams, arms, &c. By GEORGE CRABB, A.M. author of "English Synonymes Explained."
London: printed for Baldwin, Cradock, and Joy.
☞ It is with feelings of pride and gratification, that the publishers of the Technological Dictionary announce the Twelfth and last Number of a work, which, for variety and comprehensiveness of information, systematic arrangement, and practical utility, challenges a rival in the annals of literature; and it is not the smallest part of their boast that, notwithstanding the unexampled difficulties which have attended the progress of this work through the press, they have been enabled, by the assiduity of all engaged in it, punctually to perform their pledge at every returning period of publication. As the publishers were determined to spare no expence in giving a work of this importance all the completeness which it would admit, they engaged artists of the first celebrity in different departments to execute the plates, who have performed their task with such success that, combining the author's scientific arrangement with their own skill, they have rendered these plates no less ornamental than they are useful.—Having now done all in their power to give this work a decided superiority over every other book of reference, the publishers look forward to the period, at no great distance, when, its merits being fully known, and duly appreciated by the public, there will not be found a lover of literature in this or any other country, where the English language is known, who will not consider the Technological Dictionary an important acquisition to his library.—The whole work, price 5l. 8s. in boards, may be procured on application to any respectable bookseller; or it may still be taken in parts, by those to whom such a mode of purchase is most convenient.

IN SIX EASY LESSONS OF ONE HOUR EACH.—MR BRADBURY, Private Tutor at Westminster School, solicits the attention of Ladies and Gentlemen to his unrivalled and infallible system of beautiful PENMANSHIP, whereby he pledges himself to teach persons of all ages to write with ease, elegance, and expedition, (whatever may be the deformity of their present writing) in six progressive Lessons. This system, as it equally promotes the attainment of a bold and masculine hand calculated for business, and of a light and graceful manuscript adapted to Ladies; also secures to the Pupil the certainty of writing straight, without lines, with wonderful dispatch and accuracy, and, moreover, will steady the hand of the most tremulous writer. Upwards of 2000 specimens, and numerous recommendatory letters may be seen, and references given to persons of distinction, some of whom have attained upwards of 80 years of age. Private tuition at home. Ladies and Gentlemen attended at their own residences. A new and practical system of Short Hand, taught in a few lessons, so as to enable the writer to decipher what he has written with inconceivable ease.—Apply, (or direct, post paid) at the Academy, 464, Strand, near Charing Cross.

RICH SILKS, SHAWLS, and LACE, SELLING OFF.—HUBBARD and CO. Silk Mercers and Lacemen to the Royal Family, announce to the Nobility and Public that the Lease of their House, under the Duke of Bedford, is expired, and in consequence of the necessity of rebuilding the Premises, the whole of their FASHIONABLE STOCK is SELLING OFF without reserve. Many of the following articles are selling considerably under prime cost: rich Gros de Naples, Figured Silk and Satins, Striped Sarsenets and Lutestrings, Figured Grenadines, Cachemire and Tartan Shawls, French Cambrics, Poplins, Taffetas, the new Cyprus Crapes, French Gauze Robes for Ball Dresses, White Satins, and Silk Stockings. An immense stock of curious Shawls of every description. Superb Lace Dresses, Veils, Scarfs, and Bobbin Nets. Added to every novelty for Morning and Evening Costume in the looms. Also several thousand yards of rich Silk Tabbarays, so prevalent in the higher circles for Furniture, which can be made to every colour that may be required for Dining or Drawing Room Curtains, at 7s. 3d. instead of 11s. a yard. No patterns cut, or parcels sent, unless previously paid for. Black Bombazeens, Crapes, Sarsnets, &c. for Family Mourning.—Spitalfields House, 12, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden.

PARLIAMENT ASSEMBLED—It has ever been our study to provide novelties for that approaching period, for the invitation of families, who may be now about returning to town, to the inspection of an immense stock of FASHIONABLE SILKS, superior in choice to that of any former year, in the most exquisite splendour of modern colours. Rich shaile Gros de Naples, 2s. 6d. to 2s. 9d. a yd; double do. the most pleasing shades, superior to French, 3s. 3d. to 4s. 6d.; rich Ducapes, 3 quarters wide, 3s. 9d. to 4s. 9d.; 600 pieces of very rich Levantine Silk, French width, 2s. 3d. to 2s. 6d. SEWELL and CROSS beg to observe that these Silks are not Sarsnets called Gros de Naples and Levantines; they are the real Gros de Naples, made entirely of double Silks, got up under their own immediate inspection, an article which must ever do credit to the British manufactory; with 300 pieces of rich Stripe Sarsnets, purchased of an unfortunate maker, 2s. 2d. to 2s. 6d.; ditto, Persian Silks, for linings, every shade, 1s. 4d. to 1s. 7d.; 90 pieces rib-wide Silk Gauzes, every colour, 11½d. and 1s.; figured ditto, Gossamer Gauzes, for turbans, 1s. 3d. per yard, commonly sold at 2s. 6d.; 80 pieces of black and white Sattins for slips, 2s. 6d. per yard; very stout ditto, for dresses, 3s. and 3s. and 4d.; 80 bales of rib-wide India Long Cloths, got up entirely free from dress, measuring 25 yards, for 15s. 6d. the piece; a beautiful fine article, in real Madras cloth, 25 yards, for 20s. these cloths are particularly suited for family use, and much recommended to ladies going to the East or West Indies; 30 boxes of French Cambric Handkerchiefs, of the improved bleach, (a great bargain) beginning at 20s. the dozen to the finest quality, made at 2l. A discount of 5 per cent. allowed to the trade by purchasing an entire box, which contains 25 dozen; 200 dozen of Angola and Persia tippets, all at 2s. each; and 400 Bragauza Shawls, 8s. and 8s. 6d.; 20 bales of Russia Sheetings, measuring 3 yds wide, which prevents the necessity of a seam, 2s. 10d. and 3s. with an endless variety of Damask Table Cloths and Napkins, for family use; 200 pieces of coloured Morocco, for furnitures, 1s. 3d. per yard, and 400 of the best domine quality, every shade, (a 5l. article) worth 2s. 2d. at SEWELL and CROSS'S, 42, Frith-street, Corner of old Compton-street, Soho-square.——Ladies bringing the Advertisement with them, may depend on having every article at the prices advertised, which is contrary to the unpleasant mode so frequently adopted in the West part of London

TO THE FASHIONABLE WORLD.—DISON, WILLSON, and CO. respectfully invite Ladies, patronesses of taste and fashion, to an inspection of their new, costly and extensive Stock of FOREIGN and BRITISH LACE, which they, with confidence, affirm to exceed any hitherto offered. From correspondents at Paris, Brussels, &c. they are supplied with the newest designs of foreign taste, thus forming in one mart the unique productions of continental with the chaste originals of British costume. From the delusive advertisements of ambitious manufacturers, professing to sell imitation Lace at a low price, D. W. and Co. hold it their duty to apprize ladies that, having a Manufactory at Brussels, they can and will offer their real Point à l'Aiguille and Brussels fabrics considerably lower than any badly executed imitations, fully assured the superiority of texture and uniform correctness of design will be apparent on inspection, and a single trial will establish their durability in wear. They have just received from their manufactory a splendid collection of real Point and Brussels dresses, squares, scarfs, veils, mantellas, caps, &c. A large assortment of Blonde, Mechlin, and Valenciennes laces, which, in addition to an immense stock of every article in the British Gassed Lace, (commonly known by the name of Urling's Lace) they are determined to sell at the lowest prices. D. W. and Co. beg leave to submit to ladies' attention several novelties for the season, peculiar to their house, viz. the Verona Tippet, for Opera and evening costume: Robes a la Diane and Gastrine; Colls Parisienne; Sleeves Dejeune; Quadrille Robes; Aprons; Reticules; Purses, &c. calculated for the frequenters of Almack's, Willis's, &c.—N.B. Lace Dresses from 2l. 10s. to 75 guineas.—No. 237, Regent-street, facing the Argyle Rooms.

BLANKETS, COUNTERPANES, SHEETINGS, DAMASK TABLE LINEN, Welsh Flannel, India Long Cloth, Irish Linen, French Cambric, and General Linen Drapery. Haberdashery, and Silk Mercery Warehouse, 59, Oxford-street, next door to Ginter's old established Fur Warehouse. —KINNING and CO. now offer to the Nobility and Families in general a new and select Stock in the above branches of business, not at half price, as advertisements generally puff, but at such low prices as K. and Co. can with confidence assert will meet their entire approbation, and ensure to them their future commands.—Real Witney Blankets, full size, and very superior, proved only by inspection—3½ yds long 4s. 9d.; 2 yds do. 5s. 6d.; 2¼ yds 7s. 6d.; 2½ yds, 11s.; 2¾ do. 14s. 6d.; 3 yds do. 17s. and in proportion to four yds: Counterpanes, 2 yds square, 6s.; 2¼ yds do. 7s.; 2½ yds do. 8s. 6d.; 2¾ yds do 10s.; 3 yds do. 12s. 6d.; Marseilles Quilts, 2¼ yds square, 13s. 6d.; 2¾ do. 15s.; 3 yds do. 16s.; 3½ yds do. 18s. 6d.; all warranted to measure as stated above; Servants' Sheetings, 3d. per yd; the best made, 1½ yd wide Russia, 7d. per yard; 1¼ wide do. 1s. 2d.; 1½ wide do. very stout, 1s. 6d.; 2¼ yds do. require no seam, 3s. 3d.; Table Cloths, Damask Napkins, 7s. 6d. per dozen; Breakfast Cloths, 1¼ square, 1s. 10d.; 1¼ ditto, 3s. 3d.; 1½ ditto, 4s. 9d.; 2 yards ditto, 6s. 6d.; 2¼ ditto, 8s. 3d.; double damask do. 11s. 6d.; 3 yds long do. 14s. double damask do. 19s.; 3½ yds do. 22s. 6d.; 4 yds do. 25s.; and in proportion to the largest made. Several boxes of Irish Linens, of the most approved makers, warranted, from 1s. per yard; a fine quality, for Gentlemen's wear, 1s. 3d.; Real Welsh Flannels, very fine, 1s. 6d. and 1s. 8d. per yard; India Long Cloths, perfectly free from dress 12d. and the finest made 1s. 3d. per yard. Several boxes of French Cambric Handkerchiefs, the largest size 24s. per dozen; fine Irish sheetings, one yard and a quarter wide, 1s. 6d. with every other article in Linens for household purposes. Their Stock of plain, figured, and striped Gros de Naples are now offered to the public at a great reduction in price; purchasers of these articles, and of washing Silks, will find a ready access to market. White Flounced Robes of every description are still at their reduced prices, and some new Spring Patterns just purchased for ready money will be sold at the same reduction. K. and Co. take this opportunity of informing their present friends and those who may in future honour them with their commands, that they have extended their Business by adding to it the general Haberdashery, Silk Mercery, Glove and Silk Hosiery departments, which they pledge themselves to offer upon the lowest possible terms, and to sell articles of the best manufacture. A per centage allowed upon all purchases amounting to 10l. and upwards, at Kinning and Co. 59, Oxford-street.

THE ROYAL FAMILY, NOBILITY, GENTRY, and LADIES and GENTLEMEN may rely on it, they will not have a hair fall off or turn grey by now using Prince's celebrated Russia Oil, as it is so improved with an extraordinary valuable ingredient, through which it has made Russia Oil the greatest nourisher and preserver to the hair in the Universe, will make it grow thick and long, and prevent its falling off or ever turning grey, and is such a nourisher to the roots of the hair, that if it even has begun to turn grey, will restore it again to its natural colour, and if used often it will never turn grey again, and is sure to clear the scurf, from infancy to old age, and when dressing with it, will always keep the hair soft and Hair clean and beautiful. Gentlemen who are troubled with their hair, and have the least symptoms of hair remaining, by using regularly, for a few months, Prince's Improved Russia Oil, with the extra valuable ingredient, will be sure to restore it, and produce a fine head of hair, which hundreds have experienced. Even Medical Gentlemen have published, in the Gazetteof Health, that Prince's Russia Oil is superior to any oil for the hair; and will do, in cases of baldness and weak hair, what can possibly be done.
It is no wonder that Ladies and Gentlemen have complained of late of the Russia Oil not being of service to the hair, as they have found out that unprincipled persons have sold them counterfeits.
Ladies and Gentlemen will be particular, as impostors in Great Britain, France, and other different parts of the Continent, have made the covers of the Counterfeit Russia Oil so much like the genuine, and some, more to deceive, falsely have printed on the counterfeit covers "The original," or "genuine Russia Oil," and some even are so daring, although they know it is punishable, to put the Original Proprietor's Name. Therefore purchasers should be cautious, and have it of the Proprietor, or of respectable Venders.
Ask for Prince's Improved Russia Oil, with the extra ingredient, and observe "Prince" on the wrapper and seals, and his address, "A. Prince, No. 9, Poland-street, Oxford-street, London," is on the cover of each bottle; without it is not genuine, and cannot answer the purpose. The ounce bottle five shillings, or a large bottle, containing five ounces, one pound, which is a saving.
Sold by the sole Proprietor, A. Prince, No. 9, Poland-street, Oxford-street near the Pantheon; and by most principal Perfumers and Medicine Venders.
Ladies and Gentlemen residing in the country, by sending a remittance to the Proprietor, and it will be forwarded immediately by coach.
Merchants and Captains will receive a liberal allowance for exportation.

LATEST NEWS.

Advices from Paris reached town yesterday, but they contain nothing further on the subject of a war with Spain, than may be gathered from the French King's Speech inserted under our foreign head.—The Five per Cents. advanced on Thursday to 80¼ but before the Couriers were despatched, they had receded to 79⅞.

Eight Hamburgh mails and Dutch papers to the 29th ult. also arrived; they contradict the accounts which lately appeared in the Paris Journal of disturbances in the Netherlands, occasioned by the tax on grinding corn.

The health of the King, we are rejoiced to state, continues hourly to improve.

The Duke of York is recovered from his late attack, which was inflammation in the chest.

Several of the Ministers went down to Brighton on Friday to a Cabinet Council, at which were present, His Majesty, the Lord President, Privy Seal, Lord Liverpool, Lord Bathurst, the Duke of Wellington, Mr. Robinson, Mr. Bathurst, &c. and at which the speech was taken into consideration.

On Friday the Spanish Minister transacted business at the Foreign Office, Downing-street, for a considerable time.

The Earl of Liverpool will entertain a large party of the Peers today and to-morrow, with a sumptuous dinner at Fife-house. A number of cards of invitation have been issued on the occasion.

Mr. Vansittart is recovering from his illness.

Mr. Putnam's recitations and readings at the Argyle Rooms continue to attract much company. Town is filling rapidly, and no doubt the exertions of this Gentleman, to entertain an auditory, will meet with proper encouragement on the next night, which we understand is fixed for Friday next.

In the Court of King's Bench yesterday, in the case of Nosley v. Cook, and others.—The defendants, Commissioners of Bankrupts, committed the plaintiff, a bankrupt, for not answering questions, as to the disposal of his property, to their satisfaction. Plaintiff obtained a Habeas Corpus, and the Court of King's Bench discharged him. He then served the Commissioners for assault and false imprisonment. A point as to the liability of the Commissioners was reserved.—The Chief Justice delivered the judgment of the Court—Commissioners of Bankrupts, were persons having a limited authority, but if they went beyond it they were liable; but if the act they did was within the limit of their authority, even though such an act was done on an erroneous judgment, no action would lie. Judgment for defendants.

In the Insolvent Debtors' Court, yesterday, Matthew Marcus Crosbie was opposed by Messrs. Smith and Co. and remanded for six months for fraudulently contracting debts with them.

NORWICH UNION.—The Annual General Meeting of the Norwich Union Fire Insurance Society was held on the 14th inst. at the Office, in Surrey Street, Norwich, at which it appeared that the affairs of the Society were in a most satisfactory state; and that the property insured amounted to more than forty millions, which places the Society third in the List of Fire Insurance Offices in the United Kingdom.—Norwich Mercury, 25th January, 1823.

FINE ANTIQUE GLASSES, FURNITURE, &c.—The Nobility and Gentry are invited to inspect the Warerooms of Cooper and Son, 83, Bishopsgate-street Within, where is exhibited a large Assortment of new and second-hand Plate Glasses, admirably suited to every description of drawing or dining-rooms. In the furniture department is comprised every new and elegant article of upholstery, cabinet, and chair work, the prices of which are reduced on such a scale of economy as to attract and ensure the patronage of rank and fashion.

The attention of youth of both sexes is particularly directed to that inestimable ornament the Human Hair, as that attended to in youth is a sure preservation, and fixes a stamina for a beautiful Head of Hair. The only article that really possesses nutricious virtues for promoting a luxuriant growth of Hair is Rowlands' Macassar Oil, which eradicates the scurf easy and pleasant, prevents the Hair falling off or turning grey, strengthens and produces beautiful flowing Curls, and renders Hair that is harsh and dry, as soft, smooth, and glossy as silk. As imposters purchase the empty bottles, and offer for sale a pernicious composition instead of the genuine, it is indispensably necessary to ask for "Rowlands'," and observe the prices are 3s. 6d.—7s.—10s. 6d. and 21s. and each genuine bottle is wrapped in a book, signed on the outside in red, "A. Rowland and Son."

WINDSOR SOAP.—J. Atkinson, 44, Gerrard-street, Soho-square, London, respectfully informs the Public that his Double Refined Windsor Soap will be found a soap of a very superior kind; it is made of the best materials, and freed from the caustic properties contained in most Soaps, and which acts so injuriously to a delicate skin; its perfume is a complete bouquet; it is gently detergent, emollient in use, very durable, and sold at the price of the commonest articles: it is highly valuable in the nursery, and where the skin of adults have got hard, rough, or uneven, it gradually, but with certainty, corrects such imperfections, and renders the skin luxuriously soft, white, and even. Half-pound packages, 1s. 2d.; pounds, 2s. by taking a dozen, 1s. 9d.—Sold by most Perfumers, but the genuine has the Proprietor's signature and address on the label.

STAYS and ELASTIC BELTS.—REMOVAL.—ROBINSON and VISTRIN (removed to 65, New Bond-street) submit for Ladies' inspection their NEW PATENT STAYS, that rectify spinal deflections, counteract vertebral curvatures, support and cure persons awry, making the form appear perfectly straight and shapely without any pernicious steel, padding, or pressure. Elastic Belts, which reduce corpulency, visceral enlargement, unsightly forms, local debility, relieve and strengthen simultaneously, and give comfortable support before and after accouchement.—They warrant their fashionable Corsets and Children's Stays to fit elegantly, however difficult the figure. Country residents instructed to send measures.—It is material to be correct in the names and number of the House—65, New Bond-street, London.

SELLING OFF.—REAL BARGAINS.—Fifteen Thousand Pounds worth of Silks, Laces, Muslins, and Shawls. Rich Levantines, 3s. 6d. to 5s. Oro de Naples, 3s. to 4s. 6d.; striped Lustrings, 3s.; stout Sarsnets, 2s. 6d. to 3s.; 1800 Gros de Naples, 2s. 6d. each, sold last year for two and three Guineas; the beautiful Zamora Shawls, from 4s. 6d. to 9s. 6d. usually sold at two Guineas; Astrachan Cashmere, 25s.; Tartarian do. 24s. the Dress; 3000 Muslin Dresses, from 3s. 6d. to 15s.; Lace Dresses and Veils equally cheap.—It is presumed that large buyers will pay most particular attention to this Advertisement, as the goods are of the very best description, and are selling at the above low Prices by LEWIS', 29, Hereford-street, Covent-garden, who is going to remove to Regent-street early in March, by which time he is determined to clear his present Stock.

SILKS—SILKS SELLING OFF.

ANSELM SHEARS, gratefully impressed with the favours which for fourteen years he has received from the ROYAL FAMILY, NOBILITY, and GENTRY, respectfully informs them, that, in consequence of the Lease of his House having expired at Christmas last, he is compelled to SELL OFF the whole of his valuable Stock, comprising not only an immense variety of Fashionable Silks, Poplins, Cashmeres, Norwich Crapes, Gros de Naples, Ducapes, Florence Silks, Shaded Sarsnets, Shawls, Scarfs, &c. but those new and beautiful Patterns at present weaving in the Looms, all of which must be SOLD without the least RESERVE. The Looms contain several Thousand Yards of Striped Silk Tabarets for Drawing-room Curtains and Furnitures at 3s. 9d. per yard.—LEWIS', 29, Hereford-street, Covent-garden, who is going to remove to Regent-street early in March, by which time he is determined to clear his present Stock.

The Looms contain several Thousand Yards of Striped Silk Tabarets for Drawing-room Curtains and Furnitures at 3s. 9d. per yard.—LEWIS', 29, Hereford-street, Covent-garden, who is going to remove to Regent-street early in March, by which time he is determined to clear his present Stock.

A VALUABLE ESTABLISHED MANUFACTORY in the Country, a distance from London of upwards of 100 miles, to be DISPOSED of. No Premium required, and yielding a nett profit of 70 per cent. on the Capital employed.—Any reasonable trial, to prove to demonstration the truth of this statement, will be made a part of the contract with the purchaser; and no facility being given, time will be allowed for payment of Trade, Implements, and Utensils. For three or six months the present Proprietor will assist in the management of the Business.—The reason why so large a profit is afforded is, that the Proprietor of the Trade wishes to retire, and will take a moderate rent on the Buildings, or sell them; Tools by valuation.—The undersigned the referees will afford every information regarding the Manufactory, and the cause for the liberality held out; and every assistance in making the Business so profitable.—Mr. Noble, Lambeth-marsh, and Mr. Richardson, Battersea bridge.

CAFE ROYAL, AND HOTEL, Regent-street, London.—In calling the attention of the Nobility and Gentry to this Establishment, JOHN CROSS deems it necessary to state that the Café Royal is not a House for Subscribers only, as has been erroneously supposed. It is similar to the most celebrated Cafés in Paris, but on an improved principle, and combines all the domestic comforts of a Club House with the advantages of a first rate Hotel. The Coffee Room is furnished in the most magnificent style of elegance, in the French taste, but with superior materials. The Refreshments consist of Déjeûnes à la fourchette, Tea, Coffee, Soups, Ices, Confectionery, and Dinners of every description dressed in the French or English style. Champagne of exquisite flavour, sparkling and creaming, just imported from France; Rhenish, Claret, with all other approved Wines of the finest quality. Liqueurs, Fruits, and every other foreign delicacy, the whole with fixed prices à la carte. The main object of this Establishment is to combine comfort with elegance, and whilst the Proprietor hopes that it will become a place of fashionable resort for foreigners, he begs leave to assure his English patrons that every attention shall be paid to their accommodation.—English and Foreign Newspapers.

A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY.—All who are afflicted with the RHEUMATISM or GOUT may find speedy relief, for the Sum of Five Guineas, by applying to W. W. S, Wine-office-court, upon the principles of no cure no pay.

OPINIONS AS TO THE REAL STATE OF THE NATION; with Strictures on a pamphlet intitled "The Administration of the Affairs of Great Britain," &c. By the Ghost of the Marquess of Londonderry.—Printed for and published by William Wright, 45, Fleet-street.

The following is an extract:—

"Before I proceed to offer some remarks upon the leading topics likely to engage the attention of the Parliament, I cannot but observe upon a pamphlet, intitled, 'Administration of the Affairs of Great Britain,' (The term 'Great Britain' might, I should think, be well superseded, on proper occasions, by the more commanding style of 'British Empire.')

"I am inclined to think, that semi-official announcements are often dangerous, at most times impolitic, and always open to suspicion.

"They afford timely to usher in ministerial statements, or projected measures, if they are intended so, at most times impolitic, and always open to suspicion. If they are intended to usher in ministerial statements, or projected measures, they afford timely means and notice to all who are interested in thwarting them, or creating a prejudice in the public opinion against them; they also detract much from the efficacy of the responsible statements, which, from the Throne, or in the Houses of Parliament. Besides, they are not tangible. If erroneous, they are disavowed, or left in a state of doubt as to their presumed character; and thus the Government has two mouth-pieces: one of official responsibility, and one of an experimental convenience. I am inclined to think, that semi-official announcements are often dangerous

THEATRE ROYAL COVENT GARDEN.—Monday, King Henry the Eighth.—Tuesday, Nigel.—Thursday, School for Scandal.—Saturday, Nigel.

NEW THEATRE ROYAL DRURY LANE.—Monday, King Lear. In obedience to the suggestions of men of literary eminence, from the time of Addison, that the original fifth act of the Tragedy of King Lear should be restored, the Proprietor deems it his duty to pay deference to such opinion: and Mr. Kean will conclude the character of Lear as originally written by Shakespeare.—Tuesday, Guy Mannering.—Thursday, Love in a Village.—Friday, A Grand Selection of Antient and Modern Music.—Saturday, Artaxerxes. Mandane, Miss Stephens.

TO PARENTS and GUARDIANS.—WANTED immediately, A genteel Youth, of a liberal education, as an APPRENTICE to a CHEMIST and DRUGGIST, in the most fashionable Watering-place in Kent. The situation and advantages being very superior, an adequate premium will be expected. He will be treated in every respect as one of the family. References will be given and required. OPINIONS as to the REAL STATE of the NATION. By the GHOST of the MARQUIS of LONDONDERRY. These opinions embrace the following subjects:—Strictures on a Pamphlet said to be Demi-official —Defence of the Diplomacy of the late Marquis—Explanation of the Six Acts—England a powerful Neutral—Her Commerce necessary to other States—Public Credit—Agricultural Distress—New System of Poor Laws—Principles on which the Commutation of Tithe may be effected, &c.—William Wright, 46, Fleet-street, Publisher; and to be had of all Booksellers in Town and Country.

Just published, in 3 vols. 12mo. 24s.

ISABELLA; a NOVEL. By the author of "Rhoda," "Plain Sense," and "Things by their Right Names."—Also, a Second Edition of RHODA, 2 vols. 28s.

"The reader of sensibility who wishes to see the human heart developed in the natural circumstances of life, will find a rich entertainment in the present work, which exhibits with great force the superior influence of art over nature, in the fashionable world. Like the Cecilia of Miss Burney, the characters speak for themselves, and are chiefly elicited by dialogue, which, in a most excellent and animated strain, pervades the work. The character of Rhoda is more happily drawn, because truer to nature than that of any heroine that has for a long time appeared before us."

LETTERS FROM SPAIN. By DON LEUCADIO DOBLADO. "This is an invaluable Work.—Morning Chron.

"The merit of these letters consists, not merely in giving an accurate and entertaining account of Modern Spanish Life and Manners, but they call for our attention in a more important point of view, as exhibiting a vigorous and masterly sketch of the moral and political state of Spain, previously to its late regeneration; at the same time, affording us such an insight into the Spanish character, as may assist us in examining the causes which have led to that great event, and ascertaining the probability of the success and stability of the new system."—Monthly Review.

NAPOLEON'S GREAT WORK.

Just published, the first 2 vols. in 8vo. containing a Fac-Simile and four plans, in French, 24s.; in English, 28s.

MEMOIRS of the HISTORY of FRANCE, during NAPOLEON'S REIGN, dictated at St. Helena, to Counts Montholon, Bertrand, Gourgaud, &c. and published from the original manuscripts. Corrected by himself.

"On those sheets are traced events that will never be forgotten, portraits that will decide the judgment of posterity. It is the book of life or death to many whose names are recorded in it."—Opinion of Las Cases in his Journal.

Printed for Henry Colburn and Co. Conduit street; and M. Bossange and Co. Great Marlborough-street.

Just published, in two parts, 8vo. French, 18s. and English, 21s.

COUNT LAS CASES' JOURNAL of the CONVERSATIONS of the EMPEROR NAPOLEON at SAINT HELENA. From the Original MSS. seized, and until lately retained, by the British Government.

Of these conversations the Count observes, that "Napoleon invariably speaks with perfect coolness, without passion, without prejudice, and without resentment, of the events and the persons connected with his life. He seems as though he could be equally capable of becoming the ally of his most cruel enemy, and of living with the man who had done him the greatest wrong. He speaks of his past history, as if it had occurred three centuries ago; in his recitals and observations he speaks the language of past ages; he is like a spirit discoursing in the Elysian fields; his conversations are the eulogues of the dead. He speaks of himself as of a third person; noticing the Emperor's actions, pointing out the faults with which history may reproach him, and analysing the reasons and the motives which might be alleged in his justification, &c. &c."

Printed for Henry Colburn and Co. Conduit-street; and Bossange and Co. Great Marlborough-street.

Just published by G. and W. B. Whittaker, Ave Maria-lane. Printed upon a sheet of drawing-paper, and embellished with the Coronets of the several Orders of Nobility, tastefully coloured,

THE PEERAGE CHART for 1823. Corrected to the present time. This Chart contains the complete Peerages of the United Kingdom, alphabetically arranged, with the following particulars of each Member:—The Title; Title of the Eldest Son; Surname; Dates of the first and last Creation; Precedence; Age; whether Married, Bachelor, or Widower; number of Children, Male and Female; Knights of the Garter, Thistle, &c.; Lord Lieutenants; Privy Counsellors; Roman Catholics; and Peers' Eldest Sons who are Members of the present Parliament. It also shows by what means the Peerage was obtained, that is to say, whether by Naval, Military, Legal, or other Services; and states the Century to which each Peer can trace his Paternal Ancestry: thus exhibiting, at one view, much interesting information, and forming, upon the whole, a complete Peerage in Miniature. Price 5s. On canvas, in a neat case for the pocket, 8s; on canvas and rollers, 10s.

Also, The BARONETAGE CHART for 1823, printed uniformly with the above, and containing the Baronets of the United Kingdom of Great Britain, and Ireland, with Emblematic Ornaments, handsomely coloured.

"Two most useful and perfect sheets for library and office furniture, have appeared under the title of a PEERAGE and a BARONETAGE CHART. They exhibit every required fact relative to these Classes, in columns, and therefore contain several thousand facts, which, with the necessary repetitions of words, would fill each a large volume. They appear to be compiled with a degree of care which entitles them to our warmest commendation, and in their typography they rank among the best specimens of the art."—Monthly Mag.—See also the Gentleman's Magazine, Literary Chronicle, &c. &c.

Also by the same Author. Price 5s. extra boards, the Second Edition of the SECRETARY'S ASSISTANT; exhibiting the various and most correct Modes of Superscription, Commencement, and Conclusion of Letters to Persons of every degree of rank; including the Diplomatic, Clerical, and Judicial Dignitaries; with Lists of the Foreign Ambassadors and Consuls. Also, the Forms necessary to be used in Applications or Petitions to the King in Council, Houses of Lords and Commons, Government Offices, Public Companies, &c. &c.

"This work will prove highly useful to young correspondents, and even afford information to those whose avocations or connexions require their occasional correspondence with persons of superior rank. The compiler seems to have used considerable diligence in ensuring accuracy."—Gentleman's Mag.

"This little work is a desirable appendage to the writing desk, and fully enables its possessor to fulfil the precepts delivered to us in the Scriptures—'Give unto every man his proper title, lest he be offended, and ye betray your ignorance.'"—New Monthly Mag.

"The Secretary's Assistant is an infallible guide, and we give it our hearty recommendation."—Literary Chronicle.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—The rude and unskilful attempts constantly made to supply these substitutes for the masticatory organ, and the disgust which delicacy suffers from the unpleasantry attending them when permanently fixed, have deterred many from adopting the aid and comfort they are capable of affording, independent of the assistance they may contribute to digestion and consequent health. The ingenious application of mechanical science will enable us to obviate all these inconveniences, and allow the wearer at all times to keep the mouth in a state of perfect cleanliness, and to perform the functions of mastication, articulation, &c. with decided ease and comfort.—Mr. NICHOLLS begs to state, that he is in constant attendance from ten to four, and will be happy to give ocular demonstration of the comforts derived from his efforts under every circumstance or simple and complicated deficiency.—115. POYAIS, NORTH AMERICA.

BY immediate application at any of the Land Offices, GRANTS of LAND in the above territory may still be obtained at 2s. per acre; but NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that upon the 10th of next month, the price will be advanced to four shillings and eightpence per acre, and a progressive advance will be continued.

The aspect of Poyais is mountainous, the "land is high, almost to the sea side the hills rising gently like the swell of the sea,"—the soil of the woody lands is every where excellent, being a deep black mould, or rich brick clay." The low land, savannahs, or open lawns, instead of being unhealthy or swampy, generally consist of a mixture of light sand and rich mould. "Mosquitoes (or gnats) and sand flies are in general scarce, large tracts being without either." The climate is mild and salubrious, and Europeans generally retain their health and activity to a good old age. Horses, black cattle, pigs, poultry, &c. are very numerous, and may at present be bought for stock at a very moderate price. Every information as to the title-deeds, the security of purchasers, &c. may be obtained by applying personally, or by letter (post paid) to the Land Agents in London, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Inverness, Stirling, or Hamburgh,

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

TUESDAY.

This being the day appointed for the meeting of Parliament, the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord High Chancellor, the Earl of Shaftesbury, the Earl of Westmorland, and the Earl of Harrowby, took their seats on the Woolsack as Commissioners under the Great Seal for opening the Session.

THE KING'S SPEECH.

The Commons having as usual attended at the Bar, the Lord Chancellor read His Majesty's Speech as follows:—

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"We are commanded by His Majesty to inform you, that since he last met you in Parliament, His Majesty's efforts have been unremittingly exerted to preserve the peace of Europe.

"Faithful to the principles which His Majesty has promulgated to the world, as constituting the rule of his conduct, his Majesty declined being party to any proceedings at Verona which could be deemed an interference in the internal concerns of Spain, on the part of Foreign Powers; and His Majesty has since used, and continues to use, his most anxious endeavours and good offices to allay the irritation unhappily subsisting between the French and Spanish Governments, and to avert, if possible, the calamity of war between France and Spain.

"In the East of Europe His Majesty flatters himself that peace will be preserved; and his Majesty continues to receive from his Allies, and generally from other Powers, assurances of their unalterable disposition to cultivate with His Majesty those friendly relations which it is equally His Majesty's object on his part to maintain.

"We are further commanded to apprise you, that discussions having long been pending with the Court of Madrid respecting depredations committed on the commerce of His Majesty's Subjects in the West-Indian Seas, and other grievances of which His Majesty had been under the necessity of complaining, those discussions have terminated in an admission, by the Spanish Government, of the justice of His Majesty's complaints, and in an engagement for satisfactory reparation.

"We are commanded to assure you, that His Majesty has not been unmindful of the Addresses presented to him by the two Houses of Parliament with respect to the Foreign Slave Trade. Propositions for the more effectual suppression of that evil were brought forward by His Majesty's Plenipotentiary in the Conferences at Verona; and there have been added to the Treaties upon this subject, already concluded between his Majesty and the Governments of Spain and the Netherlands, Articles which will extend the operation of those Treaties, and greatly facilitate their execution.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

"His Majesty has directed the Estimates of the current year to be laid before you. They have been framed with every attention to economy; and the total Expenditure will be found to be materially below that of last year.

"This diminution of Charge, combined with the progressive improvement of the Revenue, has produced a surplus exceeding His Majesty's expectation; His Majesty trusts, therefore, that you will be able, after providing for the services of the year, and without affecting public credit, to make a further considerable reduction in the burthens of his people.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"His Majesty has commanded us to state to you, that the manifestations of loyalty and attachment to his person and Government, which His Majesty received in his late visit to Scotland, have made the deepest impression upon his heart.

"The provision which you made in the last Session of Parliament for the relief of the distresses in considerable Districts in Ireland, has been productive of the happiest effects; and His Majesty recommends to your consideration such measures of internal regulation as may be calculated to promote and secure the tranquillity of that country, and to improve the habits and condition of the people.

"Deeply as His Majesty regrets the continued depression of the Agricultural Interest, the satisfaction with which his Majesty contemplates the increasing activity which pervades the Manufacturing Districts, and the flourishing condition of our Commerce in most of its principal branches, is greatly enhanced by the confident persuasion, that the progressive prosperity of so many of the interests of the country cannot fail to contribute to the gradual improvement of that great interest, which is the most important of them all."

Earl Morley moved the Address, and observed, that Government entertained but one opinion on the question. They had opposed every attempt to disturb the pacific system. On the right to interfere in the Constitution of Spain, His Majesty's Ministers had also been firm. To the principles which supported the Constitution of Spain, the Government of the Catholic King had been strenuously opposed, ever since his restoration to the Throne. Whether the King of France was right in interfering in the affairs of Spain, or whether he had taken a correct view of his own affairs, in asserting that right at Verona, were points for further inquiry. His Majesty's Ministers opposed it. If France was to commence the war, Europe and posterity should know it was on their own responsibility. Our exertions to prevent war were still employed, and they were not forbidden from maintaining a hope that humanity and justice might yet succeed. It was impossible the House should not entertain approbation on the remonstrance to the Cortes of Spain on the subject of Spanish ships. During many years ships had been fitted out under Spanish flags, which did great injury to the British trade. The time had come for compensation from Spain, and the measure must meet with the approbation of Parliament. No efforts had been spared to secure pacification among the unfortunate Greeks. Remonstrances had been sent to the Ottoman Porte, to secure a line of conduct more consistent with the duties of humanity. At the same time, however England might feel for the Greeks, the most civilized friend of humanity would not say this country ought to engage in a war to correct the Constitution of Turkey. The Noble Earl then adverted to the other topics in the Speech, congratulated the House on the desire of His Majesty respecting Ireland, lamented that the prospect of relief to the agriculturist could not be held out, and then drew the recollection of the House to His Majesty's late visit to Scotland, when, in every part of the kingdom, there had been the greatest demonstration of loyal feeling. This might be hailed as an omen of future union and prosperity. He concluded with noticing the Slave Trade, and observed, that Government had done more for the Abolition of the Slave Trade than all the Governments of Europe. His Lordship concluded by moving, "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, to return thanks for his most gracious Speech," &c.

Lord Mayo seconded the Address. In the course of his speech, he expressed his satisfaction for what had been done by Government for Ireland.

Earl Stanhope moved an Amendment, professing the deep regret and anxiety of the House for the severe and unexampled distress of this country, and pledging itself to proceed immediately to examine into the nature and causes of it, for the purpose of affording relief. The principal hardship was want of employment. When the people wanted bread and employment the Parliament gave them a stone in the shape of the Six Acts. Efforts to restore the currency to a proper state had been made. All endeavours had only diminished the quantity and increased the value of the currency. Jews and jobbers were the only people in a state of prosperity. He contended that if the present system were persevered in, a reduction of the dividend would become necessary. If the present currency were not changed, the reduction of taxation must be carried to a very considerable amount, or else they would reduce themselves. Against the continuance of such evils, which must lead to the general destruction of property, that House had a constitutional remedy in its own hands, by refusing all supplies to the Crown, until those grievances had been effectually redressed. Though strongly opposed to that monstrous project of Universal Suffrage, which would give the whole weight to numbers, he was a friend to moderate Parliamentary Reform. Having descanted on these topics at some length, he said he was determined to take the sense of the House, and in such a cause should not be ashamed to renew the celebrated minority of one.

The Marquis of Lansdowne wished that some parts of the Speech had been couched in somewhat stronger terms, and that a more explicit declaration of the sense entertained by this country of the principles which had unfortunately made their way into the Councils of the great Powers of Europe, and which could not fail to throw Europe into confusion. What might be the merits or demerits of the Spanish Constitution he knew not, but the attack intended to be made upon it would be the means of rallying every Spaniard to fight for it, with all its sins upon its head. He besought their Lordships to contemplate the principles of the Allies carried into action, and to consider whether the result would not be injurious to the interests of this country. He would ask by what means, supposing the invasion and conquest of Spain to have been accomplished, the Government of a Despotic King was to be upheld? Could it be done by any thing, save by military occupation? And with all the ports of Spain occupied by French troops, would not the security of our empire, and of its national peace, especially of the repose of that country which was most exposed to the machinations of an enemy? Then what would become of Portugal, if Spain were conquered and replaced under a Despotic Government? Seeing reasons to be satisfied when he heard it stated by His Majesty's Ministers, that they still entertained hopes of influencing those whom they could not convince, he should be content to acquiesce in the Address. He should not detain the House by going into the questions mooted by his Noble Friend (Earl Stanhope), but without entering at length into the question of currency, he should say, that in his opinion, a part of the difficulty experienced arose from the unfortunate preference given to gold over silver, as a standard of currency. With respect to the state of agriculture, their Lordships were bound to give it their fullest attention at another period. As to the other topics contained in the Speech, he was glad to find that measures were to be proposed, for the purpose of promoting peace, and improving the condition of the people of Ireland. He repeated, he wished the expressions used in the Speech, respecting the conduct of the Allies, had been stronger. Indeed, he had read with surprize, that the breach between the Governments of Spain and France, was only "an irritation." But the same rule, if the King of Prussia and the Emperor of Russia had agreed at Verona to send an army of 100,000 men to change the Constitution of the British Parliament, the Noble Earl, at the head of the Treasury, would describe the threat and the event, as merely "an irritation" between those Sovereigns and this country. He wished that the Noble Earl would lay down that mode of softening his language, and would describe things and feelings as they were.

The Earl of Liverpool hoped that the Noble Earl (Stanhope) would not press his amendment, as unanimity on this occasion would be of particular service. There was nothing whatever in the Address or the Speech to provoke such a motion, or to prevent him from bringing it forward at a more fitting time. Adverting to the topics more immediately under consideration, he observed, that the Noble Marquis did not object to the terms of the Speech, but thought that they did not go far enough, and wished for a more distinct expression of disapprobation on the part of the British Government. Now he could not conceive, without using hard words, which ought always to be avoided, a more distinct opinion than that expressed in the first paragraph of the Speech. It would be in their Lordships' recollection where the promulgation of those principles were to be found. It was in the Circular Note written by a dear and lamented friend of his on the 19th of January, 1821, in which the policy of this country was distinctly stated to be—to allow every country to be the only judge of the manner in which it was to be governed, and not to admit of interference, except as exceptions when the urgency of self-preservation might require it. But this manifestation of our policy had not rested on that circular alone; it had been illustrated in debate, and explicit opinions had been given with respect to Spain. It had been distinctly admitted that unlike the Constitutions set up in Piedmont and at Naples, the Constitution of Spain was purely national, and all that had taken place in Spain was purely Spanish. That Constitution had been adopted in the midst of the Revolution against France, it had been recognized by all the Sovereigns of Europe, and its correction was in the power of the lawful Monarch at his return, but not its abrogation. He might then have altered it with the general approbation, and he was advised to correct but not to destroy. Spain having re-established it, there was nothing to show that those by whom it had been done had displayed a wish to extend it to other countries. They had not only not wished it, but they had offered a most solemn disclaimer of such an intention. The wisdom of this country was to keep in a position to act as a mediator, and, without in any degree shrinking from the principles which she had promulgated, to arrest evil and to prevent war. It was therefore proper not to use strong language, by which the country might throw away the advantages which she possessed. He would not say that he was very sanguine, but the door was not absolutely closed, and as long as hopes of peace might exist, would it become either the policy or the dignity of the nation, to use strong language, which might defeat its purpose? The word "irritation" did not allude in the least to the threatened invasion of Spain, but that series of little exasperating occurrences which might be reduced to the rest of Europe to the same state of barbarism in which in the power of a mediator to allay. He trusted that he had spoken sufficiently explicitly on the principle, the effects, and the danger of the war which was contemplated. He looked with anxiety and fear to the effect of that war not on Spain only, but upon France also, and through France upon Europe. Much as he deprecated the war with France. There was no man in this country who did not feel that the policy of England was neutrality; but at the same time he would not say that if a case for it should arise, she was not to make war.

Lord Ellenborough expressed his concurrence in the views taken by the Marquis of Lansdowne. Considering all the various bearings of the question, he looked to the termination of the contest, supposing it to give success to France, with infinite disadvantage to this country.

Earl Darnley, in allusion to Ireland, observed, that he had intended to bring forward a motion on the subject, but from what had been stated, he was disposed to see if any adequate measures were likely to come from quarters more competent than himself to treat the subject according to its paramount importance. He had risen chiefly for the purpose of asking the Noble Lord at what time the measures alluded to were likely to be presented to the House.

The Earl of Liverpool said, that the subject would be brought forward as early as possible.—The House divided—For the Address 62—For the Amendment, 3—Majority in favour of the Address, 59. Adjourned till Friday.

FRIDAY.

Petitions were presented from Abingdon and Lincoln, praying the repeal of the Insolvent Debtors' Relief Act.

A Petition was presented from the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield for an alteration of the Marriage Act, and stating, that in 72 cases in that Diocese not one marriage by banns had taken place since the passing of the Act.

The Marquis of Conyngham brought down His Majesty's Answer to the Address of this House, which was couched in the most gracious terms.

Lord Ellenborough called their Lordships' attention to the Act passed last Session for the better regulation of marriages. By the Act the House had decided on two points respecting the Marriage Law, namely, that due security ought to be given to parents and guardians in the event of the marriages of minors; and also that marriages solemnized should be rendered by law indissoluble. He intended the Bill which he was about to introduce to preserve that section, retaining the provision respecting the administration of oaths previous to the solemnity; allowing to their Lordships liberty to re-enact such clauses of the last Act as to them might seem fit. The present Act contained no corroborative oaths, for no swearing was required after publication of banns, and that to be administered by the officiating Minister, which would occupy but a few minutes. Many did not administering such oaths to be subject to a penalty for a misdemeanor, while the contracting parties swearing falsely should be the punishment inflicted for perjury.

Lord Redesdale observed, that he had last session objected to that part of the Bill which provided for posting the names of the contracting parties on the church door. With respect to the general Bill he did not approve of transferring the swearing parties to the office of the clergyman, who had no benefit by granting licences, and could derive no emolument from administering such oaths; besides, the same oath at the time of marriage must produce great inconveniences, as many couples presented themselves at the same time.

The Lord Chancellor had objected strongly to the Bill last Session; there was not one objection which he then held against the Bill, which he would not now repeat, and put on the Journals of the House. With respect to the present Bill, all he desired was some time to consider it, with reference to the country at large.

Lord Ellenborough was willing to afford due time to legislate legal and moral view for the benefit of the country.

Adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY.

At three o'clock the House was summoned by the Deputy from the Black Rod to attend at the Bar of the House of Lords. Speaker, accompanied by a considerable number of Members, proceeded to that House, where the King's Speech was delivered by the Lords' Commissioners, (for which see the Lords' Debate.)

New writs were ordered for Harwich, in the room of the Right Hon. N. Vansittart and C. Bathurst—Peterborough, J. Sackett, Esq.—Ripon, Right Hon. G. Robinson—Chichester, Right Hon. W. Huskisson—St. Germains, Right Hon. C. Arbuthnot—New Windsor, Hon. Herbert Taylor—Coleraine, Sir J. Beresford—Liverpool, the Right Hon. Geo. Canning.—For Berwick, in the room of Lord Viscount Ossulston, now Earl of Tankerville.

Mr. Hume gave notice that on the 4th of March he would make a proposition respecting the commutation of tithes in Ireland.—On the 6th he would move for a copy of the Report of the Commissioners of Crown Lands in Ireland; and on the 11th of this month, he would move that separate Estimates of the Expenditure of the Colonies, Great Britain be laid on the table.

Dr. Phillimore gave notice that he would submit, on an early day, a motion respecting the Marriage Act.

Mr. Maberly gave notice that, on the 18th inst. he would move an inquiry into the income and expenditure of the country, and for the immediate repeal of the whole of the Assessed Taxes.

Mr. Wynn, on the part of the Attorney-General for Ireland, gave notice that, on the 20th inst. he should submit a motion to the House on the subject of the Roman Catholic Claims.

The Speaker acquainted the House that it had been summoned to the House of Lords, and that, to prevent mistakes, he had procured a copy of the Speech.

Mr. Childe moved the Address. He observed that his Majesty's Speech contained that frank and satisfactory declaration of the principles which was the intention of his Government to observe in their foreign relations, and to hear so unequivocal an admission of the right of self-government on the part of other States. He could not, therefore, forbear to express strongly his opinion that it would have been disgraceful to this country to take any part in the interference with the internal concerns of Spain. Taking a view of the affairs of Spain, guided by this principle, he felt himself unable to discover in them of that country, any thing that threatened an injury to the safety of Austria, or Russia, or Prussia, or France. He noticed with satisfaction the reduction in the estimates for the present year, and the increasing improvement of the Revenue. The first was an evidence of the attention of Ministers to the wants and wishes of the people, and the other of the returning prosperity of the country,—of the amelioration of the distress under which an important interest in the state had laboured. The Hon. Gentleman then noticed the other topics in the Speech, upon which he congratulated the House, and felt that he was not too sanguine in expecting that the day was not distant when the agricultural interest would recover from its embarrassments, and that every farmer and proprietor might count upon a certain and fair return on his capital. He concluded by moving an Address to His Majesty, which, as usual, was an echo of His Majesty's Speech.

Mr. Wildman seconded the Address, and was sure the House would concur with him in approving of the disavowal of His Majesty's Government of any right to dictate to other countries as to their internal affairs, and would concur in the hope that His Majesty's good offices would be successful in preventing the war between France and Spain. He heartily joined in the hope that peace would be maintained in the East.

Sir Joseph Yorke said, that the Address really had his unqualified approbation, and he thought there could be no objection to third reading it had been seconded, as to our foreign policy; he was most happy to find that our Ambassador had been directed to remain neutral. He thought the House was bound in duty to declare the impolicy, to say the injustice of going to war with Spain. As an Englishman, as an honest man, he thought it would be one of the most unjust actions that ever had been, or ever could be committed. It ought to be remembered that this noble people, the Spaniards, had been the means of restoring the Bourbons to their throne.

Mr. Brougham coincided in the union with the Gallant Officer in expressing those feelings, which he was sure beat in every English bosom—of unqualified detestation and abhorrence at the hypocritical language in which these atrocious principles have been promulgated to the world. He felt that he would be built discharging his duty towards those Honourable Gentlemen by whom the Address was moved and seconded, if he did not express his extreme gratification at the sound and liberal views which it contained; he was satisfied that there would be but one opinion in the House upon the sentiments which had been expressed by those Hon. Gentlemen. There should be but one feeling of reprobation excited against a half-civilized barbarian having issued a Manifesto, by which he showed every disposition to reduce the rest of Europe to the same state of barbarism in which his own subjects were. It would bring down confusion on France, and on their small portion of Frenchmen, who, contemptible in their talents, having gained the ascendant over prudence and sound policy, would attack our dearest ally, influenced by a base and selfish motive to put down an existing government under the false and prejudiced impression that it was inconsistent with their peculiar views. The Hon. Gentleman then said, the country had arrived at that crisis, and was in that emergency which its affairs never exceeded since the Revolution, as to its internal situation, and the distress which prevailed in the most important of its interests. And he trusted we should not be very clear of the difficulties which threatened us, but he must indeed be a bold man who could take upon himself to say that we should have that good fortune. Situated as England now is, he would not state the necessity of her holding herself in such a position as might rather prevent than accelerate a war, with respect to the situation of the country and the measures taken by Government upon it. He thought that the distress which was so much complained of the year had been only partially relieved last Session, by the reduction certain taxes. This brought him to notice the County Meetings, the proceedings at which had given umbrage to so many. Those who blamed them ought to recollect, that every degree of indulgence should be shewn towards the errors of those who were suffering. Some there were who had an undoubted right to express disapprobation at the conduct which had been pursued at those meetings, but some there were, too, who had no such right. Those who had opposed the measures of Government in 1811, had a right to complain of the proposition to break faith with the public creditor. The loudest outcry was made by the friends of Ministers as to the Norfolk Petition; and yet one of the propositions of that Petition was the same in point of principle as that which, in 1811, was put into the shape of a Bill, brought into that House by the then Chancellor of the Exchequer, and carried by the influence of Government. There was, undoubtedly, one general relief, to which all classes in common were entitled; he meant reduction of taxation, and an arrangement of the Sinking Fund, so that it should not continue what it really was—a delusion. In the way of reduction, however, looking to our foreign affairs, he could not consent to the smallest reduction of our naval force. Let abuses in the naval department be corrected; but he would by all means say, "Do not let us diminish our strength." The army might be reduced, because we could not send it abroad. He recommended economy and retrenchment generally, because he really did contemplate the probability of our being engaged in hostilities at some time or other in the course of the threatened war. No one who understood or regarded the ancient policy of the country, but must say, that if this ill-fated expedition should be carried into effect, England would in all probability, sooner or latter, be engaged in it. Indeed he was glad that Ministers had not gone so far as to promise a strict neutrality under every possible circumstance. To do that would be to give a species of permission to the attack upon Spain. There was not a man in this country who would not cheerfully give Ministers support in such a case as the present. He even trusted it would appear that Ministers had declared, that in certain events we should assist the Spaniards. He trusted Government was sincere in its wishes towards Spain, because he was convinced that all would willingly, cheerfully, and joyfully co-operate with it in carrying those wishes into effect. He therefore hoped that Ministers distinctly stated to the French Government their resolution, in the event of a war, to assist the Spaniards, because he was well aware that such a resolution would be followed by measures likely to avert those evils which all were of one mind in condemning.—The Hon. Member then took a review of the Notes of the Allied Monarchs to the Spanish Minister, which he described as a mass of contradictions, along with the hollow cant of professions of respect and tenderness for their recent ally. Never was any thing more monstrous, or more extravagant, than these documents. Prussia, speaking of the Cortes, said, that it confounds and destroys the essence of monarchy; and Russia spoke of it in nearly the same terms. There were no more documents by which he could show the treatment of Spain at Verona, a secret which he did not pretend to know; for indeed he was yet unable to discover what was the precise situation which the Representative of England filled at that Congress. But he knew nothing more irreconcilable with the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle than the interference of the Allies with Spain now, the 4th Article of which provided that "special Congresses should be held from time to time on the affairs of Europe." By the way this treaty was a master-piece of hypocrisy, "which would be calm and constant in action, all whose cares would be directed to maintain peace, and whose fundamental principle would be to adhere strictly to the Law of Nations; and that its sole object was the repose of Europe." This was half state paper, half romance, half sermon. He knew not which to admire most—the inconsistency of some of the Sovereigns, or the peculiar conduct of Russia, a power but half European, an immense colossal mass of physical power, with oriental principles, which had used many words to wrap up ideas not very clear, but which, when really understood, appeared to speak but one language, and that was, "We have hundreds of thousands of armed mercenaries, and we will not reason where we mean to insult." The gallant Spaniards, in answer, spoke a short, an expressive, a manly language. "We," said they, "will not reason with those who would enslave us; no matter to us whether they be Goths, Huns, or Calmucs." They indeed shewed a courage, in fine contrast to the crafty Bohemian and savage Tartar. If the Tyrants who infested the world should proceed in their career, there was not one true-born English or true Frenchman who would not in heart be an ally of the Spaniards. He particularly admired the conduct of Spain in answer to this odious and invidious interference. Every sentence addressed to the Spaniards conveyed some insult; and the object of the whole was evidently to divide them, and array them against each other. Under such circumstances he should not have been much surprised if their answer had conveyed some allusions to the Allied Powers themselves. His Prussian Majesty, for instance, who appeared to be so nice a critic in Constitutions, and had expressed his anxiety for Spanish happiness, might have been reminded of his promise to give his own subjects a Constitution. His Austrian Majesty might have been recommended to be just to King George, before he was generous to King Ferdinand; to pay the debt, principal and interest, which he had so long owed to the English Government. Or they might have told him to turn his eyes to his own dungeons in the Milanese, in which he had immured men, women, and even children, without any charge being made against them.—The Honourable Gentleman then said, the Tyrants of Europe were laundless in their views against the liberties of man; and were restrained from aggression only by difficulties which appeared insurmountable. Did they imagine that if any country was sufficiently convenient to the Autocrat of Russia, to enable him to commence operations, he would not soon find a pretext to begin? How readily would he act, even if the Grand Turk himself were the object of attack, should circumstances admit it? It would be in vain to send a deputation of Muftis; it would be in vain that they would urge by way of remonstrance, their strict adherence to the "monarchical principle," and that they had a Government such as the Holy Alliance itself could wish—powerful and paralysed. It would be in vain they should protest their innocence of all constitutional theories, and declare they had never had even a dream of fallacious liberty; all their arguments would be thrown away on the three Gentlemen of Verona—who would soon find blemishes enough in the Turkish Constitution if it answered their purpose. He cordially applauded the conduct pursued by the servants of the Crown upon this occasion. They had acted like men who were resolved to do their duty by themselves and by the country. Let us then look to free states, as our natural allies; let us support the honour of the Crown, the freedom of the country, and the best and most sacred principles of the Constitution.

Sir F. Burdett trusted that we should not shrink from our duty at the present eventful juncture, and for his own part he would lay aside all considerations of agricultural distress—all considerations, however urgent, except those which regarded the maintenance of those grand principles which England ought to be the first to uphold. Looking to this main object, he could not help admiring the spirit in which the speech of the Hon. and Learned Gentleman was dictated, as well as the bold and manly tone in which it was delivered. He could not sit down without also expressing his admiration of the good sense in which the Address to the Throne was conceived. It would have the effect of removing all differences respecting one of the most important questions that could engage the attention of the House, and would now—in one instance at least, see a united Parliament and a united people.

Mr. Secretary Peel assured the House that he felt the most sincere satisfaction at perceiving that they were enabled to concur in a unanimous vote to His Majesty, expressing their approval of the Address, but though he was thus relieved from the necessity of going minutely into matters of peculiar importance as relating to our foreign policy, yet from the observations that had been made by the Hon. and Learned Gentleman opposite, he conceived that he should be guilty of an abandonment of his duty if he declined saying a few words. A great part of the speech of the Hon. and Learned Gentleman consisted of animadversions, not upon our system of policy, but upon that of our allies. The House would bear in mind, that His Majesty's Government pursued an undeviating course of policy with respect to the interference of foreign states in the internal affairs of any nation. In 1792 the Monarch protested against such interference; and the same principle obtained in 1821. He would say, that the principles laid down by His Majesty's Government, and sanctioned by His Majesty himself, were that every state was sovereign and independent within itself. As to Spain, he could only say, that so far as England was concerned, he could see nothing in the institutions now existing there to warrant interference. He certainly wished, for the sake of Spain herself, that some modifications were adopted in what was termed the Spanish Constitution. This, he thought, would be perfectly just; yet he did not see any adequate cause for interference in the grounds set forth in the speech of the King of France. Let the House consider what must be the interest of Europe with respect to the question of peace or war, and they must clearly perceive that all the powers have a common object in desiring to avoid hostilities. Speaking then with respect to the obvious policy of Europe, he might still be allowed to indulge the hope that the existing repose would not be disturbed. He was quite sure, that every possible effort would be made by this country to prevent the alternative of war; and even the King of France himself had in his speech those inconclusive words, "if war shall be inevitable." He regretted that the Hon. and Learned Gentleman had, in the warmth of debate, been betrayed into expressions respecting those Sovereigns who were in alliance with us, which, in his cooler moments, he could not approve. He (Mr. Peel) thought that the Honourable and Learned Gentleman would have recollected the community of interest, and the community of danger, which attached us to our allies; but he seemed to argue as if the whole attention of the Congress of Verona was directed only to the affairs of Spain.—Did he forget that the state of Italy, the slave trade, and the affairs of Turkey, were among the questions discussed in that meeting? We had a Plenipotentiary at the Congress, who strictly attended to every thing in which the honour or interest of the country was concerned. Adverting to the situation of this country, he was confident that the House would hear with pleasure that His Majesty's Government meant to effect a reduction in the public expenditure, and a large remission of taxation. He communicated this on the part of his Right Hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who, on the earliest day after he became a Member of the House, would lay before them in detail a state of the finances. The intended reductions would chiefly be applied to the assessed taxes, and to the relief of agricultural distress, though he could by no means promise relief to the extent that might be wished. In the increased prosperity of our manufactures and commerce, he necessarily looked for the relief of agricultural distress. He believed it impossible that there could be so much activity in all branches of trade without a corresponding advantage to the agricultural interest.

Sir J. Mackintosh said, it would indeed be culpable in any lover of freedom to remain silent at a moment when war was made on the rights of all independent states. The principle affected every state that boasted the name of freedom; but it more especially affected the security of our own dominions, it levelled a blow at the honour and security of Great Britain. To him it appeared that the King of France had not carried the principle further than the Allies who had met at Verona, who laid it down as a rule, that any amendment in the political condition of a people, should always be controlled by the will of a despotic Sovereign. This doctrine was monstrous—it was a slander on all that our ancestors had done—it was a libel on our King's right to the crown; it proscribed all those who had brought about the revolution—it made rebels of the men to whom we were indebted for Magna Charta—for the dearest rights we enjoyed—it made every privilege of that House a usurpation.

Mr. Denman felt inclined to indulge in the belief that the representative of His Majesty did interfere to obtain for Spain those free institutions, which constituted the happiness as well as the glory of England. He could, therefore, have wished that the Speech had disclosed that, and still he was inclined to think that if proper efforts had been made, that disgusting Speech of the French King would never have been uttered. If the Congress were the scene of remonstrances on that subject by the representative of England, and if France were assured that England would take that course, then the perseverance in spite of England would amount to a declaration of war against her. He trusted that would be distinctly told to all the Allied Powers, that the opinion of the English House of Commons, and of the people of England, was opposed to the course threatened against Spain.—The Address was then carried unanimously.

WEDNESDAY.

Mr. Marryat gave notice for to-morrow se'nnight of a motion relative to the Service on which His Majesty's ships Dotterel and Carnation were employed on the 12th August last.

Mr. Whitmore gave notice that on Monday, the 17th, he would bring the subject of the Corn Laws under the consideration of the House.

Mr. Brougham presented a Petition from the Land-owners and Agriculturists of several places in Cumberland, praying for an amendment of the Act imposing a duty on Lime.

Lord A. Hamilton gave notice of a motion relative to the state of representation of Scotch Counties, on the 11th of March.

Dr. Phillimore called the attention of the House to the Act passed in the last Session of Parliament for the regulation of the law of Marriage. From this Bill inconveniences were felt which nothing but actual necessity could have justified the House in passing. Amongst these he would mention the unnecessary introduction of oaths not before requisite. Next was an extract from the Register of Baptism, which was not necessary to the main purposes of the Act. Another inconvenience was, the stamps required in marriages by banns, an expence which was oppressive, without being in any way useful. He would further enumerate the hardship of the clergy being obligated to read this voluminous Act from the pulpit. The Act also went to take away from many peculiar jurisdictions the power of granting licences, by which many districts were deprived of the facility of marriage possessed by others; whereas all should have the same power in that respect. With this view of the question, he assured the House that, with its permission, he would do his best to remedy all the evils he had complained of.—Leave was given to bring in a Bill to amend the Act.

On bringing up the Report of the Address, Sir R. Wilson cautioned the House and His Majesty's Ministers how they adopted, during the pending negociations with France, the language and professions of neutrality. Such a course he was assured, would operate to the evil of all parties. It became them to look to the security of their ally, Portugal, and to consider well her situation. As a soldier of some experience, he knew that she would make a difference of 50,000 men to Spain, which ever way she sided in the struggle. They must recollect that in the struggle with Spain, it was not on the boundary line, but that the efforts of her enemies were directed against the Spanish Constitution.

Mr. Curwen said he would reserve himself for another opportunity to deliver his opinion on the various subjects embraced by the consideration of the present state of Europe.

Colonel Davis thought that the first cannon fired against Spain ought to be treated as a declaration of war against this country.

Mr. H. Hutchinson rose, not to lament what the Speech from the Throne contained, but what it omitted to contain. He thought this a most important crisis with respect to the affairs of the Continent; and he did think, that the Speech should have contained such language, as would have taught the tyrants of Europe that their despotic projects would meet with unanimous resistance from this country.

The Address having been read twice, was then ordered to be presented to His Majesty, by such of the Members of that House as were Members of His Majesty's Most Hon. Privy Council.

THURSDAY.

There being only twenty-three Members present at four o'clock, an adjournment took place.

FRIDAY.

At four o'clock only thirty-six Members being present an adjournment of course took place.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

Paris, Feb. 1.—On Friday the 22d regiment of the line left Paris for the army of Spain; it will be replaced by the 59th regiment of the line. The 25th regiment will set off on Sunday for the army, and will be replaced by the 43d regiment.—On the 27th ult. the 9th company of miners left Douay for the Army of Observation.—Eight companies of the foot artillery of the Toulouse Regiment left Rennes on the 27th ult. for Bayonne. The 10th company of miners, 50 men of the light horse artillery, two companies of the train corps, and 54 teams of tumbrils and forges, passed through Toul on the 26th ult. on their route from Metz to Perpignan.—Two parks of field artillery are actively completing at Toulouse and Narbonne; one is destined for the army of the Eastern, and the other for that of the Western Pyrenees.—The artillery of Vincennes and the second regiment of Cuirassiers of the Guard, marched this morning for the frontiers of Spain.

Feb. 2.—This day at half-past three, their Royal Highnesses Monsieur and the Duke d'Angoulême, accompanied by the Generals and chief officers of the Royal Guard reviewed on the Place du Carousel, the Dragoons of the Guard and the 30th regiment of the line. The princes were received with the loudest acclamations. After having defiled before their Royal Highnesses, the troops set off on their march for the army.—Journal des Debats.

The King has appointed M. Ravez President of the Chamber of Deputies for the session.—On Monday, the Duke de San Lorenzo received orders from the Cortes to leave Paris immediately, with all his legation.

In the Chamber of Peers, yesterday, M. Duke de Levis, Reporter of the Special Commission, presented the project of an Address in answer to his Majesty's Speech, which was examined in a Committee, and discussed in a General Assembly. An amendment proposed by M. the Baron de Barente, and modified by a second amendment, proposed by M. the Count de Segur, was supported by the Count Daru, and opposed by M. de Villele and Viscount de Chateaubriand, and finally lost by a majority of 90 to 53. The original project of Address was then adopted by a majority of 73.—The Minister of Finance (Villele) and the Minister of Foreign Affairs, took upon themselves all the responsibility of the Speech from the Crown; and both professed openly that France would act as France; and she would not lay down her arms till order should be restored in Spain. The Minister of Finance observed how important it was to France, not only as a point of honour, but as a positive interest, that the dynasty of the Bourbons should not be shaken at Madrid.

Feb. 5.—The Address of the Chamber of Peers, in answer to his Majesty's Speech, was presented to his Majesty on Tuesday evening. It is an echo of the Speech. The King replied, that the sentiments expressed in the Address were the best guarantee for the prosperity of the State.

The Moniteur contains an order for the General commanding the 1st military division, issued by command of the Minister of War, summoning all officers, sub-officers, and soldiers on leave, within his jurisdiction, to present themselves within 24 hours, to receive passports to rejoin their corps forthwith.

It is confidently affirmed, that an insurrection has recently broken out at the Royal Military School at La Fleche. An officer of that establishment arrived yesterday morning at the War office, and will set off this evening with the orders of his Majesty. The most severe measures are, it is said, to be adopted to prevent similar disorders.

Intelligence from Lisbon, dated the 24th Jan. announce, that much was said in that capital of a conspiracy which had been discovered there. The patroles were frequent and numerous in all the streets, and several individuals of elevated rank had been arrested.

The French Ambassador quitted Madrid on horseback, and alone, as if he had been going only to take a ride. This he did to prevent being insulted.

Yesterday, an extraordinary courier arrived in Paris from Madrid, bringing advices from that capital to the 29th Jan. The Constitutionalists commanded by Velasco and l'Abisbal marched to attack a corps of Royalists about 1,500 strong, which was retiring. An action took place, and the Constitutionalists made some prisoners. Other Royalist corps having, it is said, approached Madrid from another quarter, l'Abisbal was under the necessity of separating from Velasco to come and cover the capital.

On the 16th Dec. a violent conflagration took place at Port-au-Prince, which consumed a great part of the city. The loss is estimated at five millions of piastres.—The first battalion of the 35th regiment set out yesterday for Perpignan, as well as a battalion of the 22d. To-day the other battalions of the 25th and 22 marched.—Eight baggage-waggons belonging to the Duke d'Angoulême, have already left Paris for the army.

Brest, Jan. 21.—The courier brought yesterday orders to fit out immediately the Centaur of 80 guns, and the Flore frigate. We have already in our harbour two 74's, a ship of the line out down, two frigates, and several corvettes. They are all ready to sail. Orders have been given to re-establish the Semaphores on the coasts; powder, balls, and bombs have been sent to Bayonne.—Levies of sailors are already ordered here, and will be ordered also in all parts of France.

Bayonne, Jan. 28.—A courier has just passed through this town, despatched by the French Government, who has orders to return if he met on his route the Ambassador Count de Lagarde, who is expected here between the 5th and 10th inst.—The English Ambassador continues at Madrid, charged with affairs of the highest importance, but all concurring to the same object—the triumph of a good cause.—The dreadful weather, and the great quantity of snow which has fallen, prevent any military movements in the Spanish provinces which are situated near this frontier.

A letter from Madrid, written on the 26th Jan. announces that a corps of 7,000 rebels, composed of disbanded regiments, and a multitude of other individuals, had formed the design of marching against the capital. On receiving intelligence of their movements, the Government despatched all the disposable troops which could be mustered; a conflict ensued, and the rebels at first had the advantage, but Gen. Velasco promptly came up with the national militia, and soon decided victory in favour of the Constitutionalists. The defeat of the rebels was complete; a great number of them were killed and made prisoners. In the first moments of alarm the King was inclined to remove to the Escurial; but the Cortes and the Government represented to his Majesty that he was much more secure in Madrid, where all the inhabitants would serve as a rampart against the factious. The King was impressed with the truth of this advice, and did not quit his palace.

Advices from Rio de Janeiro, dated the 7th of December, state that the Emperor of Brazil had been solemnly crowned, and was using great personal exertions to establish his Government on the surest foundation. A declaration of war against Portugal was in the press, and was hourly expected to be published. Hostilities indeed may be said to have already commenced, by the arrest of all Portuguese property.

MISCELLANEOUS.

On Tuesday evening, Mr. Ruff, the King's Messenger, left town with dispatches for Madrid.

On Wednesday night, Mr. Mears, the King's Messenger, left the Foreign Office, Downing-street, with dispatches for our Ambassador at Vienna.

The situation of Resident Commissioner of the Navy at Deptford is to be abolished, and Commissioner Cunningham is removed to the superintendance of the Dock-yard at Chatham, in the room of Sir Robert Barlow, who retires from that post with the rank of Rear-Admiral.

On Wednesday, a Court of Directors was held at the India House, when Captain W. Mitchell, of the ship Bridgewater, took leave of the Court, previous to departing for St. Helena, Bombay, and China.

On Thursday, the Lord Mayor held a Court of Aldermen, for the dispatch of public business. The Hon. Charles Ewan Law, and John Mirehouse, Esq. elected by the Common Council to be Common Pleaders of the City, were introduced to the Court, and took the usual oaths. The 4th of March was appointed for the licensing of victuallers. The Court agreed to a Report from the Committee, approving of the Sheriffs' nomination of James Spencer to be Keeper of the Debtors' prison.

On Wednesday, a Meeting of Freeholders and others, was held at Hackney, for the purpose of petitioning for Reform. Several Resolutions were proposed by Major Cartwright, and seconded by the Rev. Mr. Draper. An amendment, calling for Triennial Parliaments, was proposed by a Mr. Bigge, and seconded by a Mr. Hedger. The amendment was negatived, and the original resolutions carried; after which a very long petition, founded on the resolutions, was proposed and carried, which, however, the Sheriff refused to sign, and the meeting was then dissolved.

It is in contemplation to remove the Assizes for Lancashire, from Lancaster Castle, and hold them alternately at Liverpool and Manchester.

Lent Assizes.—Norfolk Circuit; Before Lord Chief Justice Abbott, and Sir W. Garrow, Knt.:—Buckinghamshire, Thursday Feb. 27, at Aylesbury; Bedfordshire, Wednesday, March 5, at Bedford; Huntingdonshire, Saturday, March 8, at Huntingdon; Cambridgeshire, Tuesday, March 11, at Cambridge; Norfolk, Saturday, at Thetford; Suffolk, Friday, March 21, at Bury.

The severity of the late frost was much greater than for many years. On taking up the pavement in Cornhill on Thursday se'nnight, in order to thaw the pipes, the ground in many places was frozen nearly three feet from the surface.

It appears generally expected that a squadron of observation will be formed, of ten sail of the line, with a proportion of frigates and small ships, under that experienced and valiant officer, Admiral Lord Exmouth.

On Sunday night the house of Mrs. Dehony at Hayes was robbed of plate of various descriptions, in weight upwards of 100lbs. and upwards of 1500l. worth of jewellery.

Shrewsbury.—The late severe weather having thrown out of work a number of labourers in the vicinity of Wellington, a party of them dragged a load of coals towards the city; on coming down Overley hill with the wheels unlocked, the waggon became unmanageable, and threw down several of the men, two of whom were killed, three had their limbs broken, and many were hurt.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF BRITISH MANUFACTURES.—The great improvement in trade, the patronage bestowed by our first Nobility upon British manufactures, and the prospect of still better times, must be gratifying to all parties. Some of the best specimens of London Printed Chintz Furnitures we have ever seen have just been introduced by Miles and Edwards, No. 131, Oxford-street, where Families who are furnishing may discover the difference between the present value of every requisite article, and the prices still obtained by other houses for the same description of goods manufactured in former years

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Our notice of Theatricals is unavoidably omitted, to make room for the account of performances in another place.

PAUL POTTER'S excellent letter must stand over till next week.

The "OLD READER" is thankfully acknowledged, and his offer gladly accepted. He will, perhaps, consider this as an answer to his whole communication. Any thing from the gentleman mentioned in the second page will meet with the readiest attention.

X.Y. shall be taken care of—we quite agree with him.

MARTIN BLUE-BELL—SENIOR—CRUX, and several others on the same important subject, are received.

We should like to hear from "VIVE LA POSTE," whenever it is possible.

The letter from Wimpole-street has been received, and the proper use will be made of it.

The letter concerning GENERAL GUISE'S conduct as a Magistrate shall be noticed when the precise facts are ascertained.

All our other friends must stand over.

 On account of the very great demand for BULL last Monday, part of our impression was obliged to be published on unstamped paper, which caused some delay in the delivery; we have taken care to prevent a similar occurrence this week.

PRICE OF STOCKS AT THE CLOSE, SATURDAY.

The British Securities, this week, have been tolerably firm, although the advices from France have teemed with accounts of the preparations for the invasion of Spain. The Spanish Bonds have also been better than during the last week, and at one time were done as high as 40. They however, have since fluctuated between 39 and 39¼, which firmness may be ascribed to the tone of the Speech delivered by the Premier, at the opening of the Parliament. Yesterday, the Consols for the Account opened at 75⅞ ⅜, but the arrival of the expresses from France, quoting the Rentes lower, occasioned a fall; and at the close, Consols for Account were 75⅛.

A MONDAY'S EDITION, containing the LATEST NEWS, the STOCK LIST, the LONDON MARKETS, and the STATE OF THE COUNTRY MARKETS by that Morning's Post, is published at Three o' Clock.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 9.

THE KING, we are rejoiced to state, is considerably better. The amendment in HIS MAJESTY'S health, from the late severe attack of the gout, is progressive. The DUKE OF YORK had also an attack of the gout, in the foot and ancles, from which, we are happy to say, His Royal Highness is recovered.

WE scarcely remember to have heard a more unmixed expression of public satisfaction than has been called forth by HIS MAJESTY'S Speech on opening the Session of Parliament. It is, indeed, a Speech marked with all the characteristics of sound and dignified policy, as connected with our foreign relations, and breathes that paternal interest in the welfare of our domestic affairs, which seems to come from the breast of the Monarch himself.

It has also the peculiarity of being invulnerable to the attacks of the Opposition—not that the ingenuity of these Gentlemen could have failed to discover certain "holes to peck," if the popularity of the sentiments contained in it had not presented to them the danger of an amendment which might tend to commit them upon questions to which their general creed stands pledged.

We consider the motion called "an amendment," which gave the Noble Mover two supporters in the upper House, as sufficiently illustrative of our meaning; but the WHIGS have an unfortunate knack of losing their way, whenever by an unforeseen accident, or some fortuitous concurrence of circumstances, they happen to be right. What SHERIDAN says of bungling authors may be predicated of bungling politicians, "when they do get hold of a good thing, they never know when to have done with it." The principles laid down in the Speech they were compelled to approve; but, in the old cant, "these principles do not, in their opinion, go far enough." After being so long "bottled up," it was necessary that certain performers should let out some of the acidulated gas which had been kept up during the vacation, and it was as utterly impossible to approve the conduct of Government, in long set Whig Speeches, as it was for a Whig to be satisfied without long set speeches by way of verats. Like some of our extraordinary musical performers who entertain their astonished audiences with what are called "variations," in which the original air can only now and then be caught, through the crash and intricacy of their rapid modulations. MR. BROUGHAM, in agreeing with the general sentiment of the King's Speech, confined to spin out, through an hour or two, a running accompaniment with such abrupt transitions from one key to another, that it would have puzzled an ordinary ear to catch the original "AIR" of it at all—had not this dexterous and rapid performer satisfied his auditory at the conclusion, that he had taken it as his thema.

We do not wish to deny MR. BROUGHAM any share of credit to be derived from the ingenuity of the exhibition as recorded in the newspapers. He may be disposed to question—and we unfortunately know he does—OUR right to hold THE WHIGS and their partisans up to ridicule and contempt, when we consider their policy subversive of the best interests of the country—and we, in our turn, may dispute his right to expose the sovereigns of Europe in the bitterest invectives of personal abuse to the abhorrence of mankind, and to impute to them actions, which, as between man and man, would subject him perhaps to very serious responsibility. But this is his business—the Whigs, who are our own especial care, have long afforded sufficient authority for the mode of treatment which we feel it PATRIOTIC to adopt on our parts towards them—and so far we are satisfied.

When we admit that MR. BROUGHAM was extraordinarily brilliant, we must observe at the same time that the Treasury Bench was extraordinarily thin—and there appeared to be throughout a sort of unshackled buoyancy of spirit, which we have sometimes seen in a school-boy when the birch room has been locked and the key hung upon a peg.

According to the reporters, after the Honourable Gentleman had shewn that Ministers ought to have assumed a posture of defiance rather than of mediation—and talked of "armed preparation" instead of pacific interference, he appears to have brought into active service, the reading which it had cost his Learned Friend and himself so much labour to concoct into an article in the last Edinburgh, upon the "Partition of Poland." This is all in the way of business, and natural enough—but there is one circumstance which is of some importance to point out, as affecting more than the Speaker himself—and extending to the whole party. There is a distinct line—observable throughout—drawn between the principles which the WHIGS have advocated for some years past in common with the RADICALS—and that lately maintained by the one to the confusion and defeat of the other. Our readers will recollect the official expulsion of the "White Hat" in the CHRONICLE, to which we particularly pointed their attention a few weeks back—and also the correspondent tone of triumph in which the Whig county meetings were announced as about to "open the eyes of the people."

The Learned Gentleman now tells us, if the reporters are to be believed, that he does "not view those meetings WITH APPROBATION, though not with THAT DISAPPROBATION which others feel." This is a qualifier with a vengeance—but he is stated to go farther, and to concede what indeed was the whole bone of contention from one end of the last Session to the other—and has been the burthen of all the clamour raised at the late county meetings—namely, that "the distresses of the last year have received but a very partial relief from the reduction of certain taxes." THREE MILLION recollect!—and further, that if other taxes were taken off it would afford as little. Why not boldly face round, and state the fact, that every reduction in taxation must tend to lower prices, and thus increase instead of diminish the distress which is now felt by the farmers? Why mince the matter, since the RADICALS will no longer obey the word of command, or keep the WHIG BOUNDS?

But enough of this—MR. BROUGHAM is said to have been loudly cheered for his speech, which must be gratifying to himself at least.

SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH followed him, according to the papers, but, as it appears, to have made but a lame business of it—and however effective the product of his reading and index hunting, when transferred from his adversaria to the proof sheets of his intended History of England, it smelt ominously of the shop, and was obviously taken as the dregs of the more volatile spirit, which had previously been flying off in every direction about the House.

MR. DENMAN is reported to have made a speech, which appears to reprobate Ministers for not translating the diplomatic language into the vulgar tongue, or in other words, for not following the polished example of the Decamisado cabinet of Spain, in its phraseology towards foreign powers.

But we must be grave; for such topics can never excite a feeling of levity, except when handled by the "bottle conjurors" of WHIGGERY and RADICALISM, who, with no small share of his qualifications, appear to possess a qualified grant of the power bestowed upon KING MIDAS; not, indeed, of converting dross into GOLD, but of turning every thing they touch into RIDICULE!

The speech of LORD LIVERPOOL, considered either as the manifesto of the policy to be pursued by this country, or as a specimen of a sound, manly, and open exposition of the sentiments of a British Senator, upon the vital interests of the Empire, must be sufficient to enable every man to lay his head upon his pillow, and rest satisfied that his interests and his liberties are in good and safe keeping.

MR. PEEL, single-handed, but apparently as secure in his means of defence as if surrounded by a phalanx, contented himself with a few well-directed blows against such of the scattered observations which, in the flowing declamation of his principal opponent, might be collected into any thing worthy the name of an argument, and in a masterly manner defended the policy of Government, amply proving, to the satisfaction of the House, that however entertaining the political squibs and crackers of a WHIG orator, they would rather the Treasury Benches should remain empty (as they were, at the moment, to the eye) than occupied by experimental philosophers, or artists in "Feu d'artifice!"

Nothing can be clearer than the policy adopted by Ministers in the present critical posture of affairs in Europe. Had they taken the tone and position which the WHIGS recommend, Great Britain must unavoidably have become a party in the cause, and been content to take a side, in the event of her counsels not being attended to. The brilliant and glorious career which our country has run, under the counsels of our "most corrupt and weak Ministers," has placed her in a situation to act as mediator without assuming the airs of a BULLY; and it is in her power, at any period, when she feels that either her dignity, her interests, or her policy requires it, to interpose her power to maintain the balance of Europe. The policy of the WHIGS is directly the reverse of all this; and these preachers of PEACE and advocates of humanity would plunge us over head and ears into a war—for what? To support the "CHILD OF JACOBINISM," which is still at nurse in the arms of the Spanish Descamisados—to encourage the disaffected in every country to follow the example of Republican France, and to teach them that they may lock up their Kings, and bring them to the block whenever they find it convenient to do so. Instead of the present calm and dignified mediation of England, they would have drawn the sword at once, and issued a manifesto (probably in the terms of what is represented to be a speech of LAWYER BROUGHAM'S) denouncing every Monarch in Europe to their subjects, and holding them forth as ripe for extermination!

Because my LORD LIVERPOOL admits that the Spanish Patriots have not yet imbued their hands in the blood of their King, or their fellow-subjects, these men infer, not only that they have no such intentions, but that they are establishing a Constitution under the sanction of principles, and in a manner correspondent with the display of wisdom which marked the career of our own patriots upon the abdication of JAMES II. Look to their own admissions—to their own professions—look to their daily speeches in the Cortes, and in the clubs of Madrid, and you will find that in every word and project they are following the footsteps of the French revolutionists, and the republican model is before their eyes in every advance they make towards settling what they call a Constitution. Is it likely they will stop short of their great model, when a single impediment stands in their way?—and will the struggle for power AFTERWARDS be maintained without a repetition of the same sanguinary scenes, which makes our blood curdle and run cold on reading in the records of Revolutionary France!—Oh, cry the WHIGS, then YOU are for war on the opposite principle, and are ready to join with LOUIS and the Holy Alliance to extirpate the Spanish heresy! Our opinion upon this head—such as it is—has already been recorded. We have no more right to interfere with the internal government of a country, to relieve it from a tumultuary usurpation of its functions, than to degrade a Monarch and incite subjects to revolt, because our notions of government differ from those under which he reigns. The only legitimate ground of interference is the effect any derangement in the internal affairs of a foreign nation may produce beyond its own limits, or upon our interests; and this right is acknowledged by every writer upon the Law of Nations and international policy. Not only do we conceive, as we stated some time since, that the Government of France has no right to interfere in the present posture of affairs in Spain, but that the interference itself, if justifiable upon general principles, is most impolitic in its particular application, and connected with the objects she professes to have in view. There is no bond of union so strong as that which binds a people to resist FOREIGN INVASION; and although France, possessing a more warlike population, and boasting still many brave and experienced captains, may vanquish army after army, the Spanish people at large will only become more and more zealous in their attachment to the cause which is thus persecuted!

MR. BROUGHAM is stated to have renewed his panegyric upon BUONAPARTE, and with the consistency for which the WHIGS are always remarkable, produces the man, who is the "child and champion of jacobinism," raised himself to a throne over the bodies of sacrificed millions, and carried war and destruction into every corner of Europe, as the ALL-PACIFIC MEDIATOR between Kings and their subjects; and has for what shall we call it?—boldness, to hold him up as an illustrious contrast to the Monarchs of Europe, whose crimes, in the exaggerated details of his vituperative denunciation, rise like molehills in the presence of a mighty mountain. But we to wonder at any thing a man can do or say, who is capable of bringing forward, in the face of his country, Cromwell not only as one of the greatest politicians of ancient Rome, but as an authority for the seditious excesses of an insurrectionary mob!

The great and almost only VIGOROUS ACT of this illustrious orator, was the detection and successful overthrow of a DEMOCRATIC FACTION, and that too, by a "VIGOUR BEYOND THE LAW." He, recollect, was a REPUBLICAN by birth, in principle; but so far from affording even a shelter to revolutionary adventures, his eloquence and his energies, we repeat, were never so eminently displayed, as when in opposition of all those doctrines, which are predominant in his speeches, and impulsive in their operation upon what are called REFORMERS. The Learned Gentleman—although Edinburgh reviewers always get themselves into a scrape when they meddle with classical authorities—should have recollected who were the associates of CATILINE, before he ventured to his brief into the hands of OLD TULLY. He should have called to mind that if his great authority did say—it was said with restrictions, that will fail the Honourable Gentleman, if he intends literally to apply them, with the same illustrious archetype, as the Honourable Gentleman is pleased to consider him, in fifty other places, may be expected to prove his opinion of popular interference—that is, MOBOCRACY in the concerns of a great Empire. We shall satisfy ourselves with one question from him, which MR. BROUGHAM may reply to, if he pleases:—

"Non in ullâ Civitate, nisi in quâ summa Potestas Populi," "domicilium Libertas habet"

"Nimia Potestas est Tribunorum Plebis, quis negat?"

If he be puzzled for a reason for so un-Republican a sentiment, he may find it as a corollary to the above!

WE observed, last week, that those "potent, grave, and Reverend Signiors," the Common Council of London, in that "haberdasher of small wares," MR. WAITHMAN, at their head, had passed a very strong and pointed Resolution, touching the profligacy of Government, the corruption, &c.; and that the worthy Alderman had, in the course of debate, (if that can be called a debate in which only one side of a question is heard) repeated a most eloquent harangue, culled from the pages of old magazines, newspapers, and views, quite "Germane to the matter."

We have the highest respect for the City of London, we grieve that its honourable and powerful members should enter the Corporation. The WIGRAMS, the WARRENS, the MELLISHES, the THORNTONS, the BARINGS, the WILLIS'S, the CURTIS'S—all that class of men scout the thing, and the consequence naturally is, that the interests of London are handed down to the care of pastry-cooks, brewers' druggists, linen-drapers, stable-keepers, publicans, and sinners—and surely, is not as it should be—as it has been. The Corporation of the first mercantile City in the world should be sustained as it was of old, and men of importance in society—men of weight and intellect, should rally round the Constitution.

It so happens, that we this year have a most excellent respectable LORD MAYOR—a little too free in giving opinions upon legal questions in his Justice-room, but extremely gentlemanly and well-mannered. What must have been the feelings at hearing such a debate as that which took place the other day, or at having his name stuck to the Resolutions of the Common Council, which was ordered by that enlightened body to be published forth to the world!

We had intended, to-day, to have selected the progress of the Common Council as set out in their various Resolutions and Addresses to the Throne and Parliament during the last ten years, and to have contrasted them with events for the same period. We have not room for this—nor are the subjects persons of whom we propose to treat, worth quite so much space at any time—content we ourselves, then, by quoting a part of a City Address presented to his late MAJESTY in the year 1810, touching the conduct and character of His Grace ARTHUR DUKE OF WELLINGTON: this most brilliant effort was written and contrived on the 9th day of January, after vituperating every thing, and every body connected with the Government, we have this sensible and almost poetic paragraph:

"Deriving no benefit from experience, a third well-appointed army, under the command of SIR ARTHUR WELLESLEY, was hurried into the interior of Spain, alike ignorant of the force and movement of the enemy, where, after an unprofitable display of British valour, and dreadful slaughter, this army, like the former, was compelled to seek safety in a precipitate retreat before (what we were led to believe) a vanquished foe; leaving thousands of our sick and wounded exposed men in the hands of the enemy.

"This loss, like others, has passed without enquiry, and impunity has placed the servants of the Crown above the reach of justice!!! Your Majesty has been advised to confer titles of honour and distinction on this GENERAL, who had thus exhibited a rash and pusillanimous display of unprofitable bravery.

"After these multiplied errors, &c. &c.

Having thus cursorily disposed of the character of the illustrious British warrior that ever drew the breath of

be sapient body take upon themselves to prophecy as to the ate of the nation consequent upon the measures of Government, in these very emphatic words:—

We cannot but express an ardent hope that your MAJESTY hereafter will be more fortunate in the choice of the men to whom you may hereafter confide the conduct of affairs; and that your councils will be no longer embarrassed, nor the country INSULTED and DISHONOURED by those disgraceful occurrences, which, while they have exposed us to the ridicule of surrounding nations, may embolden the enemy to look forward with confidence to the subjugation of a nation so distracted in her councils, and so improvidently governed."

It thus proceeds, and concludes with a prayer that His Majesty will be pleased to "institute a rigid, impartial, and general inquiry into the national misfortunes, and into the conduct" of this poor, unfortunate SIR ARTHUR WELLESLEY.

One specimen is enough—the same total absence of foresight and the same evident ignorance of affairs at the moment, which are displayed in this precious tissue of nonsense, are to be found in every address and resolution of the same set of people, and so it will continue to be while superior men stand aloof from the council, and the affairs of nations and empires are left to the consideration of people whose intellects are just adequate to the twisting up of parcels, measuring dowlas, letting out horses, or weighing out half pounds of tea.

IN our last, we noticed a subscription which was entered into by the Whig Club, in the year 1788, which amounted to a thousand pounds, towards erecting a column on RUNYMEDE. The old gentleman who was present, and to whom we alluded, tells us, that we omitted the very cream of the jest; for that the column in question was intended to have been raised to the "glorious and immortal memory of KING WILLIAM THE THIRD."

Contrasted with the present politics of the RADICAL WHIGS, his anecdote may contribute to make those persons, if possible, more ridiculous than they even are.

ONE of those excellent exhibitions called a Middlesex County Meeting was held at the MERMAID, at Hackney, on Wednesday last, at which several of the old performers displayed their powers; or, perhaps, we should say, their want of powers.

MAJOR CARTWRIGHT has attained to an age, which, if it weakens his ability of attempting mischief, weakens, in an equal proportion, the desire of opposing him. The poor old gentleman, whose political principle and character are tolerably well known, was received with various indications of impatience and disapprobation by the assembly; and concluded a most tiresome harangue by proposing a string of most absurd resolutions.

A MR. BIGGE produced another set of resolutions which he had made up, and which were seconded by a person of the name of MALLETT; but WOOLER, the Black-Dwarf, was the hero of the day. He was uncommonly well received, and was followed at a respectful distance by MESSRS. BYNG and WHITBREAD, our county members!!!

The vapid nonsense of the latter person had the negative merit of being less mischievous in its tendency than the harangue of his colleague: where a man admits that he forms his plans, and regulates his zeal by the example of MR. LAMBTON, it is of very little importance what he says or does, particularly when it is recollected that MR. LAMBTON'S plan was so absurd as to be scouted with contempt from Parliament, and that his zeal in the cause was so very moderate that he suffered himself to sit peaceably eating MICHAEL ANGELO TAYLOR'S cotelets and sipping his claret, at the very moment when this vital question was pending, and could not even command patience or attention enough to wait to see its fate decided. WHITBREAD must be sillier than we thought to have alluded to LAMBTON or his motion. He cannot plead ignorance—for he himself it was who announced the downfall of the whole affair to the witty Whigs of Privy-Garden.

The cheering and satisfactory inference to be drawn from the Hackneied proceedings of this county meeting is this—that the people have nothing on earth to complain of. Flourishing trade, active manufactories, profound peace, and perfect plenty, are the signs of the times, and the consequence is, that the itinerant dealers in discontent are hard run to build windmills, in order to fight them. The listeners to the speeches are congregated by natural curiosity, as full-grown children stop at the corners of streets to peep at PUNCH; the other frequenters of such assemblies, consist of persons who take advantage of crowds to collect unregarded trifles, and the orators are, now-a-days, either heard with impatience, or received with contempt.

One thing we admit the meeting of Wednesday did to redeem its character, towards the close of the affair—it unanimously refused to listen to MR. PETER MOORE; and we should add, to their honour, that the Sheriffs refused to sign the resolutions, which the mob said were carried, after the original resolutions had been negatived.

Upon the whole, judging from what we saw, we would recommend the LORD CHANCELLOR to take the MERMAID at Hackney under his special care; not for the reason assigned for his having extended his protection to that in St. James's-street, but in his capacity of guardian of idiots and lunatics!

Where was MR. HUNT?

IT is quite curious to observe, the various ways in which vanity shews itself. We seldom have seen a more striking display of the failing, than the following, which made its appearance in the MORNING POST of last Monday. We give it entire, with the quotation from the Literary Gazette, whence it derives its source:—

THE LATE KING'S LIBRARY.

"His MAJESTY has written to LORD LIVERPOOL, announcing that he has presented this noble collection to the British Nation. The letter is brief, but nobly and patriotically expressed in elegant language. It states the number of books to be 120,000! and his MAJESTY'S reasons for thus bestowing them, as most agreeable to the memory of a Father, who during so long a reign lived the model of every public and private virtue.—(Literary Gazette.)

"This valuable gift, which has been made to the PUBLIC, probably at the suggestion of one of the Correspondents of the MORNING POST, will be placed in a building to be erected for the purpose."

No persons can more perfectly appreciate the services of the MORNING POST than ourselves; its copious details of fashionable proceedings; the constitutionality of its politics, its gaiety, its humour, and its general information; but it is impossible to let even the MORNING POST escape a particular notice, when we find it coolly and quietly taking to itself the merit of having suggested to HIS MAJESTY (by a Letter from one of its Correspondents,) an act which calls for, and has received, the gratitude of the country.

There is something so exceedingly ridiculous in the supposition, that it is quite impossible to resist laughing outright. We have no doubt, the same worthy Correspondent of this MORNING POST, though perhaps through a more confidential channel, was the person who suggested to the KING the noble determination to sacrifice the large portion of his Annual Revenue, which his MAJESTY last year gave up to the public exigencies, as well as the allotment of another large portion of it, to the indulgence of his princely disposition in acts of benevolence and charity.

We quite agree with the MORNING POST in one point; and although to-day we have not time or space to enter into the proposed disposition of this truly Royal Donation to the country, we must raise our voice, in the first instance, in favour of the plan alluded to by that paper, and against its being made part of the Establishment of the British Museum. There would, upon a rough, but not exaggerated calculation, be about 60,000 duplicates brought together by this addition;—and, as is the custom of that establishment, the same number would be brought to the hammer, to make room for them. Even, however, if this should not be the case, there are obvious objections—to say nothing of accidents by fire, &c.; —to aggregating, under one establishment, the greater part of our national literary property. And there is, besides, a want of due respect to the Monarch himself, in suffering such a proof of his munificence to merge in a common stock made up by so many contributors, and lost under one general term. The Royal Society has no Library—and even then, the gift would be more highly appreciated, and retain its character of an exclusive Royal Donation: but we feel, and every man jealous of the dignity of his country will, we are convinced, feel with us, that the true mode of evincing its opinion of HIS MAJESTY'S liberality, would be to erect a building calculated to give it its full effect—which should form part of a palace and residence of the Monarch. We shall return to this subject upon some future occasion.

CURIOUS COINCIDENCE.

TWO hundred years ago there was a singular old man, who lived at PETERBOROUGH, whose memory is yet preserved by a portrait at the west end of the Cathedral; the name of this singular old body was SCARLETT.

The lines under his picture, as we find by the "Antiquarian Repertory," vol. I. p. 52. ed. 1780, indicate that he was stout and sturdy, and his voice loud and rough, and so terrible to little children, that he was known by the name of old SCARLETT SCAREBABE!

"Second to none for size and sturdy limm,
"A SCAREBABE; mighty voice with visage grim."

WE have received several letters, charging us with not devoting a sufficient space in BULL to fashionable intelligence and fashionable movements; that we carry ourselves a little too high, and treat matters contemptuously which to the million are interesting and amusing. One lady most pathetically laments the absence of provincial prodigies and accidents, and tells us that she is actually obliged to take in a second Sunday Paper, to gratify her appetite for wonderful intelligence. A graver correspondent blames us for not opening private communications with all the Courts of Europe, and quotes the TIMES upon us as a splendid instance, well worthy of imitation. A young lady, who writes a running hand so beautifully as to be nearly illegible, marvels at our scanty supply of marriages; and two gentlemen, whose chests are piled up with post-obits, are downright angry that we do not encrease our weekly catalogue of deaths.

To all this we answer, that we hate HUMBUG, and that we will never affect to know more than we really know—that we will not foist upon credulous readers letters from "continental correspondents" at foreign Courts, concocted in the neighbourhood of Fleet-street, nor give details of fashionable movements which have never taken place, nor praise watering places which we have not visited, nor kill people who are alive and merry, nor marry people who, perhaps, have no more disposition to wedlock than so many nuns and friars; but we waste words in disclaiming the trickery—we will do better, and expose it. If, instead of sticking to matters of fact and plain truths, we wished to make BULL what the friends we have just noticed appear to wish it to be, nothing would be more simple than the operation, to prove which we will just trouble our readers with a

SPECIMEN

OF A well-conducted, MODERN NEWS-PAPER.

"By letters from PARIS, received exclusively by us, we find that there was a considerable tumult in MADRID on the 21st and 22d ult. Our correspondent judiciously remarks, that it is impossible when popular insurrection once commences to ascertain precisely where it will stop. Things had assumed a serious aspect. Rumours indeed are afloat respecting the peculiar situation of the KING, which, as we are exclusively in possession of them, we do not feel authorised to publish at present."

"From ROME, we are sorry to hear that his Holiness the POPE has been afflicted with a flying gout. The disorder having at last settled in his Holiness's TOE, he has been unable to give audiences for the last week or ten days. Our letters inform us that there are a great many English wintering in the immortal city. Provisions are exceedingly cheap, which has induced LORD GEORGE CAVENDISH, and several other English persons of the same class, to avail themselves of an opportunity of residing there during the present depreciation of property in England."

We lay the following important communication before our readers, without vouching for its authenticity, although we have seldom been led astray by the information of the well-informed gentleman from whom we have received it:—

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE.—A letter, it is said, has, by some negligence on the part of a certain person, been seen by several persons here, written it is supposed by a member of the British Ministry to a person high in their confidence, stating facts, which when they come to be known will startle those thick and thin gentlemen, who think Ministers can do no wrong. With the precise nature of the letter we are as yet unacquainted, but we have heard more than we dare venture to communicate at this moment. Our readers may rely upon it we shall sift the business to the bottom, and suffer no feelings of false delicacy to interfere with our first duties to the British nation.

GIBRALTAR.—The greatest secresy is observed here with respect to the communications between the G—— and the —— of the interior; and it is rumoured that H—— is likely to be sent upon a confidential embassy to Sir —— ——, at ——, in consequence of the last accounts received from ——. You will use your own discretion in giving to the public such parts of this important communication as may be politic in the present stage of the business; but of this you may be assured, the Ministers at home are not aware, that —— is dispatched in a bye-boat to ——, to make certain propositions respecting the ——, which may eventually lead to consequences which none of us can foresee.

A private letter from Tours, dated Jan. 21, mentions, as a positive fact, that Col. ——, after a very successful night's play at Ecarte with Mr. ——, in which he had won upwards of fifteen thousand pounds, was detected in unfair practices, which being plainly charged upon him by the latter, it produced a meeting on the 19th, when, after exchanging two shots each, the Colonel received his antagonist's ball in his shoulder, and the seconds interfered. Mr. —— was second to Col. ——, and Major ——, of the ——, attended Mr. ——. Dr. —— and Surgeon —— were in readiness, and the ball was very safely extracted upon the ground.

It is impossible not to perceive, in the present state of affairs, that some decisive measures must be taken in Spain. It is true that the situation of FRANCE is a very peculiar one, nor is Spain much less delicately placed. It is, of course, impossible for us to hazard a direct opinion upon the subject; but from all we can collect from those who (and we have no sort of hesitation in saying it) are fully competent to judge, we are very much inclined to agree with HUME, who observes, that "an abrupt and violent dissolution naturally excites discontents "among the people, who usually put entire confidence in their repre- "sentatives, and expect from them the redress of all their grievances."

FASHIONABLE ARRIVALS.

LORD LIVERPOOL, from Coombe Wood, at Fife-House.—COL. THOMPSON, MRS. THOMPSON, and MISS E. THOMPSON, at Kirkham's Hotel, from Cheltenham.—DR. DIXON, at ditto, from Bath.—MAJOR SMITH, from his sister's in Yorkshire, at Stevens's, Bond-street.—SIR W. ELLIOT, BART. from Stobs.—LADY MONTGOMERY, from Scotland.—SIR T. D. ACLAND, BART.—CAPT. COBB.—MR. EVANS.—GENERAL SMITH.—MRS. MONEYPENNY and daughters, at Mivart's, Brook-street. MR. HAMMOND KNIFE, from Gloucestershire.—COL. O'CALLAGHAN, from Cork, at the Tavistock Hotel.

DEPARTURES.

LADY MUMFORD, for Paris.—MR. CURRY, to Cheltenham.—MISS LAW, and MISS E. LAW, to their aunt's, MRS. TWEEDEL'S, in Buckinghamshire.—DR. SHORT, from Long's Hotel to Tadcaster.—MR. and MRS. WHITMARSH, to Brighton.

On Thursday last, MR. CANNING gave an elegant entertainment at Gloucester Lodge.

LORD LAUDERDALE has arrived in town.

No less than six different persons are employed in dramatizing "Peveril of the Peak."

A new tragedy is forthcoming at Covent-garden by MISS MITFORD. Green-room report speaks highly of it.

The faux-pas of Lady —— with MR. —— is quite the subject of conversation; it will probably afford matter of employment for the gentlemen of the Long Robe.

MRS. THOMPSON, of Grosvenor-square, will, early in the spring, open her house to a large party of fashionables.

The BISHOP of NORWICH gave a dinner last week at his Palace to several of the Clergy of his Diocese; among the company we noticed his son, the VENERABLE ARCHDEACON BATHURST.

A great number of Members of both Houses have arrived in town during the week.

The weather was intensely cold on Thursday, and there was a considerable fall of snow in many parts of the country.

A very singular accident happened last week in the neighbourhood of Newbury, in Berkshire; a poor woman having, in consequence of the distress of the times, been compelled to seek her livelihood by going out to wash for families, shut up her house early on Tuesday morning, and proceeded to her laborious but honourable employment; upon returning home at nine at night, she discovered that her cottage had been broken into, stripped of every article of furniture. She at first concluded by thieves, but she soon discovered that it was not by human depredators she had been thus pitiously despoiled. A large hog, which the poor woman had kept for several weeks to fatten upon the remnants and broken victuals she received from her neighbours, had broken loose, and, strange to say, in the ferocity of its appetite, had eaten up not only a large armed-chair, which stood by the fire, but a feather-bed which was in the room, and had actually devoured two of the bed-posts, when overcome by fatigue, it is supposed the animal dropped down in a state of stupor. Some of the property has since been recovered.

WONDERFUL SHOT.—As MR. GEORGE STYLES, of Little Waltham, was returning home from shooting one day last week, he was surprised at the sudden approach of night, it being then just three o'clock in the afternoon; upon looking upwards to ascertain the cause of the phenomenon, he perceived immediately above his head a flock of wild geese —with extraordinary presence of mind he fired his fowling-piece (a single-barrelled gun of Joseph Manton's,) into the centre of the body, and, miraculous to say, brought down three hundred and seventy-eight birds at one shot!

This, however surprising as it may appear, is equalled in curiosity by the adventure which he subsequently encountered, for having with great difficulty secured eighty-two of the birds by tying them round his waist, he was considerably surprized and alarmed at finding them gradually recover animation; but judge his horror and astonishment when he found himself suddenly lifted into the air by his resuscitated captives, who, it appeared, had been more frightened than hurt; and who carried him over a large tract of country, and finally alighted in the sea, within seven miles of Hastings, where, upon touching the water, he had the presence of mind to disentangle himself by cutting the waistband of his breeches with a pen-knife. Thus disencumbered, MR. STYLES continued swimming till midnight, when he was discovered floating in the water by the brig Fanny, of Hull, which was passing within three miles of him, which immediately put back and sent a boat to his relief, and one day last week he returned to his disconsolate family, with little other injury than fatigue.—We were favoured with the account of this by an eye-witness of the whole transaction.

BIRTHS.

The lady of THOMAS GLADDIS, ESQ. of twins.
MRS. HIGGENBOTHAM, of a daughter.
MRS. SMITH, of Edinburgh, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

On Tuesday last, THOMAS WHITE, ESQ. to MISS EVANS, of Worcestershire.

Lately, at Calcutta, EDWARD YELLOWLY, ESQ. to MISS ANNE BROWN, only daughter of W. BROWN, ESQ. late of Dublin.

DEATHS.

Lately at Clifton, MR. THOMAS TURNBULL, aged 49. He was an affectionate friend, a kind father, and a dutiful son.

On Wednesday, in Mary-le-bonne, MRS. HUGHES, widow of MR. HUGHES, for many years an opulent silversmith. She has left a considerable property to her only daughter.

&c. &c. &c. &c.

It may be necessary to remark, that the whole of the above intelligence is without a shadow of truth; because, if we did not so remark, we should become quiet parties to the HUMBUG by which our contemporaries live and flourish; but, we think, we have done enough to shew that if we felt it at all necessary to dabble in newspaper-making, the trade is as easy to learn, as it is honourable to practice.

BEAUTIES OF WAITHMAN.

NOT MEANT PERSONAL.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR,—In the eloquent Speech, delivered by the above orator this last week, all the Reporters, whether by design or not I cannot tell, have left out some of his most forcible points, some of them striking beauties.

"Did I not predict, five and twenty years ago, the country would be ruined unless we had a Parliamentary Reform—and are not my predictions verified? Had we had a reform, we should have had no war—had we had no war, we should have been at peace.—(Hear.)—If we had had peace without war, our soldiers would not have been killed.—(Hear, hear)—and had they been still living they would have required food and clothing. This, Gentlemen, this, I say, would at once have relieved both the Agriculturists and the Manufacturers.—(Hear, hear, hear.)—What did Ministers go to war for?—To spend English money and to spill English blood—and what is the end of it?—Peace—an eight years peace to be sure; but what has that produced?—Plenty.—Peace and plenty—and what have they produced us? Why, Gentlemen, Agricultural Distress. Now, in the name of common sense, what should Agricultural Distress produce but Parliamentary Reform.—(Immense cheering.)

"Let us next look to the army—and let me, Gentlemen, ask you, what has it done since the Battle of Waterloo?—Nothing. What use is a soldier of, either to himself or to his country, in a time of peace? We can dispense with their services—disband them; every other country in Europe may have large military forces, but why should we?

"An Alderman once mistook BLACKSTONE's opinions for mine. I hate comparisons, but the DUKE OF WELLINGTON has an enormous income from the country, and I have none. We have heard much of his exploits; I wish to detract from no man's merit; but let me ask—was his Grace ever in such personal danger from foreign troops, as I was from British troops, at Knightsbridge Barracks?—(Never, never, and bravo, bravo, WAITHMAN.)—What is a standing army kept for? I'll tell you, fellow Citizens, to frighten Lord Mayors and Aldermen!!!—(Uproar with murmurs, cries of Shame, and BRIDGES said, 'Who's afraid?')

"The Duke is a bold man, Gentlemen, and I am told has called County Meetings—a farce; but it is more than his Grace has ventured to do to call a Common Hall—a farce.—(Applause.)—How often have I, in this Hall, spoken on Parliamentary Reform? How often has SIR FRANCIS, in Westminster? How much has CONDETT written on Reform? But, strange to say, Ministers have never attended to us; and the only answer they can give is, 'Reform yourselves.' Blind and infatuated men! Fit, indeed, to be Ministers! Fit, indeed, to see the real cause of distress, when they can see we are reformed already. Are not all genuine Whigs reformed to Radicals? What is the DUKE of BEDFORD (one of the immortal RUSSELLS) but a Radical? Reform yourselves, indeed! Was there ever a man, since writing was first invented (and that was before 1688,) who ever reformed himself so often as CONDETT.—(Never, never, never.)

"The next subject I am requested by the Committee to call your attention to, is, the Debt! What have Ministers been doing with that? Reducing 5 per Cents. to 4 per Cents.; that is, relieving one part of the public at the expense of the other. Had we had a Reform this never could have happened—for a Reform will give us an equality of rights!—(Hear, hear.)—To what state has this debt reduced us? Why, Gentlemen, when every other thing in the country has fallen, we cannot get a little bit of a three per cent. annuity out of it without paying from 70 to 80l. real sterling money for it.—(Shame, shame.)—But there is one consolation left us, and that is, the eye of the country is on the debt, and public opinion is demonstrable to a calculation!!!

"What care I about Agricultural Distress—farmers would not buy my pamphlet or attend to my speeches any more than Ministers have done; why should we trouble ourselves about agriculture, there is not one of us have an acre of land; but I am told, our manufacturers are busy—be it so; but there is a mighty difference, we all know, between making an article and selling it.—(Hear, from all parts.)—Pray, may I ask, when we have made the goods, who is to pay us for them? Why, Gentlemen, the Columbian Republic, I suppose!—(A laugh.")

It would be a pity such noble arguments and clear conclusions as these should be lost to the world—particularly on Ministers.—'S death! —Print 'em and shame the dogs, your's,

WM. BIRCH.

Idol-lane, Jan. 31, 1823.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR—You was so obliging to insert in your Paper of Sunday the 5th of this month, my letter respecting the propriety of Magistrates permitting attornies to interfere in assisting thieves in their defence, in the first instance, when brought before them for examination. In that letter it is clearly shewn, that the law gives an authority to any Justice of the Peace to exercise the right of turning the attorney out of the Justice-room when he thinks proper; and it further appears clear that when juvenile offenders are brought before Magistrates, very often they would, from a sense of shame, and perhaps contrition, at having committed an offence, impeach their experienced associates.

By a report in a morning paper, (the HERALD of Saturday, Jan. 25,) of an examination, at the Mansion-house, of "William Thomas, on a charge of having stolen a parcel of bankers' notes, amounting to 1100l. out of the Exeter Subscription Coach in Piccadilly," it is there stated, "that application was made to permit this man, the guard of the coach, to be bailed, but it was refused, and the prisoner was committed for trial." It is further stated, that "he," the prisoner, "seemed very anxious to speak in his defence, by accusing one of the witnesses against him, but Mr. Harmer desired him not to speak a word."

It is not meant to arraign the conduct of any Magistrate, especially one so elevated and so well qualified to execute the arduous duties of Chief Magistrate of the City of London as the present Lord Mayor; but should these remarks meet his Lordship's observation, may an individual be permitted to ask, whether, when an attorney acts as here described, that of preventing a prisoner "accusing another," he ought not to be checked in this mode of procedure? When this man was forbid to speak by this attorney, was it not in all probability shutting out very important evidence, that might have led to the knowledge of facts, not only essential to the guilt or innocence of this man, but that of others connected together in these nefarious transactions?

The Lord Mayor, and every Magistrate, know the difficulty of obtaining evidence sufficiently strong to convict offenders guilty of this species of robbery. Those who rob the coaches of the bankers' parcels are not common thieves, such as pickpockets, burglars, or street-robbers, they are of a more refined stamp—bribed by rich rogues, who, like Jonathan Wylde, are receivers, partakers, negociators of the plunder, who receive advice from attornies well qualified to instruct, and well practised in the art of legal chicanery. The information given by parties placed in jeopardy, committing this species of offence, and in fact of all other offences where gangs are formed and act in concert, is of most material consequence to the community, and should, at a first examination, never be checked or withheld. Mr. HARMER knew when he advised this prisoner, Thomas, "not to speak a word," the effect it would produce—it might convict this man, or it might tell secrets respecting others of the gang—it might lead to the discovery of the rich rogue, the mover of the grand machine. Mr. HARMER knows "OTHELLO's occupation" may be a little suspended, though not quite "gone," if the rope should be tied close round some of the necks of his wary clients.

If this is the true state of the case, and there is no doubt of its truth, what a noble specimen of exalted firmness would the present Chief Magistrate set, and how much would the public rejoice at reading in the public prints of the day, that the Right Honourable WILLIAM HEYGATE had come to the noble resolution of not permitting attornies to advise thieves and rogues, when brought before him charged with felonies, to shut their mouths, and not permit them to make voluntary confessions; if those attornies persisted, to order them to be turned out of the Justice-room. This noble example would animate every Magistrate in town and country, would lessen the number of pettifogging professional characters, but, above all, diminish the numerous gangs of thieves, who would be disheartened in following this mode of life, when deprived of support and encouragement from legal assistance.

It is necessary to repeat, this decision of a Magistrate does not infringe the sacred right the most abandoned culprit has to the protection of the law when brought to trial—then he may have the assistance of counsel, attorney, &c. in making his defence; but, in the first instance, to afford him legal assistance, is not consonant to reason and justice, and not the law of the country.

EQUITAS.

Jan. 29, 1823.

TAUNTON.—Three men, who resided in the neighbourhood of Crowcombe, were found on Sunday se'nnight, dead in the snow, between that village and Gore Inn. They had been drinking at the latter place on Saturday night. They have left 19 children to bewail their loss.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR—Having crushed the demon of sedition, you have patriotically, and in some cases successfully, pointed your mighty influence to minor grievances. For one of them (as I think you take the merit of it) I beg leave to present you my individual thanks, that of ridding the world of that hideous monster, the great bonnet, the aperture of which being so wide, the funnel so deep, and the face at the bottom, in effect, so diminished, that I always fancied I was looking at the object through the wrong end of a telescope. Thank God, Sir, and you, it is gone.

But all this is by the bye.

The existing evil that I wish to turn your attention to, is the state of the nightly guardians of the streets, vulgarly called watchmen. Sir, I am an elderly clergyman, occasionally visiting the great metropolis; to see two or three remaining old friends, pick up a few new books, and amuse myself with a glimpse of the endless, but ever-changing follies of fashionable life, and then fly back to my retreat, and thank my stars that I have escaped from the vortex. On these occasions, I take up my abode certainly in a very noisy region, but which long habit has rendered familiar and pleasant, but attended by the annoyance I am going to point out to you. I mean, Sir, at HATCHETT's Hotel, in Piccadilly. (And really, Mr. BULL, if ever you should leave your own lodge, I would recommend that house to your notice; there you will find well-aired beds, clean, young, and obliging chamber-maids, and the head-waiter, MR. CHESTER, a very paragon in that high office. And you, MR. BULL, who are a lover of order, would be delighted to see the urbanity and firmness with which he exercises his legitimate authority in preserving decorum in the coffee-room.) I am, Sir, generally a good sleeper, though turned of three-score, but the eternal clatter in the street frequently shortens my slumbers. On those occasions, I often wish to know how the waning night grows old; but the countless watchmen, who cry under my window, so inarticulate are they all, not a jot am I the wiser. One of them has excited my ill-will in no common degree; his cry is not human—his positively a grunt, and even that effected with most laborious effort. Many a time have I been so full of wrath, that I wished he had the rattles in his throat; but for this exhibition of temper, I trust, considering the provocation, that I shall be forgiven! Now, Sir, I attribute this want of understanding between the watchmen and the public, to have arisen from the former having created us of that part of his tale, the sonorous termination, "o'clock," the former use of which, forced him to lay an emphasis on the actual hour he was crying. Sir, in the time of war and general distress, with a depreciated currency, I thought it but fair that he, like other traders, should be allowed to give less of his commodity for our money; but we are now blessed with plenty of gold and silver, and mutton at 4d. the pound, and every other article in proportion. Why then, let me ask, should the watchmen alone be allowed to stand at war prices, and still give us only a piece of his song? Really, MR. BULL, this is such a very flagrant imposition, that I am sure this simple statement of the fact will be enough to engage your zealous co-operation for the reformation of it; and by so doing, you will lay all the disturbed districts under much obligation, and particularly, Sir, your very obedient servant,

A RECTOR.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH.

THURSDAY.—The King v. Wm. Tonbridge.—The Solicitor-General prayed the judgment of the Court on the defendant (one of Carlile's shopmen), convicted at the Sittings after last Term, before the Chief Justice, for having published a blasphemous and infamous libel on the Holy Scriptures. The defendant was brought up in custody of the Keeper of Newgate.—The Chief Justice read the notes of the trial, from which it appeared that W. Smith, a Bow-street officer, purchased the publication at a shop in Water-lane, of which the defendant appeared to be the proprietor.—The defendant read an address from a written paper, and complained of having been interrupted by the Chief Justice, when making his defence on the trial, by which means he was condemned unheard, and contended it was a strong ground why no punishment should be inflicted on him.—Mr. Justice Bayley passed the judgment of the Court on him, that he should be imprisoned two years in the House of Correction (Coldbath Fields), to pay a fine of 100l., to give security for his good behaviour for five years, himself in 100l., and two sureties of 50l. each.

The King v. Susannah Wright.—The defendant came into Court smartly dressed, with flowers on her hair, and attended by a female friend, to receive the judgment of the Court, having been convicted of publishing a blasphemous work. She proceeded to read an address in effect, that after some months' imprisonment she had cause to complain. She meant to contend now as she did then, that to deny the truth of Christianity was not against law.—Mr. Justice Bayley referred to an Act of Parliament which made it penal.—The defendant persisted in her ill-advised conduct, when Mr. Justice Bayley interrupted her in these words:—Mrs. Wright, the sentence of the Court is, that you be imprisoned for 18 months in the House of Correction, Coldbath Fields, to pay a fine of 100l. and to find two sureties for your good behaviour for five years, in the sum of 50l. each, and to be further imprisoned until such fine be paid, and such sureties entered into.—The defendant, on being ushered out of Court, exclaimed, "I hope your Lordship will give me a check on your banker for the amount, as I shall never be able to pay it."

FRIDAY.—A number of men, in sailors' attire, were marched along in double handcuffs, ironed, and in charge of constables, with an officer in military uniform, who came into Court with a letter in his hand, which he handed over, together with the key of their irons. On their irons being struck off, they were drawn up, 21 in number, on the floor of the Court. The letter was a return from the Captain of His Majesty's ship Severn, in it they were charged with smuggling, and also with the murder of William Cullum, on whose body an inquest had been held, and a verdict of Wilful Murder returned against some persons unknown. Cullum was shot during the fight between the smuggling cutter (name unknown) and his Majesty's revenue cutter, the Badger, off the coast of France. The smugglers lost three men in the conflict, on whose bodies a Coroner's Inquest had been held, and a verdict of "Justifiable Homicide" returned.—After Counsel had been heard in support of their being discharged, the Court directed them to be committed to the custody of the Marshal of the Marshalsea, until the charge of murder could be investigated by a Magistrate having competent jurisdiction.

A rule for a criminal information was filed against Sir Charles Bunbury and Charles Eagle, Esq. Magistrates of Suffolk, for improper exercise of their magisterial authority.

A very peculiar case came on before the Bench of Magistrates, at Kingston, on the 1st inst. It was an information against Geo. Adams, who kept the Castle Tap at Richmond, for having sold beer, ale, wine, spirits, and tobacco, having no license. It was proved that Mr. Forty kept the Castle, and Adams the Tap; that the license was in Forty's name, but that Adams bought every thing in his own name, and sold it for his own profit, allowing Mr. Forty one guinea a barrel for his share of the profit.—After hearing the case on the beer information, the Magistrates declared their opinion that it was fully established, but consented to take the lowest penalty, which was the price of double licences, and 40s. costs on each of four informations, which amounted to 40l. 6s.—After the conviction upon the beer information, the defendant pleaded guilty to the three other informations. The full penalty would have been 50l. and costs for each information, of which there were four. From this decision, it appears that every person who keeps the tap of an inn must have an extra license, unless the landlord of the inn keeps it himself.

ELY.—An Inquest was held on Saturday se'nnight, on the body of John Landen, who had been discovered buried in a plantation on a farm belonging to Jonathan Page, Esq.—The deceased was a labourer. His skull was fractured, and the surgeons stated it to be their decided opinion that he had been knocked on the head by a bludgeon, or some weapon of that nature. He had for some time past been the associate of John Rolfe, a notorious poacher. On Wednesday the 29th ult. Rolfe was at the house of the deceased, where he staid until near midnight, when he called the deceased up to go to a plantation on Mr. Page's farm, in search of game. Rolfe took with him a large bludgeon, which he said he must take, for if he met any body upon the road to interrupt him, he would knock him down dead on the spot. The deceased had about him when he left home, 3l. in money, and a silver watch. The money, the watch, and the shoes of the deceased were missing.—The Jury found a verdict of wilful murder against John Rolfe, who has been committed to Ely gaol, to take his trial. Upon the prisoner being apprehended at his brother's house, where he was concealed, the shoes of the deceased were found.

NORWICH.—On Sunday afternoon, a large congregation of that sect, commonly called Ranters, were assembled for divine worship in a room in the City of Norwich public-house, when the floor gave way, and they were all precipitated into the cellar. They were, with considerable difficulty, extricated, and it was found that a child had been killed, one poor woman had both thighs broken, nine or ten more had sustained fractures, and many were otherwise injured. They were conveyed to the hospital immediately.

IRELAND.

At the Special Sessions at Cork, on Saturday se'nnight, Wm. Fenton, and William and Thomas Fenton, father and two sons, were tried for having arms in their possession. Thomas Fenton was found guilty, and ordered to be transported for seven years.

In the Court of King's Bench, on Monday, the trial of the traversers for riot, and conspiracy to excite a riot, at the Theatre Royal, on the night of the 14th Dec. when the Lord Lieutenant visited the theatre, came on.

James Forbes, Wm. Graham, Wm. Brownlow, Henry Hardwich, George Graham, and Matthew Handwich, were then put to the bar. This was ex-officio informations, filed by His Majesty's Attorney-General against the traversers.—1st Count stated, that on the 14th day in the 3d year of the King, that they repaired to the theatre, for the purpose of insulting his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland; 2d Count, for conspiring, generally, to create a riot in the theatre; 3d Count, for having conspired to so assault the Lord Lieutenant. The 2d information—1st Count, after preliminary averments, charged the defendants, with others unknown, did publicly insult, affront, and abuse his Excellency, &c.—2d Count, that the said traversers did conspire to act for an hour and upwards.

The Attorney-General then stated the case; he spoke for two hours, during which he took a review of His Majesty's visit to Ireland, his parting admonition, the Marquess Wellesley being called to the Government of Ireland, and illustrated our excellent Monarch's character by comparing him to the first Patriots of the Roman Empire, at the same time stating, that he knew his great mind would receive no more than he flattered, but he found his shield in his character. He stated his Excellency's conduct in not permitting the dressing of the theatre in November, as well as his conduct subsequent to that period, and received the unanimous approbation of the British Cabinet. He gave a high eulogium to the memory of King William, and stated, that (the Attorney-General) would not enjoy the blessings of civil and religious liberty, were it not for the enactments of his reign.

The first witness called was R. Lowther, box-keeper to the Theatre Royal, who deposed to the purchase of several pit tickets on admission to the theatre for the evening upon which his Excellency honour it with his presence, by the traversers Forbes and Wm. Graham, and another person.—George Atkinson, examined by the Attorney-General—Knows of the endeavours made to produce disturbance in the theatre. They were planned in the Orange Lodge, No. Forbes belongs to the lodge No. 1660, and Graham to the same. two Handwiches belong to the lodge 780, and Brownlow to No. An assembly was held on the Friday evening before Lord W went to the theatre at the public house, in Werburgh belonging to Peter Daly. Robert Fletcher, the master Lodge, proposed that a subscription should be raised for ing the expense of men going to the theatre. That they should and groan at his Excellency, and also the Lord Mayor; they like Lord Wellesley; they intended to try to force him to leave the Brownlow, while they were speaking of the matter, after the he was in the pit, with numbers of the Lodge 1662. Those of the Lower Lodges who could not afford to buy tickets for selves, were to be sent to the upper gallery. Neither of the wiches were at the Lodge that night. The party subscribed one pound; two pounds were brought them by John Atkinson brother of witness, to be applied to the same purpose: it handed to John to purchase pit tickets, in order to admit persons the upper gallery, as every pit ticket would admit three persons: Witness went with his brother John, on that day, to where W. wich works; John told him to send H. Handwich to Shipwhere the other Orange Lodge was held, that evening, and as bring as many as he could get of the poorer classes of Orangemen who could not provide tickets, to the sign of the Black Bull in street. An hour or five in the afternoon, saw Forbes, a person M'Culloch, witness's brother John, Henry Handwich, Geo. Graham and several others, at that house in Ship-street; one pit ticket given to every three, to give to the poorer class to admit them upper gallery; from twenty to thirty tickets were given, which admit from sixty to ninety persons. All that were at Ship-street to the Theatre that night; they had sticks with them. It was mentioned, that after the tune of "God save the King" she played, they should insist on the "Boyne Water," being played; they would not play it, they were not to let the play go on for remainder of the evening, until it should be played. It was agreed on Saturday evening, that they might know one another by the "look out," which were to be used as the watch-word of their The men had got some spirits in a phial or large bottle such as made for a quart bottle. When Handwich was going away, he to the men that were going to the Theatre, "Lads be wicked." ness saw that party afterwards in the upper gallery, on the opposite side to Lord Wellesley; witness assisted in placing them in the lery, along with Forbes, M'Culloch, John Atkinson, and Henry Handwich; saw Forbes in the upper tier of boxes, he had a small vial in his hand and whistled with it—he was within half a yard of the lery, and was speaking to some of the party in the gallery. Saw bills going about in different parts of the house—they were Saw them before in manuscript with M'Culloch, who was dispersing them from the part of the house over the Lord Lieutenant's box of them fell on his cushion; saw Forbes throw some of the handbills on the stage; heard whistles and shouts from the gallery—some out a groan for the Popish Wellesley;" some one also cried "Bald pated Wellesley you may go home;" at that time there much noise, and the performance interrupted sometimes; it was those expressions were used he saw Forbes speaking to the people the gallery—knows nothing of a bottle having been thrown—saw Essex-street, Forbes, W. Graham, Kelly for a short time, and several others. A Gentleman, named Smith, was there, and Brownlow, John Atkinson. There was a good deal of conversation. Forbes use of the expression, "the devil mend Him" (Lord Wellesley) speaking of the bottle having been thrown, that he did not care himself were transported so as he could raise an Orange lodge wherever he should be sent. There was no particular conversation but a mere running conversation among themselves; they were moving as to Handwich being taken, and who was to go to call him. Forbes asked some of them who had been in the pit why they were not more active? He said this to Brownlow, who answered, that in the pit did as much as these in any other part of the house. He said that Handwich was charged with throwing the bottle. He expressed themselves in terms that they were sorry in fact the bottle did not take effect. Forbes, Brownlow, M'Culloch, several others, were present during the whole of this. The witness identified all the traversers.

TUESDAY.—John Atkinson confirmed the previous testimony as respected the sending of persons to the theatre for the purpose rendering Lord Wellesley unpopular; that it might cause his recall. It was mentioned that they might cause him to leave the theatre, ultimately the country. Witness received money from the party present at the Shakespeare Tavern to purchase tickets to send people to the Upper Gallery; it was not necessary to send people to any part of the house, as there would be plenty to go there at their own expence.—John Lambert was at the theatre; placards were dispersed some parts; Wm. Graham was engaged in the pit in handing about. There were hissing and groaning when Lord Wellesley came in; there were numbers of persons about Graham, and in communication with him; heard the words "Look out, boys," from the gallery also heard whistling from the galleries.—John Rooney was also at the theatre. There were groans for the Lord Mayor, and groans for the house of Wellesley; claps for Sheriff Thorpe, and for the Callender. Saw something flash across his sight, over the foot lights, it appeared to be a bottle, which struck the drop scene, and made a dinge in it; it turned up a corner near Lord Wellesley, about three or four feet from the side of the theatre next him; also saw a piece of timber fall across, which rebounded from Lord Wellesley's box to the stage. Giles O'Brien stated that between the play and farce they were going out for the band to play the "Protestant Boys," and "Boyne Water." Heard them call out, "Look out, boys!" They cried out against —— y Papists, and b—— y Popish Lord Lieutenant. When they said "Look out, boys!" were used, a voice answered, "We are here." John Atkinson saw a person beating the gallery with a stick in front, calling out "No Popish Lieutenant! no Popish Government!" identifies Matthew Handwich as the person; they groaned at the Lord Lieutenant repeatedly; Mat. Handwich was the most conspicuous; there must have been a hundred of these persons in the Upper Gallery; they had sticks with nobs on them; was much frightened, and wished to retire. Heard some persons beaten; heard the words "look out," which appeared to be a signal which they used repeatedly. Several other witnesses confirmed the previous ones, and then the Court adjourned.

AN HISTORICAL, GEOGRAPHICAL, and COMMERCIAL ACCOUNT of BRAZIL. By JAMES HENDERSON.—Printed for the Author, and published by Longman, Hurst, Rees, Orme, and Brown, London.

"This volume contains much information on the natural and political situation of Brazil, than is to be found compiled within the compass of any single work on the same subject, that has appeared since the country itself has become an object of so much interest in the eyes of Europeans. Mr. Henderson's account of the commercial and political regulations of Brazil is very valuable."—New Monthly Mag.

"The style is plain and unaffected, and the author's information appears to be drawn from authentic sources. We think considerable credit is due to him for the judgment and ability with which he has embodied the result of his researches, which we regard as a valuable contribution to our stock of knowledge respecting this important and advancing country."—Monthly Mag.

"It brings the manufacturing and commercial capabilities of the country, fully and usefully, under the consideration of those who are interested in such inquiries."—The London Literary Gazette.

This is the only Work published in England containing a minute statistical account of this interesting and rising country.

IN SIX EASY LESSONS OF ONE HOUR EACH.—MR. BRADBURY, Private Tutor at Westminster School, solicits the attention of Ladies and Gentlemen to his unrivalled and infallible system of beautiful PENMANSHIP, whereby he pledges himself to teach persons of all ages to write with ease, elegance, and expedition, (whatever may be the deformity of their present writing) in six progressive Lessons. This system, as it equally promotes the attainment of a bold and masculine hand calculated for business, and of a light and graceful manuscript adapted to Ladies; also secures to the Pupil the certainty of writing straight, without lines, with wonderful dispatch and accuracy, and, moreover, will steady the hand of the most tremulous writer. Upwards of 2000 specimens, and numerous recommendatory letters may be seen, and references given to persons of the first distinction, some of whom are upwards of 50 years of age, Private tuition at home. Ladies and Gentlemen attended at their own residences. A new and practical system of Short Hand, taught in a few lessons, so as to enable the writer to decipher what he has written with inconceivable ease.—Apply, (or direct, post paid) at the Academy, 464, Strand, near Charing Cross.

SILKS—SILKS SELLING OFF.

ANSELM SHEARS, gratefully impressed with the favours which for fourteen years he has received from the ROYAL FAMILY, NOBILITY, and GENTRY, respectfully informs them, that, in consequence of the Lease of his Premises having expired on Christmas last, he is compelled to SELL OFF the whole of his valuable Stock, comprising not only an immense variety of Fashionable Silks, Poplins, Cashmeres, Norwich Crapes, Gros de Naples, Ducapes, Florence Silks, Shaded Sarsnets, Shawls, Scarfs, &c. but those new and beautiful Patterns at present weaving in the Looms, all of which must be SOLD without the least RESERVE. The Looms contain several Thousand Yards of Striped Silk Tabaret, Satin and Damask Curtains and Furniture 9s. 3d. per yard, original price 11s. 6d. No Parcel can be sent, or Patterns cut.—All Persons indebted to the Concern are solicited to make their payments. —Anselm Shears, No. 11, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden.

TO THE FASHIONABLE WORLD.—DISON, WILLSON, and CO. respectfully invite Ladies, patronesses of taste and fashion, to an inspection of their new, costly and extensive Stock of FOREIGN and BRITISH LACE, which they, with confidence, affirm to exceed any hitherto offered. From correspondents at Paris, Brussels, &c. they are supplied with the newest designs of foreign taste, thus forming the unique productions of continental skill with the ultimate originals of British costume. From the flattering advertisements of fictitious manufacturers, professing to sell imitation Lace at low prices, D. W. and Co. hold it their duty to apprize ladies that, having a Manufactory at Brussels, they can and will offer their real Point à l'Aiguille and Brussels fabrics considerably lower than any badly executed imitations, fully assured the superiority of texture and uniform correctness of design will be apparent on inspection, and a single visit to their Rooms establish their claim to favour. They have just received from their manufactory a splendid collection of real Point and Brussels dresses, squares, scarfs, veils, mantellas, caps, &c.; a large assortment of Blonde, Mechlin, and Valenciennes laces, which, in addition to an immense stock of every article in the British Gassed Lace, (commonly known by the name of Urling's Lace) they are determined to sell at the lowest prices. D. W. and Co. beg leave to submit to ladies' attention several novelties for the season, peculiarly elegant for full dress, viz. the Opera Veil, Spanish Court Dress, Rubens la Diane and Zephyrine; Celts Parisienne; Sleeves Dejeune, Quadrille Sashes; Aprons; Reticules; Purses, &c. calculated for the frequenters of Almack's, Willis's, &c.—N.B. Lace Dresses from 2l. 10s. to 75 guineas.—No. 237, Regent-street, facing the Argyle Rooms.

PARLIAMENT ASSEMBLED.—It has ever been our study to provide novelties for that approaching period, for the invitation of families, who may be now about returning to town, to the inspection of an immense stock of FASHIONABLE SILKS, superior in choice to that of any former year, in the most splendid assortment of rich Lyons Silks, from 2s. 6d. to 4s. 9d. a yard; double do. the most pleasing shades, superior to French, 3s. 6d. to 4s. 6d.; rich Ducapes, 3 quarters wide, 3s. 9d. to 4s. 9d.; 600 pieces of very rich Levantine Silk, French width, 4s. to 4s. 9d. SEWELL and CROSS beg to observe that these Silks are not Sarsnets called Gros de Naples and Levantines; they are the real Gros de Naples, made entirely of double Silks, got up under their own immediate inspection, an article which must ever do credit to the British manufactory; with 300 pieces of rich Striped Sarsnets, purchased of an unfortunate maker, 2s. 2d. to 2s. 6d.; ditto Persian Silks, for linings, every shade, 1s. 4d. to 1s. 7d.; 90 pieces all-wide Silk Gauzes, every colour, 11d. and 1s.; ditto, Gossamer Gauzes, for turbans, 1s. 2d. per yard, commonly sold at 2s. 6d.; 80 pieces of black and white Sattins for slips, 2s. 6d. per yard; very stout ditto, for dresses, 3s. and 3s. and 4d.; 80 holes of all-wide India Long Cloths, got up entirely free from dressing, 3s. 4d. per piece, for 1s. 6d. the piece; a beautiful fine article, in real Madras cloth, 25 yards, for 20s.; these cloths are particularly suited for family use, and much recommended to ladies going to the East or West Indies; 30 boxes of French Cambric Handkerchiefs, of the improved bleach, (a great bargain) beginning at 20s. the dozen to the finest quality, made at 21. A discount of 5 per cent. allowed to the trade by purchasing an entire box, which contains 25 dozen; 20 dozen of Angola and Persia tippets, at 4s. 6d.; and 400 of the same Shawls, at 3s. 6d.; 20 pieces of Russia Sheetings, measuring 3 yds wide, which prevents the necessity of a seam, 2s. 10d. and 3s. with an endless variety of Damask Table Cloths and Napkins, for family use; 200 pieces of coloured Moreens, for furnitures, 1s. 3d. per yard, and 400 of the best double quality, every shade, 1s. 5½d. worth 2s. 2d. at SEWELL and CROSS'S, 42, Frith-street, Corner of Old Compton-street, Soho-square.—Ladies bringing the Advertisement with them, may depend upon having every article at the prices advertised, which is contrary to the unpleasant mode so frequently adopted in the West part of London.

BLANKETS, COUNTERPANES, SHEETINGS, DAMASK TABLE LINEN, Welsh Flannel, India Long Cloth, Irish Linen, French Cambric, and General Linen Drapery, Haberdashery, and Silk Mercery Warehouse, 59, Oxford-street, next door to Binter's old established Fur Warehouse.—KINNING and CO. now offer to the Nobility and Families in general a new and select Stock in the above branches of business, not at half price, as advertisements generally puff, but at such low prices as to, and in case with confidence assert will meet their entire approbation, and come to them as offered in future commands.—Real Witney Blankets at the following low prices, proved only by inspection—1¾ yds long, 4s. 9d.; 2 yds do 5s. 6d.; 2¼ yds 7s. 6d.; 2½ yds, 11s; 2¾ do. 14s. 6d.; 3 yds do. 17s. and in proportion to four yds; Counterpanes, 2 yds square, 6s.; 2½ yds do 7s.; 2¾ yds do. 8s. 6d.; 2½ yds do. 10s.; 3 yds do. 12s. 6d.; Marseilles Quilts, 2¼ yds square, 13s. 6d.; 2½ do. 15s.; 3 yds do. 18s.; 3¼ yds do. 18s. 6d.; all warranted to measure as stated newest Sarsnet Sheetings, 9d. per yd; the best ditto, 1s. 1d.; very wide Russia, 11d. per yard; 11 wide do. 9d.; 12 wide do. very stout, 1s. 8d.; 2¼ yds do. require no seam, 3s. 3d.; Table Linen, Damask Napkins, 7s. 6d. per dozen; Breakfast Cloths, 1¼ square, 1s. 10d.; 1¼ ditto, 3s. 3d.; 1¾ ditto, 4s. 9d.; 2 yards ditto, 6s. 6d.; 2¼ ditto, 8s. 3d.; double damask do. 11s. 6d.; 3 yds long do. 14s. double damask do. 19s.; 3¼ yds do. 22s. 6d.; 4 yds do. 25s.; and in proportion to the largest made. Several boxes of Irish Linens, forming the most superior Shirting, at 2s. per yard, from 1s. per yard; a fine quality, for Gentlemen's wear, at 2s. 8½d; Real Welch Flannels, very fine, 1s. 6d. and 1s 8d. per yard; India Long Cloths, perfectly free from dress 12½d. and the finest made 1s. 3d. per yard. Several boxes of French Cambric Handkerchiefs, the largest size 24s. per dozen; fine Irish sheetings, one yard and a quarter wide, 1s. 6d. with every other article in Linens for household purposes. Their Stock of plain, figured, and striped Gros de Naples are now offered to the Public at reduced prices, which they hope themselves to offer upon the lowest possible terms, and to sell articles of the best manufacture. A per centage allowed upon all purchases amounting to 10l. and upwards at Kinning and Co. 59, Oxford-street.

LATEST NEWS.

Paris papers down to Friday arrived yesterday. Very alarming rumours were prevalent in Paris respecting the safety of Count de la Garde, the French ambassador at Madrid, who quitted that city on the 28th ult.; he had not arrived at Bayonne on the 31st. and it was feared that he had met with some obstructions in his journey through Spain. The Duke de Reggio, who commands the army of reserve, was to set off for Bayonne on Thursday.

Accounts from Madrid state that the retreat of Count Abisbal upon Madrid threatens fresh dangers.

It is said that another Congress is to assemble at Vienna, and that an army of 100,000 Russians, Prussians, and Austrians is to be stationed along the Rhine.

Russia, it is said, is to place a fleet at the disposal of France, and is to march 30,000 men into Italy, to be embarked for Spain. The arms of the Western Pyrenees consists of two corps—the second commanded by Prince Hohenlohe, that of the Eastern Pyrenees by Lieut.-Gen. Lauriston—the second corps is to occupy Arragon.—A Levy isordered at Milan of 6,000 men.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, SATURDAY.

At four o'clock the Speaker of the House of Commons took the Chair, and proceeded to count the members present. There being only six members in attendance, and forty being required to make a House, an immediate adjournment took place. This is the third day of the present Session on which at four o'clock there have not been a sufficient number of members present to constitute a House.

The Spanish Minister transacted business for a considerable time on Friday at the Foreign Office.

It is understood that the mission of Lord Fitzroy Somerset to Madrid has failed—the capital was in such a state of ferment that war is said to be inevitable.

The state of the poll at the close of the Dublin Election on the second day was—For Col. White, 320; Sir Compton Domville, 228.

At Bow-street, yesterday, 21 men, found on board a smuggling lugger, charged with the murder of Wm. Cullum, of the Badger King's cutter (as noticed under our King's Bench head,) were brought up for examination, when it was sworn that after an engagement for three hours, the smuggler called out for quarter; while the captain was talking to the commander they re-commenced firing, and Cullum was shot, three balls passing through his head. They were fully committed for trial for the murder.

Any proprietors of country journals, having an order for Advertisements, dated on or about the 27th of February, 1821, and signed "William Sams," and not having been yet paid for the same, or having been refused payment for the same, are requested to send up immediately such order or letter, to Mr. Buller, at Mr. Barker's, No. 33, Fleet-street. The reason of this public application is, that the list of the papers to which such advertisements were sent, has been lost.

The Duke of Wellington, we are assured, has expressed much indignation at the contents of a paragraph inserted in the "Morning Herald," and another paper, of last November, and copied into some provincial papers, ostensibly for the purpose of giving an account of his Grace's late illness, but, in reality, under the pretended sanction of coming "from authority," to injure the reputation of one of his Grace's medical attendants. We are enabled to state, in justice to Mr. Stevenson (who having had charge of the affected organ, to which the paragraph alluded to applies, is doubtless the gentleman aimed at), that the paragraph was published without the knowledge of the Duke, or any of his Noble Family; that Mr. Stevenson continued to meet both his Grace's physicians and Sir Astley Cooper in consultation every day up to the departure of that distinguished personage for the Congress; and that the above-named eminent surgeon declared to His Majesty, in refutation of the alleged slanderous report, that "not the smallest blame attached to Mr. Stevenson."

The able management of the Oratories of the present season, cannot fail to render these sacred Performances more popular than ever. Rossini's effective composition of Cyrus in Babylon having been so favourably received on the 30th of January, by an overflowing audience, is to be repeated on the 14th inst. at Drury Lane Theatre. Mr. Bochsa, ever desirous of procuring novelties, intends, on that night, a grand descriptive piece by Beethoven, for the first time in this country, being one of the latest productions of that celebrated composer, together with his own Benedictus, accompanied on thirteen harps, brought out with such great success in 1821, being the only time it can be performed this season. He will play a Duet on the Harp with his pupil, Miss Dibdin. The strength of the Vocal department exceeds any previous assemblage of talent, and the Band is upon the most grand and extensive scale.

A candid examination of professional pretensions is only to be feared by those who are conscious of incapacity. Messrs. Goss and Co. Members of the Royal College of Surgeons, confine their studies to the treatment of such disorders as arise from nervous debility. Their work. "The Ægis of Life," in full explanation of these subjects, may be had at No. 20, Paternoster-row, or, at any Booksellers. Medicine can be forwarded to any part, however distant, on receiving a Bank note.—M, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street, and 7, Jermyn-str. St. James's, London.

PATENT ECONOMICAL CHAMBER-LAMP and UNIVERSAL SUBSTITUTE for a CANDLE.—Although the principle of this Improvement is alike advantageous in Lamps of every sort, and lights to any degree from one to six candles, the Patentee presumes to state its perfection as a Chamber or Night Lamp only, that the Public may judge of its claim to universal adoption. It gives a brilliant and invariable light any length of time it can be wanted, and can be so regulated as to burn all the approach to a fly, and then disappear without smoke or smell. It will burn any kind of oil, and is always ready at the instant it is wanted; and so safe, that it may even be used about the bed of sickness without danger; and as a moving or house light, is a protection of the carpets from tallow or wax, and an antidote to greasy candlesticks and a waste of candles; can be trimmed with little more than a touch, and requires to be replenished with cotton only once in two months. The price 10s. on neat Japan stands, and 15s. to 20s. in bronze, for the chamber of the affluent, including cotton, an auxiliary to the Patent, for seven years' consumption. In economy nothing can compete with it, the expense in spermaceti oil not being half that of a rushlight.

Sold for the Patentee, by T. PEARCE and CO. only, at 268, facing the front of St. Clement's Church, in the Strand, who, to secure its reputation from the effects of bad Oil, are bound to sell none but pure Spermaceti Oil, in which the confidence of the public shall never be abused.—Letters, post paid, from any part of the kingdom, will meet with prompt attention.

BARCA PORT WINE.—The richest Production of Portugal, a Bon Bouche, scarcely known in this Country; also a particular Old Port, Vintage, 1812, five years in the wood.—W. S. SARGENSON, No. 5, Colonnade, Pall Mall, respectfully entreats the Curious in rich Old WINES and SPIRITS, to inspect his present Stock, which has met the approbation of many Connoisseurs. The Selections are made from the first Vintages for the last twelve years, particularly the following:—Hermitage, the growth of St George, reduced to 100s. per dozen; Old Port, from 40s. to 45s.; superior Crusted ditto, 48s. to 50.; East India Madeira, 60s.; West India Madeira, 52s.; fine Old Sherry, 40s. to 45s.; Pale ditto, very Old, 48s.; Bucellas, 48s; Cape Madeira, a fine Table Wine, from 19s. to 24s.; Mountain, 48s. Rum, Brandy, and Hollands, finest flavours, and Import strength. Orders from the Country and the Trade particularly attended to. He invites a competition with any House in the Metropolis.

OLD PORT 35s. BURGESS's NEW SAUCE for general purposes, having given such great approbation, and the demand for it continuing to increase JOHN BURGESS and SON beg most respectfully to offer this their best acknowledgments to the Public for their liberal patronage of the same: its utility and great convenience in all climates, has recommended it to the most distinguished foreign connexions, who have all spoken highly in its recommendation.—It is prepared by them ONLY; and for preventing disappointments to families, all possible care has been resorted to, by each bottle being sealed upon the cork with their arm and address, as well as each label having their signature, without which it cannot be genuine.

JOHN BURGESS & SON'S long established and much-esteemed ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES, continues to be prepared by them after the same manner that has given the greatest satisfaction for many years.—Warehouse, 107, Strand, corner of the Savoy-steps, London.—The original Fish-Sauce Warehouse.

EASE and COMFORT in SHAVING.—To those Gentlemen who experience inconvenience in Shaving from a tender face or strong beard, J. T. RIGGE most particularly recommends his celebrated MAGNETIC RAZOR TABLET, which, with its late improvement, he engages will produce so keen an edge as to supersede all grinding, honing, &c. and render the operation of shaving as easy and agreeable as it was before unpleasant and painful. Its use is simple, its effect certain; price 7s. 6d. J. T. Rigge's Aromatic Shaving Soap will also be found an invaluable addition. Manufactory, 65 Cheapside and 52, Park-street, Grosvenor-square

THE ORLANDO INAMORATO; abridged in Prose, from the Italian of Berni; and interspersed with Stanzas in the same metre as the original. By WM. STEWART ROSE.

☞ It is intended that the Orlando Inamorato, though necessary to the understanding of the story of the Orlando Furioso, which is a continuation of it, has never been translated into English; if we except a mere outline of the main action, which gives little notion of its innumerable episodes, and none of its poetry, or the spirit in which it is conceived. The present translation is an attempt to supply such a deficiency.

Printed for Wm. Blackwood, Edinburgh; and T. Cadell, Strand, London.

THE OLD TESTAMENT, arranged on the Basis of Lightfoot's Chronicle, in Historical and Chronological Order, in such Manner, that the Books, Chapters, Psalms, Prophecies, &c. may be read as one connected History, in the very Words of the Authorized Translation. To the above are added Six Indexes. By the Rev. GEORGE TOWNSEND, M.A. of Trinity College, Cambridge.—Printed for F. C. and J. Rivington, St. Paul's Church-Yard, and Waterloo-Place, Pall Mall.

Extract from Mr. Horne's new edition of his Introduction to the Critical Study of the Holy Scriptures, vol. ii. page 402, and Supplement to the first edition, page 139:—"The writer of these pages, on the completion of the present work, proposed to himself to attempt a Harmony of the Gospels; but the laborious undertaking has been happily rendered unnecessary, as it respects the Old Testament, by Mr. Townsend's Arrangement. This beautifully printed, and carefully executed work, is indispensably necessary to those who are preparing for the sacred office. The notes are very appropriate, and possess the rare merit of compressing a great variety of valuable information into a small compass."

☞ The New Testament, arranged on the same Plan, is preparing for the Press.

Just Published, in 3 vols. 12mo. price 11. 1s. in boards.

A SUMMARY of CHRISTIAN FAITH and PRACTICE, confirmed by References to the Text of Holy Scripture, compared with the Liturgy, Articles, and Homilies of the Church of England and illustrated by Extracts from the chief of those Works which received the Sanction of Public Authority, from the Time of the Reformation, to the final Revision of the Established Formularies. By the Rev. E. J. BURROW, D.D. F.R. and L.S.—Printed for F. C. and J. Rivington, St. Paul's Church Yard and Waterloo Place, Pall Mall.

"This is a very valuable Work, To the Younger Clergy, in particular, we think it will prove very useful in the composition of Sermons: we mean in that portion of it, in which Copious Extracts are made from the Scriptures, which bear upon particular points of Faith or Practice. We take our leave of the Author, returning him our thanks for having opposed this barrier to that flood of Fanaticism, which threatens to carry every thing before it, until Religion, Religion and Morality, are swept away into the ocean of Infidelity."—British Critic' November 1822.

SORE THROAT.—WALLER'S INCOMPARABLE EMBROCATION, the efficacy of which is well known to the Public, as a certain cure for a SORE THROAT and QUINSY, even in the most obstinate and ulcerated stages. It has always been applied with success, after attempts of eminent men of the Faculty have failed. Also for that fatal disease CROUP, which Children are liable to. This Ointment has been sanctioned by an extensive demand, and may be had, by appointment, wholesale and retail, of Mr. Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; and retail, of Mr. Vade, Cornhill, and most of the principal Venders of Medicine in Town and Country, in pots, 2s. 9d. duty included.

THE ROYAL FAMILY, NOBILITY, GENTRY, and LADIES and GENTLEMEN may rely on it, they will not have a hair fall off or turn grey by now using Prince's celebrated Russia Oil as it is so long with an extra valuable ingredient, through which it has made the Russia Oil the greatest nourisher and preserver to the hair in the Universe, which it grow thick and long, and prevent its falling off or ever turning grey, as it is such a nourisher to the roots of the hair, that if it even has begun to turn grey will restore it again to its natural colour, and if used often it will preserve grey again to a good old age, and to a natural death of old age, after dressing with it, will always keep the Head and Hair clean and beautiful. Gentlemen who have lost their hair, and have the least sign of roots remaining, by using regularly, for a few months, Prince's Improved Russia Oil with the extra valuable ingredient, will be sure to restore it, and produce a good head of hair, which hundreds have experienced. Even Medical Gentlemen have published, in the Gazetteof Health, that Prince's Russia Oil is superior to any old Family Hair; and will do, in cases of baldness and weak hair, more than possibly be done.

It is no wonder that Ladies and Gentlemen have complained of late that Russia Oil not being of service to the hair, as they have found out that unprincipled persons have sold them counterfeits.

Ladies and Gentlemen will be particular, as Impostors in Great Britain, France, and other different parts of the Continent, have made the covers of their Counterfeit Russia Oil so much like the genuine, that a bottle, without a Prince" on the wrapper and seals, and his address, A. Prince, No. 8, Poland-street, Oxford-street, London," is on the cover of each bottle, without, is not genuine, and cannot answer the purpose. The ounce bottle five shillings, large bottle, containing five ounces, one pound, which is a saving.

Sold by the sole Proprietor, A. Prince, No. 9, Poland-street, Oxford-street, near the Pantheon; and by most principal Perfumers and Medicine Venders.

Ladies and Gentlemen residing in the country, by sending a remittance to the Proprietor, and it will be forwarded immediately by coach.

Merchants and Captains will receive a liberal allowance for exportation.

NEW LITERARY INSTITUTION.—York Hotel, New Bridge-street, Feb. 12, 1823.—At a Meeting of Gentlemen held here this day, for the purpose of forming a New Literary Institution, to be situated in or near New Bridge-street, it was resolved—That the Friends of Science, Literature, and the Arts, be respectfully solicited to assist in the formation of this Society, and to attend a GENERAL MEETING, to be held at the above place, on Monday the 17th instant (to morrow) at One o'clock precisely, at which Meeting the RIGHT HON. THE LORD MAYOR will preside. JAMES JENNINGS, Hon. Sec.

LITHOGRAPHIC PORTRAIT of GEORGE IV.—Just published, a very highly finished and correct Likeness of the King, drawn on Stone, by A. AGLIO, Esq.

"This Print, by Aglio, and printed and published by John Boosey and Co. is, we think, the best specimen of Lithographic Portrait that has yet appeared in England. At first sight it struck us as if some other process had been adjoined, in order to improve the style; but, upon more close inspection, we are convinced the whole is brought from the Stone. His Majesty is represented in the Robe, &c. of the Garter—the head is well placed, and the likeness excellent."—Literary Gaz. Jan. 25.

Printed by John Boosey and Co. at their Lithographic Printing Office, 310, Strand, and published at their Repository, 1, Wellington-street, Waterloo-bridge.

COUNT LAS CASES' JOURNAL, Parts 3 and 4, will be published on Thursday next.—Conduit-street. Feb. 15, 1823.

Just published, a New and Improved Edition, 5s. 6d. of

THE YOUNG MOTHER'S ASSISTANT. By SIR ARTHUR CLARKE, M.D. &c.

"We can safely recommend this Work to those for whose use it is intended, as a valuable compendium of health for the nursery."—New Monthly Mag.

A SECOND VOLUME of TABLE TALK. By WILLIAM HAZLITT. Containing Seventeen New Essays on Men and Manners.

"We are acquainted with no other living writer who can depict the intricacies of human character with so firm and masterly a hand; who can detect with so fine an intuition the essences of opinion and prejudices, or follow with so unerring a skill the subtle windings of the deepest affections."—Edinb. Review.

Printed for Henry Colburn and Co. Conduit-street; of whom may be had, the First Volume, containing 16 Essays.

Just published, in 3 vols. 12mo. 18s.

WARWIN and other AMERICAN TALES. By C. B. BROWN, Author of Wieland, Ormond, Arthur Mervyn, &c. Also new editions of

1. ORMOND, an American Tale, 3 vols. 18s.

2. WIELAND, an American Tale, 3 vols. 18s.

"The work before us possesses striking and powerful claims to attention. The events which it relates are of a kind wholly removed from the ordinary train of novels: and the writer seizes, with a sort of magic grasp, the feelings which he is desirous to call forth or control. The terrific sway of superstition over a vigorous but perverted mind, is most ably and forcibly depicted in the character of Wieland. Upon the whole, we have perused this novel with great interest, and recommend it very strongly to those who are in the habit of reading works of this description, or who love to have their nerves agitated by the terrors of romance."—Critical Review.

Printed for Henry Colburn and Co. Conduit-street.

THE PEERAGE CHART for 1823. Corrected to the present time. This Chart contains the complete Peerages of the United Kingdom, alphabetically arranged, with the following particulars of each Member:—The Title; Title of the Eldest Son; Surname; Dates of the first and last Creation; Precedence; Age; whether Married, Bachelor, or Widower; number of Children, Male and Female; Knights of the Garter, Thistle, &c.; Lord Lieutenants; Privy Counsellors; Roman Catholics; and Peers' Eldest Sons who are Members of the present Parliament. It also shews by what means the Peerage was obtained, that is to say, whether by Naval, Military, Legal, or other Services; and states the Century to which each Peer can trace his Paternal Ancestry: thus exhibiting, at one view, much interesting information, and forming, upon the whole, a complete Peerage in Miniature. Price 5s. On canvas, in a neat case for the pocket, 8s; on canvas and rollers, 10s.

Also, The BARONETAGE CHART for 1823, printed uniformly with the above, and containing the Baronets of the United Kingdom of Great Britain, and Ireland, with Emblematic Ornaments, handsomely coloured.

"Two most useful and perfect sheets for library and office furniture, have appeared under the title of a PEERAGE and BARONETAGE CHART. They exhibit every required fact relative to those Classes, in columns, and there are contain several thousand facts, which, with the necessary repetitions of words, would fill each a large volume. They appear to be compiled with a degree of care which entitles them to our warmest commendation, and in their typography they rank among the best specimens of the art."—Monthly Mag.—See also the Gentleman's Magazine, Literary Chronicle, &c. &c.

Also by the same Author, price 5s. extra boards, the Second Edition of The SECRETARY'S ASSISTANT; exhibiting the various and most correct Modes of Superscription, Commencement, and Conclusion of Letters to Persons of every degree of rank; including the Diplomatic, Clerical, and Judicial Dignitaries; with Lists of the Foreign Ambassadors and Consuls. Also, the Forms necessary to be used in Applications or Petitions to the King in Council, Houses of Lords and Commons, Government Offices, Public Companies, &c. &c.

"This work will prove highly useful to young correspondents, and even afford information to those whose avocations or connexions require their occasional correspondence with persons of superior rank. The compiler seems to have used considerable diligence in ensuring accuracy."—Gentleman's Mag.

"This little work is a desirable appendage to the writing-desk, and fully enables its possessor to fulfil the precepts delivered to us in the Scriptures—Give unto every man the proper title, lest he be offended, and ye betray your ignorance."—New Monthly Mag.

"The Secretary's Assistant is an infallible guide, and we give it our hearty recommendation."—Literary Chronicle.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—The rude and unskilful attempts constantly made to supply these substitutes for the masticatory organ, and the disgust which delicacy suffers from the unpleasantry attending them when permanently fixed, have deterred many from adopting the aid and comfort they are capable of affording, independent of the assistance they may contribute to digestion and consequent health. The ingenious application of mechanical science will enable us to obviate all these inconveniences, and allow the wearer at all times to keep the mouth in a perfect cleanness, and to perform the various functions of mastication, articulation, &c. with decided ease and comfort.—Mr. NICHOLLS begs to state, that the fullest attendance from ten to four, and will be happy to give any further demonstration of the comforts derived from his efforts, under every circumstance of simple and complicated deficiency.—115, Fleet-str.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY.

THE EARL OF COVENTRY presented a petition from the Merchants, Bankers, and Traders of Worcester, praying for the Repeal of the Insolvent Debtors' Act.

THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, in the absence, and by desire of Lord Ellenborough, moved the first reading of the Bill amending the Marriage Act; it was accordingly read a first time, and ordered to be printed.

TUESDAY.

LORD VISCOUNT GRANVILLE presented a petition from the merchants, and others, of Wolverhampton, praying for a Repeal of the Insolvent Debtors' Act.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH gave notice that he should move the Second Reading of the Marriage Act Amendment Bill, on Monday next.

THURSDAY.

LORD HOLLAND presented a petition from the Manufacturers, Merchants, and others, of Nottingham, and Gainsborough, praying for a Repeal of the Insolvent Debtors' Act.

LORD COLCHESTER presented a petition from the Clergy of Colchester, praying for a Repeal of the Marriage Act.

FRIDAY.

The return to a writ for the election of a Temporal Peer for Ireland, was presented at the Bar by the Clerk of the Crown, from which it appeared that Lord Viscount Lorton had been elected in the room of the Earl of Mount Cashel, deceased.

LORD STOWELL presented a petition from the Clergy of Berkshire, against the Marriage Act.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY.

A new Writ was ordered for Winchester, in the room of J. H. Leigh, Esq. who has accepted the Chiltern Hundreds.

MR. LITTLETON presented a petition from the Potteries of Staffordshire, praying for the establishment of a Court of Requests.

Petitions were presented from Lichfield, Southwell, and two or three other places, against the Marriage Act.

A petition was presented against the Insolvent Debtors' Act, from the Merchants and Bankers of Lincoln.

SIR H. PARNELL presented a petition from the Grand Jury and others, of the county of Queen's County, praying for a commutation of tythes. He was satisfied that no measure was better calculated to improve the condition of the people of Ireland than a commutation of tythes. The Noble Lord at the head of the Irish Government had given the subject his best consideration, and such measures were likely to be introduced this Session, as would meet with the approbation of the great majority of the people of Ireland. He could not omit that opportunity of stating, that during the short time the Marquis Wellesley presided over the administration of affairs in Ireland, he was incessant in his efforts to improve the condition, and contribute to the happiness of the people of that country.

COLONEL FRENCH approved of the sentiments contained in the petition; its prayer was judicious, and calculated to remove the evil of the tythe system, which pressed so heavily on Ireland.

MR. V. FITZGERALD entirely agreed with the sentiments of the petition; he was requested by the Grand Jury of the county of Clare to convey to the House their concurrence in the prayer of the petition. He hoped that any measure in the contemplation of Government would not be trammelled by the introduction of any previous measure.

MR. GOULBURN did not think it necessary then to go into any general discussion upon the measures it might be his duty to bring forward in the course of the Session. He would only state that the present Government of Ireland, from the moment of its arrival in that country, had been most sedulous and anxious to discover some just mode of removing the burden of collecting tithes.

MR. SPRING RICE thought that a more impracticable or inefficient measure than the one of last Session was never introduced; the best proof of which was, that not a single lease had been made since it passed.

MR. SECRETARY PEEL deprecated discussion in the present stage of the proceedings. No other explanation than that given by his Right Hon. Friend (Mr. Goulburn) could be reasonably expected. To go into any particular details at the present, would be only to prejudge the question.

MR. HUME complained of the dilatoriness of Government. The proceedings respecting the property of the Church in Ireland, were reprehensible in the extreme; they were the cause of all the evils which desolated that country. What was the proposition of Government?—It was, that tithes should be commuted for an agreeable assessment. He was decidedly opposed to this. The church property in Ireland was already enormous. His intention was to submit a proposition to the House, stating that the church property in Ireland—namely, that vested in the Deans and Chapters, and in the Bishops, was too great, and ought to be reduced; next, that instead of there being overpaid absentees and starving curates, every clergyman should have an income sufficient to support him as a gentleman. He was prepared to shew that the revenues of the Church in Ireland amounted to between 3,000,000l. and 4,000,000l. annually. His main object was to abolish tithes, and to pay the Clergy enough to maintain them respectably.—The petition was laid on the table.

A new writ was ordered for the county of Fermanagh, in Ireland, in the room of Sir Lowry Cole, appointed Governor of the Mauritius.

LORD A. HAMILTON'S motion respecting Scotch Burghs was ordered to stand for the 11th of March.

MR. SECRETARY PEEL brought up and read His Majesty's Answer to the Address of the Commons.

MR. MABERLEY moved for various accounts relating to the House, Land, and Window Tax, from the 5th April, 1821, to 5th April, 1822, distinguishing the several exemptions from the tax. He said that, instead of 2,000,000l. or 3,000,000l. of taxes being reduced this year, as Ministers proposed, 7,000,000l. or 8,000,000l. might be reduced, as he would pledge himself to shew.—The motion was agreed to.

MR. HUME moved for the printing of certain papers connected with the Sinking Fund, which he considered deceptive in its operation. According to an official statement which had been presented to the House, a sum of 15,680,000l. had been paid into the hands of the Commissioners for the reduction of the National Debt. This was nothing more than a mere farce; it was paying with one hand, and borrowing with another.

MR. LUSHINGTON would take an early occasion of laying before the House the actual amount of the Sinking Fund: the system of its operation should be duly attended to.

THE LORD MAYOR conceived the Sinking Fund to be that great financial engine which had enabled us to battle all the attempts of the enemy. He trusted that the spirit of good faith in this country would always induce men to keep faith with the public creditor, and the best mode of doing so would be to maintain the Sinking Fund unaltered.

MR. LUSHINGTON thought that the Hon. Member attached an importance to the subject which it did not deserve.—Ordered.

LORD JOHN RUSSELL understood that His Majesty had been pleased to present to the British Museum the valuable Library which had been collected by his Royal Father. This act must tend to strengthen the ties which bound the people of England to the House of Brunswick. He thought it desirable that it should be placed in some convenient situation where the collection already existing in the Museum might be added to it. He would merely inquire of the Right Hon. Gentleman opposite (Mr. Peel) whether the report given in the public prints with respect to it was true?

MR. SECRETARY PEEL said, it certainly was true. He entirely agreed in the sentiments expressed by the Noble Lord, and was anxious that the British public should have the full advantage of His magnificent present. The necessary arrangements, however, had not yet been made. He should feel it his duty to facilitate them as much as possible.

TUESDAY.

A new writ was ordered for Arundel, in the room of John Blake, Esq. deceased.

MR. LITTLETON presented a petition from the Merchants and others, of Wolverhampton, praying for the Repeal of the Insolvent Debtors' Act.

A Call of the House was ordered for Thursday, the 20th instant.

DR. LUSHINGTON presented a petition, complaining of undue influence at the election for Sligo.—Ordered to be taken into consideration on the 13th of March.

MR. GOULBURN moved for leave to bring in a Bill to amend the Yeomanry Corps Act of Ireland.

MR. HUME inveighed against the Yeomanry Corps, as one of the grossest jobs. As a proof, he found no less than ten Brigade Majors with pensions from the Yeomanry Corps. These were stated as not fit for service, and were a charge of 12711. to the country, for which some had served ten, some fifteen years. There was a Major Colles, who was set down as having served ten years, and was forty-five years of age, for which he received a pension. He asked the Members for Sligo to state whether this gentleman had not a private income of 2,000l. a year, and was Treasurer of the county besides? Some were invalided, whom he was informed were not older than him, (Mr. Hume) and in better health; and he wished to know, whether the House believed that, even with his impudence, he would ask for a pension. The ordinary expences of this corps were 16,000l. a year; and a Mr. Kay got 1,000l. a year for paying it.

MR. GOULBURN said, he certainly had not thought it necessary to come down to the House prepared to say whether Mr. Colles was or was not properly superannuated. With respect to the Brigade Majors at the close of the war, a very considerable number in Ireland were placed out of employment.

MR. V. FITZGERALD vindicated the character of the Yeomanry of Ireland from what he considered the unjust aspersion of the Hon. Member for Aberdeen (Mr. Hume). So far from their being composed exclusively of Orangemen, he knew of one corps composed entirely of Catholics, and that nothing was farther from the truth than such a representation. With respect to what the Hon. Member had said of Major Colles, he begged to assure the House, that so far from his being of the age and strength of the Hon. Member, viz. forty-five years of age, he had served that number of years in the Yeomanry.

MR. SPRING RICE said that two-thirds of the yeomanry force of Ireland was confined to the province of Ulster alone. In the course of the progress of this Bill through the House, he would endeavour to introduce a clause to secure the Catholic population of the country from the danger and insults of armed men joining in the obnoxious processions of the Orange Lodge associations.

MR. SECRETARY PEEL observed, that with respect to Major Colles, he could state that he was put on the Retired List, in order to give repose to an old and meritorious officer, and not to make a vacancy for the appointment of another person.—Leave was then given to bring in the Bill.

MR. GOULBURN then obtained leave to bring in a Bill to continue the Act, known by the name of the Irish Arms Act, and to effect a reduction in the Staff.

MR. F. LEWIS obtained leave to bring in a Bill to amend and consolidate the several Turnpike Acts.

MR. HORNSBY gave notice, that after Easter it was his intention to renew a motion he made last year, for the repeal of the Window Tax. This motion he begged to observe, would be contingent upon the three circumstances, viz. of the country not being at war, the Assessed Taxes not wholly repealed, or the obnoxious Tax itself repealed.

MR. HUME moved for a return of the amount paid of the Russian Dutch Loan, undertaken by this country, by a Convention at London, on the 19th of May, 1815, and how much principal and interest remained yet to pay. Also for the production of a Copy of the Report of the Commissioners appointed to enquire into the state of Quit-Rents in Ireland; (he declared it to be his intention to make a motion for the appropriation of Quit-Rents and Crown Lands to the reduction of the National Debt by making a Sinking Fund of the produce of their sale) for Copies of any Correspondence between the Chief Secretary of Ireland and the Chancellor of the Exchequer during the last twelve months, relative to the Office of Vice Treasurer of Ireland. (He believed it to be a most useless Office, at a charge to the country of nearly 8000l. a-year.)—These motions were agreed to.

In a Committee of the whole House, to take into consideration the American Colonies Trade Acts, MR. WILMOT moved a Resolution for bringing in a new Bill to regulate the trade of those Colonies.

WEDNESDAY.

The Bill to amend the Marriage Act of last Session was read a first time.

MR. WALLACE moved for the appointment of a Select Committee to consider of the means of extending and improving the Foreign Trade of the country, and to report their opinions and observations thereon from time to time to the House. The Right Hon. Gentleman observed, that special circumstances made it necessary to revive the Committee. Many Hon. Gentlemen would be aware that when the Dock system commenced, it was founded on the plan of granting compensation to those whose interests were effected by it, and particular privileges were granted to those companies for a limited time. The period for which some of these had been granted, was now about to expire. The Right Hon. Gentleman took a review of the labours of the Committee of last year—the state of our Foreign Trade. He stated, that at present it stood in a different situation from that in which it stood when the Committee, for the renewal of which he was about to move, had been originally appointed. At that time, the distress and the despondency which overran the commerce of the country was great. The general exports had diminished from the year 1815 to the year 1819, to the amount of 14,000,000 millions in official value. Now, what was the situation of the country? With the exception of one very great branch of industry, he spoke of the agricultural classes, all the sources of national industry were in a flourishing state. The exports of the year which had just closed not only exceeded, by many millions, those of the years to which he had just alluded, but they exceeded the exports of the most flourishing year of a period of war. The exports of cotton had increased ten per cent; those of hardware, seventeen; those of linen, twelve; and those of woollens, thirteen per cent. The aggregate increase of the exports over those of 1820, amounted nearly to 20 per cent. By the operation of the law for regulating the exportation of refined sugars, the exports of that article had been diminished not less than 36 per cent. The improvement of our exports on their whole amount was not less than seven per cent. on what had heretofore been their average. These facts he thought furnished a most satisfactory reason for calling on the Committee to resume its labours. To insure a continuance of this prosperity nothing more was necessary than to persevere in that revision of our system which had commenced, and which had for its object to remove all unnecessary restrictions on commerce, and to allow of the most unrestricted freedom in trade. The accounts which he had received with respect to Norway, informed him that the trade had increased in the course of the last two years, and such had been the improvement in the situation of the parties engaged in it, that many of them which had at one time been thought desperate, were now completely recovered, while the North American trade was not only flourishing, but had experienced a very considerable increase. The result on looking to the great question respecting an open trade to the East Indies, had given an opinion in concurrence with another, that the opening of the trade would be highly beneficial to the British Merchant. He was sorry the advantages were not so great as they have been expected; some, however, had been gained. Ships had been put on the same footing as foreign ships. The system of inquiry related to the charges heretofore imposed on ships entering our ports. In consequence of the diminished charges foreign ships had put into our ports during the late tempestuous weather, been sheltered from danger. He was sure that it would be found of these ships had been saved by that circumstance; it was clear that the labour of the Committee had been amply repaid. He trusted that our commercial laws might be still further relieved from restrictions, and that he should not hesitate to recommend to the Committee such measures as might remove the difficulties with which they had had to contend, which were indeed formidable, but every step which they now took, would tend towards a freer and a better system of trade.

MR. BARING eulogized the services of the Committee, which were highly appreciated by the Merchants of London.

MR. RICARDO thought the Right Hon. Gentleman had not done justice to the improvements which had taken place in our commerce. The exports during the war, he had said, were considerably less than at present. But it was to be remembered that at that time we had to sustain a large foreign expenditure, and many of our exports were sent out of the country to pay the expences incurred. This accounted for the extent of our exports then, but at the present no longer the case, and now no merchandize left the country which was not expected to produce a valuable return.

MR. BUTTERWORTH expressed satisfaction at the result of the labours of the Committee, and offered his testimony to the merits of the Right Hon. Gentleman.

MR. THOMAS WILSON spoke also to the ability displayed by the Right Hon. Gentleman, which was generally acknowledged by the Merchants in the City. Praise might be peculiarly grateful to him as the Right Hon. Gentleman was aware that on several points some of them were not agreed with him as to principle.

MR. HUME regretted that the services of the Right Hon. Gentleman whose talents had been so highly eulogized, were not more available to the country. He was sorry that any change in the arrangements of the Government should have caused this gentleman to retire. Ministers ought to have taken care to guard against the Right Hon. Gentleman's removal from that situation which he had so ably filled.

MR. SECRETARY CANNING concurred with the Hon. Gentleman who spoke last, in regretting that any circumstances had occurred to induce the Right Hon. Friend from the Board of Trade, where he had been found so eminently useful. None could feel more cordially attached to the Right Hon. Gentleman than he did, though all his friends did the same; and notwithstanding his Right Hon. Friend's determination to withdraw from an ostensible situation, no efforts on their part would be wanting to gain for the public a continuation of the benefit of his services.

MR. S. RICE asked what course Ministers meant to pursue respecting Chief Baron O'Grady; in the year 1814 an address was voted calling for a commission to enquire into the state of the Office of Justice in Ireland had been carried; in April, 1821, charges were preferred against the Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer of the gravest nature, imputing to him, in the exercise of his office as Judge, that he extorted from the suitors sums which they were forced to pay. The committee to whom these charges were referred reported that on some of the charges the answers of the Chief Baron were satisfactory, and that to others what he had replied was no justification. At the commencement of the last Session, these charges were referred to the commissioners of legal enquiry, the report of which was ordered to be communicated to the House, and who gave in his answer. Without going further into the matter, it was sufficient to say, that the case stood thus:—A charge was preferred against a high law officer—he had set out in a spirit of anger, and so the two parties joined issue. If the Chief Baron and the Commissioners were traducers and libellers; if the Commissioners were correct, it was improper that the Chief Baron should remain in the administration of the law. In such a case it was the duty of Ministers to express a firm, decided opinion, and he trusted the Government would not fail to perform their duty on this occasion. The Commission had sat from 1814, and had cost the country one hundred thousand pounds. He then moved for "Copies of the correspondence which had taken place between the Government, the Chief and any of the Judges, the Commissioners of Legal Inquiry, the officers of the Courts of Justice in Ireland, since the close of the last session of Parliament, relating to the case of Chief Baron O'Grady, together with copy of a Letter received from the Chief Baron in June, 1822."

MR. GOULBURN was satisfied that the House would acknowledge the propriety of the course taken by Government, as in every other case, where charges inculpating a high official character had been preferred, the House had invariably left the conduct of the case in the hands of the party with whom it originated. He was prepared on the part of the Irish Government to disclaim any intention of shrinking the case, but they declined taking it from the individual who had brought it forward, as to do this would be to violate a principle which ought to be respected.

MR. ABERCROMBIE did not see how any administration could resist a call like that which had now been made on His Majesty's Ministers, and if his Hon. Friend would take his advice, he would proceed further, and then they should see in what manner the Chief Baron would be dealt with by the Government.

MR. SECRETARY PEEL said, the question before the House was whether or not His Majesty's Ministers ought to take the case out of the hands of the Hon. Member for Limerick, which he had taken up in 1821, which he had continued in 1822, and which he had brought up and down to that very hour, by moving for additional documents to establish the charges.

MR. C. GRANT and MR. C. WYNN thought the case was in the hands of the Hon. Gentleman.

MR. S. RICE briefly replied, and maintained that he had not treated this case as one which ought to be taken up by the Government.

The question was then carried.

New Writs were ordered for the county of Dorset, in the room of Edward Berkeley Portman, Esq. deceased, and for Winchester, in the room of Lucius Concannon, Esq. deceased.

On the question for going into a Committee of Supply,

MR. HUME noticed what he termed the faults of the Government in promising economy without practising it. In 1817, the estimates were given at 13 951,000l. but the actual expenditure amounted to 14,920,000l. an increase of nearly a million. In 1818, the Estimates amounted to upwards of 14 millions, the actual expenditure to 15,155,000l being an increase again of nearly one million. In 1819, too, was after the declaration of the Committee, that there was a progressive reduction of expenditure from the year 1815. Approximately up to last year it had been a progressive increase. Only a few days ago Lord Beresford had been appointed Lieut.-General of the Ordnance, an office which he should shew ought not to be filled up. The expences of the Tower Establishment had increased from 20,000l. to 48,000l. and that was chiefly incurred in the year 1821. When Sir Hildebrand Oakes died, he thought the office certainly to be allowed to drop. The Report of the Commissioners of Military Inquiry, in the year 1811, expressly declared the office unnecessary. He did not wish to throw out any disparagement on the services of Lord Beresford; those services had not come up to what great as they might have been. When the House granted him a pension of 2000l. a year, he (Mr. Hume) did not quarrel with it as the means of supporting the Peerage so honourably acquired; but that his Lordship was appointed Governor of Jersey, for which he received 1422l. a year. Then as a Lieut.-General he had 800l. as Colonel of a regiment 7 or 800l. more. And last night it appeared in the Gazette that he had entered upon the receipt of 1500l. a year, making altogether upwards of 6000l. a year. He could not help connecting with this the borough influence belonging to the Noble family. The public money which the Beresfords received was enormous. He concluded by moving a Resolution, that the Committee of Military Inquiry, in their Thirteenth Report, made in 1811, expressed their belief that the office of Lieut.-General of Ordnance not necessary or useful; and that the House is of opinion the recent appointment of Lord Beresford is inconsistent with the recommendations contained in the Speech from the Throne.

MR. SECRETARY CANNING, in reply to the charges of the Hon. Member observed, that he had said, that he traced in the appointment of Lord Beresford, an attention to the Parliamentary influence possessed by the Noble Lord's family. Now he thought that any man ed at the services and the talents of that Noble Lord, and the y years of glorious toil and victory which had united them, might perceived a more generous and exalted motive for the act. What- might have been the object of Government, had it been made by , the Duke of Wellington was the last man who could be sup- d to have had any idea of Parliamentary influence when he offered Beresford the office. The truth was, that the appointment been first offered to Lord Hopetoun, secondly, to Lord Hill, and s not until it had been refused by both those Lords, that the offer nade to Lord Beresford. No one could suppose that there was dea of Parliamentary influence in wishing to appoint the first of Noble and Gallant Lords. But upon a first view, this did not ar to be a case of any great extravagance. It was not a first ap- ment, a new place made for the occasion, but one which had be- vacant, and a vacancy which had not been suspended. He ed upon the Hon. Member the extreme character of the measure id proposed, and hoped that he would think proper to withdraw ion, the sense of the House must necessarily be taken.

. Brougham wished his Hon. Friend would postpone his motion, se the subject was one of too much importance, and, as had well said, the remedy so extreme in its nature, that it ought not thus incidentally and accidentally brought forward. He was ready to admit the services of Lord Beresford, and to express rsonal respect for him; it was true that he had been the com- n of the Duke of Wellington in arms, and in splendid victories; ey had a right to ask why the offer was made to any one, or why tinued to exist at all, after the Report of the Commissioners was . Therefore, putting out of view all personality towards Lord ford or his family, the question was—ought the office to have d so long, and ought it not now to be abolished?

. Hume was sorry that he could not agree with his Hon. Friend. thstanding what he had heard, he thought it his duty not to vote pplies until the information he required was given.

R. Fergusson considered the opinion of the Commissioners so ve, that the House ought to have abolished the office, and that portunity should now be neglected of doing it.

. Warre objected to the motion in its present form.

Henry Grey Bennet and Mr. C. Hutchinson supported the ion.

F. Burdett suggested to the Hon. Member not to press his tion. The exercise of their right of stopping the supply only to be called forth by some monstrous case—some great and ng grievance, such as left no other means of redress for it. He ly thought it would be going beyond what prudence or discre- ould warrant to go to such a measure as was now proposed.

. Hume at length consented to withdraw his amendment. The e then went into a Committee, and the usual vote for granting a y was agreed to.

THURSDAY.

our o'clock, there being only thirty-six Members present, an nment took place.

FRIDAY.

. Littleton obtained leave to bring in a Bill for establishing a for the recovery of small debts, on the Staffordshire petitions.

. Curtis presented a petition from the hop growers of Sussex, laining of the duty on hops, and praying for a repeal of the same. itions were presented from Nuneaton, Warminster, Bradford, ottingham, praying for the repeal of the Insolvent Debtors' Act.

. Henry Grey Bennet, Mr. Denman, and Mr. Abercrombie unfriendly to the total repeal.

. Bright, Mr. Marryatt, Mr. C. Calvert, and Mr. Hon- e objected to the Bill in principle, but particularly to the mode rying it into effect.

itions were presented from the Clergy of Norwich, Oxford, Not- ham, and Shrewsbury against the Marriage Act.

. C. Calvert observed that the Clergy complained of the loss of fees; but a still greater hardship was occasioned to single ladies entlemen by the Act, of which hardship he partook, for he still ined single.

. Secretary Peel thought the case of the Clergy who were af- l by the Act one of the greatest hardships. Their rights were of nity, some of them patent ones, and all, he believed, were un- ted.

. Lushington took credit to himself for not being the father of noxious Bill.

. W. Maberly moved for accounts of the Public Income for the nding 5th January, 1823.

e Chancellor of the Exchequer said, that on Friday next, he ld lay before the House the Financial State of the country, par- rly with reference to future arrangements.

Marriage Act Amended Bill was read a second time, and com- d for this day se'nnight.

. Hume asked whether the public were to be put to the expence ension for Mr. Rose, the late Minister at Berlin?

. Secretary Canning said, No.

the report of the Committee of Supply being brought up, Sir T. ridge called the attention of Ministers to the distressed state of ricultural interest.

. Secretary Canning said, that Ministers were fully aware of situation, but, after the most anxious enquiry, he was compelled , that any direct measure for the relief of the agricultural inte- was not in contemplation—the only relief would be stated on y next by his Right Hon. Friend, namely, a considerable reduc- f taxation.

ew Writ was ordered for Bossiney.

Mayne, Atlas; Capt. T. Haviside, Windsor; Capt. E. L. Adams, Kellie Castle; Capt. R. Alsager, Waterloo; and Capt. J. P. Wilson, Hythe.

On Thursday a Court of Common Council was held at Guildhall. Some discussion took place on the question for referring a Petition from Mr. Guilt, architect, (in relation to his design for a proposed new Bridge, instead of London Bridge, having been rejected through some deviation from the printed instructions, praying some relief,) to the Bridge Committee. For the motion, 49—Against it, 59.—The Committee delivered in a report of their proceedings and opinion relative to London Bridge, and the measures to be pursued in regard of the proposed Bridge. To be taken into consideration Wednesday next.

The Deccan Prize Cause.—The Lords of the Treasury have determined this cause. The matter has been repeatedly agitated before their Lordships, in many learned arguments, since the middle of last July; Mr. Harrison and Dr. Lenner having appeared as Counsel on behalf of Lieut.-General Sir Thomas Hislop, and the army of the Deccan; Mr. Adam and Dr. Lushington on behalf of the Marquis of Hastings and the Grand Army; and Mr. Serjeant Bosanquet on behalf of the East India Company. The property was captured at Nagpore, Poonah, Mahedpore, and other places, in the course of the Pindaree war, between the 20th of October, 1817, and the 31st of March, 1818, and it was of very large amount. That Sir Thomas Hislop having been Commander in Chief of the Deccan army until the 31st of March, 1818, was, with his Staff, entitled to share, as an actual captor, in all the booty taken by the separate divisions of that army. It is stated that, by the above decision, Sir Thomas Hislop becomes entitled to prize money amounting to 200,000l.

The New Marriage Act.—After the preamble, which sets forth that "inconveniences" have arisen from the existing Act, Lord Ellenborough's Bill provides—That the provision respecting the oath to be made before taking out license be repealed.—That no marriage be solemnized (except by special license) until the party shall make affidavit as to the age, &c. in presence of the Minister: if under age, &c. consent to be given as required by the Act. Who are to give consent if parties are under age; namely, "in case there shall be no such guardian or guardians, then the mother; or, if there shall be no mother living and unmarried, then the guardian or guardians of the person appointed by the Court of Chancery, shall have authority to give consent to the marriage of such party; and such consent is hereby required for the marriage of such party so under age."—That where no lawful father, &c. and oath made to that effect, marriage may be solemnized.—That affidavits may be in form specified in schedule, and administered by the minister.—That the minister solemnizing marriages (except by special license) without administering the oaths, &c. shall be guilty of a misdemeanour.—That after marriage, proof of oaths or consent not necessary; nor shall the marriage be invalid by reason of irregularity or fraud as to oaths, names, &c.—That affidavits to be signed by the parties, and attested by the minister, which, together with consents, shall be preserved by the churchwardens. Registers of marriages to be kept.—That persons swearing falsely are guilty of perjury. Persons obtaining solemnization of marriage by license, by false swearing, or false consent, liable to transportation for life.—That the provisions of the amended Act are not to extend to the Royal Family, and to be limited to England.

Cambridge.—At a congregation on Friday se'nnight the following degrees were conferred:—Bachelor in Divinity—Rev. T. Hill, of Trinity coll.—Bachelor of Arts—Wm. E. Evans, of Clare hall.—S. Bruce, Esq. B.A. of Dublin, was incorporated of this university.—At the same congregation the Rev. J. Cape, M.A. Fellow of Clare hall, was appointed Pro-Proctor, in the room of the Rev. C. Smith, M.A. Fellow of St. Peter's coll. resigned.—The following gentlemen were on Wednesday last admitted Bachelors of Arts:—G. Jackson, of Queen's coll.; J. L. Tanner, of St. John's coll.; W. H. Hill, of Emmanuel coll.; and T. Tocke, of Pembroke hall.

On Thursday, upwards of 250 Solicitors met at the Crown and Anchor Tavern, in the Strand, to adopt such measures, with respect to the gentlemen of the bar in highest practice at the Court of Chancery, as may lead to a more effectual performance of their duty to their clients than has taken place since the establishment of the Vice Chancellor's Court. Mr. Le Blanc was in the chair. The measure suggested as most advisable, was the appointment of a committee to consider the propriety of securing justice to their clients by employing those gentlemen of the bar only who would attend strictly to the business placed in their hands, and who were determined not to divide their attention between the courts, in such a manner as to give cause of complaint. Resolutions to this effect were immediately agreed to. This conduct upon the part of the most eminent solicitors of the Chancery Court has caused a very great sensation at the bar.

Monday the five Commissioners appointed by the Lord Chancellor, under a commission de lunatico inquirendo, met at the great hall of the Freemasons' Tavern, Great Queen-street, and a Jury, consisting of twenty-four of the most respectable freeholders in the county, were sworn to inquire whether the Earl of Portsmouth was in a fit state of mind to conduct his own affairs? Mr. Wetherall, Mr. Brougham, and Mr. Denman, with two other barristers, attended to conduct the inquiry on behalf of the Hon. Newton Fellowes. Mr. Serjeant Pell and four other barristers attended to conduct the inquiry on behalf of the Countess of Portsmouth. They have been occupied during the whole of the week in examining witnesses, nor does it appear likely soon to close.

Capt. Randolph, of Sevenoaks, Kent, in consequence of a fall from his horse while fox hunting on the 1st inst. lingered at Hever Castle, (where he was carried,) till Monday, when he expired.—As F. Chaplin, Esq. of Riseholme Hall, Lincoln, was hunting with Mr. Sutton's hounds, the horse fell, and Mr. Chaplin had a thigh broken.

The Cambridge paper says:—A pugilistic contest on the night of Mr. Harvey's treat, at Colchester, between two freemen of that borough, is likely to bring to light "the hidden things of darkness." One of the champions accused his opponent of having murdered a Mr. Holt, miller, of Lexden, and robbed him of 70l. upwards of 30 years ago. Both the men have been committed. The body of Mr. Holt was found in a sack, in the river. The accuser declares that he held the sack whilst the other put in the body.

In the Insolvent Court, last week, Richard George Spice, formerly residing at No. 153, Drury-lane, and of No. 439 Oxford-street, Middlesex, dealer in ham and beef, was opposed by the Metropolitan Society for the opposition and prosecution of Fraudulent Insolvent Debtors, on behalf of Messrs. Marshall and Dale, members of the said society, and detaining creditors of the Insolvent. Amongst the rules and regulations of the Metropolitan Society is the following:—"Whenever a member shall be served with a notice from any insolvent debtor, and shall be desirous to oppose the discharge of such insolvent, the particular grounds of such opposition shall be communicated to Mr. W. C. Bousfield, the solicitor and secretary, and by him submitted to the committee, at their first subsequent meeting, when the subscriber served with such notice will be required, at his own expence, to furnish an office copy of the schedule of such insolvent; and if the committee shall be of opinion that the case is proper for opposition, and the grounds afford a reasonable prospect of success, they shall direct the solicitor and secretary to take such steps as he may consider necessary for an effectual opposition, the expences of which shall be defrayed by this society."—He was charged with having fraudulently made away with part of his property, for the purpose of giving an undue preference to a particular creditor of the name of Crowder, which was proved. The judgment of the Court was, that the Insolvent should not be entitled to, or receive any benefit under the Act, until he should have been in custody for a period not exceeding ten months from the date of filing his petition, and that such imprisonment be within the walls.

On Wednesday a groom was thrown from an unruly horse in Holborn, and one of his feet hanging in the stirrup, he was dragged a considerable way. He was taken up speechless, and dreadfully mangled, and carried to the Hospital.

On Thursday morning a bricklayer, named Thompson, while repairing the roof of the Salisbury Arms, Durham-street, Strand, fell from the parapet with such violence, that his head struck off the upper part of one of the iron rails of the area; he was taken to the Westminster Infirmary without hopes of recovery.

On Saturday se'nnight, a man running down the steps of the gallery at the Cobourg Theatre, too rapidly, fell over into the pit; he was taken up in a senseless state, and was conveyed to St. Thomas's Hospital.

A dreadful fire broke out at Nottingham, in the house of a poor family, on Friday se'nnight, and three persons perished in the flames.

Chatham.—A few days back, some convicts being employed in stacking wood in the Dock Yard, one of them remained on the top of a wood stack near the Dock Wall, after the others had descended, and drew the ladder to the top of the stack. The overseer desired him to come down, but he paid no attention to the order. A sentinel on duty near the spot threatened to fire at him unless he immediately descended; he disregarded the threat, and placing the ladder from the stack to the wall, ran rapidly along it, and gaining the top of the wall in safety dropped himself on the outside and effected his escape.

Lynn.—At the Sessions, John Cox, for obtaining money under false pretences, by passing a 10l. note of a Boston bank, which has for some time stopped payment, was sentenced to be transported for seven years.—John Dye, Thomas Page, and John Askew, charged with an offence against the game laws, at Philip Hammond's, Esq. at Westacre; to be imprisoned for six months, and hard labour at the tread mill.—Thomas Newton, a farmer, charged with stealing a barrow, the property of the parish officers or surveyors for the time being, was ordered to be imprisoned one month, and pay a fine of 5l. It was proved in evidence that this man was a land-owner, and had money out at interest.

Norwich.—Some days since, the gamekeepers and five assistants, of the Rev. G. R. Leathes, of Shropham, fell in with a gang of nine poachers, all armed with guns; the keepers called out to them to surrender, but they refused, saying, "we will die before we are taken." A violent contest ensued, both parties using the butt end of their guns, and in the end the poachers were beaten off. Five of the keepers were so much bruised about the head, that their lives were for some days considered in danger. Bishop, one of the principal officers of Bow-street, has apprehended five of the delinquents, viz. John Lines, John Moore, Charles West, John Harting, and James Bobby; the latter has since been admitted as an evidence for the Crown against the other four, who are committed to Norwich Castle for trial.

Wakefield.—In the Insolvent Debtors' Court, Thomas Homer Granger, attorney at law, of Leeds, was opposed for contracting debts to a very large amount without the prospect of paying them, delayed his creditors by frivolous defences to actions brought for the recovery of their demands, and that he was attempting to deceive both the creditors and the Court, and to conceal the state of his affairs generally. He was remanded to York Castle for 18 months, for putting his creditors to unnecessary expense, and for general fraud.

A very considerable saving may be effected in furnishing houses with the best London Chintzes, Merino and Silk Tabarets, Damasks, Moreens, &c. by inspecting Miles and Edwards's matchless Stock, just completed for the ensuing season.—No. 134, Oxford-street, between Holles-street and Old Cavendish-street

PRICE OF STOCKS AT THE CLOSE, SATURDAY.

The Money Market, during the past week, has been much agitated, and on Friday particularly was a scene of the greatest confusion. The fluctuations in the public securities have also been very considerable, Consols for the Account being, at one time, as low as 73¼. They, however, have since experienced a reaction, and opened to-day at 74⅛, declined to 73⅞, and finally closed at 73⅞ 74. The approach of settling day in the British Money Market is regarded with considerable uneasiness, and rumours of anticipated failures are very prevalent. The Spanish Bonds fluctuated yesterday between 34 and 34⅛, and closed at ⅛. The Scrip at the close was 32.

TO THE FREEHOLDERS OF THE COUNTY OF DORSET.

Old Palace Yard, 10th Feb. 1823.

GENTLEMEN,

THE unexpected death of your late worthy Member, Mr. Portman, affords me an opportunity of again offering my services as one of the Representatives of the County, and of assuring you, that if you shall think fit to delegate to me that most important trust, it shall be my constant study to discharge the duties of it with unremitting zeal and fidelity, in conformity to those sound principles upon which the civil and ecclesiastical establishments of our excellent Constitution are founded.—I have the honour to be, with great respect, Gentlemen, your most obedient and faithful Servant, H. BANKES.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 16.

THE KING, we are happy to inform our readers, continues in a state of progressive amendment. The DUKE OF YORK is so far recovered as to be enabled to take the air in his carriage.

THOSE persons who are addicted to croaking will, we should suppose, find consolation, and those who are not, matter to justify their most sanguine hopes, in MR. WALLACE'S speech of Thursday, in which the most flattering exposé of the state of trade was laid before the House of Commons.

The hollow, specious, and groundless harangues of waggon orators and county mountebanks, can make no stand against established facts and authenticated documents: it is true the general appearance of society, the evident existence of plenty, and the bustle of activity every where visible, contradict as strongly the cry of RUIN, as the perfect tranquillity of the lower orders falsifies the absurd stuff about internal discontent; but when we collect from the official source facts like the following, all doubt ends—all scepticism as to the real state of the country terminates.

It appears, upon a review of our commercial situation during the last eight or nine years, that the exports have decreased between the years 1815 and 1819, fourteen millions in official value—from 1819 to 1820, eleven millions, and thence to a similar date in 1821, upwards of eight millions.

What then, we ask, must be the feelings of every real lover of his country to perceive the rapid recovery from such depression? True it is, and it is with feelings of heart-felt pleasure we repeat the fact, that not only do the exports of the year ended January 5, exceed those of all the years already named, but exceed those of the most prosperous year ever known during the war.

The export of hardware has increased 17 per cent., of linens 12 per cent., of cotton 10 per cent., of woollens 13 per cent. The exports of 1822, taken altogether, exceed those of 1820 by 20 per cent., and those of 1821 by seven per cent., notwithstanding a deduction made on account of sugar, (from the Russian prohibitory decree) which is calculated at thirty-five per cent.

To all this the grumblers will answer—look at agricultural distress—to which we answer again, that, as we have all along maintained, the amelioration must be univeral: we admit that it requires a certain space of time to work the change, but any man of common sense must perceive that it is impossible that the agriculturist should continue suffering amidst the general improvement which cannot fail to be effected by a continuance of our commercial prosperity during a profound peace.

The Whigs, it is true, lean somewhat to WAR—for the same reasons which for twenty years have induced them to cry for peace; but if we avoid that needless calamity we shall find those excellent and exemplary persons somewhat hard run to discover a fault in the conduct of those profligate, stupid, blundering, extravagant, incompetent Ministers, who have placed ENGLAND in her present honourable position amongst the nations of the world, unless, indeed, they consider it a fault to have worked the glory of our country by the careful exclusion of them and their policy from the National Councils.

OUR readers will perceive, that the Jury in Dublin who tried the persons charged with making a disturbance at the theatre, have been discharged without delivering a verdict. They will perceive—we think, with sorrow—that MR. PLUNKETT, after a bill had been thrown out by the Grand Jury, and after he had tried these persons on an ex-officio information, without getting a verdict, intimated that he should AGAIN bring the parties forward.

We have so much respect for the illustrious person who is at the head of the Irish Government, that we lament to see his justly-gained popularity endangered by the over zealous efforts of MR. PLUNKETT, the Roman Catholics' advocate, against the parties suspected of a riot. The determined ardour of thrice renewing a process against them, does not savour of that conciliation which has been the cry of the Liberals. MR. PLUNKETT has a difficult card to play; and perhaps it would have been as well if the embarrassment had been altogether spared him. We detest HUMBUG; and we would wish to ask those persons who choose to call the traversers in this case, CONSPIRATORS—and who rave about a playhouse ebullition of feeling, as if murder and revolution had been actually intended—what they would have said, if the Attorney-General here, after having failed before a Grand Jury, had prosecuted the party ex-officio, and having been baffled there, renewed legal measures against him — what they would have said?—even if it had been for an attack upon a higher personage than a Lord Lieutenant? The answer is evident. But we believe, sincerely, for the honour of all parties concerned, that the thing never could have happened in ENGLAND.

We remember when SIR SAMUEL SHEPHERD prosecuted MR. WOOLER, in three different cases, for blasphemy, and failing of one, tried him on the SECOND; it was looked upon as an act of persecution, quite unprecedented and unbearable. Let the matters be compared, and our readers, we think, will agree with us in the observations we have made.

IT is a curious state of things when the most grave and important State questions are influenced, and in many instances decided, by the misapplication of a word, or a confusion in terms, occasioned by a mistaken or perverted application of them. It may, indeed, be said here, that "words are things," and things of no little weight, since they involve principles which form the very foundations of society and civil government.

A WHIG, for example, has until our days been taken to imply a supporter of rational freedom, as contradistinguished from the excesses of republicanism in matters of civil government, as well as the upholder of the established PROTESTANT, as contradistinguished from the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH. The present OPPOSITION party in the State maintain all the doctrines which range under the wildest republican creed; and whilst they actually persecute the established PROTESTANT CHURCH, are acting—as if the zeal of Papacy were contagious—with all the heated enthusiasm of converts for the re-edification of ROMAN CATHOLICISM in these realms. And yet these men call themselves, and impose themselves as such upon those who look not beneath the surface, as WHIGS.

JACOBIN is a term to which so much horror is attached, that the most desperate innovators in the country are compelled to reject it from their vocabulary; and no men express themselves more indignantly against it than the WHIGS—forgetting, or rather wishing others to forget their testimony to ARTHUR O'CONNOR'S character, and the grand coalition of MR. FOX with HORNE TOOKE, as the breaking down of the partition wall between WHIGS and JACOBINS—and yet there is not a tenet, a doctrine, a suggestion, or a motive which influences the RADICALS—of which worthy party the DUKE of BEDFORD professes to be ONE—in the present day, which is not deducible from the JACOBINS, or FRENCH REVOLUTIONISTS.

LIBERALITY, a term which bespeaks the nature of the virtue it is intended to illustrate, has been so forced from its original etymology, that it can only be rightly understood in its present political and moral application by reversing its obvious meaning—"Lucus a non lucendo." It stands at least in no nearer relation than licentiousness to liberty—a modern substitution, which goes as near to destroy all rational notions of freedom as LIBERALITY doth to level all the distinctions which principle and moral duty have set up between RIGHT and WRONG.

Another political hocus pocus of this nature has been practised with a success beyond the calculation of mere superficial observers, in the simple subtraction of a qualifying adjective, which alters the very nature of the question, or rather decides the whole question at issue, and which, aided by an ingenious catachresis, converts an act of CONSERVATIVE POLICY into a system of PERSECUTION against TRUTH itself! We need scarcely add, we mean the omission of "ROMAN" before what is uniformly called by its supporters the "CATHOLIC QUESTION," and the substitution of the word EMANCIPATION, for its TRUE explication—the RESTORATION of POWER to a superstition, which lighted up fires in Smithfield to purge the land of Protestantism, and enacted the bloody orgies of ST. BARTHOLOMEW to annihilate it.

And this brings us to another illustration of the errors into which too many well-meaning persons have fallen, through the misapplication or perversion of terms, and which, if not checked, will open when too late for our salvation as a masked battery upon the vital interests of the Constitution.

The opponents of the Roman Catholic CLAIMS—as they are studiously termed, instead of APPEALS—are held up to the country as "INTOLERANT BIGOTS." We wish our readers to attend, particularly at the present moment, to this; for here some very nice unravelling—as we believe the housewives call it—is necessary, in order to shew how this piece of ingenious texture may be held in a light, so as to delude the nicest optics. To oppose any measure which has religious toleration for its object, is repugnant to the spirit of the Reformed Constitution of this country, and those who oppose themselves to it, are justly chargeable with a narrow and illiberal disposition—or in plainer terms, with BIGOTRY and INTOLERANCE. Are the OPPONENTS of the Roman Catholic Claims, therefore, bigotted and intolerant? We answer—NO, in the first instance; and we shall next proceed to shew why.

The SPIRIT of THE CONSTITUTION is essentially PROTESTANT. It rose upon the ruin of the Romish Church, and cannot coexist with it. So abhorrent from the popular institutions of this country was the latter considered, that TOLERATION even was denied; (and under the WHIGS, to their shame be it recorded, was submitted to a bloody, tyrannous, and unnecessary persecution, through the agency of suborned and paid informers. This by the by—). The Roman Catholics were not only excluded from power—from which, in their hands, persecution was and is inseparable—but even freedom of worship denied them. In the course of the last reign, every restraint upon the latter was removed; and so far from any possible complaints arising on the plea of TOLERATION, in the present moment, a foreigner might doubt, in the city of Dublin itself, whether the Primate—or as the Roman Catholics, by way of further distinction (for they well know the use of words and terms) call him, the PROTESTANT Primate—or the Roman Catholic Primate, is in the ascendant. TOLERATION, therefore, is out of the question; and whatever other charge may be brought against the opponents of the Roman Catholic Claims, INTOLERANCE, in not be imputed to them. Nay, within so narrow a compass is the question of these claims now circumscribed, that no term can explain their object, but the very simple one of POWER. By direct measures—repeated concessions, as well as by indirect and smuggled grants, every thing short of POWER—and that too POLITICAL POWER—has been granted; and this is the simple question, which the whole of what we call "CATHOLIC EMANCIPATION" embraces.

Is it then bigotry, to oppose a measure which, to say the least of it, restores POWER to a SECT which has never exercised it but to abuse it?—Is it INTOLERANCE to abide by those conservative laws, which have carried us through the most awful periods of our history, when we have in point of fact that NOTHING BUT POWER was wanting, during the French revolutionary war, for these men to have extirpated every Protestant in Ireland?—Is it a weak or shallow policy which calls us be upon our guard against evils which are not ideal, but which our forefathers suffered "like iron piercing to their souls," and which the present state of things in Ireland does are even of daily occurrence, where the legal authority is spent, or unequal to suppress it?

Are not, in a word, the opponents of the claims of such to power, that is to the means of carrying their exclusive principles into execution—standing upon the very corner stone of the CONSTITUTION; and combating like their ancestors, sealed the holy cause with their blood—that UNBENT SPIRIT of INTOLERANCE, which professes to hold the keys of HEAVEN, and hurls its anathemas against all who deny the infallibility of their canons as HERETICS and OUTCASTS from the presence of their GOD!

We never speak without book, and in our next we bring chapter and verse in proof even of the moderation of charges. But what, let us for a single moment ask ourselves—what is wanting to men, who, to this hour, boast that their legend is "Semper eadem," but POWER to enforce what they declare to be the will of Heaven—that POLITICAL POWER which is all they have left to ask, and which their adherents in and out of Parliament stand pledged to obtain for them? We must be upon our guard. The avowed coalition of WHIGS and JESUITS is "long odds" against our poor old Constitution!

"MR. PEEL, who, though an Orangeman, is, in respect
"his wish to be thought infallible, a true Papist, exhibited "night a ludicrous irritability when MR. HUME satisfied "house that the Right Honourable Gentleman was profou
"ignorant of a subject on which he had been, notwithst
"ing, disserting with his usual gravity."

Morning Chronicle, Thurs

This is an amusing morceau—because it tells us that Papists are infallible—we are apprehensive that the C NICLE thinks Papist means Pope, but it does not—if the C NICLE really means that all true Roman Catholics think selves infallible, it seems rather incautious in the CHRON just at this moment, to have let out that secret.

As for MR. PEEL'S ignorance, when compared with HUME'S information, we are not prepared to say any th certain it is, that MR. PEEL cannot be supposed to exactly where MR. HUME has been poking about to get intelligence,—and when it is recollected that the matter ferred to was the office of some clerk to the clergy in Scotland it does not appear very important whether MR. PEEL any thing about that gentleman or not.

The CHRONICLE has fallen foul of MR. PEEL of late, no doubt, mortifies poor MR. PEEL very much. We only observe, that, if their personal allusions and illiberal tacks upon him merely because he has the misfortune only the eldest son of a baronet, and that baronet one most opulent baronets, and that opulent baronet one most liberal of men, are entitled to any consideration, only go to prove that MR. PEEL'S honourable elevation State arises from the force and power of the very talents envious defamers so earnestly seek to depreciate.

For our own parts we cannot but congratulate MR. PE on the abuse of the CHRONICLE—it is not every man who so fortunate. Poor MR. WALLACE, on Thursday night, praised by—MR. HUME.

A Circular of the Spanish Minister has appeared, commanding all persons in power to suppress an order of Court of Rome, which places in the CODEX EXPURGAT certain books published in Spain—adding, that the Pope never had the right to regulate such matters in Spain.—Wh will the Irish Roman Catholic Clergy say to this? Perh what is sound law in a Roman Catholic State, under a Ro Catholic Government, may be found not to be orthodox Protestant Kingdom.

COUNTY MEETINGS.

ANOTHER of those traps for mob popularity, called Meet for Parliamentary Reform, was last week set for the good ple of the county of Hertford—or rather, with the exceptio fifty or sixty freeholders and copyholders, for the tag-rag bobtail of the town of Hertford. The WHIGS have carried joke too far, and they know it; and we shall be much surpri if in future they venture upon ground which they had not enough to perceive they had ingeniously contrived to m rotten under them. We know nothing more nauseating disgusting, than to see men, who are not only proud haughty by nature, but whose bond of union is the comm feeling of disappointed pride, flattering, fawning upon playing the sycophant to a dirty faced rabble, for a few hol cheers and huzzas, which they know, in the next moment, be snatched from them by beings more abject than themsel and, consequently, better entitled to such suffrages.

All that we have foretold of Whig policy has literally b verified under the fostering hands of their present leade Even up to this scheme of popularity, to be engendered un the auspices of public meetings, so pompously announced a few short weeks since in the Morning Chronicle, they fered themselves they had "the ball at their foot," and ha as they were sure to be in every contest among their equ and superiors, they still might command overwhelming jorities, where clamour is permitted to drown all opposit and overbear the efforts of an opponent.

But the times are altered, and the change is directly tributable to their own infatuated and over-weening self-c fidence. As long as they considered RADICALISM a necess appendage to their policy, they gloried in holding the s language, and in upholding the same desperate princip with the most abandoned of the Reformers; and the DUKE OF BEDFORD was thrust forward to make the g public effort of declaring himself a RADICAL in the face o mob. But in their full-blown vanity they felt they m throw away their cork jackets, and plunge into the fl popular favour with full assurance of their being borne a not only in safety but in triumph. The "WHITE FACTION" was proscribed in the very moment when the W Meetings were proclaimed, as the rallying point of patriot to be held in every county of England, where half a dozen Whigs could be found. What has been the result? Wherever these meetings have taken place, either the RADICALS have turned them to the right about, or they have been compelled to sue, in the meanest and most abject manner, for the momentary support of the rabble. They have either met with men who, like MR. STUART WORTLEY, availed themselves of the occasion to shew their contempt, whilst they exposed the unconstitutional trickery, of the modern Whig system; or like MR. WILLIAM LAMB, pointed out the motives which have induced Whigs of the old school to desert the professors of the new one.

The novelty in Hertfordshire of my LORD DACRE standing the apologist of Whig principles in the face of KING FORDHAM and his subjects, who for so many years—at least coeval with his representation of the county—were considered to be identified with those of his Lordship, afforded no little entertainment to the meeting—but the accident in NORFOLK had suggested certain precautions, which were more easily adopted within the snug walls of the Town Hall than on the Castle Hill, or Market-place of Norwich,—and OLD KING COLE, with a Presbyterian grin, which evinced his TACT in such manœuvres, with "a bite by G—" and a devout prayer that "SIR JOHN might be glad to sit for a rotten borough next election!"

These manœuvrings, however, fall very short in absurdity of those which were exhibited by the party at the sign of the Spread Eagle at Epsom, where a congress of the leading men of Surrey, amongst whom were MESSRS. THELWALL, LEECH, COBBETT, GREY BENNET, LORD KING, and MR. DENISON, mounted in due form in waggons for the good of the country.

LORD KING made a speech, evidently prepared with infinite labour, in which he touched upon those topics which have been occasionally touched upon before; but the principal grievance he appeared to complain of was, the return to cash payments, observing, that "the system of incurring a debt in one currency, and paying it in another, was quite sufficient to ruin any country."

We are not vain enough to impeach the financial powers of my LORD KING, but it requires the aid neither of GRAY nor VON FEINAGLE to remind us that within these few years, and at a time when gold was scarce, and the guinea valued at considerably more than its legal current worth, this very LORD KING refused to receive his rents unless they were paid in guineas. The curious part of the story is this—if my LORD KING sees ruin in the return to a metallic currency now, how came it about that HE, who cries the system down with all his might, should have used all his personal influence to bring it into practice? We have the honour to know LORD KING, and we are quite sure that he was actuated in his conduct then, neither by a wish to harass the Government and cry down the paper currency, nor by the still meaner and less patriotic desire of gaining a few pence upon every guinea which he could draw from his tenants. Whatever his Lordship's views might have been, these dirty objects never entered into them, and, therefore, when we find him declaring the country ruined because the Bank pays specie, we consider it the blessed fruit of the same calculation which fixes upon PEACE and PLENTY as causes of distress and discontent.

A MR. LEECH, (most applicable name for a surgeon and apothecary,) seconded a string of Resolutions moved by the Noble Lord, which might have been carried as well as any others, had not MR. COBBETT proposed an amendment.

It was extremely good-natured of COBBETT to let these poor unhappy Whigs keep any part of their original resolutions; because, from the dependent state to which they have reduced themselves, they, and their properties, and every thing which belongs to them, appear to be completely in the hands of their condjutors, the Radicals. It must be confessed, that MR. COBBETT'S amendment gave the tone to the original resolutions, which characterises them as belonging to the faction under whose tyrannical sway the poor Whigs are groaning.

After the words "Reform in Parliament," COBBETT'S amendment adds—"Without which your petitioners can see "no hope of THAT EQUITABLE ADJUSTMENT with regard to "the PUBLIC DEBT, and with regard to all contracts between "MAN AND MAN, which is absolutely necessary to the defence "of the country against foreign foes, and to the RESTORA-"TION of internal tranquillity."

One would have imagined that an amendment like this, which points directly to the violation of faith, not only with the public creditor, but with every creditor a man may happen to have, would have gone unseconded and unsupported. But, no—a man was found stupid enough to step forward and bolster it up.

The OLD TIMES speaks of this person and his conduct in the following terms:—

"One who had not wit to see the rascality through the nonsense caught with avidity at the latter, gave the amendment his support, and thus the whole petition was tainted, and the petitioners exposed to the laughter of every honest and rational man, both in and out of Parliament."

This witless one, who caught at the nonsense, it may be necessary to add, was neither more nor less than that paragon of all earthly perfection, the HONOURABLE HENRY GREY BENNET. Whether the funded property of that exemplary patriot is to be found secure in the Savings' Bank of WALTON-upon-THAMES, or in the more splendid establishment of MESSRS. HOWARD and GIBBS, we cannot say; but this we will say, that MR. HENRY GREY BENNET deserves the thanks of every man who happens to have a shilling to lose in the country, for having so candidly avowed the views, wishes, and intentions of his party; and for proclaiming, that the great object of Parliamentary Reform, and the introduction of plebeian Members into the House, is the annihilation of the public debt, and the destruction of the funded property of the country.

That we should most anxiously call upon the people to mark and observe what is going on after such a declaration, is but natural, because, we have never taken a second view of the subject; but it is much more satisfactory to persons of right feeling to perceive the partisans of these BENNETS, and HUMES, and BROUGHAMS, and THELWALLS, and WILSONS, and WADDINGTONS, themselves inspired with feelings and sentiments upon the occasion of this last staggering avowal, which have given rise to the following observations upon the subject. We again quote, gentle reader, from the OLD TIMES, a paper which, let its faults be what they may, cannot be suspected of ultra Toryism, or a blind adherence to the things that be. Our friends may judge for themselves.

"It is lamentable to see counties and county meetings thus rendered contemptible, and the practice of petitioning made to appear absurd. We shall here briefly show the stupidity of the amendment as put in the mouth of the petitioners:—'Without a Parliamentary reform' (it is said, suited to COBBETT'S taste, according to which many man is to murder his creditors who shall demand their just debts), 'the petitioners can see no hope of that equitable adjustment with regard to 'the public debt, and with regard to all contracts between man and 'man, which is absolutely necessary to defend the country from foreign 'foes, and to preserve it in a state of internal tranquillity.' The petitioners, therefore, PRETENDING to be acting under the great test necessity, and requiring immediate relief from the most urgent distress, inform Parliament and the country, that they do not hope for the relief for which they pray, till a certain other measure shall be accomplished, which measure, it is clear, cannot immediately, and it is almost certain will not soon, take place. A pretty method of praying for a speedy relief! I am dying of hunger, but do not give me a morsel of bread till you have examined and decided my title to a certain contested estate. The agriculturists, in thus telling the country that they do not want relief till after Parliament is reformed, do CERTAINLY TELL US THAT THEIR WANTS ARE NOT VERY PRESSING."

The same paper then proceeds thus:—

"In the next place, men praying for any object whatever, do all they can to avoid making enemies or creating an opposition to their request. On the contrary, COBBETT and his worthy second make the Surrey petitioners raise and excite all the opposition they possibly can to the prayer of their own petition; for they make the petitioners say that they only want a parliamentary reform, as the means 'of making an 'adjustment of the public debt, and of all contracts between man and 'man,'—that is, no doubt, such an adjustment as the honest, worthy, conscientious father of the amendment has made of his own debts, and of the contracts which exist between himself and other men! Did ever county so expose itself? Norfolk, no doubt, stood in a ridiculous situation; but Surrey actually stands in a roguish situation. It calls forth old COBBETT to instruct Parliament how it is to proceed in the adjustment of the national debt! and the candid old man frankly acknowledges, that he cannot frame for one of his equitable adjustments till he has had a Parliamentary reform; that, also, must mean one of his Parliamentary reforms; for unless he had a parliament composed of such men as himself, we do not see how he could have one of his equitable adjustments of the national debt. Every one, therefore, who would suffer by the plunder of the public creditor, as an end, must oppose Parliamentary Reform as the means."

We have always said this, but it was reserved to MR. HENRY GREY BENNET to open the eyes of the incredulous, and the ears of those who scorned to listen to reason. ROME was saved by the cackling of one goose—who knows but England may be preserved by the efforts of another.

WITH feelings of unequalled intenseness we perceive that an act of wanton extravagance has been committed by the King's Ministers, fraught with the most direful consequences. They have appointed LORD BERESFORD Lieutenant-General of the Ordnance—with a salary of—1,500l. per annum: this (considering too how very little LORD BERESFORD has done for us) is, in itself, enough to exhaust the Exchequer and make the country bankrupt; but as if the thing, in itself, were not enough to overturn the Administration and destroy the nation, MR. HUME—the fact is so—MR. HUME is said to have thrown out an intention of stopping the supplies till Ministers have "explained away that fifteen hundred a year."

According to the Doctor's phraseology, the explaining away fifteen hundred a year, seems somewhat an expensive mode of explanation. What he meant, one is obliged to collect from putting odds and ends together, at the same time never doubting the real point in view. On his debut, however, the poor Doctor got a smart rap over the knuckles from SIR FRANCIS BURDETT; and when the Honourable Baronet declares a certain line of conduct to want prudence and discretion, (in whatever sense people may apply the terms) it is pretty clear, that the person corrected, is making himself more than ordinarily ridiculous.

A MR. FORD*ham* stated at the Hertford County Meeting, that "the PIGS of APPLEBY were the Electors!"—MR. FORDHAM did not perhaps recollect at the moment, that MR. THOMAS CREEVEY is their REPRESENTATIVE in PARLIAMENT.

SALE OF HORSES, &c.

MESSRS. COWPER, LEY, RICKMAN, and Co. respectfully inform the public, that they have opened a Repository for the Sale of Cattle by private contract, near the Champion's Stables in Westminster, and hope for their usual support and patronage.

Contractors for Government treated with every liberality.

The following are amongst the articles well worthy attention:—

Lot 1. MOLYNEUX—a coach-horse, used to harness all his life, and well known in most of the stable-yards at the west-end of the town; strong built, shews great substance, and a fine high shoulder. May be seen every day in exercise.—N.B. Not warranted.

Lot 2. BOB—a military charger, marked with a star; rather out of condition, having been turned out for some time; never was fired, and has not a scratch about him. He has been well physicked, and is fit for immediate service (if required). Full courayed, but rather hot. Any gentleman who is a dab at handling the ribbands might do any thing with this animal, whose temper is excellent.

Lot 3. OLD HARRY—a remarkably stout heavy-built cob, well known in the neighbourhood of Kensington; rather groggy in the legs, but hunted a long time with FOX-hounds. Has been ridden by a Lady for many years, and is remarkably quiet in the stable.

Lot 4. DUNCANNON—a fine cream-coloured horse, sixteen hands and a half high; shews a good deal of blood; carries his head badly, but has been found an extremely serviceable animal for a whipper-in.

Lot 5. That high-couraged hunter BARONET, well known in the Oxford country; a free goer and a good fencer. Warranted to stand fire, and is only parted with in consequence of having thrown out a curb.

Lot 6. CAM—a small crop-eared HOBBY; got by NONSENSE out of LOYALIST; very playful, but does no real mischief.

Lot 7. NIHIL—a little grey poney by TANKERVILLE; an awkward goer, and apt to shy at soldiers. If properly treated would make a steady hack, and is always ready for work.

Lot 8. BUCK—a stout butcher's horse; a powerful animal, and though by no means fast, is famous all over the country for bottom.

Lot 9. JEMMY—a north country horse, well known abroad as RECORDER; colour, Bom-BAY. This horse carried off more money at one time than any horse of his inches, distancing every thing behind him.

Lot 10. CREEPER—an aged horse; sire unknown; lame in one of his legs, and goes very near the ground; might answer well in a dust cart, being so quiet that the most timid gentleman may drive him.

Lot 11. MICHAEL ANGELO—a beautiful punchy little poney, colour bright bay, with black muzzle. An excellent feeder. His late master wished to put him in a chair, but he never has been in harness.

Lot 12. QUEEN MAB—got by Leather-seller, dam IMPUDENCE; known as a hunter in Surrey; well accustomed to harness; was used in the store-keeper's department, and worked for several years with one of the first Trotters in the kingdom: removed from the Bazaar near Portman-square for the convenience of sale.

N.B. He was called YOUNG at that establishment, but that is a deception.

Lot 13. HARRY TWITCHER—an exceedingly active animal; carries his nose up, and requires to be driven in a martingale; has got two broken knees and a string-halt; has been accustomed to Reviews, and has run in the Edinburgh Blue and Yellow for many years; he would make a capital hackney coach horse, and will be swapped by the party to whom he belongs for a horse of greater value.

Lot 14. JOE—this animal was shewn about the country for several years as the surprising horse from BENGAL; he is able to cast up sums upon a slate, light a fire, and boil a tea-kettle with his mouth, and perform sundry other curious feats; he is extremely industrious, and quick in moving, but never has been known to carry any thing, and it is supposed he is now too old to improve.

Lot 15. A large JACK-ASS called PETER—this curious animal was tried, by way of experiment, as leader to one of the LONDON stages, but was found unable to draw, and is now offered for little or nothing.

Lot 16. NEDDY, a mule by TRIMMER; of no use to any party, and known only for carrying a tale. He has been frequently in a dealer's hands, and done a good deal in the jobbing line.

Lot 17. COLONEL—a cast cavalry horse; rather lame, and has been ridden latterly by a medical man; he is by no means fast.

Lot 18. WILL O' THE WISP—aged; well adapted to work either as off or near wheeler in a heavy coach, and may be put to either side without danger or difficulty; he is very apt to go on his knees, unless great care is taken to hold him up; very steady in his walk; and to an elderly gentleman occasionally in want of a CANTER, he will be found invaluable.

Lot 19. HUMPTY-DUMPTY—a grey Mayor; ran for the QUEEN'S plate, but thrown out after being sadly beat about the head with a broom during the race; has taken the collar twice quietly, and would go well in a cart.

These, together with many other lots too numerous to mention, may be seen any day (Sundays excepted) till Easter, by application at the Stables, between the hours of three and four.

N.B. Job Horses by the day or month, as usual.

IT has been generally remarked, that a LIBERAL, where he has power, is a DESPOT. It may certainly be verified in many instances, by tracing the career of Oppositionists in private life; but if this be true, with how much greater force does the fact strike us, that the members of a Republic are invariably less free than the subjects of a Constitutional Monarch.

It has been the fashion for such persons as poor old MR. COKE, to twaddle after dinner about AMERICA, and the advantages and the excellence of its Government and Administration; and MR. HUME and his followers, DAVIES and GREY BENNET, and the rest of them, have even gone so far as to make comparative estimates of the expences of the three or four over-grown frigates of the United States with those of our navy, and then have descanted on the purity and extraordinary virtues of our trans-Atlantic revolted subjects, by way of setting down the Government of the mother country, as corrupt, flagitious, wicked and weak.

COBBETT—not that we mean that any body should pin their faith upon his writings on any side—describes the blessed REPUBLIC of AMERICA in language the most appalling, and indeed makes it appear that virtue (or even decency) is unknown within its confines. On this, written under some particular impulse, we certainly do not much rely, but upon looking over an American work, on commerce, written with much moderation and apparent knowledge of the subject, we find the following observation:—

"It would be difficult to produce in the history of mankind a stronger case of unfeeling disregard of public distress, than that exhibited by Congress during the horrible years of 1817, 1818, 1819, and 1820. The most affecting petitions of large bodies of the citizens of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Pittsburg, and various other parts of the United States, with bankruptcy staring them in the face, and casting themselves on the justice and commiseration of their representatives for relief, were treated with the most sovereign indifference—not one of them was ever read to either house—and numbers of them, referred to a Committee of Oblivion, were never reported on. Under the most despotic government that ever existed, there could not be less attention paid to the sufferings of the people. When the historian records the events of these times, the proceedings of Congress will not reflect much credit on the country."

By this we are taught pretty fairly to estimate the advantages likely to result from that purity of election which has been so long considered to be the glory of the new world, and a desideratum for the old one. When—we ask fearlessly—when has our corrupt and venal Parliament acted in a similar manner?——As fearlessly we answer—NEVER!

AGRICULTURAL DISTRESS.

IN these times of poverty and complaint, when taxes are remitted, without acknowledgment of relief, and rents and tithes are reduced more than a third, and in some cases even to a half, without exciting gratitude, it may afford some satisfaction to the real friends of the agricultural interest, to know that the distresses of the poor, oppressed farmer begin gradually to disappear; in proof of which we refer to the following authentic statement:—

"On Thursday, Jan. 16, a Yeomans' Ball and Supper was held at an Inn in Essex—Gentlemen's tickets, 12s. Ladies, 7s. 6d.! It was particularly stipulated by the managers, that none of the provisions which were left at a ball and supper held by the Gentry of the vicinity some time before, should be produced on this occasion, though the landlord had prudently suggested, that with leave to introduce some of the cold viands, he could make a considerable reduction in the prices of admission. This proposition was rejected with disdain, and the dance was deferred for some days, to render such a degradation impossible. The meeting was very fully attended—the numbers reported to be 150; and the company, availing themselves of a Learned Judge's sanction, chose to keep a "Christmas carnival," and caroused to a late hour—some of them not retiring till eleven o'clock on the succeeding morning. In the same county, at not many miles distance from the same spot, a striking instance has occurred of the liberality of a squire to his tenants and his Rector. A certain gentleman of considerable property was requested by one of his tenants to be as liberal to him as the Rector had been, who had reduced his tythes 30 per cent. The noble-minded gentleman replied in these words, "Squeeze the Parson a little more, and you will be better able to pay me." We fear this is by no means a solitary instance; but it is somewhat remarkable that this short-sighted gentleman, who is so fond of "squeezing the Parson," is himself the son of a Parson! has one son, two brothers, and a nephew all Parsons! and is likewise the patron of a valuable living!"

THEATRICALS.

THE Drury Lane management has presented to the public a novelty which was at least unexpected, we mean the restoration of part of SHAKESPEARE'S KING LEAR, which, it should appear, by the way in which they announced it in the bills, they mistook to be a restoration of the whole tragedy—and so, in consequence of the assertion published, we imagined it to be.

We were a good deal disappointed on visiting the theatre to find that no steps had been taken to knock away TATE'S plastering and restore the original beautiful structure farther than concerns the last act, and that all the mawkish love-scenes of the bungler were still suffered to encumber the splendid work of the bard.

It would seem somewhat ill-natured to suppose that the able conductors of an establishment like Drury Lane should have imagined that they had actually done what they professed in their bills, and it therefore, we hope, will not appear ill-natured if we merely suggest to them, that it would be quite as well not to take more credit in their allurements to the public than they conscientiously feel they deserve.

Nothing can be more judicious (wherever it can be done) than restoring the original of our immortal author, and we are quite sure that every man of taste will render thanks to MR. KEAN for having taken the step of bringing back the last act of KING LEAR nearly to its ancient purity; but with all this feeling of our own we cannot conceal the fact, that, as a public performance, it was a decided failure.

KEAN'S figure and general appearance is likely to excite many feelings, but certainly not that of pity, or respect for misfortune; and in some parts of his performance the effects of his exertions were of a nature to have been more satisfactory had the mirth of LISTON been their cause than the lugubrious wailings of a maddened king—we mean, in plain English, that at certain points the audience were almost in a titter, and more especially where he repeated, four or five times over, the word "Never—never—never—never," which exceeded, in comicality, even his own pronunciation of the word "Fool—fool—fool—fool." in OTHELLO, and very nearly produced that most disagreeable sound to a tragedian's ear—a horse-laugh.

But turn we from all this useless mummery of woe to the powerful attractions of BRAHAM, MISS STEPHENS, MUNDEN, and LISTON—a rare assemblage indeed of merit, and one for which the public most certainly is indebted to ELLISTON; for although it may be argued that these very attractive persons were all at different times to be found at Covent-Garden, it cannot be denied that the concentration of their abilities was first effected at Drury Lane; nor can we but feel that some extraordinary liberality on one hand, or something less meritorious on the other, must have caused old established favourites, part of the fixtures, as it were, of the other house, to have changed their scene of action, and abandoned their posts at Covent Garden to recruit the languishing forces of Drury Lane.

We have heard no one accuse ELLISTON of undue influence or underhand manœuvring, and therefore it must be by his zeal, activity, and good management that he has secured a fund of amusement for the lovers of the drama in all its legitimate branches. Of his ballets and pantomimes the least said the better; the changes and tricks he has succeeded in are the change of his company this season from what it was last year, and the trick of filling his house and his pockets.

MISS STEPHENS appeared in GUY MANNERING, and, strange to say, appeared embarrassed by the novelty of her situation; the stage and the appearance of the house seemed new to her, and her efforts were, from that or some other "cause yet unexplored," considerably subdued; so much so that we could barely recognize, in "Soger Laddie," those powerful appeals to the heart which her sweet voice seldom fails to make successfully.

BRAHAM who (like the thorn on MR. HUNT'S manor of Glaston-twelve-hides) flowers at Christmas, retains all his powers, and claims, with undiminished ardour, undiminished applause. The gods were particularly delighted with his execution; and nevertheless, as we know how well he can run cadences and make flourishes, we wish he would forego those clap-traps, and sing simply to the feelings. His indulgence in "capriccios ad captandum" is a piece of bad taste, much of the same nature as the Radicalism of a wealthy Whig at a County Meeting; he sacrifices his judgment and endangers his real property for the sake of a few hollow cheers from an illiterate mob, while the freeholders (in the boxes) merely laugh at his efforts to gain applause from those who, in fact, have no votes in the county.

A gentleman (from Holland, we presume) played DIRK HATTERAICK, and we have no doubt would have been extremely well received at AMSTERDAM—in London it had the merit of being perfectly unintelligible. MRS. GLOVER, in MEG MERRILIES, was by no means successful; we have seen one lady in London play it worse, but as she has played so many things charmingly we shall name no names.

At Covent Garden it seems the intestine commotions (for civil wars they can by no means be termed) still rage most furiously. The two ladies, however, at issue, have come to terms, and are alternately to play Moonshine and Wall through the rest of the season.

This arrangement we always recommended, because we were quite sure, that with such commanding talents as those of MISS TREE, she would lose nothing by comparison, or even condescension.

MISS MITFORD has very wisely withdrawn her tragedy from this theatre. We heard quite enough of it to convince us what its fate would have been if its representation had taken place. We say nothing of that excessive modesty which selected a subject already chosen by a poet, whose talents, however perverted, are of a rank likely, one would think, to check the desire of competition in an authoress; nor of the inflated bombast of its language; nor of the "puffs preliminary" which appeared in certain papers during the last week or two; we merely take the thing upon its intrinsic merits, and are quite satisfied that it is justly disposed of.

We have heard (to what credit the report is entitled we know not) that one of the most esteemed actors of the day, both on and off the stage, is shortly to turn the tables upon the nobility who have chosen partners from the theatre, and to lead to the altar a lady of nearly the highest rank among subjects, with a fortune commensurate with her station.

TO RICHARD HEBER, ESQ. M.P.

SIR—I took the liberty of expressing to you, at the close of the last Session of Parliament, the regret and disappointment of your constituents, at the manner in which you had fulfilled your promise of not supporting the grant of any further concessions to the claims of the Roman Catholics; and I stated to you, at the same time, that they would not be satisfied, on any future occasion, with a silent vote from a Representative, who, if the praises lavished upon his talents and accomplishments are deserved, is, by his conduct in Parliament, either guilty of the greatest disrespect towards the University, or in reality feels an attachment to the cause which he undertook to oppose.—My present address to you shall occupy only a short space. Either redeem the pledge given to your constituents according to their just expectations, or surrender voluntarily into their hands the trust which has been improvidently committed to you, and the failure of the senator will be compensated by the disinterestedness of the man.

Oxford, Feb. 6, 1823. ONE OF YOUR CONSTITUENTS.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR,—I perceive with much sorrow, but not with the least surprize, that "the Catholic Question," as it is usually called, is to be brought forward on the 20th of this month for the consideration of Parliament. I am anxious, therefore, to call the attention of your numerous readers, many of whom are themselves, I believe, Members of Parliament, to a small publication, which, though artfully appearing without any Author's name, has recently been printed, and which having been procured from those, who call themselves "Printers to the Right Reverend Vicars Apostolic," I reasonably conclude, has met with the secret approbation of those to whom MESSRS. KEATING and BROWN have the honour to be printers. In this publication are the following statements:—"The Protestant Religion cannot be true, except the whole Scripture, both of the Old and New Testament, from the beginning to the end be false." "We are convinced that they (the Protestants) are schismatics, by separating themselves from the communion of the Church of Christ, and heretics, by dissenting from her doctrine in many substantial articles; and, consequently, that they have no lawful mission, no succession from the Apostles, no authority at all to preach the word of God, or administer the sacraments: in fine, no share in the promises of Christ's heavenly kingdom, excepting the case of invincible ignorance." Now these either are, or they are not, the sentiments, which are still entertained by the Church of Rome towards the Church of England. If they are not the present sentiments of the Church of Rome, it is surely very reasonable to demand that the members of that Church, before they expect any further concessions from us, should most unequivocally say so. But if they are, without my insisting upon the indecency as well as uncharitableness of that language, which here indirectly describes every Member of the House of Commons, every Member too of the House of Lords, and even the King himself, as having "no share in the promises of Christ's heavenly kingdom;" with what security, I would ask, to our present establishment in Church and State, can they, who profess the Roman Catholic Religion, be permitted to make laws for this Protestant kingdom? Is it possible that any one, holding the notions set forth in this tract, and being zealously attached to his own religion, should not seek the first opportunity, as soon as ever the means were justifiable, of subverting a faith, that must of necessity appear to him so entirely Anti-Christian? If in the nature of things this is impossible, and if to exact an oath of those professing the Roman Catholic Religion, binding them not to attempt the overthrow of our present Ecclesiastical establishment, is only requiring them to swear against that, which their consciences must tell them is their duty, I shall be excused, I trust, in confidently hoping, that they, who have it in their power to preserve to us those beneficial laws, under which we have lived so happily, will pause before they repeal them, and will seriously consider with themselves what posterity will justly say of them, if, for the name of that, which in these days is falsely called "liberality of sentiment," they sacrifice the best and dearest interests of their country.—I am, Sir, your most obedient and humble servant,

Feb. 12, 1823. A CLERGYMAN OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

IRELAND.

TRIAL OF FORBES AND OTHERS, FOR A CONSPIRACY AND RIOT AT THE THEATRE, CONTINUED FROM LAST SUNDAY.—Mr. Farrell swore that he was in the Upper Gallery, sitting behind Henry Handwich, and saw him take a bottle and jerk it from the Upper Gallery.—Cross-examined.—Henry Handwich stood on the third seat of the Gallery, nearly under the tip, and had two rows of people sitting before him, and persons also sitting behind him, but no one sitting to his left—that is, between him and the wall.

Dr. Macnamara, of Ballinakill, Queen's County, swore that he was in the Middle Gallery, and on the sixth seat, and heard a noise above him, particularly one expression, "Boys, mind your fires;" alarmed by which, he looked up, and saw Henry Handwich, on the third seat of the Upper Gallery, fling a bottle in the manner already described, towards the stage; saw it in its transit to the stage, but it escaped his view when it reached near the foot lights.—Cross-examined.—Admitted having been indicted for breaking open a Pound at Ballynakill; that on that occasion, he swore cross informations against the person who charged him with the offence, and that the Bench of Magistrates, and assistant Barristers, disbelieved his swearing, and believed that of his accuser, and sentenced him to three months imprisonment, and a fine of 20l.; was a fortnight in prison under that sentence.

The next witnesses of any consequence, on the part of the Crown, were Farley and Troy, who deposed, that they were in Flanagan's Tavern, Essex-street, on the night of the riot, and Forbes and the other traversers rushed in, called for punch, and some of them said, "It was a damn'd bloody miss;" and that the expression "Devil mend him," was used by some of them; that Forbes said, as he was now committed in the transaction, he did not care what became of him they might send him to Botany Bay; if they did, he would establish an Orange Lodge there; that if he went to hell, his only regret would be, that he would be obliged to associate with Papists there. It was deposed, on all sides, that Forbes was very much intoxicated, and irritated for having been taken to the watch-house and dismissed, no charge having been preferred against him.

Capt. Webster proved the rent in the cushion of the box next to his Excellency, made by the fragment of the rattle.

Here the case closed for the Crown.

For the defence, Frederick Trench, Esq. Magistrate of the Queen's County, deposed to the knowledge he had of the general character of the witness, Dr. Macnamara, and did not consider him worthy of credit, on his oath, in a Court of Justice.

Mr. John Pounden, and Mr. Benjamin Smith, deposed that they were present in the tavern at Essex-street, and believed that they had heard all that had been uttered by Forbes on that occasion, and that he did not say, to their hearing, that "it was a damn'd bloody miss," or "devil mend him," or any words to that effect. They swore positively that Mr. Forbes then said, "that no Protestant would have thrown the bottle, or if a Protestant, (for there were some bad ones) he could not have been a true Orangeman." The evidence of these gentlemen directly contradicted that of Farley and Troy.

Mr. Broad, Prompter at the Theatre, deposed to a description of the upper gallery; that one-fifth or more portion of the gallery extended between Henry Headwich and the wall, and on this fact, it was inferred by the traverser's Counsel, that on such a crowded night it was utterly impossible that so much space could have been unoccupied, as sworn to by the witness Farrell.

Lady Rossmore deposed to her having been in the next box to his Excellency on the night laid in the informations, and felt not the least alarm at any thing that happened; that she saw no bottle thrown, but of the box in which she sat, which alarmed Lady Anne Gregory, and Mrs. Goulburn, but herself not at all.

Mr. J. H. Brocas deposed having been in the upper gallery that night, and early in the evening his attention became fixed on Henry Handwich; that he had him perfectly in view the whole of the evening, and saw no bottle whatever in his hand, nor saw him throw one, and believed it impossible he could have done so without his, the witness, having seen it.

The Court having adjourned on Thursday at half-past four, the Solicitor-General concluded his speech on Friday. The Court having retired at half-past four o'clock, and not having agreed to a verdict at SIXTH DAY, Saturday, Feb. 8.—This day, at a quarter past ten, had yet agreed to their verdict?

Sheriff Cooper—They have not, my Lord, nor are they likely to agree.

Judge Jebb—Call the Jury into the box.

The Jury appeared very much flagged and fatigued, when the Learned Judge asked them, did they disagree on any point of law?—The Foreman turned round to consult his fellow-jurors; and while in consultation Mr. Neil M'Kenny, a Juror, addressed the Court, and said, they did not disagree on any point of law.

Mr. Justice Jebb—Gentlemen, retire to your Jury Room.

The Jury again retired, and at half-past 11 Judge Jebb ordered the Jury to be again called into Court, and asked them if they had yet agreed on their verdict? The Foreman replied they had not. They were again ordered to retire, and shortly after the Attorney-General addressed the Court—My Lord, the proceedings that have taken place in this Court will not prevent me from bringing the matter forward again next term, it being too late this. The Court assented. The Jury were again called, when Judge Jebb put it to the Attorney-General, whether, as he would be obliged to discharge the jury at three o'clock, it might, as a matter of favour (as they were not likely to agree in their verdict,) be well to discharge them now; to which suggestion the Attorney-General consented; but previous to the Jury being dismissed, he thought it necessary to mention to them what had already said to the Court, that the proceedings that have already taken place would not prevent him from bringing it forward again, as he was advised.

Four men, who were skating on Mr. Mitchell's Lake, Castlestrange, County Roscommon, were drowned on Thursday week.

On Monday night, a farm house on the lands of Brianstown, the property of William Russell, Esq. was visited by a large party of ruffians, who, after removing the care-taker, his wife and such furniture as belonged to him, deliberately set the house on fire, which was shortly consumed.—On Thursday night, at eight o'clock, a party of robbers came to the house of an industrious dealing man, named Cregan, near Newcastle; the poor man being from home, three of them entered, one of whom presented a pistol at his wife, while the others rifled her box of 2l.—The same night, a party, well armed, attacked the houses of two farmers, named John Carte and Patrick M'Carthy, residing on the lands of Ballyguile and Monelana, within two miles of Newcastle, which they rifled of wearing apparel, cash, &c.—On the night of the 24th ult. a rick of hay, containing upwards of eighteen tons, on the lands of Ballyvoshanbee, near Ellin, the property of Robert Maxwell, Esq. was maliciously burned.—On the night of the 26th, an armed party attacked a house at Grigane, the property of Emmanuel Hutching, Esq. they broke the windows, sashes, &c. wounded two servant men with a sabre on the head, and beat a woman who had charge of the house, in a cruel manner.—On Friday night last, an armed party burned a farm house and out house, belonging to David Hartigan, on the lands of Fort, the property of Harris Purdon, Esq.—The house of Fortlands, (occupied by Mr. James Morrisson,) the property of L. Batwell, Esq. was attacked by an armed party on Sunday night, in search of arms. They administered several oaths to two female servants.—In the County Tipperary, near Holycross, the house of a farmer, and some of his property, were set on fire, and several shots discharged at himself and his family, in their efforts to rescue some cattle from the flames. Two of the incendiaries have been secured and lodged in prison.

The Dublin Parrot of Tuesday says:—In corroboration of Mr. Hayes's argument, that the use of Confession in the Romish Church prevents the commission of the crime of suicide, as insinuated in the apostrophe to the deluded Heretics of England:—On the night of Friday, the 31st of January, or early on Saturday, the 1st of February, a girl of the name of Brennan drowned herself in a mill-race near Castle Couser. She was of the Romish persuasion; and the whole of the description of inhabitants in the village had been occupied at confession in the chapel during the preceding week.

On Wednesday night, a party of insurgents repaired to the lands of Kilmaralig, convenient to Kanturk County Cork, the property of John Boyce, Esq. and set on fire a large haggard, which contained seven stands of corn, and near sixty tons of hay, with some farming implements. Capt. Trench, 22d Regiment, with a party of his men, succeeded in preserving two stands of the corn. They were joined soon after their arrival by a party of the 22d near Kilbrun, but not before the insurgents were to be seen. Their number was upwards of fifty, well armed, and wore white bands on their hats.

The Ribbonmen of the county of Dublin have signified, through their pastors, their readiness to surrender their arms, to break up the Association, and to take voluntarily, and cheerfully, the oath of allegiance. Mr. Bennet, the barrister, is to be the medium of the communication with the Government.

On Sunday last, about two o'clock, P.M. as the Waterford and Limerick coach was proceeding between Tipperary and Limerick, it was stopped by a party from 20 to 30 in number, seven or eight of which were armed. Buttle, the guard, discharged a pistol at one of those who held one of the wheel horses, by which he received a wound in the neck or near the ear, as he fell against the horse which he had held; and the coachman saw the blood flow from the wound. On Buttle discharging his pistol, another of the party struck him with a stone, and knocked him down off the mail boot, dragged him across the road, and threw him against the ditch. The assailants then opened the door of the coach, and forcibly took out a young woman, who was an inside passenger. Two of them took her away across the fields, while the rest remained on the road, until the coachman came off the box, and got Buttle into the coach, into which also he put the arms. They then permitted the coachman to drive off. The young woman was going to Limerick for the purpose of being married.—Dub. Morn. Post.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH.

TUESDAY.—The Solicitor-General moved for leave to file a criminal information against Mr. Barry O'Meara for certain libels on Sir Hudson Lowe, Major-General in His Majesty's service, and late Governor of St. Helena. The libels were contained in two volumes of the last edition of a work under the title of "A Voice from St. Helena; or Napoleon in Exile." Mr. O'Meara, as a British Officer, was sent out to St. Helena, and there, on the request of Buonaparte, became his surgeon. It appears whilst he filled that character, he was collecting materials for the work in which Sir Hudson Lowe, the representative of His Majesty as Governor of St. Helena, now complained of being libelled. After continuing some time in the situation of Buonaparte's surgeon, he was found instrumental in forwarding communications between Napoleon and other parties in Europe. He was, consequently, dismissed from attendance on Buonaparte, and on his return to England preferred charges against Sir H. Lowe. These charges were submitted to the Lords of the Admiralty, and Mr. O'Meara was dismissed His Majesty's service. Sir H. Lowe complained, not that the book contained direct charges, so much as insinuations, which cannot be distinctly answered. Many libellous passages are put in the mouths of persons dead before the work was published; but Sir H. Lowe felt most the imputation that he was desirous of shortening the life of his captive, and that he was adopting means for the accomplishment of that object. Among a variety of insinuations respecting the placing of certain persons about Buonaparte, Mr. O'Meara had put language in the mouth of Buonaparte of the most indecent description. "I never see your Governor but I think of the man who heated the poker for your Edward the Second. If I was asked in London who I considered the man to be, I should say, he was the hangman of the municipality. I think I see this ."—The Court granted a Rule.

The King v. John Frost.—The defendant, who was found guilty at the last Monmouth assizes for two libels on Mr. Thomas Prothero, was brought up to-day to receive the judgment of the Court. He attempted to read a long address, reflecting on the prosecutor, but was interrupted by the Court, who informed him that he could not be permitted to make statements calculated to prejudice others, except on affidavit. He was sentenced to be imprisoned in the House of Correction, in Coldbath-fields, for six calendar months, and find security for his good behaviour for five years, himself in 500l. and two sureties in 100l. each.

WEDNESDAY.—Charles Edward Rogier, Wm. Southwell Humphreys, Frederick Oldfield, Richard Bennett, and Thos. Carles were brought up to receive the judgment of the Court, having been convicted on an indictment preferred against them by a gentleman of the name of Woodroffe, for keeping gaming-houses in Pall-mall and St. James's-street. An affidavit of mitigation put in by Oldfield, set forth that in July, 1821, he withdrew from being concerned in this trade; that he has a wife and seven children depending on him for support, that he is subject to ill-health, from an inclination of blood to the head, and that imprisonment must endanger his life.—The affidavit of Bennett stated that he was not a proprietor since September, 1822, but since that time the trade was abated. That he has a wife, an aged mother, and seven children to support, and is in distressed circumstances.—Carles' affidavit was to the like effect—a wife and seven children—he was formerly a lieutenant in a West India regiment, where he suffered severely from the climate. An affidavit of a surgeon was likewise put in, stating his constitution being impaired, and subject to the gout.—An affidavit of the prosecutor deposed to the facts of defendants being severally connected and identified with the proceedings of the gaming-house in St. James's-street. He has seen one man, a clerk, driven almost to madness by the loss of money belonging to his employers. The Court in passing sentence noticed the offence of keeping a gaming-house; the temptation which it held out to crime in the young, was not only to hazard their own, but other people's pockets entrusted to their keeping, and thus tempting them to commit robbery, for which they might forfeit their lives, by keeping a house with closed doors, furnishing wine and refreshments, by which many were induced to play and lose their money, whilst in a state of intoxication, not knowing what they were about. The plea of defendants having wives and children ought to be a security against involving those innocent sufferers in their crime and distress; others like them might be ruined in their families by those practices. C. Rogier to be imprisoned for the term of twelve months in Coldbath-fields prison, and pay a fine of 5,000l. to the King.—Wm. Humphrey for the same place of two years in the same place, and pay a fine of 200l. to the King.—F. Oldfield and R. Bennett to be imprisoned in the custody of the Marshal of the Marshalsea, for twelve months, and pay a fine of 1,000l. each to the King.—T. Carlos eighteen calendar months in the Coldbath-fields House of Correction, pay a fine of 500l. to the King, and to find securities for their good behaviour for the space of five years in the sum of 2,000l. and to procure two sureties of 1,000l. each. The prisoners were then informed to the following effect:—The Court does not pass upon you, as it will feel constrained to do upon others, if they should be brought before them, a sentence of hard labour. The reason is, that although an act of Parliament has passed, awarding such a penalty, yet it did not receive the royal assent until August, 1832. This offence was prior to that punishment; but the Court wished to have it publicly known, that this is the punishment to which such offences are liable.

THURSDAY.—Biddy v. Howell and Manning.—This was an action brought by a widow lady, residing at Chelsea, against the defendant, who is a collector of poor-rates, and another, for trespass and riot on the premises of the plaintiff. Miss Jane Biddy, daughter of the plaintiff, remembers Mr. Howell calling at her mother's about three o'clock on the 8th of August—her mother promised if he called at five that evening he should be paid. About eight o'clock that night witness heard a loud knock at the door. Witness looked out at the window, and saw an ill-looking man, in a state of intoxication, leaning against the wall of the street-door, whom she since knew to be Manning, the other defendant. He demanded to see Mrs. Biddy; and being told she was not at home, said he'd call again in the morning. Witness particularly urged him to tell his business; but he declined. As witness was going up stairs, she saw him out of the window getting over the rails of the back garden. Witness immediately screamed out. She then ran down and bolted the back door, which was burst in, "and the man fell in nearly upon me.' He then called out, "I am in my boys, and I'll let you in." At that moment a thundering rap came at the street door, Manning ran and opened it, letting in Howell, the defendant, and Cranbrook. When Howell entered he said, "I have a warrant for the poor-rates." Witness said, "For God's sake let me entreat you don't make this exposure, the money has been ready for you ever since my mother's death." Witness immediately tendered the money to Howell, and then swearing, he said.—"Madam, for your impudence, I will make you pay the levy," and he was very much intoxicated, and so was Manning. Witness sent for Mr. Wilson, her attorney, and again tendered the money, one pound odd—there was a great tumult and mob before the door—Howell demanded 1l. 11s. 6d. and took that sum off the table—Mr. Howell said he had taken too much, and gave back 6s. 6d. Other witnesses confirmed this testimony. The Lord Chief Justice observed, a verdict must go for the plaintiff; this entry, by breaking open the door, being an illegal entry; and if the Jury believed these young women, the defendants had conducted themselves very improperly. The Jury would say how much more they would give in damages than the 2l. which the plaintiff had paid to the defendants, including the repairs of the door. The Jury without hesitation found for the plaintiff—Damages 20l. beyond the 2l. paid.

A RATIONAL THEORY of the LATIN VERSE, for reducing them virtually to One Conjugation instead of the Four taught at all the established Colleges in the World; for the express purpose of illustrating "A New View of Literal Economy," or "English Common Sense" versus "Uncommon Classical Erudition."

The prospect, at this crisis, of a Monastery "to be or not to be," will display an ancient Oriental Juliocaste, with the grand Giant Mahadeo, and his Jack of all Trades Hunooman, on the Obi Wife's back, foundering in a Hellish Fog, on the coast of Monckland, near the Straights of Monopolli, in consequence of a mortal wound from a darling Performer's Harpoon, who, Jonas like, has been just thrown ashore by a huge Whale, with a literary Sermon and portable Telescope for the immediate benefit of every clerical Professor of Nineveh, in the land of God, including the whole fraternity of legitimate dealers in ancient, modern, or strange Toggure, throughout the British Isles.

While the forestalling of Grain, Sugar, Tea, Coffee, &c. is held in merited detestation by a free people, it cannot be more odious than an exclusive local monopoly of British Indian Tuition, which, in a thousand different ways, must prove highly detrimental to the public weal of the United Kingdom, and the private welfare of respectable families, who would otherwise naturally wish to educate their sons near the parental control and domestic happiness of their own roofs as possible.

EASE and COMFORT in SHAVING.—To those Gentlemen who find experience inconvenience in Shaving from a tender face or strong beard, J. T. RIGGE most particularly recommends his celebrated MAGNETIC RAZOR TABLET, which, with its late improvement, he engages will produce so keen an edge as to supersede all grinding, honing, &c. and render the operation of shaving as easy and agreeable as it was before the unpleasant and painful. Its use is simple, its effect certain; price 7s. 6d. J. T. Rigge's Aromatic Shaving Soap will also be found an invaluable addition. Manufactory, 65 Cheapside and 83, Park-street, Grosvenor-square.

IN SIX EASY LESSONS OF ONE HOUR EACH.—MR. BRADBURY, Private Tutor at Westminster School, solicits the attention of Ladies and Gentlemen to his universalled and infallible system of beautiful PENMANSHIP, whereby he pledges himself to teach persons of all ages to write with ease, elegance, and expedition, (whatever may be the deformity or the present writing) in six progressive Lessons. This system, as it equally promotes the attainment of a bold and masculine hand calculated for business, and of a light and graceful manuscript adapted to Ladies; also secures to the Pupil the certainty of writing perfectly without lines, with wonderful dispatch and accuracy, and, moreover, will steady the hand of the most tremulous writer. Upwards of 2000 specimens, and numerous recommendatory letters from persons of first distinction, some of whom are upwards of 50 years of age, Private tuition at home. Ladies and Gentlemen attended at their own residence. A new and practical system of Short Hand, taught in a few lessons, so as to enable the writer to decipher what he has written with inconceivable ease.—Apply, (or direct, post paid) at the Academy, 464, Strand, near Charing Cross.

WRITING PAPER, of the best quality, made by the justly celebrated J. WHATMAN, of Turkey Mill, to be sold at the following low prices:—Excellent copy, 7d. the quire, or 11s. the ream; good laid post 8d. superfine thick 9d. and 1s. the quire, or 12s. 15s. 6d. and 17s. 6d. the ream; superfine Bath 9d. ditto. hot pressed, 10d. and 1s. the quire, or 13s. 15s. and 17s. 6d. the ream; very best thick Bath gilt, 1s. 1d the quire, or 29s. the ream; good foolscap 1s. the quire, superfine 1s. 2d. and 1s. 4d. a quire, or 21s. and 26s. the ream; superfine large book post 1s. the quire, or 13s. the ream; best thick lined 1s. 6d. the quire, or 26s. the ream; very good copy books 3s. 6d per dozen; best sealing wax 4s. 6d. the lb. Also for sale, the new-invented Steel Nib Pen; it has the elasticity of the quill, with the durability of the steel pen, price 1s. 4d. each. SMITH'S, 192, Strand, Second House from the Crown and Anchor Tavern.—Account Books made to order, of any size or pattern; Drawing Paper, and Bristol Boards, equally low in price.

CONSOLATION to the TREMULOUS WRITER.—The Public may look to this most singular and unique Invention with confidence as an inestimable source of comfort to those who experience any difficulties in the command of the pen, occasioned by tremour in nervous affections, heat of climate, agitation of spirits, excess or over-exertion, weakness from age or otherwise, injury of the thumb or fingers by sprain or otherwise, even to the loss of part. This happy relief exists in a little INSTRUMENT the appearance of which, when in use, escapes observation, is capable of giving firmness, confidence, and freedom, and must be found to assist the declining powers of a gentleman, and materially improve the performance of a lady. It is honoured by the patronage and recommendation of Sir Astley Cooper, and other highly respectable professional Gentlemen. A few minutes practice will prove its efficacy, and it has this advantage over all medicine, its power increases by use, and one prescription will last for life. Made in elastic gold, price 25s. each.—Sold by the Patentee, Mr. T. Pearce and Co. No. 268, facing the front of St. Clement's Church, Strand. Letters from any part of the country, post paid, will be promptly attended to.

ALE, STOUT, CIDER, &c.—THOMAS FIELD and SON beg to acquaint their Friends and the Public, that their genuine Burton, Edinburgh, Taunton, and Welsh Ales, Dorchester Beer, Brown Stout, Cider, Perry, &c. are in fine order for use. They have also a very superior Stock of Foreign Wines, Cape Madeira, Brandy, Rum, Hollands, Geneva, and Orange Shrub; and they have been enabled to make a considerable reduction in the prices of several articles.—22, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

BURGESS'S ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES.—Warehouse, 170, Strand, corner of the Savoy-steps, London.—John Burgess and Son, being apprized of the numerous endeavours made by many persons to impose a spurious article for their Genuine Essence of Anchovies, beg to request the attention of the Public, in purchasing what they conceive to be the Original, to observe the Name and Address corresponds with the above: the general appearance of the spurious descriptions will deceive the unguarded, and for their detection, J. B. and Son submit the following cautions,—some are in appearance at first sight, "The Genuine," but without any name or address;—some "Burgess's Essence of Anchovies;"—and "Burgess's," some with, and others without Address.

John Burgess and Son having been many years honoured with such distinguished approbation, feel every sentiment of respect towards the Public, and earnestly solicit them to inspect the Labels previous to their purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments.

BURGESS'S NEW SAUCE for general purposes, having given such great satisfaction, continues to be prepared by them, and is recommended as a most useful and convenient Sauce: will keep good in all climates.

BILIOUS and LIVER COMPLAINTS.

AS a mild and effectual remedy for all those disorders which originate in a vitiated action of the liver and biliary organs, namely, Indigestion, loss of appetite, head ache, heart-burn, flatulencies, spasms, costiveness, affections of the liver, &c. &c. DIXON, BELL and CO. have met with more general approval than any other medicine whatsoever. They unite every recommendation of mild operation with success ful effect; and require no restraint or confinement during their use. In tropical climates, where the consequences of redundant and vitiated bile are so prevalent and alarming, they are an invaluable and efficient protection. They are likewise peculiarly calculated to correct disorders arising from excess of the table, to restore the tone of the stomach, and to remove most complaints occasioned by irregularity of the bowels.—Sold in Boxes at 2s. 9d.; 6s.; 11s.; and 22s. by Butlers' Chemists, No. 4, Cheapside, St. Paul's, and 220, Regent street, (near the Argyle Rooms,) London; 20, Waterloo-place, Edinburgh; and 34, Sackville street, Dublin; and by the principal Medicine Venders throughout the United Kingdom.

AMBROSIAL ROSEATE PASTILLES.

MONSIEUR LEBRUN who had the satisfaction of introducing into these realms, about eighteen years since, a Genuine Pate Pectoral de Jujube) has the honour of offering to the Public a new and elegant species of Pastille, which combines with its pectoral and soothing properties, those of mellowing and improving the voice, by rendering it more agreeable and more flexible. At the same time it imparts to the breath a permanent fragrance, resembling Ambrosia; this has induced the Inventor and Proprietor to bestow upon it the appropriate name of AMBROSIAL ROSEATE PASTILLES.—Sold in Boxes at 2s. 9d. by Butlers', Chemists, No. 4, Cheapside, St. Paul's, and 220, Regent street, near the Argyle Rooms, London; 20, Waterloo-place, Edinburgh; and 34, Sackville-street, Dublin; and by the principal Medicine Venders throughout the United Kingdom.—Of whom may also be had his Genuine Pate Pectoral de Jujube, so justly esteemed for their efficacy in Coughs, Colds, &c.

THE ROYAL FAMILY, NOBILITY, GENTRY, and LADIES and GENTLEMEN may rely on it, they will not have a hair fall off or turn grey by now using Prince's celebrated Russia Oil as it is so improved with an extra valuable ingredient, through which it has made the Russia Oil the greatest nourisher and preserver to the hair in the Universe, will make it grow thick and long, and prevent its falling off or ever turning grey, and is such a nourisher to the roots of the hair, that if it even has begun to turn grey will restore it again to its natural colour, and if used often it will never turn grey again, and is sure to clear the scurf, from infancy to old age, and when dressing with it will always keep the Head and Hair clean and beautiful. Gentlemen who have lost their hair, and have the least sign of roots of hair remaining, by using regularly, for a few months, Prince's Improved Russia Oil, with the extra valuable ingredient, will be sure to restore it, and produce a fine head of hair, which hundreds have experienced. Even Medical Gentlemen have published, in the Gazetted Health, that Prince's Russia Oil is superior to any other for the hair; and will do, in cases of baldness and weak hair, what can possibly be done.

It is no wonder that Ladies and Gentlemen have complained of late of the Russia Oil not being of service to the hair, as they have found out that unprincipled persons have sold them counterfeits.

Ladies and Gentlemen will be particular, as impostors in Great Britain, France, and other different parts of the Continent, have made the covers of the Counterfeit Russia Oil so much like the genuine, and some, more to deceive, falsely have printed on their counterfeit covers "the original," or "genuine Russia Oil," and some even are so daring, although they know it is punishable, to put the Original Proprietor's Name. Therefore purchasers should be cautious, and have it of the Proprietor, or of respectable Venders.

Ask for Prince's Improved Russia Oil, with the medallion, and observe "Prince" on the wrapper and seals, and his address, "A. Prince, No. 9, Poland-street, Oxford-street, London," is on the cover of each bottle; without, it is not genuine, and cannot answer the purpose. The ounce bottle five shillings, or a large bottle, containing five ounces, one pound, which is a saving.

Sold by the sole Proprietor, A. Prince, No. 9, Poland-street, Oxford-street, near the Pantheon; and by appointment principally by Perfumers and Medicine Venders.

Letters must be post paid, and remitting in the country, by sending a remittance to the Proprietor, and it will be forwarded immediately by coach.

Merchants and Captains will receive a liberal allowance for exportation.

The well-set TEETH, as every white, combine,
To grace, still more, "the human face divine."

ROWLAND'S ALSANA EXTRACT, for immediately relieving the most violent Tooth-ache, and preserving, strengthening, and beautifying the Teeth and Gums. This admirable specific is recommended by the first physicians, and its properties are truly invaluable. In the anguish of excruciating pain, it affords instantaneous mitigation! It creates, cleanses, and preserves! renovating the Teeth with pristine beauty; eradicating from the mouth unpleasant taste and injurious secretion, and repelling the approach of decay! It totally exterminates the scurvy, restores the gums to the fullness of health, and gives them an additional firmness of adhesion, by which means the Teeth are powerfully rooted to their sockets. It is besides perfectly innocent, and a excellent accompaniment in all cases of flatulency and depression of spirits; finally, it cleanses Artificial Teeth, and prevents their changing colour. But the necessity of resorting to Artificial Teeth may be entirely precluded by the Alsana Extract, which, if constantly used, will preserve the Teeth and Gums sound, beautiful, and free from pain, to the latest period of existence. By the decay of the Teeth mastication is impeded, and female beauty loses an attractive ornament. To preserve the one, and retain unimpaire dthe power ers of the other, are consummations devoutly to be wished, and by no existing specific in the universe can these most desirable attainments be more readily insured than by the use of ROWLAND'S ALSANA EXTRACT.—Sold in bottles, at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 10s. 6d. each, duty included, by A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden, Holborn, London, and by all the respectable Medicine Venders in Town and Country.

LATEST NEWS.

Paris Papers down to Thursday have arrived. Accounts from Madrid, dated the 3d inst. state, the city was tranquil, and dispatches had been received from the Count de Cabal and General Velasco, detailing the advantages obtained over Bessieres, whose banditti had been routed at all points. They announce that the speech of the King on opening the Chambers had arr ved in that city. Its contents appear to have excited a great fermentation in the public mind.

The Quotidienne, in a series of personal attacks, charges the Prince Talleyrand with having concluded with the Allies, on the 23d of April, 1814, a Convention, which put them in possession of "sixty fortified cities, four thousand pieces of cannon, a great number of ships of the line, and an immense materiel for the Army and Navy."

HAMBURGH, FEB. 4.—The foreign Cabinets having proposed certain changes to the King of Saxony, that Monarch replied to them—"For many years I have been very well satisfied with my people, and my people are satisfied with me—what more is wanted? My subjects have never done me any harm—I see nothing to change." The King of Bavaria has also refused to accede to the demands made for restricting the sittings of the States-General, and submitting the press to a severe censorship.

It is stated in another part of our paper, that Mr. W. Courtenay has been appointed a Baron of the Exchequer. We since understand that the Morning Papers, from which we copied it, have stated a falsehood.

On Thursday Mr. Vansittart and Mr. Bathurst had audiences of his Majesty, at the King's Palace, at Brighton, when Mr. Bathurst resigned his seals as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, and the King was graciously pleased to deliver them to Mr. Vansittart, appointing him the Chancellor to succeed Mr. Bathurst. The Right Honourable Gentlemen had, afterwards, the honour to dine with his Majesty.

The Public Revenue is in a most flourishing state; a surplus of nearly five millions appears on the surface of the accounts presented from the Treasury. The income for the year amounts to £54,414,650 1s. 5d.; the expenditure to £49,499,130 1s. 7d.

Mr. Canning and Mr. Herries are elected members for Harwich.

The contest for member for Dublin, which lasted for eight days, finished on Tuesday, when Lieut.-Col. White was declared duly elected.

The Dublin Evening Mail of Wednesday, received yesterday, says; Lord Wellesley has dismissed from the office of Chamberlain, Sir Charles Vernon, a Gentleman who, for a space of 24 years, had been attached in that capacity to the Irish Court. Two Gentlemen of the Household, the Hon. Capt. Stanhope, son of Lord Harrington, and brother-in-law to the Duke of Leinster, and Mr. St. George, have had the honour of being included with Sir C. Vernon in the decree of dismissal. The cause is stated to have been, the reception, with unanimous applause, by the hundreds of assembled noblemen and gentlemen present at the late Beef-Steak Club Dinner, of the following toast: —"The Exports of Ireland, and may those who would subvert the Constitution be the first."

A Levee, consisting of nearly four hundred Noblemen and Gentlemen, waited upon Sir Charles yesterday, at his residence, Dublin Castle, to express to him their sentiments upon the occasion.—Several meetings of clubs are about to be held to express their feelings to the King, and that the High Sheriff of the County of Louth has refused to convene his county for the purpose of preparing an address to the Lord Lieutenant.

A meeting was held at Cambridge, on Friday, to petition for reform. A. Mr. Beales proposed several resolutions embracing a reform in Parliament, repeal of taxes, abolition of sinecures, abolition of tithes, and a more equitable distribution of landed estates among the efficient Clergy, &c. &c. A person named Fordham, made a very foolish speech in support of the abolition of tithes, in the course of which he said, "the Established Religion had no root, no foundation in Christianity at all." This intemperate declaration produced a battle between some of the gownsmen and a posse of dirty looking miserable wretches, who were supporters of Mr. Fordham's doctrine, blood flowed on both sides. The gownsmen, however, had the best of it, and the orator, amidst the most violent uproar of groans and hisses, was obliged to retire. The meeting agreed to the resolutions, and to a petition grounded on them.

The snow storm has been severe in the north of Edinburgh. Two women were dug out dead between Perth and Crieff; a young gentleman perished on the Ochil hills, and a fine boy near Pitcairn-green.

In the Court of King's Bench yesterday, an action was brought by a man named Mason against Kennedy and Launders. The plaintiff married the widow of a person who kept a public-house at Woolwich, and about eight or nine days after the marriage she died, leaving considerable property. The defendants were very angry at the plaintiff, a Protestant, having married a Catholic, and upon the death of the lady, Kennedy and Launders, the defendants, came to the plaintiff's house, whilst they were holding the wake, and violently assaulted the plaintiff. There was also a count for assault upon the corpse of the wife, Mrs. Mason, but which was abandoned. A great number of witnesses, mostly Irish, were examined. The night of the wake when Mrs. Mason was lying dead, Mr. Kennedy and Launders came into the house of Mason, and seizing him by the collar began to baste him; Kennedy said, "You have great assurance to come here—what made you murder the woman?" The Jury gave the plaintiff a verdict with One Shilling damages.

THE LADY OF THE LAKE.—The above delighful Poem has formed the plot of an Italian Opera, the Music of which is by Rossini, and is of the finest description. The Italian words are not remarkable for either chastenss or elegance, and we fear that this alone will render Le Donna del Largo unpopular in this country. We are however, happy to inform our readers, that Mr. Bochsa, the industrious director of the Oratorios, has preserved to us Rossini's beautiful Music, adapted to the delicate and elegant language of Sir Walter Scott, and that it will be presented on Wednesday next at Covent-garden Theatre, as part of the selection for the Musical Performance of that evening.

PIDDING and Co.'s continued success on the concluding days of the last Lottery, when 12,694, a Prize of £5,000, also, 1,109, a Prize of £1,000, and 3,936, a Prize of £300, were added to their previous long list of Capitals, sufficiently accounts for the number of persons who are daily crowding to make purchases at the Lucky Corner, No. 1, Cornhill; and Lucky it may be truly called, when, if one Person had purchased every Ticket sold by P. and Co. in the last Contract, he would have realized many Thousand Pounds Profit beyond the cost of all the Tickets. The present small Lottery, of 6,000 Tickets, (to be drawn in one Day, 25th Feb.) contains Prizes of £20,000, £16,000, &c. &c. probably now on Sale at the Lucky Corner, No. 1, Cornhill.

ELEGANT GLASSES, FURNITURE, &c.—The Nobility and Gentry are Invited to inspect the Warerooms of Cooper and Son, 83, Bishopsgate-street Within, where is exhibited a large Assortment of new and second-hand Plate Glasses, admirably suited to every description of drawing or dining-rooms. In the furniture department is comprised every new and elegant article of upholstery, cabinet, and chair work, the prices of which are reduced to such a scale of economy as to attract and ensure the patronage of rank and fashion.

WINDSOR SOAP.—J. Atkinson, 44, Gerrard-street, Soho-square, London, respectfully informs the Public that his Double Refined Windsor Soap will be found a Soap of a very superior kind; it is made of the best materials, and freed from the caustic properties contained in most Soaps, and which acts so injuriously to a delicate skin; its perfume is a complete bouquet; it is gently detergent, emollient in use, very durable, and sold at the price of the commonest articles; it is highly valuable in the nursery, and where the skin of adults have got hard, rough, or uneven, it gradually, but with certainty, corrects such imperfections, and makes the skin luxuriously soft, white, and even. Half-pound packages, 1s. 2d.; pounds, 2s. by taking a dozen, 1s. 9d.—Sold by most Perfumers, but the genuine has the Proprietor's signature and address on the label.

The attention of youth of both sexes is particularly directed to that inestimable ornament the Human Hair, as that attended to in youth is a sure preservation, and fixes a stamina for a beautiful Head of Hair. The only article that really possesses nutricious virtues for promoting a luxuriant growth of Hair is Rowlands' Macassar Oil, which eradicates the scurf easy and pleasant, prevents the Hair falling off or turning grey, strengthens and produces beautiful flowing Curls, and renders Hair that is harsh and dry, as soft, smooth, and glossy as silk. As impostors purchase the empty bottles, and offer for sale a pernicious composition instead of the genuine, it is indispensably necessary to ask for "Rowlands'," and observe the prices are 3s. 6d.—7s.—10s. 6d. and 21s. and each genuine bottle is wrapped in a book, signed on the outside in red, "A. Rowland and Son."

A candid examination of professional pretensions is only to be feared by those who are conscious of incapacity. Messrs. Goss and Co. Members of the Royal College of Surgeons, confine their studies to the treatment of such disorders as arise from nervous debility. Their works, "The Ægis of Life," and "Hygeiana," (the latter addressed to females) in full explanation of these subjects, may be had at No 20, Paternoster-row, London, Porter, 72, Grafton-street, Dublin, or at any Booksellers. Medicines can be forwarded to any part, however distant, on receiving a Bank note.—4, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street, and 7, Jermyn-street, St. James's, London.

Sixth Edition. This day is published, price 6s. 6d.

FRANCE for THE LAST SEVEN YEARS, containing many Facts, and much valuable information hitherto unknown, with Anecdotes, Jeux-d'Esprits, &c. &c.—By W. IRELAND, Member and Ancient of the Athenæum of Science and Arts, at Paris.

"One of the most honest books that has appeared for several years relative to France, is Mr. Ireland's volume, entitled, "France for the Last Seven Years: or, The Bourbons." He therein proves that his feelings are of the true old British School, and that he is not one of those base panders of power, who, for years past, have subsisted by ascribing the crimes of their patrons to the principles of liberty."—Monthly Magazine, Vol. 35, p. 162.

TO BE SOLD.—The First and Second Volumes of JOHN BULL, complete, with a Title page and Index to each Volume. In good order Address (post paid) to X. Y. Peel's Coffee House, Fleet-street.

A VERY GREAT SAVING.—GENUINE LAVENDER WATER and ESPRIT de ROSE may be had retail at the Manufactory, 3 Gloucester-place, near Smith-street King's road, Chelsea, at about half the usual cost, of such superior strength and fragrance as to defy all competition Sold also by Mr. Sharpus, Cocksparr-street, Mrs. Gold, 30, Speldhurst-street, Burton-crescent; and Mr. Letts, 32, Cornhill.—All orders by post to be addressed to the Manufactory. Not less than 1dozen pints of Lavender Water can be had at the exportation price.

PRIVATE TUPIL.—A Married and Beneficed Clergyman, resident within a morning's ride of London, and accustomed for many years to receive a few Pupils into his House, has now a VACANCY. The most satisfactory references can be given to Noblemen and Gentlemen, whose Sons he has educated.—Cards may be addressed to the Rev. C. J., Mr. Jeffrey's, Bookseller, No. 4, Pall-Mall, London.

POYAIS, NORTH AMERICA.—The price of Lands in this territory is now 4s. 6d. per acre, and Notice is hereby given, that upon the 17th of next month the price will be advanced to 5s. per acre, and a progressive advance will be continued. Notice is also hereby given, that the Price of Lands, at the Land Office in the town of St. Joseph's, in Poyais, is now two dollars per acre. The aspect of Poyais is mountainous; the land is high almost to the sea side, the hills rising gently like the swell of the sea. The soil of the woody lands is every where excellent, being under a deep black mould or rich brick clay. The low land, savannahs, or open lawns, instead of being unhealthy or swampy, generally consist of a mixture of light sand and rich mould. Mosquitos (or gnats) and sand flies, are in general scarce, large tracts being entirely without either. The climate is mild and salubrious, and Europeans generally retain their health and activity to a good old age. Horses, black cattle, pigs, poultry, &c. are very numerous, and may at present be bought for stock at a very moderate price.—Every information as to the title deeds, the security of purchasers, &c. may be obtained by applying personally, or by letter, post paid, to the Land Agents in London, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Inverness, Stirling, or Hamburgh ——No. 1, Bowgate-hill, London, Feb. 10, 1823.

MONEY on EQUITABLE TERMS.—The Advertiser advances Money to any extent, at moderate Interest, whether on Freehold, Copyhold, Leasehold, Lifehold, Funded, or other ample Security; and assures those who may honour him with their confidence, that they will experience treatment the most candid, liberal, and explicit, though similar business is sometimes viewed with mistrust, from the mal-practices of unprincipled people.—Letters, post-paid, to A. B. care of Mr. Williams, glover, Inner Temple-lane, Fleet-street, will receive immediate attention; where also a card or address may be had.—Reversions are purchased.

DRAWING ROOM and DINING ROOM FURNITURE, the principal part of which was bought at the late Sale at Oatlands, and are the cheapest Goods in London, and consist of real Rosewood Chairs, Silk Curtains, Dining Room Furniture, with some of the best Chimney and Pier Glasses, in London; they are all of the most real French Plate, with ormoo superb Table and Slab for ditto.—NIAS and Co. Agents, 32, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

N.B. With them are three handsome Bedsteads, Furniture, and Bedding, for half the usual price: and Book-cases, late the property of the Duke of Cambridge.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY.

LORD REDESDALE presented a petition from Witham, praying for the establishment of a Court for the recovery of small debts for that town.—Petitions were also presented from Chester, and Shepton Mallett, praying for a repeal of the Insolvent Debtors' Act.

THE EARL OF TANKERVILLE presented a petition from an individual, Sir John Wrottesley, against the provisions of the last Marriage Act.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH lamented the imperfections of the measure, and complained that no Lawyer nor Right Reverend Prelate had objected to it.

LORD STOWELL thought lawyers were not aware of the inconveniences of the Bill. The matter more properly belonged to the Ecclesiastical Bench. The petition was laid on the table.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR said the House must come to some clear understanding respecting licences.

THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY denied that the Right Reverend Bench had misled that House respecting the Bill, they had relied upon the vigilance of other Noble Lords. The retrospective clause had been received almost with enthusiasm.

LORD STOWELL moved the appointment of a Committee to take into consideration the Marriage Laws.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH seconded the motion, and wished to know whether the Noble and Learned Lord would resist the principle of indissolubility of marriage as recognized last Session.

LORD STOWELL, in reply, observed, that every part of the matrimonial law must be taken into consideration. He could not bind himself to any particular part.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR observed, that he had opposed the retrospective clauses. A Committee was then formed, consisting of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Chancellor, Lords Stowell, Liverpool, Redesdale, Colchester, Ellenborough, Shaftesbury, Rosebery, the Marquis of Lansdown, &c. &c.

Petitions were presented from Harpington and Greenhough, in Norfolk, complaining of agricultural distress.

THE MARQUIS OF LANSDOWN, in allusion to the Austrian Loan, (of which one large payment was due) asked whether there was any prospect of re-payment to this country.

THE EARL OF LIVERPOOL replied, that discussion had been going on between this Government and Vienna, and an agreement for the payment of the debt had been made by the Austrian Government, the grounds of which he should, he hoped, be shortly able to state.

In answer to a question from the Earl of Darnley, in respect of the state of Ireland, the EARL of LIVERPOOL said, the subject originated elsewhere.

TUESDAY.

On the motion of the EARL of SHAFTESBURY, it was ordered that no petitions for private Bills be received after the 24th of March, nor any reports of the Judges on such Bills after the 22d of April.

WEDNESDAY.

THE BISHOP OF CHESTER stated his intention (in conformity of his notice last session) to bring in a Bill to amend the Marriage Act of Geo. II. in respect only of places where marriages were to be solemnized, by permitting them in chapels of ease.

THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY brought in a Bill to legalize marriages where licences had not been obtained, according to law. Surrogates had not authority given them, the Bill had been so rapidly hurried through the House; the Bill, which was to correct this error, was read a first time.

LORD VISCOUNT SIDMOUTH presented two petitions from the clergy of Norwich against the Marriage Act.

Petitions were presented from New Malton against the Insolvent Debtors' Act, and from Billericay, in Essex, praying for the establishment of a Small Debt Court.

THURSDAY.

Petitions from Blackburn and Beverley were presented against the Insolvent Debtors' Act.

THE MARQUIS OF LANSDOWN gave notice, that he should on Monday, put a question to the Noble Earl (the Earl of Liverpool) respecting our Foreign relations.—Adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY.

A petition was presented from Tipperary praying for a Commutation of Tithes.

Petitions were presented from Bristol, Gloucester, Oundle, praying for a Repeal of the Insolvent Debtors' Act.

A Petition was presented from the Prebendary and Officers of St. Margaret's, Leicester, praying for an Alteration in the New Marriage Act.

A petition was presented from the Sheriff and inhabitants of Carmarthen, on the distressed state of Agriculture.

The Sheriffs of London presented the petition of the Lord Mayor and Common Council of London, praying for Reform in Parliament.

MR. ALDERMAN WOOD hoped the Right Hon. Gent. (Mr. Canning) would derive benefit from hearing the petition read. It was read accordingly; but

MR. SECRETARY CANNING disclaimed any particular benefit, for he had read the petition in the newspapers some weeks ago.

MR. CREEVEY maintained that the present was the proper time for entertaining the petition. Since 1700, the population of this country has increased from five millions to twelve millions, and no extension of the elective franchise had taken place; the county of Cornwall possessing 22 boroughs, and only 1,900 electors, elected more Members than one half of England. Manchester, Leeds, Birmingham, Sheffield, and other places of note, still remained unrepresented. An argument in favour of a Reform was, that it might be done by an exercise of the prerogative of the Crown. From the time of Henry VIII. to James I. 180 Members were added to the House of Commons. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth a Committee was appointed to inquire into the reason of so large an addition of boroughs. He thought we ought to have Returns made to that House of the number of electors and other charters upon which officers undertook to send Members to the House. He suggested this consideration to his Noble Friend near him, (Lord J. Russell) as he thought, with that information, a new ground for Reform might be laid.

MR. T. WILSON could not pledge himself to support every measure for retrenchment that was brought forward. As to Reform in Parliament, he pledged himself to his constituents to be in his place whenever that subject was agitated, to pay the utmost attention to the discussion, and to vote accordingly.

LORD J. RUSSELL, attending to the suggestion of his Hon. Friend (Mr. Creevey) said that, on the 24th of April, he should bring forward the question of Reform.

The petition was ordered to be printed.

SIR R. WILSON asked whether there was any likelihood of Ministers establishing a packet to Corunna.

MR. SECRETARY CANNING had not heard of any such intention.

In answer to a question from an Hon. Member, the CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER said, that no resolution had been come to as yet in respect of raising a monument to the memory of Dr. Jenner; and MR. SECRETARY PEEL observed, that it was intended that the funeral should have been a public one, but the wishes of Dr. Jenner were complied with, and he desired to be interred privately.

In going into a Committee of Supply, MR. CREEVEY called the attention of the House to the manner in which supplies were now voted, and formerly. In the reign of Elizabeth, in asking for a further supply, the Minister of that day said "Least the House should suppose that the Supply granted to her Majesty five years ago had been sufficient for her to do without needing to ask more, I do assure the House that the same was not sufficient. It was not enough, especially that for Ireland, by one half, and her Majesty has been obliged to furnish the rest out of her own pocket, shunning, as she does, loans as a pestilential canker." Mr. C. wished to know now what such persons would think, when they had one of these pestilential cankers to the extent of eight or nine hundred millions. At another time, she invented the House through her Minister, that she had done away with those hateful things, Purveyors; and the weight of subsidies is now one half what it was in the reign of Henry VIII. Therefore it is, she trusts that every one of her subjects will assist her out of his own purse, as it concerns his own estate. Would it not have been as well had the Right Hon. Gent. told them of some good done; that the salaries of public officers were restored to their former amount with the restoration of the currency? He meant this observation to apply to all, both high and low, Prince or any other person. We had the same right to demand the abolition of sinecures and purveyors, as Queen Elizabeth had thought proper to make; and which were now only maintained for the benefit of the privileged orders. In Elizabeth's time, supply was a sacred subject—it was raised for public purposes. The House of Commons had not then found the way of converting the supplies to their own emolument. Mr. C. contended, that the Minister, in asking Supplies, was in fact asking the Members to help themselves. Let them consult the Report relative to the Receivers-General appointments, where they would see that two or three Members were scrambling for the same place. Then as to any sympathy between the Crown and the people, there was no connexion whatever between them. The Crown was a grant annuitant on the Minister, not as in the case of Queen Elizabeth. They had occasionally the good fortune to hear that His Majesty was in good health, or to hear of a Royal excursion or so, but there their connection ended. He then adverted to the reign of James, when, he contended, was more anxious to raise supplies than his subjects were to grant them; and concluded with moving—"That it be an instruction to the said Committee, that they take into their consideration the grievances of the people."

MR. SECRETARY CANNING assured the House, that he opposed the motion, as it seemed to him to be unnecessary, and he was sure that there was not one who could take upon himself to say that the proposition with which the Hon. Gentleman had concluded, was submitted to them with a view to any practical measure. On this ground he must give it his negative. He should have offered no reply to the taunts of the Hon. Gentleman, but for the remarks which had been made respecting the conduct of an illustrious personage. He could hardly express what he felt on this subject in Parliamentary language; but after the sacrifice which had been made during the last Session of Parliament in that high quarter, at the instance of the illustrious personage himself, he did think that the doctrine which had now been urged, that no sacrifice had been made on the part of the Sovereign, would be adopted by that House with a very bad grace. This observation he had thought it right to make; and this was the only reply which he had to offer, to the speech of the Hon. Gent.

MR. W. LAMB considered the comparison made between the system now acted upon, and that which had been pursued in the time of Queen Elizabeth, had not been fairly put. The Hon. Gent. (Mr. Creevey) must surely remember that one of the most tyrannical and arbitrary proceedings that ever perhaps existed in a Government calling itself free, prevailed under the reign so much extolled: that the commodities of the people might, by law, be seized for the use of that Princess, and a price placed upon them, not by the owners, but by those who committed this legalised plunder.

MR. HUME said, when the present arrangement with the Crown was made, the Sovereign had pledged himself to hand over the produce of the Crown Lands to diminish the burthen of the people; but the whole income arising from the Crown Lands was swallowed up by pensions, and expended on objects in which they had no interest. The Crown was thus deprived of the means of supporting its own dignity, and was compelled to have recourse to Parliamentary aid, which aid was to be borne by the people. His Hon. Friend was right in his observations upon this subject, and he was only sorry that he did not determine to press his amendment to a division. He repeated that these lands were then swallowed up in useless offices.—(Hear, hear! from Mr. Wynn.) "Hear, hear! Yes," said Mr. Hume, "you may call hear, hear! but the people feel their pressures." It appeared that the extravagant expenditure which was applied to the collection of the revenue of the post of Ireland, amounting to no less than 84,000l. and which, according to the report of Mr. Richmond, one of the Commissioners of the Court of Inquiry, should not have amounted to more than 42,000l. Again, the extravagant allowances made to Commissioners of Stamps clearly proved that these situations were bestowed purely from interested motives, and not with the view of saving the public money.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER said, there was one point to which the Hon. Gentleman had referred, and on which he was utterly mistaken—the manner in which the Crown lands was levied. Now, by Act of Parliament, the Crown was the severest imaginable of all landlords, and it was so not from choice but by necessity; the Crown lands were, by Act of Parliament, to be let to the highest bidder. When leases expired an option might be given to the individual in possession to renew his lease, but if he declined to do so, the lands were invariably let to the highest bidder, and the fulfilment of the conditions strictly insisted upon, no regard being had to the pecuniary pressure of the times. It was perfectly true that the amount contributed during the last five or six years to the public revenue, was very small, but this was capable of receiving a satisfactory explanation. A few years ago it was thought advisable, with a view to the ultimate improvement of the revenue, to incur a great expense in making the improvements connected with the new street; in point of fact, that was the reason why, within the last few years, they had not been productive to the revenue.

MR. CREEVEY's instruction was then negatived.

In Committee the CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER called the attention of the House to the two acts of last year providing for the issue of Exchequer Bills, of which 17,500.000l. had been charged on the aids to be raised in 1823. He now called for a vote to discharge these, and to cover those for the service of the year 1822, and moved the following grants:—34,000,000l. to discharge Exchequer Bills, charged on the aids to be raised in 1823, and for the service of 1822. 144,150l. to pay off certain Exchequer Bills issued by the Commissioners for building Churches. The resolutions were agreed to.

TUESDAY.

Petitions from York, Shepton Mallett, Bedford, and Shrewsbury, praying for a repeal of the Insolvent Debtors' Act.

MR. ALD. WOOD asked, whether there was a new court to be established for the trial of cases under the Insolvent Debtors' Act. A house in Lincoln's-inn-fields, which had belonged to one of the Judges was taken for the purpose. He thought this an extravagant expenditure of the public money.

MR. HERRIES replied that particular circumstances rendered such an expenditure necessary; all the details should be laid before the House in due time.

LORD ALTHORP moved that a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into the present mode of collecting debts under the amount of 15l. in England and Wales, and to report thereon to the House.—Agreed to.

SIR JOHN NEWPORT, adverting to the notice of motion respecting the state of Ireland it would be better to postpone the consideration of the question until after the recess, in order that Members might better understand the state of Ireland.

MR. SECRETARY CANNING was sure the temper of the House and of the country was not such at present as to give the question a fair hearing, and therefore willingly joined in the request of the Rt. Hon. Bart.

MR. PLUNKETT said, a motion respecting the state of Ireland was in good hands, and when it was brought forward he should be prepared to give the fullest explanation possible upon all points relating to the conduct of his Majesty's Government there. His own feelings entirely coincided with the sentiments expressed by both his Right Hon. Friends, and he was quite sure that under the unfortunate circumstances in which Ireland was placed at present, it would be impossible that the question could be calmly and dispassionately discussed; he therefore postponed it till the 17th of April.

The order for a call of the House was made for the 17th of April.

MR. GOULBURN gave notice for a motion, on the 6th of April, on the subject of a commutation of Tithes in Ireland.

MR. GOULBURN moved for leave to bring in a Bill for the more speedy reduction of the officers, serjeants, corporals, and drummers of the staff of the militia of Ireland, not on actual duty. The House was aware that, by the original Acts of Parliament for raising the militia, a considerable difference existed in the constitution of the militia corps in England and Ireland. The Right Hon. Gentleman explained those differences, and added, that in the year 1817 it was the contemplation of the Irish Government to propose a reduction of the staff of the militia of that country. The Bill would effect a great reduction by discharging at once all the supernumeraries, and preventing new vacancies.

MR. HUME was anxious to know to what extent the contemplated reduction was to go. He thought a similar reduction ought to be made in the Staff of the Militia of England. He was quite satisfied with the reduction could have been made in both in the year 1819.

MR. GOULBURN, in answer to the question of the Hon. Member (Mr. Hume) stated, that the estimate on that head for last year amounted to about 130,760l. That sum was to be reduced by the operation of the proposed Bill to about 100,000l. making a saving of 30,000l.

COL. BAGWELL understood by what the Right Hon. Gentleman stated, that the reduction proposed by the Bill was confined to 30,000l. to the injury of 3 or 4000 persons, and that in the last Bill enacted in the 49th of his late Majesty, and continued in that would be a breach of faith, and was contrary to the Act of Parliament, which stated that the Staff was to be continued even event of peace.

MR. SECRETARY PEEL observed, that it had been said by the Gentleman that the proposed reduction was a breach of faith ought to be observed towards every individual, and more partic towards a military body. There was no breach of faith in the posed measure, and he saw no difficulty in effecting the red If there was violation of faith in it, the same was already England.

LORD PALMERSTON said, in reply to the question put by the Member (Mr. Hume) namely, whether a similar reduction take place in the English militia, that that reduction was already in 1819.—Leave was given.

The Bill was brought in and read a first time. Second reading day fortnight.

MR. GRENFELL, in compliance with a notice he had given, for accounts of the balances of the Public Money in the hands Bank of England, and also an account of the management of the Debt. When in 1815, he moved for an account of the balances were from eleven to twelve millions. By the accounts produced Session, they appeared to be reduced to 3,900,000l. But he was there any necessity for leaving so large a sum of the public in the hands of the Bank, without profit or protection? The ment of the public debt consisted in attending to the transfers and paying the half-yearly dividends. He admitted that attended properly to that business, and that nothing could conducted. What he complained of was that they were overpaid for the trouble they had. The annual payment to for the management of the debt was, 270,000l. as appeared by counts produced last year. He wished some change in partments to benefit the public.

MR. BARING said, the great grievance of which his Re (Mr. Grenfell) complained, were refuted by his own acknowl He meant with respect to the balances, which he (Mr. Gren were formerly from eleven to twelve millions, but were at pr duced to three or four millions. For his part he was desirous mittee should be appointed to see whether the balances of money in the Bank were larger than what the Minister had them at the renewal of their charter.

MR. MANNING, on the part of the Bank, denied that they an undue remuneration for the trouble which they were at naging the public debt. The rate at which the per centage management was paid, was fixed in express terms at the last re of the charter to the Bank. He had no difficulty in saying, would show that there was not a shadow of ground for the interfe of Government in the affairs of the Bank. At the same time was prepared to say, the Bank would have no indisposition to any arrangement which his Majesty's Government might propose.

MR. RICARDO was sure that, if the advantages enjoyed by the were thrown open to competition, the public would be enabled to the management of the debt administered on much better terms they now had with the Bank. He trusted the next time the came to be renewed, that Government would weigh the subject before they concluded a contract so obviously disadvantageous public.

MR. MABERLY said, that having advised the late Chancellor Exchequer to drive a hard bargain with the Bank, he had onl peat the suggestion to his successor. It was certainly most m that the Bank should continue to receive 7-8th per cent. on th dividend for their charges. It was his opinion that 100,000 might be saved by a due regard to economy in the management of debt, and for this reason he would support the motion for a Com to set the question at rest.

MR. HUME said, that in the contemplation of the charter being renewed, he would throw out a suggestion for the establish of a National Bank, by which 1,500,000l. a year would be saved public. He was aware that prejudices existed against the interfe of Government in managing the Debt; but where 60,000,000l. w be received yearly, as their notes would be always as good as Government might at any time avail itself of an advance of 40,000,000l. and thus the interest of 1,500,000l. accruing from the sociation of Exchequer Bills, would be entirely saved.

MR. JOHN MARTIN asked the Right Hon. Gentleman whether his intention to present an account of the amount of Unclaimed dends in the hands of the Bank. No account of these had been sented for the last eight years.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER said, that having no diate precedent before him, he was unable to say what course most proper for him to pursue.

MR. MARTIN then gave notice, that unless such an account was sented without delay, he should feel it his duty to move for it.

The motion was agreed to.

WEDNESDAY.

Petitions were presented from Worcester and Boston against the solvent Debtors' Act.

MR. BROWNLOW presented a Petition from certain inhabitants Ross, complaining of the establishment of an order of Jesuits land, and stating that a spirit of bigotry, superstition, and intolera pervaded the lower classes, which had increased; and it was attributable to the Jesuits that the rebellious disposition in the sou parts of Ireland was so manifest.

SIR H. PARNELL had never heard of such an order in Ireland, wished the Hon. Member to state in what part of the coun existed.

MR. BROWNLOW said he had received the Petition from some spectable inhabitants of Armagh, but he was not enabled to say the Jesuits resided.

MR. C. HUTCHINSON believed in his conscience that the assert the Petition was false, and objected to its being placed on the Jour

SIR J. NEWPORT was of a similar opinion.

MR. BROUGHAM thought the Petition ought to be received, bec disrespectful language was the only ground on which Petitions rejected. He observed upon some inaccuracies in the spelling Petition.

MR. BROWNLOW presented another Petition from Kinnearty, magh, to the same effect.

SIR H. PARNELL admitted that a school existed in Kildare, kept Jesuit.

MR. SPRING RICE said, an impression existed that, in Kildare, was an establishment kept by Jesuits; but he did not think it moral offence.—The Petitions were laid on the table.

MR. HUTCHINSON presented a Petition from Cork, complaining the new arrangement of the Salt Tax, and another complaining heavy postage on all English correspondence.—They were laid on table.

Mr. Calvert presented the Borough of Southwark Petition for Reform.—Sir R. Wilson supported it.

On the motion of Lord A. Hamilton, an Address was agreed to be presented to His Majesty for a return of all Royal Burghs.

Lord Normanby asked what steps had been taken in respect of the reduction of the office of one of the Postmaster's-General.

Mr. Secretary Peel thought the main object of the Address of this House had been answered, for no portion of the salary had been paid since the Address passed.

Mr. Hume alluding to the proceedings of the Commissioners for Military inquiry composed of the late General Oakes, General Drinkwater, Mr. Giles Templeman, and other respectable persons in civil and military offices. They had made several Reports, particularly with regard to the Ordnance, to which he intended to confine himself. They first stated the formation of the Board of Ordnance, which consisted of a Master-General, a Lieutenant-General, a Surveyor-General, a Clerk, a Storekeeper, and a Clerk of Deliveries, in all six persons. The salaries had been considered by the Commissioners to have been too much increased. That of the Master-General had been increased from 1500l. to 3235l.; that of the Lieutenant-General from 1100l. to 2011.; that of the Surveyor-General from 800l. to 1261l.; that of the Clerk from 600l. to 1140l.; that of the Storekeeper from 500l. to 1520l.; and that of the Clerk of the Deliveries from 500l. to 1045l. The Surveyor and Storekeeper's offices were considered by the Commissioners as sinecures. As to the Lieut.-General and Master-General's, the result of an examination was, that in the absence of the Master-General the Lieut.-General took his place, and kept an account of the warrants. An examination of Lords Chatham and Moira took place as to the utility of a Lieut.-General. Lord Moira said, "I apprehend the office was originally instituted in contemplation of the Master-General, who is usually an Officer of high military rank, being sent abroad in the command of an army. In that case the Lieut.-General would certainly take the management of the department in his place. Beyond this, I am not aware of any duties he can have beyond those of a Member of the Board." The Commissioners upon this evidence, report to the House to the same effect. In the same way the Clerks were thought useless, as they could only be required in case of the absence of the Master-General, and in the absence of the Master-General at Walcheren, the whole duty was done by the Under Secretary. The Commissioners therefore said:—"We think that these Clerks must be unnecessary, and ought to be dismissed especially as it is not likely the absence of a Master-General would be of long continuance. We are also of opinion, that a Lieutenant General cannot be essential to the constitution of the Board, especially if the Master-General have not the duties of the appointments to attend to." The Commissioners recommended also that the Ordnance Department should be united under one distinct commission, in the manner of the Treasury and the Admiralty, with the title of Commissioners, and the Master General at the head, and the duties exactly of the same nature. The complaint he had to make was, that scarcely any one recommendation of the Commissioners had been attended to. The question for the House was, whether they thought it necessary that this Board in a time of peace should have five officers for conducting the affairs of such a small department, when they considered that four were sufficient to conduct the affairs of the Navy. The House, he trusted, would support him in endeavouring to make a stand against wasteful expenditure, in the instance of what he considered to be the most expensive of the public departments, Ireland always excepted. The Report said the Secretary ought to have no more than 800l. a year, whereas Mr. Crew had 1,500l. a year, according to the returns last year, whilst his house cost the country 15,000l. building. There was no department in the state requiring more looking after than the Ordnance, which was convinced. In 1796 the whole department cost 18,726l. being in time of war; but in 1821, the sixth year of peace, it cost 63,279l. being an increase of 47,000l. upon the two offices of the Tower and Pall-mall only. The Hon. Member concluded by moving "That as the Commissioners for Military Inquiry have reported that the appointment of Lieutenant-General of the Ordnance is not essential to the constitution of the Board in time of war, this House is of opinion that the recent appointment of Lord Beresford in time of peace, is inconsistent with the recommendations of the said Report, at variance with the professions of economy lately delivered from the Throne, and contrary to the interests of the country, which in its present state requires that economy in the state which will retrench every thing not absolutely necessary to the country."

The question having been put from the Chair, Mr. R. Ward charged the Hon. Member with having put words into the mouths of the Commissioners for Military Inquiry which they never used, and with having attributed to them, in the paper which he had actually put into the hands of the Chair, sentiments which were the very reverse, (as coming from them). The Hon. Member made the say, in the body of his motion, that the appointment of a Lieutenant-General of Ordnance was unnecessary in time of war.

Mr. Hume here attempted to address the Chair, but was called to order by the House.

Mr. R. Ward then proceeded. He was prepared to shew that the Hon. Member had completely misrepresented the Commissioners, that the Commissioners were wrong in their Report, and that it was impossible to attend to their recommendations. He complained that the Hon. Member had read garbled extracts from the Report. Mr. Ward then referred to the Report, to shew that the Hon. Member had so done. He had read thus—"It appears from the evidence laid before us, that the appointment of Lieut.-General is not essential to the constitution of this department." But the Hon. Member had not the honesty to read what followed, for the Report went on to say, "especially if it be understood that the attention of the Master-General be not withdrawn to the duties of other appointments." This expression, it was obvious, altered the whole; because for the Report to go along with the Hon. Member, the office of Master-General must be entirely new cast. But the Report still went on to say, that "if that should not take place, we have nothing to offer on the appointment of Lieut.-General." The Report here referred to the recommendation, that the Master-General should have no other appointments of a former Report. But this was suppressed, (he ought to say omitted), and he thought he was entitled to express a little surprise, that a man of such laborious research, and of such honesty, should have omitted a second time to put the House in possession of this very essential remainder part of the Report. The Commissioners had themselves not understood Lord Moira, when they gave it as his opinion that the utility of the Lieutenant-General was contingent on the absence or illness of the Master-General. Neither were they right in attributing to Lord Chatham the same opinion "in a great measure." Directly the reverse was the fact. Lord Moira's evidence went to say, that he had no other business but as a Member of the Board, therefore, for any thing the Commissioners had stated, he might have other great important business attached to his appointment. Independently of what the Lieutenant-General was instructed to do in the absence of the Master-General, he had several specific duties extending over the military questions upon which, in the diversity of business that came under the cognizance of the Board, that officer was eminently useful. He did not know whether the House would expect that he should follow the Hon. Member for Aberdeen through all his various topics and garbled statements. He did not wish to use harsh expressions towards the Hon. Member, nor do him the injustice to attribute his mistakes to him as designed; but having only two years ago fought a pitched battle with the Hon. Gentleman on precisely the same ground, he did not think it was altogether requisite he should again enter into the same field of discussion. On that occasion, the Hon. Member, as was customary with him, had made his attack upon him of nearly two hours' duration, without giving any previous notice of his intention, or without his (Mr. W.) having any documents in his possession, or a figure in his pocket, and yet he had satisfied the House of the integrity of his department. But it was always in this sort of way that the Hon. Member acted, when he purposed taking such a course. He had again resorted to his favourite practice of comparing the present establishments with those of 1792, and in the present case with his usual pertinence and fairness. Mr. W. contended, that the increased business of the Ordnance department was such that the officers were overwhelmed with it. If the whole system had been, as so frequently declared by the Hon. Member, corrupt, he would have come down to that House and demolished them long since by piecemeal, whereas he had been foiled in every attempt, either in generals or in particulars. He put it to the Hon. Gent. if no change had taken place since the date of that Report? and if so, how could it apply to the present case? The Hon. Gentleman had surely not forgotten what was his own constant cry last year? He had never ceased to tell the House to put this department and that department upon the Ordnance. The Ordnance Board, he said, can do more. His prayer was granted—the Commissariat and Barrack Departments were thrown into the Scale; and what then? Why the Hon. Member came forward and said, "Now diminish their strength." It was really alarming to see with what unrelenting steps the Hon. Gentleman followed up his game. Had they saved nothing by this consolidation of those two Departments? It was at least 4,500l. a year saved by this arrangement; and now the Hon. Member had the grace to come forward to take 1500l. a year from them. An English House of Commons would not endure this. Mr. W. then repeated his statement of the increase of business, and said, if the Hon. Member for Aberdeen, or any other Gentleman, would do all this for honour, or nothing, with the reduction of ten per cent. in their salaries, he should be most happy to give him every facility in his power. In conclusion, he did not think it necessary to move the previous question upon the motion before the House—he thought he had shewn sufficient reasons to induce them to reject it altogether.

Mr. Williams defended his Hon. Friend, who had founded his motion upon the recommendation of the Commissioners of Military Inquiry; and, if those Commissioners had been inadequate, others should have been appointed in their stead.

Mr. Secretary Canning said, the Hon. Gentleman had brought forward his charges with every aggravation. Not only had he said that it was against the recommendation of the Commissioners of Military Inquiry—described the office as useless—attacked the general policy of the establishment—the individual to whom it had been given, and the personal motives for which it had been given. He had not only stigmatized it for the most corrupt principles, and the basest motives—he had stigmatized the Nobleman on whom the office had been conferred, as wholly unworthy. The charge had gone forth to the world, holding up this appointment as a public malversation and as private corruption; and while that stood uncontradicted, the Noble Lord on whom the office had been conferred, and the Government which had conferred it on him, would labour under that charge—a charge which, after the most minute inquiry, was, he would say, utterly false. Mr. C. then stated as to the corrupt influence imputed by the Hon. Member. There was not in that statement a shadow of truth; for if corrupt influence had operated in this case, never did corrupt influence operate by so strange means. The office was filled up with hesitation, and after it had been vacant for four months, as if there had been a reluctance between this corruption and conscience. The Duke of Wellington had recommended three of his companions in arms, as uncertain whether they would accept of the office. The Earl of Hopeton had refused, and after him Lord Hill, and it was only after the refusal of both that Lord Beresford had been appointed. The letter written by the Duke to Lord Hopeton was as follows:—"My dear Hopeton—You are aware of the death of Lieut.-General Oakes, late Lieutenant-General of the Ordnance, and it will be a great satisfaction to me to recommend you to the King to fill that office. I know that it will be satisfactory to His Majesty." [Here Mr. Canning observed, the Duke of Wellington having mentioned his Lordship to the King, before his departure for Vienna.]—"The office is worth about 1,500l. per annum, but the business is constant, and I am afraid will render necessary your residence in London during a great period of the year, probably the whole of it."—In answer to this letter, his Lordship addressed one to the Duke of Wellington, dated October 21, 1822, in which, after expressing his thanks for the offer of the deference that had been shown him, his Lordship says:—"Under all circumstances, however, I feel that I had better decline the offer. In the first place, I never have been accustomed to office, and I fear I should but ill perform the business which would be required of me. Secondly, the constant residence in town would not only be unpleasant to me, but I really think the confinement, which I have never been used to, would be very injurious to my health."—Such was the sinecure which had been offered to Lord Hopeton, who had undergone the fatigues, the hardships, and the dangers of so many campaigns, he had declined to accept it, because of the hardship of the case—because the constant occupation would be too severe for him, inured as he was to all the toils of the field, and because it would be injurious to his health. This was the sinecure, of the case of which the Hon. Gentleman had taken so just an estimate? this was the office to which, because there were no duties to perform, Lord Beresford has been appointed from corrupt motives, and on account of family connexions. Then what was the House to think of this false, foul, deliberate, and mischievous calumny, on the best and bravest blood in the land? Personal merit, public character, tried integrity, long years of faithful service in the path of honour and renown, must all be sacrificed, and trampled on, and insulted, to pave the way to the success of a motion like this. The effect of this motion being carried would be, that a malignant, false, and scandalous imputation, would be cast on all the parties concerned. The Government of the country was accused, the Duke of Wellington was accused, and the Noble Lord was accused, of being parties to the most corrupt and disgraceful transactions. But he was confident that as they were now put upon their trial in the eyes of the whole nation, they would to the confusion of their accuser, be acquitted by the unanimous verdict of that country.

Mr. Hume replied, he was not one to be worked into a passion like the Right Hon. Gentleman. Flourishing was not his forte. The epithets "foul and malignant calumny" had been applied to his observations; and it had been stated that he had on a former night objected to the appointment on the ground of the personal demerit of the Noble Lord appointed. This was a total misrepresentation; and the imputation was altogether false and a wilful misrepresentation. That Right Hon. Gentleman might, to serve his purpose, flourish about a Master General of the Ordnance obtaining the victory of Blenheim; but he would tell him of another Master General who headed the disastrous expedition to Walcheren. "Now, let him," said he, "take his change out of that." He would take upon himself to say that there was no duty for the Lieutenant General of the Ordnance to perform while the Master General was present. His motion did not go to call on the Government to dismiss the Duke of Wellington, if he were more efficient than any other officer; but it called on them to reduce the public expenditure by removing those whose services might be dispensed with.

Mr. M'Donald suggested to the Hon. Member to withdraw his motion, and move for a Committee of Inquiry.

Mr. Secretary Canning objected to such a course of proceeding.

Mr. M'Donald moved, as an amendment, that a committee should be appointed to inquire into the duties of the Lieutenant-General of the Ordnance.

The amendment was negatived, and the House then divided on the original motion, when the numbers were as follows:—Ayes, 73—Noes, 200.—Majority 127.

THURSDAY.

Mr. Brown, the Warden of the Fleet Prison, presented at the Bar an account of the number of prisoners confined for debt in that prison.

Petitions were presented from Leominster, Beverley, Lancaster, Huddersfield, Wisbeach, Carmarthen, and Hereford, against the Insolvent Debtors' Act.

Mr. H. Davis presented a petition from the Clergy of Bristol, against the Marriage Act; and a petition from the Inhabitants of St. Stephen's, Bristol, praying for the repeal of the House and Window Tax.

Petitions were presented from Linton, in Cambridgeshire, and from Renfrewshire, complaining of agricultural distress.

Mr. Brougham asked whether the report that an armed squadron had sailed from Brest, with sealed orders, was true.

Sir George Clerk replied in the negative.

The petition of the City of London, relative to the imperfect state of London Bridge, and the removal of the Bridge water-works, was referred to a Committee.

Lord A. Hamilton asked if Ministers had any objection to his submitting a motion on the detention of Mr. Bowring by the French Government.

Mr. Secretary Canning saw no political inexpediency in it in point of time.

Lord John Russell moved, that a Committee be appointed to obtain returns relative to the Charters, and the number of voters in each borough sending Members to Parliament, throughout the empire. The Noble Lord contended, that precedents furnished grounds for not opposing his motion, nor could he see that the returns could not be easily obtained. If the Right Hon. Gents. opposite opposed his motion, they must admit that the people were not entitled to know who were their constituents—they must abandon the great principle upon which they had hitherto opposed Reform; (but indeed the return was in circulation already, in a less authentic shape.) It was not an inquiry into the number or the right of voters which could injure the character of that House—it was the discovery of practices of a different nature—he meant such a case as lately occurred in a borough in Cornwall, where a meeting of the voters took place, and a letter was read from a Noble Lord, from a Peer of the realm, in which he declined to be any longer patron of the borough. The communication was occasioned by the Noble Lord's disgust at the frequent applications made for his interest. Well, after the reading of this letter, a Member of this House proceeded to make a motion for the office of patron to another Noble Lord; but who had not a foot of property within 500 miles of the place, and who could not be supposed to have any very lively interest in it. These things were very notorious, and these were the things to which public reprobation should belong. He trusted that all independent Members, whether the friends or the opponents of reform, would assist him in carrying the motions for returns, in order to come to the fair consideration of the ultimate question of reform. Lord Normanby seconded the motion.

Mr. Secretary Canning opposed the motion. So far from its being a matter of course, it involved a principle the most arbitrary and tyrannical. In many towns there were no records. With regard to those, when contested elections had taken place, and the rights of voters were examined into before the House, the motion was altogether nugatory, as they had them already on the Journals. It was the first time since James the Second that a proposition so unjust was made, as that of calling for the Charters of Boroughs and examining their rights of voting. It would be as great a stretch of power as to call for the production of their title-deeds. For their Charter not only contained their civil rights, but the deeds of property and estates. Would the House sanction a call upon every Corporation to open all the secrets of their Charters and their property to the gaze of the public, and allow every poor or litigious attorney to find flaws in their Charters? His (Mr. C's) opposition to Reform was founded on this principle, that the House of Commons was adequate to the business of the country according to the spirit of the Constitution, and it should remain as it was. He was at a loss to know in what way the Committee were to judge of the rights of voters. Was the right to be taken abstracted from the practice, or was the practice to be inferred from the last general election? The Noble Lord, by judging of his former motions, meant to preserve half the representations of those degraded boroughs—to retain the less objectionable and discard the more ignoble parts. He opposed the motion, because it would prejudice the Noble Lord's future motion, and because there were no means of complying with it.

Mr. Abercrombie supported the motion, contending that the production of the returns would have the most beneficial effect on the cause of Reform.

Mr. Secretary Peel observed, that if the information required through the Committee were correct in the abstract though inaccurate in parts, and it was impossible it could be correct, how far would it assist the Noble Lord? If again, in the same supposition, the Noble Lord purposed to retain any part of the borough representation, was it prudent thus by the proposed inquiry to expose their defects? He (Mr. Peel) would be the first to oppose any preliminary step that was likely to prejudice the great question of Parliamentary Reform, and it was because the present was, in his opinion, of that character, that he came forward to enter his protest.

Mr. Calcraft had suggested to the Noble Lord the present motion. The population of the country had increased from five to twelve millions; while the elective franchise was become more limited. The great towns, such as Manchester, Leeds, Birmingham, &c. the strength of the nation were without a Representative in Parliament, while the degraded boroughs of Cornwall returned half as many Members to that House as all the counties in England put together. He thought it strange that while Parliament could inspect on the table of the House a return of the whole mass of the population of the kingdom, there was no account of the number of voters in the boroughs. He was of opinion, that the House had a right to call for a return of those different charters, by which different Kings, in different ages, conferred the elective franchise. He thought the House was as much entitled to such a return as to a return of the population of the country; nor did he think there was more difficulty in the former than in the latter. By an Act passed in the first year of Henry the Fifth, it was enacted, that no burgess should dare to vote for a Member of Parliament for any borough or small town, unless the said burgess was a registered burgess as resident within the same. So the law then stood; and in the 13th year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, a Bill was brought into Parliament to take away the validity of that ancient law. The Bill was not allowed to pass the Committee, and the law of Henry the Fifth continued in force down to the 14th of the late King George the Third. The Parliament, by permitting strangers to vote at elections for boroughs, then brought the elective franchise to market. In those times letters were not sent as the Duke in former times did send, but Peers and Ministers go in person to the place of election. He might instance the case of the philosophical Member for Bodmin, who was accompanied down, and put into possession by a Peer of the realm. The point in modern times was, who were the vendors, not who the electors.—Lord Milton supported the motion.

The House divided—For the motion, 90—Against it, 128—Majority against it, 38.

The Annual Indemnity and the American Trade Bills were passed.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

Paris, Feb. 16.—Madame the Duchess of Angouleme has sustained a great loss in the death of her lady of honour, the Duchess de Sarente, who had been the inseparable companion of the daughter of Louis XVI. in all her adversities.

The King has been pleased to commute the punishment of Baudrillet and Duret, sentenced to death at the assize of Orleans for having been implicated in the second conspiracy of Saumur, into 20 years' imprisonment. They are the accomplices of Berton.

The Russian Ambassador, M. Pozzo di Borgo, had a long conference on Friday with Count Lagarde, our Ex-minister at Madrid. Yesterday evening he despatched an extraordinary courier to St. Petersburgh.

The Constitutionalists have taken Irati, without firing a shot. Torijos fortifies Roncesvalles, for the defence of Pampeluna against the expected march of the Duke of Angouleme.

Letters from Paris state, that the Duke d'Angouleme's departure for the army has been postponed.—The French Chambers are about to discuss the Budget: the Minister requires a loan.—A petition for peace has been prepared at Havre, and signed by a great number of the merchants of that place.

Letters from Puycerda, dated the 8th of February, announce, that on the morning of the 3d, the women and children who had escaped the massacre of the night preceding, were brought back to Seo. All the soldiers were made prisoners. The number of dead, including women and children, is about 100.—Mina, on visiting the forts, found but little ammunition therein; the powder magazines were all empty. He is now busied in provisioning the fortress; grain of every kind has been sent in from all sides.—P. S. We have just learned that Mina, with all his Staff, and a part of his army, has quitted the frontier to proceed to Barcelona.

From Toulouse we learn, that Don Antonio Maragnon, well known as the celebrated Trappiste, had taken out his passport on the 11th, for Bayonne, whence he is to proceed to Navarre.—Journal des Debats.

Palisadoes are placing round Madrid, and redoubts are constructed in the environs. All persons in the service of the Government work at these fortifications, which are directed by the Fifteen Generals commanding the Fifteen Districts of Madrid. Ballesteros has been deprived of the Commandership-in-Chief and although he asked it, he has not been reinstated in the Council of State. A change of Ministers is spoken of. Government, having become sensible of the necessity of putting an end to the proceedings of the Landaburian Club, has given indirect orders to close it; in consequence of which no meeting has been held since the 3d.—It is stated that Marshal the Duke of Treviso is to command a corps to be called the Army of Catalonia.—Marshal the Duke of Conegliano is to take the Commandership-in-Chief of the army destined to enter Catalonia. The departure of the Marquis de Lauriston, Minister of the Royal Household, will not take place.—Quotidienne.

Lisbon, Feb. 4.—The expedition for Bahia is still in the river. General Linz de Rego is appointed to the command. He has applied to the Government for an addition of 4000 men, money, a line of battle ship, and two frigates; but these requests cannot be granted, at least not without delaying the expedition. The news from the Brazils state, that Bahia was closely pressed by 6000 Brazilian troops, and that there was a great want of provisions and of money; but the inhabitants, especially the Europeans, were animated with the greatest attachment to the Constitution.—We have been visited by a tremendous storm of wind and rain. The small craft in the river suffered considerably, and three large vessels are said to have been lost, one of them a Swede. There have been numerous wrecks on this coast. A French corvette of war, (said to be the Caroline) from Rochfort to Martinique, with 400 soldiers; three Portuguese, two English, and an American, have been lost near this city, and the whole coast is strewed with wreck and dead bodies.

By the Leeward Islands mail, letters from St. Thomas's to the 19th ult. state the contest on the Spanish Main to be still continuing, and the chief advantage to be on the side of the Royalists. Morales had acquired possession of the greater part of the province of Coro, but had repaired to Maracaibo, in consequence of having heard of the march of Colonel Montilla from Santa Martha, with 3,000 men, to attack him in that position. Morales is said to have strengthened himself by the accession of natives who had deserted from the Independents.—A dreadful hurricane occurred at La Guayra on the 21st of December, by which 18 vessels, the whole number then in the harbour, were driven on shore and destroyed.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 23.

ON FRIDAY Mr. ROBINSON made his promised Exposé of the state of the revenue to the House of Commons, and we believe it will be admitted that a speech more luminous, and at the same time so satisfactory, has not been heard for many years within the walls of Parliament.

We confess we are at a loss to discover what ground of complaint will now be taken up by those who for years have been prognosticating the downfall of the Country, after the heart-cheering, (triumphant, we will call it,) statement of our new CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER.

Our readers will, we are sure, join with us in our feelings of exultation when they perceive, by a reference to the Right Hon. Gentleman's speech, that there will be a Surplus of Revenue in 1822 of upwards of Seven Millions—five millions, of course, are applicable to the SINKING FUND, and the remainder is to be REMITTED to the COUNTRY!!!

The Window Tax is to be reduced by one half, duties on a certain class of Male Servants, and certain classes of Horses and Carts to be repealed: and, with respect to IRELAND—the NEGLECTED, ILL-USED IRELAND,—ALL THE ASSESSED TAXES of that country are to be TAKEN OFF!

The particulars of this most gratifying statement will be found under the head of our Parliamentary Debates; but whatever sophistry may be used—whatever blusterings may be made by those who never can be satisfied,—the fact of the application of the Surplus of the Revenue to the Reduction of the Debt is conclusive; and those who are in the habit of disbelieving the Government, must now admit the benefits proclaimed by Mr. ROBINSON to be any thing but "visionary."

It appears that Mr. MABERLY, not being able consistently with the rules of the House to move a set of resolutions of his own, did the House the favour to read them:—if we have room they may, perhaps, appear in our reports of proceedings; but, if not, the loss will not be irremediable, as they very much resemble those which have appeared in the papers, collected occasionally from County meetings and Borough assemblies.

Mr. GREY BENNETT appears, by the expression of his views of the respective claims of Debtor and Creditor, to have called down the reprobation of Lord MILTON, who, by the many apologies he made for his long absence, and his uncertainty as to who were his friends and who his opponents, seemed somewhat doubtful as to what he should do in the business. We rejoice to find even Lord MILTON, advocating with all his power, the observance of the just claims of the public creditor, a violation of which could only be proposed by those who are as bare of principle as of property.

We are glad to say that Mr. HUME too, stood forward in opposition to such a system—glad—not because Mr. HUME'S opinion or advocacy, one way or another, can have the slightest effect, but because when Mr. HUME can be brought to an expression of favourable feelings towards Government, it must be effected by some wonderfully strong excitement—we rejoice that HUME appears to have made the stand he did against innovation; not, as we said before, because we think that would aid the cause of Justice—but because the ignorant worshippers of the idol will perceive that radical principles may be carried too far, even for their leaders, and that the destruction of public credit, is a measure too desperate, even for Mr. JOSEPH HUME.

SIR ROBERT WILSON, as apposite to a financial discussion, advocated the repeal of the six Acts—What are the six Acts to which he alludes?—is he aware of the condition of the six Acts?—does he know how many are actually in existence?

With these little qualifications, Mr. ROBINSON'S speech and statement were received with the approbation of all parties. We lament to observe, that indisposition was the result of his great exertions upon the occasion; but whatever temporary inconvenience he may personally have encountered, he will be amply repaid by the extraordinary sensation his announcement has created, and the contemplation of these benefits which the measures about to be adopted will confer upon the general country.

THE Bo[illegible] question, it seems, is postponed!—and that on the motion of SIR JOHN NEWPORT, who, on the preceding day, we were told, was dying on the road between Hollyhead and London! What add to the difficulty of solving this popish miracle, and of clearly comprehending THE POLICY of this sudden change, which, by the bye, is necessarily attended with considerable inconvenience to many Members of the House, is, that SIR JOHN professes, according to the reports in the papers, to have arrived in London with a perfect conviction of the propriety of the time fixed for bringing forward the question: but that this sudden change of mind, in himself and Mr. PLUNKETT, was occasioned by finding that the state of Ireland is, at this moment, so little understood in "ALL its bearings and relations," that it would not be dealing fairly by the subject if it were to be brought under discussion until an opportunity be afforded to Members to make themselves more intimately acquainted with it.

Upon a mere superficial view of the case, as it stands in his report, of SIR JOHN'S request to his fellow traveller and confrère, Mr. PLUNKETT, to postpone his motion and his reasons for doing so, it appears very much like postponing the trial of a delinquent, because some more unequivocal or daring outrage has been committed by him, pendente lite; but on going a little deeper into the subject we find only a fresh instance of that covert policy, which, in every stage and every advance of this momentous question, has marked the conduct and measures of its supporters—a policy which partakes, in no small degree, of the spirit which has ever influenced the councils, and directed the intrigues of the Papal Church.

Do these gentlemen mean to say, that all the MASSACRES, BURNINGS, and RAPES, which have for a year past soiled the pages of our public papers, are FORGED? Do they mean to imply that the exposure of a conspiracy, and the establishment of committees of assassination for THE EXTERMINATION OF THE WHOLE PROTESTANT POPULATION, made in open court by MR. PLUNKETT himself, are chimeras or phantoms raised on the seas which divide England from Ireland? Do they require time to enable Members of Parliament, or the people of England, to ascertain whether it be true or not that MR. PLUNKETT, as Attorney General, has prosecuted the same persons, and failing to substantiate their guilt, under TWO SEVERAL FORMS OF LEGAL PROCESS, has pledged himself to make the experiment of a THIRD?

Have SIR JOHN NEWPORT and his official friend any documents to disprove and overthrow these facts? If so, why is there a moment's delay in satisfying their fellow-countrymen on this side the water of the illusion under which they labour—and of the impositions which have been practised upon their credulity? If not, if they shrink from this duty, we have a right to infer—and must inevitably infer, that it is not the IGNORANCE, but the KNOWLEDGE the people of this country, as well as Members of Parliament, possess of what HAS BEEN and STILL IS GOING FORWARD in Ireland, which has rendered this postponement EXPEDIENT!

It is a very curious fact, and must not be passed over upon the present occasion without due attention, that whenever the prospect of success in Parliament has been held out to the Roman Catholics of Ireland, their zeal has outstripped their discretion, and occasioned some intemperate anticipation of the power they are so eager to possess. The King's visit to Ireland, which in his paternal affection he surrounded with every thing that could tend to conciliate and heal the heart-burnings and jealousies of that unhappy country, was sedulously construed by the priests to the lower orders of the people, as the first step towards what they call "Catholic Emancipation."

The appointment of the MARQUESS WELLESLEY was hailed as the consummation of this long and eagerly looked-for event. On the first occasion the most violent and intemperate libels were issued from the pulpits and the press against the Protestants—prophecies revived and circulated, promising the complete victory of the Romish Church over the heretical Church of England and Ireland, in every quarter of the country. FRIAR HAYES, in the course of one year after HIS MAJESTY'S visit, disseminated no less than THIRTY THOUSAND copies of things which he calls sermons—but which are neither more nor less than bulls and anathemas against all who have heretically lost their title to GOD'S favour by leaving the Church of Rome. We need only point to the state of Ireland to shew the effect produced by this premature zeal; and by an inference too obvious to need a word to aid it—to the inevitable result of granting that power to them who answer by thousands to the nod of a priest—which is alone necessary to bring into activity all the hatred and abhorrence which has been generated in their minds against a PROTESTANT GOVERNMENT.

We cannot now enter into all the intrigues and outrageous proceedings which took place under this same FRIAR HAYES, PETER GANDOLFY, and BISHOP POYNTER, after the question had been lost in the House of Lords by only FOUR VOICES; so violent and outrageous indeed, that a Jesuitical manœuvre was necessary to throw off the odium which necessarily began to attach itself to the whole ROMAN CATHOLIC BODY. A Committee of the Roman Catholic Board was called in December, 1817, purposely to prepare a disavowal of the bigotted and intolerant doctrines contained in the Rhemish notes—(RE-PUBLISHED, UNDER the sanction of the Irish Roman Catholic HIERARCHY)—but the preparation was all—we never heard of any further proceedings; and the only consequence of this temporary act of policy was, that in the following year, "THE ROMAN CATHOLIC QUESTION" was, by a tacit understanding between the ROMANISTS and their PARLIAMENTARY ADVOCATES—NOT BROUGHT FORWARD IN PARLIAMENT!!!

We have seen what has been done NOW; and, if we are not blind, infatuated, and lost to every perception of what is due to our country, we cannot but be assured that THAT CAUSE must be bad, which is permitted to be viewed only in partial lights, and under times and circumstances to be chosen by its especial and partial advocates. ARCHIMEDES wanted only a resting-place for his FULCRUM; and a single landing-place on the TERRA FIRMA of the Constitution, is all that is required to raise the catapult destined to batter down her bulwarks.

We enter into no nice disquisitions respecting the policy of this or that measure, for the tranquillization of Ireland. These are details which belong to the Statesman, and are to be discussed in Cabinets. But the question of granting POLITICAL POWER to men who have constantly abused it—to share the powers of Government with persons whose BIGOTTED HATRED and DETESTATION of it cannot be suppressed, even whilst it seeks so important a boon at its hands, comes under the head of national questions, on which the sense of the PEOPLE—we mean not the rabble—is not only capable of forming a correct judgment, but which the VOICE OF THE PEOPLE must ultimately decide.

If any thing were wanting to add to the conviction of guarding against a single advance further on the road of concession, the present impolitic conduct of the Irish Government might be made to speak volumes. We have not now time or space to enter upon the subject fully; but the PERSECUTIONS which are tending to stain the page of our history, and which are still carrying on under the influence of ROMAN CATHOLIC COUNCILS in that country, sufficiently evince THE spirit with which even the momentary possession of power is directed.

We have the highest veneration and respect for the MARQUESS WELLESLEY—his past services demand it at our hands; but we tremble at the consequences of his remaining and unequivocally avow our opinion, that HE OUGHT TO BE RECALLED. With respect to MR PLUNKETT, he must answer for himself before a British Parliament, and Heaven send him "a good deliverance."

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW.

The following passage, which occurs at p. 202 of the last number of this work, we shall take leave to insert for the edification of our readers:—

"As the nation is the chief arbiter between the contending [illegible] the newspapers are necessarily their principal weapons. Each [illegible] itself with as many as it can obtain, and they find little difficulty in dividing the great mass of these papers between them. If the publishers prints are not established by the heads or the furious adherents of parties for party purposes, they are as much articles of trade as [illegible] and tobacco. No literary fame can be drawn from them worth consider[illegible]ing, and it is scarcely in the nature of things that any individual will emphay his time and fortune in a pursuit from motives of patriotism, regardless of honour and profit. While newspapers which advocate the interests of parties to the injury of those of the nation, are sure of the immediate patronage of these parties and their supporters, one which advocates the interests of the nation, and attacks indiscriminately Whigs and Tories, when their acts militate against these interests, has the certainty of sinking a large fortune before it can hope for a single sale to cover its expences. Parties thus possess what amounts to nearly a monopoly of the newspapers. To call the boasted Press of England, so far as the public prints are concerned, free and independent, is even ludicrously false. It is bound to the car of party by chains stronger than those of iron, and its occupation is to do every thing but honour and honesty shrink from."

"With respect to the fame to be derived from newspaper writing, we suppose few persons ever expected covetable fame from 'the pursuit.'" And in so far do we agree with the Reviewer, but when he carries his attack upon the public press to the extent of saying that freedom and independence are incompatible with the conduct of a Public Journal, we most unequivocally declare that he says, that which is not the truth.

In the teeth of the QUARTERLY REVIEW, its aristocratic supporters, and its accredited writers, we—WE, ourselves, repel the unworthy insinuation—it is humorous enough to see the Quarterly Review denouncing, as neither free nor independent, men who advocate in the most decided manner, any one particular system—but though we certainly do not pretend to know the relative difference between the "measure of fame" derivable by the conductors of a periodical work appearing four times in the course of the year, and that, due to those, of one, which appears four times in the course of every month, and though we most certainly do not by any means, intend to aspire to a comparison of ourselves with the writers of the QUARTERLY REVIEW in genius or talent—we DO aspire to that which the QUARTERLY REVIEW would deny to all periodical writers (except themselves, we presume)—perfect FREEDOM and INDEPENDENCE.

If the QUARTERLY REVIEW have the aid of some persons whose names are not unfrequently coupled with it; and if its politics have that extraordinary influence and insight into "great and grave matters," which is (at least by others) attributed to them, the QUARTERLY REVIEWERS must have known, that from the time this paper was established to the present moment, it has never received one line of communication—one atom of support—not even to the extent of a single advertisement from GOVERNMENT; that, neither Courtier nor Minister breathing, has power to cause the insertion of a single line in our columns—to prevent the admission of what we choose to publish. In short, Reviewers, if they know any thing, must know that we are AS AIR; and that however miraculous such a fact may appear, the SYNOD of Albemarle-street, we care as little for TORY as WHIG, except upon principle—that we are guided by principle and feeling alone, and that WE HAVE embarked and DID embark at a moment when the crisis was at hand, and when those who perhaps might better have done it, slumbered, or at most looked on—"BOTH TIME AND FORTUNE IN THE PURSUIT, FROM "MOTIVES OF PATRIOTISM, REGARDLESS OF HONOUR AND "PROFIT."

The result has been satisfactory in the extreme—perfect success has crowned the effort; and incredulous as the high-toned Quarterly sneerers at the Newspapers may choose to feel, we can tell them that the pleasure of our success—the delight of our success has been derived from the conviction, that it was consequent upon our own exertions in the cause of our KING and COUNTRY, and that the very support we have received from the PEOPLE, was the strongest proof of the actual good we had done in advocating principles which the activity of one party, and the blameable[illegible]gour of the other, had tended to bring into distaste and disrepute. We are TORIES at heart—we love the KING and the CONSTITUTION in CHURCH and STATE. With these politics, we say it is ample cause for exultation (and we should think, ample answer to the QUARTERLY REVIEW) to know, that we owe our support to THE PEOPLE ALONE.

We cannot but add to this article, a note which appears in the QUARTERLY, appended to the passage we have quoted above:

"The very few public journals which are really independent and conscientious, will, we are sure, pardon us for saying what does not apply to them, and what can effect them in no other way than to do them service."

This twaddling qualification, evidently added to soothe or modify, has the peculiar merit of rendering the whole of the passage, to which it is an annotation, sheer nonsense—if all papers—if the whole boasted Press is corrupt—and bound to the car of party by chains stronger than those of iron—which are the few Journals that are really independent and conscientious?—TRASH!

We are sorry, extremely sorry, to see so much ill humour when it was certainly least to be expected; and we fear that if the Review succeeds in establishing such a principle, whereby the public taste and judgment are to be directed, he will find it difficult to avert its application from all periodical works in which the contributors avowedly write for pay, whether published daily, weekly, monthly, or QUARTERLY.

One would think, after so sweeping an attack upon the newspapers, men of respectability would shrink from any connection with them; and yet a list has been handed to us from BROOKES'S, which, we are told, has been formed in consequence of a determination on the part of the Whigs to take the hint of the Reviewer, and buy up the whole of the periodical press.

We are particularly anxious to remark that Mr. ELLICE did not furnish us with this important and secret document—in case the purchases should be effected, the following is to be the DIVISION OF THE PUBLIC PRESS.

'ith this paper in our possession, we are inclined to be-, whatever feelings the TORIES may entertain towards upport of the Press, the WHIGS are quite of a different of thinking. This is not unfrequently the case.

IE Quarterly Review, just published, has the following ge:—

'hen we survey the Opposition side of the House of Commons e almost overpowered by the melancholy contrast which it exto former times. We look in vain for the vivid and comprehenelineations, and the majestic and mighty reasonings of Fox—for ichness of imagery, profusion of knowledge, philosophical miess and profundity of sentiment, and overflow of fascinating eloe of Burke—for the sportive, dazzling, and captivating imagina- of Sheridan—for the spotless integrity of Romily, and even for raight forward statement and clear detail of Whitbread. These ious though erring men are gone for ever; and were we to de- the succedaneum to their splendid eloquence—to repeat the s of those who have more especially taken upon themselves to fill aces which they occupied, we think that a stoic might sigh over s the WHIGS have sustained, and that even sadness itself might at their incongruous efforts to replace it. This great and reble falling off in talent, unaided by other causes, was sufficient, ly to exclude them from office, but to ruin their interests with lightened part of the nation. Nothing but powerful eloquence Opposition can enable it to hide its deformed motives, to justify ious acts, to give currency, among those who are the arbiters of s, to its misrepresentations and sophistries, and to make a stand t an able and successful Ministry."

on a recurrence to the reports of Parliamentary proings, which we are told by the newspapers took place on esday evening, it will be found that the reviewer is ted to DOCTOR HUME for a most forcible illustration of passage, with which he favoured the country during a e upon the question for reducing the Lieutenant-Genelip of the Ordnance.

the Right Hon. Gentleman," (MR. CANNING) says the reporter MR. HUME, "was made of such very inflammable stuff—if he was TOUCHSTONE—so apt to catch fire, &c. he would tell him of r Master-General of the Ordnance who headed the disastrous tion to Walcheren, and LET HIM TAKE THE CHANGE OUT O' THAT!"

ese are the words—this the expression which those y reporters put into the mouth of a Member of Parlia—an old huckster bargaining for crockery would not used them.

wever forcible the phrase may be as an illustration of the ge from the Quarterly, which we have quoted, we think e in it quite enough to have surprized MR. CANNING, or ody else.

may be as well, in order to set MR. HUME, or his re-, right about TOUCHSTONE, to inform him that TOUCHE was a FOOL, into whose mouth SHAKESPEARE puts words,— ir, you talk of fairness, and laugh at HUMBUG, and yet admit rtisement of a Horse Auction, under the sanction of some very able dealers, as it should appear, but which puffs off bad cattle ain't little expected from you.

TO JOHN BULL.

t down, the other day, to the stables, as directed by your and asked to look at the little GREY poney on which you (or your employers) spoke so highly, and when I came to enquire him, I found not only that he had foiled and broke down at , but had actually been working in a waggon.
I thank you, or your employers, not to puff off such commoa similar manner again, and I would advise your employers, hey endeavour to push their hacks into notice by dint of es, to endeavour to ascertain, at TATTERSALL'S, or any other kely place, whether they have any legal right to them. POTTER'S POUND—(No. 12.)
FOR STRAY WHIGS AND WHIGGERIES.

IT is curious to observe, in an age, which it is the cant to call ENLIGHTENED, how few, how very few among our fellow-countrymen, reason, either upon principles or events, from the sources of their own minds, or from actual observation. We should, on this account alone, be induced to doubt the justice of the inference, that the present generation IS more enlightened, or that knowledge is more generally diffused among the various classes of society than in former periods of our history.

That thousands are capable of reading, where hundreds only possessed that advantage, a century ago, cannot be disputed. But, in spite of the metaphysical foggyness of the blockheads in the Edinburgh Review, every man who will take the trouble to refer to his own plain and obvious view of things—that is, to common sense and common observation, will at once perceive, that what these philosophists call KNOWLEDGE—that is, the power of reading whatever is put before us—may be turned to bad, as well as good purposes; and that the works of PAINE and CARLILE appear in as good and legible print as the BIBLE, or the History of England. Let this said every-day quality of common sense and common observation go one step further, and they will soon ascertain which course of reading is most likely to be attractive, to those who, by their subordinate rank in life, and from their habits, are more open to the influence of strong passions:—a system of civil, political, and religious restraints, the benefit of which they cannot appreciate, or one which tends to absolve them from all those laws and bonds, which may easily be made to appear the wanton imposition of arbitrary power, and are directed against the free use of what they are taught to consider their inherent rights.

It had, in the "olden time," been said, that there "was no royal road to be found to learning;" but in this "enlightened age," there has been discovered a popular road, which the discoverers do not hesitate to open, as a short cut to every species of knowledge. We have, what it is to be hoped, may, without offence, be yet termed a really enlightening authority for believing, that "strait is the path, and narrow the way, which "leadeth to salvation;" or in other words, to "true knowledge."

Now, the "path and pass," opened by the French philosophists, widened by their Edinburgh serviles, and laid open altogether by their more active and honest disciples, the Liberales, resembles rather a boundless desart than a road; and may be likened, in every particular, to that which is, upon the same authority, termed "the BROAD WAY, which leadeth to destruction."

But we would not, for the world, produce that as an argument against these political and philosophical Mac Adams, which may serve as an illustration to those who have not yet ventured upon the "new cut." We must meet these gentlemen upon their own ground, and give them every advantage which they claim as being exempt from the jurisdiction of, or appeal to any thing beyond political expediency, and this "material world." In truth, we very conscientiously avow our conviction, that ALL we have been doing, or projecting, for the good of mankind, for the last thirty years, and those GREAT RESULTS, which the active agents in them—scribblers and politicians—call upon us to join in hailing as the era of light and knowledge, will be generalized by our successors—grown wise by our follies—under some term illustrative of TINSEL and PRETENSION; and by some distinguishing epithet of contempt, to mark the adulterating mixture of FRENCH FRIVOLITY with the DREGS of OLIVERIAN HYPOCRISY, and SPOLIATION. That we can take credit for any thing new, is not to be admitted for an instant; we have been getting rid of what is called old, in the hope of substituting what is still older, and strain them, purify them through all the Jesuitical strainers of the French encyclopædists, or the vulgar cant of our northern metaphysicians: the principles upon which we are invited to pull down and re-edify the Constitution of our fathers, are literally those upon which JACK CADE and JACK STRAW speculated unsuccessfully, and CROMWELL acted, so as to place himself upon the throne of his MURDERED KING!

The pure FIRE, from whose altar have been diffused those lights which our LIBERAL REFORMERS take so much credit for having brought into this country, to ENLIGHTEN it, had long been preserved—not in the "Vestal Temple," certainly—but within the fane of FRENCH PHILOSOPHY, until the dispersion of all existing prejudices, which still hung, though somewhat loosely, about religion, and a sense of moral duty, emboldened the HIGH PRIESTS to open the gates to the people, and light them on their way to those liberal principles which shed the blood of MILLIONS; licensed UNIVERSAL PLUNDER; and, as CROMWELL had set the example, led to the cold-blooded MURDER OF THEIR SOVEREIGN!

These, good people of England, are the events which illustrated the revival of the very principles now offered, recommended, urged to your adoption. We are not exaggerating, nor "setting down aught in malice." As reading is now affirmed to be the test of knowledge, let the people of England read only the speeches addressed to the people of France, as they are now addressed to themselves, for which the LIBERAL NOBLESSE of France were as conspicuous as the WHIG NOBILITY are at the present moment; and they will find that, not only are the principles advocated in both, similar, but that they are IDENTICALLY THE SAME. The same incentives—the same charges respecting the "oppression of Government"—the same denunciations against the "corruption of governors"—the same appeals to the passions, urged under Constitutional forms—the same exaggeration of "public burthens"—the same contempt of "moral and religious restraint"—and the same provocations to revenge and retribution against the "makers and executors of the law."

There is only one essential difference—not in the mode, but in the motive of the two parties—in France there was some foundation for their asserted grievances—in England NONE. REFORM was to do every thing there—revolution was a proscribed term—it never entered into the calculation of their popular leaders UNTIL the times were ripe, and REFORM had opened the floodgates. REFORM was adopted by those who sincerely thought it would effect its purpose—and what was called a Parliament did actually reform itself on a call from the people—a constitutional government was established—but the REFORMERS in the mean time had "shed their coat," and become full-fledged REVOLUTIONISTS. The door was still open, and they rushed in with their "scalping knives" and "all the arms of liberty." The streets of Paris were literally flooded with the BLOOD of those who were content with REFORM—and who adhered to a Government that might have saved their homes from plunder and rape, and their persons from the gripe of summary execution!

These—Englishmen—we repeat, were the natural and inevitable results of throwing down the barriers of law and justice—and of the previous demoralization—which was called, as now, enlightening THE GREAT MASS OF THE PEOPLE—and bringing what MR. HUNT calls their PHYSICAL FORCE to bear upon the established institutions of the country.

There is nothing new, we repeat, in all this. These results are known to be the necessary consequence of the excess of the REFORMERS. The only difference between a RADICAL and a WHIG, in the career of revolution, is, as we have often affirmed, that the one fancies he can stop short at a given point—whilst the other looks to his reward in going the whole length of its accomplishment. Those who have any thing to lose side with the former, and call themselves WHIGS—those who have all to seek herd with the latter, and glory in being called RADICALS. The public have seen of late that the WHIGS begin to think they have gone far enough—and the lesson they have received upon the facile movements of "physical force" in the hands of such men as COBBETT, HUNT, WOOLER, &c. may well teach them not only what they have to expect should they go a little further, but of the treatment they are likely to meet with from those whose advances they are facilitating, by the time-serving concessions of their own selfish and caballing faction.

Does the poor doer of the CHRONICLE, under the dictation of his principals, suppose that in undermining the Church, and bringing the King's Government into contempt, he would in the success of his efforts, have to proclaim the triumph of the WHIGS! Poor, unfortunate wight—his head would be the first to adorn his own lamp-post—and his masters the foremost victims of the first stone that fell from THE OLD EDIFICE OF THE CONSTITUTION. If it were necessary to illustrate by a single instance the delusions practised by the conjoint efforts of WHIGS and RADICALS, it would be sufficient to our purpose to point out the question of AGRICULTURAL DISTRESS—and the REMEDY proposed for its cure. Without entering into the complex causes of the difficulties which certainly exist among men of landed property and their tenants—although shamefully exaggerated—and which will scarcely be remembered two years hence—can a man of common sense for a moment entertain the supposition that REFORM in PARLIAMENT (be it a wise or a dangerous measure in itself) can be applied in ANY SHAPE or form as a REMEDY to it? Say—it might be productive of future saving—admit that it would super-induce purity in the place of past corruptions—that it would make the House of Commons an assembly of men without taint and without suspicion—which is nonsense on the very face of it. What, if all this vast future good could be accomplished—what, we ask, could it effect upon the present depressed state of the agricultural markets?

We are told it would bring us every blessing under the sun—but it must be a work of time. We must cashier our Ministers—we must shut up our public offices—we must cut down the King's establishment to that of my LORD GROSVENOR at least—we must talk about these things for many months before this cleansing and purifying can take place, unless some patent steam expedient be found, and in the mean time the high-minded, flattered, and pampered mob will not submit to any direct measure to raise the price of corn upon themselves. Men, therefore, cannot be sincere when they call crowds together to suggest the best means of relieving their distresses—and offer them REFORM in PARLIAMENT as the REMEDY. We might as well prescribe to an old woman with the tooth-ache—a Problem in Euclid!—Nay, in this case, if faith were had in the prescription, the old woman might receive the benefit of the charm; but no man with one grain of knowledge beyond the grain which he puts into the ground, can for a moment believe that a REFORM can raise the price of wheat on the next return, which is all that he is thinking of, or in fact caring about.

But let us be fair; there is a remedy coupled with it—the reduction of TAXATION. One very obvious answer may be returned to this, namely, that the extinction of the whole Civil List would not affect every individual in the country to the amount of TWO SHILLINGS and SIXPENCE per annum; and that to turn out to want and beggary one half of those men who have been labouring in our service, either in a civil or military capacity, through the best years of their lives, would not save more than ONE SIXPENCE to every person paying scot and lot throughout the country. No, brother Englishmen! it is only an incipient measure—a step in REFORM—towards the sweeping purpose which COBBETT unhesitatingly avows. When the Government has converted all its dependants into hostile agents, by an ungrateful oblivion of their past services—when the King is no longer enabled to reward those who, by their zeal and activity in his service, have merited his favour, and stands defenceless and naked before his enemies, then THE REDUCTION of all these will be found to be inefficient, and the SPONGE so long threatened will be applied to the FUNDS, as the TOCSIN to universal havoc.

This is all a regular and well-digested process, which the gaping and brawling farmers know no more about than "jometry." A national bankruptcy was the signal for the explosion of the French Revolution, and it is the object of the Radical Junto—their labour by night and by day—to produce this crisis in the country. Their writings tell you this in plain and unequivocal terms, although they dare not yet speak out the plain truth to a mixed multitude. The Savings' Banks, as we long ago observed, are a thorn in their sides, which, by an underhand process, they have long been nibbling at; but a man with any thing to save has something to lose, and thus a new stumbling-block has been raised against the immediate success of their intrigues. Still the BREACH OF PUBLIC FAITH is the point towards which all their avowed measures are directly tending. "So much has been positively gained by the diminution of our army, and so much lost to our oppressors; but this is not enough, for the taxes to pay the interest of the public debt are still intolerable, and why should we burthen ourselves because corrupted Parliaments have pledged us against our will to such a burthen? They were not OUR REPRESENTATIVES, and we are not, therefore, bound by THEIR ACTS."

Is there any thing forced in this mode of deducing an argument in favour of a darling object?—Is there any thing in it inconsistent with the known principles of the men who have been bellowing for REFORM for years past, and been "hallooed on" by the WHIGS, and cheered by their mixty-maxty County

LATEST NEWS.

Paris Papers down to Friday arrived yesterday by express. The Duke d'Angouleme sets out for the army sooner than was expected. Rear-Admiral Hamelin has sailed from Brest.

Bessieres is said, in an article from Bayonne, of the 14th, to have joined two other Royalist corps, defeated the Constitutionalists, and fixed himself with 12,000 men at Aranjuez.

In the Chamber of Deputies, on Tuesday, the Editor of the Drapeau Blanc, who was called to the bar for the publication of an article in his paper of the 17th, having indicted the writer of the article to be the Sieur Martainville, Editor in chief, the latter was called to the bar. He acknowledged the article to have been written by him: but he asked, in concert with the responsible Editor, for sufficient delay to choose Counsel, and prepare his means of defence. The demand was admitted. The Chamber adjourned, till Saturday, when the Editor and the Author were ordered to appear.

A letter dated Paris, Thursday night, positively asserts that the French army will enter Spain on or before the 15th of March—30,000 men by way of Bayonne, 25,000 by Figueras, and two divisions of the light troops will march on Seo Urgel.

The army of Spain is divided into five corps; the first will be commanded by Marshal the Duke de Reggio; the second by General Molitor; the third by Prince Hohenlohe; the fourth was to have been commanded by the Marquis of Lauriston, Minister of the King's Household, but his Excellency is not to join the army (it is not known who will be substituted for him;) and the fifth by Marshal the Duke de Conegliano, Général Gilleminot is appointed Major-General.

The Baron d'Eroles will command the Spanish army of Catalonia; General d'Espagne that of Navarre; General Loncha that of Aragon; and General Quesada the army of the Basque Provinces."—Journal des Debats.

We are requested especially to notice the conduct of several persons at the performance this-called the Oratorios at Covent Garden Theatre, by which the public were outraged, and that decorum by which public performers are kept in their proper places shamefully violated.

The new Music of La Donna del Lago, by Rossini, announced for performance, was unavoidably postponed on account of the sudden indisposition of Miss Tree and a Mr. Atkins; at least we conclude that Mr. Atkins was also indisposed, as he had not attended the rehearsal of the morning. After the Creation had been commenced, and no apology made, the audience were loud in calling for that which had been advertised, and instead of which Haydn's Oratorio was actually performing.

Sir G. Smart then informed the house of Miss Tree's illness: and that bills had been posted about the theatre announcing the fact. This did not satisfy the public, and Sir George then offered to go to Mr. Bochsa, (the man who conducts the thing) in order to get the new Music performed, omitting those parts in which Miss Tree and Mr. Atkins were concerned. It turned out, however, that it could not be performed without them, but Mr. Bochsa offered to return the money, and the Creation re-commenced.

After this Mr. Braham was singing, and the uproar happening to be renewed during his song, that gentleman, with a most insolent sneer, exclaimed to the public, "You are hissing the music of Haydn."

These words were addressed to the British public by a person whose fortune has been derived from their purses and patronage; and, much as we admire the singer, we have sufficient regard for the man, to caution him how far he carries out of his private life, that supercilious and assuming manner which is totally incompatible with his public station.

We are still more sorry to be obliged to continue our admonition to our favourite Miss Tree. One of her greatest charms as a public performer (and as a public performer only do we know her) is an apparent absence of affectation; her talents are great—her accomplishments numerous; but we warn her not to repeat an act which most certainly reflects no credit upon her taste or public character. As for Mr. Atkins, we never heard of him before, and honestly confess we do not care if we never hear of him again; but Miss Tree is a jewel, and should not be lost to the public; and yet we can tell her, and tell her for her own good, that if she is often laid up with desperate illness on Wednesday, and is able, on the following night, to appear in perfect health, (as she did in Maid Marian on Thursday) she may live to learn that public performers must maintain a propriety of conduct towards their patrons and supporters, and that there is still sufficient spirit in a British audience to enforce its observance.

The King held a Court on Friday at his Palace in Pall-Mall, which was attended by most of the Cabinet Ministers. Lieut.-General Sir G. Lowry Cole was presented on his being appointed Governor of the Isle of France. Mr. Huskisson kissed hands on being appointed President of the Board of Trade and Treasurer of the Navy.

Mr. Bankes has resigned the contest for Dorsetshire. Mr. Portman, it is expected, will be returned without opposition.

The Dublin papers received yesterday have a letter from Athlone, which says:—"The constables here, took up, yesterday, a Committee of Ribbonmen, sitting at Patrick Nobbit's, in Glasson. They had all their papers before them, but unfortunately they succeeded in burning all but one precious document. The prisoners were under examination all this day. Four of them have been discharged on bail, but one from Bessfort, in the County Longford, has not yet procured any. The names are as follows:—Timothy Morey, parish of Athlone; Patrick Shirr, ditto; Patrick Malsdy, Leesay, parish of Tubberclose; John Magee, Bessfort, county of Longford, and Patrick Shur, of, or near Tubberclose. The books they were swearing on were also found; also, a paper (enjoining brotherly love, and not to deal with any but Catholics; &c. &c.)"

In the Court of King's Bench, yesterday, an indictment was preferred against a gentleman, named Scott, charging him with having committed perjury in an answer sworn by him, in the Court of Chancery, to a bill filed to obtain an injunction, restraining him from proceeding upon certain bills of exchange. The Chief Justice, after hearing the evidence for the prosecution, observed, that much extraneous matter was generally introduced into bills in Chancery; and, in answering them, an individual was obliged to follow the same course. If, as in the present case, no corrupt or wilful misrepresentation could be discovered, it would be hard, indeed, that a casual misstatement, even if it existed, should subject a person to an indictment for wilful and corrupt perjury. Verdict—Not Guilty.

At the Old Bailey yesterday, Charles Clift was indicted for uttering five forged 10l. notes, and seven forged 5l. notes, in imitation of notes of the Bank of England. The prisoner pleaded Guilty. He was repeatedly advised to the contrary by the Recorder, Mr. Baron Graham, and Mr. Justice Park, but he persisted, and his plea was recorded.

The report of the convicts under sentence of death was made, when W. North was ordered for execution on Monday, and I. Wait, M. Hood, W. Watts, J. Brown, T. Fuller, and J. Harris, on Wednesday.

A dreadful accident happened at the theatre, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, on Wednesday night, owing to the gas igniting the wooden work attached to the pipe. The alarm of fire ran through the theatre, and the people in the gallery, which was much crowded, rushed out with such eagerness, that they fell over each other, and eight persons were killed, (three women, a boy, and four men); several were wounded.

Carroll's "Extraordinary success" in the last Lottery, when he sold Two Prizes of £20,000, one of £10,000, and twelve other Capitals of £1000, £500, &c. all in Shares, most strikingly points out to adventurers the advantages to be derived by purchasing at his fortunate Offices, No. 19, Cornhill, and 26, Oxford-street. Next Tuesday the present Small Lottery will be Drawn all in One Day, when the Prizes of £20,000, £16,000, &c. must be decided.

Pidding and Co.'s continued success on the concluding days of the Last Lottery, when 12,694, a Prize of £5,000, also 1,109, a Prize of £1,000, and 3,936, a Prize of £300, were added to their previous long list of Capitals, sufficiently accounts for the number of persons who daily crowding to make Purchases at the Lucky Corner, No. 1, Corn. Hill: and Lucky it may be truly called, when, if one person had purchased every Ticket sold by P. and Co. in the last Contract, he would have realized many Thousand Pounds Profit beyond the Cost of all the Tickets. The present small Lottery of 6,000 Tickets, (to be drawn in one Day, Next Tuesday, 25th Feb.) contains Prizes of £20,000, £16,000, &c. &c. probably now on Sale at the Lucky Corner, No. 1, Cornhill.

"This Essay is very creditable to the talents and humanity of its Author, and may be highly beneficial to his fellow-creatures, and useful to his professional brethren."—Medical and Physical Journal.

"We have, we here, exhibited sufficient specimens of the matter of this Work, to induce our Readers to seek a more intimate acquaintance with the contents of the original."—Med. Chir. Review.

"We are happy in being able to say that we have perused the tract before us with no inconsiderable satisfaction, thinking, as we do, that attention to the precepts it enjoins, will be productive of much benefit in the diseases of which it treats. We may add, that it is penned in a pleasing style, and deserving every praise even as a literary performance."—Medical Repository.

No. 116. SUNDAY, MARCH 2, 1823. Price 7d.

MR. T. COOKE respectfully announces that his ANNUAL BENEFIT CONCERT will take place at the ARGYLL ROOMS on FRIDAY EVENING, March the 21st, when will be performed a Selection of Vocal and Instrumental Music, Sacred and Miscellaneous, by several eminent Professors.—Tickets, 10s. 6d. each, to be had of Mr. T. Cooke, 22, Manchester-street, Manchester square, at the principal Music Shops, and Argyll Rooms.—To commence at Eight o'Clock.

ACADEMY for SINGING and the PIANO FORTE.—An EMINENT PROFESSOR of SINGING and the PIANO FORTE begs to inform AMATEURS and those who are STUDYING for the PROFESSION, that he has been prevailed upon to OPEN an ACADEMY at his residence on the same principles and terms as those of the first rate Schools.—Particulars known by applying at the Royal Harmonic Institution, Regent-street.

NEW MUSIC.—Just published, the much-admired air of CEASE YOUR FUNNING, with New Variations, composed expressly for, and sung by Mrs. Salmon, at all the Musical Festival Concerts, &c. with unbounded applause, by N. C. Bochsa, price 3s.; C'est l'Amour l'Amour, Rondo for the Harp, by N. C. Bochsa. price 4s.; Non so piu cosa, Fantasie for the Harp, by N. C. Bochsa, price 4s.; the 1st Set of Quadrilles, from Pietro L'Eremite, by Rossini. price 3s.—Printed and sold by E. Lavenu, music-seller, 24, Edward-street, Manchester-square.

NEW MUSIC. just published by Mayhew and Co. No. 17, Old Bond-street.

HART'S THIRD SET of SCOTCH QUADRILLES, including the celebrated and admired Airs of "The Campbells are coming," "Argyle is my name," "Corn rigge," "O whistle, and I'll come to you," and "Loch Erroch side," with entire new figures, composed, and arranged for the Piano Forte or Harp, and respectfully dedicated to Lady Grey, by Joseph Hart. 3s.

The great success which attended the publication of Mr. Hart's First and Second Sets of Scotch Quadrilles, has induced him to offer a Third Set to the notice of the Nobility and Gentry, which he trusts will prove worthy their patronage.

Also just published, HART'S SIXTH SET of QUADRILLES, selected from Rossini's popular Opera of "La Gazza Ladra," as danced at Almack's and the Nobility's Balls. Arranged for the Piano Forte or Harp. Price 4s.

THE FLUTE.—MR. NICHOLSON having just arrived in town from his provincial engagements, begs leave respectfully to intimate to his Pupils that he has returned to his former residence, at No. 14, Duke-street, Adelphi.—Mr. Nicholson takes this opportunity of making known his intention to devote a part on of his time to accompany the HARP and PIANO FORTE; and to such Amateur Performers on those Instruments as may have contracted a hesitation of manner, or who are deficient either in time or expression, he trusts his accompaniment will be found highly useful.

MUSIC.—NEW PORTABLE HARPS, the most desirable little Instruments ever invented. They require scarcely any instruction to play on them, are beautiful in form, produce the finest tone (for their size) ever heard, accompany the voice, &c. delightfully, and the prices of them extremely moderate. Their superior excellence, and very peculiar advantages, have already induced a vast number of the Nobility, Gentry, and Ladies to engage them. They need only to be just seen and heard, and they best recommend themselves. Are to be had only of E. LIGHT, Inventor and Patentee, No. 8, Foley place, Cavendish-square.

THE GERMAN and FRENCH LANGUAGES TAUGHT, at home and abroad, and also at 155, Cheapside, by A. BERNAYS, a native of Germany, educated in a French Lycée, and a married man. To the efficacy of his plan of tuition, and respectability of character, Mr. B. can refer to the great number of respectable Pupils he has had the honour to teach since his arrival in this country. For particulars apply at his residence, 26, Hadlow-street, Brunswick-square, or as above.

A LADY, whose circumstances render her personal exertions necessary, will be happy to engage in any respectable occupation that may suit her talents. Any employment with her pen will suit her, as she writes very quickly, and she hopes legibly; or she will be very happy to read to any invalid or elderly person to whom the exertion of reading is painful; or to superintend the education of a family; or more than any other thing she would like to have the charge of two or three children from six to eight years old, who may have lost their mother, or whose parents, though wishing to send them from home, prefer a private family to a school, as she has a little girl of her own, of that age, to educate; and every maternal attention will be paid them. Letters (post paid) to be addressed to M. J., 166, Strand.

PRIVATE PUPIL.—A Married and Beneficed Clergyman, resident within a morning's ride of London, and accustomed for many years to receive a few Pupils into his House, has now a VACANCY. The most satisfactory references can be given to Noblemen and Gentlemen, whose Sons he has educated. Letters to be addressed to the Rev. C. J., Mr. Jeffrey's, Bookseller No. 4, Pall Mall, London.

A CLERGYMAN, resident on his Living, and who PREPARES TWO YOUNG GENTLEMEN for ORDERS and the UNIVERSITY, has now room for ONE, whom, as soon as he is qualified, he can favour with a Title and help into Orders.—This situation is peculiarly eligible to any Gentleman whose Education has been in any way neglected.—Direct, post-paid, to C. D. at Mr. Frost's, Bookseller, Bristol.

WANTS a SITUATION, as COOK, or to take the Management of the Domestic Concerns of a respectable Family. A Young Woman. Most respectable references will be given. Address, S. E. Mr. Orchard's, baker, 109, Wood-street, Cheapside.

MANUSCRIPT SERMONS.—The Advertiser has a Collection to DISPOSE OF which have been preached with great acceptance to a respectable Congregation in the Metropolis, but they are equally adapted for a country Congregation. The subjects are the Doctrines of Christianity as explained by the Church of England, Moral Duties, the Festivals and Fasts, and on particular occasions, &c. Apply personally to A. W. No. 13, Duke-street, Manchester square.

FIVE HUNDRED POUNDS.—WANTED, immediately, by a Gentleman, who has a favourable opportunity of increasing an unincumbered and lucrative business, the above named sum, by way of annuity, and for which he will give 40l. per annum, the borrower reserving to himself the privilege of repaying the principal at 1 year's notice: the security proposed is a 2,000l. share in the business, which said share returns a net profit of 200l. a year, but no partner can be admitted into the concern. Letters (post paid) with real name and address, addressed to P. K. D. at Peel's Coffee house, Fleet-street, will be immediately attended to. Principals only will be treated with, and no money-broker nor agent need apply.

BLIGHTED AMBITION; or, The Rise and Fall of Somerset.

"We think very highly of this performance: the writer has practised habits of thinking; a correct and manly style of delivery; keen perceptions of character; with much of that most desirable quality in authorship—self command; and he is in possession of one important requisite for a novelist—an extensive knowledge of localities and costume. Old boundaries are marked, old places and buildings are described, and old dresses, manners, and peculiarities painted, with a minuteness only equalled, and scarcely excelled, by that chronicler of chroniclers, the author of 'Waverley.'"—Literary Register.

FRANCE FOR THE LAST SEVEN YEARS, containing many Facts, and much valuable information hitherto unknown, with Anecdotes, Jeux d'Esprits, &c. &c.—By W. H. IRELAND, Member and Ancient of the Athenæum of Science and Arts, at Paris.

"One of the most honest books that has appeared for several years relative to France, is Mr. Ireland's volume, entitled, "France for the Last Seven Years: or, The Bourbons." He therein proves that his feelings are of the true old British School, and that he is not one of those base panders of power, who, for years past, have subsisted by ascribing the crimes of their patrons to the principles of liberty."—Monthly Magazine, Vol. 55, p. 162.

COLLECTIONS and RECOLLECTIONS; or, Historical, Biographical, and Miscellaneous Anecdotes, Letters, and Sketches, from various sources; with Occasional Remarks. By JOHN STEWART, Esq.—Printed for Oliver and Boyd, Edinburgh; and G. and W. B. Whittaker, London.

NEW NOVEL.—Just published, price 21s. boards, the Second Edition of OSMOND; a Tale: in three volumes 12mo. By the Author of "The Favourite of Nature."—Printed for G. and W. B. Whittaker, Ave-Maria lane.

"The high reputation which the Author of 'The Favourite of Nature' acquired, by the publication of those deeply interesting volumes, will not, we are sure, suffer any diminution by the publication of 'Osmond.' The pleasure we derived from the perusal of the former work inside us look forward with some anxiety to the appearance of 'Osmond;' and we are happy to say, our expectations have not been disappointed."—Monthly Mag. Dec. 1822.

"Caroline's death is truly affecting; and of the after-meeting between Osmond and his angelic wife, and their parting interview, we cannot speak in terms of too high praise. We think the amiable author our unqualified eulogy for the religious tendency of the book; and, as a parting word, we consider 'Osmond' one of the most successful novels of that class which undertake to wean us from strong passions, and teach us the philosophy of virtue."—Literary Register, November 9, 1822.

Also, by the same Author, The FAVOURITE of NATURE, in 3 vols. 12mo. Third Edition, price 21s. boards.

Also, lately published, The SCHOOL for MOTHERS; or, the Politics of a Village. In 3 vols. 12mo. price 21s. boards.

Just published, in 12mo. price 3s. 6d. boards, the Second Edition of AN EPITOME of CHEMISTRY; wherein the Principles of the Science are illustrated in 100 entertaining and instructive Experiments, capable of being performed without the Aid of any Apparatus, except a few wine glasses, an oil flask, and a crucible, and unattended with the least danger. By the Rev. JOHN TOPHAM, M.A. of St. John's College, Cambridge, Head Master of Bromsgrove Grammar School, Worcestershire.—Printed for G. and W. B. Whittaker, Ave-Maria-lane.

"To afford the young student the elements of a science, with which every well-educated person should, in some degree, acquainted, Mr. Topham has compiled the present concise, yet comprehensive Epitome; it contains many useful as well as amusing experiments, which may be easily performed with a very slender apparatus, and we strongly recommend it to the perusal of the youth of both sexes."—Literary Register, No. 23.

JOHNSON, Samborn, Warwickshire, farmer.

A VERY GREAT SAVING.—GENUINE LAVENDER WATER and ESPRIT de ROSE may be had retail at the Manufactory, 3 Gloucester-place, near Smith-street King's road, Chelsea, at about half the usual cost, of such superior strength and fragrance as to defy all competition. Sold also by Mr. Sharpus, china-man, Cockspur-street; Miss Cole, 30, Speldhurst-street, Burton-crescent; and Mr. Lewis, 32, Cornhill.—All orders, by post to be addressed to the Manufactory. Not less than 1 dozen pints of Lavender Water can be had at the exportation price.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—The rude and unskilful attempts constantly made to supply those substitutes for the masticatory organ, and the disgust which delicacy suffers from the unpleasantry attending them when permanently fixed, have deterred many from adopting the aid any comfort they are capable of affording, independent of the assistance they may contribute to digestion and consequent health. The ingenious application of mechanical science of late years has obviated all these inconveniences, and allow the wearer at all times to keep the mouth in a state of perfect cleanliness, and to perform the functions of mastication, articulation, &c. with decided ease and comfort.—Mr. NICHOLLES begs to state, that he (in constant attendance from ten to four, and will be happy to give every information of the comforts derived from His efforts, under every circumstance of simple and complicated deficiency.—115. Fleet-street.

POYAIS. NORTH AMERICA.—The price of Lands in this territory is now 4s. 8d. per acre, and Notice is hereby given, that upon the 12th of next month the price will be advanced to 5s. per acre, and a progressive advance will be continued. Notice is also hereby given, that the Price of Lands, at the Land Office in the town of St. Joseph's, in Poyais, is now two dollars per acre. The aspect of Poyais is mountainous; the land is high almost to the sea side, the hills rising gently like the swell of the sea. The soil of the woody lands is every where excellent, being either a deep black mould or rich brick clay. The low land, savannahs, or open lawns, instead of being unhealthy or swampy, are generally covered with a natural crop of high and rich mould. Mosquitos (or gnats) and sand flies, are in general scarce, large tracts being entirely without either. The climate is mild and salubrious, and Europeans generally retain their health and activity to a good old age. Horses, black cattle, pigs, poultry, &c. are very numerous, and may at present be bought for stock at a very moderate price.—Every information as to the title-deeds, the security of purchasers, &c. may be obtained by applying personally, or by letter, post paid, to the Land Agents in London, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Inverness, Stirling, or Hamburgh ——No. 1, Dowgate-hill, London, Feb. 10, 1823.

GILBERT'S CHART of the EPISCOPACY of ENGLAND and WALES. (USEFUL APPENDAGE to ENGLISH HISTORY.)

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY.

Earl Somers presented a petition from the Nobility, Gentry, Clergy, and Freeholders of the County of Hereford, complaining of agricultural distress. The Noble Lord stated, that he agreed to that part of the petition which prayed for relief, but to other parts he strongly objected. He then adverted to the proceedings and the conduct of Mr. Cobbett, who had prepared an amendment similar to the one carried at the Norwich Meeting—that person was roughly handled. He then stated, that the distress was very great in that part of the country where he resided; he had no doubt all would be right by and bye, but at present some assistance must be effectually given. Mr. Peel's Bill he considered as one of the principal causes of the distress, which by altering the currency lessened the value of property. He admitted that it was essential to keep up public credit, but he asked why was land to be burthened. The petition was laid on the table.

The Earl of Darnley was sure, that the sentiments which Mr. Cobbett had been so successful in bringing forward at public meetings, could never be acted upon in Parliament.

The Archbishop of Canterbury brought up a Report from the Committee appointed to enquire into the state of the Laws respecting marriages, in which they suggested the propriety of introducing a Bill to legalize marriages that may hereafter be contracted, with the exception of the nullity clause. His Grace then presented the Bill.

Lord Ellenborough thought that the effect of the Bill would be to place the country in the very same situation as before the passing of the late Act. The Bill was read a first time.

The Bill to legalize marriages on licences granted by Surrogates, was read a second time.

The Marquis of Lansdown asked, whether a hope was entertained by Ministers that the peace of Europe was likely to be disturbed, and whether the contest likely to ensue between France and Spain could be avoided.

The Earl of Liverpool replied, that he had given an explanation on the state of our relations on the first day of the Session. He had then said the door was not closed against interposition on our part, but he deprecated discussion. Every disposition existed now to preserve peace, and special circumstances had recently occurred which made him more strongly deprecate discussion. Ministers at the proper time would give every explanation necessary.

The Marquis of Lansdown asked, whether in the negotiations there was any condition or understanding obligatory on England as to the part she might take in the contest after it should have commenced.

The Earl of Liverpool replied, that this country had not entered into any obligation, nor would she be justified in so doing, so that it might prevent the Government from pursuing the most advisable line of conduct.

Lord Ellenborough thought that any determination made by England to induce the Spaniards to alter their Constitution would be objectionable.

Petitions were presented from the Coal-owners of Ayr, praying for the repeal of the duties on coals—from Wisbeach, against the Insolvent Debtors' Act, and from Ipswich, complaining of agricultural distress.

The West India and American Colonies Trade Bills were read a first time.

The Marriage Act amendment Bill was read a second time.

Lord Ellenborough observed, that the Bill repealed all the clauses of the Act of last Session excepting one.

The Lord Chancellor replied, that it was intended to call into operation the Old Marriage Act for a temporary purpose, but it did not repeal the whole of last year's Act.

WEDNESDAY.

The Bishop of Exeter moved an Address to the King, for the Seventh and Eighth Reports of the Commissioners on Public Education, which was agreed to.

Petitions were presented from several Parishes in Bath, for the repeal of the Marriage Act, and others from the same City, for the repeal of the House and Window Tax.

On presenting the latter petition, the Earl of Liverpool observed, that His Majesty's Government had consented to reduce the House and Window Taxes; on due consideration, it was found advisable to reduce some of the most objectionable taxes; to throw off part of the Window Tax, and repeal Taxes on Horses and Carriages used in Husbandry, rather than get rid of the Window Tax in toto. With respect to the houses of Country Gentlemen, the relief given would apply to the establishments of all persons, and in some instances, where the tax could not be considered a tax on luxury, it was repealed.

A petition was presented from several Hop Growers in Kent, praying for a repeal of the duty.

The Earl of Liverpool said, in respect to giving relief from this tax, much difficulty occurred—of all articles relating to agriculture, hops were the most open to speculation.

A petition was presented from Market Deeping, against the Insolvent Debtors' Act.

THURSDAY.

The Royal Assent was given by commission to the Indemnity Bill. The commissioners were, the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Shaftesbury, and Earl Bathurst.

The Duke of Montrose stated, that His Majesty had been waited upon with Addresses for papers, and had been graciously pleased to order the same to be laid before the House.

The Surrogates Licences Bill was passed.

A Petition was presented by the Earl of Verulam from the Archdeaconry of St. Albans, against that part of the Marriage Act respecting the mode of granting licences.

FRIDAY.

The American and West India Colonies Trade, and the Temporary Marriage Bills, were passed.

In answer to a question from Earl Darnley, whether Sir Bradley King was to supply stationary for the Public Offices, the Earl of Liverpool said he would inform the Noble Earl on Monday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY.

Petitions were presented from Marlborough, Ashbourne, Chesterfield, and Gainsborough, against the Insolvent Act.

Sir John Newport presented a petition from the Tanners of Waterford, praying for a total Repeal of the Leather Tax.

Mr. Calcraft meant to move for the repeal of that Tax altogether, instead of the duty on carriages, and also that on candles, in lieu of the duty on riding horses.

Petitions, complaining of Agricultural Distress, were presented from Aberdeen.

A petition from certain hop-planters in Sussex, praying for a Repeal of the Hop Duty, was presented.

Mr. C. Grant asked, whether the relief intended to be given to Distillers was to be extended to Scotland?

The Chancellor of the Exchequer replied in the affirmative.

Mr. Curwen asked, whether houses having but six windows were to be exempt from the Window Tax?

The Chancellor of the Exchequer meant to adhere generally to a reduction of 50 per cent.; and to repeal the duty on shop windows altogether.

Sir T. Lethbridge, in presenting a petition from Bathwick, against the Assessed Taxes, gave notice of a motion for the 20th of March, on Agricultural Distress.

On bringing up the Report of Supply, Lord Normanby asked what had been done in respect to abolishing the office of one of the Postmasters General.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer said, the Commissioners had not made their Report.

Sir R. Heron was anxious to support the liberal policy of Ministers towards Spain and Ireland.

Sir John Newport, expressed his acknowledgments for the favours intended to be conferred on Ireland. He recommended the Repeal of the Leather Tax instead of some of the Assessed Taxes.

On the question for reading the second resolution,

Mr. Grenfell expressed his disapprobation of the Hon. Member's resolutions (Mr. Maberly,) and asked, did he mean to press them?

Mr. Maberly said, No! not on that night.

Sir R. Wilson presented a petition from the parish of St. John's, Southwark, for a Repeal of the Foreign Enlistment Bill. The Hon. Member said, that when it had been proposed, it was acknowledged to be a proceeding altogether new, and to be a violation of the principles and usages of our own and every other European state; it was stigmatized as an alliance with tyranny, and was entirely repugnant to the wishes of the people of England; because, although some individuals might not scruple to lend their assistance to the ruin of a country, as the means of keeping up their own power, the great mass of the people, and particularly the defenders of our rights and liberties, would willingly come forward (unless restrained by a Bill like the present) to protect the liberties and defend the rights of those countries which were so intimately connected with our own.

Mr. Hobhouse said the Bill had been proposed to the House by the late Noble Secretary for Foreign Affairs, at the express instigation of Old Spain. What reason could be more powerful in favour of its repeal, then, than the interests of that same Old Spain—what more just than to listen again to the representations of that Power? He hoped the House would not hesitate to repeal these bills, and to show the Bourbons of France what determination this country had taken. He knew there was nothing more easy than to get into a war, but the difficulty of coming out of it with honour, and without committing the interests of the country, was too formidable not to be seriously considered. He would not say one word that might seem to urge so perilous a measure; but he was sure that if Ministers did go into it, they would be heartily backed by the whole people. He could not help thanking the Ministers for the prudence they had hitherto displayed on this occasion. They should have his warmest praise (if praise from him were worth having) for the conduct they had hitherto pursued. He would be understood to speak of the present, and not the late Ministry; for it the same language had been held at Troppau and Laybach as he had reason to believe had been held at Verona, they would not now have been placed in the emergency of having on the one hand to choose between the treatment of these difficulties and dangers which beset them at home, and the maintenance of the independence of Europe and the liberties of mankind at large. The Hon. Member said, a pamphlet had been published, which presumed to tell the people of England to be afraid of the line of policy which France might take. And for what reason should we be afraid of France? It could never be forgotten that we had beaten France and Frenchmen before, on the same ground, and for the same cause. This notable pamphlet bid us also tremble at what Austria might do. What had we to care for Austria? Let Austria look to herself; for if England did but hold up her finger, all Italy would be in arms. Austria, indeed, was in little condition to awe this country from pursuing that conduct which was alike dictated by justice and sound policy.

Mr. Secretary Canning said, the Honourable Gentleman who had just sat down, had done the Ministry the honour to compliment them upon their conduct; and among the good qualities which he had attributed to them, he had praised their prudence. He felt strongly, that that prudence forbade, at the present moment, any discussion on the subject, and he rose chiefly for the purpose of repressing, if without impropriety he might say so, any further discussion on a point which had originated accidentally. He should, however, act unfairly to that Government in which he was so recent a partner, if he did not reject any praise which was bestowed upon it at the expense of those by whom it had formerly been composed. He was compelled in mere justice to say, that upon his entering the office which he had the honour to fill, he found the principles upon which the Government had acted, reduced into writing, and this State Paper formed what he might be allowed to call the political creed of the country. Upon the execution of the principles there laid down, and upon this alone, was founded any claim he might have to credit from the House. Upon the other topics which had been brought before the House, he felt he ought not to allow himself to be led into any discussion. Besides the general reasons which forbade any further debate while the smallest hope remained of compassing that pacific result in which the interests of Europe were so deeply concerned, there were some material circumstances which at the present moment made such debate particularly inexpedient. In pursuing that policy for which the Hon. Gent. had given them credit, His Majesty's Ministers had been aided by the forbearance—he would not say the unexpected forbearance—of the House.—The petition was then laid upon the table.

Mr. Curwen presented a petition from Colonel Robert Wood, complaining that he had been dismissed the service without any trial or adequate cause being assigned, and that his accounts had not been duly allowed.

Lord Palmerston stated, that the accounts, which had been taken before his entrance on office, presented a balance of 3,600l. now due from the petitioner, and that he (Lord Palmerston) had relinquished such balance, on its being intimated that the petitioner was unable to pay it.—The petition was laid on the table.

Mr. Serjeant Onslow gave notice of a motion for the 15th of March, for leave to bring in a Bill for regulating the interest on the loan of money.

The Report of the Committee of Supply on the Navy Estimates was then brought up.

Mr. Hume complained of unnecessary promotions in the navy of late, which he contended were made in furtherance of political patronage; such a system had disgusted many able and deserving officers, and was calculated to impair our naval glory.

Sir G. Clerk said, when the Hon. Member brought forward his motion upon the subject, the Admiralty would give it a satisfactory answer.—The resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. Goulburn postponed the second reading of the Irish Yeomanry Corps and Arms Bills, till the 6th of March.

Mr. Hume said, unless it was the intention of His Majesty's Government to bring in some measure for the purpose of putting down the system of Orange Lodges, he should feel it to be his duty to oppose this Bill. He conceived that some means ought to be devised to prevent the Irish Yeomanry from belonging to this secret society.

Mr. Brownlow moved for "copies of the committals of the persons engaged in the alleged riot and conspiracy on the 14th of last December, at the Dublin Theatre."—"Of the bills of inuictment alleging a Jury of the city of Dublin, on the first of January last, and the finding of the Jury thereon."—And "a copy of the ex-officio information, on the subject, filed in the Court of King's Bench, by His Majesty's Attorney-General for Ireland."

Mr. Plunkett expressed his surprise that after a Right Hon. Bart. (Sir James Stewart) a gentleman of the same profession with himself, had, on a question having no reference to the recent events in the King's Bench of Ireland, and under circumstances by which he was precluded a reply, gone out of his way to pass a judgment on the proceedings, and declare them illegal in the most unqualified manner, who had himself filled the office of Attorney-General in Ireland, to have felt the urgent necessity, after the strong disapproval he passed on those transactions; in a manly manner have himself stated the proceeding and abided by his charge; he now called on him to sustain his charge, by standing the ulterior motion.

Sir J. Stewart had not pledged himself to make any direct charge on the occasion alluded to. He felt justified in offering the remarks which had occasioned the observations of the Learned Gent. here, as the state of Ireland had been referred to at the time, and he was convinced the late proceedings had not produced a good effect on the situation of that country. He would say, in the face of that House and of the world, that those proceedings, if not absolutely illegal, were certainly unconstitutional.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer said, that as the Right Hon. Bart. had taken the present opportunity to state, that the acts of the Attorney-General of Ireland, if not strictly illegal were highly unconstitutional—he did not think it was placing the House in a fair situation, to call on them, thus prematurely, to discuss a question which was of such vital importance to the Learned Gentleman—to the government, of which he formed a part, and to the interests of the country at large. He thought it would be very imprudent and very ridicious, if the House now proceeded to discuss that question.

Mr. M. Fitzgerald felt that it was not necessary, and if, in consequence of recent proceedings, the peace and tranquility of the country were disturbed, an expression of the opinion of that House ought to be sent forth as soon as possible.

Mr. Croker was of opinion that on a question of so much importance, a question involving high legal considerations, papers should not be moved for on the sudden, and granted as a matter of course—that the Honourable Member had given notice of motion, on that day the debate might have been taken, for the purpose of ascertaining whether it was necessary for the House to interfere or not. This would undoubtedly have been the most regular way; for he strongly deprecated any interference, per saltum, with the proceedings of the Court of Justice.

Mr. Brownlow said, that before he moved for those documents he submitted his intention to the Right Hon. Secretary for the Home Department, to the Right Hon. Secretary for Ireland, and to the Attorney-General for Ireland, in that House. He understood that it was not the slightest objection to granting them.—The motions were agreed to.

On the motion of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the House resolved itself into a Committee of Supply, when the Right Hon. Gentleman moved the finance resolutions which he had introduced on Friday last.

In answer to a question from Mr. Grenfell, the Chancellor of the Exchequer said, that those who had already compounded for their particular heads of the assessed taxes, were to have the same benefit as others who had not so compounded, in the absolute and compulsory reductions which were proposed.

In answer to a question from Mr. Leycester, the Right Hon. Gentleman said, that his view of the rate of the composition would be this:—Suppose a person had formerly paid 100l. in the pound of assessed taxes, and had paid the original composition upon that sum. He would now have to pay the same per centage in proportion upon half the hundred pounds that he had previously paid upon the larger amount. The assessments were to be made out upon the 5th of April.

Mr. Hume moved for several returns of pensions granted to persons in the Yeomanry service in Ireland. It appeared, he said, from Parliamentary papers on their table, that 1,275l. was paid in annuities to Brigadier-Majors of Yeomanry in Ireland. In reference to the Irish accounts, he found no less a sum than 400,000l. paid in retiring pensions and salaries. Now the act of the 50th Geo. III. c. 3, under the authority of which some of these military pensions were granted, expressly declared the nature of the rank entitled to them, and yet many Brigade-Majors were not mentioned; so that he was at a loss to see by what law such grants had been made.

Mr. Goulburn said, with respect to some particulars concerning a certain individual to whom the Hon. Gentleman had alluded on former night, he (Mr. Goulburn) was bound to give some explanation. The Hon. Gentleman, when speaking of Major Collis, had said, the Major was not entitled on account of infirmities to the allowance which he received; and he gave three reasons for that opinion: first was that Major Collis was not above 40 years of age; the second that he had served but a limited period in the yeomanry; and the third, that that officer, so far from being infirm, was, as he understood, in as good bodily health as he (Mr. H.) himself enjoyed. In the first place, as to length of service, he had joined the army in the year 1794, and was severely wounded in the following year. After serving 25 years, in 13 of which he acted as a Brigade-Major of Yeomanry in Ireland, he was invalided upon the report of the medical physician who certified that his constitution was weak and extremely delicate, that he was infirm from repeated attacks of the gout, that he had a liver complaint, and was also suffering under a paralytic affection. Surely these were sufficient reasons for allowing such an officer an infirmity allowance.

Mr. Hume said his statement was, that Major Collis had been pensioned after ten years service, and that the Irish lawyers might assist call the Major a woman, as a person entitled to the pension according to the military regulations recognised by the Act of Parliament. The length of the officer's service was set forth at only ten years in the printed paper; the Right Hon. Gentleman had now stated it to have been 13 years, as a Yeomanry Brigade-Major. It was not of Major Collis, but of Mr. Bridgeman, that he had spoken, as being a person, though retired "through infirmities," as being a man as hale and hearty as he (Mr. Hume) was, and only 45 years old; and he had been referred to the Hon. Member for Galway for a confirmation of the fact, but that Hon. Member was absent. The error in the newspapers in applying what he had said of Mr. Bridgeman to Mr. Collis, the editors had since corrected.

Mr. Goulburn said, that it was due to Major Bridgeman, as well as to Major Collis, to correct the Hon. Gentleman's statement respecting them. The explanation, in either way, was inaccurate and inapplicable. Now, Mr. Bridgeman, who was represented by the Hon. Gentleman to enjoy as good a constitution as himself, and to be about his own age, had joined the British service in South Carolina, and so back as the year 1780; and had, in the latter part of his time, served ten years as a Brigade Major in the Irish Yeomanry; but, even after this length of service, there was the most positive certification of infirmities, from the high authority of Dr. Rennie, of Dublin. Mr. Bridgeman had fallen from his horse in a fit of apoplexy, while in the discharge of his military duty; he had many years suffered from constitutional determination of blood to his head, which had often generally and seriously affected his health, and rendered his retirement necessary. Such was the claim upon which the Hon. Gentleman appeared to possess information so singularly imperfect.—The motion was then agreed to.

TUESDAY.

A Petition was presented from several Electors of Dublin, complaining of the return of Col. White for that city. Ordered for consideration on the 17th of April.

A Petition was presented from Chippenham against granting further concessions to the Roman Catholics.

A new Writ was ordered for Rye, in the room of Dr. Dodson, who has accepted the Chiltern Hundreds.

Petitions were presented from Halifax, Woodbridge, and East Retford, against the Insolvent Debtors' Act.

Sir R. Wilson asked (in allusion to certain penalties inflicted upon persons for selling roasted corn) whether the prosecutions had been stopped, and the fines restored, as promised by Ministers. One person had been fined 300l. and the law expences were 320l.

Mr. Lushington replied, that Government had endeavoured to give effect to the recommendation, but some of the persons charged had obstinately persisted, and put the Crown to great expences.

Mr. Henry Grey Bennet was of opinion the resistance was meritorious, because the fine was levied on the sale of roasted corn, and not on roasted coffee.

Mr. Brownlow fixed Tuesday the 15th of April for his motion respecting the Ex-Officio Informations in Ireland.

Sir T. Lethbridge presented a Petition from the parish of Moreleombe in Somersetshire, praying for a reduction of all the Assessed Taxes. Fifty per cent. of reduction was, in his opinion, not sufficient.

On the motion of Mr. Henry Grey Bennet, an account of the number of persons who had been flogged for the last seven years, was ordered to be laid before the House.

Mr. Hume moved an Address to the King, praying that His Majesty would be pleased to direct that separate estimates of the civil and military expences of the Mauritius, Ceylon, Cape of Good Hope, Malta, and Trinidad, be laid before the House. The Hon. Member observed, that up to last year, there had been no separate account furnished, and then it appeared that a heavy charge was made on this country. The expense for Canada was between 3 and 400,000l.; for Nova Scotia, 1,200,000l. Instead of Ministers giving the Colonies a Legislative Assembly of their own, the affairs of the Mauritius and Ceylon were conducted by Orders in Council. These Colonies yielded a revenue of nearly one million; and it was contrary to the spirit of the British Constitution, to be thus indirectly taxed, when they were not represented. The Finance Committee of 1817, recommended the attention of the House to the constant drain on the revenue of this country from the management of the Colonies. It would be better to release every one of our Colonies from their allegiance, and leave them to their own Government. If the United States had continued to be a Colony of this country, she would not have taken half the quantity of our manufactures as she had done. The Hon. Member then complained of the mis-government of some of the Colonies, and instanced the case of the Cape of Good Hope. The Government was there carried on in the Dutch language, and the laws were the Indian Statutes made at Batavia in the year 1715. He took blame to himself that he had not three years ago brought before the House the subject of the gross mismanagement of the currency of the Cape. The Governor, instead of receiving forty thousand rix dollars, according to the amount of his salary, which was 10,000l. had no less than eighty or ninety thousand. The people were also prevented from holding public meetings. If the Right Hon. the Chancellor of the Exchequer wished these Colonies to be as he said he wished the people of England —comfortable and happy, he would endeavour to place them in such a condition as British subjects ought to be in.

Mr. Wilmot thought it would be better to postpone any discussion on our general Colonial policy until after the information sought by the motion of the Hon. Member should have been obtained. It was, however decidedly impossible to apportion the military expenditure of each Colony. With respect to the situation of the Cape of Good Hope, His Majesty's Government were desirous to afford every information, and as soon as that should be obtained he should take occasion to shew how erroneous was the system of policy proposed by the Hon. Member for Aberdeen.

Mr. Bright expressed his dissent from the opinions of his Hon. Friend, the Member for Aberdeen. He did not think that the English Laws should be introduced at once into every conquered colony.

Mr. Hume withdrew his motion upon an understanding that the accounts would be furnished regularly.

Sir Wm. C. Fairlie gave notice of a motion for Tuesday, the 4th of March, for leave to bring in a Bill to amend the Scotch Entail Act.

Mr. P. Moore moved, that a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into the powers of Commissioners of Sewers, and report their observations to the House thereon.—Agreed to.

Mr. Goulburn postponed until Monday next the second reading of the Bill respecting the Irish Stuff.

WEDNESDAY.

Petitions were presented against the Insolvent Act, from Macclesfield, Warwick, Dudley, Market Deeping, Cockermouth, and Selby.

Sir George Clerk obtained leave to bring in a Bill for regulating Weights and Measures. No alteration as to standard weight or measure was intended. The Bill was principally to regulate contracts and dealings, which should be understood to relate to the standard weight and measure, unless the contracting parties should expressly stipulate otherwise.—The Bill was read a first time. Second reading on Monday next.

Mr. Goulburn obtained leave to bring in a Bill to alter the general mode of assessing Church Rates, and charging first fruits in Ireland—the Bill would go to relieve those assessed, from the difficulty which arose in consequence of the alteration in the value of money.

Mr. Denison presented a petition from the Freeholders of Surrey. The Hon. Member said it was signed by five Freeholders on the part of the meeting; and although, technically, it could be considered only as the petition of five subscribers, it was, in substance, the petition of the meeting. There were but six or seven dissentient hands held up against the petition. It complained of taxes, tithes, and rates—called for reform. There was one subject upon which the petition did not touch. He alluded to two direful measures adopted by Parliament for altering the currency in the year 1797 and 1819. On the passing of the latter of these measures, he thought the standard ought to have been raised; had this been done, the arrangement would not only have been equitable, but would have prevented much of the distress which had taken place since the latter period. Something had been said at the meeting relative to an attack upon tithes and the funds; and he then distinctly declared that, the clergyman had as good a right to his tithes, and the fundholder to his dividend, as any nobleman in the country had to his own estate.

Captain Maberly being one of the seven persons who were in a minority at the meeting, he was anxious to disclaim, in that House, the sentiments contained in the Petition. He did not agree with the Hon. Member that the Parliamentary measures respecting the currency had been the cause of the distress complained of. A suggestion had been made at the meeting respecting the appropriation of what were called Crown Lands, to a partial reduction of the National Debt. This he disapproved of. Most of the lands in question were in the hands of those who had vested interests in them; but even if this difficulty were removed, he thought their value, compared with the National Debt, too trifling to cause any perceptible difference in the public burthens.

Mr. Ricardo, in alluding to the state of the public creditor, said, that from the way in which many persons talked on this subject, one would really be led to imagine that the whole of the National Debt had been contracted in a depreciated currency. But how stood the fact? Taking the National Debt at present to be 800 millions, that 400 millions had been contracted before there was any depreciation at all, and 100 millions when the currency was slightly depreciated. Now, for the whole of the period during which the currency was very greatly depreciated, the interest on this debt had been paid in depreciated paper. By this depreciation the fundholders lost twenty-seven millions principal money; and this, with compound interest calculated up to the restoration of the currency, could not be taken at less than 40 millions. The gain to the fundholder on this part of the debt, in consequence of his being paid his dividend in a restored currency, was rather less than two millions a year; in fact, it was about 1,900,000l. This, then, was the state of the case—the fundholder, in the first instance, lost forty millions, and he now gained two millions a year; and he needed not to inform the House, that forty millions would have purchased a perpetual annuity of two millions.

Lord Folkstone said, with regard to the restoration of the currency, in the year 1819 he proposed an alteration in the standard of about 5 per cent.; his Hon. Friend had then confidently stated, that the alteration would not be more than 4 or 4½ per cent. His Hon. Friend had since admitted that the alteration went to the extent of 10 per cent.

Mr. Holme Sumner observed, that of the 300 persons who had signed the Requisition very few attended the meeting, and those who did went there under a belief that they were to discuss only the question of Agricultural Distress. For his own part, he did not believe it was in the power of Parliament to devise a remedy for that distress. As for the Reform in the Parliament for which the petitioners prayed, he had no doubt it would aggravate the evils complained of.

Mr. Henry Grey Bennet said, that the Requisition was signed by the Duke of Norfolk, Earl Onslow, and many gentlemen of the first respectability in the county. Five had been delegated to sign the Petition on behalf of the meeting. Of these, two were large landowners, and two were merchants of the first eminence in the country.

Mr. Secretary Peel could not at all understand how it could ever be supposed, looking at the state in which the currency had been for many years preceding 1819, so great a change could be effected without the infliction of a temporary, partial pressure. He should therefore consider it no argument against that measure, that such temporary, partial pressure had followed it. So far as the Fundholder was concerned, it was to be recollected that the debt was contracted in a depreciated currency. But it was contracted at a time when an Act was enforced, stipulating for a return to Cash Payments on the return of Peace.

Mr. Monck thought that they should be as scrupulous of doing injustice to the public debtor as to the public creditor. But they were about to do him injustice to perpetuity, and not temporary, as declared by the Right Hon. Secretary opposite. The petition was ordered to be printed.

Mr. Brougham gave notice, in behalf of a Noble Friend then absent, that he would bring forward a motion relative to Secret and Illegal Societies in Ireland on Tuesday next.

Mr. W. Whitmore moved for leave to bring in a Bill to amend the Corn Laws. The Hon. Member observed, that an opinion was very prevalent, that no practical results could be derived from any such attempt; and that the agitation of the subject at present was calculated to cause the greatest alarm, and increase rather than allay the distress which it was his object to remedy; but the House, he believed, would concur with him in opinion, that the main feature of the last Corn Bill was the principle of fluctuation, which it inevitably entailed. In order to put the House in possession of the view which he took of the effect of the laws in force upon this subject, he would entreat them to conceive that a law of a similar nature was passed in Holland, because that was a great importing country. The result of such a measure would be a run of exceedingly high prices for many years. Capital would be brought to bear upon the culture of corn—the poor soil would be put in requisition, and the pastures of the country broken up. What would follow from this? There would soon be at least a two year's accumulation upon hand over and above the consumption. This would of course produce a glut in the markets upon which the over production would fall back. The result of this would be considerable distress to the farmers—a great destruction of capital —the produce of the soil not paying for the manure employed to raise it, and the poor lands would be forced out of cultivation. Then for two or three years there would be a positive scarcity—the up-shot of the introduction of such a measure being, either a glut, or a scarcity. He then remarked, on the increased consumption of the manufacturing districts. That increase he stated to be in the ratio of 7½ per cent. in 1821, over that of 1820, and in 1822, of 27 per cent. over that of the same period. He also went on to state, that this inordinate consumption had fallen chiefly upon fine bread. Where brown bread was formerly used, it was now scarcely ever seen—wheat had completely superseded the use of it. With respect to the culture of corn, he had no hesitation in saying that consumption was going on at a much more rapid rate than the growth of the article. Having descanted at some length on the subject, he said, that the purport of his alteration in the Corn Laws was, gradually to draw down the importation price to sixty shillings. He proposed this price because he was satisfied that foreign corn in this country never would be lower than sixty shillings. It was the duty of the House to give relief to the country, and prepare for the high prices which he thought were approaching. He considered when he looked at the burdens on the land, that it was entitled to a free trade in corn.

Mr. Curwen thought nothing could be more unwise than the period chosen by the Hon. Mover for the subject he had thought proper to bring under discussion. It was calculated to create the greatest alarm, and add despondency to the real distress of the agricultural classes. With regard to his arguments, he could not coincide with them, especially those against the Corn Bill, introduced into the House by a great Statesman now deceased. He, for his part, did think that that great Statesman had done all that could be done at the moment for the landed interest—he meant consistently with other interests. He disclaimed the idea of wishing for high protecting prices; all that he wished was, to see what would bring every acre of land and every arm into operation. He deprecated any alteration at present of the laws relative to corn. He verily believed, that if they were now to open the ports, they would have foreign corn at forty-five shillings instead of fifty-five. He did not like the law as it stood at present; but he could not consent to make a change, for he saw no better one that could be adopted at present. With respect to the reduction of taxes, he thought the reduction of the window tax good, especially that on small shops; but it should have gone down to exonerate altogether houses with only six windows, and a specified low rent. He wished also to see the tallow tax reduced. He calculated that the poor man used 40lbs. of tallow in the year, and this, then, was an impost of 10s. upon him. The malt tax also, ought to have the preference of reduction. He pressed on Ministers the necessity of looking to funded property for a resource, as, however some persons might call this an act of spoliation, he was confident, that from one end of the country to the other, it was considered unjust to let any thing in the shape of a large property escape without bearing its fair share of the burdens of the country.

Mr. Benett (Wiltshire) held it to be desirable that all the wheat should be raised in the country which was required for the consumption of the country. This was important in the first place, because we ought to be independent of our neighbours for the supply of an article of such importance as grain; and secondly, in order to enable the inhabitants to sustain those taxes which were necessary to cover the interest of the public debt. He was anxious for low prices; but to have these, it was necessary to diminish the expences attendant on the cultivation of the land. He then entered into a series of statements to shew what the burthens imposed on the agricultural classes had been, and in what proportion they had been reduced. They had amounted to 67 per cent. on the rent. The reduction of the tenant's property tax, (the landlord's property tax had nothing to do with it) he considered made a difference of seven and a half per cent. The agricultural horse tax made a farther reduction of one and a half per cent. The repeal of a portion of the malt tax had relieved the cultivator not to the amount of five and a half per cent. as it did the consumer, but to the extent of one and a half per cent. In various ways he calculated that the land had been relieved to the extent of 18 per cent. out of 67 per cent. which had formerly been paid in taxes on the rent. What remained would, he hoped, be diminished by a further reduction of taxation.

Mr. Wodehouse then shewed, from a comparison of prices at different periods, and from a reference to the evidence given before the Committee, that the prices had been lower when the country exported corn than when corn was imported.

Mr. Huskisson observed, that it was sufficiently satisfactory to him to know, that consistent with good faith towards the public creditor, such considerable remissions of taxation could take place as had been announced. The Hon. Member for Cumberland had described every poor family to consume 40lbs. weight of candles in the course of the year. He then estimated the relief which would be afforded to each by the repeal of the Tallow Tax at 10s. Now, if he would look at the actual amount of that tax, he would see that it imposed but 1d. per lb. on tallow. How this on 40lbs. could amount to 10s. passed his comprehension, especially as the consumers were seldom benefitted to the full amount of the tax abandoned. He was equally out in what he had suggested with respect to the repeal of the Window Tax on small cottages; as small houses, containing fewer than six windows, paid no duty at all. He saw no reason for supposing, seeing the consumption of candles had rapidly increased, that the tax was very severely felt; and as this was an impost originally laid on in the time of King William, and never afterwards repealed, he could not consent to give it up now. The Hon. Member then took a view of the course adopted by Parliament to enquire into the causes of the distress. A Committee was appointed in 1821; the report of the Committee suggested that it might be desirable to change the whole system of our Corn Laws, and to sanction a free trade in grain, subject only to such restrictions as would protect the British grower from suffering through the peculiar burthens imposed upon him, to which the foreign grower was not exposed. In the subsequent Session of Parliament another Committee was appointed to enquire what would be the best mode, and which the fittest period for acting on the report of the former Committee. The new Committee recommended that an alteration in the law should take place, which would mitigate the principle laid down in 1815, and alter the general system of our Corn Laws. To adopt a system of Corn Laws which would guard against both evils must be the object of Parliament; but to go into the question now, would add to their embarrassments. It was desirable to guard against the effects of a monopoly, which would raise the price of corn in England above the general price of Europe, with the duty superadded, and an opposite evil was to be provided against with equal care, as the one must prove destructive to the capital of the farmer, and the other prevented that capital which was necessary to sustain the manufactures of the country. He hoped the Hon. Gentleman would, under all the circumstances, withdraw his motion for the present. He did not offer this recommendation in opposition to it.

Mr. Ricardo was of opinion the trade in corn ought to be free, protection being afforded to the grower equal to the peculiar burthens which he had to sustain to that amount; a duty ought to be imposed on foreign grain, and to the same amount; and for the same reason a drawback or bounty ought to be allowed on the exportation of corn. This done, the price of corn in England would nearly agree with the prices in other countries.

Mr. Attwood argued that supposing the same system of Corn Laws to be adopted in Holland as existed here, the result would not be, as the Hon. Member had stated, the same high prices, and the same subsequent ruin as had been witnessed in this country.—Mr. Monck and Mr. Hume supported the motion.—Col. Wood opposed it.

Sir T. Lethbridge was quite sure that if His Majesty's Ministers did not oppose this Bill, they would stamp upon the minds of the Agriculturists a still stronger feeling against them than he was sorry to say they were already compelled to entertain.

Mr. S. Wortley said, that all his objection to the motion was, that it did not go far enough. He was convinced that there could be no safety for the agriculture of the country until the system of our Corn Laws was altogether changed.

Mr. Leycester said, that the reduction of prices would be no evil, if followed by an equivalent reduction of taxes.

The House then divided—For the Motion, 25—Against it, 78—Majority, 53.

THURSDAY.

The Annual Accounts of the Harbour of Ramsgate were presented.

Mr. Manning took that opportunity to observe, that it was an unfounded report that an Honourable Baronet, Member for the City of London, had ever held balances on account of this Harbour in his hands; on the contrary, he had on one occasion very liberally advanced money to meet the exigencies of the moment.

A Petition was presented from the county of Cambridge, complaining of agricultural distress—of the undue burdens to which the land was subjected, and praying for a liberal reduction of taxes, retrenchment in the public departments, and a Reform in Parliament.

Mr. Charles Dundas presented a Petition from the Freeholders of the County of Berks, in public meeting assembled, praying for relief to agriculture, and a Reform in Parliament.

Mr. F. Palmer said that the sentiments of the Petition were those of every class in the county.

Mr. Monck concurred in the prayer of the Petition, particularly that for Reform. The House of Commons was not a House for the people, but against them—it was dependent where it ought to be independent, and independent where it ought to be dependent, when subservient to Royal favour.

Petitions were presented from Hereford and Galway, complaining of agricultural distress.

Mr. Curteis presented a Petition from the Hop Planters of a Parish in Sussex, praying for the removal of the Duty on Hops.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer had been asked, whether it was his intention to propose a reduction of the Duty upon Hops, or whether he would assent to the appointment of a Committee to take their grievances into consideration. In answer, he was compelled to state, that he could not conceive that there was sufficient reason for the adoption of either of those expedients. There was no article subject to greater fluctuation than Hops, owing to the peculiar nature of this climate. The crops had been good for many years, the prices had been low, and thus it was that a reduction of the duty would really produce no good. He had no objection to extend to them the advantage of postponing the payment of the dues, and was willing to give every possible facility in his power.

Sir E. Knatchbull was not satisfied with the small hope of relief held out by the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Mr. Curteis gave notice, that if not anticipated by the Hon. Baronet, the Member for Kent (Sir E. Knatchbull), he should move for the repeal of the whole or part of the Hop Tax.

The Petition was then laid on the table.

Mr. Williams asked whether any steps were to be taken relative to the Office of the Rolls, the duties of the head of which Court had been discharged by Deputy for a considerable time past. A notice also had been stuck up to say there would be no business there till the 15th April, by which much time would be lost to the public.

Mr. Secretary Peel believed the absence of the Master of the Rolls proceeded from severe indisposition, which it had been hoped would be temporary.

Lord A. Hamilton moved for Copies of all the letters addressed to the Right Hon. George Canning, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, by Mr. John Bowring, relative to his imprisonment in France; and also to Mr. Planta, with the enclosures relating to the same subject. The Noble Lord observed, that it was the case of an Englishman, whose person had been outraged whilst under the protection of this Government. He was not going to arraign the conduct of Government; for, although he could not say that what it had done was not right, he was able to say that it might have done more. He then stated, that Mr. B. was travelling on the Continent for commercial purposes. Upon demanding his passport at Paris, some trifling obstruction was made. At Calais, the luggage of Mr. Bowring was taken from him, himself was arrested, and his papers put under examination. Upon asking what charge there was against him, he was told that a telegraphic communication had been received from Paris, ordering his papers to be examined, and himself arrested. When he was released, he was told that he was set at liberty, because it had been determined that the crime did not admit of imprisonment. A most gross inconsistency in the French law, to imprison a man for what would not admit of imprisonment. Another telegraphic dispatch ordered that he be conveyed to Boulogne, without being informed of the charge against him, and confined au secret, debarred communication with any one. Mr. Bowring had applied to Sir Charles Stuart, at Paris, to interpose in his behalf. Upon this becoming known, the Tribunals, or Authorities, or the Ministers of Justice—or, as he should call them, of Injustice, set to work to find out some other charge. If they had done this, it was a sort of chicanery, or quibble, amounting to a fraud; and it was to prove this that he desired these papers.

Mr. Secretary Canning opposed the motion, upon the sound Parliamentary principle that no practical ground had been shewn for their production; and he apprehended that it was for those who moved, and not for those who opposed, to shew the use to be made of the papers when produced. He believed it would be granted, that the first principle in the law of nations was, that a stranger, upon entering into a foreign country, entered into a temporary allegiance to the laws of that country. When he heard of the imprisonment of Mr. Bowring, of whose private character he wished to speak, so far as he could judge, from all he had heard, and from the slight intercourse which had taken place, with perfect respect. The Right Hon. Gent. said, he sent instructions to our Ambassador in Paris, and they were dispatched in about three-quarters of an hour after he had heard of the case, directing Sir Charles Stuart to enquire into the circumstances, and if no prima facie ground appeared for applying to the French Government, on account of irregularity, he was directed carefully to watch the proceedings, and to see, aided by the best legal advice which he could obtain, that the law was administered with impartiality and justice. Mr. B. by his own statement, as also by the counter-statement of the French Government, had been arrested as the bearer of sealed letters. This was an offence against the French law; it was an intent to defraud (he did not use the word invidiously) the revenue of France. Mr. Bowring being so detained as a carrier of sealed letters, there afterwards grew up out of these letters, or out of other circumstances, new grounds of accusation. The crime with which he was charged after his arrest, was one which did incur the punishment of imprisonment, but on that other crime he was never brought to trial; and when released from the greater charge, he was not detained for the lesser. Sir Charles Stuart was ordered to lay the case before two of the most celebrated Advocates of France, one of whom was to be selected from those individuals at the Bar who were favourable to the present Government, the other from those who were known to be politically opposed to it. To these persons he was directed to state the case anonymously, and to ask if the ordinary practice had been duly observed in the proceedings which had taken place? The answers given by those Learned Advocates was this: that in the case of Mr. Bowring the law had been scrupulously observed; and that a French subject, under such circumstances, would have had no cause for complaint, excepting that which every man accused of an offence, and not brought to trial for it, might assume he had a right to prefer. If Mr. Bowring were considered entitled to redress, so was every traveller who went to Siberia, Aleppo, Constantinople, or Algiers, who might complain of being deprived of the benefits of British law while away from his country. Was the English Government to pursue every wandering subject, and insist, that while he traversed the most despotic countries, where the name of law is hardly known, that all our valuable institutions should be transplanted thither for the benefit of those individuals who might choose to visit those parts?

Sir Robert Wilson commented on the treatment which Mr. Bowring had experienced in France. When the Right Hon. Gentleman enquired if English subjects travelling to Siberia, Aleppo, Algiers, or Constantinople, were still to look to the British Government for protection, he answered—"Yes."

Mr. Secretary Canning said, he had argued that they were not to calculate on all the advantages of British law.

Sir Robert Wilson said, that in the present case, he did not say the Government was called upon to do more than they had done.

Mr. C. Hutchinson said, it would be ingratitude in him to speak against France, where he had spent years of happiness, experienced the protection of its laws, the hospitality of its inhabitants, and there he had made some of his most valued friends. He believed Mr. Bowring had been considered a spy, because being an accomplished and enlightened man himself, he was known to be acquainted with some of the most enlightened men of Europe.—The motion was negatived.

On the motion of Mr. Thomas Courtenay, a Committee was appointed, to which the Post-Returns for the year ending the 25th of March, 1822, were referred.

In consequence of frauds having been committed by persons absconding with bills of exchange after having given drafts for the same which were refused payment, the bankers have come to a resolution, not to take drafts for bills, but to require that they should either be paid in Bank notes or money, or be addressed for payment at a bankers.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

The letter marked confidential came safely to hand. The writer may be assured that what was said was said in kindness, and with the view of producing the explanation, which, like every thing else by the same person, was excellent and satisfactory.

We are always obliged to our correspondents for hints, but we just give MR. C. H. a hint in return:—He sent certainly an idea of his, on what our Sale of Horses was founded, but the plan was different—most of the jokes were wanting, and his stud DID NOT CONTAIN any one of those superior animals—QUEEN MAB, BOB, DUNCANNON, CAM (the Hobby), BUCK, JEMMY, CREEPER, MICHAEL ANGELO, JOE, PETER (the Jack-ass), COLONEL, WILL OF THE WISP, HUMPTY-DUMPTY, or NEDDY (the Mule):—So that out of nineteen stalls we filled fifteen entirely, besides carrying and feeding the other cattle. The things is certainly not worth claiming one way or another—but MR. C. H. seems to think differently. He may have read the Fable of the Daw and the Peacock's feathers—and we hate HUMBUG.

Since our theatrical article went to press, we have received a letter from MR. ATKINS, the performer, mentioned last week, which having appeared in the daily papers of yesterday, we do not think it necessary to insert here.

We are obliged to our friend at Retford for his extraordinary communication, which, if possible, shall be noticed next week.

We think, perhaps, that the persons and circumstances noticed by LAERTES, L. are hardly worthy public attention.

In one of our letters from Ireland, we are told that a large cross was actually carried through the streets of Dublin in the procession after COL. WHITE'S election: on which occasion the Protestant College of that city was attacked, and its windows broken. It is also said that a Papist Priest, who wished to recant and renounce the errors of the Romish Church, at the parish church of ST. JAMES, Dublin, has been carried off, nobody knows where: and such is the system of terror existing in that county, that nobody feels inclined to make enquiries about him.

We must defer the observations upon certain parts of the affairs of Ireland for the present.

Our correspondent is thanked for "The Catch," which, however, is not suited to a newspaper.

We do not see danger in the quarter to which FABER points. As he is one of the body in question, he will know that the subject even cannot be touched upon in such assemblies—the greatest Radical in the country maintains that principle yet inviolable.

"THE REFORMED WHIG" has been received.

The letter from Edinburgh, with respect to HUME'S visit to MR. LAFFOUNE'S house, must be incorrect as to dates; MR. HUME is now married, and has not for the last four or five years carried a girl about with him dressed in boy's clothes. Of the visit we will ascertain the particulars. All we mean to observe upon is the period at which it took place.

We have received a proposal touching the erection of an equestrian statue (by subscription) of the Commander-in-Chief. It appears singular, that of a Prince so popular, and whose paternal solicitude for the welfare of the British Army is recorded in the hearts of our soldiers, there should not exist some national monument; and we certainly think the suggestion well worth the attention of the Officers of the Army, with whom, and the soldiery, our correspondent suggests the subscription should originate.

Lines to the "BOTTLE CONJUROR" are too sharp for the occasion.

We are, as we always are, extremely obliged to our friend NEMO; but good as his communication is, a second edition always comes in flat. We wish we could hear from him a little oftener—in his old way.

Another "Gross Personality!!" next week.

PHILO MONARCHICUS—A COUNTRYMAN—and QUIS GENUS, are received. Our other numerous friends must generally accept our acknowledgements for their communications.

PRICE OF STOCKS AT THE CLOSE, SATURDAY.

Towards the latter end of the past week the public securities have fluctuated considerably; on the settling day only two defaulters of eminence were declared. There were on the following day, and on Friday, four or five other defaultions, but the amount was not extensive. The Spanish securities have suffered considerably, and declined nearly 3 per cent. from the opening, the last price being 30¼. At the close of the market our Consols for Account were 72 buyers.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, MARCH 2.

WE have not time or space to notice MR. MABERLEY'S plan, which that gentleman brought forward on Friday in the House of Commons. It was supported by the Honourable Member's son, and opposed by almost every other speaker on the question. MR. RICARDO ridiculed it; MR. BARING called it a bubble; and the motion was lost by a majority of 157 to 72.

MR. BOWRING'S case was decided rather summarily, on Thursday. We are in possession of several very curious facts relative to this gentleman, with which, if the matter rests where it does, we shall, perhaps, not trouble our readers; but our eye, nevertheless, shall be upon him.

WE stated, in our last Number, our opinion that LORD WELLESLEY should be recalled from the government of IRELAND, and we did so without being influenced by any share of the party spirit which is now raging in that country. We are far from depreciating LORD WELLESLEY'S general character, or of denying the eminent qualities he possesses; but he was sent to IRELAND to conciliate and tranquillise—he has failed; instead of conciliation and tranquillity, nothing but the most violent and exasperated inflammation has been produced by the measures of his Administration, and we apprehend that having decidedly failed in the object for which he was sent, it would be but natural that he should be recalled.

We are well aware of the difficulties of his situation—we do not believe that any Vice-roy can conciliate both parties in that country—the hopelessness of such an experiment is now apparent; but we think that what little chance there is for restoring tranquillity would be found in a change of the principles on which the late experiment has been made.

The whole history of IRELAND attests this remarkable fact, that while the Protestants were strong, IRELAND was comparatively tranquil, and whenever the Papists have been encouraged it has been proportionably disturbed.

We will not argue on the causes of this remarkable fact, but the fact itself is notorious to every one who has the slightest knowledge of Irish affairs; and the events of the last year must have proved it even to the most ignorant and the most prejudiced. We therefore think that the Papists ought not to be further encouraged; and as LORD WELLESLEY'S Administration is pledged to that line of conduct, we think, with all personal respect to his motives and his talents, it is impossible that he can bring the present crisis of affairs to any termination, satisfactory to his own feelings and to the interests of IRELAND.

We are in possession of a most able, but we must add, most bitter article on the subject of LORD WELLESLEY'S conduct. Unwilling to make matters worse, we shall, for the present at least, suppress it; but there is one fact in it which we may state without offence to his Excellency, and which seems to us not unimportant to the consideration which is about to be taken of the question.

Our correspondent states, that LORD WELLESLEY arrived in Ireland professing to conciliate all parties, but that he brought with him, not as part of his official suite, but as his private friend and councillor, a Roman Catholic Barrister—a gentleman, it is admitted, of respectable character—but our correspondent asks, what hope the Protestant party in Ireland could entertain of a fair and impartial effort at conciliation, when they saw his Lordship accompanied by a secret and irresponsible adviser, who was, by his religion, legally excluded from giving public and responsible advice.

Immediately on HIS EXCELLENCY'S arrival, the rank of Baronet was conferred on the Lord Mayor of Dublin, who was supposed to be of the Protestant party—an ill-judged measure, but made of great and mischievous importance by the statement with which it was accompanied—that this honour had been conferred on the Lord Mayor, at the suggestion of the said Roman Catholic Barrister.

On the late occasion of the riots at the theatre, even the most moderate Irish Protestants saw with alarm that this same Popish gentleman, who is a resident in England, was summoned over to assist the Lord Lieutenant with his advice in this emergency. Such at least was the construction which was put in Dublin upon a visit which that gentleman was said to have made to the Irish metropolis.

We state the facts as our correspondent has given them to us; and if they be true, it cannot, we think, be denied, that the circumstances were at least unfortunate, and very likely to excite suspicion and alarm in the minds of the Protestant Gentry of the country.

We abstain from saying more at present—attached as we are to the united Church of England and Ireland, convinced as we are that the security of Ireland depends upon Protestant ascendancy, and opposed, as we conscientiously are, to every shade and degree of concession to the Papists, we should have abandoned our duty, if we had refrained from saying so much as we have said.

We trust that our able and valuable correspondent will accept the excuse we have made, for not having at once inserted the energetic article with which he favoured us, and we hope that our prudence will not render us in his eyes unworthy of his further communications.

THE speech of the VISCOUNT DE CHATEAUBRIAND, in the French Chamber of Deputies, will be read with considerable interest. The question of war seems perfectly decided; but the WHIGS here say not—at least they say, that ENGLAND ought to go to war as well as FRANCE!

Really these gentlemen have the most extraordinary way of acting, and of speaking; for years the cry of PEACE—PEACE—nothing but PEACE rang in our ears; repose was absolutely necessary to the existence of the country; and after the most arduous, most glorious campaign in which the nation ever was engaged, an honourable, firm, and perfect PEACE was given to her.

What has already been the result? Our manufactures flourish—provisions are cheap, and plenty—five millions of taxes have been repealed in less than ten months. The disadvantages under which the agriculturist labours, want only time to remedy themselves; and in the midst of these—these cheering—these blessed fruits of our tranquillity, the WHIGS would have us go to war, because FRANCE marches an army into SPAIN!

We do not remember when BUONAPARTE made war upon the Spaniards that the Whigs were much disturbed at the circumstance, nor can we see why we should involve ourselves in a quarrel now, which in no way concerns us—our flag has not been insulted—nor are we threatened with invasion. Vain, indeed, will be the judicious attempts of our Administration to relieve the people from the burdens which they have long borne to maintain a necessary conflict in support of their laws and liberties, if, whenever two foreign powers choose to quarrel, we must interfere and thrust our fingers between the hammer and anvil.

The country may rely upon it that ENGLAND should remain neutral—strictly neutral—for this there are innumerable reasons—but there is one which is quite decisive as to the wisdom, the justice, and the propriety of her doing so—the WHIGS SAY SHE OUGHT NOT!

OUR readers will perceive that the Jury have delivered their verdict, finding LORD PORTSMOUTH incapable of managing his affairs, and that he has been so since the year 1809.

We have no doubt but that this is the conclusion at which every rational person had long before arrived. It is highly satisfactory, as it has the effect of placing the unhappy nobleman in safety and quiet, and of defeating in every point the basest, vilest, and most infamous conspiracy, or, to use the noble victim's own expression, "the blackest job" by which human nature ever was disgraced.

IT is impossible not to perceive the line which the unhappy wights who compose the present Opposition mean to take, in order to back out of the scrape into which they have got themselves by their prophecies touching the ruin of the country, consequent upon the profligacy of our Ministers, the shameful neglect of our interests abroad, and the careless administration of affairs at home.

These persons, driven to the most disagreeable extremities, endeavour to save themselves now by attributing the glorious issue of all our measures, foreign and domestic, to the change of men which has recently and partially taken place. MR. HOBHOUSE, on Monday, was extremely liberal of his flattery to MR. CANNING; but the Hon. Gentleman was a little mistaken in his man, if he fancied either to soothe the new Minister by his praises, or save himself by his adroit compliments. In answer to his positive praise of the Right Hon. Secretary, and the implied censure of his noble predecessor, MR. CANNING, made this honourable, manly, and (to MR. HOBHOUSE) staggering answer.

"He must say he should be acting unfairly were he not to reject praise offered to him, as having acted with a new spirit and upon new principles, for he had found embodied in a state paper in the office which he had now the honour to fulfil, that very course laid down, those very principles promulgated, a faithful adherence to which had gained him the approbation of that House!"

We did not watch the countenance of the Hon. Member for Westminster, nor those of his fellow sufferers upon this occasion; but after the continued and incessant abuse heaped upon him, who is now no more, by the whole of that party, we think, to use the elegant phraseology of the sagacious Member for ABERBROTHOCK and BRECHIN, they must have felt rather a painful operation to "take the change out" of MR. CANNING'S reply.

"THE Spanish Ambassadors, with M. COLON, the Secretary to the Embassy, alighted at the house of MR. WE "THERSTONE, Bengal-place, Kent-road, to wait the arri "of SIR R. WILSON, before entering the Metropolis on M "day last."—Morning Chronicle, Thursday, Feb. 20, 1823.

It will be recollected, that MR. WEATHERSTONE, at wh house his Excellency the Spanish Ambassador alighted, the person whose name we mistook for WOODENSPOON or months since, and who made a Speech at the Horns' Tav at Kennington, at the public dinner, in commemoration WILSON'S return for Southwark.

We confess, it appears somewhat infra-dig, for a Span Ambassador to stop at Number something in Bengal-pl Kent-road; and likely, if his Excellency never was in E land before, to give him somewhat an unfavourable impres of our mode of living, and a kind of distaste for WILSO connexions, and even for WILSON himself.

It will be observed, that his EXCELLENCY was attended his Secretary—him, surely, he might have despatched to M WOODENSPOON'S to announce his approach, and have ceived WILSON somewhere else. The affair appears to h been ill-managed—what we mean to say, speaking tech cally, is, that however suitable MR. WOODENSPOON'S ho might have been for his Excellency's COLON—it certainly not the place for a FULL-STOP!

While we are upon this interesting topic, it may be as w to state our knowledge of the fact, that the enthusiastic po lace were hired for the occasion, so that WILSON merely spo truth when he told the Ambassador, who was quite pleas with the cheering, "that he could assure his Excellency Southwark mob would go any lengths for the sake of SPANISH!"

We would just hint, by way of advice, to the makers up public dinners, that an affair of the sort would appear spring more genuinely and spontaneously, if the circular adv tisements sent to the different papers were a little less the wording. At present the savour of HUMBUG stin upon it.

We remember DON ANTONIO ZEA had a public di given him—HUME has had public dinners given him—s the way—has BYRNE, the hackney coachman!

VERY few remarks are necessary upon the acts of a pol cal party sufficiently liberal to go the whole length of ave ing its principles undisguisedly. We extract the followi article from the MORNING CHRONICLE; upon the system advocates, or the mode in which it is advocated, we s nothing; yet the CHRONICLE is the Whig journal, and unle the Whigs publicly disown them, it is supposed to speak the sentiments. The Honourable HENRY GREY BENNET h been proclaimed as having seconded at Epsom, MR. COBBETT proposal for an arrangement of our national debt. We shou be glad to know the names of those WHIGS, whose opinion views, and wishes, with respect to the internal affairs of ou countries, are published to the world in the following exqu site morceau:—

—Our readers must see, to believe it.

"It is a curious fact, that the men styling themselves the 'Hol Alliance,' embrace all the three systems into which the Christian religion is divided—the Roman, Greek, and Protestant. Time will de velope the importance of this fact.

"The war waged by these men is against the extension of knowledge of which they know liberty is the offspring; for knowledge can exist in the human mind in the absence of a consciousness of the ju nity of man; and, surely, no man of refined intellectual powers c suppose the millions in a dignified state who are subject to the capr of an individual, however high his attainments.

"There is something intolerably degrading to the whole populati of the Continent in the averment of the Allied Monarchs, that t consider certain proceedings, no matter what they be, contrar 'social order,' and that, therefore, they will stifle them!

"Who is ALEXANDER of RUSSIA? Who is FREDERICK of Prus Who is FRANCIS of Austria? Why three MEN? and men too of t ordinary capacities. Now, what right have ALEXANDER, FREDERI and FRANCIS, three men of shallow pates, to traverse countries, to meet and determine, and all this without being requested to do the fate and condition of the millions? The upstarts have no right, b less having bands of armed raggamuffins at their heels constitutes right; THE DECLARATION OF WHICH WOULD SANCTION KICKING TH OFF THE STAGE ON WHICH THEY ARE ACTING SO FLAGITIOUS A PART.

"Were a whole nation to declare, by some public act, that the ex ing state of society in a neighbouring country endangered their s security, and, after mature deliberation, to resolve, that the evil m plained of must be removed, there would be a sanction in the alter to accomplish the object; but for these men, of shallow pates, never consulted their people on the business, and who dared not d to arrogate to themselves the right of interference, is such an att on the dignity of human nature, that the record of the fact will secure be credited in the course of another half of a century. WE REPE THAT SUCH MEN OUGHT TO BE BLOWN OUT OF THEIR POLITICAL EXI ENCE.

"These three men, of shallow pates indeed, but of mischievo hearts, have surely never heard what a Scotch philosopher said ab kings and priests, in a late lecture on the subject of the progress knowledge in the human mind!

"When one reflects on the dignity of human nature, and on that a mal the DUKE D'ANGOULEME, clapping his hand on the hilt of sword, as expressive of his desire to cut the thread of the life of hol ledge, the blood boils in the veins. HAD ASSASSINATION not prev it, the notorious DUKE DE BERRI would have done the same thing; HIS DESTINY WAS ALREADY FIXED. WHAT THAT OF HIS BROTHERS THE WHOLE TRIBE OF THE WRETCHED BOURBONS AND THEIR ABETTORS AND ABETTORS WILL BE, A SHORT TIME ONLY WILL SHEW TO MAKE MANIFEST."

The horrid tendency of this article is too obvious to need mment. It would make one smile if its inherent infamy l not make one shudder, to see the people who indulge in ch detestable rhapsodies, one day advocating, with all their ight and energy, the Roman Catholic religion in England, d leading it, at the same moment with execration in Spain;

one hour ridiculing the sacred rites and mysteries of the ristian Church at home, and in the same breath calling on all Christendom to join in the fight of Faith with the EEKS abroad; here we have a direct appeal to assasation, recommended by men scrupulously jealous of the nity of human nature.

The CHRONICLE may hint at the propriety of "kicking reign monarchs" off the stage, and escape with impunity, as as legal measures go; but in the eye of GOD and in the rt of MAN, a slight difference of language, or manner, or ss, or disposition, makes no difference in the crime which CHRONICLE advocates. The cowardly assassin who would RDER an Austrian or a Russian in cold blood, would rdly hesitate to perform the same diabolical office for an GLISHMAN. But we forget—the MORNING CHRONICLE ied MR. THISTLEWOOD, and made doggrel verses upon assassination of MR. PERCEVAL.

One thing is eminently ludicrous in the above quotation:— writer, in the midst of his death-dealing denunciations, aking of the three Monarchs whose deserts he proclaims, s they "have surely never heard what a Scotch Philosopher aid about Kings and Princes in a late lecture on the subject f the progress of knowledge in the human world;" as if any ly supposed they had.—Nothing was wanting to complete absurdity and the bathos of this supposition but one line re, telling us where the said lecture was published, whom ana what its price.

We cordially dislike WHIGS and Whiggery; but so many ble and honourable persons, excellent in every relation of , (barring their politics) have belonged, and do still belong, the true WHIG party, that we really feel a repugnance in lieving that the creed of modern Whiggery can be made up articles resembling that which we have now extracted from leading Whig journal.

The poor DUKE OF BEDFORD, who, taking his intellect, d his connexions, and all his affairs together, is really very ich to be pitied, has been persuaded to avow himself a RA-CAL, and wear what he calls a chapeau rouge, (meaning a ite hat. little JOHNNY confounding it with the old cap of erty, which he is not quite aware was only called rouge cause it happened to be red). However, he, or "IT," (as Grace is called where he is best known,) is not to be taken an exemplar in public life, and, with the exception of his race, we certainly do not know of any decided Whig who is made such a declaration. We put poor little BENNET holly out of the question. We confess, however, that we are xious to see who the men are who will dare to avow them-lves of that party, Whig or Radical, which, worse-condioned than a well-bred highwayman, not only hints at the cessity of robbing us of our lawful property, but suggests e propriety of cutting our throats in the dark afterwards.

THE "adjusters of contracts" are extremely fortunate in ving secured the weight and influence of MR. HENRY EY BENNET just at this period, as we perceive, by the lice reports, that a combination of unfortunate circumnces is likely to deprive the party of the virtues and talents
MR. WADDINGTON.

WE have received, at various times, innumerable letters on subject of the improper management of the State Lotteries; complaints in which, generally, have turned upon the de adopted in the drawing, with a view to keep up the ce of tickets. The imposition intended to be practised, s so self-evident, and the deception so very innocent, that never thought it necessary to notice what appeared to us erely the trick of a trader, quite sure that, in the main point drawing and distributing the prizes, nothing but justice and rness were to be expected.

The result of what was humorously termed by the venders he nice little Lottery" of Six Thousand Tickets, drawn last esday, carries with it an appearance of something so de-edly unlike what we looked for, that it becomes our duty, only to those friends who have written to us on the sub-t at other times, but to the public in general, to make an ervation upon it.

It will be remarked, that there were Six Thousand Tickets, l amongst other prizes, held out as baits to the public, there s ONE of twenty thousand pounds, and ONE of sixteen usand pounds. At the bottom of the scheme containing se prizes, stood the following line:—

No. 1, to decide No. 3001, and so on, in numerical progression."

t must be evident to a person giving the thing one mont's consideration, that this consequence never could take ce; because, as there existed but one prize of twenty thou-d pounds, it was morally and physically impossible that o tickets—the fate of one being decided by the other—could sess, each, a prize of twenty thousand pounds!

Persons who dabble in Lotteries are like HUME, never sus-ted of being either conjurors or calculators; and there-
, without further consideration than they could afford to placard announcing the twenty thousand, and the sixteen usand, and all the other thousand prizes, they bought into "nice little Lottery!" determined, forthwith, to aggrane their fortunes, buy services of plate, and galleries of pices, country houses, and town houses, and do five hundred er things, which neither twenty thousand pounds, nor six-n times twenty thousand pounds, would entitle them to do.
rk the result. The "nice little Lottery" is drawn; and Somebody—(in all probability the contractors themes)—wakes on Wednesday morning, and finds himself the xy possessor of 4467—a prize of twenty thousand pounds.
do not pretend to depict his rapture, or the raptures of his er half, and of all the minor portions of the family; but extacy he feels, whatever it may be, is simultaneously felt Mr. Somebody else, who reads an account of this success in paper, and is conscious that he holds No. 1467, which must be a prize of twenty thousand pounds, because the printed published scheme of the Lottery states, that—

No. 1, is to decide 3001, and so on, in numerical progression."

His raptures, and his joys, however, meet with a surprize, ot a disappointment, when he finds, after this printed and lished promise, that he—the holder of 1467—of the num-decided by another number in numerical progression, is only ave a SIXTEEN THOUSAND POUNDS prize, while the pa-el number gets twenty thousand!

We should say that his action would lie against the contractor, or vender, or authorised publisher of the false promise held out in the prospectus or scheme even upon this part of the affair.

But we have another question to ask, which, we confess, puzzles us even more than what we have already mentioned.

In order to save time in drawing (we presume) three thousand tickets are drawn instead of six thousand, and as we before said, "No. 1, is to decide No. 3001, and so in numerical progression."

If three thousand tickets only are drawn, No. 1467, in numerical progression, must have decided 4467, which, in fact, never could have been drawn. In this case, why is the 20,000*l. prize* given to the undrawn number in preference to the one which was actually drawn, and which according to the scheme was to decide the fate of the higher number?

Any person competent to explain away these doubts, and answer these questions, shall have a fair space allowed him in our next Number to do so. At present we do not understand the system; at least, for the sake of all parties concerned, we sincerely hope we do not.

Having made an official enquiry, we were told that it was settled, that if the £20,000 was drawn in the first 1,500 tickets, the higher number was to have the £20,000, and the lower number the £16,000; but our informant was unable to tell us who made the arrangement, and, most decidedly, such arrangement never was made public.

OUR attention has been specially called to the approaching election of a Preacher to LINCOLN'S INN—an office vacant by the elevation of MR. HEBER to the See of CALCUTTA, and for which two candidates only at present appear.

The one is DR. MALTBY, a gentleman whose attainments are of a very superior order, but whose orthodoxy some people affect to question. We might enter somewhat at length into this subject, and descant upon the dangers of Socinianism, did we not find the Doctor opposed, upon this occasion, to MR.
CUNNINGHAM of Velvet-cushion memory, a saint of the first water, and moreover a saint whom we happen to recollect at CAMBRIDGE. As far as the choice between the two present candidates goes, we confess we see but little difficulty, except indeed the difficulty of being compelled to choose one or the other of them.

This difficulty seems not to be insurmountable—the proposing of a third candidate would overcome it, and put the electors and their consciences much at their ease. The office is a desirable one, and has been so often filled by the highest clerical characters, that it is generally considered a steppingstone to the highest honours of our Church.

It surely is necessary, with this public impression of its value and consequence, to make the election carefully and suitably. There are many men who, by conduct and talents, are fully qualified for such a station; but if we were asked to name any person particularly eligible in every point of view for the choice of the electors, we should mention MR.
RENNELL, the Vicar of KENSINGTON, and late Christian Advocate in the University of CAMBRIDGE. To this gentleman, it is said, was offered the See of CALCUTTA—we know not how truly; but we do know, and say conscientiously, that a fitter successor to the present BISHOP, in the station which his Lordship has just vacated, could not be found.

MR. HUME says, that promoting 780 midshipmen to be lieutenants, since the peace, has cost the country half a million per annum! This makes the average pay of full-pay and half-pay lieutenants, taken altogether, at the rate of £641 0s. 6d. per annum each!

We are not aware, exactly, of the pay of the Navy, but are glad to find, according to MR. HUME'S statement, that a lieutenant on service has a larger income than a Lord of the Admiralty.

We conclude MR. HUME was as correct as usual. But we wonder where MR. CROKER was upon the occasion.

THE Silver Tray to be presented to DR. JOSEPH HUME by his constituents, is about two feet square, and "adorned," the CHRONICLE says, "with six figures, emblematical of the "qualities which a senator should possess."

It appeared to us, at first, that the emblems of qualities which a senator should possess were meant as a satirical lesson to MR. HUME, and that the combination of six figures was intended as a pleasing puzzle for his hours of arithmetical study; but we find, instead of any thing emblematical, that the six medallions contain accurate likenesses of the whole body of electors, together with the returning officer, who have secured to themselves immortal honour, by freely and independently sending to Parliament the tried advocate of Radical Reform and the purity of election. As for the plate itself, if its size be what the CHRONICLE states, MR. HUME'S constituents en masse might have held a meeting on it!

The facetious SAM ROGERS, upon reading the description we have partly quoted, observed to PETER MOORE, who was standing behind his chair, that "HUME would now, at all events, have one good Tray about him."—"No reflections upon Waiters, I beg Sir," said PETER, angrily, and left the room, as if he had heard somebody calling him.

"SMALL CHANGE" FOR MR. JOSEPH HUME.

IN a debate upon the half-pay of Irish Yeomanry, MR.
HUME observed, on Monday night, that he merely wished to shew the indiscriminate manner in which half-pay and pensions were granted in IRELAND.

On a former night, MR. HUME instanced a few cases of profligacy of this nature in Government; amongst others, he said, MAJOR COLLIS was not entitled to half-pay—and he gave the country these three reasons WHY he was not entitled to half-pay:—

I. Because he was not above forty years of age.

II. Because he had served in the army only a limited time.

III. Because he was in as good health as HUME himself.

In reply to these cogent reasons, MR. GOULBURN stated the following FACTS:—

I. As to MAJOR COLLIS'S age—he joined the army forty-seven years since!

II. As to his limited services—he had served forty-five years!!

III. As to his health—it was certified that he was forced to quit the service, having naturally a delicate constitution, being subject to perpetual attacks of the GOUT, having a decided LIVER complaint, and being afflicted with a dreadful PARA-LYTIC AFFECTION!!!

Upon hearing this, MR. HUME said, he had been misunderstood and misrepresented; and that he had written to several newspapers to shew that he had been mistaken—it was NOT MAJOR COLLIS to whom he objected, but MR. BRIDGEMAN—to MR. BRIDGEMAN he certainly did object, for those three reasons:—

I. Because he was not more than forty years of age.

II. Because he had served in the army a limited time.

III. Because he was in as good health as he (HUME) himself.

Whereupon MR. GOULBURN informed MR. HUME of three more FACTS:—

I. That as to MR. BRIDGEMAN'S age—he joined the British service, in South Carolina, forty-three years since!

II. That of this long life of service, ten years had been specially devoted to the Irish Yeomanry!!

III. That as to his health—MR. BRIDGEMAN was forced into retirement at an advanced age, having fallen from his horse, on service, in an apoplectic fit, and having been since afflicted with a constitutional determination of blood to his head!!!

MR. HUME took this "small change" as payment in full, and said no more. The motion was carried unanimously.

It really is too ridiculous!

ANECDOTE OF MR. HUME IN HIS YOUNGER DAYS.

A gentleman, extremely well known in a certain large house at the upper end of St. James's-street, happened many years ago to be travelling near Montrose, and met in a particularly cold day a cart loaded with coals, &c. upon which a boy was riding, crying at the same time most bitterly.

"What is the matter, my poor fellow?" said Mr. ———

"Oh," said young HUME, "I am sae cauld."

"Why don't you get down and walk, and then you would warm yourself?" said MR. ———.

"Vary true, Sir—vary true," replied JOSEPH, "but ye dinna consider—I shou'd wear out e' my shoon."

If it is curious to trace "the ruling passion strong in death," it is not less interesting to mark the prognostics of future excellence in early youth.

IN an age like this, which beyond all others pretends to be most tenacious of encroachments upon liberty, we would call the public attention to the during boldness of a Society, formed within the last few years, and which has lately stretched its power to a degree hitherto unknown in this once generous land of liberty. This Society, formed, directed, and supported by six individuals only, embraces, however, in its extent, persons of all ranks, professions, and political principles: it commences its operations soon after the meeting of Parliament, when the leaders re-elect their members, and its power goes on increasing rapidly till after Easter, when it is at its zenith. Its most alarming properties are its meeting at the hour of midnight, when both houses of Parliament generally adjourn to this assembly; and its uniting men of the most opposite principles.—Dangerous, and fearful must be the machinations and designs of a body of persons, who stifling their sentiments of enmity, enter into a mysterious league subversive of the liberties of our countrymen. Nor is this alone confined to a coalition of Tories, Whigs, and Radicals; Foreign Powers are permitted, nay called on, to strengthen the combination.

Other societies have supported themselves, in defiance of clamorous opposition, by the talents of their leaders, but the chiefs of the assembly to which we allude, despising such ordinary means of elevation, have raised themselves by depreciating others, and thus, like OLIVER CROMWELL himself, have created an authority none dare dispute. They have the power of admitting into their association any person; but rank, talent, fortune, or political considerations are insufficient, if obnoxious to any one of the leaders, and among the initiated, none can dare to say whether his own name may not be struck off the lists.

Authority so arbitrary, it might be conceived would be resisted, yet such is the importance attached to this society, that men estimate the consequence of others, only as they are, or are not, members of it.

On the Wednesdays appointed for the nocturnal confederations, every member presents himself with a certificate, labelled by one of the leaders. Without this precious manuscript, no ties of consanguinity, no claims of tender affection, can avail, and the loved husband, the fond friend, or adoring lover, will in vain sue for admission. Should any one among the association be suspected of having illegally obtained one of these certificates, the unhappy victim is instantly cast into a darkened apartment, debarred of the luxuries, or comforts, to which he has been accustomed from tender infancy, there to remain in a dreadful state of suspense till the heads of the league shall think fit to deliberate upon his alleged guilt, and should any illegality be discoverable in the manner of his admission, he will be ever after branded with infamy.

The year is now drawing to that period when the confederation opens. The secret committees will again be carried on. The mustering, the enrolling, the enumeration of the confederated again connived at, by a government which calls itself free. There will again be the same anxiety for election; hearts which once beat high with hope, shall again sink to despair; the proscribed will again become proscribed, and the fatal cause still remain a mystery. Our noblest matrons will in vain sue for the admission of their choicest treasures, their sons and daughters: blind to the charms of youth, and deaf to the imploring accents of age, wrapped in its proud security, the league will remain inexorable, and triumphant.

This then shall be a tale for future ages; that in an age when the cry for liberty rose loudest, when sovereignty was attacked, and all authority was contemned, there arose a secret junto which alone reigned unopposed, which could alone enforce authorrity; a junto so mysterious, that none can penetrate its intricate arcana; a junto which, in its own emphatic language, comprises "the whole world," and with a talismanic spell, unites every possible desideratum in the one little word—ALMACK'S.

LEGAL POLITICIANS.

IT has often been remarked, that men, celebrated at the bar, have always disappointed the expectations of their friends when they got into Parliament. But there is another great disadvantage, under which, lawyers, who wish to take a decided line in politics, labour, which is necessarily connected with their professional avocations.

For instance, we have seen that liberal, Parliamentary patriot, SCARLETT, advocate, with infinite success, at DURHAM, the cause of Church and State, against a Radical printer, whom he beat to a conviction. LUSHINGTON, not two months since—we mean the advocate and executor of the late QUEEN CAROLINE—laboured, with all his might, to convince the Courts of Civil Law that no positive proof was necessary to establish adultery, a series of small circumstances he held to be quite as good as any one great and decisive one.

On a memorable occasion—(the QUEEN'S trial)—we had BROUGHAM and DENMAN struggling nobly in the cause, and quoting the triumphant escape of their client from the verdict of a majority of the Peers against her, and exalting to the skies the wisdom and virtue of those noble Lords who gave her Majesty the advantage of their exculpatory votes. Last week, we had the same exemplary persons striving to prove that one of those very Noble Lords must have been mad at the moment when he gave such a vote!!

SERJEANT PELL shall speak, on this occasion, for himself. On LORD PORTSMOUTH'S case, the Learned Serjeant said—

"He would go to his (LORD PORTSMOUTH'S) conduct in the House of Lords, during that memorable period of the Queen's trial. There LORD PORTSMOUTH exercised the duties of a peer. He would suppose the bill last by one instead of six, and that one had been LORD PORTSMOUTH. Suppose, also, the present inquiry going on at the same time—would he not have been held of sufficiently sound mind to have determined the fate of that question? He (MR. SERJEANT PELL) well recollected that important period—public expectation hung upon every vote. He stood by one of the ablest advocates of her late Majesty, and saw that gentleman bending forward with breathless anxiety, to listen to the votes as they were delivered: he saw him marking on the paper in his hand each vote as it was pronounced. At length the Lord Chancellor began with the bench of Earls; he called upon LORD PORTSMOUTH. There was a solemn stillness—a death-like silence pervading the House—it was only broken by a whisper of "Give him time—give him time." He called back his recollection to what was doing there, and he saw the Jury now called upon to declare by their verdict that LORD PORTSMOUTH was then insane; that his intellect was as that of a boy eight years of age. He had seen, when he turned round on that occasion, the face of his learned friend beaming with delight at the triumph which he enjoyed from the vote then delivered. He could not but marvel now, to see him endeavouring to prove that the person who gave it was a madman."

We do not marvel at any thing which such persons as Messrs. DENMAN and BROUGHAM say or do professionally; they labour in their vocation. But we do marvel, that SERJEANT PELL (who has lately volunteered the character of Radical) should have made so unfortunate an allusion to the conduct of his noble client. The cry, "Give him time! give him time!" in the House of Lords, seems to us an evident proof that some particular indulgence was really required for his Lordship, and the decision to which he finally came is by no means such as, in our minds, to invalidate the powerful arguments and evidence adduced by her late Majesty's advocates, in support of the extreme weakness, or, as they would have it, lamentable insanity, under which his Lordship, at that period, is said to have laboured.

Of one part of MR. SERJEANT PELL'S speech, however, we feel it right certainly to take notice; the learned Serjeant is made to say, (in the newspaper reports) "Had the bill been lost by one instead of six," &c. MR. SERJEANT PELL, we are quite sure, could not have said any such thing, unless he wished practically to prove a man might have a very defective memory and yet not be an ideot. The Bill of Pains and Penalties against the QUEEN was NOT LOST; it was CARRIED by a majority of six. And this little fact we shall take leave uniformly to repeat as long as we live, whenever her MAJESTY is spoken of as a persecuted person ACQUITTED of the crimes laid to her charge.

A WEEK or two since we noticed the entire inattention to the interests of the AMERICAN PEOPLE displayed by CONGRESS, and took leave to contrast the apathetic neglect with which petitions were treated there, with the energy and activity with which popular topics are taken up and discussed in our own Parliament.

Turning our eyes to the Chamber of Deputies in FRANCE, one cannot but be forcibly stricken with the tone and spirit of the following debate, or discussion, upon what in England, would have been called a most reasonable petition upon a question of great oppression, which took place last week:—

"M. DEMAILLY, a landed gentleman, at Lille, required that the usage of hydrogen gas should be prohibited in France (laughter!) in consequence of the distress its use occasioned to the merchants, manufacturers of oil, and cultivators of oleaginous seeds and plants (voice on the left, 'refer that to the literati!!!')

"M. BANINE—The cultivation of oleaginous plants has increased within a few years very much in our country, but the use of gas has also extended itself, and the manufacturers of oil seem to dread the progress of this new light (laughter!) A wise government ought equally to protect every species of industry, on the value of which experience and individual interest can alone decide.—The Committee moves the Order of the Day.

"M. LENONEX DUCHATELET—Lighting by gas tends to augment the consumption of coal, which is already not sufficiently plentiful for the various uses for which it is required, while our markets are crowded with oils which find no purchasers. It seems to me, that by placing limits to the employment of gas, we should procure a greater quantity of combustibles for our own manufacturers, and a surer sale for the oleaginous productions of our soil. I move that the petition be referred to the Ministers.

"M. DE LABORDE—The Chamber ought not to enter into questions of private interest. It is very natural that oil merchants should be jealous of the employment of gas; just as we might expect the wax dealer should petition against the use of tallow, the small beer brewers should desire the suppression of all ale making, and the whole tribe of beer makers and sellers should request us to shut up coffee houses, and forbid the use of all other drink but what is made from malt and hops (laughter!!!)"

Now, absurd as the French Deputies seem to think such a petition, and vastly comical as they seem to fancy their own little dapper observations upon it, such a debate cannot fail to fill every thinking Englishman with respect and veneration for his own HOUSE OF COMMONS, where, so far from laying down as a rule that "the Chamber ought not to enter into "questions of private interest," the private interests of every individual amongst us, are scrupulously maintained and jealously protected.

The French Deputies are a merry set of fellows, and the American Congress, "I guess," a noble race of free-men; but when we find recorded that the one assembly treats the private interests of their constituents, and the petitions of the PEOPLE, with contempt, and the other with joke and ridicule, we are disposed to turn to our own base, venal, and corrupt PARLIAMENT with a feeling of contentment and affection founded on something better, we believe, than mere national prejudice.

THEATRICALS.

WE really have no opportunity to exercise that power which persons in our capacity assume to themselves; for what with the concerts twice a week, and the repetition of old pieces on the other evenings, the affairs jog on so quietly, that interference seems unnecessary.

We think it but a duty to those who perhaps do not see the daily papers, to say, that MISS TREE has given the most satisfactory explanation of her indisposition; and we find, as indeed we almost anticipated we should, that her apparently trivial and inconsiderate conduct arose from an over-anxiety to do as much as she possibly could, with hardly common regard to her health.

MR. BRAHAM has not accounted for his intemperance;—that is no "look out" of ours.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY.

The Committee on the Marriage Act Amendment Bill was postponed till this day fortnight.

A Select Committee was appointed for the purpose of consolidating the Scotch Turnpike and Highway Laws.

The Report of the Weights and Measures Bill was ordered for consideration on this day three weeks.

MR. BROUGHAM moved for leave to bring in a Bill to regulate the retail trade in Beer and Ale. The Hon. Gent. said it was on the same principle as the one of last Session. Nothing could afford greater consolation to the cultivators of land than reducing the duty on beer, as that would increase the consumption. The Bill would be a great safeguard to the morals of the people, by enabling them to take a wholesome beverage at their own houses, instead of tippling at gin shops; and this, too, at a much cheaper rate, for at present he paid double for his pot of beer at the public house.

SIR T. LETHBRIDGE supported the motion, and hoped the Malt Duty would be further reduced.

MR. ALD. WOOD said, if the people paid a high price for their beer, it was on account of the high rate of the Malt Duty. The brewer got no more than 2d. a pot for his beer, and out of that he was obliged to pay for hops, barley, &c.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER was anxious to relieve the lower classes, which had been shewn by the reduction already made. In a few days he should submit a proposition which would give a certain benefit to the consumer as well as the grower of corn.—Leave was given to bring in the Bill.

MR. BROUGHAM, alluding to the speech of a French Minister, (the author of various literary works, who once wrote in favour of Christianity, who almost defied the Bourbons, and who at another time compared the son of Buonaparte to our Saviour), asked, whether the fact was, (as that Minister is reported to have said) that the Duke of Wellington had made a communication at Verona, approving of the aggression of France, and that he had written an official note, stating it to be the opinion of this Government, that France was entitled to form measures of precaution along the Spanish frontier against disease as well as liberty?

MR. SECRETARY CANNING replied, that the speech alluded to, given in the Moniteur, was the most official, and the text was correct—but it was a statement picked out of a long series of papers, part of an argument, in which an admission was made for the sake of giving a contrast. MR. BROUGHAM was satisfied with the explanation, the note alluded to could only be a document which authenticated the fact and contradicted the inference, would there be any objection, he asked, to lay the whole of the papers on the table, so that a fair explanation might be given?

MR. SECRETARY CANNING said, his hopes of peace were diminished, but not destroyed; while any chance of conciliation remained, it would be inexpedient to comply with the wishes of the Hon. Member. At the proper time he would give every explanation.

MR. BROUGHAM again expressed himself satisfied, and for the future his discretion should be guided by the Right Hon. Secretary's dictation.

MR. MADERLEY submitted his resolutions on the Sinking Fund. The object of these resolutions was to shew that the country might be relieved to the amount of 7,000,000l. of taxes, if the House would adopt his mode of relief; and further, that public credit would be supported, the landed proprietor and the fundholder conciliated, and lastly, to establish an efficient Sinking Fund, which, he contended, would produce all these desirable purposes. Mr. Pitt's scheme for making the land tax perpetual, in his opinion, was erroneous. Mr. Pitt concluded that these measures would cause a rapid redemption of the tax, and thus save the country a revenue of 400 thousand pounds. The Hon. Member then stated some close calculations, from which he drew this conclusion, that at the rate at which they had proceeded in the last year, the debt would not be extinguished in fewer than a thousand and twenty-five years. But if he were to state the amount of debt which might be reduced in a thousand years by the 400,000l. the calculation would seem almost ludicrous, as it would effect a reduction of 136 millions of millions of pounds sterling. The Hon. Member, to elucidate the efficiency of his new propositions, suggested that 100l. in the 3 per Cent. Stock should purchase 3l. a year of the Land Tax. If the owner of the land refused to redeem the Tax within six months, the stranger might then come in on the same terms. By this he would gain four per cent.; and he would recommend that it should be paid by the Collectors of the Tax, but that he should still have a claim to seize on the land. He would not give him all the advantages of the proprietor, but he would give him a vote for Members of Parliament. If the stranger came in at the expiration of six months, and redeemed the tax, he would allow the proprietor 5 years to reclaim it in, providing, however, that he should pay 5 per cent. more than he would have originally paid; which 5 per cent. should be the stranger's profit. This plan would hold out strong inducements to corporate bodies to make large purchases of the Land Tax. He would make it carry with it qualifications for killing game—for sitting as Magistrates—for voting at elections; and these advantages would render the Land Tax extremely saleable, while they cost the country nothing. The operation of this plan would, in the course of three years, take 41,000,000l. out of the stock market; and, by reducing the interest on the Four per cent. effect an annual saving of 750,000l.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER was of opinion, the Hon. Member's proposition was perfectly untenable. It was essential that, under common and ordinary circumstances, a Sinking Fund should be distinguished by permanency and certainty. But there was not in those Resolutions one single word which said we were to have a Sinking Fund at the end of seven years. The object of the Honourable Gentleman was to take away the taxes which formed the Sinking Fund. The nation would thus be left without any resource, and if at the expiration of this plan its circumstances should require exertion and action, they might go and fish in the ocean of the Sinking Fund without knowing whether they should catch a herring or whale. To say to the proprietor of the land, "if you do not choose to purchase upon our terms, here is a third person, who shall come in and have a claim upon your property," was in his mind a hard thing upon that class. Mr. Pitt saw this difficulty, and endeavoured to provide for it, by making a difference in the terms upon which the tax should be redeemed. According to this plan the first purchaser sacrificed 10 per cent. and the second 20. But the Hon. Gent. proposed to make the conditions more onerous on the proprietor, by placing the stranger upon a more advantageous footing. He should move the previous question upon the first resolution, and so on down to the twelfth, which he should propose to meet with a negative, as well as the two last.

CAPTAIN MADERLEY supported the motion.

MR. RICARDO said, the proposed measure was certainly not a substitute for the Sinking Fund, for it was nothing like it. With respect to the Sinking Fund, he was prepared to vote for the remission of taxes to its amount; but he could not vote for the reduction of 7,000,000l. because he would not vote for more than he conscientiously believed the amount of the Sinking Fund to be.

MR. BARING expressed his surprise that his Hon. Friend (Mr. Maberley) after such a number of years of experience and attention to matters of Finance, should have suffered himself to come down to the House with a bubble like this—the lightest bubble that was ever blown within its walls. The time was past when the Finances of this country were to be managed by conjuring; and he really should not have been more surprised if his Hon. Friend had come down to the House and told them he was going to get into a quart bottle, than when he said that 1,200,000l. was equivalent to seven millions of revenue.

MR. TIERNEY said the Hon. Member for Taunton (Mr. Baring) had told the House, with regard to the motion of his Hon. Friend, that we were past the age of conjuring. He deprecated conjuring, and yet he had himself put the cups and balls on the table. If indeed the Chancellor of the Exchequer would treat this 7,000,000l. as matter of surplus, and not call it Sinking Fund, a great part of his objection would be taken away. The total amount of taxes taken away would not be a total amount lost. If the whole seven millions were taken off, they would soon see the benefit of the repeal.

MR. HUSKISSON observed, that the debate had become extended into Monday, when his Right Hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, would bring forward his proposal on the subject of the Sinking Fund in the shape of a Bill.

MR. CALCRAFT supported the motion.

The House divided on the first motion—Ayes, 73—Noes, 157—Majority against it, 85. The other Resolutions were negatived.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, FEB. 25.—On the 16th inst. there was a slight disturbance at Lyons, occasioned by the opposition offered by the Authorities to the Military to the progress of a procession of masks, which, under the privilege of Carnival, represented the Funeral of Trade. They were taken and retaken, and the military ultimately beaten off. To-day, in the afternoon, an individual uttered aloud several times in the Place Bellecour, the cry of Vive l'Empereur. Attempts were made by gendarmes and officers to arrest him, but he was surrounded by a number of persons who rescued him.

In the Sitting of the Chamber of Deputies on Tuesday last, M. Villele, the French Minister of Finance, thus concludes his speech in support of the projet for granting 100 millions of francs for the ordinary supply of the current year:—"I think that peace is preferable to war; but I think, also, that in the present situation of affairs the maintenance of peace is impossible, and that at all events it will be more dangerous than war."

The speech of Chateaubriand, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, is decidedly warlike. He admitted that "no Government has a right to interfere in the affairs of another Government; because, if that principle were admitted, no State would be tranquil;" but he justified the interference of England in the affairs of France, in 1792, by what France was now doing towards Spain.

News from Madrid of the 18th has been this day received by extraordinary channel. The Cortes, under the fear of a war, have offered a full and entire amnesty to all the Royalists who lay down their hands. General Morillo is to command the army of reserve in Andalusia, if the King is removed to Seville.

MISCELLANEOUS.

We are happy to say the Duke of York was so much recovered in his indisposition as to leave London on Thursday, about one o'clock, for Brighton, on a visit to the King.

On Thursday, at two o'clock, a Cabinet Council was held at the Foreign Office, which was attended by all the Cabinet Ministers, and continued in deliberation till about four o'clock.

On Wednesday night, a King's Messenger was sent off from the Foreign Office to St. Petersburgh.

MR. Portman was, on Wednesday last, elected Member of Parliament for Dorsetshire. There was no opposition.

Mr. Bowring has published a frothy appeal to the public, under the title of "Details of the Arrest of an Englishman,"—in which he endeavours to make it appear that his detention should be resented as a national insult. We have not time to discuss the merits of the pamphlet, but we refer to a review in the Literary Register of the day, a Paper by no means remarkable for aristocratic principles, by which his claims are very clearly refuted.

On Thursday, a Meeting was held in the Egyptian Hall, Mansion House, to take into consideration the important question—whether a Petition should not be forwarded to both Houses of Parliament to repeal an Act passed in the 37th of Henry VIII. relative to the Parishes in the City of London and Liberties thereof, respecting the Payment of Tithes."—Several Resolutions were agreed to, when a gentlemen addressed the Meeting, after which the Petition was unanimously agreed to, and that the Bishop of London should present the House of Lords, and the Lord Mayor to the House of Commons.

A Petition is now receiving signatures in the City, to the Parliament, praying for the repeal of the duty on coals. The petitioners state that the coal-trade ought to be thrown open, and the inhabitants of London should be permitted to purchase coals where they can be obtained cheapest.

An Address from 600 of the leading mercantile and shipping establishments in the metropolis, to Mr. Wallace, late Vice-President of the Board of Trade, expressive of their regret at his resignation, and of the high sense they entertain of his valuable services in the commerce and navigation of the empire, was presented on Wednesday.

The Anniversary Meeting of the Mendicity Suppression Society took place on Wednesday. The report was highly satisfactory in one respect—the exhausted state of the funds of the society. The meeting was well attended.

On Monday, the despatches for Madras and China, by the Kellie Castle, were closed at the East India House, and delivered to the Purser of that ship.

On Wednesday a Court of Directors was held at the East India House, when Captain W. H. C. Dalrymple was sworn into the command of the ship Vansittart, consigned to China direct. Captain R. Newall, of the ship Scaleby Castle, took leave of the Court previous to departing for Bombay and China.—The despatches for Bombay and China, by the ship Waterloo, were closed at the East India House, and delivered to the Purser of that ship.

THE ARMY.—One troop of the 9th Lancers has received orders to march forthwith from Lymington to Christchurch Barracks.—A detachment of the 2d Dragoon Guards has marched from York, and subsequently detached one troop to Scarborough, and another to Whitby.—A troop of the 7th Dragoon Guards has marched from Glasgow to Irvine and Ayr, where it is to be stationed, in addition to the Cavalry Barracks.—A detachment from the Depots at Aldershott and Chatham has arrived at Deptford, for the purpose of embarking, with the 13th Regiment under the command of Captain Tronson, of the 13th Regiment of Foot, on board the Competitor convict-ship.

CAMBRIDGE, FEB. 28.—At a congregation on Wednesday, the following Gentlemen were admitted to degrees:—MASTERS OF ARTS—Mr. Miles, St. John's College; Rev. M. Camidge, Queen's College; W. Hodson, Clare Hall.—BACHELORS OF ARTS—J. Torriano, Caius Hall; D. B. Lennard, Jesus College.—MEMBERS' PRIZES—The subjects for the present year are, for the Senior Bachelors—"Quo Fructus Historiæ Ecclesiasticæ Studiosis percipiendi sunt?"—Porson Prize—The passage fixed upon for the present year is, Shakespeare, Henry VIII. Act IV. Scene VI. beginning with "This Royal Infant," &c.; and ending with "And so stand fix'd." The metre to be Tragicum Iambicum Trimetrum Acatalecticum.

A parcel, containing 600 sovereigns, directed to Attwoods, Spooner and Co. bankers, of Birmingham, was last week stolen from one of the London coaches. The guard is in custody.

Sufficient has transpired, we understand, to warrant the arrest of Williams (one of the persons suspected of the murder of Mr. Harris, of Lexden, Essex, about 35 years since), for trial.

Wednesday morning, a fire took place at a hat manufactory in Cooper's-buildings, London Wall. It broke out about half past 6 o'clock; and the whole of the manufactory was soon burnt down.

On Monday afternoon, as a young woman, dressed in black, was with an empty basket in her hand, was passing the end of St. Martin's-le-Grand, while a heavy laden waggon was coming towards Newgate-street, in getting out of the way her foot slipped, and the fore wheel of the waggon passed over her, and crushed her head to atoms.

BOW-STREET.—On Tuesday, a young Law Student, from Lincoln's-inn, was charged with having challenged a gentleman, in consequence of some quarrel at a tavern in the neighbourhood of Covent-garden. He expressed before the Magistrates his determination to meet his opponent, even at the risk of forfeiting any recognizances which he might be called upon to enter into. "Then, Sir," said the Magistrate, I shall call upon you to enter into your own recognizance of 500l. and two sureties in 250l. each to keep the peace; and in order that your ardour may have time to cool, I require you to give 24 hours notice of bail, and in the mean time you are committed to the House of Correction."—Defendant was committed accordingly.

OLD BAILEY.

THURSDAY.—Sentence of Death was passed on Charles Cox for forgery; James Fairier, William Harding, John Walker, Jonathan Burbridge, Thomas Gibson, alias Blacket, Henry Seaton, John Hall, and Joseph Froome, for burglaries; Robert Hatcham, for housebreaking; Henry Cox, for highway robbery; Henry Dale, John Jones, and Mary Ann Sloat, for stealing in dwelling-houses; and William Hale, for horse stealing.—To be transported for Life—John Jones, Ann Oldfield, and Martha Dowling.—To be transported for Fifteen Years—Thomas Guntrip, Sarah Cherry.—To be transported for Seven Years—Thomas Arnold, Walter Davis, John Holyhend, George Bloomfield, John Mardell, John Baldock Robertson, Joshua Hayworth, Wm. Thomas, John Davis, Jas. Stroud, Joseph Benge, Jas. Riley, Alex. Mitchell, Robert Davis, and Thomas Arnold.

Sessions were adjourned to the 9th of April next.

On Wednesday, T. Watts, aged 25 years; W. Brown, aged 37; John Fuller, aged 22 years; and Mark Herd, aged 22 years, for burglary in the dwelling-house of J. Rennie, Esq. No. 4, Euston-square. W. Harris, for robbing his master, Colonel De Burgh, of 600l. J. IN SIX EASY LESSONS of ONE HOUR EACH.—Mr. BRADBURY, Private Tutor at Westminster School, solicits the attention of Ladies and Gentlemen to his unrivalled and infallible system of beautiful PENMANSHIP, whereby he pledges himself to teach persons of all ages to write with ease, elegance, and expedition, (whatever may be the deformity of their present writing) in six; respective Lessons. This system, as it equally promotes the attainment of a bold and masculine hand calculated for business, and of a light and graceful manuscript adapted to Ladies; also secures to the Pupil the valuable quality of writing straight, without lines, with wonderful dispatch and accuracy, and, moreover, will steady the hand of the most tremulous writer. Upwards of 2000 specimens, and numerous recommendatory letters may be seen, and references given to persons of the first distinction, some of whom are upwards of 50 years of age, and Ladies and Gentlemen attended at their own residences. A new and practical system of Short Hand, taught in a few lessons, so as to enable the writer to decipher what he has written with inconceivable ease.—Apply, (or direct, post paid) at the Academy, 464, Strand, near Charing Cross.

SILKS—SILKS SELLING OFF.

ANSELM SHEARS, gratefully impressed with the favours which for fourteen years he has received from the ROYAL FAMILY, NOBILITY, and GENTRY, respectfully informs them, that, in consequence of the Lease of his House having expired, he is compelled to SELL OFF the whole of his valuable Stock, comprising not only an immense variety of Fashionable Silks, Poplins, Cachmeres, Norwich Crapes, Gros de Naples, Ducapes, Florences Silks, Shaded Sarsnets, Shawls, Scarfs, &c. but those new and beautiful Patterns at present blossoming in the Looms, all of which must be SOLD without the least RESERVE.—All Persons indebted to the Concern are solicited to make their payments.—Anselm Shears, No. 11, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden.

SELLING OFF.—REAL BARGAINS IN SILKS, SHAWLS, MUSLIN, and LACES.—Florence striped and checks, at 3s. 6d. to 5s. 6d. the dress; rich levantines, 3s. 6d. to 5s. 6d; Gros de Naples, 2s. 9d. to 4s 6d.; stout sarsnets, 2s. 6d. to 3s. 6d.; good white sarsnets, 2s. 4d. to 2s. 9d.; superior white satins for slips, 2s. 6d. to 4s. 6d.; a variety of figured silks, 3s. 6d. to 4s. 6d. (worth double the money); 5000l. stock of family mourning, lace veils, scarfs, and dresses, at half price; rich gauze dresses from 9s. 6d. to 30s. the full dress, sold last year at 2 and 3 guineas each; 600 superb muslin dresses, for evening wear, 5s. 6d. to 19s. the dress; beautiful Zamora shawls, 4s. 6d. to 9s. 6d.; rich imitation India shawls 10s. to 6l. The whole of the large Stock will be sold off hand, at S. LEWIS'S, 20, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, who is going to remove, on the 20th of March, to 195, Regent-street.—N.B. The trade and country dealers must apply before 11 o'clock, or they cannot be served.

ARGYLL-ROOMS.—The Article of LACE, so indispensible a la toilette des dames, has arrived at a perfection in this country, which must have surpassed the most sanguine expectation of its admirers. The rich and elegant designs in dresses, veils, scarfs, tippets, &c. &c. which are now introducing by DISON, WILLSON, and CO. 237, Regent-street, are very superior to any thing hitherto offered to the public, both in texture and execution of the patterns. Every week D. W. and Co. produce fresh novelties, either in foreign or British lace. The foreign department their stock contains striped and flounced Brussels and point dresses, shawls, veils, scarfs, cuffs, flounces, tappets, ruffles and frills, black Chantilly dresses, squares, veils, &c. Brussels, point, Mechlin, and Valenciennes lace. In British lace, the public will find an elegant assortment of Northampton, Buckingham, and other laces, flouncings, footings, &c. a superb collection of striped, flounced, and figured dresses, squares, scarfs, veils, tippets, &c. on the gassed nett, (commonly called Urling's lace) which they warrant quite new, notwithstanding the contrary assertion of any house in London.—N.B. D. W. and Co use no such quackery as sealing their goods.—No. 237, Regent-street, facing the Argyll Rooms

URLING'S LACE.—DISON, WILLSON, and CO. of No. 237, Regent-street, adverting to a representation contained in Advertisements of Urling and Co. of 147, Strand, that Urling's Lace is only to be had genuine at their House, and at no other Shop in London, feel themselves called upon, in justice to the public and themselves, to state that they warrant to sell, and will continue to sell, upon the Terms of their Advertisements, the genuine Gassed Lace (ushered into the world as Urling's Lace) the same article as sold at 147, Strand, and in defiance of the puffs and boastings of which they have hereby endeavour to appropriate to themselves the exclusive benefit of an article to which they have no right: and Dison, Willson, and Co. are prepared to meet, and hereby challenge, every investigation and competition. The truth is, there is no Patent for the exclusive sale of the Gassed or Urling's Lace, and Dison, Willson, and Co. obtain it from the same sources from which Urling and Co. themselves have always been, and are now, supplied with the article.

FAMILY LINEN WAREHOUSE, 77, Oxford-street, nearly opposite the Pantheon.—J. D'OYLY, many years with the late T. CRAIG, 77, Oxford-street, LINEN DRAPER, SILK MERCER, &c. retiring, since his decease, purchased a share of the Business, (which will in future be carried on under the firm of CRAIG and D'OYLY) the management of which is entrusted to him for the benefit of the Widow and Family, begs leave to introduce himself to the kind indulgence of his Friends and the Public in general; and trusts, by unremitting attention to business, to retain that preference with which his predecessor was so highly favoured.

C. and D'O. beg to observe, they have just received a very large supply of every description of Linen Drapery, Silk Mercery, Hosiery, &c. &c. which they intend selling at those very low prices which are peculiar to their house; none but the very best goods are kept, and every article warranted perfect. Their Stock consists of 7-8ths and 4-4ths Irish Linen, German, Manx, Russia and Scotch Hollands for Sheeting, 5-4ths and 6-4ths Irish ditto, Huckabacks, Diapers, Lawns, French Cambrics, Muslins, Jeans, Jeanettes, Kendals, Dowlas, Damask Table Cloths from 1 to 9 yards long, Napkins to match, Counterpanes, Marseilles Quilts, Blankets, Bombasins, Poplins, Norwich Crapes, Gros de Naples, French width, Sarsenets, Pelisse Cloths, Bath Clonking, Flannels, town-printed Furnitures, Prints, Stuffs, Cotton and Silk Shawls, with a large assortment of Hosiery and Gloves.—C. and D. beg it may be particularly observed, that the No. of their Warehouse is 77, Oxford-street, nearly opposite the Pantheon; the name of CRAIG and D'OYLY in each window.

ECONOMY.—TURNER and CLARKSON having taken (the Premises, No. 17, Coventry-street) the Old Established Linen Warehouse recently occupied by Mr. Edwards, beg to inform their Friends and the Public that they have made large purchases in IRISH LINEN, SHEETINGS, MUSLINS, &c. which for cheapness far exceed any thing ever offered for Sale; also an amazing cheap article in Real Scotch Hollands, for Gentlemen's Shirts. They have also some of the Old Stock remaining, which must be sold, and will be offered for nearly half price. Persons making large purchases will find this an opportunity worthy their immediate attention.—Family Linen Warehouse, 17, Coventry-street, opposite the Haymarket.

BLANKETS, COUNTERPANES, SHEETINGS, DAMASK TABLE LINEN, Welsh Flannel, India Long Cloth, Irish Linen, French Cambric, and General Linen Drapery, Haberdashery, and Silk Mercery Warehouse, 59, Oxford-street, next door to Binter's old established Fur Warehouse.—KINNING and CO. now offer to the Nobility and Families in general a new and select Stock in the above branches of business, not at half price, as advertisements generally puff, but at such low prices as K. and Co. can with confidence assert will meet their entire approbation, and ensure to them future encouragement. Blankets at the following low prices, proved only by inspection—1¾ yds long, 4s. 9d.; 2 yds do. 5s. 6d.; 2¼ yds 7s. 6d.; 2¼ yds, 11s; 2¾ do. 14s. 6d.; 3 yds do. 17s. and in proportion to four yds: Counterpanes, 2 yds square. 6s.; 2¼ yds do.; 2½ yds do. 8s. 6d; 2¾ yds do. 10s.; 3 yds do. 12s. 6d.; Marseilles Quilts, 2¼ yds square, 13s. 6d.; 2¾ do. 15s.; 3 yds do. 16s.; 3¼ yds do. 18s. 6d.; all warranted to measure as stated above; Sarvants' Sheetings 9d. per yard; the best made, 1s.; 9d. wide Russia, 11d. per yard; 1¼ wide do. 1s. 2d.; 1¾ yd; the best made, 1s. 4d.; 2¼ yds do. require no seam, 2s. 3d.; Table Linen, Damask Napkins, 7s. 6d. per dozen; Breakfast Cloths, 1¼ square, 1s. 10d.; 1½ ditto, 3s. 3d.; 1¾ ditto, 4s. 9d.; 2 yards ditto, 6s. 6d.; 2¼ ditto, 8s. 3d.; double damask do. 11s. 6d.; 3 yds long do. 14s. double damask do. 19s.; 3¼ yds do. 22s. 6d.; 4 yds do. 25s.; and in proportion to the largest made. Several boxes of Irish Linens, of the most approved makers, now selling from 1s. per yard; a fine quality, for Gentlemen's wear, 1s. 3½; Real Welch Flannels, very fine, 1s. 6d. and 1s 8d. per yard; India Long Cloth, perfectly free from dress 12½d. and the finest made is. 3d. per yard. Several boxes of French Cambric Handkerchiefs, the largest size 24s. per dozen; fine Irish sheetings, one yard and a quarter wide, 1s. 6d. with every other article in Linens for household purposes. Their Stock of plain, figured, and striped Gros de Naples are now offered to the public at a great reduction in price; purchasers of these articles, and of Mourning, will find an advantageous market. White Muslins and Dresses of every description are still at their reduced prices, and some new Spring Patterns just purchased for ready money will be sold at the same reduction. K. and Co. take this opportunity of informing their present friends and those who may in future honour them with their commands, that they have extended their Business by adding to it the general Haberdashery, Silk Mercery, Glove and Silk Hosiery departments, which they pledge themselves to offer upon the lowest possible terms, and to sell articles of the best manufacture. A per centage allowed upon all purchases amounting to 10l. and upwards at Kinning and Co. 59 Oxford-street.

OLD PORT 35s. Superior SHERRY 36s. and CAPE MADEIRA, 16s. per dozen.—One dozen of each of the above Wines; Bottles, Hampers, &c. included, will be forwarded by a remittance of 5l.; or one dozen Port, and one dozen Sherry, bottles, &c. for 4l.; or two dozen Cape Madeira, Bottles, &c. 2l.—Champaignes, last landed, sparkling, creaming, Red and White, (Pris Soleau, Avize growers,) 4l 4s. per dozen.—Madeira, Teneriffe, Lisbon, Vidonia, Calcavella, 40s. per dozen. Now landing, CHAMPAGNES, from the Duke of York, London Docks, first quality, 84s. per dozen.

TO the NOBILITY and GENTRY returning to Town.—J. ARMSTRONG, grateful for the preference so decidedly given to his Establishment last year, begs leave to inform those Ladies, who, on their return, wish to be supplied with every article of Dress in the Court Costume, that they will find a most splendid variety, and doubtless the best selected Stock in London, at 32, Oxford street, exactly opposite Dean-street, Soho, consisting of French width Levantines, of the most beautiful colours, from 3s. 6d. to 4s. 9d. the latter price of which is generally sold at 6s. and 8s. 6d.; Plain Gros de Naples 3s. 4d. to 4s. 9d.; good white satins, 2s. 6d.; excellent, 3s. 6d.; very rich, 4s. 6d.; black ditto, 3s. 6d. to 4s. 6d.; and exceedingly rich ditto, 4s. 6d.; coloured satins, 3s. 6d. to 4s. 6d.; French embroidered gauze dresses, to be had at no other house, and considered the most superb article of the kind ever introduced, price two guineas: gauze dresses, 12s. 6d. each; ditto handkerchiefs, of all colours, 2s. to 5s. 6d.; silk handkerchiefs, 2s. each; French bland dresses, much in demand for balls and dress parties, from 2l. 2s. to 6l.; blond flounces, 30s. each; Brussels worked veils, 6s. 6d.; very superior, 12s. 6d.; and point work, one guinea; Lace Dresses, two guineas to 10l.—J. Armstrong particularly recommends the last mentioned article, as all the Veils and Dresses are worked by persons in his employ, and begs to say, that Ladies may have their own designs worked in veils or dresses. A complete stock of Haberdashery and Muslins of every description, at the reduced price. No patterns cut, and all country letters must be post-paid.—J. Armstrong, 32, Oxford street, exactly opposite Dean-street, Soho, and next door to Miles's Furniture Warehouse.

ARGYLL HOUSE, Regent-street.—In consequence of HODGE and LOWMAN'S daily increasing Trade requiring more extensive Premises, they have been induced to purchase two LARGE HOUSES adjoining the one they now occupy, and thrown the whole into one, and having added to their already extensive Stock of LINEN DRAPERY and SILK MERCERY, every description of good and cheap HABERDASHERY and HOSIERY, with a most superb Collection of rich Lace Dresses, Shawls, Scarfs, Handkerchiefs, &c. the whole of which combined forming, without an exception, the most complete Establishment of the kind in Europe. Their present Stock consists of superb Hambro' and Scotch table linen, Russia and Irish sheetings, Marseilles quilts, counterpanes and blankets, rich velvity Lyons, bombasines, &c. which, in consequence of the alterations, are to be sold at such prices as were never before heard of, even in those Cheap Times. The following are a few of the leading articles:—21 dozen of damask breakfast cloths, 19d. each; handsome damask napkins, 7s. 6d. a dozen; double ditto, 10s. 6d.; strong mock Russia sheets, 5s. 6d. fine do. 8s. a pair; real Russia, 10s.; real Russia sheeting, full yd. and qr. wide, 10d. a yard, (worth 15d.) 30 pieces do. very fine, 15d and 18d. a yard; a few piece of German sheeting, of the same quality, 20d. and 22d. fine ditto, the full width, which requires no seam, 2s. 7d.) the common price is 3s. 3d.); Irish sheeting, yard and quarter wide, 14d.; fine ditto, 16d.; 285 pieces of very fine Irish, full yard and half wide, 2s. a yard (which cannot be equalled at 3s. 3d.); elegant Marseilles quilts, full three yards square, 15s. 6d. each; rich damask cloths, full two and a half yards long, 7s. each; double do. 10s.; three yds long, 12s. 6d.; double do. 15s. 6d.; three and a half, 15s. 6d.; four yds long, 20s.; three cases of the richest Irish damasks ever imported, equal to Hambro', at one quarter the price; fourteen boxes of stout Irish linens, at 11d.; very stout, 14d.; fine ditto, 18d.; about ninety pieces from 10d. to 2s. 6d. that are a little soiled; those at 21d. and 2s. are worth 2s. 6d.: those at 2s. 3d. and 2s. 6d. are very fine, suitable for Gentlemen's wear; ell wide long cloths, 6d. a yard; a large lot of India cottons for shifting, 15s. the piece, (cheap at 20s.) 1000 yards (worth 14d. a yard); fourteen bales of Witney blankets, 10s. yards square, 6s. a pair; two and a half ditto, 8s. 6d.; three yards ditto, 12s.; a quantity of fine lamb's wool ditto, equally cheap; Welsh flannels, for chanties, 9½d. a yard; fine ditto, 14d.; very fine, for waistcoats, 18d. and 21d.; pelisse cloths, two yards wide, 2s. 4d. a yard; stout ditto, 3s. 6d.; real habit cloths, 5s.; fine twilled ditto, 7s.; four bales of fine figured bombasetts, 7½d.; 300 Braganza shawls, 5s. 6d. each; imitation scal skin and cornet ditto, 3s. each; a lot of very rich Cashmere scarfs, full yard and half wide, and three yards long, 31s. each, worth 52s. 6d.: 17 boxes of French cabric handkerchiefs, 21s. the dozen.—Hodge and Lowman, Argyll House, Regent street, three doors from the Argyll Rooms.—Ladies about to form new Establishments, Hotel-keepers, and large Purchasers, will experience a saving of 30 per cent. as the whole will be sold in any quantity at the prices advertised. All goods for charities sold at cost price.

URLING'S LACE.—Court of King's Bench.—A successful verdict having been recently obtained by G. F. Urling and Co. for an infringement of their Patent, U. and Co.'s manufacture can only be obtained at the Patentees' Warehouse, 147, Strand, near Somerset House, where may be seen the King's Lace Patent, sealed by the Lord Chancellor in 1817, for the term of 14 years. The written testimonials from various Members of the Royal Family, to patronise this original invention, added to five years increasing favour with the British and Foreign Nobility, will, it is presumed, elevate this extensive concern beyond the suspicion which may accompany untried pretensions. U. and Co. have obtained a Patent in France for their Lace, on its introduction to that Court, which is immediately to England by advertising to pay a duty as Foreign Lace, to the injury of the Public, who are thus imposed upon at double the price which the same article is now sold for in the Strand. Attention is invited to a matchless variety of Novelties prepared for the Season. The real Point and Brussels fabric will bear comparison with any Foreign Lace, and is rendered superior as to clearness by the Patent principle. Tamboured Goods, with Nets and Laces of every kind, at the reduced Wholesale Prices. Manufactory, Basford, Notts.—N.B. Court Dresses, Lappets, Frills, Ruffles, &c. in great perfection.

SMOKY FIRE-PLACES REMEDIED.—W. and M. FEETHAM, No. 9, Ludgate-hill, and 296, Oxford-street, beg leave to inform the Public, that they undertake to cure, in a few hours, any long prevailing and attention to this important object, with experienced and careful workmen, they can effectually Remedy every description of Smoky Rooms, with little or no inconvenience to the family during the process. W. and M. F. beg the Public's attention to their Warm Air Stoves, with an increased draft, for halls, large rooms, &c. Likewise Warm Baths, on a convenient and approved plan, and their Attemperating Shower Bath, by the King's Patent.

BURGESS'S ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES.—Warehouse, 170, Strand, corner of the Savoy-steps, London.—John Burgess and Son, being apprized of the numerous endeavours made by many persons to impose a spurious article for their make, feel it incumbent upon them to request the attention of the Public, in purchasing what they conceive to be the Original, to observe the Name and Address corresponds with the above: the general appearance of the spurious descriptions will deceive the unguarded, and for their detection, J. B. and Son submit the following cautions,—some are in appearance at first sight, "The Genuine," but without any name or address:—some "Burgess's Essence of Anchovies:"—others—"Burgess's,"—and many more without Address.

John Burgess and Son, from the extensive Sale they have enjoyed with distinguished approbation, feel every sentiment of respect towards the Public, and earnestly solicit them to inspect the Labels previous to their purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments.

BURGESS'S NEW SAUCE for general purposes, having given such great satisfaction, continues to be prepared by them, and is recommended as a most useful and convenient Sauce, by all eminent Cooks.

Warehouse, 167, Strand, corner of the Savoy-steps, London.—(The original Fish-sauce Warehouse.)

THE ROYAL FAMILY, NOBILITY, GENTRY, and GENTLEMEN may rely on it, they will not have a hair fall off or turn grey by now using Prince's celebrated Russia Oil, as it is so improved with an extra valuable ingredient, through which it has made the Russia Oil the greatest nourisher and preserver to the hair in the Universe, will make it grow thick and long, and prevent its falling off or ever turning grey, and is such a nourisher to the roots of the hair, that if it even has begun to turn grey, will restore it again to its natural colour; and if it never has turned grey, will never turn grey, and is sure to clear the scurf, from infancy to old age, and when dressing with it, will always keep the Head and Hair clean and beautiful. Gentlemen who have lost their hair, and have the least sign of roots of hair remaining, by using regularly, for a few months, Prince's Improved Russia Oil, with the extra valuable ingredient, will be sure to restore it, and produce a fine head of hair, which hundreds have experienced. Even Medical Gentlemen have published, in the Gazette of Health, that Prince's Russia Oil is superior to any oil for the hair; and will do, in cases of baldness and weak hair, what can possibly be done.

It is no wonder that Ladies and Gentlemen have complained of late of the Russia Oil not being of service to the hair, as they have found out that unprincipled persons have sold them counterfeits.

Ladies and Gentlemen will be particular, as Imposters in Great Britain, France, and other Government parts of the Continent, have made the covers of the Counterfeit Russia Oil so much like the genuine, and some more to deceive, falsely have printed on their counterfeit covers "the original," or "genuine Russia Oil," and some even are so daring, although they know it is punishable, to put the Original Proprietor's Name. Therefore purchasers should be cautious, and have it of the Proprietor, or of respectable Venders.

Ask for Prince's Improved Russia Oil, with the extra ingredient, and observe "Prince" and "Patentee" on the label, and his address, No. 9, Poland-street, Oxford-street, London," is on the cover of each bottle; without, it is not genuine, and cannot answer the purpose. The ounce bottle five shillings, or a large bottle, containing five ounces, one pound, which is a saving.

Sold by the sole Proprietor, A. Prince, No. 9. Poland-street, Oxford-street, near the Pantheon, at No. 26, London-road, next the Floor-cloth Manufactory, Surrey, and by most principal Perfumers and Medicine Venders.

Ladies and Gentlemen residing in the country, by sending a remittance to the Proprietor, and it will be forwarded immediately by coach.

Merchants and Captains will receive a liberal allowance for exportation

LATEST NEWS.

The Paris papers of Thursday arrived yesterday. In the Chamber of Deputies on the preceding day the discussion on the project of law relative to the extraordinary credit of one hundred millions, was resumed. M. Manuel made a very intemperate speech, in the course of which he reviled the memory of the Marquess of Londonderry, and asked in these terms:—"What caused the fate of the Stuarts? It was the protection of France which placed them in opposition with public opinion, and prevented their looking to the English nation for support. Must I say that the moment in which the dangers of the Royal Family of France had become the most serious, was after France, revolutionary France, felt that it was necessary to defend herself by new strength, and energy wholly new." (Scarcely had this inconceivable sentence been uttered than a general movement of indignation was manifested by the entire right side, and the spectators in the tribunes. Even some Members of the left evinced their disapprobation. The Members of the right simultaneously rose and demanded that M. Manuel should be called to order.)

M. the President—It is impossible to tolerate such language. He has said, in allusion to an event which all France deplores, that the nation was bound to act with redoubled energy.

M. Forbin d'Issarts—It was a wish for the death of Ferdinand.

The Members of the right side quitted their places, declaring that they would not again sit in a Chamber where such a man could speak his sentiments, and be the apologist of regicide.

M. Hyde de Neuville rushed to the tribune, (M. Manuel stepped on one side.) He commenced amidst general tumult to vindicate France and the army. The President called upon him to resume his seat, as his occupation of the tribune was irregular. During this contention, M. Manuel stood with crossed arms, significantly surveying the right side.

M. Croy de Solire.—' His unseemly posture adds to the horror of his language.'

M. Manuel was assailed with indignant reproaches from the Members on the right; some of the Members on the left recriminated, and the Chamber was a scene of unexampled uproar. The President's efforts to restore order were ineffectual, he put on his hat and declared the Sitting suspended. The Deputies withdrew to the Bureaux, and the Ministers, Peers of France, remained in the Hall.

At four o'clock the Sitting was resumed, when M. Manuel delivered a letter to the President, but the right side would not hear its contents. Much tumult ensued, and the President, seeing his efforts to restore order fruitless, declared the Sitting dissolved.

In the Sitting of Thursday, after much altercation, M. de Labourdonnaye said, I have the honour to propose to the Chamber, that they use the right, possessed by every political body, of judging of the offences committed by one of its Members in the exercise of its functions, and in the seat of its deliberations. by expelling from its bosom M. Manuel, Deputy for La Vendee. He finished by submitting his proposition, which was ultimately put to the vote, and referred to the bureau.

THE PORTSMOUTH CASE.—After seventeen days laborious investigation by the Committee of Enquiry, at Freemasons' Hall, into the state of mind of the Earl of Portsmouth—after the examination of hosts of witnesses, deposing to circumstances not at all connected with the enquiry, but most disgusting to the audience, and which we have cautiously abstained from noticing, though all our cotemporaries have not been over delicate on that point, the trial concluded on Friday, and therefore we think it necessary to state the mere fact of the finding of the Jury, the question being put to them by their Foreman in these terms:—"Gentlemen, as many of you as are of opinion that John Charles Earl of Portsmouth is of unsound mind and condition, and incapable of managing himself and his affairs, signify the same by holding up your hands."—The Jurors all held up their hands.—The Foreman then said to them—" Gentlemen, as many of you as are of opinion that John Charles Earl of Portsmouth has been of unsound mind and condition since the 1st of January 1809, signify the same by holding up your hands."—The Jurors all held up their hands.—Mr. Commissioner Trower then mentioned to the Jury, that as they had heard no evidence as to the question who was next heir to the title and estates, it became necessary to add to their verdict words to that effect. The Jury agreed, and the verdict was drawn up in a legal form, signed by each of the Jurors, and handed to the Commissioners, to be delivered to the Lord Chancellor.

In the Court of King's Bench, yesterday, a livery-stable-keeper named Frost, brought his action against a person named Kendrick, to recover the amount of damage done to a gig. Two of the Spanish Ambassador's servants applied to defendant to hire a gig to go to Croydon fair. The defendant refused to lend one without a horse, they enquired where it was likely they could get one, and he mentioned the plaintiff, to whom they went, and, as authorized by defendant, used his name and obtained the gig, in which they proceeded to Croydon, but not being skilled in English driving or accustomed to English fairs, they met with a sad mishap, and left part of the vehicle behind them on the road. Verdict for defendant.

In the Court of Common Pleas, yesterday, an action was brought by a person named Dawe, against Sir Charles Hamilton, Bart. to recover damages for certain injuries which he alleged he had sustained from the defendant, Governor of Newfoundland, who had removed him from the office of Solicitor General of Island, which act official notice was given by the Governor in the Gazette of the island. The question for the consideration of the Jury was, whether, in publishing such notice, it being an act of his office, the Governor had published a libel.—The Chief Justice said, the question did not turn on whether the Governor did ill or well, but whether he acted from malicious motives. Now, certainly no malice appeared; for if he thought it right to remove the plaintiff, he was justified in informing the public of the fact of removal, and was not liable to an action.—Verdict for the defendant.

At Bow-street Office yesterday, two men, named Honslow and Cornwall, laid a charge against the landlord of the Black Lion, Vinegar yard, for having his house open until two o'clock in the morning of last Sunday. Cornwall swore, that at the hour mentioned he went into the house, had a glass of gin, and saw eight or ten persons drinking there.—A police officer proved that the Black Lion was shut up, and no stranger therein after one o'clock, the time allowed on a Saturday night for taverns near the theatres to close. It was also given in evidence that Honslow offered to withdraw his information, if the landlord would give him a sovereign.—The Magistrate dismissed the case.

The following statement appeared in the Morning Herald of yesterday:—Having seen revived in a late Dublin paper, reports which we had believed to be now at an end (notwithstanding the industry with which they were put into circulation some time back for election purposes) of a supposed elopement, and a supposed action pending for damages, in which the representative of a learned body was alluded to, we can state in contradiction, in the most positive terms, that all such reports are utterly destitute of truth or foundation.

A fire broke out about two o'clock yesterday morning, in the house of Mr. Wills, a proctor, in Bell-court, Doctors' Commons, which was entirely consumed, and the fire extended to Messrs. Adderley and Box's, premises, which were also destroyed.

On Thursday last, a girl, about 14 years' old, was found murdered on Coomb Hill, near Chard, with her throat cut, from ear to ear; her person had evidently been violated.

Great curiosity is excited in the Musical World, by the announcement of Dr. Crotch's celebrated Oratorio, Palestine, for Wednesday next, at the Theatre Royal Drury Lane: this great sacred composition, that ranks among those of our first Masters, was only performed twice in 1813, but with the most extraordinary success. Since then this eminent work has been treasured up by the Author; but we are happy to find he has at length given M. Bochsa permission to introduce it in the Lent Musical Performances. M. Moschelles, we hear, is to play for the last time this season on Wednesday next.

ELEGANT GLASSES, FURNITURE, &c.—The Nobility and Gentry are invited to inspect the Warerooms of Cooper and Son, 63, Bishopsgate-street Within, where is exhibited a large Assortment of new and second-hand Plate Glasses, admirably suited to every description of drawing or dining-rooms. In the furniture department is comprised every new and elegant article of upholstery, cabinet, and chair work, the prices of which are reduced to such a scale of economy as to attract and ensure the patronage of rank and fashion.

WINDSOR SOAP.—J. Atkinson, 4f, Gerrard street, Soho-square, London, respectfully informs the Public that his Double Refined Windsor Soap will be found a Soap of a very superior kind. It is made of the best materials, and freed from the caustic properties contained in most Soaps, and which acts so injuriously to a delicate skin; its perfume is a complete bouquet; it is gently detergent, emollient in use, very durable, and sold at the price of the commonest articles; it is highly valuable in the nursery, and where the skin of adults have got hard, rough, or uneven, it gradually, but with certainty, corrects such imperfections, and makes the skin luxuriously soft, white, and even. Half pound packages, 1s. 2d.; pounds, 2s. by taking a dozen, 1s. 9d.—Sold by most Perfumers, but the genuine has the Proprietor's signature and address on the label.

Published by James Carpenter and Son, Old Bond-street, Perfumer to the Royal Family.

French cambrics, cambric handkerchiefs, shawls in great variety, and every other article of family linen drapery, silk mercery, hosiery, &c. In addition to the above, they strongly recommend their imitation Gulix Holland, for shirts, a most superior linen for strength and durability. R. H. and Co. feel confident that on an inspection of their goods, their prices, and the principle on which their business is carried on, will insure the purchasers' approbation, as they are determined to sell nothing but the best articles, for a very moderate profit, for Ready Money. R. H. and Co. also particularly call the attention of their friends to a considerable stock of Real East India Muslins, which are became very scarce, and rarely to be obtained in the same variety at other houses. British lace of all sorts, nets lace veils, collars, capes, cuffs, &c.

WATCHES.—J. ACKLAM respectfully claims the attention of those persons in want of a good Watch at a moderate price, to his Stock, consisting of several hundreds, both new and second hand, of every description, which he is enabled to offer at prices materially to their advantage from two guineas upwards. J. A. begs to state, as reputation is his object, his wish is never to sell a Watch that will not give satisfaction; to obtain that end he gives to purchasers the peculiar advantages of twelve months' trial, with liberty to exchange in that time, if not approved of.—423, Strand, corner of Bedford-street.—Old Watches taken in exchange.

SURREY THEATRE. MR. J. KNIGHT respectfully informs his Friends and the Public in general, that his BENEFIT takes place on TUESDAY NEXT. Amongst a variety of new entertainments will be produced for the first time, an entirely new, Comic, Imitative Sketch in One Act, written for and kindly presented to Mr. J. Knight, for this particular occasion only; by Mr. F. F. Cooper, Author of several dramatic pieces, called The SONS OF THESPIS, or, THE HIGH ROAD TO SHEFFIELD; in which Mr. Knight will sustain Four Principal Characters and introduce Matthews' celebrated Song of "The Mill, anglicise a fight" and give his "Imitations of celebrated London Performers" Tickets and Places may be had of Mr. Knight, No. 23, William-street, Kent-road and at the Box Office of the Theatre.

PRIVATE PUPIL.—A Married and Beneficed Clergyman, resident within a morning's ride of London, and accustomed for many years to receive a few Pupils into his House, has now a VACANCY. The most satisfactory references can be given to Noblemen and Gentlemen, whose Sons he has educated. Letters to be addressed to the Rev. C. J., Mr. Jeffrey's, Bookseller No. 4, Pall Mall, London.

EDUCATION.—In an age in which novelty in the important business of education forms a prominent feature, the Master of a respectable SCHOOL, in the County of Kent, established more than half a Century, who has at present a few VACANCIES, founds his claims to the patronage of Parents and Guardians on an adherence to the system of the most approved and experienced Teachers in the Kingdom. The situation is particularly healthy, and though retired, is distant only a few miles from London. The premises are spacious, convenient, and every way adapted to the health and comfort of Pupils. Most respectable references will be given, and further particulars made known on application to Mr. Hookham, Bookseller, Old Bond-street, and Mr. Wilkie, Paternoster-row.

MEDICAL EDUCATION.—Wanted immediately, by a Surgeon to an extensive Public Dispensary, in general practice in London, a HOUSE PUPIL, to be articled for a term of years. A Card is left at 50, Burton Crescent.

TO BOOKSELLERS and STATIONERS.—Wanted, in a City about 160 miles from London, a YOUNG MAN who is well acquainted with the General routine of a Bookseller's and Stationer's Shop. The most unexceptionable reference will be required. Apply, by letter, to Mr. Cato. Stationer, Lndgate Hill.

A MIDDLE-AGED FEMALE, of genteel Manners and Connexions, who has never before been out, would be happy to engage Herself as HOUSEKEEPER to an Invalid Lady, or as Superintendant of the domestic concerns of a Young Gentleman. Trusts she is equal to the conducting a small establishment with advantage to her employer and credit to herself. The advertiser is unwilling to undertake any situation in or near town, or one in which she will be expected wholly to associate with the domestics of the family: most respectable reference will be given. Letters, post paid, addressed to E. N., Mr. Moinier's Newspaper-office, Goldsmith's-place, Hackney-road, will be attended to.

A VERY SUPERIOR LANDAU and STANHOPE, the Property of a Man of Fashion, and must be SOLD, if together, will be Sold at half their cost; they are of the very best make and fashion. To be seen at No. 2, Berner-street, Oxford-street.

MONEY on EQUITABLE TERMS.—The Advertiser advances MONEY to any extent in Moderate Interest, whether on Freehold, Copyhold, Leasehold Lifehold, Funded, Church Livings, or other ample security, and assures those who may honour him with their confidence, that they will experience treatment the most candid, liberal and explicit, though similar business is sometimes viewed with mistrust, from the malpractices of disreputable people.—Letters (post paid) to A. Z. care of Mr. Williams, Glover, Inner Temple-lane, Fleet-street, will receive immediate attention; where also a card of address may be had. Reversions are purchased.

MONEY.—WANTED to BORROW £100 for 18 Months, for which a handsome Premium will be given. The repayment to be secured by the joint Bond of two respectable individuals. The above sum will save a family of Six from almost certain ruin, without risk to the lender. Money Lenders need not notice this.—A Line, addressed "S. A. S." at Peel's Coffee-house, Fleet-street, will meet attention.

BLIGHTED AMBITION; or, The Rise and Fall of Somerset.

"We think very highly of this performance: the writer has practised habits of thinking; a correct and manly style of delivery; keen perceptions of character; with much of that most desirable quality in authorship—self-command; and he is in possession of one important requisite for a novelist—an extensive knowledge of localities and costume. Old boundaries are marked, old places and buildings are described, and old dresses, manners, and peculiarities painted, with a minuteness only equalled, and scarcely excelled, by that chronicler of chroniclers, the author of 'Waverley.'"—Literary Register.

FRANCE FOR THE LAST SEVEN YEARS, containing many Facts, and much valuable information hitherto unknown, with Anecdotes, Jeux d'Esprits, &c. &c.—By W. H. IRELAND, Member and Ancient of the Athenæum of Science and Arts, at Paris.

"One of the most honest books that has appeared for several years relative to France, is Mr. Ireland's volume, entitled, "France for the Last Seven Years: or, The Bourbons." He therein proves that his feelings are of the true old British School, and that he is not one of those base panders of power, who, for years past, have subsisted by ascribing the crimes of their patrons to the principles of liberty."—Monthly Mirror, Vol. 55, p. 162.

AVERY GREAT SAVING.—GENUINE LAVENDER WATER and ESPRIT de ROSE may be had retail at the Manufactory, 3 Gloucester-place, near Smith-street King's road, Chelsea, at about half the usual cost, of such superior strength and fragrance as to defy all competition. Sold also by Mr. Sharpus, china-man, Cockspur-street; Miss Cole, 30, Speldhurst-street, Burton-crescent, and Mr. Letts, 32, Cornhill—All orders by post to be addressed to the Manufactory. Not less than 1 dozen pints of Lavender Water can be had at the exportation price.

AURICULA.—A Gentleman, an Admirer of the Auricula, has a few Packets of Seed to dispose of, all from choice Multuocular Flowers, select, and from which many new beauties may be expected, both superb and gigantic, and will be found worth the notice of practical florists as well as the more opulent amateur. To be had, with directions for treatment, in packets of 1l. 1s., 10s. 6d., and 5s. each, of Mr. Jolley, 79, Fleet-market.

SPLENDID DRAWING-ROOM, DINING-ROOM, and BED FURNITURE, at one half their former prices, in Swiss Chintzes, Spanish Merino Damasks, Silk Tabborets, Merino Tabborets, Moreens, &c. With the astonishing advantages of an immense and superb assortment, just manufactured, for ready money, MILES and EDWARDS similarly circumstanced, at once from long established houses, with their old Stocks, which have been accumulating for many years, and must have cost them double their present value. This alone can account for the extraordinary difference between M. and E.'s terms and the prices obtained by other Establishments.—No. 134, Oxford-street, between Holles-street and Old Cavendish-street.

ZEBRA WOOD FURNITURE.—Eleven Sets of Chairs for Drawing Rooms, four of which are real French pattern, and may be had by the single pair. Some specimens of this wood in Loo Tables, &c. and six sets nearly finished. The Nobility and Public have an opportunity of comparing the extreme beauty with Rosewood, at Mills's, 77, High-street, Mary le-bone, where an extensive assortment is constantly kept. About sixteen dozen Spanish Mahogany Chairs, covered in Morocco.—Terms, Ready Money.

ALE, STOUT, CIDER, &c.—THOMAS FIELD and SON beg to acquaint their Friends and the Public, that their genuine Burton, Edinburgh, Taunton, and Welsh Ales, Dorchester Beer, Brown Stout, Cider, Perry, &c. are in fine order for sale. They have also a very superior Stock of Foreign Wines, Cape Madeira, Brandy, Rum, Hollands, Geneva, and Orange Shrub; and they have been enabled to make a considerable reduction in the prices of several articles.—22, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

A MOST ELIGIBLE OPPORTUNITY PRESENTS ITSELF. A Madeira Merchant, in consequence of holding an uncommon large STOCK of excellent MADEIRA WINE, the actual produce of his own Estates, and his connexions in England being very limited, is induced to offer it through this public medium at the low price of 42l. per hogshead, or 42s. per dozen, bottled, in a fair equitable size. Also some excellent Sherry & Draught Port, taken in exchange by him for Madeira, from Spanish and Portugal houses of the first respectability; price 45s. 42s. and 40s. per dozen, or 100l. per pipe. Being actuated by the most honourable intentions, he will cheerfully grant to a respectable purchaser a reasonable time to satisfy himself before payment, that the quantity purchased corresponds with the samples. To be tasted at No. 3, Poland-street, Oxford-street; in the Docks, or Vaults in the City; or Orders by post, addressed to Messrs. Fox and Co. as above, duly attended to.

A COLLECTION for the USE of SCHOOLS. By the Rev. ANDREW THOMSON, A.M. Minister of St. George's, Edinburgh.

☞ This collection is distinguished by the variety of interesting and instructive matter which it contains—by its exclusion of every thing which can in the remotest degree injure the religious principles or moral taste of the reader—and by its direct tendency to inculcate sacred truth and virtuous sentiments on the youthful mind as well as by its suitable and useful exercises, taken from the best writers, both in prose and verse, for facilitating the improvement of the scholar in the art of reading. A considerable number of original pieces, on subjects of importance, are interspersed throughout its pages; and there is appended to it a Dictionary, explaining the most difficult and uncommon words which occur in the course of the work.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY.

Petitions were presented from Tewkesbury, Leicester, and Kingston-upon-Hull, against the Insolvent Debtors' Act.

On the motion of the EARL OF DARNLEY, Copies of the agreement between the Irish Government and Sir A. B. King, relative to the contract of Stationery made in July 1822; and, also for an account of the Supply furnished for the last ten years, were ordered to be laid before the House.

TUESDAY.

The Transfer of Aids, the Exchequer Bills, the Annual Duties, and the Lanarkshire Road Bills, were brought up from the Commons, and read a first time.

WEDNESDAY.

LORD BEXLEY took the oaths and his seat.

LORD KENYON presented a petition against the Marriage Act from the archdeaconry of Leicester.

THURSDAY.

The Temporary Marriage Act Bill, was brought up from the Commons, and read a first time.

THE EARL OF DARNLEY asked whether it was intended to lay before the House the various documents respecting the measure in contemplation for Ireland.

THE EARL OF LIVERPOOL replied in the affirmative. The Noble Earl then presented a message from the King, recommending the House to adopt such provisions as circumstances may require in respect to the right of disposing of copyhold and freehold property belonging to the Crown.

LORD GRENVILLE presented petitions from Bristol and Gloucester, against the Insolvent Debtors' Act.

FRIDAY.

The LORD CHANCELLOR, in the absence of the Earl of Liverpool, moved the usual Address to the King, in answer to His Majesty's Message of the preceding day.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY.

Petitions were presented from Stock, Leicester, Hull, and Newark, against the Insolvent Debtors' Act.

SIR GERARD NOEL presented a petition from a person calling herself Olive, Princess of Cumberland, a prisoner in the King's Bench prison, claiming the sum of 15,000l. bequeathed to her by the late King, and praying the interference of the House.—The petition was laid on the table.

MR. CURTEIS, presented a petition from certain hop-growers in Sussex, praying for a repeal of the hop duty.

MR. ALDERMAN WOOD thought the duty on beer ought to be reduced, in preference to reducing the hop duty.

MR. LITTLETON approved of the plan of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, which would be a great relief to the farmer and the lower classes.—The petition was laid on the table.

The Annual Duties, the Exchequer Bills, and the Transfer of Aids Bills, were passed.

MR. HENRY GREY BENNET noticed the state of the Penitentiary prison, and observed, that out of 800 prisoners 129 were sick; he thought a Parliamentary investigation must take place into the state of that prison, which was in an unusual state of sickness. He moved for a copy of the inquest on the body of Humphrey Adams, a prisoner in that prison, who lately suddenly died.

MR. SECRETARY PEEL said, the usual number of prisoners in the Penitentiary was from 7 to 800, and the average of the sick from 40 to 50, of which number three-fourths were affected with the sea scurvy, which disease broke out in January, since which five prisoners had died. On the case alluded to by the Hon. Member, the Jury had found that the death of Adams had been accelerated by not having sufficient meat. The Right Hon. Secretary had given orders to spare no expence to remove the disease; and two physicians, Drs. Roget and Latham, in addition to the present medical attendants. He thought no good could arise from the motion.—The motion was then withdrawn.

MR. PLUNKETT, adverting to a motion which stood for the 15th of April, which related to the recent conduct of the Government of Ireland, said, the House could not be ignorant that those proceedings had reference to the dressing of the Statue, and to the outrage, or alleged outrage which took place at the Dublin theatre. He therefore suggested that his Hon. and Learned Friend's motion, which stood for to-morrow, and which referred to the existence of certain Secret Societies in Ireland, and particularly of those denominated Orange Societies, ought to be postponed.

MR. WHITMORE presented a petition from several merchants, and others, engaged in trade to the East Indies, praying for an equalization of the Duties on Sugar coming from the East and West Indies. He gave notice of a motion for Wednesday, the 19th of March, for the appointment of a Committee to inquire into the subject.—The petition was ordered to be printed.

In answer to a question from Lord A. Hamilton, relative to the Royal Scotch Burghs, the LORD ADVOCATE said, the Bill had been prepared under the Authority of a Committee of the House, and he should, therefore, not propose any alteration in it.

LORD A. HAMILTON then gave notice of a motion on the subject, for the 21st inst.

The House went into a Committee on the National Debt Reduction Act.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER proposed a series of resolutions, recommended by the Committee of last year, respecting the Sinking Fund. The Right Hon. Gent. observed, that since the year 1816, there had been an actual diminution of debt. On the 5th of January 1816, the whole Funded Debt was 816,311,940l. and the unfunded 48,511,388l. making a total of 864,823,328l. The charge for the Funded was upwards of thirty millions, and that for the Unfunded 2,100,000l. On the 5th of January 1823, the whole Funded Debt was 796,530,144l. and the Unfunded was 43,526,621l. The charge of the Funded Debt, 28,100,000l.; the Unfunded, 1,162,752l. On the comparison of the two years, it would be found there had been a reduction in the Funded Debt of 19,781,796l. and in the Unfunded of 4,984,726l.; being a total of 24,766,521l. giving an average of three millions and a half for each year. This reduction would have been considerably larger but for the mode which had last year been adopted of converting the Navy 5 per Cents. into 4 per Cents. and which had materially, though beneficially, affected the capital. This difference was so great, that it might be safely taken at ten millions for the last year. If this were brought into the calculation, the diminution would not be less than 35 millions. A comparison of the same two years, it would be found that the diminution in the amount of charge exceeded three millions. Would any man say it was hopeless to attempt to reduce the National Debt? He thought not; and he trusted this House would not consider it unreasonable in him to ask to continue a plan which had already yielded some advantage. The resolutions which propose in substance to take the Sinking Fund at five millions. The first resolutions would be for applying these five millions to the Sinking Fund. The Act now in existence made the nominal amount of the Sinking Fund about 15 or 16,000,000l.; but he thought it was perfectly unnecessary to preserve this machinery. He proposed also, that the money should be paid to the Commissioners quarterly; that the interest should also be received by the Commissioners, and put out to accumulate at compound interest, until it should reach an amount equal to one per cent. upon the whole amount of the debt. The time at which this might be expected to take place was, of course, uncertain; but if the revenue continued to improve, and expenditure to diminish, there was a fair prospect that the desired amount would be bought up within a reasonable time.

MR. LEYCESTER thought the resolutions exhibited the House as calculating, when it ought rather to shew a sympathy for the loss and calculating, when it ought rather to shew a sympathy for the sufferings of the country. He was of opinion that additional relief ought to be afforded to the agricultural interest. The Sinking Fund he looked upon as a financial folly.

MR. ROBERTSON, referring to the Sinking Fund, proposed by Mr. Pitt in 1786, observed, that the more we paid to the Sinking Fund, the larger the debt became. We had borrowed a small sum, and had engaged to pay, in return, a large one. Besides, the Sinking Fund was not efficient.

MR. HUME observed that the Right Hon. Gent. had taken the year 1816, and comparing it with the present, had said the amount of expenditure was less in the latter than in the former. But in the year 1816 the charge was more than it had been in the year preceding, by between 2 and 3,000,000l. There had, he well remembered, been a mistake of 2,000,000l. in the casting up, which was fairly admitted by the Treasury, when he applied for an explanation of the account. The whole system, however, of the Sinking Fund was erroneous and delusive. From the year 1792 to 1817, our revenue had been 1100 millions, and our expenditure 1300 millions; he meant independent of loans, for we had added altogether 600 millions to the National Debt since the year 1792. Thirty or forty millions of the debt had been contracted in this way, in bonusses. The whole system of borrowing money to raise the market had been shewn to be erroneous and injurious. He complained of the late Chancellor of the Exchequer's system of running up the Funds against himself; of raising the price of the Stocks to the great loss of the public. A high price of Stock, he was convinced was very injurious to the country.

MR. BARING was most ready to agree with his Hon. Friend in all he had said about the fallacy of the Sinking Fund, as it had been exhibited in amount by the late Chancellor of the Exchequer; but when he came to apply his arguments to the abolition of the Fund, he was unable to go along with him. He must observe, that there might be something said for a fictitious Sinking Fund in time of war for, however useless and invaluable it might appear in the eyes of some Gentlemen to take any pains to sustain public credit, now that we wanted no money, yet in time of war that public credit was valuable to the country.

MR. T. WILSON was convinced that maintaining public faith would assist the agriculturists, though not so directly as removal of taxes. All the change he desired to be made in the Sinking Fund was, that the Surplus Revenue should be applied to make an extinction of debt instead of a Sinking Fund.

MR. D. GILBERT hoped the present Chancellor of the Exchequer would be continued in his office for a long period, and he was sure he spoke the sentiments of the great bulk of the country in saying so. He hoped, should he ever have occasion to make loans, he would always reserve out of them a certain per centage to form a Sinking Fund.

MR. HENRY GREY BENNET was of opinion, that if the surplus revenue was only 500l. instead of five millions, it should be applied in remission of taxes. If they left it as a Sinking Fund in the hands of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, they would see him as they had seen his predecessor, put his hand upon it, to make up the deficiencies of his own mismanagement.

MR. J. SMITH said, the difficulty which the Committee had to contend with was to have a clear notion of what was really meant by public credit. He believed that good management was necessary to public credit, and that 10 or 12 per cent. had been lost by mismanagement. He was a friend to the principle of a real Sinking Fund, and on the same principle that he wished to relieve the agriculturist, he supported this fund.

THE LORD MAYOR thought the House ought to pause before it passed a resolution which went to alter those laws to which the public creditor had been accustomed to look for security through the last thirty years.

MR. RICARDO declared it to be his opinion, that the agricultural interest had suffered but little by the restoration of the currency.—The Resolution was then agreed to.

MR. HUME moved as an amendment on the Resolutions respecting the half-pay annuities—"That, in the opinion of this Committee, it is inexpedient to maintain a real Sinking Fund of more than 3,000,000l. and that it is necessary to afford the people relief by repealing taxes to the amount of the remaining surplus revenue."

For the Amendment, 39—Against it, 110—Majority for the Resolution, 71. The remaining resolutions were agreed to.

MR. PETER MOORE obtained leave to bring in a Bill to amend the acts relating to combinations among workmen. His first object in the Bill was to make such a change in the laws as would be likely to bring back many emigrant artists from the Continent, with the machinery. Besides, he hoped to propose a satisfactory mode of recovering debts, and settling disputes between masters and journeymen.

TUESDAY.

Petitions were presented from Preston and Sunderland against the Insolvent Debtors' Act.

SIR T. ACLAND obtained leave to bring in a Bill to amend certain clauses in the General Turnpike Act.

MR. NOLAN obtained leave to bring in a Bill to alter and amend the Poor Laws.

MR. LENNARD asked whether any reductions were to be made in the expences of the Civil List, particularly with respect to the expences of Foreign Ambassadors.

MR. SECRETARY CANNING would not pledge himself that something further might not be done.

On the second reading of the reduced Assessed Taxes Bill MR. CALCRAFT made some observations, in which he suggested the propriety of further reducing the taxes, with a view of relieving the agricultural interest. The Bill was read a second time.

SIR R. FERGUSSON observed, that the Right Hon. Gentleman intended to lower the duty on British Spirits, and he wished to know whether such reduction would extend to the stock on hand, as it was important to the Scotch distillery trade.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER had not yet decided as to the precise time when the reduction of duty would take place, at all events it would not be before the 16th of October. He thought he should be able to confer a benefit on the Scotch distiller equal to that which was now enjoyed by the Irish one.

MR. HOUNOUSE presented a petition from the inhabitants of St. Ann, Westminster, praying for a repeal of the whole of the Assessed Taxes.

MR. MAXWELL begged to call the attention of the Chancellor of the Exchequer to the Cottage Tax of Scotland. He wished to know whether this most odious and oppressive tax would be repealed.

MR. HUME moved four resolutions on the subject of Irish tithes, to this effect:—That the property at present in the hands of the deans and chapters of Ireland, is public property, and under the controul and disposal of the legislature, for the support of religion, or for such other purposes as Parliament may chuse to apply it, due attention being paid to the interests of those at present enjoying possession of it. That it is desirable that this House should cause inquiry to be instituted into the present state of the Established Church in Ireland. That the best interests of Ireland would be promoted by diminishing the large revenues of the higher Clergy, and raising those of the lower, appointed to consider in what manner these objects can be best carried into effect. The Hon. Member said that people often talked of a State, and no State without a Church. Some applied the word Church to the Clergy only; while others applied it to all the community whole of his hearers, his community, as the Church; and, on the authority of St. Paul, he thought he might do the same. He thought he might assume that the Protestant Established Church had no authority from Scripture. It owed its very existence to the Legislature; and, as a consequence, that Legislature might alter or annul the whole of the Establishment. When, therefore, he proposed Parliamentary interference with these Establishments, he trusted he should not be charged with a design to deprive people of their tithes. All the vast property now enjoyed by Bishops, Deans, and other Ministers of the Established Church, had been carried away from those of another Church. It had been originally set apart for, and enjoyed by the Ministers of the Catholic Church. But to go from those acts to higher precedents, had not Parliament changed its religion of the country itself? Had it not changed that religion from Catholicism to Protestantism, and could it not change it from that religion with the concurrence of His Majesty? The Protestant Right Hon. Secretary might laugh, but had he left out His Majesty, whom he could he say? Besides which, His Majesty was a branch of the Legislature. Let the House then suppose that, instead of Protestantism being the established religion, Quakerism was established instead. He begged the Right Hon. Gentleman, if he made any remarks upon this subject, to tell them which he would with the land belonging to the Clergy, if that House became a House of Quakers. According to the last Census the population of Ireland was 6,800,000, one-fourteenth of which number, 490,000 souls, consisted of the followers of the Established Church. Then for the Establishment itself, there were four Archbishops, eighteen Bishops, thirty-three Deaneries, making with inferior dignities, 500 ministers in all 511 belonging to the Church and Bishopricks. He believed no country in the world offered such a disproportion between inhabitants and Clergy. The House, then, he contended, was bound to consider whether example of such a proportion existed; and if so, make a proper reduction. The House, then, he contended, was bound to consider whether such a number was not too great; and if so, make a proper reduction. As to the amount of Church property, he believed he could give it. There were, he believed, about 14,000,000 House an accurate idea of it. There were, he believed, about 14,000,000 of English acres in the whole surface of lions of Irish, or 18 millions English. Of this the hands of the Bishops and Deans and Chapters of the whole, cultivated and wild. The Chapters was two-eleventhsths of the best cultivators of land, for which Bishops in Ireland were not more than 1-29th of cultivated land he saw was called Bishop's land. Then the rental of Ireland he had estimated at 14,000,000l. Two-elevenths of this they might at 500l. each, made about 700,000l. tithe collectors, which taken from the Church of Ireland swallowed up making a total of 3,200,000l. which ate to be right by one-half, he assisted annually. Supposing this estimate to be tolerated. The property of the House whether it ought to be; for instance, the Primate of Church was most unequally divided; for instance, the Primate of Armagh had from 15 to 20,000l. a year. The great sources of emolument to the Bishops were the fines which they received. By a return to the House in 1819, it appeared that in 129 benefices, there were residents and 531 non-residents. After enforcing the necessity of residence, he would next increase the number, and spends of the lower Clergy at the expence of the higher. No salary should be lower than 150l. and would fix them at various sums, from that to 6 or 700l. a year. The former Bishop of Clogher went to his diocese without a shilling, and died worth 3 or 400,000l. At present the land attached to that Bishop rick, if let out, would produce 150,000l. a year. Why this was enough for ten German Princes; and he maintained it was inconsistent with professions of economy that such large sums of public money were thus disposed of. He wished that there should have a Committee to enquire into the real state of the revenues of the higher Clergy of Ireland. This was requisite under every point of view. He should propose that the Irish Establishment be reduced to one Archbishop and four Bishops. That number, with a proportionate number of subordinate officers, would be quite sufficient. The Deans and Chapters had little to do, the whole of them ought to do. He proposed, therefore, that as the revenues of the Bishops, and Deans, and Chapters should go to form a fund at the disposal of Parliament, so should there be a commutation of tithes at 15 years, instead of 25, as had been proposed; and he contended there would be ample funds to make a liberal commutation. The same might be done as regarded the lay impropriators. The clergy ought not to be so hasty as to the principle of commutation, for a precedent already existed which affected the most Illustrious Personage in the State. His Royal Highness's territorial property had been commuted to a monied equivalent? It was his wish to make good Christians of the Irish Clergy—to abolish luxury and extravagance, and teach them to imitate the example of the Founder of their Faith.

MR. GOULBURN said, that when such propositions were made, with that length of detail with which the Hon. Gentleman seemed to abound, there was much less difficulty in opposing them with argument than repressing an honest indignation at the attempt to overthrow that establishment to which we were all equally attached by habit, and the experience of its invaluable benefits, and to involve in ruin every principle that was held sacred in Parliament. The Hon. Member had argued, that the Clergy had no right to interfere with the disposition of Church property, because it belonged to Parliament alone to dispose of it as they pleased, and instanced the commutation of the territorial property of His Majesty. But the circumstances were entirely different, that commutation was made with the consent of the Crown, and only during the life of the King. The Clergy were united with the best institutions of this country, which must stand or fall with them. They were not that dependent race they had been represented. They had always stood between the Crown and the People, as the barriers against encroachment, and the harbingers of peace in every struggle for power. He would call to the recollection of the House, that when at one period of our history similar measures were proposed, they terminated in the death of the Monarch. It was moved in 1646, "That whenever the Government of the Church was conducted by bishops, deans, and chapters, it was found to be hostile to the growth of liberty, and should therefore be altered." Shortly after they were induced to come to a resolution, "That the lands of the deans and chapters should be placed in the hands of trustees, and that the lands of the bishops should be transferred to the State." And the last proposition was, "That a competent maintenance be allotted to Ministers in proportion to the duties they had to perform, and that all ecclesiastical powers should be transferred to commissioners appointed for that purpose." These were, in fact, the resolutions the Hon. Gentleman now proposed—and he, too, told us that he would give the Clergy competent maintenance. Six months after those resolutions were passed that the consummation was arrived at, for then it was declared, that "the archbishop and the rest" had forfeited their freeholds and inheritance during their lives. It was then resolved that a suitable remuneration should be granted to the parties affected by this decision; and in pursuance of this resolution, a vote was come to, "That the Archbishop of York should be allowed one hundred pounds per annum." The Hon. Gentleman also contended for his measure, upon a plea that a similar measure was adopted by Prince Leopold, in Tuscany. He certainly confessed that he did not pretend to such a knowledge of the affairs of that important State as to be able to deny the assertion of the Hon. Gentleman, but he would say, that it was indifferent to him what the conduct of other States were; no conduct of theirs could induce him to depart from the principle of honesty and justice. Then the Hon. Honourable Gentleman contended that his measure would be a relief to the landed interest. The same argument was levelled against the very founder of the Christian Religion—against the Redeemer himself—"Might not this ointment be sold for three hundred pence, and given to the poor." But they who used this language against the Redeemer, used it, not because they cared for the poor, but because they were glad to avail themselves of the base passions of the populace, to serve their own purposes. The Hon. Gentleman had assumed that property held by the Church was not protected by the same guards which secured the property held by an individual Layman. He (Mr. Goulburn) would assert, that the Lands assigned for the maintenance of the Church were the property of the Church. He spoke in the presence of those who could correct him if he were wrong, but the Tithe property of the Church was so identified with it, that so long as that House continued to perform its duty, they could no more divest the holder of tithes of his property than they could divest any individual of his estate. The Honourable Member called for inquiry, but was the House prepared to grant it on the principle he had laid down? Surely they would not. He (Mr. G.) would resist the motion, because he thought it fatal to the interest of the Church, and to the property of the whole country. If the House were now disposed to sanction the invasion of the rights of property, they would vote with the Hon. Gentleman; but if acting on better and sounder principles they desired only to promote the real interests of the country, they would reject it. The Hon. Member (Mr. Hume) had made a most unfounded charge against the late Primate of Ireland, in stating that he had given away either leases or livings to any of his own family or connexions. The House would recollect that before 1807 there was no power existing to enforce residence, and it was the late Primate of Ireland who had brought in a Bill for that purpose.

MR. M. FITZGERALD was inclined to view this question rather as it regarded the best interests of the establishment, and the maintenance of the Protestant religion in Ireland, than as it referred to any considerations of economy or retrenchment. Looking at it then in that point of view; he would not hesitate to say that the Church of Ireland was too richly endowed. He asked if it was not a well-known fact, that in most parts of the South of Ireland all the humbler classes among the Protestants were separating themselves from the Protestant Church, and joining those sects that held out to them a more zealous and attentive body of men as religious instructors.

Mr. Secretary Peel said, the Hon. Gentleman had stated that the Protestant population had been withdrawn from a considerable district in consequence of the neglect of the Protestant Church. He begged to read what had led to the Protestant population referred to being so withdrawn. He then read a statement from the Lord Primate, which set forth that the livings in these parishes were so low that no Clergyman could be found to accept of them, a factious vote of the Irish House of Commons having reduced the Vicars to want, and made it necessary to unite several vicarages into one benefice. He disclaimed and deprecated the doctrines advanced by the Hon. Member who had introduced the motion, because he felt that they tended to slavery and spoliation. The principle of the motion was abominable towards any portion of the community, but particularly so as it affected a body of men who were not allowed to be heard in that House in their own cause. Was it possible that it could be maintained by a person who carried popular notions higher than any Whig? Was it possible that because the Clergy had met to resist a commutation of tythes, they were therefore to be considered in the light of officers who should join together for the purpose of preventing a reduction of the army?

Mr. Denman would support the motion, as unless a practical Reform were effected in the Church, there would be no peace in Ireland.

Mr. Plunkett said, the plan of the Hon. Gentleman for governing the Church of Ireland, if proper for that country, would be proper for England; it would in effect declare that the property of the Hierarchy was liable to be disposed of for purposes of religion, or for any other purposes. This would prepare the way for the downfall of Hierarchy, that of the Throne must follow, and this would of course involve the overthrow of the Constitution.

Mr. Monck and Mr. Grattan supported the Resolutions.

Mr. Hume, in reply, complained of being personally attacked. His intentions had been grossly misrepresented, and when such intentions were imputed to him he denied the fact. The Right Hon. Attorney-General might have misunderstood him, but he could not misunderstand his Resolutions, and therefore there never was so gross a misrepresentation.

The Speaker called Mr. Hume to order.

Mr. Hume bowed to the Chair, and said, when the Right Hon. Gent. (Mr. Sec. Peel) talked of a violation of the principles of honour, and honesty, and justice, he valued the principles of honesty and justice as much as the Right Hon. Gentleman himself. The Right Hon. Secretary had said that he was the greatest enemy of the country.

Mr. Secretary Peel said that the words used by him were "the Hon. Member is himself the greatest enemy to enquiry."

Mr. Hume proceeded. Then the Right Hon. Attorney-General for Ireland had put himself into a passion, and said the measure was an act of desperation and folly on the part of the individual who brought it forward.

Mr. Plunkett said, that he had described the measure as being one of desperation and folly, but not one word had he said of the individual who proposed it.

Mr. Hume conceived that the words applied not only to the measure, but to the agent of its introduction to the House. The Right Hon. Secretary and the Right Hon. Gentleman had both quoted Scripture upon this occasion. It was something about ointment—he did not know exactly what it was—but he would tell them what St. Paul had said in his Epistle to the Thessalonians. St. Paul there said, "For even when we were with you, we commanded you, that if a man will not work, so neither shall he eat." Now, what he said was—follow St. Paul; let not those Clergymen be paid who did not work.

The first Resolution was then put, and negatived; and upon the second the House divided—For the Resolution, 62—Against it, 167—Majority, 105.

Mr. Marryatt proceeded to state the facts, which have been already before the public, with the capture and attack of several merchant ships off Cuba, and then moved, that there be laid before the House, copies of letters from J. W. Croker, Esq. Secretary of the Admiralty, to Mr. John Bennett, at Lloyd's, together with copies of letters from the Commanders of the Carnation and Doterel to the Admiralty, on the subject of the West India trade.

Sir George Cockburn entered into a justification of the conduct of the Admiralty Board, in respect of the transaction alluded to, in which he shewed that every arrangement had been made for the protection of the West India trade.

After some observations from Mr. T. Wilson (he considered the Admiralty justified by the statement of the Hon. Officer,) Admiral Coffin, Mr. Bright, and Alderman Thompson, who expressed himself satisfied with the explanation of the Noble Lord, and recommended the Hon. Member for Sandwich not to press his motion, which was enforced by Mr. Secretary Canning, who said it would shew a disposition to cast blame on the Admiralty; although for blame there could be no pretence.

Mr. Marryatt at length consented to withdraw his motion.

WEDNESDAY.

The Marriage Validity and the Scotch Creditors' Bills were passed.

Mr. Alderman Wood obtained leave to bring in a Bill for rebuilding London Bridge.

Sir T. Lethbridge presented a petition from a Mr. Wm. Parker, late of the Cape of Good Hope, which set forth that great evils resulted both to the said Colony and to Ireland, by the insidious and secret practices of the Jesuits. He defended the Orange Lodges as loyal and constitutional, and necessary to counteract the designs of the Jesuits. The petitioner accused Col. Bird, Secretary at the Cape, with being a Jesuit, and prayed the House to hear evidence at the bar to examine into the truth of his allegations, and render justice to his sufferings from the Jesuits. The Hon. Bart said, that he had good authority to state, that at Stoneyhurst there was an institution of Jesuits, and he believed under the direction of the brother of the individual alluded to. He believed that it was not doubted that Jesuit Societies existed in Ireland, and were greatly on the increase.

Mr. C. H. Hutchinson knew the Petitioner, and believed him to be exemplary in every private relation of life. He admitted the Petitioner's private grievances, but could not agree with him in the other views in his Petition. He regretted also that he had alluded to Col. Bird by name, whom he considered a very meritorious officer. He knew of no establishment of Jesuits in Ireland, as such. In the year 1820 it was that the Pope said to Cardinal Gonsalvi that the order of Jesuits had not been restored in Ireland, because it was contrary to the wishes of the Government of the British Empire. He told that House that they would be guilty of much injustice if they hurried on to that momentous question relative to the Catholics of Ireland, with all their Protestant prejudice and British ignorance on their heads. He said this with every feeling of respect; and he repeated that there was in that House much ignorance on the subject of the claims, and situation of the Catholics of Ireland.

Mr. Wilmot observed, that the subject matter of the Petition was, that Mr. Parker was an emigrant to the Cape of Good Hope, where he was so unfortunate as to meet with losses in his speculation, which he attributed to Colonel Bird's being a Jesuit, and not to the natural causes of rusting in the wheat, and others proceeding from the climate. He then went on very jesuitically to connect the subject of his losses with the establishment at Stoneyhurst. Nothing, in fact, could be less connected than the subject of the Petition, which was one of private grievance. He must express his surprise at the Honourable Baronet's having sanctioned the Petition. If the Hon. Baronet agreed with the Petitioner, that Jesuitry could have the effect of spoiling the harvest, and doing that which others thought to be beyond all human controul, he could only say that he must infer that the Hon. Baronet's opinion on the subject of Agricultural Distress was no longer what it used to be.

After some observations from Mr. Hobhouse, Mr. Hume, Mr. Brownlow, Mr. M. Fitzgerald, and Sir H. Parnell, the Petition was laid on the table.

Mr. Abercrombie moved, "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, stating that his faithful Commons deeply deploring the existence of those dissentions by which Ireland had for a long time been agitated and convulsed, and which among other evils has led to the formation of Societies founded upon exclusive and unconstitutional principles, beg leave to assure His Majesty of their most cordial zeal and concurrence in all measures for sustaining and supporting the law, and of giving the people the benefit of enjoying all its privileges and protection, and of aiding in the conciliation and suppression of party feeling, which His Majesty's presence and admonition has so effectually begun." The Hon. Member entered upon the subject of his Address at some length. It was not his intention to allude to the merit or demerit of Lord Wellesley's government, and it was not his purpose to bring forward any thing that would at all connect itself with the Catholic Question. He considered it a great misfortune for Ireland that this system had been introduced, it was against the interests of all parties, and totally subversive of the legitimate controul of good Government. It commenced with the recall of Earl Fitzwilliam from Ireland in 1795, and was completed by the Act of Union between England and Ireland. He noticed the divisions which had taken place in the country of Armagh in 1795, a battle was fought between the Peep of Day Boys and the Roman Catholics, in which the Peep of Day Boys were victorious, and it was shortly after that event, that the first Orange Lodge was opened. It consisted of a large number of persons, having a Master, Grand Master, Treasurer, Secretary, and a Committee. There were various orders and numerous meetings in different parts of the country, but the most important of all was the Grand Lodge in Dublin. He proceeded to shew that the Committee had thought it necessary to check the over zeal of some indiscreet Members; and he then read to the House the declaration of their Resolution to reverence the memory of King William, the Constitution established by him, and the succession of the present Royal Family to the Throne, and described many of the Societies, ulterior acts, their celebrations, rules, &c. which he contended were most fatal to the peace of Ireland; and too frequently terminated in bloodshed. The Protestant who desired to be distinguished for his loyalty, ought to endeavour by his conduct and example to make others contented and loyal. Were the Catholics of Ireland likely to be made more loyal by the annual processions, in commemoration of the defeat of King James at the Boyne? Could this be effected by reminding them that that day had witnessed the triumph of the Protestants, and the humiliation of the Catholics, the proof of which was to be found in the name of the family now on the throne?

Mr. Goulburn regretted that the motion had been made at the present moment, on account of the irritation and dissention which had recently distracted Ireland; he feared that any expressions and topics might be introduced, calculated to inflame the minds of the people of that country to such an extraordinary degree, as it would be the duty of all prudent men, in Parliament or out of it, to use their best endeavours to avoid. Although he could not concur in the Address, yet he had no difficulty, with regard to much that had fallen from the Hon. and Learned Gentleman, in expressing more or less of his concurrence, and in avowing that exclusive societies, under whatever circumstances, or in whatever country they might exist, were productive of immediate inconvenience, and objects of jealousy and suspicion. He was most anxious to draw a distinction betwixt societies in particular, and those whose principles and conduct were so wholly different. Some of the secret societies in Ireland had for their object the destruction of property, and the overthrow of the Government, while others were bound together to support the law and contribute to the maintenance of tranquillity and peace. The Hon. and Learned Gentleman had done the Orange Societies the justice to admit, that the principles with which they set out went to support the law; and he was sure it was impossible as to their progressive conduct, and their constant anxiety to set their opinions and intentions before the country, not to admit that they were entitled to approbation. If he had charged the Government with executing an Orangeman from a punishment to which he was by law subjected, and if he could state that a Cath olic had suffered penalties from which an Orangeman had been exempt, then he would have made out a case for Parliamentary interference. But if, in the absence of such complaint, the House subscribed to the proposed Address, it would, in a Parliamentary acceptation, imply blame where no cause for blame existed or was charged. Although they had not found it necessary to call for a renewal of that Act, yet the subject had been brought before the Government on too many occasions to allow them to overlook the necessity of an application to Parliament for a power which they did not possess, of putting an end to such societies. As all secret societies were bad, it was intended to make them all, without distinction, amenable to the proposed law, and therefore he trusted the Hon. Member would not press his motion.

Sir J. Newport congratulated the House on the approaching suppression of all secret societies.

Mr. Dawson observed that whenever any little petty dispute occurred between a Protestant and a Catholic, it was immediately magnified into one of those Orange outrages which were made use of by demagogues to inflame the people in Ireland, and which he had afterwards heard repeated by Members in that House. The Hon. Member went into a description of the origin of Orange Societies, and said they were first founded for the purposes of mutual defence and support of the Constitution and laws as established by the revolution, against the factions that were ravaging the country in 1795. His Right Hon. Friend should, therefore, have his entire support in the measure which he intended to bring forward. Independent of the oaths, he agreed most cordially in the principles of these societies. Their acts had always been beyond reproach. When the unnatural union took place between the Catholics and Presbyterians, and they had a committee in Dublin for organising troops and other rebellious objects, it was the Orangemen who resisted them, and formed the rallying point of loyalty and patriotism. Their acts were the constant theme of admiration and praise in the Irish Parliament.

Mr. M. Fitzgerald said, when the Hon. Member stated, that the Orange Societies arose out of a wish to defend the peace and tranquillity of the country, he denied it, on the authority of the acts of the Irish Parliament.

Mr. Secretary Peel distinctly declared that he had never in his life recognized an Orangeman in that character. He was once thanked by a Grand Jury for a defence which he had made for the Orange Societies. Last year some papers had been sent him, containing the laws and regulations of an Orange Institution in England, with the opinions of several eminent legal gentlemen, declaring their belief that the institution, as formed, was legal. The answer which he sent he had indorsed on the letter containing the Resolutions. The letter was dated the 22d of Feb. 1822, and the endorsement ran thus—"Desired Mr. Hobhouse to call and say I do not approve of the establishment of Orange Lodges in England; and that, legal or not, I think they will do no good." He thought he should have little difficulty in finding out clubs and associations which addressed the people, though they were not bound together by oaths, and the oaths all were now agreed to provide against. It would be of little use to prevent the oath, if the spirit which dictated the oath became embittered by the prohibition. The open manifestation of the spirit might be prevented, but sullen obedience would follow, aggravated by feelings of irritation. He could refer the House to the proceedings of a Whig Society in 1789, which had published resolutions signed 'T. Conolly, by order of the Society,' and which contained resolutions not very different from, and not less strong than those of the Orange Clubs. But did he object to these proceedings? Not at all. We were in a free country, and had a right to the expression of our sentiments individually or collectively. Upon general constitutional grounds he disapproved of the motion, though he again deprecated the idea of a triumph. Before he sat down he would take that opportunity of stating that he entirely concurred in the preventing of the dressing of King William's Statue last November, and that the prevention had received the approbation of His Majesty's Government.—Mr. Grattan supported the motion.

Mr. Secretary Canning, with reference to the subject of debate, was disposed to congratulate the House on their escape from what he considered a perilous discussion, likely to excite animosity; but which, from the temper then apparent, would lead to a different result. The Hon. and Learned Gentleman had been informed by his Right Hon. Friend, that the measure required to be brought in, was resolved on before the present motion was announced; but although it was desired by Government, it was considered best to defer it until heat and animosity subsided. The Government entertained the hope of seeing very soon, some symptoms of abatement.—The motion was withdrawn.

THURSDAY.

A petition was presented from certain Merchants and Traders of Bermondsey Parish, in Surrey, praying for a repeal of the Coal Duty. Petitions were also presented from the same Parish, and from New Sarum, against the Insolvent Debtors' Act.

In answer to a question from Col. Davies, respecting the transfer of collections from the Customs to the Excise, Mr. Herries said, it was more for convenience than saving as far as the collections were concerned.

A similar message from the King, respecting copyhold and freehold land belonging to the Crown, was presented by Mr. Secretary Peel.

Colonel Davies presented a petition from Colonel Allen, who, in the year 1817, was with his regiment in Guernsey, where General Bailey was at that time stationed. Colonel Allen was accused by General Bailey of making false returns. These charges were, that he had tried men by Drum-head Courts-martial—had placed more men in certain barracks than they were calculated to hold. On the first and third charges he was found guilty as to mere technical errors and misconstruction of orders, and the decisions of the Court were qualified accordingly. On the second charge he was convicted without any similar qualification of the verdict. The Prince Regent had confirmed the finding of the Court, and had sentenced Colonel Allen to be reprimanded. He had subsequently removed from the 55th Regiment, his continuing in the command of it having been considered to be inconsistent with the well being of the corps. The Honourable Gentleman quoted from several military authorities, to shew that the Crown could legally make no alteration in the sentence of a Court Martial, unless it were by exercising the prerogative of mercy to mitigate its rigour.

Lord Palmerston said, no practice was more ancient or more undisputed than that which was now complained of. The Sovereign had always exercised the right of dismissing his officers, whether they had been condemned by Court Martial or not, and assigning, or declining to assign, reasons for such removals, at his pleasure. This power was necessary, not for the sake of the Crown, but for the benefit of the people, and the security of the Constitution. The Noble Lord adverted to the charges and the orders given by General Bailey to diminish the frequency of corporal punishment, if possible. Finding that species of punishment so often inflicted in the 55th Regiment, that between January and April, 79 men had been tried, who had received 4878 lashes, General Bailey called for a return every morning of all offences which had been committed after 11 o'clock on the preceding day, with the names of the offenders, the punishments they had received, and their dates. Upon enquiry it was found, that between January and April, there had been 15 men tried whose names did not appear in the returns, who had received among them 1750 lashes. It was a most extraordinary misconstruction of the orders which had been issued, that these names should have been omitted. If he did not understand them, such a person was not fit to continue in the command of a regiment. The next charge against him was, that he had tried seven men by a Drum-head Court Martial in the course of 14 days, during which time General Bailey had been absent. The offence which it was thought necessary to try before a Drum-head Court Martial was, that a man had put two cartridges into the breast of his jacket, instead of placing them in his cartridge-box. For this the offender had been sentenced to receive 25 lashes. The next case was that of William Kingston, who was charged with offending against a General Order of March, but where, when, or how the offence had been committed, did not appear; so that had notice been given him of trial two days before, he could not have known how to defend himself. Another case was that of an individual who had supported arms without being ordered to do so; this offence had been punished with 25 lashes. The next case was that of James Stenton, who was tried for misdemeanour-like conduct in being drunk when the regiment was in the field. If there were any offence which ought not to be tried before a Drum-head Court Martial, it was that of drunkenness. He had been sentenced to receive 100 lashes. The next case was one of the same nature, and had also been punished with 100 lashes. He would only refer to one other case, that of Private John Sutton, who had been charged with unsoldierlike conduct in levelling his piece improperly. Such was the conduct of Colonel Allen, who represented himself to be a much-injured and persecuted individual. Looking at the facts of this case, might they not turn round upon him, and ask, "Quis talia fuscheus sedtiones querentes?" Colonel Allen had been treated in the most lenient manner. He had been allowed to sell his Commission. Yet he, forsooth, represented himself as having suffered severely in his private fortune, by not being enabled to dispose of them as he could have desired to do, though the fact was, he had received every Commission which he held from the favour and grace of the Crown, and had not paid for any of them a single shilling.

Colonel Davies, in reply, begged to explain the situation in which he stood with respect to Colonel Allen. He had never seen him in his life; and after what had been stated by the Noble Lord, so far as he (Colonel Davies) was concerned, he felt disposed to throw down his brief and leave the Court.—The Petition was ordered to be printed.

Mr. Goulburn moved for leave to bring in a Bill for establishing a commutation of tithes in Ireland. The Right Hon. Gentleman stated, that it would be his duty to offer two separate Bills. The first, which related to a composition of tithes for a limited period, was founded on the principle of a voluntary arrangement between the parties who owned, and the parties who paid them. It would be proposed that the Lord Lieutenant should have the power, upon a requisition made from the Incumbent of any benefice, or the Incumbent of any parish, or from a certain number of persons paying tithes in that parish, of directing the assemblage of a body, to be denominated a Special Vestry. He should propose that the body be composed of those who paid tithes to the incumbent to a certain amount, and not of all who paid tithes at all. Because the House would see that an assembly of that description would be calculated to lead to little result but that of extreme confusion. The Bill would contain within itself the means of clearly ascertaining who the persons were in the parish that paid the necessary amount, and of excluding all who paid a smaller. In Vestries so constituted, it was intended to vest the power of appointing certain persons properly qualified, to enter into negociations for a composition of the tithe of the whole parish for a limited time.—It was proposed that the Incumbent should appoint Commissioners to negociate such composition. These Commissioners would not only have the interests of the Incumbent to protect, but also those of an infinite variety of persons who were interested in the Tythe system of Ireland, even in the smallest parish. It was, therefore, thought necessary to guard against the appointment of improper persons. To do this it was intended to give power to the general body of negativing, upon proper cause shewn, the appointment of the Commissioner named by the Incumbent. He meant to apply the Bill to all—whether ecclesiastical or lay Incumbent. If the Commissioners failed in settling the amount of compensation, it would be competent for them to appoint an umpire; and, upon the decision of that umpire, would rest the conditions of the composition. The Commissioners would be called upon to inquire the price of corn for a series of three years, and to regulate the amount of composition by the average. At each succeeding three years the measure provided that the average was again to be ascertained, and a variation in the amount of the composition made according to the differences in the prices. The next point for consideration was, the manner in which the Clergy were to be paid; and it would be proposed that they should be paid by persons appointed by the Vestry, or by Special Assessors, and that the proportions should be annually assessed upon the different holdings of land, and according to the value of such land. Of course, land which was tithe free was necessarily exempt from contributing to the general amount of compensation. But the House would be aware that throughout Ireland there was a considerable quantity of land exempted from the tithe of agistment. Upon this he thought there was a claim for the payment of the composition—not in the same proportion as other lands, which paid that tithe, but an amount should be fixed and settled as its fair proportion. The only other part to which he thought it necessary to call the attention of the House, was the ultimate remedy to be granted to the Incumbent in case of non-payment of his compensation. It would be proposed that the Incumbent should continue to have the first claim, and in addition to that, such means of enforcing his claim as would secure to him the advantages he already possessed, and such as he trusted would excite no apprehension to any person who would give the subject fair consideration. In every case where the Incumbent should express a desire to receive, in place of the compensation, a commutation in the way of land, the Bill should give him authority to apply to certain Commissioners appointed by the Bill. It would then be left to those Commissioners to select in the same parish, or in an adjoining one, so that the distance should not be inconvenient, and purchase and assign to him, such a portion of land as, upon a full and fair valuation of its rent, shall be equal to the amount of compensation, or to what he at present received from his tithes. It was proposed to apply to the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt to appropriate money for such purchases. As soon as an estate was thus purchased, the right of tithes, and the claim upon the compensation would cease. The money arising from the composition would be then paid over to the Commissioners of the National Debt, in remuneration for the principal and interest of the sum laid out for the purchase of the particular estate. He was not certain that he had detailed the measures clearly to the House, but they would be before the country; and whatever may be thought of the ultimate effects they were calculated to produce, no one would doubt their having been conceived in the wish of ameliorating and tranquillizing the condition of the people of Ireland.

Sir H. Parnell, Sir J. Newport, Mr. Spring Rice, Mr. C. Hutchinson, Col. Barry, Mr. Grattan, Col. French, Mr. Hume, Mr. Ricardo, joined in expressing their thanks to the Right Hon. Gent. for his attention to the situation of Ireland, and their approbation of the measures in contemplation.—Leave was then given to bring in the Bill.

On receiving the Report on the National Debt Bill, Mr. Calcraft moved an amendment, "that the further consideration be postponed till the 20th of April," with a view to ascertain whether a further reduction of taxation could not be effected.

Mr. W. Smith, Mr. Benett, Sir J. Shelley, Mr. Monck, Mr. Baring, &c. supported the amendment; and Col. Wood, Mr. Ald. C. Smith, opposed it. On a division the numbers were—For the amendment, 57—Against it, 93—Majority against the amendment, 36.—The Report was then agreed to.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, MARCH 9.

"NASCITUR RIDICULUS MUS!" Some of our readers may, perhaps, recollect the genuine account we ventured to publish of a SECRET WHIG dinner, holden for the express purpose of planning the campaign previous to the opening of the Session of Parliament in 1822—if they do, they will also call to mind that an attack upon the Clergy and its revenues was most appropriately entrusted to the command of Mr. JOSEPH HUME, who being—if any thing—a PRESBYTERIAN in his creed, might be justly considered as having none of the prejudices of education to encounter in his advances towards this sacred depository of Constitutional Church-principles.

The pioneers in the CHRONICLE were ordered on immediate duty—and, it must be confessed, never were men more fitted for such a service. The disciples of LOYOLA, and the descendants of JOHN KNOX, have united their forces upon more occasions than one—but, we verily believe, never with such indefatigable zeal and good fellowship as in the present instance. The perversion of every principle—binding or influential, upon morals, faith, and common honesty, was resorted to, in order to work upon the selfish passions of the people—and every falsehood, calumny, and distortion of facts that ingenuity or malignity could suggest, pressed into the service to direct those passions, so as to let loose the "dogs of war" against our national Church Establishment. The greater portion of our readers are fully aware that we speak to literal FACTS—and we have no ambition to shine as rhetoricians.

The Morning Chronicle—to leave the lesser hirelings out of the question—are still filed, because they have been filed before, and to these we simply refer for the evidence of those facts. The hostility against our Government in Church and State is no longer covert or problematical. Circumstances arose which induced the postponement of the intended Parliamentary attack at the period alluded to, but the note, or as MR. HUME would call it, the "nottice" of preparation was given, and it was found expedient—for jesuitical policy is always crooked—to avoid, in the first instance, the appearance of a direct impeachment of the Church of England, by striking at that branch of the union where certain vulnerable points were supposed to leave it more open to assault. MR. JOSEPH HUME accordingly, after a labour of twelve or fourteen months, is delivered of this Quinbus Flestrin—this man mountain—destined to swallow up the Church and its revenues, not "at one fell swoop," but at two mouthfuls—Ireland being destined for "a snack," and England afterwards for a "belly-full."

But this is no joking subject; it leads back our minds to contemplations, which, if they be not callous or hardened by the cold and malignant philosophy of the times, must necessarily awaken us to a sense of what is intended, by knowing what has been done under PRECISELY SIMILAR MODES OF PROCEEDING.

If the newspaper reporters are to be believed, and, of course, upon those only can we comment, MR. HUME is made to declare upon opening his project, that "nobody had the same view of the question as himself; and we really should have been ready to take the Honourable Gentleman at his word, and have dismissed him and his project altogether, had not the event proved, that either by the constitutional view of the case, as displayed in his insulated adoption of it, or the power and energy of HIS eloquence in enforcing it—for to no other motive can we possibly refer so rapid a conversion—seventy-two other Gentlemen were found in the end to coincide with him!

We are dependent upon reporters, and, we confess, it appears that they must have been wantonly guilty of garbling; for we find nothing but assertion and declamation, and in vain seek a single argument, or any thing in the shape of one, of sufficient weight to influence a clause in a turnpike bill, much less to overthrow one of the main pillars of the State. As for the assertion, that in civilized society a man (it matters not what his calling or profession) is never to receive beyond what an exact calculation of labour given in return may warrant; or, in MR. HUME'S phraseology, "receive change for it;" it is, upon the face of it, an absurdity; and an absurdity which, if acted upon, would break up the very foundations of society.

What are the speculations of commerce—what are the balances of trade—what the incitements to industry, but all parts of a system, whose principle is to gain more than the previous position of the individual, or bodies of individuals, afforded them—to make a progression—to advance and ameliorate their condition? Take, for instance, this MR. JOSEPH HUME himself—of his early views or claims upon society in his native village—take him as a man first acting in a subordinate rank as a medical practitioner—in India, probably, that is, we know nothing to the contrary—he regularly performed his duty, and thus balanced his account with his employers, who paid him an equivalent for his services, which, by accepting, he acknowledged to be all that his services were worth.

Here MR. HUME stood upon the only ground on which he had a right to claim remuneration, because he was in the prosecution of the only pursuit for which he was regularly qualified; we say regularly, because of the intrinsic merit of his services we again profess to know nothing. But MR. HUME, some how or other, becomes a bullock contractor! We profess again to be ignorant of the worth of MR. HUME'S talents in the market, but if we take his own estimate of them by his previous barter, which looked no further than to an advance in his profession with more rank and pay—and certainly with not more to do—we must necessarily infer, that "some how or other" he has subsequently overrated his worth, or it has been overrated by others, in a pursuit to which he was not regularly bred, when we see him return to his native village, a qualified candidate for the East India Direction, and an ACTUAL MEMBER OF THE BRITISH LEGISLATURE! What would this gentleman say to a minute examination into the balance of debtor and credit, between his WORTH and his PROFITS, dependent upon our calculation? And yet little disposed as we are to challenge largely on the score of our pretensions, we will venture to affirm, that we possess infinitely readier means of doing so, than the Honourable Gentleman can pretend to have in deciding upon the constitutional claims of the ESTABLISHED CHURCH, or the respective merits of the established Clergy!

The life and adventures of MR. HUME are, in themselves, therefore, an ominous illustration of the absurdity of what has been imputed to him as a legislative argument! We mean the proposition of rating a man at his exact value in the complex state of civil society.

If MR HUME had unfortunately—whether for the Church or himself is not now the question—served in India as CHAPLAIN instead of SURGEON, he never could have been a bullock contractor, nor have become a nabob—nor have had a seat in Parliament—and yet we may leave the public to decide whether the surgeon or the chaplain, both being rated ad valorem, would be best entitled to some consideration in the shape of premium, if such could in any manner be bestowed, according to the equalizing system—the one who had incurred the heavy expense of an education to fit him for a profession which barred him from all others, if he expected respectability—or the other who had, with little or no education, worked his way by pounding in a mortar, and was free to turn tinker or tailor, if he could not be regularly employed, as best suited his own views or convenience! But enough of MR. HUME as an individual. We are to consider him, alas! in another point of view—and only recurred to him personally, as an individual refutation of his own general proposition.

This gentleman is reported to have denied, in the progress of his speech, the indisputable, and hitherto undisputed, fact, that Church property stands secured by the same title as that which guarantees every other species of property. When we say this denial is against an undisputed authority, we correct ourselves with the exception only of CROMWELL and his adherents, who, however, approached the subject more cautiously, and even respectfully, than MR. HUME is reported to have done. He says the one is "perpetual and inalienable," the other redeemable by the public at will; a position as untenable as the facts upon which it is pretended to found it are inapplicable; and we shall proceed to shew that the Constitution, if any difference can be said to exist between the sacredness of one portion of property over another, throws a greater degree of protection over that connected with the Church revenues.

In the case of awful depravity to which MR. HUME refers, and which so justly stripped the individual of the revenues of the See he had contaminated, left the revenues themselves untouched!—the penalty of forfeiture was incurred and taken upon the individual, but the property, which belonged not to him, but to the CHURCH, remains sacred—whilst, if the Honourable Gentleman will condescend to go so far back into the history of the country, he will find that the property, as well as the person, of a man coming under the highest penalty of the law, is confiscated, or RESUMED BY THE CROWN, as in the case of LORD DERWENTWATER and others, concerned in the cause of the PRETENDER.

The Fact is, the Honourable Gentleman appears, through the whole of this mis-shapen species of argument, to have con founded person with property; and upon the same ground as his national prejudices, very naturally blind him to the securities with which our forefathers have surrounded a Church, which they redeemed with their blood and treasure from the desecrating hands of FANATICAL and HYPOCRITICAL SPOILERS—he might deny the validity of the claims of every Corporate Body in the country, because the individuals composing it are subject to removal, by law or by death.

MR. HUME is represented by the reporters to have repeated over and over again, his ignorance of "what the CHURCH is!"

"If I know what the inside of a church is made of, I am a pepper-"corn or a brewer's horse!"

—says FALSTAFF: and MR. HUME appears, upon his own shewing—and indeed through the whole tirade which is attributed to him—to be pretty nearly in the same predicament; though far be it from us to confound the humours of the jolly knight with a grave and sententious Member of our Legislature.

We give MR. HUME full credit for his confession; and this will go far to vindicate much that has been imputed to him upon the occasion; but what shall we say to the following instance of historical accuracy?

"It is a CURIOUS fact, (says HUME,) that during the sway of the (Ro- "man) Catholic Church, no man was permitted to hold a Benefice who "did not perform the duties on the spot—and it was left for the Reforma- "tion, which was said to have established Religion in its purity, to en-
"title a man to a large income for the Cure of Souls in a district
"which he never visits."

Now every School-boy, who has only just escaped from the lower School, can point his finger to the history of his country, which affords in every page a direct confutation of this "Curious Fact"—There is scarcely a reign from that of JOHN to HENRY VIII. in which we have not authenticated records to prove the enormous extent to which the Papal Church carried the favorite system of pluralities. We have before us one single list—contemporaneous with ARCHBISHOP PECKHAM, who was honest enough to desire some check should be imposed upon such a corrupt practice, but without effect. We select a few at random for the benefit of those of our Readers who may not have the same means at hand.

"BOGO DE CLARE held THIRTEEN BENEFICES with Cure of Souls in "the Province of Canterbury, besides several Prebends—but all this "was inconsiderable to what he held in the Province of York, in which "his spiritual preferments did, according to the Tax of those times,
"amount to the yearly value of 1980 marks, as appears by certificate
"of the Archbishop in the Register of the Church of York."

We leave MR. HUME to calculate the value of the marks, and just take as they come a few more proofs of that gentleman's "Curious Fact." "GALFRIDUS HASPAL held FIFTEEN BENEFICES." "Curious" "SAMSON SIX Benefices in so many several Dioceses of the Province." "HENRY" "ADAM DE STRATTON held TWENTY-THREE Benefices!" "ROGER DE" "LALEY held SEVEN Benefices in the same province, besides ARCH-" "DEACONRIES and PREBENDS," and so on. So much for the Roman Catholic sway "which permitted no man to hold a Benefice who did not perform the duties on the spot!!!!"

But this would be warring with windmills, and breaking lances on the wheel, were it not that such opinions are recorded in newspapers, and put into the mouths of those to whom our dearest rights—and all that is worth living for—aye, and dying for, are trusted! Is it possible to see and hear such things, and be silent to trust to the chance of assertion of such a tendency standing unrefuted, when they are scattered over every part of the country as a sanction that might stagger many who are better qualified to come to a right conclusion, than the great mass of the people.

The liberality of sentiment, which goes the length of imputing to a large class of learned and enlightened men, for two centuries, the odious character of slaves and time-servers—may be placed on a par with those enlarged notions of British policy, which would prevent the same men from the right of petition, when they really feel themselves aggrieved. MR. HUME cannot, we admit, plead "Benefit of Clergy,"—although whatever may be our opinion of his "learning," we do not doubt his capacity for "reading:" but if such sentiments are here imputed to him, have really a place in his breast, we bid him look round upon the assembly in which, by a peculiar concurrence of circumstances, he is placed—and ask to whom the LEARNED, the MOST ABLE, and the MOST ELOQUENT of its members indebted for the developement of those powers, and for the education under which they have come forth, but to the CLERGY of the ESTABLISHED CHURCH! But we forget ourselves—we are appealing to a much higher tribunal—not to—but from MR. HUME and his partisans—to the PEOPLE OF ENGLAND.

The first motion—the first step taken in opening the Constitution, the inroads which led to the overthrow of Church and State, and faced by a speech not unworthy that which is imputed to MR. HUME, was, in the year 1640, made in the House of Commons, and carried "prohibiting all clergymen the exercise of any civil office;" and this simple motion incapacitating the Bishops from sitting in the House of Peers. It was at first thrown out by the House of Peers, who, through the veil intended to conceal the real object; but this judgment was afterwards RADICALLY removed, by dispensing with a House of Peers itself—which was swept away into one common mass with the Church, and a mock Constitution erected upon the ruins of monarchy, episcopacy, and nobility, precisely in principle—the only one nominal distinction, an Usurping Protector instead of a lawful Monarch—as that to which MY LORD HOLLAND has the audacity to pledge the sanction and approbation of the PEOPLE OF ENGLAND, and is at this moment seeking to be established in Spain!

One word more for the good people of England. The motion which we have alluded, as having been thrown out by the House of Peers, whilst they yet had the power to do so, was not suffered to remain a dead letter; and in strict analogy, the MORNING CHRONICLE assures us, that MR. HUME'S is only an initiatory measure, and that already done "great good." In the same year, namely, 1640, a Committee was therefore elected, in the House of Commons, as a Court of Inquisition upon the Clergy, as HUME informs us, (NOT JOSEPH!) "was commonly denominated the Committee of Scandalous Ministers."

"The politicians among the Commons"—(he says)—"were apprehensive "of the great importance of the pulpit for guiding the people:
"bigots were enraged against the prelatical Clergy; and both of these
"knew, that no Established Government could be overthrown
"strictly observing the principles of JUSTICE, EQUITY, and CLEMENCY.
"The proceedings, therefore, of this famous Committee, which continued "for several years, were CRUEL and ARBITRARY, and caused a "great havoc both on the Church and the Universities. They began "with harassing, imprisoning, and molesting the Clergy—and ended "with sequestrating and ejecting them. In order to join CONTEMPT "to CRUELTY, they gave the sufferers the epithet of SCANDALOUS. They "endeavoured to render them as odious as they were contemptible.
"The greatest vices, however, which could reproach to a great part "of them, were bowing at the name of JESUS—placing the communion
"table in the East—reading the King's orders to the people on "Sunday—and other practices, which the Established Government
"both in CHURCH and STATE, HAD STRICTLY ENJOINED THEM."

Such are "the tender mercies" of Saints and Reformers! and if we are so blind to our own safety, as to remain passive spectators of what is in agitation, abroad and at home, under one GREAT COMBINED and ACTIVE CONFEDERACY against the peace and happiness of Society, we may rest assured OUR FATE IS SEALED. If we FALL, we fall with a record of our fate before our eyes, blotted with the tears and blood of our forefathers who lacked the experience which they have afforded us. If a nation such as this, become a second time a prey to hypocrites and incendiaries, it will fall despised, and no man will shed a tear upon its fate!

Let the moderate WHIGS, if such are yet to be found, remember that men, well-meaning and patriotic, who only sought the good of their country in opposition to the mistaken policy of the Court, found too late, that they had contributed to raise a power sufficient, as now directed to its destruction! When the HYDES and FALKLANDS seceded from the faction—the PYMS, the VANES, the HOLLIS's, and the CROMWELLS, no longer required their aid—and they could only abide with the sufferers, who shed tears of blood over the ruins of the Constitution!

It was a COMMITTEE on imputed Church grievances, that struck the first effective blow upon the Constitution. We have lately heard a COMMITTEE called for, to consider the most effective mode of doing away EPISCOPACY! Are we BLIND—OR INFATUATED?

WE noticed in our last a proposal submitted to us for setting on foot a subscription for the purpose of erecting a Statue of His Royal Highness the DUKE OF YORK, in which a wish was expressed by our correspondent, that the subscription should begin with the army.

Our happening to mention this wish of the writer, who is himself an officer, has produced a communication from another officer of rank, in which he shews that our mode of expressing ourselves last week, was not sufficently clear. When we spoke of the ARMY as originating the subscription, we did not mean, as our friend imagines, with the ARMY collectively, but with those individuals who compose the army, and who like both our friends, feel that a tribute is due from the nation to the illustrious person who has so long and excellently filled the important office of Commander-in-Chief.

With respect to the suggestions of our former friend, from whom the proposal came to us, we suppose it is hardly necessary to refer him to p. 372 of the "General Regulations and Orders of the ARMY," for an answer to (what we still imagine) to have been) his view of the case.

"Deliberations or discussions among any class of military men having the object of conveying praise, censure, or any mark of approbation towards their superiors or others, are strictly prohibited as being subversive of discipline, and as an assumption of power which belongs to the KING alone, or to those officers to whom His Majesty may be pleased to entrust the command and discipline of his troops."

We have made this explanation and extract at the desire of a valued correspondent, to obviate any erroneous impression of the want of affection and every proper feeling on the part of officers or soldiers, which our suggestion might possibly convey. Having done so, we shall feel proud and happy in forwarding the object of our former correspondent, which without combination or deliberation, will, no doubt, meet with the support, not only of military individuals, but out of the people at large.

WE have seldom felt more pain than we experienced in reading the newspaper reports of MR. PEEL'S Speech, in the Debate of last Wednesday, upon the subject of ORANGE LODGES—not because we differ with him upon the benefit derivable from political combinations, but because we perceive that HE felt it necessary to state that the prevention of the Dressing of the Statue of KING WILLIAM, in Dublin, was with his approbation, and that of the GOVERNMENT generally.

It appears by the Report, that the Right Hon. Gentleman said—"That we are in a free Country, and have a right to our expressions of our Sentiments, individually or collectively and further, that he 'deprecate d the idea of a TRIUMPH of either Party'—he was, in fact, a strenuous Advocate for Conciliation."

Knowing as we do that the Cause of all the agitations

RELAND is POPERY—encroaching POPERY;—POPERY that ust begins to taste the intoxicating sweets of Ascendancy, we reat that we were pained to find in MR. PEEL, to whom the rotestants of England and Ireland look with confidence for upport and advocacy, taking the line which is called in eland—CONCILIATION.

Most true it is, that the word conciliation was used by our acious KING, on his late visit to that part of his dominions—I that his Majesty said and did was marked with grace, proiety, taste, and benignity. That part of his Majesty's conct, advised by his Ministers, was a judicious effort really conciliate, and an attempt to bring back an infatuated peoe to reason and to loyalty.

We say an infatuated people—what other word can we use? Vhy are peace, charity, laws, and liberty thrown away upon em?—Why does Ireland, of all the nations in the world, one retrograde in civilization?—Why of all people does her's ew, not merely an insensibility of kindness, but why is very fresh indulgence—why is every new attempt at conciation followed by volcanic eruptions and rebellion? We ain say—the cause is POPERY!

We mentioned last week, as an undeniable fact, that whenever e Protestants were strong, Ireland was tranquil, and whener the Papists were encouraged, Ireland was proportionably isturbed. We write a newspaper, not a history, and must ot enter into the long details of former insurrections; but we ntreat our readers to refresh their historical memories, and ey will find abundant proof of the fact we have stated—a ct which would be ludicrous for its absurdity, if it were not orrible for its atrocity.

Well, then, let us see how the pestilent leaven of this Popery ured the milk of human kindness in his MAJESTY'S most acious visit. HIS MAJESTY'S visit spoke CONCILIATION; ut the meaning of the word had already been perverted in e minds of the Irish people—a factious press, the priesthood, nd furious demagogues, had confounded conciliation with Catholic Emancipation," and shortly after his Majesty's deparure several occurrences shewed the real meaning which he Irish affixed to the word—it is no other than the necesary degradation of the Protestant ascendancy—no other than he spoliation of the Protestant Church—no other than the ubversion of the Protestant Government.

If therefore the experiment upon the gratitude of the Irish eople has failed to tranquilise, it has not failed to enlighten —we now know and see the hidden spring of Irish disturbnces. MR. PLUNKETT, who is about shortly to bring in a ill IN FAVOUR of the PAPISTS, has publicly denounced those apists, as holding clubs, and meetings, and societies in the ery metropolis of the country, which (we state it upon that ight Hon. and Learned Gentleman's official authority) were onstructed so as to exclude Protestants from admission into em, and whose objects avowedly were, as we have just said, o other than the degradation of the Protestant ascendancy—o other than the spoliation of the Protestant Church—no ther than the subversion of the Protestant Government!

As our object at this moment is to defend the Protestants om any wish to "triumph," as MR. PEEL says, over their opish brethren, rather than to adduce fresh proofs of Popish rocity, or even to question the policy of the present Irish overnment, touching the Roman Catholic population; we merely wish to refer to that particular circumstance, to which R. PEEL alluded in his speech. We mean the dressing of he Statue of King William.

In the first place, it may not be amiss to mention, that the itizens of Dublin, who had escaped the Popish persecution JAMES—the triumphant soldiers of the BOYNE—all the rriving Protestants of IRELAND, who felt—as we feel, that ur GLORIOUS REVOLUTION was achieved and consolidated IRELAND—erected, in a principal street, in Dublin, a tatue of our great benefactor, KING WILLIAM THE THIRD, GLORIOUS and IMMORTAL MEMORY! whose isionary sword, like that of the Cherub, still defends our aradise, and by the memory of whose name every noble rinciple of the Revolution is excited and sanctified!

With respect to the dressing this Statue, we think it right lso to state, that it consists in giving His Majesty a belt of lue ribband, and a cockade, and sword knot of orange.

We think we hear our English readers exclaim, and where the harm of that? We reverence the name of KING WILIAM; we make no procession to a Statue in London it is true; ut the Liturgy of the united Church of England and Ireand consecrates his character, and offers to GOD an annual ibute of thanks of the nation for having vouchsafed to us ur great deliverer.

And this offends the Irish Papists. A Persian slave would ardly have been pleased at the celebration of the victory of ARATHON. An English Jesuit does not witness with much tisfaction the burning of GUY FAWKES on the 5th of Noember. WATERLOO itself does not please MR. JOHN CAM OBHOUSE; but is it to conciliate the slaves and sycophants f a defeated despot, that a nation should abandon all recolections of her glory, all gratitude to her deliverers?

If on the 4th of November, 1822, any new measure had been dopted by the Protestants with respect to this dressing of the atue—if any disposition to triumph had been evinced, then, s a new cause of irritation, or as a new display of feeling, unalled for, perhaps, at the moment, we should have been as eady as MR. PEEL to stop the proceeding, or approve of the roceeding which stopped it.

But observe! for one hundred and thirty years this statue id not merely been adorned by the people, with a feeling hich was classical, though the taste of the ornament might ot be so, but the VICEROY of the kingdom, the Houses of ORDS and COMMONS! annually made a solemn procession ound it—the image indeed of a MAN, but the monument and pe of civil and religious LIBERTY!

To a mind like MR. PEEL's there must be something deeply teresting—truly touching in such rites—they remove the pproach which CICERO addressed to the vanity of Posthuous Fame!—they unite the past with the present—they reind us that we renew the wreaths of laurel with which the ands of our fathers had entwined the head of the hero; they ad renewed the garlands of their fathers, whose hands had athered the living laurels of the BOYNE.

Who, we ask, would be thought to TRIUMPH in that naional CONCILIATION, which should command us to erase, rom national gratitude, not only the most glorious victory of n immortal hero, celebrated invariably for one hundred and hirty years, in the presence and under the very authority of he Government itself, but which attempted to eradicate from ur minds the remembrance of that particular providence of ion which made that hero the instrument of the deliverance f our ancestors—and of the happiness—the wealth, and the lory we now enjoy,

Such, however, should it be remarked, was the Loyalty of the Irish Protestants, that they submitted, at the desire of the Government, to relinquish (for the first time since its Establishment) the Celebration of their greatest National Festival.

That the Statue was subsequently dressed, would be no farther important to notice than as it might go to prove that an equal certainty about the wisdom of the former prohibition did not exist on both sides of the Channel at that period.

It is not our object at present to go into the great question of the conduct of the Government of Ireland, nor is it our intention here to allude to the results of the measures which have been taken. We know nothing of the Government—we do not affect to know any thing of it; it may have reasons for its conduct inexplicable by us; and we have little fear, but that further consideration will induce the eminent personage at the head of affairs in IRELAND to cede, at all events, some points, which, though trifling in themselves, are, in fact, of great importance, as affecting the dignity and character of the respectable part of the community there, and which, however trying to affection and feeling, it is most reasonably expected that he should yield. As it is, when the circumstances we have mentioned are coupled with the various recent prosecutions of PROTESTANTS, charged with a variety of crimes, from HIGH TREASON, progressively downward to—nothing!—and with the present desolation and disorder of Ireland—and with the dismissal of certain Protestant officers from the Government—and with the unparalleled and unpunished attacks of titular Bishops, and infuriate Friars, upon the PROTESTANT Church and its acknowledged PRELATES, we do certainly say, that there appears to us no great probability of a PROTESTANT TRIUMPH, which MR. PEEL seems so particularly anxious to avoid. Indeed, we KNOW, and we tell MR. PEEL—because to him we look with hope and reliance—that the TRIUMPH to be dreaded, is beginning to be FELT ALREADY.

We speak boldly and honestly; for we believe conscientiously that the Protestant Constitution of IRELAND is in peril; and as we are convinced that the word CONCILIATION bears a different meaning in DUBLIN from that which it conveys in LONDON, we sincerely trust that a too earnest disposition to CONCILIATE, according to the English notion of the word, may not lead us to the very point anticipated in that of the IRISH one.

SIR HARCOURT LEES.

THE annexed MORCEAU is handed by the Parish Priest of Meate to each of his female communicants, and ordered to be laid under their pillows, to prevent their reading the anti-popish works, or even dreaming of that vile heretic SIR HARCOURT LEES.

Sunday—Invoke nine choir of angels.
Monday—Invoke John the Baptist.
Tuesday—Invoke the Patriarchs.
Wednesday—Invoke the Prophets.
Thursday—Invoke the Bishops.
Friday—Invoke the Confessors.
Saturday—Invoke the Blessed Lady, the Mother of all the Saints, not forgetting your Angel Guardian St. Michael, and all his angels.

We have received a letter from Dublin, stating that the Irish Government have withdrawn the privilege of franking from SIR HARCOURT'S brother, who is Secretary to the Irish Post Office. We have not heard this from SIR HARCOURT LEES himself—but if it be true, we are not very much surprised at the following paragraphs, which have appeared in the Irish papers.

The Dublin Evening Post of Saturday se'nnight contains the following paragraph:—

"We are requested, by undoubted authority, to contradict a paragraph which appeared in this morning's Freeman's Journal, under the head of "Official Changes," stating that COLONEL BARRY had been removed from office. COLONEL BARRY, contrary to the express wishes of the English Government, resigned his office, being desirous to feel himself at liberty to act as he might think best upon the questions that are likely to arise out of the late transactions in Ireland."

Another of the Irish papers says:—

"Four of our County Members, hitherto strenuous supporters of Administration, and the warmest friends of the British Cabinet, waited on Ministers on Tuesday last. They expressed their indignation, without qualification or reserve, at the conduct of the Irish Government. They declared that they would not lend themselves to the system now pursuing in their ill-fated country. One of these Members, the heir to the Earldom of Farnham, the Representative of the county of Cavan, resigned to LORD LIVERPOOL, as an earnest of his feelings, the situation of a Lord of the Treasury. The other Members, it appears, are, SIR JOHN STEWART, Member for Tyrone; MR. BROWNLOW, Member for Armagh; and MR. FORDE, Member for Down: and it is announced in the same paper, that "the alienation from the British Government of several other most powerful and influential personages will be declared in a few days."

GRAND CLIMAX FOR IRELAND.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, FRIDAY, MARCH 7, 1823.

"MR. HUME gave notice, that he meant to submit to the consideration of the House, on Tuesday, April 30th, a motion respecting the removal of the Lord Lieutenant, Secretary, and Vice-Regal Establishment of Ireland."

This is what may be called clearing off the "tottle of the whole!"—We say nothing.

EVERY body remembers the alarm taken for the sake of their dignity by the Committee of Underwriters and insurance people at Lloyd's some time since, because the Secretary of the Admiralty informed them, that he had something particularly interesting to tell them, if they would take the trouble to come and hear it.

Every body who does remember it, must also remember what a ridiculous figure these people cut; nor can it be forgotten, that in revenge for a breach of etiquette, (which was no breach of etiquette at all) they, and their partisans spread reports, not only of the ill-treatment they had personally received, but insinuations that the Secretary of the Admiralty was either ignorant of the subject on which he wrote to them, or that he wilfully deceived them by misrepresentations.

The latter part of the story was as little believed as the former. The fact is, that rates of insurance are (as even HUME knows) kept up proportionably to the risk; and not content with affecting to disbelieve MR. CROKER'S written assertions, the underwriters resolved not to have a verbal communication, which must have convinced them that every means had been taken to check the piracies of which they complained.

As time wore on, letters were received day after day—some contradicting accredited stories of piracies, others correcting gross mis-statements—the rhodomontades of some masters of merchant vessels were exposed, the falsehoods of others made evident—but still MR. MARRYATT, the hero of the affray, remained unsatisfied, and nothing appeared likely to heal the wound which his dignity had suffered, less than impeaching MR. CROKER, or hanging him, for all we know.

MR. MARRYATT gave a notice of his most important motion; the day came, big with the fate of MR. CROKER'S veracity and MR. MARRYATT'S importance. Whether the one required no support, or the other was not thought worth supporting, we cannot pretend to say, but this we know, that on the day appointed for the discussion only thirty-six Members appeared, and the House adjourned.

On another occasion some equally important affair of MR. HUME'S interfered—till at length we really were afraid that poor MR. MARRYATT would go unrevenged, and the misrepresenting and ignorant Secretary unpunished. At length the affair did however come on, and when we saw the Secretary of the Admiralty come into the House upon the occasion, we anticipated some amusement, at the expence of the Honourable Gentlemen from the City with the offended dignity; but, alas! we were disappointed—the bubble burst, and MR. MARRYATT did more for MR. CROKER by his charges than MR. CROKER could have done for himself with the most elaborate defence.

In the first place MR. MARRYATT confounded dates, ships, circumstances, and places—his determination to make Cape Antonio and Saddle Hill one and the same, in spite of hints, and nods, and winks from correcting friends, was ludicrous enough—but the speech of SIR GEORGE COCKBURN convinced them, joking apart, that independently of the errors of the coffee-house people as to the etiquette and regulation observed towards them, the insinuations—charges we will call them—which were made day after day by the Whig-radical journal against the Admiralty, and the Secretary of the Admiralty, were false—utterly FALSE, and wholly groundless.

MR. MARRYATT said, that at LLOYD'S Coffee House, on of one thousand persons three only dissented from his view of the case. As LLOYD'S Coffee House has not a Speaker—no Usher of the Black Rod, nor HENRY GREY BENNET for a Member, we may venture to observe, that MR. MARRYATT at LLOYD'S was like that beautiful bird, who, with admirable noise and dignity, "gives salutation to the morn," and is of vast importance upon his own unsavoury domain.

For MR. MARRYATT, in his Parliamentary capacity, we have, as we are bound to have, the highest respect, and therefore regret that he was induced, by the success of his proceedings at the coffee-house, to trouble himself so much as he did (we beg to say we did not see the inside of his hat!) to make a speech, and to bring forward a motion, merely to withdraw it.

MR. CANNING, whose conduct was most liberal and conciliatory, expressed a hope that the communication between the public bodies would be renewed, and continue as usual, for the good of the service; and SIR ISAAC COFFIN, upon the modern principle of conciliation, observed that many of the people at LLOYD'S had not a coat to their backs; which assertion raised a laugh at a somewhat ticklish crisis for the respectability of that body and the re-union of parties.

We rejoice that the affair has terminated so satisfactorily, with respect to our naval administration, although we never had the slightest doubt of the result. MR. MARRYATT is a man of sense, (though no geographer) and, we are sure, must lament having taken up a matter, in which he was backed only by the EDITOR of the MORNING CHRONICLE and the other under-writers.

AN Irish gentleman having tendered his vote for MR. SCARLETT at Peterborough, it appeared, through some blunder, that he was not qualified, and, therefore, the vote was rejected. "So, Sir," said MR. WELLS, (the rival candidate) as the gentleman passed him, "we have detected the fraud—the im"position won't do, Sir; good morning, Sir."

"Upon my honour," exclaimed the Irish gentleman, "I "never was so inconveniently situated in all my life. O! that "ever I should have lived to be called an impostor by a man "who has not got a NOSE to be pulled."

WE have at times joked upon his HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE LEOPOLD of SAXE COBURG. Shall we be censured if we candidly confess that we are sorry for it, and acknowledge ourselves mistaken in the opinions we have expressed, touching that illustrious personage?—We think not; we are sure not; when we submit to our readers an extract from the MORNING POST of last week, which gives so decided a negative to all the aspersions which have been cast upon His Royal Highness's generosity and liberality, as to convince us of our former blindness and error.

"The PRINCESS of KENT, the daughter of the DUCHESS of KENT, is a remarkably fine, interesting child. Her Royal Highness will complete her fourth year in May next. The Princess speaks the German, as well as the English language, remarkably well. The expense attendant on her ROYAL HIGHNESS'S bringing up, for the Princess's nurse, governess, &c. are paid by her Royal uncle, PRINCE LEOPOLD, with whom the Princess is now on a visit at Claremont, where she is expected to remain several weeks."

Who has conferred the title of PRINCESS of KENT, (unless indeed, it be MR. SHERIFF PARKINS) upon this interesting child, we cannot pretend to say; nor is it indeed any concern of ours; but it is impossible not to eulogize, in the strongest possible terms, the munificent conduct of her Royal uncle.

This Noble Prince, having only fifty thousand pounds per annum, from mere affection for his own niece, a Princess, growing up too, with no very bad prospects, sacrifices, out of his miserable pittance, the enormous charges of her "bringing up," which amount, we understand, for nurse and governess, to somewhat exceeding one hundred and forty pounds per annum; without calculating board-wages during their stay at CLAREMONT!

We are not surprized that the MORNING POST should celebrate conduct so truly admirable.

SAM ROGERS says, that the gens d'armerie, who forcibly removed the refractory Member from the Chamber of Deputies, in PARIS, were fully justified—they merely performed a part of the MANUEL exercise.

LOTTERY.

WE made a few observations last week on a particular point relative to the last Lottery, and according to our pledge, give a place to the communica ion which follows. We certainly disclaim the remotest intention of casting a personal reflection upon any party concerned; and it is because we would give the fullest explanation of the subject that we publish the following letter; which will most effectually satisfy those, who like ourselves, were anxious for an explanation:—

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR,—Claiming the promise given in your Paper of Sunday last, to allow a fair space to any one competent to answer the questions therein proposed respecting the last Lottery; I request you will insert, in your next Number, the following observations, or so much of them, as you may conceive necessary to dispel the doubts created by the nature of those questions:—

The last Lottery consisted of 6,000 Tickets, and was, as you correctly state, drawn in two classes; No. 1 deciding 3001, and so on in numerical progression—the two corresponding numbers when fortunate, to be each entitled to a prize of the same value in every instance, except one—and you demand to know in what way it was decided in that one instance, which of the two corresponding numbers should have the preference, that is, by what rule or right one of the numbers became entitled to 20,000l. and the other to only 16,000l.

You also require to know by whom such arrangement was made, and when? And conclude, by the assertion "that most decidedly such arrangement never was made public."

In reply to your first question, I beg to describe the mode adopted to determine which of the two fortunate numbers should take the highest, and which the lowest of these two prizes, when drawn. The 20,000l. and 16,000l. were put into the prize wheel, on one paper, to be drawn in the usual manner, at such period of the drawing, and against such numbers, as chance might direct. There being only the numbers 1 to 3,000 in the wheel, it was announced, that if the first prize drawn should be any number from 1 to 1500 inclusive, then the lowest of the two numbers (drawn against these capitals) should take the 20,000l. and the highest the 16,000l.; but if on the contrary, the number of the first prize should be above 1500, then the highest number of the two should take the 20,000l. and the lowest the 16,000l.

I am sure I need not point out to you that it was exactly an equal chance, before the drawing commenced, as to which moiety of the tickets in the wheel would produce the first prize.

The drawing began at 4 o'clock, and within a few minutes after, it chanced that 1714 was drawn a 10l.; which being the first prize drawn, and falling to a number above 1500, decided that the 20,000l. when drawn, should belong to the highest, and the 16,000l. to the lowest of the two numbers that might be drawn against them. Four hours afterwards these capitals were drawn, and 4467, as the highest number, became entitled to the 20,000l., and 1467, as the lowest, received the 16,000l.

This rule, by which the prizes were allotted, is at once clear, fair, and simple, and being entirely dependent on an event of chance to take place after the drawing had commenced, will I trust convince you that no undue preference was, or could have been intended to any particular number or set of numbers.

In regard to your second question as to "who made the arrangement, and when," I have to state that this mode of drawing (copied from the Lotteries in the year 1812) was submitted by the Contractors, with the scheme, to the Lords of the Treasury, and approved by them, as every scheme and plan of drawing must be, before a single ticket can be issued from the Bank.

In answer to the concluding accusation, "that such arrangement never was made public," I beg in the first place to refer you to the London Gazettes of January 21st, and February 1st, in each of which you will find the whole detailed at full length, and published by authority, with the signatures of the Lords of the Treasury; and then I request you will have the goodness to peruse the enclosed explanatory bill, of which thousands were distributed in every part of the kingdom. I trust, after this explanation, you will believe that all the requisite publicity was given in this matter, as you must perceive that there was no motive for concealment, nor any possible advantage to be derived from secrecy.

The fairness and candour of your general observations on this subject, and the just and liberal conviction of the correctness of the system of Lotteries, which you have heretofore opposed to the assertions of your correspondents, demand that I should lay before you the mode adopted by the Lords of the Treasury, for the fullest investigation of every scheme and plan of drawing proposed by the contractors—from which you will perceive, that such things, as have been suspected by some, and asserted by others, can never happen.

Every scheme must be framed according to certain regulations in the Act of Parliament, and others inserted in the Bond given by the contractors, to Government, and then submitted, together with the proposed plan of drawing, to the Lords of the Treasury. When received, their Lordships transmit it to the Board of Commissioners of the Lottery, with directions to analyze it in every part, and ascertain that every ticket has an equal value of chance; that every prize is to be decided by chance, and chance alone; and that such chance is equally applicable to every ticket sold. If the Board report in the affirmative on these points, then their Lordships grant their sanction to the Scheme, and give official notice thereof to the Bank, that the Tickets may be issued to the public.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

AN OFFICE KEEPER,
BUT NOT A CONTRACTOR.

"SMALL LOTTERY OF 6,000 TICKETS, TO BE DRAWN 25TH FEBRUARY, ALL IN ONE DAY.

"The Tickets in this Lottery are numbered from 1 to 6,000, in two classes, A and B.

"The A class consists of Nos. 1 to 3,000; the B class consists of 3,001 to 6,000. The drawing of the A class will decide the Numbers in the B class in the usual manner—that is, No. 1 will decide 3,001—No. 2 will decide 3,002, and so on in numerical progression.

"This Lottery being divided into two classes, it is necessary to state that the two first Prizes in the Scheme, viz. the 20,000l. and 16,000l. Prizes, will be drawn together, and that the number of the very first Prize will decide, in the manner described below, which class shall have the 20,000l. and which the 16,000l. when they are drawn.

"There being only No. 1 to 3,000 in the wheel, as above stated, if the first Prize should be any Number from 1 to 1,500, then the class A will have the 20,000l. and the B class the 16,000l.; but on the contrary, if the first Prize should be any Number above 1,500, then the B class will take the 20,000, and the A class the 16,000l. In every other instance the Tickets in the two classes will have the same fate.

THEATRICALS.

MR. CHARLES KEMBLE, it seems, is pleased to say in society, that little faith is to be put in our Theatrical Reports. If he means little reliance upon our constant praise, he is quite right. We are, in so far, extremely unlike the "gentlemen of the press," who take the free-admissions of playhouse proprietors as a pledge of mutual civility. We speak exactly as we think, and although wavering politicians and half-measured persons may be reckoned as of little avail at Westminster, we are quite sure that "more faith" ought to be put, (and, we can tell MR. KEMBLE, IS put) in criticisms purely and entirely impartial and unbiassed, than in those which take a decided line, and according to the amount of value received, mete out their praise or censure.

We suspect that MR. C. KEMBLE'S cause of complaint against us, is our having praised ELLISTON and Drury Lane this season, whereas, we censured ELLISTON and Drury Lane last season; but we will easily justify ourselves to the public for that change, upon our own established principle of impartiality. We have no personal liking or disliking to MR. ELLISTON or MR. KEMBLE; we know them only in their public characters, as managers of theatrical concerns; and as for the mere walls of Drury Lane and Covent Garden, one house is as much a favourite with us as the other—it is that which is offered to our notice within those walls, which pleases or annoys us. We do not hate the MORNING CHRONICLE newspaper, and love the COURIER quoad newspaper; the paper of one, and the type of one, are as good as the paper and type of the other, for aught we know; it is the politics—the sentiments—the opinions—which in the one we admire, and in the other abominate. If the incendiary nonsense of the CHRONICLE were to be exchanged for the constitutional talent of the COURIER, we should forthwith, without any consideration about their names, discard the COURIER and take in the CHRONICLE. So MR. KEMBLE should know, and our readers (about whose opinions we care considerably more than for those of MR. KEMBLE)—should understand, that as it was not COVENT GARDEN that we praised last season, but the performers and performances; so, it was not ELLISTON and DRURY LANE which we satirized, but the wretched acting, and singing, and every thing else which we saw abominable in the concern.

We might in this particular instance go still farther and say, that even supposing we did feel a prejudice against the appearance, the shape, or, as we have already phrased it, the "mere walls" of Drury Lane; we could justify our change of opinion even upon that point, for, from a vast straggling, inconvenient, ill-arranged, vulgar-looking place, which it decidedly was; it has been transformed into a commodious, and beautiful, and splendid theatre.

MR. C. KEMBLE should remember, when he speaks reproachfully of our opinions, that when we praised Covent Garden, and "that highly too," that all the most powerful attractions to Drury Lane, this season, were then at that theatre.

MR. C. KEMBLE cannot be so blind, or prejudiced, (though it must be admitted, that most theatrical people are both) as to think that YOUNG'S acting is less admirable, less attaching, or less attracting, in Little Russell-street, in 1823, than it was in Bow-street, in 1822; or that MISS STEPHENS has lost the sweetness of her voice by singing a few hundred yards nearer the River Thames, or that KING LISTON, the incomparable, has suddenly grown dull and handsome by being nearer the Strand, than he was when he was parable, has suddenly grown dull and handsome by being conveyed the length of Great Russell-street from his former dominions. We think not: and yet MR. C. KEMBLE talks of putting no faith in us, because he, or his Committee, have chosen to part with most of the objects of our former applause and of public approbation.

It is but due, however, to Covent Garden, to say, that the remnant of its forces is excellently good, that it has good Tragedians, admirable Comedians, excellent Farceurs; and, in its female department, talent, grace, and beauty enough for three theatres.

It is impossible, however, on the other hand, not to perceive the exertions made by ELLISTON, and the effect of those exertions—to be sure he prints the names of his attractions in letters so that "they who run may read," and if we are to estimate his personal opinion of the merits of his actors by the size of those letters, MISS CLARA FISHER is the greatest card he has in his hand—at least, small as she is, she appears in the largest characters—in the bills, while the manager himself figures in a smaller and less conspicuous type—a striking proof at once of his modesty and judgment!

Put faith in us or not, MR. KEMBLE, we will praise merit and zeal—activity and talent wherever we see it, and it is neither place nor person, nor prejudice nor party that shall guide us! As if to try us, this very MR. KEMBLE chooses to play FALCONBRIDGE in SHAKESPEARE'S KING JOHN last Monday—a part which in our mind is identified with him; his conception—his execution of FALCONBRIDGE, are, perhaps, as just and fine as any thing in the whole round of the drama—it has always been a favourite character of his, and on Monday he reaped fresh laurels by its performance—never did he look or act better—never did the public more thoroughly appreciate, or more liberally applaud his merits.

MACREADY'S KING JOHN is the work of a clever, polished mind, and met with its full meed of approbation. With respect to MR. BENNETT, we have not made up our minds about him; part of the audience, perhaps the free people, seemed to admire him.

MRS. FAUCIT exerted herself upon the occasion in LADY CONSTANCE, and succeeded in maintaining her deserved reputation, and in gaining the plaudits of the public.

On Tuesday FONTAINEBLEAU was revived at the same theatre, but we—malgre nous—were obliged to make the amiable at the Opera, whither we went in an ill humour for such a purpose, and were not, we believe, half so well pleased as we ought to have been.

To the Opera again would apply very much of what we have said about ELLISTON. There appears in all the arrangements and engagements an activity, a desire of procuring the best entertainment for the town, and it is more meritorious at the Opera than any where else; because, in point of fact, it is less expected. Give us our snug boxes, our own conversation, the society of those we love best, whose eyes are brighter to us than the "sparkling chandelier," as the learned Author of NIGEL (the play) was wont to sing in other days, and whose voices are sweeter than Italy can produce or manufacture; and Madame, whoever she is, may hold a note for half an hour, or Mademoiselle shake her pretty little foot in the air to a fiddle accompaniment for twenty minutes, unheard and unlooked at. At the English Theatre, the play is the business of the night. At the Opera, the performance is a well got up excuse for amusing ourselves after our own fashion; and certainly the present management, Lords or Commons, or whatever they may be, have succeeded perfectly in their endeavours to satisfy the public.

FROM the nature and construction of our Paper we can seldom afford much space for the review of literary works, unless they are connected with political subjects, but we are inclined to mention a novel—or romance as it is called—which was published late in the last year, and which we have just happened to read.

It is called "BLIGHTED AMBITION," and, although we are totally ignorant who the author is, we must say that we were not only much pleased and interested by the work, but surprized at its vast superiority over the general run of similar publications—we might, perhaps, excite too much expectation, and even injure its effect, by mentioning the name of SIR WALTER SCOTT, or any of his historical novels, in the same paragraph, because there is, in every thing he writes, the brilliant, outshining touch of the master, "unequalled and alone," but we have no hesitation in saying, that next after those talented works we should place the historical tale in question.

It contains the history of the "Rise and Fall of Somerset," and we lament that we cannot afford space for some extracts, which, we are quite sure, would justify our praise to our readers. Our sincere feeling when we had read the book was, that of regret that any thing so superior should be so little known, as it apparently is, and that an author (whoever he may be,) so capable of enlightening and entertaining us, should, perhaps, be deterred from making valuable additions to the literature of our country merely because his ambition might in truth be blighted by neglect in his outset. With this sentiment we again beg to recommend his volumes to the notice of the public.

THE question which has been raised in the French Chamber of Deputies about M. MANUEL'S speech appears to us to be a most absurd one. We do not pretend to judge from reading garbled extracts, or ill-translated reports of the proceedings of the Chamber, how far MANUEL was actually guilty of the regicide doctrines attributed to him, but certain it is, that the right of expulsion or exclusion is IN the body of which he is a Member, and as it seems to us they are the best and only judges of his punishment. FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

In the Chamber of Deputies on Monday, when the order [illegible] was called on, for discussing the proposition of M. de la Bo[illegible] respecting the expulsion of M. Manuel, M. Girardin ascend[illegible] bune and demanded to be heard upon the question preju[illegible] President called upon M. de St. Aulaire, whose name stood [illegible] the list of those who intended to offer their sentiments, to [illegible] ward, M. de Girardin grasped hold of the tribune and exc[illegible] shall remain; I will speak; your clamour shall not overpow[illegible] will oppose whatever violence is offered to me." Much [illegible] course ensued. At length, after much agitation, M. Hyde [illegible] ville suggested, as an amendment, that the expulsion should [illegible] for the remainder of the session, leaving it to the majority of [illegible] ber, in the next session, to determine whether they will [illegible] return. A fresh debate now arose upon the amendment, [illegible] carried on with the same acrimony and violence. M. Manuel [illegible] the Chamber. After a few general observations, he said, [illegible] in you, not my judges, but my accusers; I expect from you, [illegible] but vengeance, and I will not submit. The moment reason [illegible] comes a right, it also becomes a duty; it will be so for [illegible] shall know how to take an example of courage from you, [illegible] deans, whose energy was so conspicuously displayed in [illegible] hither. I owe to them the example they have set me; and [illegible] will of those brave electors into the bosom of the National Re[illegible] tion, I ought not to quit it except by the violence of those [illegible] made themselves my accusers." M. Manuel—Whatever may be the result, I will yield to [illegible] lexce; often the field of liberty has been rendered fruitful by [illegible] blood. At the second General Pepe's sword snapped short near the guard, on which conds interfered. A second encounter then ensued, and after al passes on both sides, General Pepe, seizing his adversary's ll with his left hand, disarmed him; but General Carascosa, on ering his sword, renewed the combat, which was warmly main- d, until he was finally disabled by a thrust from General Pepe in ght shoulder.

the Court of King's Bench, on Friday, Charles Trust was tried lling Palmer's Principles of Nature. The defendant was one of le's shopmen; an officer sent to purchase the book proved the f defendant's being in the shop when the book was handed to him eans of the machinery in use.—The Jury found him Guilty.

the Common Pleas, on Friday, in a case Jones v. Brougham. An n for false imprisonment, and the damages were laid at 5000*l.* plaintiff was a surgeon atd passenger, and the defendant Captain e ship Arrow: the imprisonment took place on board that ship er voyage from India to England last year. The defendant ed a justification. A number of letters and notes to the defend- m the plaintiff were read, in which the latter stigmatised the r, Major Howieson, and several passengers, as "villains, black- s," and "scoundrels"—that they were "a disgrace to society, he vilest creatures the Almighty ever suffered to exist." He en- ured to induce the sailors to take part with him.—The Jury said ad heard enough, and the plaintiff was nonsuited.

Bow-street, on Friday, twelve gamblers were apprehended at 3, Pall-Mall, and twenty at No. 15, Bury-street, St. James's. fficers broke in to both houses, and destroyed the gambling ap- s. After a long examination, it concluded with six being held to appear at the next Sessions. Six others were held in their ecognizance to appear at the next Sessions: 18 in their own re- ance for their good behaviour; and the rest discharged.

he Surrey Sessions on Friday, Jane Agar, not more than twelve f age, was arraigned on two indictments for shoplifting, to the t of 12*l.* and upwards, though laid at much less sums in the in- ents. The property was stolen from the shops of two tradesmen, mond, and traced to a pawnbroker's. She was found Guilty. entence was, that she should be imprisoned at Brixton for the of six calendar months, and kept to hard labour.—George Wise und Guilty of unlawfully obtaining, under false and fraudulent ces, the sum of 3*l.* from Thomas Lown. He was sentenced to mprisoned for seven years.

the Buckinghamshire Assizes, on Monday, the trial of the Revd. Eyre came on. He was charged a few months ago, at Worship- Police Office, with committing a rape, when a long examination place, and he was sent down to Buckinghamshire on the charge. rand Jury threw out the bill for the capital offence, and found a misdemeanor. The trial lasted six hours, and he was ac- A crowded chamber of respectable persons attended, and were good character. Joseph Corker and Thomas Randal were tried esday last, for the murder of Edward Needle and his wife, e of the toll-gate. The evidence was conclusive, and the Jury verdict of guilty—death. RICH SILKS, SHAWLS, and LACE, SELLING OFF.—HUBBARD and CO. Silk Mercers and Lacemen to the Royal Family, announce to the Nobility and Public that the Lease of their House, under the Duke of Bedford, is expired, and in consequence of the necessity of rebuilding the Premises, the whole of their FASHIONABLE STOCK is SELLING OFF without reserve. The following articles are now offered considerably under prime cost: rich Gros de Naples, figured silks and satins, striped sarsenets and tabinetrings; the much admired Tartarian Cashmeres, French merines, levantines, poplins, taffetas, the new Cyprus crapes, French gauze robes for ball dresses, white satins, and silk stockings. An immense stock of curious shawls of every description. Superb lace dresses, veils, scarfs, and bobbin nets. Added to every novelty for morning and evening costume in the Autumn. Also several thousand yards of rich silk flounces, so prudent in the higher circles for Furnitures, which can be made in every colour that may be required for Dining or Drawing Room Curtains, at 7*s.* 3*d.* instead of 11*s.* a yard. No patterns cut, or parcels sent, unless previously paid for. Black Bombazeens, Crapes, and Sarsnets, for Family Mourning.—Spitalfields House, 12, Henrietta-street, Covent-Garden.

SILKS—SILKS SELLING OFF.

ANSELM SHEARS, gratefully impressed with the favours which for fourteen years he has received from the ROYAL FAMILY, NOBILITY, and GENTRY, respectfully informs them, that, in consequence of the Lease of his House having expired, he is compelled to SELL OFF the whole of his valuable Stock, comprising not only an immense variety of Fashionable Silks, Poplins, Cashmeres, Norwich Crapes, Gros de Naples, Ducapes, Florence Silks, Shaded Sarsnets, Shawls, Scarfs, &c. but those new and beautiful Patterns at present weaving in the Looms, all of which must be SOLD without the least RESERVE.—Anselm Shears's Persons indebted to the Concern are solicited to make their payments.—Anselm Shears, No. 11, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden.

SELLING OFF.—REAL BARGAINS IN SILKS, SHAWLS, MUSLIN, and LACES.—Florence striped and checks, at 3*s.* 6*d.* to 5*s.* 6*d.* the dress; rich levantines, 3*s.* 6*d.* to 5*s.* 6*d.*; Gros de Naples, 2*s.* 9*d.* to 4*s.* 6*d.*; stout sarsnets, 2*s.* 6*d.* to 3*s.* 6*d.*; good white sarsnets, 2*s.* 4*d.* to 2*s.* 9*d.*; superior white satins for slips, 2*s.* 6*d.* to 4*s.* 6*d.*: a variety of figured silks, 3*s.* 6*d.* to 4*s.* 6*d.* (worth double the money;) 5000*l.* stock of family mourning, lace veils, scarfs, and crapes, at the half price: rich gauze dresses for the Opera, in addition to the above, sold last year at 2 and 3 guineas each; 6*p*0 superb muslin dresses, for evening wear, 5*s.* 6*d.* to 18*s.* the dress; beautiful Zamora shawls, 4*s.* 6*d.* to 9*s.* 6*d.*; rich imitation India shawls 10*s.* to 6*l.* The whole of the large Stock will be sold off hand, at S. LEWIS'S, 29, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden; who is going to remove, on the 26th of March, to 195, Regent-street.—N. B. The trade and country dealers must apply before 11 o'clock, or they cannot be served.

URLING'S LACE.—Court of King's Bench.—A successful verdict having been recently obtained by G. F. Urling and Co. for an infringement of their Patent, G. and Co.'s manufacture can only be obtained at the Patentee's Warehouse, 147, STRAND, near Somerset-House, where may be had Queen King's Letters Patent, sealed by the Lord Chancellor in 1817, for the term of 14 years. The written testimonials from various Members of the Royal Family, to patronise this original invention, added to five years increasing favour with the British and Foreign Nobility, will, it is presumed, elevate this extensive concern beyond the suspition which may accompany untried pretensions. G. and Co. have obtained a Patent in France for the same, and have given instruction to the Court, which is imported to England by adventurers, and pays a heavy duty as Foreign Lace, to the injury of the Public, who are thus imposed upon at double the price which the same article is now sold for in the Strand. Attention is invited to a matchless variety of Novelties prepared for the Season. The real Point and Brussels fabric will bear comparison with any Foreign Lace, and is rendered superior as to clearness by the Patent process. Trimmings of Goods, with Nets and Laces of every kind, at the reduced Wholesale Prices. Manufactory, Basford, Notts.—N.B. Court Dresses, Lappets, Frills, Ruffles, &c. in great perfection.

FAMILY LINEN WAREHOUSE, 77, Oxford-street, nearly opposite the Pantheon.—J. D'OYLY, many years with the late T. CRAIG, 77, Oxford-street, LINEN DRAPER, SILK MERCER, &c. having, since his decease, purchased a share of the Business, (which will in future be carried on under the firm of CRAIG and D'OYLY) the management of which is entrusted to him for the benefit of the Widow and Family, begs leave to intimate himself to the indulgence of his Friends and the Public in general; and trus, by unremitting attention to business, to retain that preference with which his predecessor was so highly favoured.

C. and D. beg to observe, they have just received a very large supply of every description of Linen, Drapery, Silk Mercery, Hosiery, &c. &c. which they intend selling at those very low prices which are peculiar to their house; none but the very best goods are kept, and every article warranted perfect. Their Stock consists of 7-8ths and 4-4ths Irish Sheetings, Long Cloths, and Linens, French Holl nds for Sheeting, 5-8ths and 4-4ths Irish ditto, Huckabacks, Diapers, Lawns, French Cambrics, Dublin, Indian Dimities, Jeans, Marseilles Nankeens, Damask Table Cloths from 1 to 8 yards long; Napkins to match, Counterpanes, Marseilles Quilts, Blankets, Bombasins, Poplins, Norwich Crapes, Gros de Naples, French width, Sarsenets, Pelisse Cloths, Bath Cloaking, Flannels, town-printed Furnitures, Prints, Stuffs, Cotton and Silk Shawls, with a large assortment of Hosiery and Gloves.—C. and D. beg it may be particularly observed, that the No. of their Warehouse is 77, nearly opposite the Pantheon; the name of CRAIG and D'OYLY in each window.

TEMPUS FUGIT.

G. P. TODI begs respectfully to inform the Nobility and Gentry of his Manufactory, 248, Regent-street, adjoining the Argyll Rooms, that he begs to submit for inspection Chronometers, Musical and Ornamental Clocks, Repeating, Duplex, Horizontal, and Vertical Watches, Ladies and Gentlemen's Gold Chains, Seals, and Rings, and other dress ornaments, of superior quality. All the above articles he warrants to be of excellent workmanship, being of his own manufacture, and employing none but superior workmen, he is enabled to warrant them, and offer them to the public at reduced prices.

N.B. All sorts of Clocks, Watches, and Jewelry repaired.

ECONOMY in UPHOLSTERY and CABINET FURNITURE.—Ladies wishing to make up their own Curtains, Draperies, &c. may have them cut out by J. PORTER, 25, Welbeck-street, and every part so explained, that they may make them up in the most fashionable manner, with the greatest ease, and at a very moderate expense. J. P. feels confident, from his practical knowledge of the business, and particularly of Design and Drawing, that his Work will be found classical, elegant, and chaste. He has manufactures every article in the Cabinet and Chair line, and from the late fall in mea's wages, wood, &c. is enabled to offer them at very Low Prices. Curtains dyed and modernized, Mattrasses, Sofas, and Chairs re-stuffed. Estimates of Prices, &c. made out on the shortest notice.—An Apprentice wanted.

SMOKY FIRE-PLACES REMEDIED.—W. and M. FEETHAM, No. 9, Ludgate-hill, and 266, Oxford-street; beg leave to inform the Public, that they undertake to remedy the above evil, and by long practice and attention to this important object, with experienced and careful workmen, they can effectually remedy every description of Smoky Rooms, with little or no inconvenience to the family during the process. W. and M. F. beg to call gentlemen's attention to their Water Air Stoves, with an increased draft, for halls, large rooms, &c. Likewise Warm Baths, on a convenient and approved plan, and their Aitemperating Shower Bath, by the King's Patent.

A DINNER was given on Friday to the Spanish Ambassador at the City of London Tavern, which was attended by H. R. H. the DUKE OF SUSSEX and a large party of disposable Whigs.

If it had been at all difficult to understand the intention of holding this assembly, the Spanish guests themselves would have saved us the trouble of puzzling about it; for, after the usual routine of toasts, and the farcical ceremony of drinking the "Constitutional KING" of Spain, had been gone through with becoming gravity, a very long address was read to the company by our friend COLON, of which, perhaps, we may be able to give our readers the very "pith and marrow" in the following short extract:—

The Spanish Ambassador said, amongst many other things, that

"The Spaniards are resolved not to degenerate from their forefathers—not to degenerate from themselves. They will be in 1823 the same men as in 1808. They did not submit to receive another King from NAPOLEON BONAPARTE—they will not now consent to receive another Constitution from the legitimate successor of that illegitimate Usurper. They will not compromise their honour by yielding to the least alteration in their Bill of Rights—when that alteration is dictated at the point of French bayonets. They have hearts and hands—courage and virtue. What do they want then? IRON and GOLD. IRON TO FIGHT—GOLD TO DEFRAY THE EXPENCES OF THE WAR. They will sacrifice every thing—but still they shall require much. HERE, IN THE EMPORIUM OF MATERIAL OPULENCE and moral worth, here IS THE SOURCE from which such an assistance can only be expected."

Really!—so that if we maintain a neutrality as to fighting, we are to take a part with our purses?—restore the salt tax—the leather tax—the malt tax—the horse tax—the Irish assessed taxes—and all the other duties and burthens from which we have just been relieved, to find iron and gold for the Spanish revolutionists. We conclude, by the request, that they have no need of BRASS.

The absurdity of the request appears to us to be only equalled by that of considering a compliance with it a part of the system of anti-international interference.

If, as my LORD LANSDOWNE eloquently argued, in speaking against our assisting France in the struggle, we have no right to meddle with the affairs of that kingdom, what right have we to interfere in the affairs of Spain against France?

A strict neutrality is the thing desirable for our national prosperity, for our comfort, and for the restoration of universal content; and so the Whigs would say, if they happened to be IN OFFICE instead of out of office. The hope of the Opposition is to excite a feeling in the country in favour of a WAR which may force the Administration into hostilities, the results of which measure, these very WHIGS will, in their turn, charge upon them as high crimes and misdemeanours, and make the effort, upon the new cry, to "push them from their stools."

Thus, we have shewn the purposes for which a certain proportion of the guests attended the feast. The motive of the majority, doubtless, was the desire to see Spaniards—to listen to fine speeches—to eat a good dinner—and to hear MESSRS. BROADHURST AND CO. sing; but there occurred some little whimsicalities on the occasion, for some of which we cannot so easily account as we have accounted for others.

First of all—the dinner was fixed to take place on a Friday in Lent, which, considering that the guests are, or ought to be—rigid Papists, was tantamount to tantalization. We fancy, however, that whatever their political views may be, their religious doctrines did not spoil their appetites. The thing, nevertheless, was in bad taste.

Secondly—my LORD WILLIAM BENTINCK was in the Chair, (his Lordship is brother-in-law to MR. CANNING,) but that is nothing compared with the fact, that His Royal Highness the DUKE OF SUSSEX, in proposing his Lordship's health, told the company that his Lordship was the fittest person in England to fill that chair; because, his ancestors had come to England with KING WILLIAM THE THIRD—we must add of GLORIOUS and IMMORTAL MEMORY—not that we are the least surprized at what his Royal Highness said upon this occasion; except, as it certainly does not accord with what he finds it right to say upon others.

Thirdly—SIR JAMES MACINTOSH made a speech about guns, trumpets, drums, bayonets, and freedom, and concluded with toasting "The preservation of Peace all over Europe." If the Learned Baronet had been an Irishman instead of a Scotsman, this would not have been so wonderful.

But fourthly and lastly—my LORD HOLLAND could not get leave to attend the dinner, which he had contributed so zealously to get up. Of this Nobleman's conduct we had intended to have spoken more at large than we have now space to do.

His letter to M. ARGUELLES, offering Spain the protection of the English people, (over whom his Lordship must know he has no influence) if the Spaniards will reject the overtures which LORD HOLLAND believes to be making, is not safely to be characterised by us. His uncle Fox played the same game with RUSSIA, and sent a man to thwart the measures of our Ambassador at that Court, instead of a message. So that the heroic epistle of LORD HOLLAND has not even the merit of novelty in its design—it is merely new words to the old tune of ROBIN ADAIR.

MR. BURKE, FOX's friend, called that act, if not treasonable, at least a highly treasonable misdemeanour. Let LORD HOLLAND, as HUME says, "take his change out of that."

With respect to the dinner itself, hastily as we are compelled to look at it, we can safely pronounce it, in spite of the eulogies of the MORNING POST, neither more nor less than HUMBUG.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR—Whatever the world may say of you, neither Whig nor Tory can lay to your charge the sin of cant and hypocrisy; but, on the contrary, you have been foremost in exposing both, let the rank or dignity of the person or party be what it might, assuming either modesty, charity, religion, or patriotism. I therefore send you the following information, accompanied by a play bill for the theatre of that pure, patriotic, Whig Borough, Arundel; for which one of the Saints of the present day has waded through corruption, thick and thin, to obtain a seat in St. Stephen's Chapel. What can his friends in the Methodist Chapels say to such conduct, when it comes to be exposed before the House; and still more, what will the public say of the canting Methodists, when they are informed that all MR. KEMP'S saintified Methodistical friends in Arundel congregated in Satan's Chapel, the Theatre. It was quite amusing to see the effect produced on MR. KEMP'S friends by my presence, when I appeared at 10 o'clock on Wednesday night in one of the front boxes. I understand, the Mayor was taken very ill, and obliged to go Sir, with several others of the independent Whig Corporation, before the finishing of the piece! Mr. KEMP is so great a Reformer in religion, as well as in politics, that it is said, he contemplated, in conjunction with the DUKE OF NORFOLK, to convert, or pervert the Protestant Chapel, at Arundel Castle, into a kitchen, and the Baron's hall into a regular Catholic chapel, where MR. K. is to be received with absolution into the bosom of the Church of Rome; so that, after ringing changes upon the Protestants, Independents, Methodists, and Catholics, it will be hard if the worthy preacher cannot find some of the gates of Heaven open for his admission. Prior to my return to town from Brighton, yesterday, I was informed, upon unquestionable authority, that this religious gentleman attended his devotions one half of last Sunday, at the King's chapel, and the other half at his own chapel. The question may be fairly asked—What does he contemplate in returning to Parliament, which he left with disgust on the 4th of March, 1816? Surely, it is not to reform or reconcile the wicked, canting, hypocritical ways of the (pre-tendedly religious) Protestants, Papists, and Methodists?

This is at your service; and I remain, Sir, your obedient servant, 9, Essex-street, Strand, March 7, 1823. J. W. PARKINS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MONTHLY REVIEW.

SIR—My attention has been called to your last Review by the following passage, contained in "A Letter from a Friend:"—"In the Monthly Magazine, published yesterday, is a very fair criticism on your pamphlet, entitled Reform in Parliament; and in the Monthly Review, it is noticed, in terms which I think quite disgraceful to that publication. It is mere abuse."

I am fully aware how little candour I, who hold neither Deistical nor Democratical principles, can have to expect from the writers in the Monthly Review. But I have a right to demand that they shall not substitute their own nonsense and falsehood for the sentiments of the author, whose work they pretend to criticise. The nonsense the Reviewer may not be able to help, but the falsehood he may; and I desire that to know upon what he founds his assertion, that the plan which I suggested is proposed as a panacea for all the complaints of the Reformers. It is expressly submitted as a constitutional mode of preventing bribery at elections—too constitutional, indeed, to be grateful to the vitiated palates of the Monthly Reviewers.

The reviewer states, that the remedy proposed is not a new one. Let him point out when and where it has ever before been suggested.

Very little mischief can arise from misrepresentation or falsehood in a publication of such limited circulation as the Monthly Review: a work which has outlived the indulgence of its friends, and the notice of its political enemies; and which is purchased only by those, who, possessing the earlier numbers, endeavour to complete the modern ones for the mere purpose of completing their sets. And as the measure which the reviewer quarrels with, has the acknowledged approval of men of eminence of either political party, who have expressed an opinion that, as it is constitutional in its principle, so it would be found easy in its application, and effectual in its result, I trust I may be forgiven for not suppressing the pamphlet, although I thereby fail in a due submission to the Radicalism of Mr. George Griffiths and the Monthly Reviewers.

—I am Sir, your obedient servant,
March 3, 1823. J. BICKNELL.

LATEST NEWS.

Bayonne papers, to the 28th ult. arrived yesterday. They state that at Bayonne, and the environs, every thing assumes a warlike appearance. The troops continue to arrive, and most of them go into cantonments before Bayonne, and in the villages on the frontiers of Spain.—It is positively affirmed that orders have been given for a corps of the Army of the Faith to be formed here, and ready to take the field at the first orders.—The Spanish, on their side, are preparing, as well as they are able, to receive the French army; and they spare no sacrifices to place St. Sebastian and Pampelusa in a respectable state of defence.—The resolution to defend the territory is incontestible in all the great towns this side of the Ebre.—The inhabitants of Sarragossa, especially the national militia, amounting to 3,000 men, have sworn to bury themselves under the ruins of their city, and to reduce it to ashes, rather than suffer the Constitution to be overthrown or modified by a foreign army.—Preparations are carrying on with the greatest activity, so that 18 or 20,000 may be ready to act by the 1st of April, who, preceded by the bands of Navarre, and of the three provinces, which are to be raised to 12,000 men, and seconded by those of Arragon, especially that of Bessieres, will form together 40,000 men. With this force, supported by a reserve, which will be immediately organized at Bayonne, an advance will be made to the capital in three directions, leaving St. Sebastian and Pampelona closely blockaded.

There were no arrivals direct from Paris; but the last accounts state, that violent scenes took place at the different Cafes, in which the Ministers, the Chamber, the Garde Royale, and the Gendarmerie, were reviled. Small groupes formed near the Chamber, and on the Pont Louis XV. who used violent and menacing gestures, but the gendarmerie dispersed them. Another groupe before Manuel's house, hoisted an Englishman, who came from the house, on their shoulders, crying out "Vivant les Anglais!" "Vive la Liberte!" Thirty or forty persons had been taken up for rioting, and several of them committed for trial.

Advices from Constantinople to the 25th Jan. all concur in stating that an extraordinary change for the better had taken place in that city since the fall of Haleb Effendi. Lord Strangford arrived on the 14th, after a long and tempestuous passage. He was saluted with 18 guns at the Dardanelles, and Officers of the chief departments of State immediately waited upon him.

We regret to state that Mr. Canning suffered considerably on Friday from a smart attack of the gout.

On Friday, a Court of Directors was held at the East India House, when Capt. Blanchard was sworn into the command of the Marquis of Wellington, for Madras and Bengal.

A Meeting for Reform took place at Huntingdon on Friday, at which Lord Milton, Lord J. Russell, and some other persons were present. A Mr. Roper moved several resolutions, stating, according to him, "the inadequacy of the House of Commons to protect the liberties of the people." A Mr. Wells called the resolutions "maudlin ones," and he proposed others as amendments, but the meeting hissed him down, and the original "maudlins" were carried.

At Oxford, the following Degrees were conferred:—MASTERS OF ARTS—Rev. S. Reay, St. Alban hall; Rev. A. Crymes, Baliol coll.; J. S. Boone, Student of Christ Church; Rev. J. Birkett, Christ Ch.; Rev. F. Borradaile, Brasenose coll.—BACHELOR OF ARTS—P. W. Mure, Christ Church; and the Rev. A. Briscoe and the Rev. T. Bradley, Masters of Arts, of Queen's college, were elected Fellows of that Society, on the old foundation.
